Attempts which have been made to weaken the force of the testimony which Dwarkanath Tagore bore to the excellence of the British Government in this country, appears to be singularly out of place. It proceeds on the erroneous idea that he has thereby deserted the cause of his countrymen, as though Native patriotism consisted only in abuse of the British Government. The excuse made for him is, that he meant nothing. His patriotism is thus compromised at the expense of his sincerity. But whatever opinion may be entertained of the philosophy of his reply to the Directors, it is certain that he did not give utterance to sentiments to which he was a stranger. That feeling of attachment to the British Government, which runs through his letter, was evidently the honest conviction of his own mind, formed upon a careful examination of the principles which that Government had adopted, and a comparison of them with those of the administration which preceded it. In these feelings of gratitude to England for her Indian administration, the most enlightened Natives of the country were accurately fully to participate down to a very recent period; and we have no reason for suspecting that their opinions have undergone any change. The assertion that the Mahomedan Government was vastly superior to that of the British, as well as the furious denunciations against our administration, are only of yesterday, and may be traced to causes which are not likely to be permanent. Indeed, if general report be true, the records of some of the Magistrate's Courts in the interior would account satisfactorily for some portion of the fury of this attack. But that as it may, the circumstance we are recording is calculated to allay the feeling of animosity which it has been attempted to excite into the native community, and to draw closer the bonds of attachment between the Natives of India and the governing country; and we think Mr. Bird has acted judiciously in enhancing the value of the Court's testimonial by the official splendor, with which the presentation of it was accompanied.

THE DEPUTY MAGISTRATE.—The Harbinger says in his issue of Monday last, "It is a mistake to suppose, as the Friend of India and after him the Landholders' Society have done, that the Draft of the Act for creating the office of Deputy Magistrate 'restricts the appointment to Natives of India.' True it is that the words of the Draft—the office of Deputy Magistrate shall be open to Natives of India of any class or religious persuasion, seem to favour that supposition, but it should be remembered, that precisely the same words were used on the creation of the office of Principal Sudder Ameen, and yet it was never thought that those words were designed to exclude all but natives from that appointment." We beg to submit to our contemporary, that he has inadvertently fallen into a grievous error of fact; and that his reasoning is therefore unsound. This is not his fault, for at the period when the Regulation of 1831 was passed, twelve years ago, he was neither connected with the Press, nor in a position to know the bearings of that enactment.

We can assure him that the words used on the creation of the office of Principal Sudder Ameen, were not only considered as having been designed to give the exclusive enjoyment of that office to Natives, but that they were actually intended to restrict the appointment to this class. The Preamble to that Regulation states, that it was desirable on general grounds to employ respectable Natives in more important trusts connected with the administration of the country. The intention of Government to confine the office to Natives, was farther made evident by the fact that the nominees were required, previously to entering on the execution of their duties, to subscribe the solemn declaration, which the Native officers of the Court alone were required to make. If it had been intended to open the office to Christians, the Act would have directed that they should take the oath appointed for the Christian officers of Government. It was understood at the time that the new judicial officers were to be conferred exclusively on Natives; and that one or two gentlemen, not Natives, who had been employed as Sudder Ameens before the enactment, would be displaced, as a matter of course. Government was therefore constrained to provide against their removal, by a special enactment (Reg. VII. 1832, Sect. 18, which runs thus, "Nothing in Sect. 13, Reg. V. 1831, shall be held to preclude the Governor General in Council from continuing in the office of Sudder Ameen, subsequently to the introduction of Reg. V. 1831, into the district, any individual, not a Native of India, who was holding the appointment at the time of the introduction of the Regulation, and all official acts performed by such individuals, before or after the promulgation of this Regulation, are declared valid, and shall be held to be good and binding." We apprehend that these three facts, viz. the philosophy of the preamble; the declaration which was to be made instead of the oath; and the specific provision for Europeans who might have continued to perform the duties of Sudder Ameen after the Act of 1831 was passed, afford unequivocal proof that Lord William's original idea was to give these offices to Natives and Natives alone; and that the expression "the office shall be open to Natives of India of any class or religious persuasion," was intended to convey these views to the public. We can strengthen this opinion by asserting that for the first year or two after the Regulation was passed, many applications were rejected on the ground that the candidates were not strictly Natives of the country. The rule was gradually relaxed. An opening was first made to admit of East Indians, and it was subsequently enlarged to admit all classes, without reference to their place of birth or descent.

We are perfectly satisfied that it was the intention of Government to admit to the proposed office of Deputy Magistrate, all men not in the Government service, Hindoo, or Mahomedan, or Jew, or Christian, or Bouddhist, and all men wherever born, whether in the British dominions or out of them, whether 'mixed' in any of the four quarters of the old globe, or reared in the lap of the youngest daughter of the civilised world, whether owing allegiance to the Queen of England or to any of her allies—their names. The Act was intended to be most catholic in its application; and therefore did we suggest the propriety of omitting a term, which was originally used—so to speak—with a sectarian limitation, and to substitute for it one more suitable to the enlarged liberality of the present administration.

THE SUDDER COURT AT BOMBAY.—The Bombay Times, in several articles, has lately exposed to public animadversion a very extraordinary decision of the Sudder Court at that Presidency, which is calculated in no small degree to bring our judicial institutions into contempt.

The facts as stated are these. A Mussulman male and a Brahmin female were committed for trial to the Session Court of Ahmedabad on two charges; that of stealing property from the husband of the latter, and of adultery. The man was acquitted, and the woman convicted, of the theft. They were then tried on the charge of adultery and were both found guilty. This last offence being one against the religious obligations of the parties, the expounders of Hindoo and Mahomedan law were called on to declare the punishment ordained in their books. The Hindoo pundit declared that the Hindoo female should have her ears and nose cut off. The Mahomedan Cawze decided that she should be stoned to death. The Sessions Judge, however, unwilling to mutilate the woman, or to stone the man, sentenced the former to imprisonment for four, and the latter, for three years, and forwarded his proceedings to the Sudder Court. Three Judges of that Court sat in deliberation on the sentence and pronounced them inadequate. They were sent back to the Sessions Judge for revision, and he augmented the punishment in no small degree, by sentencing the woman to imprisonment for fourteen years, and the man to imprisonment with hard labour for life. But the Sudder was not satisfied. It wanted blood; and so, taking the matter into its own hand, it ordered the man to be condemned as usual to death, leaving the woman's sentence to be revised when the other had been executed.

It seems extraordinary that any tribunal in India, should suppose itself so public indignation in this age of civilisation, by ordering a man convicted of adultery to be deprived of life. It appears unreasonable that at a time when we are exerting over the abolition of the punishment of death in our own land, that punishment should be extended to crimes in India, to which it had never been awarded during our administration. Did it never occur to the Judges of that tribunal, that if their decision was not supported by the three other Courts of similar rank in India, they would be placed in a most unenviable predicament; and that if the rule they have now made were to become law, and death were to follow every conviction of adultery in India, the land would be deluged with blood? It has been affirmed in a statement of their decision that adultery is a criminal offence in India, though only a civil transgression in England. This is as it should be. It is one of the most disgraceful anomalies in our laws, that this crime, which inflicts a degree of misery on families, infinitely greater than that occasioned by the most daring burglary, should be visited with punishment so utterly inadequate to its enormity; and which, in the case of wealthy individuals, is no punishment at all. It is advantageous to the interests of society that adultery should be repressed by being classed among criminal offences, and that the offender should be exposed to a penal sentence and not to civil damages. But is this any reason for visiting it with a sanguinary punishment which shocks the feelings equally of the Native and the European community? Government ought to have some regard to its own reputation for justice, even if it be indifferent to its character for humanity. And what will the Natives think of the justice or impartiality of our jurisprudence when they find that a Mahomedan who robs another of his wife is to be hung, while the European adulterer is let off with a trifling fine?

Passing from this individual case to the general system of our criminal jurisprudence in India, it may be asked what opinion the civilised world is likely to form of our Indian administration, when it is proclaimed that after the theory of punishments has been discussed for half a century by the ablest jurists in Europe, and fixed upon sound and rational principles, we should still resort to codes which direct the ears and noses of females to be cut off, and males to be stoned to death? It cannot be too often borne in mind that in the management of this empire, our conduct is not as heretofore submitted solely to the scrutiny of a close corporation in London; we are acting, in the eyes of all Europe, Thanks to Steam communication, our proceedings are examined and their character determined by half the journals of the European world, even before the report of them reaches Leadenhall Street. And what judgment will Europe pass on our administration, if with all the light and knowledge of the nineteenth century, we continue unnecessarily and wantonly to incorporate in our system, the legislation of a barbarous age and a barbarous people? It is manifest that we are not bound by any pledge to administer the Hindoo and Mahomedan criminal law; for in this, as in other instances, it has been set aside. Why then should we have recourse to it at all? Simply because of the culpable apathy of the public Authorities at home. It is now nearly ten years since a Law Commission was appointed by Act of Parliament to digest a New Code of Jurisprudence for all India. The simplest attention of that body was directed to that which was formerly exercised by the Zillah Judges. The compilation of a Code of Criminal Law, which was completed nearly six years ago. Nothing has been since heard of it. It is buried in the archives of the Company, without hope of being ever published. The Edinburgh Review justly says, "The labours of this Commission have hitherto met with little encouragement from those whose duty it is to examine and give practical effect to its results." Yet that Criminal Code cost India Seven lakhs of Rupees, 70,000. The country has a right to demand some return for this money. If the Code was defective, it should have been amended; if altogether worthless, something better should have been substituted for it during the six years in which that Commission has since continued to sit. To have thus thrown away the results of the labours of three years is a dereliction of public duty. The responsibility lies with the Directors at home, whose business it was to have given a practical effect to the labours of the Commission. Yet, after an expenditure of twenty lakhs of Rupees, two hundred thousand pounds sterling, our Courts are still obliged to resort for sentences in Criminal cases to Codes which it is a disgrace to acknowledge.

EXTENSION OF THE POWERS OF NATIVE JUDGES.—Government has just advanced another step in carrying out the views of Lord William Bentinck, promulgated twelve years ago, regarding the employment of Native agency in the department of Civil Justice. The caution with which the powers of Native Judges have been gradually enlarged, is deserving of much praise. In the infancy of the new system, when the Agents selected were necessarily men of inferior attainments and character, it was deemed prudent to impose various restrictions, to prevent the abuse of the power entrusted to them. At the same time the local Government has been diligently exerting itself to raise the character and the qualifications of the Native Judicial Service; and as these efforts appeared to be crowned with success, their jurisdiction has been successively enlarged and the importance of their offices greatly increased. We have now to notice another extension of their authority, in the new prerogatives conferred on them by Act VI. of the present year, of which we propose to offer our readers a very brief analysis and explanation.

The First Section directs that the Principal Sudder Ameens shall be guided in the decision of all suits by the rules established for the conduct of business in the Zillah Courts. When the office was first created; it was provided that these judges should follow the rules passed for the trial of suits by Sudder Ameens and Moonshis. But it was discovered that the course of justice was impeded by fettering judges entrusted with the decision of causes to the extent of 3000 Rupees, with restrictions which were applicable to suits of the value of 300 or 1000 l. The Principal Sudder Ameens were at the very outset entrusted with a jurisdiction equivalent to that which had previously belonged to the Zillah Judges, and it would have been more appropriate to have made all the rules regarding the trial of suits when instituted before the European Judges, applicable to the trial of the same suits when transferred to a Native Judge. The limitation of powers arose doubtless from the novelty of the change, and the want of established custom in the Native Judges who were appointed to this high office. These objections having now ceased, the authority of the Principal Sudder Ameens is very properly made coextensive with that which was formerly exercised by the Zillah Judges.

The Second Section supplies an omission, which ought in all reason to have been supplied six years ago. In 1837 Principal Sudder Ameens were entrusted with the cognizance of suits of any amount in excess of 5000 Rs. and it was ordered, that in suits under that amount it was to be an appeal from their decrees should lie to the Zillah Judge; in suits above that sum, to the Sudder Court. By an over anxiety to prevent the examination, of a cause, may by law be the subject of an appeal. An opponent has thus an opportunity of impeding the progress of a suit at every stage. To these 'everlasting appeals' there are many reasonable objections, and the system admits, we think, of salutary revision; but it is the law of the land, and we shall not now stop to discuss the propriety of it. The law of 1837 which enlarged the jurisdiction of the Principal Sudder Ameens, and lodged the appeal from their decrees in suits above 5000 Rupees in the Sudder, was silent about an appeal on interlocutory orders, and these have been made to the Zillah Judges. This anomaly is now rectified. The appeal from such orders is in future to lie to the Sudder, to whom the appeal on the decree is committed.

Sections Three and Four greatly extend the powers of the Moonshis and Sudder Ameens, and afford greater facilities for the administration of Justice in their Courts. Under the former arrangement, if the Native Judge received information during the progress of a suit, that the defendant intended to abscond, or to make away with his property, he was not at liberty to demand security from him, for the eventual performance of the decree, or in case of his refusing to furnish it, to attach his property, without obtaining the sanction of the Judge. The defendant was not of course ignorant of any such application; and was enabled therefore to defeat the ends of justice, by absconding or disposing of his property before the Judge's reply could arrive; and he was a great simplicitas if he did not avail himself of the opportunity which the law so generously afforded him. The new law vests the subordinate Judges with power to demand security, to sequester property in all such cases, without any reference to the Judge. We are aware that the native community does not regard without a feeling of dismay the enlarged authority thus conferred on Native Judges, and which gives them the power of inflicting the most serious injury on a defendant by collusion with a plaintiff. That this power will in some instances be thus abused, there can be no doubt; but an appeal will lie to the Judge, and he may always repair the injustice. On the whole, the inconveniences which this increase of power may occasion, are likely to be fewer than those which it will remove; and this is a sufficient justification of the new law.

The two lower grades of Judges were also released under the old law from realizing, without reference to the Judge, any fines they might find it necessary to impose. By the new Act these fines may be enforced without such reference: but an appeal against the order will always lie to the Judge, who may modify or remit the fine:—a provision the more necessary as a Moonshi is now empowered to fine a man to the extent of double his own salary; and of two-thirds the amount of the suit pending in his Court.

The Fifth Section refers to the execution of decrees. Reg. V. of 1831, Sect. 22, ordered that the decrees of the Principal Sudder Amone ordinate to the Government of Bengal, whether should be executed by them. Perhaps this a Mooniff, in Christian habits both of mind and ennoblement was intended to apply only to the body, is entitled to be called Sahib. The Mooniff decrees passed by them in original suits, though 'till claims the title; the Civil Judge refuses it; it appears to have been construed as applying; and this knotty point, instead of being submitted to decisions passed by them in appeal cases, is committed to the Deputy Governor of Bengal and this point was afterwards explained by a Circular, the Upper Secretary and the Under Secretaries, Circular Order, which ordained that if the decree was a mere confirmation of that of the lower Court without summoning the respondent, it should be executed by that Court. If against such a contingency. The Circular Order it was passed upon a full investigation of the case of the 6th July 1838, directs that the Mooniff, in the case of the suit, it should be executed by the Court of Appeal. The present enactment sweeps away that distinction, and provides that all decrees passed in appeal shall be executed by the Court in which the suit was originally instituted. But the Circular Order which is thus su- perceded, may possibly continue for months or years unrevoked, and unnecessarily embarrass the minds of the Native pleaders and Judges, are anxious to shuffle off a difficult question. We would therefore venture to recommend that will give him the benefit, whatever it be, of the Sudder Court should issue a Circular Order reserving. It appears to be an indisputable fact, on the publication of every new Act, pointing that from our first advent in India, the term out the previous Orders which may have been Sahib has been applied to every individual superseded by it, and modifying those which require modification. This course, by removing all doubts regarding the Orders which are still able whether that peculiar kind of cock hat to be considered in force, would tend greatly to which some Armenians mount upon their heads, facilitate the administration of Justice.

The sixth, seventh and eighth Sections give the Mooniff's jurisdiction in every description of suits, and over every class of persons, provided the amount at issue be not above 300 Rs. and the cause of action be arisen within the limits of their own local jurisdiction. All Europeans are subject to the Courts of the Mooniff. The Regulation of 1838 is now consummated. That Regulation still left Europeans exempt from the jurisdiction of the Mooniff, the lowest grade of Judges; the present Act abolishes all privileges, levels all distinctions, and, whether for good or whether for ill, gives an impartial uniformity to our jurisprudence which has hitherto been wanting. The Mooniff may admit and try a suit against a European; he may call on him for security, if he is represented, as being likely to remove from the jurisdiction, and, if he is not given, he may sequester his property; he may fine him to the extent of 300 Rupees for obstructing justice; and lory the fine upon his own order—but the Mooniff, to whom such large powers and prerogatives are confided, is not to be trusted with the privilege of franking a single public requisition or order he may have occasion to transmit by post to another Court.

An order of the Sudder Court published in last Tuesday's Bengales Government Gazette, directed that he should send every such requisition or order under an open envelop to the Judge, who will seal and frank the cover, and send it to the Post Office. So strange a compound of confidence and mistrust does our system of local jurisprudence in India present.

A MOST IMPORTANT QUESTION.—A correspondent has submitted to our arbitration a question of official etiquette, upon which we have not as yet been able to make up our mind. We invoke the generous aid of all and singular our readers and correspondents, who are able to shed any light upon this most important question, which threatens to interrupt the harmony of our judicial arrangements in the department of Civil Justice.

A discussion has arisen, it appears, between a Mooniff and a Civil Judge in some district sub-the three cornered hat devils," would entitle a man in India to the term Sahib, though it may be conceded to him, by courtesy. But the term topce walah, or one who wears a hat, and Sahib, have for the better part of a century, been synonymous. Mr. Foster, in his translation of the Regulations for 1793, uses the word Belaguttee Musk Act of 1838 is now consummated. That Regulation still left Europeans exempt from the jurisdiction of the Mooniff, the lowest grade of Judges; the present Act abolishes all privileges, levels all distinctions, and, whether for good or whether for ill, gives an impartial uniformity to our jurisprudence which has hitherto been wanting. The Mooniff may admit and try a suit against a European; he may call on him for security, if he is represented, as being likely to remove from the jurisdiction, and, if he is not given, he may sequester his property; he may fine him to the extent of 300 Rupees for obstructing justice; and lory the fine upon his own order—but the Mooniff, to whom such large powers and prerogatives are confided, is not to be trusted with the privilege of franking a single public requisition or order he may have occasion to transmit by post to another Court.

An order of the Sudder Court published in last Tuesday's Bengales Government Gazette, directed that he should send every such requisition or order under an open envelop to the Judge, who will seal and frank the cover, and send it to the Post Office. So strange a compound of confidence and mistrust does our system of local jurisprudence in India present.

To be serious however. It is far more foolish in the Judge to dispute the claim than in the Mooniff to advance it. Every one in the district would as a matter of course give the Mooniff the title of Sahib, except perhaps, the Deputy Governor, when the subject is brought before him, we think the claim of the Mooniff to the designation will be at once recognised.

The Mooniff has therefore just reason to remonstrate against a procedure which is intended to inflict an extra-judicial stigma upon him, and is calculated to degrade him in the estimation of the suitors and officers of his own Court. The removal from the part of the Judge exhibits so contempt a sacrifice of official dignity to personal feelings; and betrays such extreme littleness of mind as to make it very questionable whether it is fit to preclude over the judicial arrangements of a large district. If the Mooniff has committed any official delinquency, it ought to be repressed officially, and not by refusing him the title of Sahib, which can serve no other purpose than to display the Judge's antipathy to the individual. The injury he thereby inflicts on his own character will be found to be ten times greater than any he can inflict on the poor dependent Mooniff.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CONVENT IN CALCUTTA.

AN ANONYMOUS correspondent of the Englishman, last week mentioned in a letter to the Editor that Protestants had sent their children for education to the Catholic Convent in Calcutta, at the hazard of their religion. We offered a passing remark on this apparent acknowledgment, by one who appeared to be in the secret, that the religious belief of Protestant children was not altogether safe, when they were entrusted to Catholic tutors at the Nunnery. The writer has endeavored, in a letter which will be found in a subsequent column, to qualify his representation, which was likely to startle some of the unsusppecting Protestant parents who have availed themselves of the Convent for education. He says that we have misunderstood his language; that he did not intend to affirm that there was any real hazard in sending children to the Nunnery, but simply that Protestants thought so, and chose notwithstanding to run the hazard. The reader will be pleased to bear this explanation in mind.

The Catholic Herald of Saturday last has an article on the same subject, and as many of our readers may not have had an opportunity of forming an opinion of the tone and spirit of this organ of the Catholic community in India, we have republished it entire for their information.

There is much in that communication altogether irrelevant to the matter in hand, which is simply whether Protestant children sent to the Nunnery for education are likely to leave it with their Protestant feelings unimpaired. The writer says, that in "several instances the parents and guardians of Protestant children, when placing their proteges at Loretto House, openly declared, that they had not the least objection that their wards should attend Catholic worship and instruction." We are sorry to hear that any Protestant parents or guardians are to be found who are so indifferent on a subject of such transcendental importance. We think they might with advantage take a lesson from the Catholics, who guard their children and wards, with the most rigid jealousy, from all associations likely to weaken their attachment to the Roman Catholic religion. But there are doubtless other Protestants who take a more conscientious view of their responsibilities, and who have confided their children to the Convent in the hope that their Protestant principles would not be shaken, and that they would leave the institution as free from any bias to Catholicism as they entered it. It appears sufficiently evinced from the Catholic Herald that their expectations will not be realised. The writer declines us to prove a single case where either a convert or a wish was intimated to a Protestant child to induce that child to attend Catholic worship. Although we had heard from various quarters, on the report of children who had been removed from the Nunnery, that very strong encouragement had been offered to them, to convert to Catholic usage, we never affirmed that their religious principles had been tampered with, and we are not therefore obliged to enter on the proof. From the very confident tone of the Catholic Herald it would appear that there was little foundation for these assertions, and that it must have been the children themselves, who were mistaken in their apprehensions. The object of our brief notice was solely to remark, what appeared to us good evidence, that Protestant children, when entrusted to the Nunnery, run the hazard of losing their Protestant attachments, and contracting a partiality for the Catholic religion, which would sooner or later in their embracing it. The correspondent of the Catholic Herald places this point, we think, beyond all doubt. We are told that the holy example, the endearing conduct of the Loeste Ladies must teach their pupils to reverence a religion which cherishes the virtues they daily witness, and must banish for ever from their minds, the low vulgar prejudices which have taken shelter in Serampore;—that is, the low vulgar prejudices in favour of that Christian truth and liberty which the Reformation secured to us. From whatever cause, therefore, whether from the kindness of the Ladies, or the effect of Roman Catholic ceremonies on the young imagination, children must, it appears, leave the Convent without any low and vulgar prejudices in favour of—Protestantism.

THE DUTY OF THE SOMNATH GATE.—The celebrated Proclamation relative to the Somnath Gates which has been the theme of discussion in every Journal in England, and even in Parliament itself, and has afforded such a fund of ridicule to Punch and the caricaturists, was gradually dying out of recollection in this country, when public attention was again called to it, by the presentation of a box of its saw dust to the Asiatic Society at the last meeting. What was thought and said and done on that occasion, the imagination of the reader will readily suggest to him. As impartial Journalists, however, it becomes us to remark that the production of the box, without its accompaniments, gave the whole transaction an air of ridicule, which did not originally belong really to it. It is generally understood that a drawing of the Gates, with a copy of the inscription, and of the report of the Engineer officers who examined them, was to have been presented at the same time with the dust. Independently of the celebrity which the gates have obtained from a recent event, there is an antiquarian interest associated with them which rendered the gift of the drawing to that learned body by no means inappropriate. We have heard that the inscription furnishes considerable evidence of the identity of these gates with those which may be supposed to have adorned the temple of Somnath. The dust would have afforded an opportunity for ascertaining whether they were made of sandal wood. Nothing however was laid on the table of the Society, but a few pinches of dust put up in a kind of apothecary's box, and thus it appears that ridicule is destined to attend the unfortunate gates to the end of the Chapter.

The original design of bringing back the gates as a trophy of victory, which is mentioned in the very first letter written by the Governor General to General Nott, when he ordered the advance to Ghuzni and Cabul, was exceedingly suitable to the occasion, and calculated to produce a strong and beneficial effect on the Native mind. It had been echoed from one end of India to the other, from the Himalaya to Cape Comorin; and from the mountains of Assam to the Delta of the Indus, that the 'invincible nation' had at length encountered its match in the dales of Afghanistan; that Ghuzni, the capture of which completed the humiliation of the Crescent, had been wrested from us; that our Envoys had been assassinated and our armies annihilated by the descendants of those who had in former ages rendered their names terrific by conquests and cruelties in India. Our students at Cabul became the topic of conversation among the bearded Sikh chieftains at Ladak, and the Polygons of Cape Comorin, among the Amans of Scinde, and at the Court of Thanawaddy. In these circumstances, perhaps nothing was so likely to produce a reaction in the native mind and to assure the princes and chiefs of India, as well as those beyond its limits, that victory had returned to our standard, as the announcement that the Gates of Gomnath which stood in Mahomed's tomb at Ghuzni, had been brought to India as a trophy of victory. Though the original abstraction of the gates was but little known in the community at large, the princes and chiefs, whom it was our object to convince of our triumphs, had more or less some faint perceptions on the subject; and the public notification that they were coming back to India, in the train of our returning armies would have been taken as an undoubted proof of the reality of our triumphs. The idea was originally not only good, but happy; but it was altogether spoiled by that most unfortunate proclamation which in an evil hour the Governor General was induced to pen. The whole transaction immediately assumed an air of ridicule; and the stigma of folly was deeply fixed on the administration, which it will require years of good Government to obliterate.

INTRODUCTION OF EXCELLENT ROOTS INTO INDIA.—We publish below a communication which reached us some time ago, sent by a Missionary in Africa to his friend in this country. The information it contains may be turned to good account by the Agricultural Societies in India. The existence of no fewer than thirty-two valuable excellent roots, in the deserts of Africa, which afford excellent food, and require little rain, and no culture, is an important fact. If they will grow in such untoward circumstances in Africa, they would flourish under more favourable circumstances in various parts of India. There is no more certain mode of improving the condition of the people than by multiplying the means of sustenance through the introduction of roots and plants from foreign parts. The gift of the potatoe has been a greater blessing to the lower classes of society, than that of the Permanent Settlement has been to the landed aristocracy. We are not aware of the precise year in which it was introduced, but forty years ago it was so rare, that the parent of a child who was sent to one of the first seminaries then in India stipulated that he should have potatoes three times a week in the season. The cultivation has been indefinitely extended since that time, and in the month of January, potatoes are sold in the gross at twelve annas the maund, or three pounds for a penny; and an invaluable article of food is thus given to the very poorest, during three or four months in the year.

There can be no doubt that many of the roots mentioned by the African Missionary would be found to grow well even in the soil of Bengal, during the cold season. But they would above all prove an invaluable acquisition to the newly acquired provinces of Scinde, especially in those parts of it which are covered with the sands of the desert. If we could thus augment the means of sustenance in that arid country, we should be indeed conferring the most solid benefit upon its inhabitants. The subject is worthy the attention of the Agricultural Societies of Bengal and Bombay. Some of their members have resorted to the Cape for the benefit of their health, and there would be little difficulty in putting them in the way of procuring and dispatching, after the most approved ed fashion, a number of these excellent roots to India.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

MY DEAR SIR,—The following extract is from a letter which I received the other day from a friend in Central Africa. As I am ignorant whether there be such a society as my correspondent mentions or not, I have thought the surest way of obtaining the attention of those interested in this matter would be through the medium of your columns. He writes, "I saw somewhere a notice from an Indian paper, respecting the formation of a society, if I mistake not under the patronage of Lord Auckland, for the purpose of ameliorating the condition of the natives of India by introducing excellent roots, &c. from other countries. It struck me that the roots and fruits which abound in our deserts beyond this would be excellent for India. We have on the desert, where there is not a drop of water for a great part of the year, no fewer than 33 roots and 43 fruits. Some of these are excellent and form the chief food of the Bushmen and other natives of the desert. They grow on the sand without any cultivation, and if cultivated, they very probably would be improved. The root is excellent, when young, resembling a young turnip, and it produces a bean about the size of a marble which when roasted is very pleasant. You see only a slender creeping plant above the sand with a few pods containing the beans, but if you dig down a good way you may get a root as large as your thigh—and this too in the most desert places. There are several pleasant fruits too, which might be much improved by cultivation even now the flavor is excellent." My friend is stationed at Kuruman (or Lattah) to the north of which these roots and fruits are principally found; respecting a gentleman through whom I had sent him a letter he says, "I wish he would come up this way," and adds, "this is an excellent climate and I believe it would do any of your Indian invalids good. If I knew any one coming I would tell him where he would be most civilly treated and where he most probably would recover his health soonest."

I am, yours truly, W.

We have availed ourselves with much pleasure of a Report of the Proceedings at Bombay on laying the foundation of the Grant Medical College, to reprint almost entire, the admirable sketch of the character of the late Sir Robert Grant, given by the Bishop of Calcutta in his address. It will simply repay perusal. The interest which it is calculated to revive, is increased by the recollection that this lamented statesman and philanthropist received the first rudiments of his education in the city of Calcutta, under the Rev. David Brown.

We have received several letters from correspondents, requesting a notice of Lieut. Eyre's book. We should have attended to their wishes earlier, if we could have procured a copy of the work for ourselves; but every copy of the first impression was sold in a day or two, and we were obliged to wait for the second supply. We are now in possession of a copy we can use editorially; and shall begin with the review of it next week.

We beg to acknowledge the receipt of the following pamphlets, of which we shall lose no time in giving an analysis.

The Benevolent Institution Report.
Report of the Missionary Society.
Report of the Parental Academic Institution.
Report of the Committee of the Association for the promotion of the Fine Arts in Scotland.

WEEKLY EPILOGUE OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, MAY 11.

— Intelligence was brought to Bombay by the H. C. Ship of war Cote, which anchored at Bombay on the 8th of April, that Sir Charles Napier was at Hyderabad in excellent health, regulating the administration. His Excellency is persuaded of the complete establishment of British authority in Scinde, but has not a sufficient force to garrison the towns. The Belooches from the mountain west of the Indus may be expected to come down and make another effort for the reconquest of the country and against such a contingency it is necessary to provide. The search for prime articles still continued and was daily rewarded by new discoveries. In one fine place in the semina, gold and silver to the value of three lakhs of Rupees had been discovered; one pair of ear-rings alone was valued at 8000 Rupees. Capt. Napier, the Governor's nephew, had come to Bombay on the Cote, and it was said would go to the Mahratta hills to prevail on Lady Napier not to proceed to Hyderabad, advice which, after the Calcutta catastrophe, it would be unwise to disregard. One of the Amers brought round is a very intelligent youth, Hossein Ali Khan. During his stay on board the vessel, he exhibited great intelligence and expressed a strong desire to travel, and to see Calcutta and London, and pay his respects to Queen Victoria.

— Yesterday evening's Calcutta Gazette announced the appointment of Mr. A. Turnbull and Mr. C. Deason, as Under Secretaries to the Government of Bengal. It is not to be inferred however from this appointment, that they are to remain in the office till they are old enough in the service to succeed to the Secretaryship. It is said to be Lord Ellenborough's determination that after three or four years continuance in this post, they shall take their turn of duty in the Mahratta, where alone that local experience can be acquired, which will completely fit a man for the office of Secretary.

— One of our North Western contemporaries states, that Lord Ellenborough has resolved that future the Joint Magistrates shall reside at some place in the interior of the district and not at the station of the Magistrate; a measure worthy of much commendation. It is only by a judicious distribution of officers of secondary rank in the districts, that abuses will be corrected and the administration purified.

— The Harbours states, that the Court of Directors have refused their sanction to the abolition of the Upper Orphan School. It must therefore, we suppose, be maintained upon its present most extravagant footing; extravagant, we mean where the expenditure is divided among the number of lads who receive education there.

FRIDAY, MAY 12.

— It is amusing to read the advertising columns of our Bombay contemporaries. The Calcutta Lottery has ceased to exist, and unless the Court of Directors should order it to be revived, we shall not be again visited with this moral plague. Yet, the Bombay Courier has no less than three advertisements of Lotteries upon its Ticker, which occupy 3½ columns. Considering the large number of advertisements of the Lotteries which used to appear in the Journals at this Presidency, the support given to the suppression of Lotteries by the Editors, is an instance of disinterestedness which should not pass without record.

— The Bombay papers of the 5th May supply some further particulars regarding Scinde. The Prime Agents continue their labours with great success. "The Zimmas have been most prolific, yielding bags of Rupees, gold and silver legged bedsteads, bars of gold, valuable armours, gold and silver with silver stirrups, and bristles to match interlaid with pearls and gems." The Military Commission which sat on the murder of Capt. Duns, has found him guilty and he was executed on a gibbet outside of Hyderabad on the morning of the 26th.—A great deficiency of carriage, and especially of canals was beginning to be felt, as well as of fresh provisions, the Belooches having carried off their goats and cows; butter and even milk was becoming a luxury.

— The Delhi Gazette gives us letters from Khyber, now at our disposal, which state that Major Lawrence and Mill with unremitting exertions had secured about 80,000 Rupees in horses, shawls, guns, &c. and about five lakhs of Rupees in cash. It also states, that if the light brigade consisting of Simmer's troop, a squadron of dragoons, the 5th regular Cavalry, and the 50th Native Infantry had been pushed on by forced marches, more than 500 lakhs of Rupees might have been secured. That sum is now irretrievably lost, having passed in the first moments of confusion, into the hands of the people of the town and of the neighbouring districts.

— It has been pointed out to us that the assertion made in our paper of last week that "the Court of Requests had just ruled that its Attorneys were entitled to a fee of 8 Rs. for every attendance," was incorrect. Fees to attorneys are not sanctioned in the Court of Requests. It appears that Mr. R. F. Smith, a pleader in the Sudder Court, has engaged to do some work for one Mr. Halsey, for which he claimed the exorbitant sum of 32 Rupees, which was cut down by the Court to 8 Rs.

SATURDAY, MAY 13.

— We are exceedingly happy to notice among the arrivals from sea yesterday that of the Julia, with the Bishop on board. That vessel had been overdue more than a fortnight, and apprehensions were entertained for her safety, which have now been happily dispelled. It appears that the protracted arrival of the vessel was owing to a visit paid by his Lordship to Gies, where he was received with the most cordial hospitality and bought golden opinions of the community by his great ability.

— A letter received by the Harbours from Louisiana, states that Mr. Clarke was about to proceed to Lahore with a couple of guns, an Infantry Regiment, and a Squadron of Horse, for the purpose of being present at Pertab Singh's wedding.

— Intelligence from Bombay to the 3d arrived yesterday. The Head Quarters of the Queen's gallant 22d landed on the 2d. The Governor and Commander-in-Chief accompanied with a large concourse of European ladies and gentlemen as well as of natives, received them, with every mark of honour at the Apollo Pier. All the troops in the Garrison were drawn up in review order and saluted this distinguished corps. On the landing of the first division, a Royal Salute was fired.

— The Agra Observer says, that it is reported and generally believed, that the Governor General contemplates a tour of some magnitude at the commencement of the cold season. He is to proceed first to Scinde, then to Bombay, thence to Madras, Calcutta, and back to Agra. Our contemporaries say that some have surmised that the tour has been devised with a view to the restoration of the Somnath Gates; but he regards it as mere gossip; and will be right. His Lordship has had enough of the Gates; they will not stir an ink to the restored temple of Somnath.

SUNDAY, MAY 14.

— The Expatriates of this morning states, that Mr. Moore, the Deputy Post Master, has been appointed Post Master General;—another birth lost to the service, for it has always been filled by the Covenanted Servant. The Post Master Generalship, at the best of times, has been a post of little honour, as it has been usual to give away to those of whom nothing could be made, to men who were reckoned among the Company's hard bargains. Last year it has been turned into a kind of palatine principality, the Natal Island of the Service. Every man who was in dispute with the public authorities, was put to reside over the Post Office, to keep him from starving. During all these shoppings and changes, the department has been steadily advancing to its present high state of efficiency, through the unvaried labours of Mr. Moore. It will be gratifying to find that the Deputy Governor has acknowledged his public services by bestowing on him this appropriate reward.

— The Expatriates of this morning states, that the Lord Chancellor has finally decided that Mr. Milford's bequest shall go, as he designed it, to the improvement of the city of Dacca. No ancient city of India stands more in need of the means of improvement than Dacca, which may be truly said like Venice to be "dying daily." The arguments of Lord Lyndhurst, as quoted by our contemporary, is very remarkable. It was urged that the fund might be applied to the erection of a monument for the worshippers of idols; to which the Lord Chancellor replied, that it was directed to be applied to the benefit of the inhabitants; that such an application could not be for their benefit, and that it might be restrained by the Supreme Court.

— Some of our Madras contemporaries are grumbling because Dr. Lane, who has been appointed Private Secretary to the Governor, holds two Medical appointments already, being Surgeon to the Nalob's Durbar, and Superintendent of the Rye Infirmary. His Medical Officers give him 1400 Rs. a month; the Private Secretaryship 720, total 2120 Rupees; which is nearly 800 Rs. more than a Superintendent Surgeon receives after some quarter of a century of medical toil and travel.

— The Delhi Gazette publishes a very melancholy account of the death of Mr. Reid, a young man of considerable talent and activity, to whose exertions Government owed the means of sending out their armies into Afghanistan. Through his various contracts he amassed in a short time a sum of two or three lakhs of Rupees; but his attachment to the women of the country evidently proved his ruin.—He was found dead, and his property was claimed by an Afghan female who vowed that he had turned Mahomedan and had married her. The contract will tell the rest. How many of our countrymen with the finest prospects before them, have thus fallen victims to their own passions in the grey prime of life!

— Eastman has been fully committed for the murder of Peterson. He is to be tried at the June Sessions of the Supreme Court.

TUESDAY, MAY 16.

— The supply of tea in the Ice House has suddenly disappeared, and here we are in the middle of May positively without tea, and without hope of any for a whole month, possibly for two months. The fault lies with the American shippers who have sent out an inferior article. If this delinquency should be repeated, we shall begin to look to the eastern coast of China for the article. The last accounts from Hong Kong stated that it had been imported from Chusan in large quantities.

— The Harbours of this morning alludes to a report which has been some time in circulation, that the Governor General intended to issue some new and more stringent orders relative to the attendance of Civilian at their offices, who are to be sent by the hour for absence. We shall not concern them till they are before the public. They will probably end in nothing. The hardworking Civilian will, as usual, work double tides, from conscientious motives or the impulse of nature, while the drowsy will still continue to go to Courtney as one, to devour and diminish, and retire at four. We have much curiosity to see how our clever Governor General will contrive to prevent that neglect of official duties which every one knows to prevail in some four or five districts, and/or how he will be able to discover that the Civilian has been out shooting when he reports himself employed in Miscellaneous duties.

— The Bombay Times received this morning some of its Correspondent columns that the Americans, who will this year have a crop of cotton artificially to clothe the whole world, and a few people more, intend to ship 100,000 bales to China, and thereby to spread dismay and possibly ruin among the cotton speculators of India. The Cotton we are informed, is actually selling at New Orleans for less than the cost of freight to England.

— The Bombay Viceroy of the 6th came in yesterday. It holds out a hope of receiving the April mail by the 12th of this month, in which case we may expect it here by Saturday next. In May, 1840, the Victoria Steamer brought the mails to Bombay on the 6th, but the Bombay Steamers have gradually fallen off in point of speed, and thenceforward grow worse as they grow older.

— The Commander-in-Chief at Bombay has been under the necessity of severely reprimanding the Commanding Officer and the members of the respective Custom Commissions of H. M. 17th Regiment for their neglect of the financial economy of the corps. The Quarter Master Surgeon's accounts exhibit a defalcation of not less than 47,000 Rupees. His name to have carried on his systematic villany for a long period. The accounts appeared fair and square on paper, and were passed as such. No one ever took the pains to enquire whether the money given to the Quarter Master was ever paid by him to the various tradesmen in England or India to whom it was due. The consequence is, that they have been one and all defrauded, and the name of this gallant corps has been subject to the direct disgrace. All this has arisen from the blind confidence reposed in the honesty of the Quarter Master and from the absence of all wholesome interest. It is to be hoped that this reproof will serve as a warning to other Regiments, and put Commanding officers on their guard, many of the most valuable of whom are much better fitted to lead their corps into action, than to check the Quarter Master's accounts.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 11.

— The Star mentions with much satisfaction that the Governor General has been pleased to take special notice of the Zemindars and others, who have of late years been public benefactors by the erection of hospices for travellers, the sinking of wells, or the planting of trees, and has caused them to be addressed separately in terms of commendation.

— The Star of this morning in a column on the article which appeared yesterday in the Express, relative to the proposed rule for entering the Civil Servants by the hour for absence, says: "We believe that the ill-will of the Civil Servants are those at the Presidency, and there is this far their excuse that they are there." He might have said, and those who "tell terribly," to use a favorite expression of Sir Walter Raleigh, are also to be found there. The Star is hardly fair in this use of the superlative degree of comparison. We think we can match half a dozen of the gentlemen in the Madras, for the deus facit deus against any thing that the Metropolis can produce.

— The Madras paper state, that the Lady Sels had taken her passage with 180 Coolies, and the Kingston we advised to do so, with 250 more, for the Mauritius. The Coolies, finding there was a demand for their labor have raised their prices; and it has been necessary to give them bounty money to the extent of 16 Rupees a head; they grumble also that after having taken the bounty, they were not left at liberty to absent. Latterly they have raised their demand to 20 Rupees. The last letters from the Mauritius represent them as being almost in a state of insurrection; and if all the accounts which are published be authentic, it would seem that the masters need as much protection from their fraud and violence, as they were supposed to be from the tyranny of the master.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following names for the Friend of India:—

Col. D. Macleod, ... to March, 1844, 20 0
John Mackay, Esq., ... to April, 1844, 20 0
Apo. Phil, Esq., ... to Dec. 1843, 20 0

Rames Kalkandu, ... to April, 1844, 20 0
The Hon. T. Chatterjee, ... to Dec. 1843, 20 0
Rev. J. Caldwell, ... ditto, 20 0
R. C. Lepage, Esq., ... to Nov. 1843, 20 0
J. A. Dunbar, Esq., ... to Dec. 1843, 20 0
Messrs. McVean, Burns and Co., ... to April, 1844, 20 0
Major Urquhart, ... to June, 1844, 20 0
J. B. Lewis, Esq., ... to May, 1844, 20 0
J. McCallum, Esq., ... to Dec. 1843, 20 0
O. W. Malet, Esq., ... ditto, 20 0
W. Jackson, Esq., ... to March, 1844, 20 0
Thos. King, ... ditto, 20 0
J. C. Mackenzie, Esq., ... to Feb. 1844, 20 0
F. Courjau, Esq., ... to Dec. 1843, 20 0
Rev. W. H. Perkins, ... to May, 1843, 20 0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

★ DWARKANATH TAGORE.

The meeting at Government House yesterday morning to witness the presentation of the gold medal to Dwarkanath Tagore was a very large one. The following is the address made on the occasion by the Hon. Mr. Bird, and cannot but cordially approve the excellent advice he gives the Native community, for the especial benefit of those gentlemen who have effected to consider themselves ill-used.

DWARKANATH TAGORE.

On your departure from England to return to your native country, the Hon. the Court of Directors of the East India Company requested your acceptance of a Gold Medal as a testimonial of their esteem, and of the appreciation with which they regard the public benefits you have conferred on British India by the encouragement of Native Education, by the introduction of the arts and sciences, and by the generous support which you have given to the Christian and other institutions of Calcutta, whether established for the relief of the Native or of the British Community. The Court say the more they expressed their expectation that the whole course which you had pursued would have the effect of contributing to the accomplishment of the object which it had ever been their anxious desire to promote, namely, the identification of the feelings and interests of the Native and European population committed to their Government, and to the consolidation of the bonds which unite India with Great Britain, that Medal has now been received, with directions to take an early opportunity of presenting you with the same, in the name and on the behalf of the Court, and it has appeared to us that we could not better carry their directions into effect than by presenting you with it in the presence of the Ladies and Gentlemen here assembled, who are the representatives of that European and Native population, the identification of whose feelings and interests is thus sought to be promoted.

But before I present to you this Testimonial, I wish to dwell for a few moments on the lesson to be learnt from it. It shows that there is every disposition in the highest quarters to reward industry in the Natives of India, and that there is nothing in an Indian Sun to prevent the growth of those qualifications, and the exercise of those virtues which lead to such rewards. But those distinctions are only obtainable after a long career of industry and perseverance. No one can better than the distinguished individual now before me, how long he had to labor in obscurity and poverty. What repulses he had to overcome, what difficulties to encounter before he attained that high place in public opinion, which has brought him to the present position in which he now stands. Let me therefore exhort my Native friends who are looking for high situations to profit by his example, to display in the first instance the same zeal, ability, energy, and perseverance in the discharge of their public duties to satisfy the public mind that they possess the same high qualifications as the testimonial is intended to reward, and then they may rest assured that they will not fail in obtaining such advancement and such rewards as may be justly due to their merits and services.

(The Medal was the recompense after which the President of the Council concluded in the following terms:—)

Having now discharged the duty intrusted to me, then remains only to express you of the satisfaction which it has afforded me, and that I join with the Honorable Court in the hope that your future career may be marked by happiness and prosperity. I hope also that you may long be an example to your fellow Countrymen, and that they, influenced by that example may more and more be enabled to win you have so frankly and honorably declared, namely, that the happiness of India is best secured by her connection with Great Britain, and that the Government under which you live has nothing more at heart than the improvement and welfare of the vast and populous empire which Providence has committed to its charge.

To the above address Dwarkanath replied as follows:—

HONORABLE SIR,—If any circumstances could enhance the value of that flattering testimonial which you have conferred upon me in the name of the Honorable Court, it must be that you, Sir, are those in which I this day find myself.

It is most grateful to my feelings, Sir, to receive this gift at the hands of a distinguished sovereign of the Honorable Court, and of your own virtuous and private excellencies, I, in common with all who know you, entertain the highest admiration.

It is gratifying, too, to have yielded to many of my fellow-citizens, and no less gratifying to receive it accompanied by the sentiments you have expressed.

But I must be permitted to mention another circumstance which will I am confident give pleasure to all who hear me. During my visit to England, and while in the habit of daily intercourse with those who from their lofty stations control to some degree the destinies of this my native land, it was my privilege to listen to the most emphatic assurances of the fact, that the honor of her Majesty's Minister at the head of Indian affairs, and of the Court of Directors, to promote those measures which are most calculated to advance the intellectual, moral, and political welfare and happiness of Her Majesty's subjects, the natives of British India. If I had before reason to be thankful for the union that existed between India and Great Britain, the more so now, and the more greatly increased, by such repeated evidence of a deep and growing anxiety to make that union subservient to the highest and best interests of my fellow countrymen. The proofs of the sincerity of these declarations, as well as the earnest wish of the local government to carry out such noble intentions are every day furnished to me by the measures adopted for the improvement of the laws and institutions of this country, and their impartial and equitable administration of public affairs.

When apprized of the intention of the Honorable Court to bestow upon me the medal with which you have now invested me, I could not bring myself to believe that any thing in my conduct had rendered me worthy of such a distinction and a distinction, and I was therefore at a loss to account for the honor which had been passed, less as a compliment to myself, than as a pledge conveyed through me to the Natives of India, that the efforts of the elevation are objects dear to their rulers, and that the humblest efforts to serve the country to which they belong, will neither pass unnoticed nor unrewarded.

Sir, having attempted to express my gratitude in a letter already in the hands of the Honorable Court, it is only necessary on this occasion to say that I shall with steadiness and renewed ardor persevere, with those around me, that course which has obtained for me so flattering a token of approbation; were my motive wanting to ensure fidelity to the cause of my country, or my loyal attachment to the Government under which we live, this medal would supply it. While I live, it will constantly remind me of my duty, and with a little I trust it will be to my posterity a stimulus to pursue the path which I have chosen, in the service of my country, and in the discharge of my public purposes is the best way to secure the confidence of our fellow citizens, the good opinion of the Government and the favor of the Sovereign.

Sir, let me, Sir, to express my most grateful thanks for the manner in which you have fulfilled the wishes of the Honorable Court, and to express my sincere hope, that prosperity and happiness may attend you, both in the administration of affairs of this important dependency, and in all the relations of domestic life.

In conclusion I beg you to convey to the Honorable Court an expression of my humble but lasting gratitude for the testimonial you have conferred upon me by their authority. Many of my countrymen have ever delighted to see me, and amongst them could be numbered highly appreciate the honor for which I now return my most heartfelt acknowledgments.

The inscriptions on the Medal are, on the one side—
TO
DWARKANATH TAGORE
WHICH THE COURT OF DIRECTORS OF THE
EAST INDIA COMPANY,
1842.

And on the other—Presented AS A TESTIMONIAL OF THEIR ESTEEM

AND OF THE APPROPRIATION WITH WHICH THEY REGARD-THE BENEFITS CONFERRED
BY HIM UPON
BRITISH INDIA.

Round this fane of the Medal is inscribed—
HINDU COLLEGE, DISTRICT OF CALCUTTA, COMMER-CIAL MEDICAL COLLEGE, AND OTHER PUBLIC IN-STITUTIONS, CALCUTTA.—Cal. Star, May 11.

THE FURD OF INDIA AND LORETO HOUSE.

The Sansapore Gazette, in one of those truly mischievous paragraphs, which is designed to insert whenever it is necessary to avert, take a sting at Calcutta, informs its readers, in its issue of the eleventh instant, on the authority of an anonymous Correspondent in the Englishtman, who seems, say the Anglo-Indian litigators, to be in the secret, that Protestant dissenters to hear their faith by being sent to Loreto House. And this notwithstanding, that the pious Editor understood, that the Catholic Priesthood asserted, that the subject of religion was not mentioned at Loreto House, and that Protestant papers might send their children there with impunity.
You that have tears at command, do shed a few to console a Champion of orthodoxy, a man of this world and the next, a printer, a preacher, a manufacturer on the eloquent terms of rags into beautiful glazed paper for Bibles, as well as into Carriage paper for the special accommodation of the Afghans and Chinese. If you only know, how capably tears are shed, you will not be surprised, when he first learned that the system of education at the Maronite being condemned by the successor of St. Peter, exclaimed every Catholic, who raised his faith more than a name of Petrus, from an institution founded and endowed by a Catholic gentleman—if you would only ask to mind how this General Philanthropist weeps, when the Catholic Priests are sent to Loreto House, who the liberal District Charitable Society, and when above all the very name of "Catholic houses or Legacies" the name always, before given to the Legacy (for the poor left to the world) a Catholic Lady was expunged for ever, if you would only remember the generous, the liberal, the unmercenary sympathy of your Sansapore brother on all these things, you would not refuse him the tribute of a tear, now that he suffers over the ark of the Lord held captive by the Pillions of Loreto House, and that he would be consoled by the assurance, one that will fill his heart with an exuberance of joy, that in several instances, the Parents and Guardians of Protestant Children, when placed at Loreto House, have House openly declared, that they had no objection, that their Words should attend Catholic worship and instruction. In other instances, where the state of the world was we defy our contemporary to prove a single case, where either a command or a wish was instituted to a Protestant child, to induce that child to attend Catholic worship. No, the enlightened Li-bers of Loreto House are content, to let the unstable and evil-doing conduct and conversation of the Nuns make its impression on the minds of the pupils there; they feel convinced that without the most violation of the religious liberty which is guaranteed to every Protestant child, the very example, the enduring conduct of the Loreto ladies must teach their pupils to reverence a religion which cherishes the virtues they daily witness, and must launch forever from their minds, the low vulgar prejudice which would for society are now taking shelter in such places as Sansapore, the refuge of broken down Involunters in property and reputation.—From a Correspondent of the Bengal Catholic Herald.

MR. HENFORD'S LEGACY.

A case was decided lately by the Lord Chancellor of some interest to Indian readers. Mr.
Hinford, who had been long a local civilian, left by his will the whole residue of his personal estate to the Governor of Bengal, to apply it to charitable, beneficial, and public works in Decca, for the exclusive benefit of the natives of that province, and the government might think most conducive to that end. The property being large, his relatives disputed the validity of this bequest, and their counsel stoutly averred that it was void, in arguments which lasted many days. As might be expected, every imaginable objection that inequity could suggest was urged against the unfortunate gift; the advocates maintained, the in-certainty of the purposes, the impossibility of the Court of Chancery itself to look after the infant benefit, the doctrine of perpetuities, and the undisputed fact, that the law said; the gift being held good by the Chancellor. Of none of these arguments, however, have we any thing to say, we are, that we are, that we are, that we are,
which it must be regarded by the prosent Governor General, at whom one would almost think, it had been specially pointed. It was strongly urged, that this last bequest might be applied to idolatrous purposes, to the erection of a monument for the worshipping of idols, and other objectable appropriations of the fund. Lord Chancellor's answer was striking, and deserves peculiarly the attention of his readers. Baron Hinford said: "The gift is for the benefit of the native inhabitants. This Court would not consider such an application of the fund as being for their benefit; nor would any other Court administered upon equitable principles consider that an application of the fund for the purpose of encouraging idolatry could be for their advantage. Therefore, the Supreme Court of Calcutta, exercising an equitable jurisdiction, would control, regulate, and restrain any such application. And as the Governor General is subject to that jurisdiction, except when acting entirely in his public capacity as Governor General in Council, he will, if he misapplies this fund, in the way suggested, be insensible to that Court." Upon this understanding the fund is to be paid over to the Governor General.—Englishtman, May 15.

DEATH OF MR. REID.

"As it is possible you may get some incorrect reports of some late transactions here, I send a few lines to let you know the truth.
About three weeks since there died suddenly at Meerut, a Mr. Reid. The history of this man is singular and interesting. Of an enterprising and ambitious mind, he had been, under the government in the Commissariat Department, and realized honorably, in a short space of time, a large fortune, by the Government on grain, excessively for the use of the army in Afghanistan.
The laurels on the brows of Lord Keane and Sir
H. Sale were mainly won for them by Mr. Reid, who was killed on the 10th of April, 1842, at the other of the battles. It is said he died worth three lakhs of Rupees and his age did not exceed 35. On his return from Kandahar, at the beginning of April, when he had successfully proved his claim for a sum of 18,000 Rs. from Government, he was suddenly taken ill and died. No medical assistance was applied for, and an inquest was held on the 10th of April. The inquesters were not aware that any large sum of money was possessed by the deceased. An Englishman present refused to account for the misfortune for every thing, and he was buried in the church yard. A few days after, on the investigation of the effect by the Judge, a claim was set up by an Afghan woman, who had lived with him, for the property for herself and female infant, on the ground that he was a Mussulman and had been married to her in the Mahomedan fashion. A Sergeant sent in having on the body, he observed that Mr. Reid had been circumcised. The Judge appears to have adjudged the property to the woman and her child in consequence. Various reports were received that large bribes had been offered, and that Mr. Reid was not a Mussulman as had been represented.
At length the Chaplain determined to investigate the case. If the Judge were right in considering the man a Mussulman, it was clear a gross fraud had been practised by his friends in bringing him for Christian burial, and the church yard was no proper resting place for his bones. On the other hand, if he had not been circumcised and had not apportioned, those who proved him to the Judge's satisfaction a Mussulman, he would have been guilty of knavery, and not much wonder, seeing three lakhs of rupees hung on the decision, one lakh would purchase witnesses for anything. With the sanction of the authorities of the station, the body was exhumed on Friday the 23rd (April) as gave rise; two medical officers were present, and after as we have seen, the decision was decided opinion is, that there is not the slightest reason to believe that Mr. Reid had ever submitted to circumcision, and the report of his having apportioned the property to his wife and child, is a gross fraud. Several officers who knew the deceased in Afghanistan, and had heard of his liaisons with Afghan and Kishmistan women, never heard a word of his having obtained possession of them by becoming a Mussulman. The party in the interest of the Afghan woman who calls herself his wife, were in a minority when they heard the re-sultation of the Chaplain to have the case daily investigated. As public servants of Government, Mr.
Reid was highly esteemed; he accompanied Sir Robert Gordon to Kabul, and was a devoted friend of the illustrious Garrison.—Daily Gazette.

SIR ROBERT GRAY.

Sir Robert Gray was endowed by Providence with an extraordinary combination of natural in-telects; he possessed a masculine understanding, an acute discernment of character, the soundest judgment, a warm liberal heart, and a fervid eloquent eloquence—all elevated and sanctified, as he entered into life, by the highest Christian principles.

He received in early youth an education of the most finished kind at one of our English Universities, Cambridge, and where he, together with his elder brother, heart, and a fervid eloquent honors" with the applause of all his contemporaries.
He came out to India as a mature period of life, after having been trained and schooled as to be for his honorable office during the long period of forty years under his admirable Father, whom he sided in many of the great questions relating to the East, taking a part in the discussion in the Court of Proprietors, and publishing two considerable volumes in 1810 on subjects connected with the general of the Charter, which testified his powers of mind, his elegance and force of composition, and the vast fund of information on which he could draw even at that period.
He had the further advantage of coming out to India an accomplished Statesman, having been for many years a distinguished Member of the Commons House of Parliament, and standing side by side with his brothers in the most important and most great occasions. He knew every thing that India needed. He was Chairman of one of the Committees appointed to inquire into the House parliamentary to the Charter, and he was one of those who had been accustomed to take a Statesman-like view of all questions affecting her national happiness.

When he arrived in this country in 1823 or rather returned to it—(for he had gone home for education at the age of nine) he felt a kind of hereditary attachment to the people he was sent to govern—the interval of 47 years had been in fact spent in preparation—all his sympathies and associations of thought had been directed by his parental Father, to the love of India, and he was not, therefore, as most other Overseers, to learn slowly his love of duties; he brought out all that knowledge with him, and used it as one to the highest advantage, and in the presence of the speculative and some knowledge, or neglected the further sources of information on the spot which could afford him the means of increasing his knowledge, a more modest, unassuming, kind hearted. Reid never sat on the seat of authority; one who sought with more eagerness for information from every source, and he was surrounded around him with the deference which is due from a Governor to persons of consideration around him. No one was ever more free from selfishness, self-interest, self-petition, or a desire to acquiescence of those who were appointed to aid him.

But he knew India, and threw himself body and soul into its interests; India was his passion; all the stores of information and all the wisdom acquired by experience under such a Father were poised out for the benefit of the people entrusted to his care. The time of his Government is not so much to be reckoned by the few months which Providence allotted him, as by the multiplied designs and measures which filled that narrow space for he crowded and jammed, as it were, a whole life into the three years of his Government.

At the period of his arrival in Bombay he had, like all other Overseers, peculiar advantages and some disadvantages.

The great advantage was the peace which prevailed in India. There was no war, no insurrection, no marching of the troops, no exhaustion of the time and spirit and strength of public men in immediate and arduous and unbroken emergency. He had all the leisure for internal improvement, and all the command of the leisure of the Military and Civil Services, with some of that consensual assistance also of the Treasury, which all others, and which war, in addition to all its other miseries, breaks up. This was an immense blessing. War stops every thing, except what is subservient to its own necessary and ghastly progress.

He had also the advantage of the experience, talent, and excellent judgment of his friend, the Honorable Mr. Robert Gordon, his superior, and his successor, on his sudden and premature demise, by whom all his designs were more ably and coolly seconded.

It was likewise to him on the other hand to be the first Governor of Bombay, after the New Charter of 1823, and to have to ascertain himself and those around him, to be increased trouble, which was more than the first could have, so to speak, of their working.

It may be remembered that a servant of Mr. Reid first saw him in the morning of the 10th of April, 1842, at Meerut in U. G.

* The first edition of the Charter and House of Commons and the Second and Third.

He could do but to be disappointed also, that he had been so mixed up all his life with Indian authorities and Indian questions at home, that it was impossible but that some effects of prejudice and party spirit should permeate him to India. He knew too much.

Finally, some of his best hopes and projects for the highest good of Hindostan may have failed to carry the honorable Count with them from this scene.

On one occasion I understood he bent into one of those airy castles of disputation, which, as he thought, the dash to which his Government was pledged, and for the moment determined to throw up his post in despair.

Still amidst all these generous and disinterested aims he discharged his main duties with unusual vigor and success.

He acted with a statesman's eye the real nature of primary importance. He had the highest conception of the capabilities of this magnificent population of the British Crown.

He considered his vast resources to have been almost opened; and he was full of valour to raise its position amongst the nations of the world. He then and he fixed his aim on some of the main pillars of national greatness. He endeavored to give a spirit of energetic enterprise to the improvement and discovery of agricultural staples; to the facilities of external and internal communication; to the progress of national education including Medicine; and a preparation for estimating the evidence and excellence of Christianity.

To promote a spirit of Commercial Enterprise, he secured a Charter of Commerce in 1836, the year after his arrival; he hastened to remove impediments which were proved to him to be vexatious, he revised and lightened the pressure of various taxes, and he modified and re-arranged some of the rents of the Deewan which he found to be unusually imposed.

To improve and call into existence those great cultural productions which are the true riches of a country and tend most directly to encourage and reward a class of industry and good order in the native population—he laboured to introduce and cherish the cultivation of Cotton, Sugar, Silk, Indigo, and actually projected a scheme of the brightest promise and brightest prospect, connected with thousands of similar objects.

Together with this, he gave his best attention to the justifying connection with England and Internally. He was the founder of the Steamer, and promoted the construction of roads, tanks, drains, sea-walls, bridges, &c. to improve the internal communication, without which Commerce and Agriculture in this country would, he knew, be attempted to little effect.

Once more, education with a bearing on the only true religion, Christianity, occupied his care from the first moment of his landing. His ardent desire was to raise the prostrate nations of India to the knowledge, the skill in medicine and the arts, the internal jurisprudence, the habits and comforts of domestic life, and the tone of civilization which prevailed in the more favored nations of Europe. He longed to communicate to India all the knowledge, intellectual, social, and religious, flowing from the beneficent revelation of Divine Mercy in the Gospel.

The diffusion of the Evidence and Claims of that Gospel he considered the ultimate scope of his mission. He attached a transcendent importance to Christianity as the most stupendous benefits ever vouchsafed by Almighty God to a lost world; and the Evidence of its truth he sought only to be candidly weighed to gain universal acquiescence. He fully believed that the propagation of the Gospel in this country would be the work of the design of Providence in entrusting India almost by miracle to the sceptre of the greatest, the fairest, the most powerful, and most enlightened of Western nations. To deprive a hundred million and fifty millions of people of the means of knowing the grand benefit designed for them by the Father of the Universe, by leaving out the scene of its demonstration, its history, its character, its accounts, its corroboration and a crime of no common atrocity.

I remember he said to me in 1835 (when I was twenty-three) that no one could divine what would be the steps of the country fifty years from that time; that we were entering on the fourth century, said he. I told a Director twenty years since; and that we stepped down on a train of events, without the influence, and contrary to the intention of the British Government, and the highest Indian Authorities both at home and in this country, he wider and wider dominions, that we might be the instruments in the hand of Providence of transmitting the Religion of the world.

At the same time, Sir Robert was most wise and cautious in his particular measures; and he once expressed to me a strong objection to the teaching of our Holy Religion by means of Hindustani Masters, who by their ignorance, their dissipation, and their hatred to Christians, would be sure to connect the most false notions of it in the mind of the young Hindustanis and Muslimans.

The founder of the persecuted societies of the United Friends of Christ, by which all these measures were planned and carried out, was sterling conscientiousness and integrity, unstained by any principle of dissimulation, dishonesty, or honorable. If ever that lastest, uprightest person, it was Sir Robert Grant—This gave purity and elevation to all his public conduct. There was a devotion to India and missions for his own immediate interests, as independent as to secondary purposes, a contempt and abhorrence of jobs or what seemed like jobs, whether little or great, an anxiety to discover and bring to light modest merit, a determination to examine every case even in its minutest ramifications; in a word, that conspicuous integrity and straightforwardness which constitute the primary excellencies of a public person and which when joined to talent and experience like those of my late friend, go to form the great Governor.

It was not that he was not in the higher degree than he was. If he had not attempted too much—here he failed from more nobleness of heart. He did not sufficiently employ the eyes and ears of others on human nature, and he suffered for carrying on a great Government in such a climate as India, for any length of time, on the plan which he proposed to himself.

It was not that he was not diligent—he was incessant in his application; when I lived under his roof, he would not spare the time even to breakfast with his family. It was not that he did not exercise an independent judgment—he would of his own unbiased opinion after he had weighed those of others—it was not that he did not decide on undertaking improvements—for he seized with a statesman's eye, as I have mentioned, all such proposals. Nor was it that he wanted solitude; for he acted on his own responsibility to the utmost verge of what he judged right. He carried his independence and sentences in discounting opposing reasons to an extent which was in fact insupportable, and which ultimately lessened the amount of the good he actually effected. He delayed cases too much in order to make time to weigh every possible circumstance that could sway his judgment, and to discover the means of carrying them out. He was the best of men; he was compeller to decline. He read and re-read every letter for himself. He wrote too frequently his own letters, and dispatches, and minutes. He would not come into a room unless he had no idea of restricting the full exertion of his powers, for occasions worthy of them. Every thing was to be of the very best, and thus he sank in the prime of his usefulness, surrounded with the love and confidence which his eminent qualities generated, but lost prematurely to his country and to India by overworking both mind and body. But after all, what a splendid eulogium is it on a public person, that his only faults lay on the side of a scrupulousness of doing wrong, and a study of performing every thing in the best possible manner.

Of his most exemplary private character and his religious views and feelings I need not speak. It was Christianity that he loved. He understood and honoured the religion he professed. He knew what was meant by a heartfelt and vital Christianity in its relation from one of form and ceremony. His piety rested on true religious ground, he felt in the atoning sacrifice of Christ, the sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, love to God and man, the unity of the Holy Trinity, the pardon and forgiveness and attendance on all the appointed means of grace, every good word and work.

The love which he thus felt for Christianity he testified by the eloquence of family devotion, his presence twice on the Lord's Day at London, by his lively interest in Christian Missions, (on one occasion he invited all the Missionaries of the different Societies to meet at his table when I was residing with him in 1835)—and his anxiety that the Ministers and Members of our Holy Church should set a conspicuous example in the sight of the Hindustanis.

Never shall I forget in this view the affectionate and respectful, but faithful, advice he gave me in 1835, when I was twenty-three, to be cautious in my dealings with our subjects and counselling me how best to remove them. The last Sunday of my Visitation he sent me a note to meet him in the evening. He came soon after five o'clock, and I was to be held and decide in my concluding discourse that morning.

This was in the true spirit of Christian friendship and endeavored him to instruct me, and I shall always prize the spring of times and all other his virtues as a husband, a father, a friend, and the Head of a Government. It was, also, the sense of his watchfulness over himself, his courtesy to others, the purity, the truthfulness of his conversation, and the dignity, kindness, and magnanimity of his whole character.

Accordingly when death suddenly threatened him in the midst of his services, he had only been three years and four months in India—and I remember now with a melancholy pleasure how fondly he talked of coming round to see me at Calcutta, with his family, whom he meant to invite to accompany him, when his five years' absence and he was ready to return home; as despatched, I say, and broke up all his designs and projects, at a moment when his family and himself least expected it, he yet knew where to turn for hope. His prayers for mercy were most humble and sincere; his examination of his own heart penetrating; the penetration of his soul toward God under a sense of unworthiness unreserved; his remuneration of his own righteousness before the bar of God and his humble reliance on the alone merits of his Saviour most ardent; while his love to hear the Holy Scriptures read to him, as he had reason remitted, proved to his broken heart, carrying away with it all that he had where he drew his consolation in the last struggle.

The heart of grief throughout this Presidency, and indeed the whole of Hindostan at the tidings of his death, such as was perhaps never before equalled. Few, very few Governors have had in India itself, and the purity of his administration, the splendor of his talents, the vast amount of good he had achieved, the excellency of his private character, the sincerity and dignity of his piety, the very overstrained efforts under which he sank, broke upon every mind. And seldom, as I understand, has public Mourning for the death of a distinguished person been attended with so crowded and mournful and undulatory in any part of India, as that which was assembled in the Town Hall at Bombay where the Resolutions were passed on which you are now acting for taking measures for honoring his memory. The enumerations of the various services he had rendered and the plans he had designed for the benefit of the Natives, indeed, appears to me, on re-perusal, more like the description of a romance than the details of matters of actual occurrence.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir,—Within these few days a very little question has been brought on the table—and as the contest about it is becoming as warm as that with the Deobondees, you will kindly excuse my giving you a trouble to make pause over the passage, although my fears are, the Mooniff being quite insignificant, that any thing short of a Circular cannot effect the reconciliation. A Mooniff and the Judge to whom he is subordinate are quarrelling about the use of the word Sabab after the name of the former in the heading of his proceedings thus—ba jilaa Mr. — Mooniff Sabab. No doubt litigations on such a subject layrains shattered and angrily too, would you kindly give your opinion. The Mooniff has based his clia on the use of the word Sabab, because all who are cited in an English Decree—procurator the Christian religion—or rather in his own words is a franchise, are called by the Natives Sabab whether, he be noble or plebeian. The Judge disputes the point and questions the propriety of the Mooniff using it, saying it is applied only to the conventional branch of the service and this branch alone is to be distinguished by the word Sabab. It is presumed that the Mooniff is a man of colour he is not a Sabab, or because he is not on terms of familiarity with the Judge, he is not a Sabab. But what does this word Sabab mean? And how comes it into use? Have we any Regulation, Circular or Contractions for the use of it or is it applied by prescriptive usage originating with the Natives themselves? Shakespeare defines it in his Titus Andronicus. "A Lord, Master, Companion," and so the poem runs in a confusion of words, of endowments with-for-hastened Sabab Shirker—power of power, Sabab himal, beautiful." Now from this it is very clear that both the Judge and the Mooniff may use the term Sabab after their names and before the dedelate, which sailed on the 4th ult., carried out about 100,000 survivors, and the Acadia had on freight not less than 300,000.

—It is affirmed that in the course of this year large reinforcements of troops will be sent to the Dutch possessions in the East Indies, and that 5000 men will be sent in the course of next month.—Examiner.

A large journal states, that the brother of deplorable of that place, who was lately at Dork, in Pennsylvania, has received notice of his being heir to a fortune of 1,500,000*l.*, which his brother has bequeathed to him, but which, in the event of an claiming right by the latter, he will not get a penny of. The deplorable, who is sixty-seven years of age, has refused to touch the legacy, assuming as a reason that he could not be happy with a fortune acquired by a man who, by his misconduct before he left France, had defiled the days of his parents. The cousins of the old man, however, who are less scrupulous, are said to have commenced proceedings against him as a lunatic, so as to be enabled to claim as his representatives.—Recorder.

COVENTRY, Jan. 28.—Lieutenant Lutken, of the navy, is gone express to England, to convey to Royal Highness Prince Albert the insignia of the order of the E. S. —Hud.

BREKIN, Jan. 28.—Our citizens are very glad to learn that the Ligue Algérienne et et will be open allowed to circulate in this country, and that the editor will be more cautious in future, and it is said that anti-factory promises to this effect have been made.—Hud.

THE LAW OF EVIDENCE BILL.—Most important alterations are proposed in the Law of Evidence Improvement Bill that has just been introduced into the House of Lords by Lord Chief Justice Denham, and which is to be considered by Committee of the House to-morrow (Thursday). The preamble states, that "whereas the inquiry after truth in Courts of Justice is often obstructed by inaccuracies created by the present law, and it is desirable that full information, as to the facts at issue, both in criminal and civil cases, should be laid before the persons who are appointed to decide upon them, and that such persons should exercise their judgment on the credit of the witnesses adduced, and on the truth of their testimony, be it enacted, &c." The first clause then provides that evidence not to be excluded from giving evidence is, in respect of crime or tort. But this Act is not to repeal any provision in 7 William IV., and 1 Victoria, c. 26; and it is further provided, that in Courts of Equity, defendants may object on behalf of the plaintiff, or any co-defendant, and that this is not to be an exception to the testimony. The second clause provides that in legal proceedings it shall not be necessary to make any formal made affirmation; and the third and last clause merely enacts that the Act is not to extend to Scotland.—Fds.

VOY OF THANKS TO LORD ELLENBOROUGH.—

The reason of Ministers for fixing this motion so early in the session, one which may prove damaging to themselves, in their anxiety to recall the noble Baron, and they say that these of thanks will be "letting him down easy." Originally Lord Ellenborough was sent out to India that he might be out of the way;—now they find that he is only the more in it, and they are anxious to rid themselves of him in the best way they can. It is said that the Marquis of Tweeddale, now Governor of Bombay—will be the noble Governor-General; and this is an appointment not at all unlikely, and one which, from having been a member of Whig and Tory alliances, would probably not be so well suited to.—Hants Ind.

THE DEFENCE OF LORD ELLENBOROUGH.—Mr. Vernon Smith having touched on the subject of Lord Ellenborough's proceedings as the gates of Somnath, is a very clever speech on a motion for papers, Mr. Fitzcarrin having entered into a defence of the Governor General, in which he laboured with moral and legal success, and with less scruples than either, to prove that the conduct of Lord Ellenborough had been in every respect in conformity with the law.

—Sir Robert Peel has said, in one-half the one way, one-half the other. The first half was devoted to a defence of Lord Ellenborough, the latter half to a confession of unbecoming conduct.

—Sir Robert has proceeded in the indication of his Governor General precisely as Gray recommends people to treat a criminal, that is, first to draw it with one eye, and, when that is done, to throw it away. In the course Sir Robert Peel has said, that the Governor General is to be treated as a criminal, and in random way admit that he did succeed in showing that the Governor General had held an even hand between idolatry and Christianity; that as the honesty grows in expression, he did not make an use of one look of his eye.

—Sir Robert pleaded, as a set-off against the proclamation about the honours to the furniture of idolatry, the Governor to the Clergy—

—Entreating them to offer up in their churches, at such convenient days as they might appoint, their humble thankings to Almighty God, to whom paternal goodness and mercy the restoration of the blessing of peace alone was attributable. (Cheers.)

It is very fortunate that the Governor General, in that Circular to the Clergy, did not direct thanks to be given for the restoration of the gates of the idol, as well as for the blessing of peace, especially as in his proclamation he had not treated the recovery of those gates as worth the price of a vase, assuming as it was, he had actually declared the main object and result of it.

—If, as Sir Robert Peel would have us, we are to compare the Proclamation and the Circular, the proclamation to idolatry and the homage to Christianity, we must confess that there appears much more union in the former.

But Sir Robert asserts that the gate were to be considered as a military trophy only, and not as any religious symbol. Why, a thing is only a trophy with relation to what have been its wars. A pair of gloves carried off from a temple could only be a trophy as the sign of the triumph over, and insult to, a hated creed. The restoration turns the triumph and insult the other way, with the addition of the barbarism of the destruction of a tomb.

If the Duke of Wellington had sent the mitre of the Prince of France to England, it could not have been accepted as a trophy, except as a sign of insult to the Catholic Church.

Both Mr. Bingham Baring and Sir Robert Peel have contended that the Mitre of the Prince of France, as they delight in the humiliation of their old enemies and vanquishers, the Afghans.

It might as well be argued that any outrageous insult to the Catholic religion, when our army was in France, could not have been unacceptable to the Irish soldiery in her Majesty's service, because they fought French, with a holy good-will as the Protestants brethren. But what would have been the feelings of the British Catholics if any untimely or vessel devoted to the uses of the Catholic worship had been made a trophy, and paraded as a trophy? They would have seen in it a trophy in the glory of which they had an equal share; they would have seen in it only a weapon and a banner, and not a sign of religion, and would have felt that their share in the trophy was only that of disgrace and humiliation. If, then, a trophy can only be such with relation to what have been wars, whereas it is the object of the value, or importance, it matters not, as far as the question of sentiment is concerned, whether it has changed masters for the first time or not, and in its restoration it is sent with it all the objects of the objection, on the side that it is in its original capture, and the other.

After Sir Robert Peel had disputed the justice of the reasons passed on his Governor General, after he had laboured to show that none of the objections alleged applied to his conduct, after he had scolded and rubbed, and scrubbed his blackamoor, and taken all pains to sell him as an angel, out come the admissions with respect to the proclamation.

—He must say, however, with reference to it, that he could not hold one language in that house with regard to it, and another language out of doors (Hear, hear, hear). He at once admitted that it had attracted the attention of the Government, and it had been thought necessary to make such representations to India with respect to it as were thought necessary (Hear, hear). He could not write to the Governor General of India on this subject, and at once publishes his opinion, if it carried a free expression of opinion, in relation to this subject, a matter of religious disunion, without being aware that it must be stated with very great danger. (Hear, hear.) Indeed, he might add, that in this point of view it was an objection, it almost too delicate to allude to as a matter of discussion. (Hear, hear.)

A subject too delicate, indeed! too delicate to mention, the gates of Somnath having been the gates of the temple of the idolatrous deity, the very pollution of the earth. They had five hundred vessels of flesh and blood, being in fact the portals of the priests' haunts. They are now in a wretched state, but Lord Ellenborough was not aware of that misfortune.

But, seriously, if Sir Robert Peel saw reason to blame the proclamation in his despatches to the other way, why does he now defend it against every objection that is brought against it? What palpable contradiction is this; and, after such an example, what if there which these Tory Ministers will not defend in their places in Parliament, even though they have secured it, their private communications from their official correspondents.

But after all, says Sir Robert, you are blaming one set of the Governor General, a remark which provokes the return of Talleyrand to the same defence, but when is this one set to have an end? It is a piece in one set,—burlesque are never in more than one set.—an extravagance, and the thing that the Baron de Funck; but the one set is infinitely larger, and the public begin to cry, Off, off; manager, manager, an apology, an apology.

Certainly, when Lord Ellenborough saw the turn of Sir Robert Peel's vindication of his proclamation, may challenge inquiry into his doings beyond the Somnath proclamation, he must say, with the character in the Admiral, for Admiral, that he feels lost, indeed, when Constance suffers his doings to take an adverse view of his government, but his enormous and dangerous follies have made the only passage in his policy which we suppose that he might have taken as a manner and spirit, though right in the main, appear now but as a lucid interval in a career of madness.

The folly is contagious, and has given rise to the greatest popularity that the House of Commons has perhaps ever been the scene of (manifest and monstrous as its absurdities have been)—the grave controversy about the character of Sultan Mahmoud, who has reigned in his tomb for eight centuries!

In order to defend Lord Ellenborough, Sir Robert Peel said some very severe things on the doings of this man of yesterday, Sultan Mahmoud of the elements, the worst of which was that the wealth of India had tempted him to invade it. Our possession of the country is a great evil, and it is very easy to see, motive. Lord Ellenborough shows that we sent three only to protect and honour its industries.—Examiner.

THE VOY OF THANKS TO LORD ELLENBOROUGH.—Time was the time of English England was as good as their word; time is when the political life and creed of a nation is in the hands of a man, a juggle and a falsehood. The "smart man" school and the school of sophistry and mental reservation are on the march. Our Tory country gentlemen have surrendered their consciences last year to Sir Robert Peel, they sold them for a mass of potage; and he now, therefore, has them on the hip, and will wring them through his fingers. It is very easy to see, for he betterly hater them at the bottom of their place, even's heart's avowed. Last season it was their principles and their piety that he made them sacrifice, this year it is their conscience. It is very easy to see, that time to join him in a vote of thanks to Lord Ellenborough! To Lord Ellenborough?—And for what? We cannot speak accurately as to this noble Lord's sayings and doings in India, and what he has done and said, by ordering the retreat of our armies just when they were ready to advance, and which order was fortunately neutralized by the Afghans over whom he had the counter order sent from home,—with having disregarded the fate of Lady Sale and our prisoners, by commanding the evacuation of Afghanistan before he knew of their recovery, and what more, we have only to mention our criticism, by sanctioning the needless destruction of tombs, basars, and of towns and villages, with the slaughter of their inhabitants; and one of his own proclamations proves how he feared this vengeance of spirit, for, with the malice of a barbarian supplanting the humane dignity of a British Governor, he boasts alone of leaving the Afghans to the punishment of their own anarchy. And what further illustration can have books give of folly, ignorance, irreverence, and danger-working mischief, of all the qualities that render a man unfit for authority and command, than the Bedouin proclamation regarding the obnoxious temple of Somnath? Restoring gifts which probably were never taken, and which were undoubtedly not the same gates to a temple whose ruins are crumbling to no horizon to name, and which happily now is in ruins, and overshadowed by a Mahomedan mosque. All this is well known to India and to England, although its sending some of his own personal staff, a detachment of his body guard, and a body of troops to protect him, and his sending some of his own personal staff, three false and degrading trophies to a degraded temple. The Governor General of India is thus making himself and his country a laughing stock to the eyes of Hindoos and Europeans, and he is not content with a scandal to Christianity. Not content with doing this shame, he publishes it to all India and the world in a proclamation "whose tardy truth and arrogant bloom of their religion since the days of Mahomed, and with whom the noble Lord seems to have much in common. This is the man, and these deeds, some incontinently his, and all presumptuously so, for whom and for which we have to thank the British people, and are going to ask the thanks of the British Parliament. And will they be given! Ay, indeed! a reasonable Tory gentleman, who has seen the proceedings of their own masters regarding the noble Lord Ellenborough and his proceedings, will not be less, far less, of their party, prostitute the honoured temple of their country to the vanity of a man, who has made a misanthropic take the chance of his further frauds and abominations. And thus, then, is the course of the Tory party—the of the Conservative, moral, religious ship the official report of the capture of Oconareto, by the troops under the orders of Major Woodburn.

I have, &c.

(Signed) C. J. WAPLER, Governor.
From Major A. WOODBURN,
25th Regt., Comdg. Field Detachment,
To the Assistant Adjutant General,
Cavalry Field Force.

Camp near Oorooroo, 5th April, 1943.

Sir—I do myself the honour to report, for the information of Major General Sir Charles Napier, K. C. B., Commanding in Scinde, that agreeably to the instructions conveyed to me by Captain Brown, A. D. C., and which I received at Journee at 3 o'clock P. M., on the 3d instant, I marched with the 23rd regiment the same afternoon, to join the detachment under (Captain) Whittle, there halted at Oorooroo, and which place (distant 18 miles) was reached at 11 P. M. cheerfully, and at the end of each search there has been hardly a man out of his place. (Herald) A. WOODBURY (Head) A. VORONIN.

Number.	Diam. of Bore.		Length of Piece.		Nature of Ordnance.
	Inches.	Tenths.	Feet.	Inches.
1	Iron,
2	" " " "
3	" " " "
4	" " " "
5	" " " "
6	" " " "
7	" " " "
8	" " " "
9	" " " "
10	" " " "
11	" " " "
12	" " " "
13	" " " "
14	" " " "
15	" " " "
16	" " " "
17	" " " "
18	" " " "
19	" " " "
20	" " " "
21	" " " "
22	" " " "
23	" " " "
24	" " " "
25	" " " "
26	" " " "
27	" " " "
28	" " " "
29	" " " "
30	" " " "
31	" " " "
32	" " " "
33	" " " "
34	" " " "
35	" " " "
36	" " " "
37	" " " "
38	" " " "
39	" " " "
40	" " " "
41	" " " "
42	" " " "
43	" " " "
44	" " " "
45	" " " "
46	" " " "
47	" " " "
48	" " " "
49	" " " "
50	" " " "
51	" " " "
52	" " " "
53	" " " "
54	" " " "
55	" " " "
56	" " " "
57	" " " "
58	" " " "
59	" " " "
60	" " " "
61	" " " "
62	" " " "
63	" " " "
64	" " " "
65	" " " "
66	" " " "
67	" " " "
68	" " " "
69	" " " "
70	" " " "
71	" " " "
72	" " " "
73	" " " "
74	" " " "
75	" " " "
76	" " " "
77	" " " "
78	" " " "
79	" " " "
80	" " " "
81	" " " "
82	" " " "
83	" " " "
84	" " " "
85	" " " "
86	" " " "
87	" " " "
88	" " " "
89	" " " "
90	" " " "

REMARKS. Of Ordnance taken in the Port of Genoa.

It is to be noted that the above is the gross weight of the Ordnance as taken from the guns.

A large quantity of Powder, and a number of Shot and Ball, were also found.

(Signed) W. J. WATKINS, Captain, in Charge of British Artillery.

MILITARY

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.
Agre, 17th April, 1943.
 The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to grant a further extension of leave of absence to Lieutenant N. R. Chaudhary, doing duty with His Majesty's

ALTERATION OF RAW

Corps, &c.	Rank and Name.	To rank from.	In whose Room.
Infantry.	Major C. E. Gresham,
20th Regt. N. I.	Walter S. Gordon (retired),
Ditto.	Captain C. Commeyne,	1st July, 1862,	Lieut. Col. R. Low retired.
Infantry.	Lieut. T. P. Wilson,
20th Regt. N. I.	Lieut. Col. J. Parsons,
Ditto.	Major H. J. White,	7th July, 1862,	{ Lieut. Col. J. Anderson promoted.
Infantry.	Lieut. J. H. Hambley,
Ditto.	Lieut. S. R. McMillan,
20th Regt. N. I.	Lieut. J. E. Bates,	10th July, 1862,	For the inauguration.
Infantry.	Lieut. C. O. Young,
20th Regt. N. I.	Major C. Thersby,	20th Aug., 1862,	{ Lieut. Col. P. M. Hay promoted.
Ditto.	Captains W. Harten,
Infantry.	Lieut. P. G. George,
Ditto.	Lieut. P. A. Robinson,	23d Sept., 1862,	Lieut. & Notice Granted.
Infantry.	Lieut. C. J. Barclay,	23d Sept., 1862,	Lieut. Col. J. H. Smith.
20th Regt. N. I.	Lieut. Col. T. Dickinson,
Ditto.	Major J. B. Hammond,	2d Oct., 1862,	{ Lieut. Col. F. Young promoted.
Infantry.	Lieut. M. Graham,
20th Regt. N. I.	Lieut. T. M. Harris,
Ditto.	Major Col. H. C. M. Cox,
Infantry.	Major C. R. Davis (retired),	2nd Oct., 1862,	{ Lieut. Col. W. R. C. Cuthby promoted.
20th Regt. N. I.	Captains W. Cursey (retired),
Ditto.	Lieut. C. D. Cochrane,
Infantry.	Lieut. J. G. Coveney,
20th Regt. N. I.	Major C. Malcom,
Ditto.	Captains C. Middleton,
	{ Lieut. the Hon'ble S. F. R. H. Hastings,	19th Dec., 1862,	Lieut. Col. R. Rich promoted.
Infantry.	Lieut. Col. J. Hoggan,
23d Regt. N. I.	Major W. R. E. Leadbeater,
Ditto.	Regina E. Talbot,
Infantry.	Lieut. A. H. Gervais,	22d Dec., 1862,	{ Lieut. Col. H. D. Coms promoted from the Reserve.
23d Regt. N. I.	Lieut. Col. C. Hamilton,
Ditto.	Major T. R. Simpson,
	Captains J. Baldwin,	19th Jan., 1863,	{ Lieut. Col. R. D. Zerkins promoted.
	Lieut. J. H. Gervais,
Md. Dept.	Burgess W. K. Mel. Ross,	23d Feb., 1863,	{ Surgeon J. McCovee promoted.
Ditto.	Burgess A. Beattie,
Ditto.	Burgess T. C. Elliot,	19th Feb., 1863,	{ Surgeon J. S. Sullivan promoted.
	Burgess W. Spencer,	26th Feb., 1863,	{ Surgeon J. Gervais retired.
		1st March, 1863,	Surgeon G. Playfair retired.

No. 96 of 1843.—The Honourable the President Council is pleased to make the following Promotions :

1st Regiment N. I.

Charles Cheape to be Captain of a Company,
Ensign John Heath to be Lieut.
The undermentioned Gentlemen are admitted to the Service, in conformity with their appointment by the Honourable the Court of Directors as Cadets of Artillery and Infantry and Assistant Surgeon on this Establishment. The Cadets are promoted to the rank of Lieutenant and Officers, from the date assigned to them in General Orders.

No. 50 of 2d March last:

Artillery.	Date of arrival at Fort William.
Mr. Alfred Fournes,	1st May 1915

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 438. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, MAY 25th. 1843.

[Price 2 Cts. 3rs. monthly, or 10
Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.]

OVERLAND MAILS.

THE Bombay Government intends to despatch on the new Mail Steamers of the following months, on the dates below specified, viz.
The Steamer of July on the 19th June.
August on the 19th July.
September on the 20th August.

Notice is accordingly hereby given, that the latest and best for the transmission of Letters from Calcutta, which may be intended for the Steamer appointed to leave Bombay on the 19th of June, will be Wednesday, the 7th preceding.

WM. MOORE,
Deputy Post Master.

General Post Office,
The 11th May, 1843.

THE APRIL MAIL from London of the 6th of that month reached Calcutta on Monday morning, and has been pronounced barren. Yet it announces a second fire at Liverpool, in which property to the extent of more than 50,000£ has been destroyed; and a destructive earthquake in the West Indies, which has spread desolation among some of the islands, subverting houses and manufactories, and depriving the planters of the hopes of the season, which were peculiarly flattering. It announces that the Brazilian Government has refused to accede to the terms of the Commercial treaty proposed by Sir Robert Peel, and has threatened to close against us a market of five millions sterling a year, unless its coffee and sugar are admitted into England upon the same terms with the produce of our own colonies. It tells us that the French Government has taken possession of the Ouleite Islands; an event which will put an end to one of the most successful of Protestant Missions. It reports a very valuable speech of the President of the United States, in which the right of search, as it is called, or rather the right to ascertain whether vessels on the African coast, having American colours, be not in reality an English vessel, violating English laws, is alluded to in terms bordering on arrogance. The Mail announces that the aerial steam ship is ready; and it gives us a drawing of it, and what is more to the purpose, explains the principles on which it is to be set and kept in motion, thereby diminishing to no inconsiderable extent the scepticism with which it was viewed. The Mail announces also that Mr. M'Intosh's recouchment was expected about the middle of April, and that the king of Siam intended to visit England, and remain there six weeks,—doubtless with the view of examining the singular phenomenon of a Conservative Ministry acting on liberal principles. Then the Mail announces that the Income tax, from which Sir Robert Peel expected to obtain about three millions and a half a year, is likely to yield double that sum. It also announces that the ecclesiastical Court has deposed the Right Honourable John Wilson Croker, of the legacy of two lakhs and a half of Rupees which that heavy voluptuary, the Marquis of Hertford, had bequeathed him. It announces the death of the greatest of modern "men of letters," the biographer of Nelson, Dr. Southey, and the refusal of the butt of sack and the Laureatehip by Wordsworth, on the plea of age.—We hope it will not be given away before our friend D. L. R., reaches England.—It informs us that the most stupendous work in this age of wooden, the Thames Tunnel, has been completed, and that it was open to foot passengers for the first time on the 25th of March. It states that the affairs of the East India Company, and that 474 Ministers are prepared to quit the establishment, and throw themselves on the voluntary contributions of the people. It tells it how the Ministry having, as it is said, received three millions sterling from the Chinese Government as a compensation for the Opium which Lin destroyed, intend to give the merchants less than one million, or at the rate of 45 Pounds Sterling a chest, and to keep the other two millions to pay the expenses of the war, which compelled the Chinese to make good the loss. Surely a mail with intelligence so interesting to all classes, and so varied, cannot be called barren.

The Comet has been seen in Europe and in America, and has excited, as might have been expected, the astonishment of the astronomical world. It was observed in America on the 5th of March; in Paris and in England on the 10th of March. It was seen in this neighbourhood for the first time on Monday, the 6th of March. The London Mail says it was seen also at Nice, Mauritius, in the southern hemisphere on the 10th, but this must be a misprint, no intelligence from the Mauritius of the 10th March could have reached England on the 6th of April, except by the Aerial Steam Carriage, which had not started when the Mail left London.

The American Government is about, they say, to send an Embassy to Peking to conclude a scene of our disasters, and established them at Commercial treaty with the Imperial Cabinet, Mr. Everett is spoken of as the Envoy. Congress has voted 40,000 dollars for this object. We hope the Envoy will meet with success. A second treaty with the European family will contribute to draw China into closer connection with the civilized world, and render a return to its own exclusive policy more difficult. There can be little doubt that the Grande Nation will not allow itself long to remain behind its neighbours; an embassy on a grand and imposing scale, with a long cortege of savans, will doubtless be voted by acclamation in the Chambers to protect French interests in the Empire of China. Neither is it to be expected that Russia will lose the opportunity of obtaining a Russian footing in Peking. The unhappy Son of Heaven, besieged successively by four sets of the points of issue, the order passed, and the reason the outside barbarians, will find himself, intensely perplexed how to act, and will more than ever rue the day when Lin, by confiscating the Opium, opened the country to strangers.

But the most interesting intelligence brought by this Mail, is that of the debates in both Houses of Parliament regarding the Sumatrah Gate Proclamation. The Opposition was of course beaten; and a majority both of the Lords and Commons gave current in his Court happen to be the have affirmed by their votes that there is no same rule may be to be followed regarding the orders of with more utter surprise did the poor barber which must be passed, on Summary or Special behold Don Fernando, and the other inmates of appeals, and on applications for a Review of the Hotel, maintain with all gravity that his judgement.

was in very truth Mambribo's helmet;—that the public of India will learn on the authority of Parliament that the Proclamation is perfectly right and proper, only a little oriental in its style. The defence of the Proclamation is more extraordinary than the document itself; which can be easily accounted for. With all Lord Ellenborough's rapidity and clearness of conception, and all his cleverness,—and few of his bitterest enemies deny him these qualifications,—he seems to want that calm equanimity, which is so essential to greatness. The report of General England's repulse in April last, convinced him, and in a moment of panic he ordered the army to withdraw; the success of the campaign on the other hand clated him beyond the bounds of reason. He was resolved to make the most of his victories; and he has made so much of them, as to expose himself to the present and future ridicule of mankind.

The possession of the Gates destroyed the equilibrium of his mind. He thought of, talked of, dreamed of, nothing else. He fondled the toy with the raptures of a child. That he never intended to encourage idolatry or to insult Christianity, by the Proclamation is beyond doubt, for when he had given it the third touch, he flattered himself that even Sir Harry Inglis could find no flaw in it. He thought only of producing a mighty and sublime effect throughout India, and he has given us another exemplification of the truth, that between the sublime and the ridiculous there is but a step. If his Lordship had adhered to his original idea of exhibiting the gates only as a military trophy, and put forth a dignified proclamation, pointing to these trophies as the evidence of our triumph on the scene of our disasters, and established them at Benares, where the representative of almost every chief in India is to be found, he would have deserved the approbation of society. But the inflated Proclamation, written, in a moment of unatural ecstasy, hurried the whole proceeding to a premature conclusion. That such a Proclamation should be not only excused, but in some measure defended by the Senators of Great Britain, the Conscript Fathers of the Commonwealth, in their calm and sedate moments,—shows with how little wisdom the world is governed.

THE VERNACULAR DECREE AND ORDER ACT.

The draft of an Act has just been published relative to the language and time in which all decrees and orders of the Courts shall be written. It provides that the essential portion of every decree, Heaven, besieged successively by four sets of the points of issue, the order passed, and the reason the outside barbarians, will find himself, intensely perplexed how to act, and will more than ever rue the day when Lin, by confiscating the Opium, opened the country to strangers. and signed at the time of passing the decree. This document is immediately to be translated into the language of the Court, and the translation is to form a part of the decree. Of course where the vernacular tongue of the Judge and the language of the Court happen to be the same, no translation will be requisite. The same rule may be to be followed regarding the orders of Summary or Special Review of the Hotel, maintain with all gravity that his judgement.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, MAY 19.

—The Star has a long and interesting article on Coaly emigration to the Mauritius in this morning's issue. The Government of the Mauritius has resolved to increase the indemnity for passage money between Calcutta and the island from 90 to 70 Rupees; and to give 5 per cent additional indemnity for every adult labourer, wherever the number of females shall be in the proportion of five to every one hundred male labourers brought over in the same ship, over and above the number of ten females for every one hundred male labourers, for which ten females the indemnity will not be applicable, provided the females be between the ages of 10 and 30; but no indemnity will be paid for any number beyond 25. The Star also gives details of the expenses attending the shipment of the Coolies, and the return obtained from the Government of the Island. The system which has now grown up, and which gives a small encouraging appears very different from that which the Union in Council contemplated. Our sentimentary has promised to return to the system, and to exhibit the discrepancy between it and the Order. We shall postpone our own editorial remarks till we see his observations.

—The Hibernian arrived at Galles on the 24th April. Her progress had not been so rapid as on her return from Suez. A passenger talks of being 22 days from Galles to that place, which will not be a little disappointing our expectations. She was to remain the better part of three days at Calcutta, owing to the difficulty of taking in coal. A similar delay is, we fear, to be expected at Aden, and then the superior advantages of speed which this vessel enjoys, will be in a great measure neutralized.

—The Englishman mentions a report that the Revenue Deputy Collectors, are actually, or are about to be, abolished. Upon what authority this rumor is founded, we know not. Perhaps the writer intends to draw a line of distinction between the Deputy Collectors employed in the provinces, and those employed in the ordinary fiscal duties of a district. The former were appointed for a temporary object, which having been for the most part completed, their services are no longer necessary. But to suppose that the permanent office of Deputy Collector is to be abolished and that revenue duties are to be conducted by the Government agency without assistance, is, we think, preposterous.

—The Editor of the late United Service Journal has just started a new paper at Bombay called the Warrior. We have been able to find room only for the first part of his opening address, which however will serve as a sample of the spirit and ability with which it is likely to be conducted. Strange to say, the paper is started upon Conservative principles.

—The Englishman, in reply to a correspondent, states that Sir G. Napier, Governor of the Cape, Sir C. Napier, Governor of Sicily, and Genl. W. E. P. Napier, the Peninsular War hero, are brothers. Commander Sir C. Napier is a cousin of the above distinguished men.

FRIDAY, MAY 19.

—The suspension, and we trust final abolition, of the State Lottery has not delivered the country from this plague of gambling. The Englishman in this morning publishes in addition to the Scheme of Mr. Letley, Brothers and Co., which embraces not only lottery articles of jewellery, which cannot otherwise obtain a sale, but 45,000 Rs. of Cash prizes, another lottery by Method and Co. upon the same gigantic scale as the Government Lottery. The value of the Prizes is stated at 5,00,000 Rs.; the profits to the Projectors, at 10,00,000 Rs. or less than two per Cent. The projectors state, that the Lottery has been projected under the auspices and patronage of the most respectable agency and mercantile Houses in Calcutta. Who are these "most respectable Houses" who patronize the Durramtall Lottery?

—The Englishman states, that the whole of the Secretariat Department has been actually ordered up the country by Lord Ellenborough. If so, of course the Council of India must accompany them, and thus leave Calcutta to Mr. Bird, the Deputy Governor, Mr. Halliday the Secretary, and the two Under Secretaries. Notwithstanding the complacency with which the fact is announced, we have many doubts on the subject. Is the Council and the Secretariat to be fixed, while Lord Ellenborough is salutatory? If so, it would be more convenient for them to remain in Calcutta, where the records of Government must remain. If they are to travel in his Lordship's company, we think their first journey will be their last. The Court will not put up with the expense, nor the peripatetic Council with the inconvenience.

—The Ameer Daud Khan, the most dangerous of the Scinde Amcees, and the individual who is supposed to have instigated the murder of Capt. Knat, has been sent under a strong guard to Suat.

—The Star details the difficulties into which the Gilbert Henderson, a Coaly ship, fell on her arrival at Port Louis. It appears that the Captain having proceeded some way down the river, found himself of the Coolies missing; and immediately reported the matter to the Agents in Calcutta, who sent down thirteen men and a woman to supply their place. Their names were not borne on the counterpart list signed by the Emigration Agent in Calcutta, though such of them was provided with a certificate from Mr. Fraser, the Governor of the Mauritius has ordered the Captain to be prosecuted for a breach of the 10th clause of the Indian Act, and the penalty will probably be 7000 Rs.

—Dost Mahomed is said to experience no little difficulty in his attempt to get through the Khyber Pass. They demand three lakhs of Rupees, and it is reported that all Akbar Khan's eloquence has not prevailed on them to abate a farthing.

—The Calcutta Gazette has just published two resolutions of the Magistrate in Calcutta. The object of which is to amend the judicial system at the Madras Presidency, as far as possible, with that which prevails here.

SATURDAY, MAY 20.

—The intelligence from Bombay regarding Scinde is any thing but agreeable. It is true that Sir Charles Napier is himself a hero, and commands troops accustomed to victory, but he has no hold in the country except on the ground on which he is encamped. He is perfectly isolated at Hyderabad. The country above and below it is in the hands of an invincible but ubiquitous foe. He can communicate with Karachi only by water; and his connection with Sukkur is as much interrupted as though the Khoond Cabul or Khyber intervened. The Amceer, who was supposed to have fled to Dehkaner, is said to be within five marches of his camp with a large party of Beluchees, who are bent on retaking their hold on the valley of the Indus. If Mr. Napier has been ordered up from Karachi, and Sir Charles intends, it is said, to set out in search of the enemy on its arrival. The Jam, or chief in the vicinity of Karachi, who has been the cause of so much annoyance, is reported to have made his submission.

—The Star has information that Dost Mahomed had actually reached Cabul, though in very ill health. The Newshah Zoman Khan had fled with his family to Kandoom. The Kohistanees were in favour of Zoman Khan, and Amceerulla was in rebellion in the Lughur district. Akbar Khan was at Jelalabad with Shamsuddin, but they did not well agree. One of the Dost's first acts was to imprison Nazir Wakh. He has returned to a ruined country governed by refractory chiefs. All the bonds of society have been torn asunder, and require to be reconstructed. It would not be a matter of surprise if his aged frame should sink under the prospect of his difficulties.

—Capt. Charles Gairdner, of the Invalids, who held a staff appointment at Dinapore, has died, on his way to the Presidency for surgical aid. His leg required to be amputated; and it is said that there either was no Surgeon at the station competent to perform the operation, or that there were no instruments. The Englishman has taken up the subject, and the medical men at the station cannot let it drop; it too nearly affects their honour; they will explain wherein lay the difficulty which sent the Captain four hundred miles to Calcutta for so simple a surgical operation.

—Bahadur Aboothob Deb, one of the most excellent mercenaries in Calcutta, having asked going to the Immense would his father left him, going on pilgrimages to Jagermuth, with a host, train of attendants, perhaps not fewer than five hundred.

—A question has been raised, whether a Student of the Medical College who has received a certificate of qualifications, can chance a few days for medical attendance. The case has been heard before the Court of Requests, but the consideration of it has been, it is said, postponed pending a reference to Council.

—At the last meeting of Magistrates, His Honour Mosteel made this honest confession regarding the efforts to establish a Municipal Committee. In rather a laconic strain he intimated, that it would be useless to hold more meetings, unless Europeans and other classes of taxpayers were called in to co-operate with the Committee; as at the meetings hitherto held, only a small number of lowly rate-payers have attended, but the meeting has been principally crowded by boys and young men, and the business is mainly a piece of Hindu College boys, who have done nothing but throw the table! As the intimation was given orally, the Justice reported the Deacon to commit what he had said to writing, and to send it up in the form of a report.

SUNDAY, MAY 22.

—The Harkness of this morning denies that it was originally intended to confer the office of District Judge on natives alone, and endeavours to evade the charge, that within a few months after the Regulation was passed, several gentlemen, not natives, were appointed to the position. We were engaged in re-examining the subject, when the Express came in, and put an end to our labours. It is rather a painful and a painful question; but we do not like to be driven out of the field, and shall return to it at a convenient season.

—The Defti the states, that Mr. T. T. is about to proceed to the Hills, to examine a report of his health, and that Col. Richmond, of the 194th Native Infantry, will set for him. We hope this temporary relaxation from his arduous and incessant labours, will result in the complete restoration of Mr. Clerk's health, for the service of a member of Government could be less soon at the present moment than those of the King's to the Court at Lahore.

—The death of Lieut. Col. Skinner, of the 11th Light Regiment, is also reported in the Defti. He died of disease contracted in the last Afghan campaign. His death is regretted both as a public and a private loss. He was the father of the gallant Capt. Skinner, who fell in the disastrous retreat from Kabul, and by whose death the public service was deprived of one of its greatest ornaments.

—There is in this morning's Englishman an admirable letter by N. A. C. on the defects and abuses of the Police. Will he excuse the freedom of our asking him, to explain in a brief notice, that paper, where the sentences in the third column beginning with "in the persons" and ending with the "risk of detection," and which are marked as a quotation, are to be found. They give in few words the chief duties to which the attention of the Deputy Magistrates should be directed. If this idea could be effectually carried into practice, the Police of the Magistrate's tray would be wonderfully improved.

—A letter in the Englishman, from the Kib-

WEEKLY EPIPHONE OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, MAY 19.

— The Star has a long and interesting article on the Cooly question in the Mauritius in this morning's issue. The Government of the Mauritius has resolved to increase the indemnity for passage money between Calcutta and the island from 70 to 75 Rupees; and to give 5 per cent additional indemnity for every adult labourer, whenever the number of females shall be in the proportion of five to every one hundred male labourers brought over in the same ship, over and above the number of ten females for every one hundred male labourers, for which ten females the indemnity will not be applicable, provided the females be between the ages of 10 and 30; but no indemnity will be paid for any number beyond 33. The Star also gives details of the expenses attending the shipment of the Coolies, and the return obtained from the Government of the Island. The system which has now grown up, and which gives a bonus on carrying, appears very different from that which the Order in Council contemplated. On some occasions the Order is promised to return to the system, and to exhibit the discrepancies between it and the Order. We shall postpone our own editorial remarks till we see his observations.

— The Hindustan arrived at Galle on the 24th April. Her progress had not been so rapid as on her return from France. A passenger talks of being 25 days from Galle to that place, which will not be a little disappointing to her expectations. She was to remain the latter part of three days at Galle, owing to the difficulty of taking in coal. A similar delay is, we fear, to be expected at Aden, and then the superior advantages of speed which this vessel enjoys, will be in a great measure neutralized.

— The Englishman mentions a report that the Hereditary Deputy Collectors, are actually, or are about to be, abolished. Upon what authority this rumour is founded, we know not. Perhaps the writer intends to convey a line of distinction between the Deputy Collectors employed in Bhamptun, and those employed in the ordinary fiscal duties of a district. The former were appointed for a temporary office, which having been for the most part completed, their services are no longer necessary. But to suppose that the permanent office of Deputy Collector, is to be abolished and that revenue duties are to be conducted by the Government service without assistance, is, we think, preposterous.

— The Editor of the late East India Service Journal has just started a new paper at Bombay called the World. We have been able to find room only for the first part of his opening address, which however will serve as a sample of the spirit and ability with which it is likely to be conducted. Strange to say, the paper is started upon Conservative principles.

— The Englishman, in reply to a correspondent, states that Sir G. Napier, Governor of the Cape, Sir Charles Napier, Governor of Sindh, and General W. F. P. Napier, the Victorian Historian, are brothers. Commodore Sir Charles Napier is a cousin of the above distinguished men.

FRIDAY, MAY 20.

— The suspension, and we trust final abolition, of the State Lottery has not delivered the country from this plague of gambling. The Englishman in this morning publishes in addition to the schemes of Lattay, Brothers and Co. which embrace not only sundry articles of jewellery, which cannot otherwise obtain a sale, but 45,000 Rs. of Cash prizes, another Lottery by Messrs. and Co. upon the same gigantic scale as the Government Lottery. The value of the Prizes is stated at 5,00,000; the profits to the Projectors, at 10,00,000 Rs. or less than two per Cent. The projectors state, that the Lottery has been projected and the enterprise and patronage of the most experienced and successful House in Calcutta. Who are these "most respectable House" who patronize the Durrantallah Lottery?

— The Englishman states, that the whole of the Secretariat Department has been actually ordered up the country by Lord Ellenborough. If so, of course the Council of India must accompany them, and thus leave Calcutta to Mr. Bland, the Deputy Governor, Mr. Halliday the Secretary, and the two Under Secretaries. Notwithstanding the confidence with which the fact is announced, we have many doubts on the subject. Is the Council and the Secretariat to be fixed, while Lord Ellenborough is ambulatory? If so, it would be more convenient for them to remain in Calcutta, where the rest of Government must remain. If they are to travel in his Lordship's company, we think their first journey will be their last. The Court will not put up with the expense, nor the peripatetic Council with the inconvenience.

— The Ameer Daud Khan, the most dangerous of the Sindh Amirs, and the individual who is supposed to have instigated the murder of Capt. Francis, has been sent under a strong guard to Surat.

— The Star details the difficulties into which the Gifted Hindoo, a newly ship, fell on her arrival at Port Louis. It appears that the Captain, having proceeded some way down the river, found nineteen of the Coolies missing; and immediately reported the matter to the Agents in Calcutta, who sent down thirteen men and a woman to supply their place. Their names were not borne on the counterpart list signed by the Emigration Agents in Calcutta, though such of these was provided with a certificate from Mr. Fraser, the Governor of the Mauritius has ordered the Captain to be prosecuted for a breach of the 10th clause of the Indian Act, and the penalty will probably be 7000 Rs.

— Dost Mahomed is said to experience no little difficulty in his attempt to get through the Khyber Pass. They demand three lakhs of Rupees, and it is reported that all Akbar Khan's eloquence has not prevailed on them to accept a farther sum.

— The Calcutta Gazette has just published two Acts, the object of which is to amend the judicial system at the Madras Presidency, as far as possible, with that which prevails here.

SATURDAY, MAY 21.

— The Intelligence from Bombay regarding Sindh is any thing but agreeable. It is true that Sir Charles Napier is himself a host, and commands troops accustomed to victory, but he has no hold in the country except on the ground on which he is encamped. He is perfectly isolated at Hyderabad. The country above and below it is in the hands of an invincible but ubiquitous foe. He can communicate with Sukkur only by water; and his connection with Sukkur is as much interrupted as though the Khairat Canal or Khyber intervened. The Ammir, who was supposed to have fled to Deccan, is said to be within five marches of his camp with a large party of Beluchas, who are bent on ravaging their hold on the valley of the Indus. His army has been reduced to from 10,000 to 12,000 men. The Kohistanis intend, it is said, to march in search of the enemy on its arrival. The Ammir, or chief in the vicinity of Korach, who has been the cause of so much an-gam-gam, is reported to have made his submission.

— The Star has information that Dost Mahomed had actually reached Calcut, though in very ill health. The Nawab Zeman Khan had fled to India. His army has been reduced to from 10,000 to 12,000 men. The Kohistanis intend, it is said, to march in search of the enemy on its arrival. The Ammir, or chief in the vicinity of Korach, who has been the cause of so much an-gam-gam, is reported to have made his submission.

on his way to the Presidency for surgical aid. His leg required to be amputated; and it is said that there either was no Surgeon at the station competent to perform the operation, or that there were no instruments. The Englishman has taken up the subject, and the medical men of the station cannot let it drop; it too nearly affects their honour: they will explain wherein lay the difficulty which sent the Captain four hundred miles to a distant for so simple a surgical operation.

— Babu Adeshoot Deb, one of the most excellent merchants in Calcutta, having added greatly to his immense wealth his father left him, is going on pilgrimage to Jaggernaut, with a large train of attendants, perhaps not fewer than 5000.

— A question has been raised, whether a student of the Medical College who has received a certificate of qualifications, can charge a fee or not for medical attendance. The case has been brought before the Court of Requests, but the decision of it has been, it is said, postponed pending a reference to Council.

— At the last meeting of Magistrates, Babu Bhimnath Mohandas made a strong emphasis regarding the efforts to establish a Municipal Committee. In rather a haphazard strain he indicated, that it would be useless to hold more meetings, unless Europeans and other classes of taxpayers were called in to co-operate with the Committee; as at the meetings hitherto held, only a small number of local rate-payers have attended, but the meeting has been principally crowded by boys and young men, and the business much obstructed by a parcel of Hindu College boys, who have done nothing but discuss the subject. As discrimination was given orally, the Justice requested the Babu to commit what he had said to writing, and to send it up in the form of a report.

SUNDAY, MAY 22.

— The Harkness of this morning denies that it was originally intended to confer the office of a Government Judge on natives alone, and endeavours to refute this idea by the fact, that within a few months after the Bill was passed, the Government, not Native, were appointed to this situation. We were engaged in re-examining the subject, when the Express came in, and put an end to our labours. It is rather a personal and a political question; but we do not like to be driven out of the field, and shall return to it at a convenient season.

— The Indian Gazette states, that Mr. G. Clerk is about to proceed to the Hills, for a number of months, on account of his health, and that Col. Richmond, of the 33rd Native Infantry, will act for him. We hope this temporary relaxation from his arduous and incessant labours, will result in the complete restoration of Mr. Clerk's health, for the services of no member of Government could be less spared at the present moment than those of the Deputy Commissioner.

— The death of Lieut. Col. Skinner, of the 31st Regiment, is also reported in the Indian Gazette. He died in the field, in the course of the Afghan campaign. His death is regretted both as a public and a private loss. He was the brother of the gallant Capt. Skinner, who fell in the disastrous retreat from Cabul, and by whose death the public service was deprived of one of its greatest ornaments.

— There is in this morning's Englishman an admirable letter by N. A. C. on the defects and abuses of the Police. Will he excuse the freedom of one asking him, to explain in a brief note, the column beginning with "On these persons" and ending with "the risk of detection," and will he mark as a quotation, as to be found in the Star in a few words the chief duties to which the attention of the Deputy Magistrate should be directed. If this idea could be effectually carried into practice, the public safety and the Magistrate would be wonderfully contrived.

— A letter in the Englishman, from the Khy-

This comet, the sudden appearance of which in our hemisphere has excited so much interest, has as suddenly appeared in the western hemisphere. Its tail was observed on the 26th March, and extended as much farther in America as in Europe, and the nucleus was seen at the same time at Dominica, Barinados, and Antigua.

The West Indies have suffered from an awful convulsion of nature, having been visited by an earthquake on the 18th Feb., the shocking effects of which will, in some places, continue to be felt for years. Antigua was sorely stricken, and though comparatively few lives appear to have been lost, the destruction of property was very great. The earth heaved and undulated like the waves of the sea; rocks were driven in pieces; houses and buildings of every kind were rocked to and fro like cradles, and men reeled and staggered in the streets and fields as if intoxicated, or standing upon the deck of a rolling vessel. The scene in the town of St. John's baffled all description; houses levelled with the ground, clouds of dust ascending from them and thickening the atmosphere, the crash of falling walls, the smothering of floors and furniture; men, women, and children rushing from the houses screaming and shrieking; and the groans of the dying mingled with the low rumbling notes of the earthquake itself, altogether presented a scene of horror and alarm which language fails to portray. There never was a finer crop; the sugar-mill season had just commenced, the canes were either cut or about being cut, and prepared for the crushing-mill; but they may now lay rot, for the mills are disarranged, the steam-engines disabled, and the boiling-house was filled with water, and ground or unfitted for use. Every church and chapel either laid prostrate or so damaged that it is dangerous to approach or enter them, except the Moravian church, which was a wooden one, and of the fine cathedral, which had stood the longest time for 150 years, has had the roof so twisted upon the walls, and is otherwise so injured, that it threatens to fall. The town of Antigua has 1200 houses, 1000 police offices, 1000 arsenals, 1000 barracks, custom houses, and almost every public building in the island, except the government house, has sustained serious damage.

At St. Christopher's in the town of Roseau, the earthquake produced the most disastrous results. Three women were washing clothes in a stream, surrounded by a high wall of rocks, and the rocks were so violently and suddenly thrown down upon them, crushed them almost to pieces. The walls of the church were cracked, and the good old steeple was so injured, that it nearly fell. The estate in the country had also suffered severely, especially in the north-east, or windward quarter. The loss of property was estimated to be eleven millions.

At Nevis, the shock was felt at the same minute as in St. Kitt's and St. Thomas's. The force of the shock here seemed to have been expended in a direction from south-west to north-east, and was supposed to have destroyed property to the amount of $100,000, or $200,000 sterling, but fortunately no lives were lost.

At St. Thomas's, the shock was felt at 10, 31 a. m., and lasted full three minutes. The vibration was not perpendicular, but horizontal, then a perfect calm; all business suspended, and the frightened inhabitants hastened to return thanks to Divine Providence at their respective places of worship for their escape from destruction. The ships at anchor in the harbor were so violently shaken, that those who were below at the time came on deck to see what was the cause. A French brig coming to St. Thomas, off Tortola, 4th the day after, so severely that they thought the vessel had struck on a rock.

FRANCE.—The earthquake which visited the British colonies has nearly devastated the French West India islands. In the island of St. Vincent, the island of St. Vincent is entirely destroyed, and what was spared by the earthquake has since perished by fire, which burnt out a few minutes after the houses fell. The towns of St. Vincent, St. Pierre, St. Anne, Port Louis, Bertrand, and St. Rose, have been overthrown, and the number of persons who perished at Guadaloupe has been ascertained to amount to between 4,000 and 5,000. The injury done at Martinique was comparatively trifling. The Meteor officially confirms the report that Admiral Dupetit-Thouvenin, Governor of the French Colonies, and the surrounding group of islands, in the name of the French King. We may possibly soon hear of the Sandwich Islands having also acknowledged the shaking of the earth. The Questionnaire mentions the arrival at Paris of an envoy from them, in the name of Thomas Hamilton, on the subject of reparations required of his royal master, by the French King of Sweden. The ship of war L'Amiral. The Commodore's assistance, that orders had been given to the envoys changed with the direction of the works of the fortifications of Paris, to redouble activity in forwarding the construction of the 13 detached forts. M. Guizot's majesties appear to be the increase of the Secret Service Money bill was carried by 153 to 57.

We are authorized to state that the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company's vessel British, will not be detained in consequence of the fire which occurred on the premises of Messrs. Foxcroft and Preston, at Liverpool, where her machinery was being repaired, but that she will leave Southampton for India, as originally intended, on the 24th Aug. next.

His Excellency Sir C. T. Metcalfe, Bart. and suite left Liverpool in the steam-ship Colubine, for Boston, en route to Kingston, Canada on 4th March.

The Somnath despatch, to which we alluded in our last, though a sensible and very moderate document, has been returned from the Board of Control unsanctioned, and the Board of Directors have refused to adopt it in its present form, and remitted it to Cannon Row with a very firm but temperate remonstrance on the subject. As notwithstanding we are likely to give way, Lord Ellenborough may possibly be altogether spared the mortification of this unpleasant despatch.

Petitions have been presented to both Houses of Parliament from the Hull assembly branch to the London Missionary Society, calling upon the legislature to take measures to counteract the hurtful tendency of Lord Ellenborough's idolatrous proclamation respecting the gates of Somnath on the issue of missions and of Christianity in general.

The Observer of De Bologne contains a letter from Montreuil-en-Mer, asserting why assistance should not be given to the Compagnie when she struck by the barometer of the coast, arose from the fact of their being prohibited from putting their boats to sea by the French-Consul officers, who drove up in a line on the beach, threatened to fire on any one who attempted to disobey their orders. We say this not to interfere but to place the case out, and not to would have been so severely by the only one remaining the day we were out. The letter adds that it is of importance to know why such an order should have been given to the French-Consul officers, as but for the prohibition of the Consul, the number of the saved might have exceeded that which the Bellevue was lost.

GRATUITY.—WAR-OFFICE, MARCH 20.

4th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. M. Clerk, Capt. p. vice Hampton; Cor. J. B. St. John, Lieut. p. vice Clerk; Cor. J. Mullen, from 7th Dr. Gds., vice Tower; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

7th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

by, Capt. vice Tripp. To be Lieutenants—Euse, H. Dulais, L. Shadwell, R. J. V. Sundell, J. G. Bridgeman, E. Grantham, and A. F. Steele. To be Ensigns—Euse, M. Hunt, from 62nd, vice Bridgeman; M. Dulais, vice Grantham; H. W. Sundell, vice Steele.

WAR-OFFICE, MARCH 24.

Horve Gds.—Lieut. Lord A. B. St. Mary, Capt. p. vice Tripp; Cor. H. S. Hall, Lieut. p. vice M. Hunt, from 62nd, vice Bridgeman; M. Dulais, vice Grantham; H. W. Sundell, vice Steele. To be Ensigns—Euse, M. Hunt, from 62nd, vice Bridgeman; M. Dulais, vice Grantham; H. W. Sundell, vice Steele.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

10th Dr. Gds.—Lieut. J. Campbell, Capt. p. vice Randall; Cor. A. Robertson, Lieut. p. vice Segrave; Cor. A. S. Butler, Lieut. p. vice Campbell; 10th Dr. Gds.—Major J. Mullen, from 4th Dr. Gds.; Cor. J. Mullen, Adj. vice Jacob, who res. Adj. only.

1000; Sec. Lieut. C. W. Colver, First-Lieut. p. vice Andrew; R. Bruce, Sec-Lieut. p. vice Colver; P. P. Lowmeyer, Asia-Sarg. vice Ferguson, 1010 to 1843.
1020—Lieut. H. Hill, Ensign vice Lindsay, dec.
1030—Lieut. A. C. Campbell, Adj. vice Macdonald, 1843 to 1845.
1040—Lieut. H. Phillips, Lieut-Col. p. vice Macdonald, 1843 to 1845.
1050—Capt. E. Houd, Adj. p. vice Phillips; Lieut. C. Lowmeyer, Capt. p. vice Houd; J. Ensign, Lieut. p. vice Lowmeyer, Ensign; Lieut. F. W. H. Ensign, 1050 to 1845, Ensign vice Lowmeyer.
1060—Sec-Lieut. G. Chaucet, First-Lieut. p. vice Tredwell; R. L. Fielden, Sec-Lieut. p. vice Chaucet, 1060 to 1845.
1070—A. S. Craig, Ensign vice Bendsby, prom. in 1060.
1080—Capt. D. Horton, p. 1080, Capt. vice J. K. Pym, who is Lieut. J. W. Grey, Capt. p. vice Horton; Ensign E. L. Parratt, Lieut. p. vice Grey; Lieut. C. Warburton, Ensign p. vice Parratt.
1090—Lieut. J. M. Jeffery, Capt. p. vice Russell.
1100—T. C. Dunbar, Lieut. p. vice Jeffery; J. O. Leach, Ensign p. vice Dunbar.
1110—Lieut. J. O. Burridge, from 10th Lt. Dr. to be Adj. of a Recruiting Division, vice Lawson, dec.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE. 4TH TO 8TH APRIL.—Intelligence from India to 1st March reached London by telegraph through France, in anticipation of the regular Mail, on the afternoon of the 4th inst. The despatch contains a full and complete account of the war with much anxiety.

It is understood that Lord Ellenborough's policy with respect to Sind, will immediately be made a subject of Parliamentary discussion.

The Queen continues in excellent health; her Majesty's confinement will probably take place in about a week.

The King of Hanover is expected to arrive on a visit to this country in the middle of May; orders having been received to prepare his apartments in the Altesse Royal Court for his reception by that period. The King is expected to remain six weeks in town. The government of the kingdom during his Majesty's absence will be delegated to the Council of State, of which Major-Gen. Prince Bernhard of Saxe-Weimar is President.

The long expected "Journal of Events in Afghanistan," sent by Lady Sale, has at length arrived, and has been intrusted for publication to Mr. Murray of Albemarle-street.

It has been settled that the Pacha is to take under his immediate management the commerce, manufactures, and goods through Egypt for which purpose he has purchased Mameluks, Hili & Co.'s entire interest, boats, carriages, horses, &c. for 18,000; allowing them for the next three years 20s. a year on every first class passenger, and 10s. a head for all others and servants using the desert stations. Messrs. Waghorn and Co.'s business in London and Egypt will go on as usual.

There is little doubt that Mr. Ellis's mission to Rio has failed, his proposal for a fresh treaty having been rejected by the Brazilian ministers, the terms not being such as they are willing to accept; but they have offered to treat (the English Government will reduce the duties on Brazilian sugar and coffee to the same rates as those on sugar and coffee the produce of the Brazil colonies).

We understand that the arrangement of the cabins on board the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company's ship Becliff at present fitting out at Liverpool for India, will be for the purpose of the Becliff, in so far as the ship, which on board the lower level is made to accommodate one hundred or 150 passengers, will in the former be divided up to hold one hundred or 150 passengers, which will be added to the size of the cabin.

We see by the Washington papers, that Congress has passed an Act, appropriating 40,000 dollars to defray the expense of an embassy to Peking, for the purpose of making of commercial treaty with Mr. Xie on Duns, the wealthy merchant, and very talented proprietor of the interesting "Chinese Collection," is elected as the most suitable person to receive the important appointment, from his long residence of eleven years in Canton, his thorough knowledge of the Chinese character, and of the trade of that immense empire, as well as for his high position and more, worth it is well known that Mr. Duns scrupulously refrains from participating in the opium trade. Other accounts state, that Mr. Everett is appointed to proceed on a mission from America to the Celestial Empire.

From the papers laid before Parliament we collect, that though twelve millions of dollars, or 3,000,000,000, was demanded and received from the Chinese, on account of the captured opium, the British government, who agree to pay compensation, are willing to appropriate for that purpose only 3,000,000, or less than one-half what the merchant, for the same purpose, when purchasing it from the Indian government. This is to say, they will pay 40s. a chest for property which, freight and charges included, cost 26s. when delivered up, and which, one month after the surrender, was worth, according to the official statement of the Superintendent of Trade to the Foreign Office, at the lowest figure, 120s. per chest. It would appear that the Treasury have taken as the scale for compensation the damage given in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, in the case of The Suez—namely, 40s. per chest. This was a proper verdict; for in that case the vessel had been damaged by a forced sale, and therefore could have no more than the worth of its cargo; and the Court gave him the highest rate of price for the opium scrip held at the time in the money market; but it is obviously absurd to make the result of a forced sale of 65 chests the basis upon which to go in estimating the value of 20,000 chests.

On the 4th Lord Ashley proposed in the House of Commons the abolition of the opium monopoly, but did not go so far as to propose that the enlargement of the monopoly should be prohibited in the British provinces of India, though his own opinion was that such a prohibition would be most beneficial. The motion was seconded by Mr. Hetherington, and supported by Sir G. Sturgeon, Capt. Lyeall, Lord Sedon, and Sir R. Inglis; and opposed by Mr. B. Baring, Lord Jocelyn, Mr. Hogg, Mr. Lindsay, and Mr. Anand. Sir R. Peel suggested it to the House to consider whether, if negotiations were then pending between England and China for the adjustment of this difficult and delicate question, a resolution of the House affirming the above opinion, against the continuance of the trade might not defeat that treaty? The monopoly was then attacked; but the highest authorities were in its favor; for instance, those of Lord Cornwallis, Mr. Hill, and others, who had acquired extensive knowledge of the subject locally and accurately. He was not asking the House to decide that night between monopoly and free trade in opium; but he did ask them to vote for the previous question, that they might avoid deciding hastily upon a matter requiring the full and matured deliberation. He intimated the House to consider the deficient state of the Indian revenue, and the hard pressure of taxation upon the Indian people, which, if the revenue were renounced, must be yet further increased. Lord Ashley said, that after the declaration of Sir R. Peel, respecting the probable inconvenience which the difficulty of the Crown might sustain from a vote of the House of Commons, he would not press his resolution to a division.

The revenue accounts for the quarter up to 5th April have been published. On all the other branches of revenue, the Post-office expected, there is still a falling off. In the Customs there is a decrease in the quarter of 1843, as compared with the corresponding quarter of 1842. On the year there is a decrease of 1,076,838. In the Excise the falling off in the quarter of 1843, as compared with the corresponding quarter of 1842, is 1,799,000. The decrease in the quarter is 1,799,000. On the year the decrease is 1,059,092. In the Stamps the decrease in the quarter is 6,561, in the year 146,790. In the Taxes, in the quarter, 6,053, in the year 146,790. In the Post office there is an increase in the quarter of 2,000, and in the year of 103,000.

The Property Tax appears in this quarter at 1,885,232, and if we estimate the year from the quarter, the produce for the year will be upwards of seven and a half millions.

Sir R. Peel calculated its produce at 3,771, which was too low an estimate, for there has been a great increase of the national wealth since the abolition of the former tax.

Various conjectures are afloat as to the intentions of Government, now that the Property Tax has turned out to be so successful. It is conjectured that some think that the Assessment does are to be repealed; others think that Sir Robert will add to the rate of the Income Tax, in order to equal several duties which press severely on industry.

To Correspondents.

We do not exactly see upon what principle A. Friend, wishes us to insert a letter about the Intended letter of Mr. C. M. to India.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

DEFTY MAN-TRAITER.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—I recollect having perused in your paper of the 4th instant, an article relative to the appointment of Deputy Magistrates. Can you kindly inform me, what is likely that this long looked for appointment will take effect?

I trust the Government will not overlook the applications, which are on record since the year 1830, both at the Offices of the Secretary to Government and the Superintendent of Police; some of them accompanied by several strong testimonials of the character and qualification of the applicants, whose services I have not the least doubt would be appreciated by the Government, as much as they have been, and are still, by those under whom they are serving.

Yours obediently,

30th May, 1843.

SIR W. MACAGHTER.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—I am induced to hope, that if you will reconsider the remarks you have made on the Meeting of the Friends of the late Sir W. Macaghter, you will be led to view that Meeting as having been strictly a private one.

It is manifest, that there must be some specific difference between a public and a private Meeting.

The mere circumstance that it was held in the Town Hall, will not constitute this difference, for many private Meetings are held there from motives of convenience.

The distinction would seem to lie in the mode in which it is convened, and in the character of the Chairman.

A public Meeting is convened by the Sheriff upon a public requisition, and he takes the Chair ex officio. A private Meeting is invited by any body of unofficial men who elect their own Chairman. If this reasoning be correct, the Meeting held by Sir W. Macaghter's friends, must be considered in every circumstance private.

But, independent of the broad line which may be drawn as above, I am enabled to add that the late Meeting was in its inception and design, strictly intended to be a Meeting of the friends of the deceased for the sole object, as expressed in the invitation to them to assemble, "Of taking into consideration the best mode of 'eradicating by some lasting Testimonial, their feelings of respect for his memory.'"

I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

W. H. BRUCE, Hon. Secy.

Calcutta, May 10th, 1843.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—May I beg of you, or some of your correspondents, answers to the following questions.

1. "Are Judges or Magistrates empowered to reject English Petitions from Europeans, which merely involve the writing of the Judge right on a subject which his decision, justified the conclusion, that he did not understand, he having passed a judgment that was quite irrelevant to the prayer of the Petition?"

2. "Is the use of the Persian language really prohibited and is there any punishment to be awarded the Magistrate in whose Court the Persian language is still in force?"

3d. "Does the Seonaj Judge possess Authority to direct the Seonaj Saduk Amra, to proceed to give possession of a high of land to the Zemindar, where there is no supplicatio offered, but on the contrary, where the Raj itself petitions, that the Zemindar may resume his land, the Kyat not desiring to retain possession of the same any longer?"

The enclosing answers to these questions, I shall avail myself of assistance in forwarding documents in support of these questions.

Bhar, 24th May, 1843.

ONEWHAH.

ETROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL.—To the Editor of the Review.—SIR,—At this momentous period in the history of our Protestant Church, when, if her lay-members do not support her in the integrity of her pure faith and apostolic practice, there can be but little human hope of her maintenance, I think it will not appear to you to be unwelcome of presumption, if I name why I, as one of these Churches, have withdrawn my subscription to this Society.

1. We consider the following of Newman to Dissenters from the United Church of England and Ireland as by law established; and chiefly, because Newman, in contradiction to the 6th Article of that Church, makes doctrine the joint rule of faith with Holy Scripture.—(Tract xxviii., p. 3.) And because it holds that the power of making the body and blood of Christ is vested in the successors of the apostles.—Freely, vol. i. p. 228.

ADVERTISEMENTS

BY J. M. STOCQUELLE.

By Order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
H. G. SMITH, Major General,

DOMESTIC OCCURRENCES.

[illegible]

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

RIVER STEAMERS.
The James Steamer, having the Soorree accommodation boat in tow, returned to Calcutta from Allahabad on the 10th instant. The following is a list of passengers on the boat :
From Allahabad.—Lieut. Mercer, H. M.'s 3d Buft.
From Mirzapore.—Mrs. Worsley and child, and Mrs.
Parker and two children.
From Dinapore.—Dr. Bacon, H. M.'s 62d Regt.

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

BANK SHARES.
Bank of Montreal	1000	Rs. 4,000	From 2000 to 2000
Bank of America	1000	Rs. 1,000	" 0-0 to 10
Bank of England	1000	Rs. 800	" 175 to 100 and Ketchikan of interest from the 1st January, 1913, of the of last declared dividend on per Class 24 of the Deed of Partnership.

The work will be illustrated with sketches of remarkable faces, striking incidents, portraits, costumes, &c. &c.

IMPERIAL TEA WARE-HOUSE,
No. 61, TANK SQUARE.
S. E. CORNER SCOTCH KIRK.

FOR SALE

Souchong, ditto 16 Rs., ditto 3-8, 2-12 and 2-8.
Handsomely palated silk covered Boxes containing Sou-chong and Orange Pekoe mixed at 32 Rs. per Box, or 5 Rs.

CURIOSITIES.
Consisting of Chessmen, Nankin Stone China-Ware, very Wafer Stamps, &c.

All applications are requested to be made to Mr. Richard Harris, who is authorized to effect Sales and receive pay-

TERMS—CASH.

ESTATE OF W. H. TWENTYMAN, DECEASED.

CLOCKS and WATCHES—by McCabe and other makers.

SUNDRIES—Ink Stands of every description, gold and Parties in the Department will be so good as to supply through their own Agents, or send a remittance with their wire.

TREASURY, NAVY, MISSIONARY AND PRIVATE BILLS, of first rate character, in continental and other for family remittances.

MACKENZIE, LYALL AND CO.
General Importers

Copy to purchase any dress we pattern in the advertisement notwithstanding them home if required, free of Commission or any charge, save postage.

CONCENTRATED SYRUP

PREPARED BY
BATUGATE AND CO.
4 and 6 Old Court House Street

L. the celebrated Dr. Christison, Professor of Materia Medica in the University of Edinburgh, is chiefly recommended for its facility of administration to children.

EUROPEAN AND ORIENTAL AGENCY.

MR. PARKE PITTAR

A business man's important venture in the Agency now established, will consist in the annual return of Mr. P. Pittor to India. Taking advantage of the Pambolan or Oriental Company's Steam Vessels, he proposes re-visiting Colombia about the latter end of every October, and returning to Europe about the middle of the following February, thus affording to persons entrusting the management of their affairs to his care, the opportunity of a personal conference and explanation of their views and intentions,—an advantage in the transaction of affairs of a complicated, or family nature, the gratification of which need not be commented upon.

Every article purchased through this Agency will be most minutely examined previous to its being packed and the same care under every circumstance, taken as if persons were themselves individually present and superintending. Packages of a large size will, as usual, be shipped by fast-vessels to their destined port; but those of smaller dimensions, will, (unless otherwise instructed), be sent through the Peninsular and Oriental Company's Office, Overland; thus enabling persons in most instances to receive their orders fully examined within four months from the date of the transmission of their instructions.

References in Calcutta, R. J. Lattay, Esq. of the firm of Messrs. Lattay, Brothers and Co.

NICHOL, WILKIE AND CO.
MESSRS. J. COCKBURN AND CO.

NICHOL, WILKIE AND CO.

STOCK MARKET.—Company's Paper in the 4's and 5 per cent. Issues—SHARES in the Bank of North and Union Bank—BILLS on H. M.'s Treasury at 30 day's

No. 16, Writers' Buildings. J. W. ROBERTS.

JEPHSON AND CO.
ARMY AND GENERAL AGENTS, 8, GOVERNMENT PLACE.

East India and Commercial Agents, South Sea Chambers, 41, Threadneedle Street.

NOTICE.
SUNTER, Brindley and (Oriental) Steam Navigation.

Stream Ship Minder

14th October, as before advertised.
J. R. ENGLEDDUE,
Superintendent and Agent.

J. MUNDY, of Chelmsford. Took land of Messrs. HAY and MORIN, 7, Old Court house, Colchester. Price, $4. 2.

NOTES ON THE BOOK OF MATTHEW,
with references to the Power, Wisdom and Goodness of God. Eight Ages.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 439, Vol. IX.]

SERAPPORE: THURSDAY, JUNE 1st. 1843.

Price 2 Cts. Rs. monthly, or Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.

OVERLAND MAILS.

THE Bombay Government intends to despatch the Star Mail Steamers of the following months, on the dates below specified, viz.

The steamer of July on the 19th June.
" August on the 19th July.
" September on the 26th August.

Notice is accordingly hereby given, that the latest safe date for the transmission of Letters from Calcutta, which may be forwarded by the steamer appointed to leave Bombay on the 19th of June, will be Wednesday, the 7th proximo.

Wm. MOORE,
Deputy Post Master.

General Post Office,
The 11th May, 1843.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The Editors of the Friend of India beg to acknowledge the following donation:

From G. F. Brown, Esq. Co's. Rs. 50, to Serampore College.

THE PROPAGATION SOCIETY AND PRETEXT.

By the last Mail the Star received from a correspondent in London, part of a correspondence, relative to a recent secession from the Propagation Society, which supports Bishop's College. Our contemporary has only obtained one portion of the story and it has led him to entertain a suspicion of bigotry against the seceders. We are happy in being able to furnish him with the other limb of it, the perusal of which will, we trust, satisfy him that the seceders have right reason, and consistency on their side.

Some time back, a meeting of the Auxiliary Propagation Society was held at Cheltenham, when it was stated on the authority of letters from Calcutta, that Tractarianism "prevailed to a frightful extent, among the agents and missionaries of the Society in Calcutta, the practical effect of which was to cut off from the Church of Christ all the faithful protestant labourers in the vineyard, and to introduce dissension and heart-burning among all the protestant bodies." The Revd. Mr. Campbell, the Secretary of the Society, who was present, on being questioned as to the practice of the Board relative to candidates for the Missionary office who had imbibed l'assaye principles, asserted in the most explicit terms that the Board took double pains to exclude such persons from the service of the Society. The declaration was considered perfectly satisfactory by those who had made the enquiry, and some of the Tractarian subscribers imputed their intention to withdraw from the Society.

The subject was subsequently brought under the view of the Board in London, by the Hon. and Revd. Mr. Perceval, one of the individuals with whom the Tractarian movement originated. It was continued for a long time to be one of the most ardent and influential supporters. The Archbishop of Canterbury was in the Chair. At that meeting, the Reverend gentleman was repeatedly assured, that the Board, so far from making the adoption of these peculiar sentiments a ground of rejection, did not so much as make it a matter of enquiry. The subscribers to the Cheltenham Auxiliary Society immediately addressed the Parent Society, pointing out the great discrepancy between the statements of their Secretary, and the sentiments delivered at the Board in the presence of the President; and at the close of their letter earnestly entreated that their conclusions might be referred by an assurance from the authorities of the Society, that care was taken by the Candidate's Committee that no persons holding such opinions should be employed by the Society. The reply, which was signed by Mr. Campbell himself, refused any such assurance, and stated that the "Society recognized no theological tests of fitness for its service other than those which are provided in the Liturgy and Articles." The conduct of the Society in this matter is thus described by the Times, which, as an unflinching advocate and abettor of the Tractarian movement, stands second only to the British Critic, now edited by Mr. Newman.

"It is certain that to get the money of those who differ from Mr. Close, a tone of statement quite opposite to Mr. Campbell's, indeed distinctly contradictory of it, is adopted in public and in private by the Society's agents. Letters have appeared in our own journal to the effect that Mr. Campbell's assertions were unfounded, and that counter assertions have been made at Committee Meetings of the Society, in the presence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, which have passed without protest: The upshot of all seems to be, that while the gentlemen of Cheltenham are requested to subscribe upon the hypothesis that what Mr. Campbell said was true, the gentlemen of Oxford are requested to subscribe upon the hypothesis that what Mr. Campbell said was false. What may be thought of such a principle among archbishops and bishops we shall not presume to conjecture: in the mercantile world it would not be considered honest."

The Revd. Mr. Close, the Revd. Mr. Bickersteth, the Revd. Mr. Pratt, and others consider that the Venerable Society, by refusing to make those extreme opinions which have been promulgated in the Tracts for the Times, and which are openly professed and acted on by its agents and Missionaries abroad, a subject of enquiry, does ipse facto record its judgment and proclaim to the world that they are not inconsistent with the Articles and Liturgy of the Church of England. They have accordingly relinquished their connection with the Society.

As may at first appear somewhat singular, that so firm an adherent of the Church of England as the Revd. Mr. Close, should consider it necessary to separate from a Society, simply because it recognizes no theological tests of fitness for Missionary labours other than those which are provided in the Articles and Liturgy of the Church. But the circumstances of the times impose the necessity of a more explicit avowal of sentiments than is contained in these general expressions. It has been Mr. Newman's object to affix a Tractarian interpretation to the Articles, utterly at variance with the doctrines which distinguish Protestantism from Popery. That School of Divines which is "fast precipitating the Church into the bosom of Rome," has no scruple in adopting the same language which has now been used by the Propagation Society. Those who are advocating the invocation of saints, and who maintain the existence of a Purgatory, affect to recognize no theological test other than that which is furnished by the Articles and Liturgy of the Church of England. Those articles have therefore ceased to be any test of an adherence to the peculiar doctrines of the Reformation. If a public Society, when asked for an exposition of its opi-on questions of vital importance on which a division has arisen in the Church, refuses any other reply than that it adheres to the Articles and Liturgy, to which different parties affix opposite interpretations, its reply cannot but be considered equivocal, if not evasive. The refusal of an explanation which every man who repudiates the doctrines advanced by the Oxford School, would cheerfully and explicitly afford, is at once decisive of the bias of the leading members in that Society, and fully justifies the course pursued by Mr. Close and others.

CONQUEST OF TAHITI BY THE FRENCH.—The last Mail brings the melancholy intelligence that the French Government has taken possession of the island of Tahiti. The French journals generally represent the cession as entirely voluntary on the part of the Queen and the chiefs, and exult with the most glowing satisfaction at the annexation of this island and those in its neighbourhood, to the French crown. But there is such incontrovertible evidence that the cession was obtained by violence, that it can be viewed in no other light than as one of the most glaring acts of injustice ever inflicted by a civilized government upon a simple and unoffending people.

The following statement is from a British Resident on the island, who was on the spot when the transaction occurred. On the 1st of September last, the French Frigate of sixty guns, la Reine Blanche, commanded by Admiral du Petit Thouars, arrived at Papeete. For several days the most peaceful intercourse existed between the inhabitants and the French. On the 5th, however, messengers were sent to the Queen at Kinohou, requesting her and her chiefs to come to Papeete, that the Admiral might pay his respects to them. On the 6th the principal chiefs arrived and dined with the Admiral on board. The same evening the British Vice Consul and the American Consul received an official letter from the Admiral, stating that differences existed between the Tahitian and French Governments which might lead to hostilities; and the British and American subjects were warned to secure their property. During that night there was a meeting of the four chiefs with the Admiral, when a document was drawn up and signed by the former, stating that as they were unable to govern the kingdom, in the present circumstances, so as to harmonize with foreign governments, they placed themselves under the protection of France, on certain conditions. The chief of these were, that the internal Government should continue with the Queen and Chiefs; that the Queen should make laws to bind her subjects; that the laws should remain in the hands of the present powers; that every man should be at liberty to profess the religion which accorded with his own desire; that the places of worship belonging to the English missionaries should remain unmolested; and that the missionaries should continue to perform their duties unmolested, but that the affairs concerning foreign governments, and also concerning foreign residents were to be left with the French Government and its officers appointed by it. The Queen's consent, however, was still wanting to this extraordinary document. The Admiral demanded her signature, or the payment of 10,000 dollars, for alleged injuries, within twenty-four hours; threatening in case of a refusal to plant his flag, fire his guns, and take possession of the island. She was then on the eve of her confinement. She hesitated to seal her own doom, and postponed the signature till within an hour of the time for the bombardment, when she reluctantly put her hand to an instrument which made her the vassal of France. A supreme Council of three Frenchmen was appointed, from whose decision there was to be no appeal but to the king of the French. The Missionaries loudly remonstrated against this arbitrary proceeding;—and a proclamation was issued decreeing that "any person who should either in word or in deed prejudice the Tahitian people against the French Government should be banished." Thus seal the civil and the religious liberties of the island of Tahiti.

The pretext for this arbitrary proceeding is, the injuries which were said to have been inflicted on the French. Of these injuries there is no proof. If there were any injuries to complain of, they were committed by, and not upon, the French. As to the voluntary cession of the island,—the earnest solicitation, as the French journals term it, to be admitted to the enjoyment of French protection, it was quite as voluntary as the threat of a bombardment within four and twenty hours if it was rejected, could make it. The helpless natives had not the slightest chance of resisting the French; the first broad side would have levelled the town and entered the habitations. The treaty was literally extorted at the cannon's mouth. The reason of the surrender is stated by the chiefs to be that they were unable to govern their country under present circumstances, as so to harmonize with foreign governments. But they have been able perfectly to harmonize for many years with the Governments of Great Britain and America, with whom they have come most frequently into contact, and no discord has arisen except with reference to France, and this is altogether of her own creating.

The political importance of this distant possession to France is utterly insignificant. She has little trade in the Pacific, and no interests to protect in that ocean. But the religious results of this perfidious act cannot fail to be most disastrous. The Jesuit's College at Valparaiso will immediately take advantage of it. Roman Catholic Missionaries will be poured into Tahiti, and the Protestant Missions, on which such labour and expense have been bestowed for fifty years, will be rapidly extinguished. These Papian Missions will of course be sent out, under the patronage of the French Government, and identified with it. Any exertion on the part of the Protestant Missionaries to protect their converts from Roman Catholic influences, will be construed by those who wield the ponder of the sword as an attempt to prejudice the Tahitian people against the French Government, and will lead to their instant banishment. The French authorities who found so little difficulty in discovering a pretext for the seizure of the island, will experience still less in finding one for the expulsion of the Missionaries.

Some of the French Journalists openly affirm that this measure has not been adopted without the cognizance of the French Government. Indeed, it is asserted in the Semmer that the assent of the British Government was given to the occupation of Polynesia by the French Government in March 1842. This appears all but incredible. It may be merely an inference drawn from the absence of any vigorous remonstrance with the French Government. Such a remonstrance, for an object of no political moment, may have been deemed impolitic, in the present combustible state of the French. Or it may have been made without being communicated to the Editors of the public journals. At any rate, the reason given by that journal for the apathy of the British Government can scarcely be supposed to apply to Sir Robert Peel, however closely it may be in union with the feelings of Sir Robert Peel.

The English Government cannot attach any political importance to the possession of Tahiti by either this power or that; and in relation to religion, they are not Anglican Missionaries, but Dissectors, who have converted Polynesia; there are, therefore, neither lords nor bishops to conciliate; and how keenly soever the intervention of France on behalf of the priests must be felt by the friends to Mission in England, disseminated as they compromised in a day a work which they have done half a century, the jealousy of the high priestly clergy will be but feebly excited, if it should be at all; nor is there to be feared in the results of the nullity, that irritation which a similar outrage committed on Anglican Missionaries would not have failed to produce."

LYONS'S JOURNAL OF AN AFFRICAN PRINCE.—"We plead the hacknied excuse—"of circumstances beyond our control," for this late notice of Lieut. Eyre's Narrative of military operations at Cabul in the winter of 1841. If the subject had been one of only transient importance we should rather have submitted to the discredit of having overlooked it altogether, than have ventured into the field so long after it has been occupied by our contemporaries. But there is a deep and permanent interest connected with the melancholy events of that period which time will not diminish.

Lieut. Eyre throws but little light on the cause of an insurrection which terminated in so fearful a catastrophe. The warning which the Describer Major Pottinger as having given to the Envoys related only to the unsettled state of Kohistan. The idea of a general conspiracy to expel us from the country, the secret of which, though entrusted to hundreds and thousands, was kept with the most scrupulous fidelity, by a people habitually perfidious, is not supported by any evidence as yet before us. It is deemed altogether impossible by the writer in the Edinburgh Review, whose reasoning upon this subject appears to be very conclusive. The fact that the insurrection in Cabul under Amooloolah and Abdoolah Khan, broke out precisely at the same time with the rising in Kohistan, however, goes far to prove that there was a clear understanding between some of the chiefs who took so prominent a share in subsequent transactions, that an attack should be simultaneously made on our positions, in the hope, that success might attend the effort to expel us from the country.

That the English were regarded by the great body of the people, and more especially by the chiefs, with feelings of the deepest repugnance, will admit of no doubt. It would be difficult, it is true, to bring forward an instance of any country subjugated by the sword, in which the inhabitants had suffered less from the consequences, than Afghanistan did from our occupation. It. No conquest in the East has ever perhaps been accompanied by fewer violations of the dictates of justice or mercy. To the industrious peasant we had given a degree of freedom and protection previously unknown to him. We had inundated the country with our wealth. We had established a far milder system of administration than the country, with its turbulent and refractory chiefs, had ever enjoyed, or was even prepared for. The same principles, which form the points of distinction between the administration in India and that of the Native princes, had been introduced into Afghanistan.—But, we were strangers and infidels, and that in a country where the people have all that animosity of habits which belongs to mountaineers. We were hated as infidels, and every Mahli in the country was occupied as a missionary, preaching up the virtues of opposition to us. Our presence as conquerors was as distasteful to the people in general as the presence of victorious strangers would have been two centuries ago among the Highlands of Scotland. To the chiefs whose importance had been reduced, and who have become gradually extinct, in proportion as we succeeded in establishing a regular Government, we were particularly obnoxious. The military strength of the Government had formerly consisted of these chiefs and the retainers whom they could respectively enlist under their banners. While they gave their support to the crown, they themselves derived both profit and dignity from the connection. They stood it, somewhat the same relation to the King, as the feudal nobility did to the Plantagenets. It was the aim of the British administration, by the organization of local corps, disciplined by European officers, to dispense with the aid of this uncertain and dangerous militia, and to render the government independent of the Chiefs. Freely feeling of pride and self-interest in their mind was cultivated against us. And those feelings of hostility were sharpened by the haughtiness of our national character, and by the licentious habits of some who invaded the domestic privacy of respectable families, and wounded the tender sensibilities of the Afghan. From these various causes the people had been gradually prepared to take advantage of any outbreak which held out a hope of relieving the country from our hated presence.

The first appearance of dissension was exhibited in the rebellion of the eastern (Pishan) chiefs, some of whom took an active part in the general insurrection which subsequently burst forth. Early in October they suddenly left Cabul, and, planting themselves with a few followers in the defiles of the Khond Cabul, plundered a caravan, and cut off all communication between Cabul and India. The ostensible reason of this outbreak, was the reduction which had recently been made in their allowances. Lieut. Eyre lays the blame of this reduction at the door of Lord Auckland, but the writer in the Edinburgh Review, who has evidently had access to the most authentic sources of information, distinctly denies the fact, and asserts that the Lordship was entirely ignorant of the reduction, till after its effects were visible in the stoppage of the passes. It was part of that system of economy which arose from the necessities of Shah Soojah, after he had been told that he must not expect to rely on the resources of the British Government. It was an arrangement determined upon by the Shah and the Envoy. The chiefs were, it appears, called before his Majesty, and the necessity of the reduction was frankly explained to them. They admitted the justice of the measure, and expressed their cheerful acquiescence in it—and immediately took to the and, and commenced a system of extortion and plunder. A considerable force was sent under Sir Robert Sale to clear the passes, and it was commenced to fight every inch of its way to Teseen, where Capt. Macgregor proceeded into the hills and concluded a treaty with the chiefs, the terms of which were far too lenient. Indeed the wisdom of concluding any treaty whatsoever with such traitors as a few is much to be questioned. The moderation of the negotiator was as usual regarded as a token of fear, and served only to encourage the rebels in their opposition to our authority. With men who had thus lately attacked our troops night and day for more than ten days, without any excuse except their dislike of the established government of the country, it was impolitic to hold any amicable conference. The first measure these chiefs adopted, after they had signed the treaty in good faith, was to violate it. They made every effort to increase their retainers; they occupied every salient point in the passes; they poured the inaccessible heights and poured a murderous fire from their long rifles on our columns as they toiled through the defiles; and the injury inflicted on Sir Robert Sale's force after the hollow and deceitful truce, was far greater than any which it had suffered before. He made his way however bravely to Gundamuck, by a series of conflicts conducted under the most appalling circumstances, and in the most disadvantageous positions. If the military skill, the courage, and the perseverance displayed by that noble band of soldiers in their march from Cabul to Gundamuck does not of this period to which it is entitled, it is only because it has been eclipsed by the more glorious defence of Jellalabad by the same brigade.

The insurrection of Cabul broke out on the morning of the 2d of November. Nothing has appeared as yet to identify it with the opposition offered to Sir Robert Sale by the eastern chieftains, though the circumstances of its having occurred as soon as it was known in Cabul that the General had cleared the passes and was in a position from whence he could afford no succour to the troops in Cabul, may give some colour to such a supposition. The immediate cause of the outbreak in the Capital, as stated by Sir William Macnaghten, in a memorandum in the possession of his widow, was a condition letter addressed by Abdoolah Khan to several chiefs of influence at Cabul stating that it was the design of the Emper to seize and send them to London. The principal rebels met on the night of the 1st of November, and, relying on the inflammable feelings of the people of Cabul, they pretended that the King had issued an order to put all infidels to death. They had previously forged an order for our destruction by washing out the contents of a genuine paper with the exception of the seal, and substituting their own wicked inventions. It appears that a respectable Afghan, Taj Mohamed, had some might give information of the conspiracy to Sir A. Burnes, and put him on his guard against treachery, but his assertions were received with incredulity, and he retired in disgust. The next morning three hundred men attacked Sir Alexander Burnes and murdered him, together with his brother and Lieut. William Bradford, plundered Captain Johnson's treasury and set fire to the houses of the British residents in the city. Lieut. Eyre describes the insurrection as having been at first only an insignificant ebullition of discontent on the part of a few desperate and restless men, which Military energy and promptitude might have crushed in the bud. It is of no avail now to say that Sir A. Burnes ought not to have exposed himself to destruction by continuing to reside in the city after the feelings of hostility on the part of the chiefs, had for nearly a month assumed so decisive an appearance. His residence within the city after such warning is but one of the many errors which marked our proceedings at that critical period. But what shall we say to the sluggishness, the culpable indecision which was exhibited on that fatal day, the 2d of November, on which the doom of our army may be said to have been virtually sealed? The insurrection was trifled with till it became unmanageable. Thus it was also in the recent riot of Bristol, and the more ancient riots of London in the time of Lord George Gordon, in which the same inactivity produced corresponding effects. An exhibition of military energy on the first ebullition of popular rage would have prevented the conflagration of those cities; and the adoption of the most energetic measures immediately after intelligence had reached the cantonments that Sir Alexander and his associates had been murdered, and the treasury plundered, and as soon as the smoke of blazing houses was seen, would have overruled the insurgents and possibly prevented the final catastrophe. But Sir William Macnaghten made light of the outbreak, and still continued to rely with confidence on the friendly dispositions of the people, and General Elphinstone, with all his personal bravery, waited. Lord Shelton was sent with a few troops to the Dala Hissar, to watch the progress of events and to act on his own judgement; and he did nothing but watch till it was too late to act. A few of Shah's body guard, and some of Campbell's Hindostanese, comprized the whole number of troops sent to put down the insurrection. They were beaten back, and two hundred of the King's guards slaughtered and two of the palaces destroyed. "The day was suffered to pass," says Lieut. Eyre, "without anything being done, demonstrative of British energy and power." The golden moments for action were lost. The insurgents had murdered our countrymen. They had plundered their property and burnt their houses with perfect impunity within a mile of our cantonments and under the very walls of the Capital. It was manifest to the insurgents, that this small ebullition of popular rage had purloined our public functionaries. All those whose friendship for us was based on a belief of our power, first hesitated, and then turned against us. The first day was the crisis which determined the events of the campaign. The ground we lost on that day of inaction, was never recovered.

(To be continued.)

THE BLUE BOOK.—A correspondent of the Harvard, A Voice from the North West, has made some observations on our review of the Blue Book, which seem to require notice. He says that we are at last obliged to confess that Lord Auckland was the first to give that order which directed the British troops to withdraw immediately, after relieving the beleaguered garrisons from Afghanistan. We object to the use of the words "at last obliged to confess," being altogether unbecomingly and unfair. We have never manifested the least reluctance to acknowledge that Lord Auckland issued the first, defensive, and for the best of all good reasons, because this order was unknown to us, as subsequent advance of the troops to Cabul testifies, we believe it was to our contemporaries, till the appearance of the Blue Book. We were fully aware that Lord Auckland had determined, whenever our troops should be withdrawn from Afghanistan, not to send them again across the Indus. The Harvard, we think, on more than one occasion, questioned the correctness of this assertion, because, he had nothing for it but our word. It was partly to answer our contemporary that we had not been speaking at random, that we quoted those passages from the Blue Book, which bore out the statement we had made; viz. that if the victories achieved by General Nott and Pollock had been gained while Lord Auckland was at the head of the Government, he would have gladly availed himself of the opportunity of retiring honourably from Afghanistan. The Correspondent is moreover incorrect in saying that Lord Auckland was the first to give the order which drew forth so much disapprobation from us. His Lordship's orders, as far as we are admitted behind the scenes by the Book in question, appear to have sanctioned nothing beyond a retrograde movement on Peshawar, where a powerful army was to be assembled, with a view to the redemption of our honour in Afghanistan. Lord Ellenborough's order embraced the immediate and final abandonment of the country, while our national reputation was unvindicated, and the captives were yet in the hands of the enemy. The first order was apparently dictated by prudence; the last by a panic.

The Correspondent seems to think General Pollock has not received the due merit of praise for the part he bore in ending or resisting the orders to retire, and that too much of the merit of the campaign is apparently ascribed to General Nott. This is not altogether the case; though it is manifest that the documents published in the Blue Book give more of the merit of this successful movement to the Candahar than to the Jellalabad. The impression of the public coincides with that of the Correspondent on the fact, that General Pollock against the order he had received to advance in the country. "That letter, which many of our friends were the first to look for in the Blue Book, is not to be found in it. It may have been omitted by accident; it may possibly have been suppressed intentionally; but we should be very reluctant to admit the idea that while the Ministry published General Nott's energetic remonstrance against Lord Auckland's order to retire, they knowingly withheld from publication General Pollock's equally firm protest against Lord Ellenborough's order to quit the country. There are evidences of impartiality, we had almost said of generous consideration, in the selection of these documents, which forbid us to entertain such a thought. But from whatever cause the omission arose, it is much to be regretted, because it deprives the gallant General of the credit due to his moral courage.

A Voice from the North West is perfectly correct in saying, that if General Pollock had obeyed the orders he received and retired to Peshawar, we should in all probability never have known which we now view with feelings of just pride, our national character would have been covered with the deep dejection. Still, the spirited letter of General Nott to Brigadier England, or the letter of General Nott to Brigadier England, where he positively leaves Quetta, where he intended apparently to remain acting as the first, defensive, and which constrained him to move up to Candahar, was the crisis on which the subsequent advance of the troops to Cabul testifies, we believe it was to our contemporaries, till the the uncontrolled responsibility of all affairs political as well as military, and the first use he made of these enlarged powers, was to order up Brigadier England with his convoy. Had that convoy not reached Candahar, General Nott could not have moved on Cabul, and the Governor-General would never have ordered him to more. It was the knowledge that General Nott was thus fully equipped for any enterprise by the arrival of these reinforcements, that furnished one of the chief inducements to Lord Ellenborough to "retire by way of Cabul." Perhaps we ought rather to say, that when His Lordship was roused to attempt the recovery of our prisoners and our honor, by the force of public opinion at home and in India, it was the junction of the two Generals at Candahar, which furnished him with a pretext for renewing the war, as well as with the means of securing our ultimate triumph. Among the concurring causes of this triumphant movement, the reinforcement of General Nott's army was the most powerful, and deserves therefore to be distinguished from all the other events of the year.

RECONSTRUCTION OF THE SECRETARIAT.

Lord Ellenborough has just remodelled the Secretariat of the Supreme Government and that of the province of Bengal. The perplexing divisions of the old regime have been swept away, and the various designations of Secret and Political and Ecclesiastical and Separate departments abolished, and we have one Home and one Foreign Secretary with a complement of assistants, under the title of Under Secretaries. The appointment is limited to men of junior standing in the service who are not entitled to a salary of more than 1000 Rupees a month. As soon as their claim to higher allowance has been matured, their mortification will cease, and they will be remanded to the interior of the country to act as Magistrates and Collectors. There will thus be a constant succession of men training up for the appointment; and the country will always possess the half-brought materials for manufacturing a good Secretary whenever that office may become vacant. In some respects it will be advantageous to the administration to have the field of selection so much enlarged. But there is one individual whose convenience seems to have been altogether overlooked in this arrangement; we allude to the Secretary himself. His own personal labours have been necessarily increased by the accumulation of so many departments on his unfortunate shoulders; and those labours are rendered the more severe by the absence of any one fitted by official aptitude and experience to share them. To these labours will now be added that of training up the Under Secretaries, with the dismal prospect that as soon as they are qualified to render him efficient assistance, they will be removed from the office and planted elsewhere, and that he will be required to undertake the same course of tuition with a new batch of scholars. Thus the office becomes a kind of Academy for the education of candidates for the Secretariat, and the Secretary himself is transformed into a Schoolmaster.

The separation of the office of Secretary to the Government of Bengal from that of Secretary to the Government of India is a measure of such obvious propriety that the only wonder is how the two offices ever came to be united. The business of the Bengal division which contains a population of forty millions of people, and which comprises the departments of Judicial, Fiscal, and Criminal jurisprudence, of the Customs,

Salt and Opium, the Ecclesiastical, and Marine department and that of Internal and External Steam navigation, the Post office, the Akbarnah, and Education, was quite enough for the brain of one man, and it was only a matter of justice to relieve him from all connection with the Government of India. The absurdity of a man's writing letters to himself and having the honour to be his own most obedient humble servant, will now cease. But the Governor-General, or the President in Council, and the Governor of Bengal, will continue to be one and the same person, and we shall still be amused occasionally with the assurance, that Lord Ellenborough, the Governor of Bengal, had been very repugnant to such and such a measure, but that his objections had been overcome by the powerful and close reasoning of Lord Ellenborough, the Governor General in Council.

THE CALCUTTA BIBLE SOCIETY'S SPELLING.

—It will be remembered that some months since, an elaborate paper was issued by the Committee of the Calcutta Bible Society, on the proper spelling of the sacred name of JESUS, in the Oordoo translation of the Scriptures; and that the Committee, having satisfied themselves on the point, resolved that no translation or edition of the sacred volume should have their support, in which their spelling was not adopted. Without questioning the soundness of the Committee's etymological argument, we felt it to be our duty, at the time, to protest against the adoption of so unimportant a matter as a party shibboleth, still farther to divide the too feeble body of Translators of the word of God, and against the use of so imperative a domination over the judgement and conscience of the translators,—to whom Bible Societies are debtors for all their opportunity of communicating the Scriptures to Heathen lands. A member of the Committee, defended that body, in our columns, on the ground that, by their official responsibility, they were under obligation to expend the money of their constituents only on versions of the Scriptures, which were, to the best of their judgement, in every respect, faithful transcripts of the original; and he required of us to expound the principles on which the responsibility of Bible Societies and liberty of conscience in Translators should be reconciled—or the rules according to which they ought mutually to yield. We admitted the importance of the theme, and promised to give it our best consideration. We have not however had leisure to fulfil the promise. And the difficulties of the question have not diminished, from the reflection we have been able occasionally to bestow upon it. It is evident, that a separate responsibility and right of judgement may be claimed for both Societies and Translators, and that in co-operation they must be reconciled. In many cases, collision might be removed by friendly discussion. In others, difficulties might be got over by the adoption of a middle course, unobjectionable to either party. But, after all, points will occur on which irreconcilable differences arise: and what is to be done with them? It is easy to say, that the less competent judge ought to yield to the more competent: but who shall judge of the comparative competence of the opposite parties? Frequently the judgement of the solitary translator, imbued by long study and practice with the principles of scripture interpretation and translation, and perfectly at home in the language he has to use, may be worth more than that of a whole Committee, even with a score of misters of the gospel, possessing the average measure of professional accomplishments. We have known the Committee of the Calcutta Auxiliary Society referred to, as judges on the merits of translations, into languages of which no one member knew a single word: and other Committees may be in a like condition. In such a case, their judgement upon numerous points can be of no value at all. Indeed, in the majority of instances, where Bible Societies in Europe or America give support to translations into new languages, they can have no security that they are doing well, but in the character of the Translator whom they assist. In other cases, as at Calcutta, we fear that difficulties will in actual practice be got over, on the coarse and vulgar principle of the weaker party going to the wall: and to lay down precise rules by which they ought to be got over, must be impossible, as long as the conditions in Committees and Translators are so variable.

Nevertheless, in this, as in most other things, evil has an self rectifying power: and we may yet see an approximation to what is right, without being able to lay down precise rules for the purpose. When Bible Society Committees find, that they have alienated from them so many valuable translators, that they can no longer get a creditable version to print—or when their arbitrary proceedings have awakened so much sympathy for the translators on whom they would put their yoke, as to turn public disgust against themselves, and their treasury consequently becomes empty—they will feel that the exercise of even their great power must be tempered with consideration and forbearance. The Calcutta Committee have had considerable prominence in working out this salutary result. They took an early part in the agitation which has deprived all the Bible Societies throughout the world, of farther co-operation from the translators of the Baptist Denomination. And now their spelling mania has separated from them—has arrayed against them, the whole body of Protestant Missionaries in Upper India, amounting to twenty-seven individuals, of the Presbyterian, the Episcopalian and Independent Denominations. The Baptists, of course, were lost before. Amongst our selections will be found the Circular in which the views of these Missionaries are communicated to the various Bible Societies of Christendom. It is a counterblast to the Calcutta circular, of the strength of which our readers will form their own judgement. For ourselves, we retain the opinion, that the subject is of exceedingly small intrinsic importance; and the blame is therefore the greater, of those who choose it for a condition of union, or rather an element of division. Their conduct bears too great a resemblance to that of the oppressors of the Puritans, in testing orthodoxy by the cut of a cap or a scarf. Since this discussion began, we have observed that a recent traveller in Russia says, that a sect has arisen in that country, whose single, essential peculiarity is a particular mode of spelling this same name of Jesus. Have some of their members come amongst us—or is it only their spirit that has reached Calcutta?

THE BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—We have been favoured with the Twenty-fourth Report of this valuable Institution, which after the lapse of thirty-four years still continues to enjoy the unabated confidence of the public. Of the various institutions established in the metropolis for the diffusion of knowledge during the present century, this Seminary stands first in point of time, and, considering the number of vic-time which it has been instrumental in securing; works of Scottish Artists exhibited at the annual exhibitions, with this exception that the Committee of Management is empowered to engrave for distribution among the members such works of Art as may appear worthy of the distinction. The Committee consists of fifteen gentlemen who are not Artists, ten of whom go out annually. Upon the close of the Exhibitions, the different works purchased for the Association become, by lots publicly drawn, the property of individual members.

The support which the Association has experienced during the last three years, has been highly encouraging. In the year 1839-40, the subscriptions were £6998; in 1840-41, £6707; and in the year 1841-42, they were £6890. The number of actual subscribers amounts to not less than 6277; of these one contributor has 64 shares; 2 have 5 shares; 14 have 3 shares; 164 have 2 shares, and 5821 have one share each of magnificent subscriptions of 2, 3, 4 and 500 a Guinea. The number of works of Art purchased which were poured into it, when the claims on public liberality were few, and the merchants of Calcutta were princes, and the shears had not been applied to the allowances of the public servants, cannot be expected at this time of day, the numerical list of Subscribers amounting as they do to two hundred and thirty, sufficiently proves that the Institution is as great a favourite with the public as it has ever been.

The Report informs us that in the Boys' Department there are Three hundred and three children, divided into seven classes: in that of the Girls, One hundred and twenty-five, making in all Four hundred and twenty-eight. This is probably the number on the Register; but if we make the usual deduction of one fourth for absentees we shall still have an average attendance of Three Hundred and Twenty-one. The entire expense of the Two Schools does not exceed 700 Rupees a month; or less than two Rupees a month for each child. We question whether it be possible to impart efficient instruction to children, many of whom are in European habits, for a less sum; and it is evident that the expenditure is kept within these moderate limits only by a constant and conscientious economy. We are sure that we need not say a word to any of our subscribers to induce them to continue their support to this valuable seminary; but there may be some among them possessed of a small unapplied floating balance, which they are anxious to lay out to the best advantage for others; to them we would not hesitate to refer the claims of an Institution which has been distinguished for more than a quarter of a century for doing much good with small means.

ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF THE FINE ARTS IN SCOTLAND.—A friend has sent us a copy of the Report of the Committee of Management of this National Association, with a request that we would assist him in bringing it to the notice of his own countrymen in India, many of whom are probably ignorant of its existence. The Association was formed several years back with the view of promoting the Fine Arts in Scotland, and of preserving in the country the productions of native genius, which for want of suitable encouragement, were dispersed abroad. The plan of the Association is extremely simple. Every subscriber of one Guinea, is a member of the Society for one year, and is entitled to one chance; of two Guineas to two chances, and so on. The whole amount of Annual Subscriptions is devoted, after the payment of necessary expenses to the purchase of a selection from the works of Scottish Artists exhibited at the annual exhibitions, with this exception that the Committee of Management is empowered to engrave for distribution among the members such works of Art as may appear worthy of the distinction. The Committee consists of fifteen gentlemen who are not Artists, ten of whom go out annually. Upon the close of the Exhibitions, the different works purchased for the Association become, by lots publicly drawn, the property of individual members.

The support which the Association has experienced during the last three years, has been highly encouraging. In the year 1839-40, the subscriptions were £6998; in 1840-41, £6707; and in the year 1841-42, they were £6890. The number of actual subscribers amounts to not less than 6277; of these one contributor has 64 shares; 2 have 5 shares; 14 have 3 shares; 164 have 2 shares, and 5821 have one share each of magnificent subscriptions of 2, 3, 4 and 500 a Guinea. The number of works of Art purchased which were poured into it, when the claims on public liberality were few, and the merchants of Calcutta were princes, and the shears had not been applied to the allowances of the public servants, cannot be expected at this time of day, the numerical list of Subscribers amounting as they do to two hundred and thirty, sufficiently proves that the Institution is as great a favourite with the public as it has ever been.

The Association appears thus to have been the instrument of giving a great impulse to the progress of the Fine Arts in Scotland. Before its establishment, not £1000 was distributed among native artists in six years. The sum at present thus employed in encouraging native talent is £8000 a year. But the beneficial influence of the Society has not been confined to Great Britain. The English and the Irish have caught the infection; and there is now a sum of not less than Thirty Thousand Pounds Sterling contributed annually in the United Kingdom by means of the Association and kindred institutions to the promotion of taste and the encouragement of its professors.

AERIAL STEAM SHIP.—We have been requested to state that the drawing of the Aerial Steam Ship has been lithographed at the Englishman office, where copies, either plain or colored, may be obtained. Though some affect to believe it will never bring our mails, yet it is an object of considerable interest and the credulous and incredulous may both unite in supplying themselves with copies of it.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, MAY 23.

The papers of this morning are so closely compiled with the European news brought by the Mail, as to afford little support to our weekly summary of Indian news. Indeed, beyond the assurance that Lord Ellenborough has positively made up his mind to proceed to the Hills, there is scarcely an item of intelligence.

The private lotteries which have sprung up on the discontinuance of the State Lottery, have been the subject of animadversion in the papers within the last week. An anonymous correspondent, Fortius &c., has stated the singular fact that in a lottery consisting of 1000 tickets there are, frequently not more than 40 or 50 sold, the value of which serves to cover the expense of the lottery them more liberally for services rendered to the state in India, the stimulus to exertion would be abundantly increased. The honours bestowed on larger prizes tending up in their favour. In Sir Henry Pottinger and Sir W. Macgregor for a lottery now drawing by Hothell and Co. two writers in the papers have distinctly called on them to give up the names of the individuals to whose tickets the large prize of 44,000 Rs. fall. They have chosen to consider the enquiry as an attack, and have demanded the name of the writer. It has been surrendered; yet they continue to withhold the name of the fortunate holder, and the natural inference is that it fell to their own lot.

The Procurer, says the Right Hon., in an answer to correspondents, is retting in dock.

Whether the dry rot has seized her timbers we have not heard, but that she is perfectly idle, and losing money every day to the projectors, is of course beyond question. It was currently reported, that Major Henderson, who left Calcutta on the Steamer some little time back, was entrusted with powers to dispose of her definitively. It is a thousand pities she was not in the hands of the Peninsular and Oriental Company. We might then expect to start fair at the beginning of next year, with three excellent vessels.

FRIDAY, MAY 25.

The intelligence from Scinde, though not very particular, is important. It is much to be questioned whether Sir Charles Napier's assertion that it would not be necessary to fire another shot in Scinde, will not turn out quite as premature as Lord Ellenborough's declaration of peace in Aida. The Helotees have formed themselves into small bands, and employed themselves in stopping our communication and intercepting our supplies. The Regiments have lost every thing that was coming from Bombay and have been obliged to send to Feroces to supply their wants. A considerable detachment had been sent on to Sehwan. With an active and inveterate foe, the occupation of the country will be accompanied with great vexation and expense. We hold three or four isolated posts, which have no regular intercourse with each other. The Amers are conquered, but the country is not. Sir Charles greatly felt the want of European troops, and it was resolved therefore to send a portion of the Highlanders, the 78th, by Steam, though the coast cannot be approached without the greatest danger at this season of the year.

Dost Mahomed is said in the Delhi Gazette to have got safely through the Khyber, and to have reached Jellishabad. It is not many days since the Star announced his arrival at Cabul. We are now informed that he is doing every thing in his power to instigate the Afghans against the Sikhs. The idea of his continuing on friendly terms with them while they hold Peshawar, which he covets, is preposterous.

There have been rumours in the papers of Shere Singh's dangerous illness; and some reports have actually put him to death. Upon this rumour is built the supposition that Mr. Clerk's visit to Lahore has reference to the state of the King's health, and the disturbances which will probably arise on his death. But all the rumours regarding movements and events in the Punjab are so varied and so contradictory, that there is little safety except in instructing them all alike.

SATURDAY, MAY 27.

The Dombey Continental Gazette states, that private letters had been received from Marseilles which announce that the Queen had been safely delivered of a son. The Telegraph might have conveyed to that port intelligence five days later than that received by the Mail from London, and the intelligence may therefore have some more solid foundation than the public rumours.

The Bombay papers state, that the active and energetic services of the Superintendent of the Indian Navy is to be honoured with a patent of Knighthood. This, as the papers truly state, will be an honour equally to the Government and the individual. If the home Government was a little less niggardly of its honours, and was to bestow them more liberally for services rendered to the state in India, the stimulus to exertion would be abundantly increased. The honours bestowed on Sir Henry Pottinger and Sir W. Macgregor for a lottery now drawing by Hothell and Co. two writers in the papers have distinctly called on them to give up the names of the individuals to whose tickets the large prize of 44,000 Rs. fall. They have chosen to consider the enquiry as an attack, and have demanded the name of the writer. It has been surrendered; yet they continue to withhold the name of the fortunate holder, and the natural inference is that it fell to their own lot.

The Procurer, says the Right Hon., in an answer to correspondents, is retting in dock.

The Star mentions that the Standard of the 6th of April states, that Mr. Wordsworth had re-finally accepted the post of Poet Laureate, in consequence of communications from Sir Robert Peel and the Lord Chamberlain.

—The Herkers informs us that Mr. G. W. Johnson, formerly assistant Editor of the Englishman, and lately sole Editor of the Country, is on the eve of publishing a book, styled "Three years in Calcutta." It will comprise, it is said, much information relative to the late administration of Lord Auckland.

—A volume of Reports of cases adjudged by the Sadler Court, from 1830 to 1834, has just been published by Mr. Sutherland, Secretary to the Law Commission. We have not seen the work, but the Herkers hints, that it is distinguished by an attempt to write native names according to the Romanized system. If this plan has been adopted, the value of the work will have been not a little diminished.

MONDAY, MAY 20.

—A Dilli Gazette Extra of the 18th May, just received, created a hope that it might announce another triumph of Sir Charles Napier, as the Beluchees were known to have collected in large numbers in the vicinity of Hyderabad; but it contained no other intelligence than that of a panic into which the Military authorities at Sathoo had been thrown by an idle rumour, that the Labour Government had instigated the Hill tribes to rise and cut off three European Regiments in the Hills. It was also noted that 15,000 men were to assemble immediately and expel us.

—The City Article of the Herkers states, that the last Mail brought 13 lakhs of Rupees on account of the merchants from England. It was stated in the Overland Mail, that Government intended to discontinue the advances on shipments in this country, and to draw the requisite funds from India by Bills given in London on the local authorities to the extent of more than two millions sterling. The Herkers says, that there is some expectation that the next Mail will bring orders to pay the Opium indemnity here, but the amount of compensation had not been settled when the Mail left, and there is apparently a difference of more than a million sterling between the demand of the merchants, and the concession of the Ministry.

—The latest intelligence from Seinde is to the effect of May from Kairat, H. M. Sick had left that place for Hyderabad, but the regiment had been severely visited with sickness since its arrival in Seinde. More than a hundred were in hospital, and they were dying at the rate of two or three in a day. It is said that Shere Mahomed has sent a message to General Napier to say, that as they had fought two battles in their country, he wished one more battle for reward. The reply was, that he should come on, and that as soon as he was near enough to Hyderabad he should have enough of fighting.

TUESDAY, MAY 20.

—The Star states that the Governor General is actually on his return to Calcutta. It is said that his Lordship somewhat suddenly declared his intention of coming down to Allahabad with the whole of his civil and military suite.

—The discussion regarding the Lottery of Melthold and Co. has ceased, by their continued refusal of the name of the individual to whom the largest prize fell. The publication of the number, which came up with the rich price will not satisfy the public. Suspicion is shown that the Minor Lotteries are not conducted with that fairness which marked the Government Lotteries, and these suspicions can be removed only by the distinct publication of the names of the winners. The refusal of the names will at once turn public suspicions into certainty.

—The number of letters and covers despatched by the Steamer Cleopatra from Bombay to London, as well as the number received by the Victoria, from Europe, is thus given in the Bombay papers.

Memorandum of the number of Covers received respectively by the Steamer Victoria, on the 14th April, 1848

	Letters.	Newspapers.
Via Falmouth, ...	24,000	14,200
Via Marseilles, ...	3,430	8,400
Foreign Europe, ...	523	1,170
	27,953	23,770
Total No. of Covers, ...	28,476

	Letters.	Newspapers.
Via Falmouth, ...	20,001	17,250
Via Marseilles, ...	3,304	8,521
Foreign Europe, ...	1,633	340
	24,938	26,111
Total No. of Covers, ...	26,571

The number of Covers received and sent in one single month was 114,984, equal to the Million three hundred and seventy-six thousand two hundred and eight in the twelvemonth!

WEDNESDAY, MAY 31.

—No further particulars have been received respecting the rumoured rising of the Hill tribes at Salathoo, to drive us back into the plains; and there can be little doubt of its being a false alarm. General Sir John MacCallin however has taken every precaution against surprise. That the Hill men are not over-pleased with the location of three best fighting Regiments of Europeans among their rocks and herds, may be easily understood; but that Shere Singh should mix himself up in a conspiracy against the English, and thus endanger his crown, which is rickety enough already, is less credible than the promised visit of the Aerial.

—Lord Ellenborough, according to the common voice of the public press, comes down immediately to Calcutta. His Lordship travels by dawk to Allahabad, where he takes steam, and moves down to the city of Palaces. Mr. G. Clark, unquestionably the ablest man in the North Western Provinces, will be appointed Governor of Agra, so long as that office lasts.

—The Star states, that the statue of the Marquis of Wellesley recently brought out in the Jurquina, is the gift of the Court of Directors. The money publicly subscribed by the community in India for the statue, never reached its destination; why, our contemporary does not explain. Of course we are at full liberty to suspect that there was foul play. The statue remained in the Studio of Chantry surrounded. That eminent sculptor died about the same time as the eminent Statesman, and the Court of Directors immediately purchased the statue from his executors, and have handsomely presented it to the city of Calcutta.

—The Englishman states, that the Barometer at 6 p.m. yesterday was far below the average of last year, just before the terrible gale. The Master Attendant sent round a Circular to all the ships in the river to prepare for foul weather. A Northwester began up here about 10 past seven, lulled after half past eight, and commenced again at a little after midnight. The rain was heavy, lightning and thunder were terrific, and for ten minutes it blew as violently at any period of last year's gale.

—The Englishman announces the appearance of Mr. Stoeckeler's Memorials of the War in Afghanistan, from October 1838 to November 1842. We hope to receive our own copy before our next issue, and shall then be enabled to review it.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums for the Friend of India:—

	G. F. Brown, Esq., ...	To April, 1848, ...
G. F. Brown, Esq.,
G. S. Cardew, Esq.,
Major A. Irvine,
J. F. Sastry, Esq.,
H. J. Coley, Esq.,
J. French, Esq.,
ditto,
S. Johnson, Esq.,
H. Mulock, Esq.,
Capt. J. B. Bomb,
W. Wraynard, Esq.,
Alfred Barrett and Co.,
Rajah Sutchurn Ghosh,

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

MILAGROPORE PRODUCE AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

Pursuant to Resolution No. 6 of the Society's Proceedings, dated the 11th of April last, the first show of Flowers, Fruits, and Vegetables took place this 10th day of May 1848, at Cleveland House.

The attendance of both European and Native Gentlemen was most numerous. Indeed the Show Room was quite crowded and was surrounded with the presence of the Ladies of the station.

The Horticultural Department contained many rare specimens of the flowers of China, and the very healthy appearance of the flowers indicated the superiority of the Milagropore climate even in the month of May.

In the Fruit Department there were some very fine Peaches, Leeches, Allot Borkhara, Pinae, &c. Some of the Peaches weighed 14 lbs. each. In the Vegetable Department the most conspicuous specimen was a bundle of Asparagus of unusual size from the garden of J. Porter, Esq. Finer was never seen in Calcutta or even England. Some new Potatoes from Madras seed of very good size, from the garden of G. F. Brown, Esq., excited much attention from the circumstances of the seed having been planted in February as an experiment, and the fruit gathered in May, thus proving that two crops of Potatoes can be raised in one year.

A third crop is now expected from seed planted in April, the plant being now healthy in appearance. Best root of Celery were next looked at, and both were of full size and in the finer sort. A basket of Cucumbers from the garden of J. Porter, Esq., was remarkable for the size, color, and fine appearance of the fruit. Some Carrots (from an English seed) from the garden of Captain Dore, were exceedingly fine, both in color and size. There were some very fine Leeks from the garden of J. Porter, Esq.

Several daisies from the gardens of Native Gentlemen contained some very good samples of vegetables, and fruit, and from the improvement of their gardens it is anticipated that it is supposed the competition at our next show on the 1st of November, will be very great and exciting. The Prices awarded in the appended List were then awarded by the Society.

A sample of Clover reared from Calcutta seed by Baloo Gierro Churn Mitter, looked very healthy and had the blossom on.

Since the last report of our Proceedings, 121 bags of excellent ground (Lakari) in a beautiful situation, have been purchased at much progress in fulfilling and laying out the garden has been made.

The name of Baloo Gierro Churn Mitter as a Donor and Monthly Subscriber was inadvertently omitted in our last report; he is a most intelligent and zealous member of the Institution. The Society has to record his best acknowledgments for the following Donations.

To J. Uba, Esq. for a valuable collection of Cotton seeds, viz. Mexican, San Island, Seychelles, together with samples of the Cotton.

To R. F. Hodgson, Esq. Magistrate of Monghyr, for a fine Cane stick.

To Walter Lumsden, Esq. for some very fine Bunches, for making a Chevaux de frise for the Garden Hedges.

To J. Uba, Esq. for a pair of handsome China Garden Seats.

To A. Johnson, Esq. for a bottle of very superior Arrow Root, the produce of his (the Lalpore) garden.

The increase of Monthly Subscribers since last report is as follows:—

No. of Subscribers formerly advertised,
Alonso Gierro Churn Mitter,
Shah Enayut Hossain,
G. C. Bruce, Esq. of Saltangpore,
J. Gnan, Esq. of Calcutta,
R. Caity, Esq. of Tarapore,
M. Crommelin, Esq. of Nurlah,
—Gent, Esq. of Dourmahal,
R. Falton, Esq. of Morapoor,
John Fitzpatrick, Revenue Surveyor,
J. C. Christian, Esq. of Monghyr,
O. C. Ghatil, Esq. of Por Paintee,
R. Barnes, Esq. of Calcutta,
O. Bhowary Loll and Heelas Roy,
O. Nossamit Danda Rana Chowdrain,
O. The Hon'ble F. Drummond,
O. H. Savi, Esq. of Calcutta,
O. T. J. Phillips, Esq. of Jamnagar,
Total No. of Subscribers,
Amount of Donations first advertised,
O. J. Gnan, Esq. of Calcutta,

J. Richards, of the firm of Giaborne and Co. Calcutta,	50
Hobso Goroob Churn Mitter,	5
J. Fitzpatrick, Esq. Mysore Surveyor,	20
Boobes Muckun and Boobes Chown Zamindaran,	10
Shah Karam Hussain,	10
W. Vansittart, Esq. Collector of Monghyr,	15
Sarcey Nath Chowdry,	5
J. Christian, Esq. of Monghyr,	10
Mr. Holland,	20
M. Croumelle, Esq.,	5
C. C. Bruce, Esq.,	10
Linchum Narain,	5
T. J. Phillips, Esq. Jaunghar,	10
J. H. Savi, Esq. Muttrapoor, Rajmahal,	10

Total Company's Rapees, 604 0
For the above very liberal Donations and the continued increase of Monthly Subscribers, the Society return their united sincere thanks and best acknowledgments.

The Society has determined upon giving proper attention to the Agricultural Department, and as the produce of the present harvest is very inferior both in the size and quantity of the Grain, it is quite clear that an importation of good Seed would prove highly beneficial to the district. Potatoes and Garden seeds will be largely distributed, a change of seed of the former very much wanted.

Prices for Cotton, Sugar Cane, Oats, Wheat, Barley, Peas, and the like, will be given in due season. A Cattle show for Bullocks, Cows, Sheep, &c. the produce of the Bhayulpore and neighboring districts is under consideration.

A public market is about to be established near the public garden and it is believed that Grain, Vegetables, Fruits, &c. will be brought for sale in large quantities.

Thus the price of grain and other commodities will, it is hoped, soon become cheaper, and gradually descend to that reasonable price at which it was disposed of two years ago when no great surplus existed. This plan has been explained to several Natives, and it is their opinion that it will not only work well, but that we shall be able eventually to have two market days a week.

By order of the Society,

(True Copy)
T. E. A. SABLETON, Secretary.
List of Prizes distributed on the 14th of May, 1843.

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1 Mrs. Napleton, for the best Bouquet of Roses, | 3 |
| 2 Mrs. Napleton, for the best Bouquet of Flowers, | 3 |
| 3 Mrs. Don, for the 2d best ditto of ditto, | 1 |
| 4 Mrs. Don, for the best Zinnias, | 1 |
| 5 Mrs. Don, for the best Lilies, | 1 |
| 6 Mrs. Don, for the best Lilies, | 1 |
| 7 Mr. J. Piron, for the 2d best Peaches, | 1 |
| 8 Mr. Parnes, for the best baskets of Vegetables, | 2 |
| 9 Mr. G. F. Brown, for the 2d best basket of ditto, | 1 |
| 10 Mr. P. Gillet, for the best asparagus, | 1 |
| 11 Mr. J. F. Brown, for the 2d ditto, | 1 |
| 12 Mr. J. C. Brown, for the best Cucumbers, | 1 |
| 13 Babo George Churn Mitter, for the 2d best ditto, | 1 |
| 14 Major Napleton, for the best American Potatoes, | 1 |
| 15 Major Napleton, for the best Beet Root and Celery, | 1 |
| 16 Major Napleton, for the best Onions, | 1 |
| 17 Mr. J. P. Brown, for the 2d best ditto, | 1 |
| 18 Shish Enayut Hooquinn, for the best baskets of Vegetables (indigenaous), | 1 |
| 19 Mahsah Omamah Hooquinn, for the 2d best ditto ditto, | 1 |
| 20 Babo George Churn Mitter, for the best Potatoes grown in this District, | 1 |
| 21 Babo George Churn Mitter, for the best bunch of Cabool Clover, | 1 |
| 22 Major Napleton, for the best Love Apple, | 1 |
| 23 Captain Don, for the best Carrots from English seed, | 1 |
| 24 Major Napleton, for the best Aloe Bornia, | 1 |
| 25 Syud Abdul Ullee, for the best Plantain, the above Prizes were immediately distributed by U. F. Brown, Esq. to the Malices of the suc- | 3 |

T. E. A. NAPLÉON, Secretary.
 CALCUTTA THE AUXILIARY BIBLE SOCIETY.
 To the Committee of the Society, in
 DEAR BROTHERS IN CHRIST,
 We have been informed that the Com. of the Cal. aux. Bible Society have laid before you printed Overture requesting your approbation and co-operation in their Resolution to enhance the original name of our Saviour from 'Lad' to 'Yusuf' in the translations of the scriptures heretofore to be printed in the Urdu dialect. We feel solicited that you should be in possession of the facts of the case, and that you should make a decision of a question so important in its bearings on the religious and political feelings of the 'Muslims' in Calcutta; but under the impression that you will be able to do so, we have taken the liberty to put you to the test, and to place you in a position, and other incidental causes, were we not, at the time of issuing their Minute, as fully in possession of the views and information of those who were in possession of the facts of the case, as it were desirable to be, previous to publishing a question of such importance to its final issue.

As the translations of the scriptures afforded by the 'Lad' and 'Yusuf' versions of the scriptures in India, and comparatively little used in the neighbourhood of Calcutta, we feel that we who live and labour in this part of India are peculiarly in Sumo 6 or 8 months ago the Cal. Com. sent out a printed Circular, to a large number of Missionaries in N. India, containing a specimen sheet of the system in which they contemplated heretofore printing scripture Proper Names. Among these was the name of our Saviour. But as it was spelled "Yas" a form recently adopted, and as the missionaries thought that this was not in the practical application of it, and not as all likelihood to come into current use, it was not thought advisable to wound the feelings of those who thus introduced the term, and was therefore cancelled with a simple expression of disapprobation. But had the Missionaries been aware of the position of the word in the Bible, they would have generally have given a much more decided reply to the Com. have used the return thus inadvertently given, the basis of their contemplated change.

[illegible][illegible]

as a designation of Ilia who came to "save people from their sins." And it has acquired by uninterrupted usage of 13 centuries, a sacredness little short of that of Yajna in Hebrew, and has become so completely entwined around every fibre of Mahomedan and Christian Literature in India that it seems like doing them a common injury to wrest it from them. And the idea of restoration of the primitive form of the name, loses almost all its force in Hindoostan, where the primitive term never had an existence.

* We omit the Arabic and Hebrew letters, as the value of the numbers can be seen in the Western letters.

4th. The "Yusuf" was the form used by the Christians in Arabia before the time of Mahammed. It is a name which is still in vogue, and which collects that the Christians in Arabia at that time were generally adherents of one or other of the heretical parties that marred the beauty, and debased the character of the church; and that confidence of opinion or practice with them, would neither strengthen, nor weaken, nor alter, nor diminish their strength to, our opinions. Besides, their literature was not important, nor has it any perceptible bearing on that of India. If their literature had been early and extensively spread in India, and had been the basis of a literature, it would have been still found deeply mixed up with the early and existing literature of the country, then would this argument have a vastly more important bearing.

ing them to How Him.

It is to make the H-K, ness of the Reclaimer the "bond of brotherhood throughout the world" has something in it very pretty, very grateful to every Christian heart. But when it is said that "at the expense of the Reclaimer," an established union, without any positive or real gain, we pause before we consent to the sacrifice.

It is a general, controlling objection, which we have to the change of this name, is that the term "Isa" already perverts the actual structure of Mahomedan and Christian literature, and cannot be substituted. The new literature, published after the change, would speak of "Isa" the other would speak of "Kusia" and thousands would fail to perceive the identity. Thus the whole extent of the change is to change the actual structure of the literature, and to force into a state of pronouns obnoxiousness. This, though it might be done with regard to the Christian, through the power of the press, would be a perpetration of a perpetration of character, still the old and venerated Mahomedan works, which are new in M. S. are not so likely to be replaced by new ones in which Isa will be substituted for Kusia as the new ones for Christians. Here the contemplated change will throw a most deep and lingering embarrassment around the conversion of new and old alike, and will be a perpetration of a perpetration between Christians and Mahomedans.

7th. But another and still more embarrassing difficulty is, that the term "Isis" or "Iseus" by which Christians are all called, is an extensively used and everywhere recognized designation of the deity of Manichæism and Christian Hæresy, and as Isis itself. And if the foundation be dug up, the structure raised upon it must also go with it. If the name itself be known, then the epithets by which Christians are known throughout the whole of Asia are also known. And if the epithets be known, a new epithet compounded of Yasna in some of its forms be adopted in its stead. And it will require quite no small effort to teach even ourselves to acquire this new designation, and introduce it into our own conceptions and religious exercises. And how much more difficult to teach Asiatic nations to do the same!

9th. If we should now attempt this change, the impression would go extensively abroad among the Mahomedans and others, that we have just now found out what the name of our Saviour is—that we have been hitherto in error on that subject. And if we have been labouring amongst them for more than 50 years, and have never found out till now what is the true name of Him whom we preached, what security is there that after another half century we will not find out that this also is an error? True this is a difficulty that may be surmountable. But we need to be pretty well assured of an end to be gained worthy of the sacrifice, to nerve us to 913). The form of letters to be adopted may be written in the native characters, read either Yishi, Yidao, Yashin, and Yanda. The latter, according to analogy of language, would be the regular form. But there is nothing in the form of the letters themselves to direct as to which of these forms should be used. Whereas in the current form Isi, there is no danger of mispronunciation. We would not, however, be strenuous about what precise form or order of letters be used, provided the established pronunciation "Isi" be not changed.

10th. The term إمام may or may not have been used "before us for the last five years," as the Commission state. If it has, then from the fact of its being pronounced Imā, not affecting the sound in any perceptible degree, it elicited no attention beyond the single individual who may have advocated its use in some of the periodicals.

11th. That the Baptist Missionaries, the Translation Society, &c. have adopted Yuseia, and circulated large editions in these Provinces. &c.

finally accepted the post of Post Laureate, in consequence of communications from Sir Robert Peel and the Lord Chamberlain.

—The Hurkaru informs us that Mr. G. W. Johnson, formerly Assistant Editor of the Englishman, and lately sole Editor of the Curry in Calcutta. It will comprise, it is said, much information relative to the late administration of Lord Auckland.

—A volume of Reports of cases adjudged by the Sadler Court, from 1834 to 1854, has just been published by Mr. Sturges, Secretary to the Law Commission. We have not seen the work, but the Hurkaru hints, that it is distinguished by an attempt to write native names according to the Romanized system. If this plan has been adopted, the value of the work will have been not a little diminished.

MONDAY, MAY 20.

—A Dilli Gazette Extra of the 16th May, just received, excited a hope that it might announce another triumph of Sir Charles Napier, as the Beluchers were known to have collected in large numbers in the vicinity of Hyderabad; but it contained no other intelligence than that of a rebellion in which the Military authorities at Sulatohoo had been thrown by an ill manner, that the Lahore Government had insisted the Hill tribes to rise and cut off three European Regiments in the Hills. It was also noted that 15,000 men were to assemble immediately and expel us.

—The City Article of the Hurkaru states, that the last Mail brought 13 lakhs of Rupees on account of the merchant from England. It was stated in the Oxford Mail, that Government intended to discontinue the advances on shipments in this country, and to draw the requisite funds from India by Bills given in London on the local authorities to the extent of more than two millions sterling. The Hurkaru says, that there is some expectation that the next Mail will bring orders to pay the Opium Indemnity here, but the amount of compensation had not been settled when the Mail left, and there is apparently a difference of more than a million sterling between the demand of the merchants, and the concession of the Ministry.

—The latest intelligence from Seinde is to the effect of May from Karachi. H. M. 27th had left that place for Hyderabad, but the regiment had been severely visited with sickness since its arrival in Seinde. More than a hundred were in hospital, and they were dying at the rate of two or three in a day. It is said that Shere Mahomed has sent a message to General Dyer to say, that as they had fought two battles in their country, he wished one more battle for their country. The reply was that he should come on, and that as soon as he was near enough to Hyderabad he should have enough of fighting.

TUESDAY, MAY 20.

—The Star states that the Governor General is actually on his return to Calcutta. It is said that his Lordship somewhat suddenly declared his intention of coming down to Allahabad with the whole of his civil and military suite.

—The discussion regarding the Lottery of Newbold and Co. has ceased, by their continued refusal of the name of the individual to whom the largest prize fell. The publication of the number, which came up with the rich prize will not satisfy the public. Suspicion is cherished that the Minor Lotteries are not conducted with that fairness which marked the Government Lotteries, and these suspicions can be removed only by the distinct publication of the names of the winners. The refusal of the names will as once turn public suspicion into certainty.

—The number of letters and covers despatched by the Steamer Cleopatra from Bombay to London, as well as the number received by the Victoria, from Europe, is thus given in the Bombay papers. Memorandum of the number of Covers received by the Steamer Victoria, on the 14th April, 1884.

	Letters.	Newspapers.
Via Falmouth, ...	24,000	14,000
Via Marseilles, ...	8,420	8,100
Foreign Europe, ...	103	400
	20,223	22,120
	20,120
Total No. of Covers, ...	22,433

Ditto by the Steamer Cleopatra, on the 13th May, 1884.

Via Falmouth, ...	20,001	17,200
Via Marseilles, ...	5,901	9,331
Foreign Europe, ...	1,033	540
	27,100	27,141
	27,141

Total No. of Covers, 22,331.

The number of Covers received and sent in one single month was 114,084, equal to One Million three hundred and seventy-six thousand two hundred and eight in the twelvemonth!

WEDNESDAY, MAY 31.

—No farther particulars have been received respecting the rumored rising of the Hill tribes at Sulatohoo, to drive us back into the plains; but there can be little doubt of its being a false alarm. General Sir John MacNeill however has taken every precaution against surprise. That the Hill men are not over pleased with the location of their fixed camping Regiments of Europeans among their rocks and herds, may be easily understood; but that Shere Singh should mix himself up in a conspiracy against the English, and thus endanger his crown, which is rickety enough already, is less credible than the promised visit of the Aerial.

—Lord Ellenborough, according to the common voice of the public press, came down immediately to Calcutta. His Embassy travels by dark to Allahabad, where he takes steam, and moves down to the city of Palanah. Mr. G. Clarke, "unquestionably the ablest man in the North Western Provinces," will be appointed Governor of Agra so long as that office lasts.

—The Star states, that the statue of the Marquis of Wellesley recently brought out in the Victoria, is the gift of the Court of Directors. The money publicly subscribed by the community in India for the statue, never reached its destination; why, our contemporary does not explain.

—We are at full liberty to suspect that there was foul play. The statue remained in the Studio of Chassey unremoved. That eminent Sculptor died about the same time as the eminent Statesman, and the Court of Directors immediately purchased the statue from his executors, and have handsomely presented it to the city of Calcutta.

—The Englishman states, that the Barometer at 6 p.m. yesterday was far below the average of last year, just before the terrific gale. The Master Attendant sent round a Circular to all the ships in the river to prepare for foul weather. A Northwester began up here about 7 p.m. seven, lulled after half past eight, and commenced again at half past nine, a little after midnight.

—The Englishman announces the appearance of Mr. Stoeckeler's Memorials of the War in Afghanistan, from October 1838 to November 1842. We hope to receive our own copy before our next issue, and shall then be enabled to review it.

—We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums for the Friend of India:—

	Cs. Rs. As.
G. F. Brown, Esq. ... to April, 1884, ...	20 0 0
S. Cuddey, Esq. ... to Dec. 1883, ...	20 0 0
Major A. Irvine, ... to May, 1884, ...	20 0 0
J. F. Sandy, Esq. ... to Dec. 1883, ...	20 0 0
Rev. J. Coley, ... to April, 1884, ...	20 0 0
J. French, Esq. ... to Dec. 1883, ...	20 0 0
S. Johnson, Esq. ... ditto, ...	20 0 0
H. Midcock, Esq. ... to Feb. 1884, ...	20 0 0
Capt. J. B. Bonham, ... to June, 1884, ...	20 0 0
W. Wynn, Esq. ... to Dec. 1883, ...	20 0 0
James Barrett and Co., ... to Dec. 1883, ...	20 0 0
Rajah Sutchurn Chomal, ... to Dec. 1883, ...	20 0 0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

BRISTOL-PORT BRANCH ANTI-CULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

Pursuant to Resolution No. 4 of the Society's Proceedings, dated the 11th of April last, the first show of Flowers, Fruits, and Vegetables took place this 10th day of May 1884, at Cleveland House.

The attendance of both European and Native Gentlemen was most numerous, indeed the W. Room was quite crowded and was honoured with the presence of the Ladies of the station.

The Floricultural Department exhibited many rare specimens of the beauties of Flora, and the very healthy appearance of the flowers indicated the superiority of the Birmingham climate even in the month of May.

In the Fruit Department there were very fine Peaches, Leecheres, Alboe Buklars, Phantasies, &c. Some of the Peaches weighed 14 lbs. each. In the Vegetable Department the most conspicuous specimen was a bundle of Asparagus of unusual size from the garden of P. Umney, Esq. Finer was never seen in Calcutta or even England.

Some new Potatoes from Madras seed of very good size, from the garden of G. F. Brown, Esq., excited much attention from the circumstance of the seed having been planted in February as an experiment, and in the Vegetable Department, this proving that two crops of Potatoes can be raised in one year.

A third crop is now expected from seed planted in April, the plant being now heavily in appearance. Root and Celery were next looked at, and both were of full size and in the finest crop. A basket of Cucumbers from the garden of J. G. G. Esq., was remarkable for the size, color, and fresh appearance of the fruit. Some Carrots (grown from English seed) from the garden of Captain Ross, were exceedingly fine, both in color and size. There were several very fine Leeks from the garden of J. P. Porter, Esq.

Several daffodils from the garden of Native Gentlemen contained some very good specimens of regular and true fruit, and from the improvement of the garden and underlying it is supposed the competition at our next show on the 1st of November, will be very great and exciting. The Prices described in the appended List were thus awarded by the Jury.

A sample of Oolong reared from Calcutta seed by Baboo Ghouse Churn Mitter, looked very healthy and had the blossom open.

Since the last report of our Proceedings, 1214 plants of excellent growth (Lakhs) in a beautiful situation, have been purchased and much progress in building and laying out the garden has been made.

The name of Baboo Ghouse Churn Mitter as a donor and the name of the garden as a beneficiary, are the last report of our Proceedings, 1214 plants of excellent growth (Lakhs) in a beautiful situation, have been purchased and much progress in building and laying out the garden has been made.

To J. G. G. Esq., for a valuable collection of Cotton seeds, viz. American, Sea Island, Egyptian, together with samples of the Cotton.

To H. F. Hodge, Esq., Magistrate of Monghyr, for a fine Cape Jack plant.

To Walter Landale, Esq., for some very fine Pumpkins, for making a Chevon de frise for the Garden Bridge.

To G. F. Brown, Esq., for a pair of handsome China Garden Seats.

To A. Johnson, Esq., for a bottle of very superior Arrow Root, the produce of his (the late Mr.) garden.

The increase of Monthly Subscribers since last report is as follows:—

No. of Subscribers formerly advertised, ...	21
Union Goods Churn Mitter, ...	32
Shah Enayat Hossain, ...	32
G. C. H. Esq., Esq. of Sultangunge, ...	31
J. Oman, Esq. of Colong, ...	28
H. Conry, Esq. of Calcutta, ...	28
M. Crommelin, Esq. of Surabhi, ...	27
—Groat, Esq. of Douramunah, ...	27
R. Faltow, Esq. of Moradabad, ...	27
John Fitzpatrick, Revenue Surveyor, ...	21
J. C. Christian, Esq. of Munghy, ...	21
O. C. Gifford, Esq. of Pater Point, ...	21
R. Barlow, Esq. of Pater Point, ...	21
B. Barlow, Esq. of Pater Point, ...	21
Musammat Ramee Raha Chowdhury, ...	21
The Hon'ble F. Drummond, ...	21
J. H. Sack, Esq. of Kuttam, ...	21
O. T. J. Phillips, Esq. of Mangalore, ...	21
Total No. of Subscribers, ...	63
Amount of Donations first advertised, ...	178 0
J. Oman, Esq. of Colong, ...	50 0

secret name of our Saviour from "In" to "Yasin" in the translations of the scriptures hereafter to be printed in the Urdu dialect. We feel solicitous that you should be in possession of all available information when you come to the decision of whether or not you wish to accept it.

We came out before you as the "sons of our Brethren" in Calcutta; but under the impression that our Hiveler in Calcutta; from their Geographical position, and other incidental causes, were not, at the time, in a position to give us fully and fairly the expression of the views and information of those most directly and deeply concerned in this change, as it were desirable to be, previous to making a question of such importance to its final issue.

As the translations of the scriptures effected by idh. That "Yusuf" was the form used by the Christians in Arabia before the time of Mahomed. This argument loses much of its force when we recollect that the Christians in Arabia at that time were generally adherents of one or other of the heretical parties who surrounded the unity, and deluged the world with their various opinions. It is not of opinion or practice with them, would neither prove the correctness of, nor give additional strength to, our opinions. Besides, their literature was not important, nor has it any perceptible bearing on that of India. If their literature had been early and extensively spread in India, and had been crowded out by that of the Mahomedans, his was still standing equally as well up with the early writings of the founders of the country, then would this argument have a vastly more important bearing than it now has.

5th. The desire to make the H-b. name of the Rolosaer the "band of brotherhood" throughout the world has something in it very pretty, very grateful to every Christian heart. But when it can be had only at the expense of breaking up the established usages of centuries, without any positive or real gain, we pause before we consent to the sacrifice.

6th. The grand, controlling objection which we have to the change of this motto is, that the term "Isa" already permeates the whole structure of Mahamudhan and Christian literature, and cannot be eradicated. The new literature, published after the change, would not correspond with the old; and while one would speak of "Isa" the other would speak of "Yusuf" and thousands would fail to perceive the identity. Thus the whole extent of literature, both Mahamudhan and Christian, would have to be forced into a state of premature-ness. This, though it might be done without the Christian, through the power of the Press and the inherent energy of the Christian character, still the old and venerated Mohammedan works, which are chiefly in M. S. are not so likely to be replaced by new ones in which Iai will be changed to "Yüan" merely to accommodate Christians. Here the contemplated change will throw a most deep and lingering embarrassment around the comparison of new and old books, and also around the whole controversy between Chris-times and Mahommedans.

[illegible]

8th. If we should now attempt this change, the impression would go extensively abroad among Mohammedans and others, that we have just now found out what the name of our Saviour is—that we have been hitherto in error on that subject. And if we have been labouring amongst them for more than 50 years, and have never found out till now what is the true name of Him whom we preached, what security is there that after another half century we will not find out that this also is an error? True this is a difficulty that may be surmounted, but we need to be pretty well assured of an eternal reward, gained worthy of the sacrifice, to nerve ourselves for the effort.

05. The form of letters to be adopted may be determined in the native characters, read either Yia, Yin, Yin, Yin, and Yin. The latter, according to a native form of language, would be the regular form. But there is nothing in the form of the letters themselves to direct as to which of these forms should be used. Direct in the current form Yia, there is no danger of mispronunciation. We would not, however, be strenuous about what precise form of letters be used, provided the established pronunciation of Yia be not changed.

10th. The term يسوع may or may not have been "before us for the last five years," as the Council state. If it has, then from the fact of its being so pronounced إني, not affecting the sound in a perceptible degree, it elicited no attention beyond the single individual who may have advocated its use in some of the periodicals.

11th. That the Baptist Missionaries, the Translation Society, &c. have adopted يأسا, and circulated large editions in these Provinces, &c.

One would be pleased to issue out a Circular to that effect, that the Christian and Mahomedan friends are to use the term Babai, and the Hindu ones that of Baboo, in their proceedings; and the Judge and other officers also in their communication with them to adopt the same style.

I am, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
JAMES, May 26, 1848. A. READER.
We do not like to reject this letter; and we have therefore printed it as some of the flowers of eloquence, which the Checkerbones have recently offered to the public.—Ed.

CONSTRUCTION OF NAVIGATION.
To the Editor of the Friend of India.
Sir,—Although I cannot assume the title of a "constant reader" of your paper, I yet see enough of it to be well aware that you are unwearied in your efforts to expose and suggest remedies for grievances affecting the interests of India, and I believe the particular one which is at present uppermost in my mind has already been the occasional subject of your pen. I allude to Inland Navigation in this country, the defects in which, whether from natural or artificial causes, are such as to lead to an enormous annual loss of both property and life, to an extent which would startle any one who should have the industry to collect its statistical details.

The natural causes which at certain seasons of the year render the Navigation of the different rivers dangerous and in some instances impracticable, may possibly be invincible by human skill. (Of this I cannot profess to be a judge, but I should like much to see this inviolability put to the proof, by the first rule engineering talent of India being set in opposition to it.)

I see a regular report in the newspapers from an Engineer officer of the depth of water at various points of the rivers, and I presume efforts are incessantly made under his supervision, to decrease the number of shallows and sand banks, and to remove the obstructions which may have caused them. Of the extent of such efforts I must feel ignorant, the fact being that constant occupation within the Ditch prevents my having full knowledge of what is going on in the rivers; but if I may judge of that extent by the harassing detention sustained by boats in the Bhagurty near Jangpore, Muddah and Cutwa, and the heavy expense incurred in assisting them over shallow portions of that river, I may be allowed to vote those efforts exceedingly inadequate to the purpose.

The artificial causes of a scanty supply of water, I have been recently informed upon the subject, exhibit a more illustration of the truth already touched by Peter and Paul's respective possessions. In a letter which lately appeared in the Harbinger, it was stated that the navigation of the Jumna had been much impeded by a bund being thrown across it for the purpose of procuring a supply of water to the Delhi Canals, and that the same system was hitherto to be adopted in furnishing water from the Ganges to the Canals now in course of construction.

If this be the case, the latter river can scarcely fail to be most seriously injured, if not entirely stopped during the dry season; and the disadvantages of such an event would, I think, far outweigh the benefits which these canals confer on other parts of India. In a time of famine, especially the benefits of easy importation of grain into the Upper Provinces, would be insupportably beyond that of having the canals in running order.

I believe it was once pointed out to Lord Auckland, that the Jumna had been doomed to supply the Canals, but his reply was, "impossible, you must have been misinformed."

In conclusion, let me entreat you to call upon the powers that be, to exert themselves in the improvement of the channel of these "shallow rivers by whose falls" so much property is annually wasted. It is a measure of vital importance to the interests of India, and one of which the Imperial necessity is more and more apparent as each successive dry season returns upon us.*

I am, faithfully yours,
A CALCUTTA MERCHANT,
Who has suffered much by river navigation.
364 May, 1848.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

THE OPPOSITION TO THE GOVERNMENT EDUCATION SCHEME.—The opposition to this infamous measure proceeds in the most galling manner. We ourselves are incessantly labouring about it, and about to be held for the purpose of denouncing the odious project. Petitions against it are already pouring into the House of Commons by hundreds; and the universal cry is, Away with the Education Clauses! The most moderate opponents of the measure have been forced to regard it as perfectly inhuman by attention, and join in the demand for its complete rejection. The Rev. J. H. HIRSH has published a small tract, in which seven main objections to the Bill are very clearly and forcibly put. In a pamphlet entitled "The Bill on the Education of the Poor," Mr. Henry DUNN has effectively deprived certain professed Liberals of their favourite policy; namely, that the alternative is, this measure or none; and has also succeeded in placing Ministers in direct opposition to themselves on the subject of Education. The Rev. W. THOMAS, also, has issued "Twenty Reasons" against the Bill, stated with his usual point and pungency. Other pamphlets are announced as forthcoming. Committees for defence, including opponents of the Bill of all denominations, have been appointed; and we are warranted in asserting our rights in the country, that no means will be left untried of routing the whole Kingdom, in its chambers and remotest corners, against this barbed attempt to annihilate our Civil and Religious Liberties. The universal call for a great public meeting in London will speedily be obeyed. Meanwhile, the Sunday-school Auxiliary Unions are holding meetings in every quarter of the Metropolis. The South London met last night in the Brompton road Chapel, and nearly a thousand persons signed the Petition before leaving the place. To-night, the East London meets at the Eastern Institute in Commercial-road, and the North London at Lewis Chapel, in Moorcroft. The place of meeting of the West London has not yet been determined on. But the Parent Committee have called a meeting of the reform Sunday-school Union for Wednesday next, at Finsbury Chapel; in which Hall being unfortunately pre-occupied for the whole of April and May.—Pat.

THE WITNESSES AND THE EDUCATION SCHEME.—Another serious consideration of the Education Bill has confirmed us yet more strongly in the conviction, which we expressed in our last, of its particularly injurious character and tendency. It would be scarcely possible to derive sentiments calculated to inflame a larger amount of evil on the educational movements of Wesleyans and Dissenters than those which constitute the distinctive features of this measure. Not even Lord Edmonstone's celebrated tirade, of for a more vigorous and extended exercise of every power of opposition which can be consistently and properly employed. The adoption of this measure as it now stands, would unquestionably be the greatest calamity that has ever befallen our country, and would inflict a lamentable wound on Civil and Religious Liberty in general. It is to be hoped, however, that even yet it may be possible to avert either the withdrawal of the bill, or the modification in various important particulars of its educational clause;—but, whatever be the result, it is a clear duty to the Church of Christ and the country at large to leave no prudent and Christian means untried, in order to prevent those classes becoming the law of the land.

A large meeting will be in the United Committee (Private and Education) assembled yesterday for further deliberation on this momentous matter. A considerable number of ministers and lay gentlemen, especially from the dissenting districts, were present. Probably their never was a more completely unanimous expression of opinion on any subject than was heard from all sides in denunciations of this bill; the only dissimilarity seemed to be in the greater or less vehemence with which that denunciation was uttered by the individuals who had most closely studied its true character; or who, from living in the localities on which it particularly bore, were especially to be expected to be incited to produce. Lengthened and deliberate consultations were held as to the best mode of conducting that opposition which all felt to be the present duty, and an adjournment of the meeting till Thursday took place, in order to afford time for such arrangements and preparations as are adapted to the emergency. In this posture of affairs, we refrain from writing as explicitly on the subject as we had proposed, until the steps which the Committee decide on shall be made public. In the meantime, we renew our assurances to our readers, that everything connected with the measure is watched over by the men in whom the Wesleyan body reposes the largest confidence, with intense anxiety, and with the urgent and vital importance of the interests involved.—Wesleyan.

FRANCE'S AGGRESSION ON PROTESTANT MISSIONS.—We have, Heaven knows, many of "Times," "Colonies" enough in all quarters of the Globe; and it would hardly become a nation that owns a province in every sea, and on every continent, to fall a squabbling with France about a petty kitchen-garden in the Pacific. Such is the plan set up by the enemies to Protestant Missions for converting at the surrender of the Polyesian Archipelago to the demoralising influences of French Ecclesiastical and Bonaparte superstition. Whether we have Colonies enough, or more than enough, is, however, not the question, since there is no room for colonization in those islands. A French Colony in a kitchen-garden was an absurdity; and the Times insinuates the French nation by the supposition, that they act as "acquiring new Colonies" in the Pacific, where the French Government has no Colonies. If, fifty years ago, it had passed France to seize upon the whole archipelago, as the theatre of an experiment upon its cannibal population, nothing, perhaps, would have been so likely to diminish the value of the islands has been created by the civilization introduced by British Missionaries; and it is of these fruits of civilization that France now claims to appropriate to herself the lowest of all titles, to dishonour the labourers to whom Tahiti owes her laws, her schools, her written language, her commerce, by prints of another creed and another tongue, with only errand and object are, to destroy the institutions which have so needed to hasten prodigality, and substitute the domination of Rome for the kingdom of Christ.

The Times may think, if it will be listened to, that the Whig would be Gallian alone, when we discover that the French Ministers are unable or unwilling to keep their compact with this country. The Times may talk of treating with contempt the claims upon it the Assembly of St. Omer. The Times may say anything, presuming upon the ignorance of the majority of its readers, and the success of these efforts. Unhappily, however, the French Government has been too long too long; for, when applied to on the demand of a former owner of the same kind, he distinctly disclaimed, on the part of his Government, any intention to possess himself of these islands, and pledged himself that no sanction should be given to the piratical expeditions of the French Admiral. How scrupulous the French are in keeping their compact with this country, it is not worth a discussion. The occupation of Algeria by France, in direct violation of an explicit compact, would itself render it impossible to suppose the slightest confidence in the vague and empty assurances of M. Guizot in the present instance. Our alarms, however, are not anti-Gallican, but anti-Papal. Apart from religious interests, we should not grudge France the five-impole and absolute sovereignty of the whole group of "kitchen-gardens." And so as to "squabbling with France," what we wish is, to prevent it in time, by now inducing the French Government, if possible, to do so, by countenancing a substantial advance from which neither honour nor pecuniary advantage, in a national point of view, can possibly accrue, but which will inevitably lead to serious aggression, if persisted in, at no distant day.

We rejoice to observe that the Secretaries of the London and the Wesleyan Missionary Societies have jointly convened a meeting of the Secretaries of Protestant Missions, to be held at Exeter-hall on the 14th instant, for the purpose of adopting suitable measures, in consequence of the recent aggression of the French on the Island of Tahiti, and for securing the general interests of Protestant Missions in the Islands of the South Pacific.—Pat.

The united deputations from the London Missionary Society, and the Wesleyan Missionary Society, waited upon R. P. Allen, Secy. of the Board of Missions on Saturday at the Foreign-office, on the recent assumption of French sovereignty in the Island of Tahiti, and the general interest for securing Christian missions in the Islands of the South Sea. The deputations consisted of the Rev. Dr. Bunting, the Rev. Dr. Henderson, the Rev. Dr. Allen, the Rev. Dr. Morrison, the Rev. John Hunt, the Rev. S. Hoole, Mr. Thomas Farnham, Mr. Thomas M. Cook, Mr. the Rev. John Becham, and the Rev. Arthur Talmes, Secretaries.—Record.

COMMITTEE OF THE THINKERS FOR PROPAGATING THE GOSPEL.—We think Mr. Kenney's article in the last issue is based on an erroneous conception of the nature, and claims upon the Church, of the Society for Propagating the Gospel. It is nothing more than a voluntary association of persons, who are desirous of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and the Church Missionary Society. The Act of all the Bi-

* We have omitted the last paragraph, which added nothing to the strength of the argument. The paper says his Lordship is desirous to make more than one attempt, and there can be no doubt that the improvement of inland navigation will be among the first objects of his attention.—Ed.

inestimable rights. "It is necessary for my policy," said Mr. Gale, "to hold possession of a point which will permit France, whenever the occasion is, to send her troops to her general interests, to assert her rights; it is necessary for her to be prepared for such a contingency, as also to oppose any attempt at invasion on the part of jealous France against Madagascar."

In the Chamber on Friday, attention was called to the very great mortality which prevailed amongst the troops and French sailors in Madagascar. In general, the settlement in the island of Madagascar. The King's Commissary denied that this mortality was greater than at Bourbon. Mr. Desplantes deplaned any extensive attempts at colonization in Madagascar, as it would prove a second Algeria, if they did not take care. M. Guizot and Admiral Roussin both insisted on the indispensable rights of France on these points in Madagascar.

"I am convinced," says M. Guizot, "that France would commit an act of folly in seeking to renew the colonial establishments in Madagascar. In general, it suits not the policy and genius of France to attempt new and great colonial establishments far from its territory, and thus commence struggles either with the natives of the country or with other Powers. But it is indispensable for France to possess the parts of the globe, which are to be the great centres of commerce and navigation, strong maritime stations, for supplies and sheltering harbours, where France, should not be obliged to be content to foreign ports. Thus we have taken possession of islands in the Pacific, and in Madagascar have created a strong military port, such as we had before on the Isle of France."—Record.

It appears that the King of the French and the Royal Family will not remove to Reims, as has been stated, after their flight, but to St. Cloud, where they are to arrive on the 17th of next month. The apartments are now being got ready for their reception, and the marriage of the Royal Highness the Princess Clémentine with Prince Augustus of Prussia Cologne will be there solemnized.—Ibid.

The Journal du Havre says—"The Government continues to send out ships to the Marquesas. We are at this time waiting at Antwerp for the ship of war, the Edouard Harve, bound to take 800 tons at the rate of 94¢ a ton."—Ibid.

A Belgian journal says—"The comet seen for some days in our horizon was perfectly well observed at Jena, and perfectly predicted. At Munich also M. Grunichsen was able to distinguish the nucleus. He concludes that the tail must be greater than that of 1860, which measured not less than fifty degrees."—Ibid.

UNITED STATES.—The Steam-ship Count Western, Lieutenant Hooker, R. N., arrived at Liverpool on Saturday morning. She sailed from New York on the afternoon of the 16th ult., and though she encountered strong headwinds during the whole voyage, made the passage in fifteen days and twelve hours. She brought only twenty-six passengers.

The papers received by the Count Western sailed from the 1st to the 16th ult.

The House of Representatives having on the 2nd of February adopted a Resolution offered by Mr. Ingersoll, which called on the President to communicate the correspondence which may have passed between the United States Government and that of Great Britain on conflicting interpretations of the treaty concluded at Washington, as it concerns our alleged right to visit American vessels on the high seas, the President sent a Message to the House on the subject of the Resolution, accompanied by a Report made to him by the Secretary of State, in which he stated that Mr. Tyler, in his Message, admits and regrets that there is a misunderstanding between the two Governments in relation to the 8th article of the treaty, respecting the right of visitation; that the United States Government for the right of visitation as set up by the Earl of Aberdeen; and suggests the doubt, as arising from the instructions of England, whether the difference is not rather one of definition than of principle. Mr. Webster's letter, accompanying the Message, reports the substance of a statement made to him as Secretary of State, and which was to the purport of a despatch from the Earl of Aberdeen, in which he stated that the President's Message on the opening of Congress, on the subject of the right of search.

The Senate had rejected two communications of the President. Mr. Wilson was then nominated by the President as Minister to France, and as often reported by the Senate. The vote was two to one, twelve to twenty-four. Mr. Cushing was also twice nominated to the vacant post of Secretary of the Treasury, and twice rejected. They had, however, confirmed the nomination of Mr. Everett, the American Minister at London, as Minister to China. Mr. Spencer, of the War Department, was nominated, and the Treasury, and the nomination was confirmed by the bare majority of one. His successor, as Secretary of War, was Judge Foster.

Mr. Webster was, it was understood, on the point of retiring from the Cabinet. Mr. Cushing, it was said, would succeed him, as Secretary of State, a rumor, provided that Mr. Webster would be appointed Minister at London, in the place of Mr. Everett, who is going to China.—Morning Paper.

UNITED STATES DEBTS.—The following remarks on the responsibility of the General Government of the United States for the payment of the loans issued by the separate States, are taken from a speech delivered by Mr. Webster, at the merchants' Meeting, in New York, on Friday, May 28, at 8 o'clock.

"How does it stand (says Mr. Webster) with respect to the States? Under what patronage, and at whose recommendation, did they contract the large and enormous debt of two hundred millions of dollars? Who induced this? Under what circumstances, at home was it done? It appears from the tables, supposed to be accurately compiled, that the amount of stock issued by the several States, for one period of five years, since 1820, is as follows, viz:—

From 1820 to 1825, somewhat over 12,000,000 dollars.
1825 to 1830	13,000,000
1830 to 1835	40,000,000
1835 to 1840	109,000,000

Of which amount of one hundred and six millions, nearly the whole was issued during 1835, 1836, and part of 1837; that is to say, in the most palmy time of the experiment. I have said that the General Government encouraged the States to contract debts, by the currency placed; but they have done so in this another manner. It has been one of the favorite projects of the Administration, since the removal of the department of the treasury, to increase and the increased funds of the United States in State bonds. I do not say this is an assumption of the State debt; but I do say, that the General Government did encourage the States to do so, and did endeavor to give them all the credit it could give."

He adds, in a subsequent part of the same speech, that so long as the conversion of these State debts was favorable to the Administration, they were the foremost of all men in fostering State credit, and is encouraging the States to enlarge their liabilities." It is thus shown that Lord Aberdeen was mistaken in stating, in his reply to the Memorial of the stockholders, "that the General Government had nothing to do with the issue of the State stocks;" for, to use the words of Mr. Webster, the General Government encouraged the States to issue these bonds, and were the foremost in fostering State credit.—Record.

AMERICAN OFFICIAL SALARIES.—The salary of the President of the United States is $25,000 dollars, and of the members of his Cabinet, $5,000, with the exception of the Attorney General, who is allowed only 4,000 dollars. Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary are each allowed 8,000 dollars a year, except the Minister of Constantinople, who has only 5,000 dollars. A Charge d'Affaires is allowed 4,500 dollars; but of 182 Congress, the salary of the Charge d'Affaires was reduced to 4,000 dollars, and the whole of the others being paid by law. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court is allowed "compensation" to the amount of 5,000 dollars a year; and each of the inferior judges to the amount of 4,500 dollars. The "compensation" of the judges of the district courts is from 1,000 dollars to 3,500 dollars a year. The "compensation" of the President of the Senate and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives is sixteen dollars a day; and each of the Members of those bodies is allowed eight dollars per diem. The pay of the Members of the several Legislatures varies, but in no case exceeds five dollars, to four dollars per diem.—United States A. Mirror.

CROW.—The Gazette of Cawoon announced the death, on the 14th ult., at the age of eighty years, of Count Stanislas Wodzicki, who had filled the post of President of the republic during fifteen years. The Count had formerly acted as Valvode of the Kingdom of Poland, and during the French occupation was appointed Prefect of the department of Cawoon. Count Wodzicki was member of a great number of learned Societies, and the author of some works on botany, which were much esteemed.—Record.

GOVERNMENT NOTIFICATIONS.

ORDERS BY THE HONOURABLE THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

18th May, 1848.
Mr. L. J. H. Grey, appointed under date the 25th ult. as, Magistrate at Meerut, shall maintain all orders of the Magistrate at Meerut, and shall be sworn in as such. The Honourable the Deputy Governor of Bengal is pleased to make the following Appointments:

Mr. R. J. H. Grey, appointed under date the 25th ult. as, Magistrate at Meerut, shall maintain all orders of the Magistrate at Meerut, and shall be sworn in as such. The Honourable the Deputy Governor of Bengal is pleased to make the following Appointments:

Mr. R. J. H. Grey, appointed under date the 25th ult. as, Magistrate at Meerut, shall maintain all orders of the Magistrate at Meerut, and shall be sworn in as such. The Honourable the Deputy Governor of Bengal is pleased to make the following Appointments:

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

Measles United Villa, Member of Madhupura, in Bengal, to be a first grade Member, vide Indian Councils Secretary's Office, 18th May, 1848.

MILITARY.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE HONOURABLE THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

18th May, 1848.
The Right Honourable the Governor General has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. Stuart, B. Esq., to the post of Major in the 1st Regiment of Native Infantry, in the charge of the Adjutant General's Office.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 440. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, JUNE 8th. 1848.

[Price 2 Cts. 6s. monthly, or 18
6s. yearly, if paid in advance.]

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL has resolved at length to return to Calcutta. His determination was formed immediately after the receipt of letters from England by the last mail. This has naturally given birth to the surmise that his return to the metropolis is occasioned by remonstrances from home, and these can have reference only to the outcry which has been raised about his Lordship's continued absence from his Council. Those who have made this a ground of censure appear altogether to have forgotten that Lord Auckland was absent from his Council during the major part of his viceroyalty; that is, for more than three years. Is it because it is deemed more necessary that Lord Ellenborough should be under the restraint of consultation, that those who never objected to his predecessor's absence for nearly forty months from the Council, clamor about his absence for fourteen months? In the multitude of counsellors there is wisdom, and the wise man, and upon this maxim it seems to be argued that the Governor General and his Council should never be separated. If Lord Auckland, it is said, had been in Calcutta under the salutary control of the Members of the Supreme Council, his never would have issued the Simla Proclamation; and we should have had no war beyond the Indus; and one third of the Company's funded debt would have been paid off, and money would have become quite as much a drug in Calcutta as it is in London. Had Lord Ellenborough, it is said, not escaped from his Council, he would never have ordered the armies of Nott and Pollock to retire, or issued the Gate Proclamation, or extended the British rule over the kingdom of Scinde; and so to prevent any future calamities, it seems to be understood that Lord Ellenborough has been requested to return to Calcutta and take his seat at the head of his Council.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.—The last mail brings intelligence of a very strenuous effort which has been made in the House of Commons to extinguish the use of Opium in China, and we are told that the motion would probably have been carried if Sir Robert Peel had not represented the embarrassment which this interference of the House might occasion to the commercial arguments which Sir Henry Pottinger is now negotiating with the Chinese authorities. The motion was withdrawn, but the spirit of earnestness with which it was advocated, leaves no reason to doubt that it will be renewed at an early period.

The subject is beset with practical difficulties, which appear to have been imperfectly appreciated by those who are urged on by the warmth of their moral sensibilities. Our own opinion of the injurious tendencies of the use of the drug have been repeatedly submitted to our readers; and we have seen little reason to modify them. Some individuals, it is true, have endeavored to shew that these evils have been greatly exaggerated, and that like every other stimulant, opium is injurious only when used to excess—forgetting that each act of indulgence is a natural step towards excess, and that the ultimate ruin attending a consumption is to be proportionally attributed to every part of the opium, and the consequence is that the use of the drug is as universal as it is deleterious. Scill, the connection of the British Government with the monopoly of an article which is valued only as an export to a country into which it can be introduced only by a violation of its laws, is so inconsistent with our national dignity, that we would cordially join with Lord Ashley and his supporters in advocating the early and entire extinction of the monopoly, even at the risk of increasing the export. But Lord Ashley seems to entertain a doubt whether the extinction of the monopoly would secure the suppression of the trade, and he therefore goes a step further, and proposes at once to prohibit the cultivation of the poppy throughout India. In extreme cases Government must of course possess a right to impose any such restriction on the agricultural industry of its subjects. All government is but a series of restrictions on individual freedom for the public good; but no restriction can be justified except on a palpable and undeniable necessity; where this plea is wanting, the exercise of authority degenerates into tyranny. No such case of necessity can be made out in the present instance. The cultivation of the poppy is not injurious to the country itself; on the contrary it is a source of prosperity to all those who are engaged in it. To say that the drug thus raised is injurious to the subjects of another state, who cannot use it in moderation, any more than Joseph's brethren could speak properly to him, is no sufficient excuse for prohibiting the growth of it in India, and thus inflicting a sensible injury on its peasantry. Still less consistent would it be to extinguish the growth of the article, the cultivation of which affords support to many thousand industrious families, on the ground that when sent to China it interferes with the consumption of British manufactures. This would be a barefaced sacrifice of the interests of India to those of a few manufacturers at home. It would be an act of signal injustice; yet with the exception of Lord Ashley and a few of his supporters, it is chiefly upon this narrow and indefensible ground that the main opposition to the opium trade in England rests. The brandy of France, when imported into England, is in too many instances taken to excess, and produces the most brutalizing effects. Yet it would be not only absurd but unmanly for the French Government to make this a ground for prohibiting the culture of the vine in its own country. It may also be urged with truth, that while the British Government continues to demand the punctual payment of rent from the cultivators, it is the dictate of justice that they should be at liberty to turn their lands to the best account by the cultivation of whatever article they consider likely to yield the highest return. Nor in considering this subject should we forget the necessity imposed on every Government of acting with consistency; and where would be the consistency of prohibiting the manufacture of opium in India while the manufacture of spirits is permitted and encouraged at home, with a view to the benefit of the public revenue?

Admitting then that the Opium plague is as great and deplorable as it is represented to be, still it is much to be questioned whether the cure now proposed will be effectual, and whether the attempt to apply it, will not create a greater evil than that which it is designed to remove. Lord Ashley proposes in the first place to destroy the Government monopoly of the article, because the advances made by the state are supposed to be the chief stimulant of the cultivation. We will not stop to enquire how far we may be equitable towards the Government or the people of India, to dry up one of those sources of supply which Parliament established at the time when it charged the revenues of this country with the payment of £650,000 a year for twenty years, to indemnify the Proprietors of East India Stock at home for the loss of their China trade. The answer would probably be that moral considerations are of higher obligation than those which refer to pounds, shillings and pence. We are dealing with a question of fact. Would the abolition of the monopoly increase or diminish the supply of opium? We venture to think that it would tend vastly to increase the cultivation. The opium would necessarily be raised on all those fields which have hitherto been devoted to it, and on many more where it is now prohibited. That feeling of prudence which leads Government to limit the cultivation to 20,000, when it might raise 40,000 chests, in order that the market may not be glutted, would disappear amidst the competition of private speculators, and we might discover too late that the monopoly of the state had served as a check upon over cultivation. Neither ought we to leave out of view the probability that the abandonment of the monopoly would lead to the cultivation of the poppy in every part of the country, and to the increased consumption of opium by our own subjects. Such is found to be the result in Assam of the absence of that check on cultivation which the monopoly imposes. Almost every agriculturist has his little patch of poppy, and grows his own of the drug is as universal as it is deleterious. Scill, the connection of the British Government with the monopoly of an article which is valued only as an export to a country into which it can be introduced only by a violation of its laws, is so inconsistent with our national dignity, that we would cordially join with Lord Ashley and his supporters in advocating the early and entire extinction of the monopoly, even at the risk of increasing the export.

But Lord Ashley seems to entertain a doubt whether the extinction of the monopoly would secure the suppression of the trade, and he therefore goes a step further, and proposes at once to prohibit the cultivation of the poppy throughout India. In extreme cases Government must of course possess a right to impose any such restriction on the agricultural industry of its subjects. All government is but a series of restrictions on individual freedom for the public good; but no restriction can be justified except on a palpable and undeniable necessity; where this plea is wanting, the exercise of authority degenerates into tyranny. No such case of necessity can be made out in the present instance. The cultivation of the poppy is not injurious to the country itself; on the contrary it is a source of prosperity to all those who are engaged in it. To say that the drug thus raised is injurious to the subjects of another state, who cannot use it in moderation, any more than Joseph's brethren could speak properly to him, is no sufficient excuse for prohibiting the growth of it in India, and thus inflicting a sensible injury on its peasantry. Still less consistent would it be to extinguish the growth of the article, the cultivation of which affords support to many thousand industrious families, on the ground that when sent to China it interferes with the consumption of British manufactures. This would be a barefaced sacrifice of the interests of India to those of a few manufacturers at home. It would be an act of signal injustice; yet with the exception of Lord Ashley and a few of his supporters, it is chiefly upon this narrow and indefensible ground that the main opposition to the opium trade in England rests. The brandy of France, when imported into England, is in too many instances taken to excess, and produces the most brutalizing effects. Yet it would be not only absurd but unmanly for the French Government to make this a ground for prohibiting the culture of the vine in its own country. It may also be urged with truth, that while the British Government continues to demand the punctual payment of rent from the cultivators, it is the dictate of justice that they should be at liberty to turn their lands to the best account by the cultivation of whatever article they consider likely to yield the highest return. Nor in considering this subject should we forget the necessity imposed on every Government of acting with consistency; and where would be the consistency of prohibiting the manufacture of opium in India while the manufacture of spirits is permitted and encouraged at home, with a view to the benefit of the public revenue?

But the real question with which we have to deal, relates not so much to the expediency or the justice of this prohibition, as to its practicability. Supposing Government to enact a law prohibiting the cultivation of the poppy under severe penalties; can that law be enforced? We think not. This prohibitory law must be carried into execution through the agency of native officials, and they must be invested with the power of interfering with the agricultural population of the country. Reasoning from universal and uncontradicted experience, we at once affirm that this power will inevitably be turned into an engine of oppression to the people, and of illegal profit to the officers. There would moreover be endless collusion, and corruption. The poppy would be clandestinely cultivated; it would be clandestinely conveyed down the river in spite of the largest fleet of Custom-house boats we could establish; and it would be clandestinely exported to China. All the evils of a contraband cultivation, added to those of a contraband trade, would be introduced, in an aggravated form, into our own provinces. It would become the interest of thousands of individuals to defeat the laws; and a spirit of resistance to public authority would be fostered in every district. The demoralization of our own provinces would be complete; while the relief to China would be extremely uncertain. Contraband opium, the growth of our own provinces, would still find its way into that empire; and whatever was wanting in the supplies sent from Calcutta, would be simply made up from the fields of Malwa.

Metaphorically as the prospect may seem, there do not appear any means within the reach of our Government by which the consumption of opium in China can be arrested. The measures hitherto suggested would only serve to spread misery and disorder through our own provinces, without any benefit to China. Every effort of the Chinese Government to cure the evil has also failed. In spite of the most stringent laws, and the most sanguinary execution of them, the consumption has increased from 4000 chests to 40,000. So besotted are the Chinese by the use of the drug that they will part with every thing they possess to obtain it. On the line of Coast extending to the length of 800 miles, where almost every man is favourable to the "free trade" of the smuggler, there is no possibility of establishing an efficient Coast guard. Where every facility for obtaining the drug is thus combined with the strongest desire for it, the public authorities of the country can do nothing. We question whether the aid of our Government, which is so little able to protect its own Coast from the visit of the smuggler, would be altogether effectual; and we are certain that Parliament would never sanction from year to year the expense of a naval establishment kept up for this purpose.

The opium question is the most difficult problem we have to solve in China, and while it continues unsettled, the harmony now established between the two countries will be liable to continual interruption. It is easy to say, let the Chinese enforce their own laws against smuggling. It cannot be allowed. Our Government cannot remain silent while British subjects are strangled for the sin of smuggling, heinous as it may be. The execution of the first victim would moreover be the signal for a bloody contest with the Chinese authorities on the part of the smugglers. Thereafterward they would cease to give quarter; and the acts of violence committed by them in a spirit of revenge, would soon compromise the peaceful relations of the two countries. The Chinese Government has, we fear, no alternative but that of adopting that measure which of all others the smugglers most deprecate, the legalization of the trade, and the admission of the article on the payment of a duty, calculated on fiscal and not prohibitive principles. If the article is thus admitted into the five ports which have been selected for trade, the occupation of the smuggler would be in a great measure superseded.

THE VOWS OF EPISCOPAL CLERGYMEN.—A discussion has just been revived in the papers relative to the conduct of some of the Missionaries of the Propagation Society to the South of Calcutta, who have been charged by the Missionaries of other denominations with having invaded their fields of labour, and endeavoured to proselyte the converts connected with them, to the Church of England. The facts have been so well authenticated, and the success of these efforts is so lamentably apparent in the distress which has been occasioned to the Dissenting congregations in that neighbourhood, that any and further allusion to the subject appeared to be redundant, more especially as the hope of redress was altogether a forlorn one. We had therefore resolved to refrain from taking any share in the discussion, when we were startled by the following sentences which appeared in the Star of Saturday last.

"Meantime it occurs to us—observe we do not enter into the right or wrong of the doctrine, but note it as a fact, that the ordination vows of the ministers of the Church of England, (vows we presume exacted by Bishop Wilson of both Messrs. Jones and Driberg) aggressive against dissent from that Church, are imperative upon them. That it is advisable or right, in Missionary proceedings, may be, indeed seem to us, a point not contemplated by those vows, but until this be decided, an Episcopal minister can, plainly, not be arraigned for acting up to them, but, if at all, for not acting up to them."

This assertion places the matter altogether in a new light. According to this doctrine, the Missionaries of the Propagation Society may spare themselves any further labour of disproving their interference with the Dissenting congregations. Their only duty is to prove that they have carried on a series of aggressions against them—because this alone can show that they have not been unfaithful to their ordination vows. If this interpretation of the vows be correct, every Minister of the Church of England is bound by the most sacred obligation, to engage in a perpetual crusade against Dissent. Every feeling of sympathy with Christians of other denominations; every act of friendly co-operation with them, in the great work of evangelizing the heathen, is a violation of their vows; and every act of aggression becomes an act of merit. If ever the Episcopal clergy lay themselves open to censure it is when they become forgetful of those vows, and suspend their hostility.

Whether these principles are in accordance with the doctrines which our Saviour inculcated by precept and example, we need not stop to enquire. Whether they are the principles of the United Church of England and Ireland it is for our contemporary to prove. We will boldly venture to affirm that he is altogether mistaken in supposing that every minister vows at his ordination to wage a perpetual war of aggression against all those who differ from his own Church. Immediately on seeing his article, we referred to the Prayer Book, and carefully read over the Form and manner of ordaining Deacons and Priests, in order to discover this hostile vow. We found that the Bishop was bound to enjoin on the Priest "to maintain and set forward as much as in him lay quietness, peace and love among all Christians, and especially among those that are or should be committed to his charge;" but we could no where discover any oath or vow, which could be construed into an obligation of perpetual war on Dissent. We must therefore apply to our contemporary for a further explanation on the subject. We think he will discover that he has been altogether misled by the interested assertions of some enemy of the Church of England, who is anxious to vent his spleen on the establishment, and hold it up to public contempt by representing the Bishop as binding every minister by his ordination vows to persecute every man who does not belong to his own Church. Surely if any such oath had been administered by the Bishop of Calcutta to the Rev. Mr. Jones and the Rev. Mr. Driberg, the enquiries which his Lordship subsequently instituted as to the truth or falsehood of the charges of having made aggressions on Dissenters, which had been brought against them, must have been a farce, and something worse. His Lordship may have known all the time—that is, if the Star gives us true light—that the substantiation of these charges, so far from being a matter of censure, would only serve to increase their merits as members of the Church of England. And those Reverend gentlemen when thus questioned by their Ordinary, instead of endeavouring to disprove the allegations, might have pursued a more straight forward course and have informed his Lordship, that they had only been acting in the spirit of those vows which he himself had imposed on them, and that the war they had waged against Dissent, and the success with which their efforts had been crowned, gave them an additional claim on his esteem. We are perfectly convinced that our contemporary is mistaken or misinformed, and that the Minister of the Church of England is not bound by his vows to make war, like a Mahomedan Gaze, upon all who will not conform to his rule of faith and practice.

DACOTIES.—It may be in the recollection of the reader, that several years back Major Sleeman, whose organized system for the suppression of the Thugs had proved so eminently successful, was appointed by Lord Auckland, Commissioner for the suppression of Dacoities in the North-west provinces. He took the field without loss of time against the Buddacks, the hereditary and professional dacoits. Among the individuals arrested was Lukha, then about forty-five years of age. The confessions made by him to Major Sleeman, we now proceed to notice from printed documents with which we have been favoured by Mr. Dampier, the Superintendent of Police. They disclose many facts relative to the state of society, both interesting and important.

"My name," says he, "is Lukha; my father's name was Soduks, a Budduck of the Solankes caste; my age is forty-five. I have always followed the trade of my father, dacoities." He began his profession at the age of twenty-five, at the instigation of Man Sing, who had been engaged in "a hundred enterprises." This man was twice sentenced to transportation and branded in the forehead, but he made his escape, came back, and returned to his old trade. He was transacted a third time, and no more was heard of him. Man Sing, said Lunkha, asked me why I recommended to be a drudge at the plough while I might get so much more by following my brothers-in-law, a notorious leader of dacoits. Lunkha was captivated by this discourse about dacoits, and determined to join them. In the course of the next twenty years he was engaged in no less than forty-seven dacoities, through the whole range of the Western Provinces, from Moradabad to Beerbhoom. In these expeditions the gang, with which he was associated, put to death six hundred, and wounded two hundred and forty persons, and carried off property to the value of two lakhs, seventy-three thousand, nine hundred and sixty-nine Rupees. The wealth which these villains were enabled to accumulate in spite of our Police, is among the most remarkable circumstances developed in the depositions. Thus we learn that Meherban, a Jemadar or leader, who was executed at Gaya, had amassed a lakh of Rupees, which he bequeathed to his favourite wife Monzee, who had seven— who maintained fifty of her husband's Buddack followers from this fund.

The systematic arrangements of these dacoits is the very heart of our dominions, in which it is our boast to have created such security of life and property as the country had not previously enjoyed, is calculated to shake our confidence in our judicial institutions. A similar dacoity or two determine to set out on a plundering expedition, and beat up for recruits. After having assembled a body of twenty, thirty, or forty, under different leaders, their first business is to contribute to a common fund for their subsistence till they can obtain plunder. Each leader contributes according to his means. They then proceed to concert the enterprise by religious rites, and this appears to be easily accomplished, for few of these expeditions are recorded in which they were not attended by one or more brahmins. The Buddacks appear in fact to be among the most religious of men, and to enter upon no undertaking till they have some assurance that the Gods will be propitious to them. Thus we find Meherban, before the gang started, lifting up his joined hands in supplication, and saying, "If it be thy will, O God, and thine Kales, to prosper our undertaking for the sake of the blind and the lame, the widow and the orphan, that depend upon our exorcises, vouchsafe, we pray the call of the female jackal on the right." All the rest lifted up their joined hands to heaven and repeated the prayer after him. On this occasion, the female jackall, "inspired of the Deity to call in that direction, answered to our prayers," called three times on the thief. The party then proceeded to Benares and thence to the offerings at the holy places; and while some were engaged in these sacred duties, four of their gang were sent to look after booty; there being, as the deponent said, two mints at work, one in the cantonments, the other in the city, and we had our eyes on both. It seems, as the deponent's superstitious devotion was an invariable characteristic of all men in all countries who live by public plunder. The robbers of Italy, though not more constant at the shrine of the Virgin, than are the Buddacks in Hindoostan at the image of Kales. On every emergency they look up to Heaven for assistance, and every instance of delinquency is devoutly ascribed to divine interposition. Thus we find that on one occasion, after having committed a robbery, and undid on the banks of the Ganges, they broke the only pole in the boat, in their anxiety to hasten across, and lay helpless in the water. At last, says the leader, a lucky thought struck me. Dipping both hands into the money and ornaments they had just purloined, he gathered as much as they would hold, and lifting them up to heaven, said, "O Mother Ganges, O Bhugwan, preserver of the universe, rescue us from this calamity." Saying this, he flung the treasure into the holy stream as an offering. The Deities, says he, no doubt heard my prayer and were pleased with my offering, for the boat began to approach the shore, and we landed at dawn.

Their next business is to take the omens, and to administer an oath of fidelity to each other. The auspices are taken, sometimes by consulting a learned brahmin, sometimes by sacrificing a goat, when all the party dip their fingers into its blood, and thus take the oath of mutual fidelity. Sometimes however the oath is taken while they stand up to the middle in the stream. These omens are intended not so much to ensure mutual support in time of need, as to prevent the attraction of any part of the booty by particular dacoits. On one occasion, two of the party having secreted 500 Rs. for themselves, demanded their share of the general plunder, and took an oath on the Ganges that they had not retained a Rupee. "But one of them was severely punished for his false oath, for mother Ganges covered him with leprosy." They seldom depart on any particular enterprise till the omens are favourable; the howling of a female jackal on the left being the most auspicious token they can obtain. On one occasion they entered upon an expedition without taking the auspices, and were unsuccessful. The treasure had been dispatched the previous day, and they had passed it on the road without recognising it. In the deposition which relates to this dacoity, we have an exposition of their philosophical notions of destiny: "If we taken the auspices, we should have known from them that we were to get little, but should have got neither more nor less. The getting or not getting booty depends on our destiny, and not upon omens. And destiny depends upon Bhugwan, the great disposer of all things. What we get is given by him. The spirits of our ancestors we worship, to keep them in good humour, as minor Gods—they can of themselves give nothing—they may be able to point out good or evil to us, and guide us to the one, and save us from the other."

There is not only a feeling of religion among these thieves; there is likewise honesty. Before they start, the share which each one is to receive, is accurately settled. That share is regulated by the number of men each chief takes with him. "The women and children, the lame and the blind, must all share; the rates allotted to them are determined in the general assembly before we start, to secure the rights of the dependents of those who may be killed in the enterprise or die." The widow and children of those who fall either receive a large portion of the booty at once, or a regular share of those of their own party. When alluding to a female who was suffered to depart with all her ornaments on her, the deponent observes, "We do not touch anything that a female has on her person, or offer any indignity or insult to a female. They who do so are considered to disgrace our order."

After these preliminary arrangements have been made, they set out on their expedition, generally in the disguise of carriers of Ganges water, sometimes as bird catchers, at other times as pilgrims. The better to baffle public suspicion, they occasionally travel in company with their women and children, who are left in some wood at a distance from the scene of their depredations. They take with them no other weapons than their spear and axe, purchasing handles for them in some neighbouring village, where they also construct a bamboo ladder. The expedition is arranged with military precision after dusk. After having reconnoitred the spot, and noted the facilities for ingress and egress, one party is left at the encampment, a second division is formed into a cowering party, and takes its post at a position most favourable for encountering the actual robbers, who light their torches, plant their scaling ladders on the wall, and enter the premises, where in the majority of instances they appear to have had a stout resistance to encounter. Sometimes the whole town is raised, and the conflict becomes serious, but is to be a part of their tactics invariably to carry off their wounded. They appear in no instance to have been pursued beyond the precincts of the town in which they have committed robbery. They regain their encampment with speed, divide the spoil, and either return home, or engage in a second expedition, if their scouts bring them favourable intelligence, and the omens are auspicious.

These depredations have been carried on through the whole extent of the Western Provinces, but chiefly in the districts which surround the Oude territory, in which they are able to obtain shelter. Their professional avocations appear to be well known in the villages in which they reside, and they are committed with the full cognisance of the Zemindars, who are entitled to and receive a fourth of the plunder as their accustomed right. The successful operations of Major Seeman's establishment for the apprehension of Thuggee suggested to Lord Auckland the advantage of committing the suppression of dacoities to his charge, and he addressed himself to the duty with his accustomed energy. He was not long in ascertaining, through means of his approvers, the names and residence of the leaders in these daring outrages. He commenced a hot pursuit of them. The deponent, whose statements we have embodied in this article, stated, that on hearing that a great man had come to Moradabad, who was determined to seize all the Buddacks, they dispersed in different disguises to the quarters they considered most safe. Their occupation was gone; and he had determined to fly to the Oude Terai, when he was seized by two of Major Seeman's Nujetas. He denied that he was a Buddack, but he was notwithstanding taken to Moradabad, where he was confronted with some of his old friends; and, finding further evasion useless, confessed the various dacoities which he had been engaged. Search was made in the various records of the various Courts; and the statements thus obtained regarding the dacoities which had been committed, tallied so exactly with the confessions of the man, as to leave no doubt of their correctness.

Capt. Marsh, one of Major Seeman's Assistants, has been equally successful in seizing some of the leaders of the professional dacoits in Bengal, and their depositions are so clearly corroborated by the records of the Courts, as to remove all doubt of their authenticity.

These men are called Kachaks. Of the three dependants, whose statements we have received, two were born in Bootan, but the some of their depredations has lain in our own territories. One of them has given a circumstantial description of the robbery committed two or three years ago at Basmah on the premises of the Rev. Mr. Bayly. Muzumdar Sindar, who accompanied the gang, showed him the English watch he had brought away. He had just started on another expedition with eighteen men when he was seized by the Zemindar and made over to the Thaggee Officers.

The other dependant, Bahadur, a native of Angulpoore, seems to have carried on his professional career through Bengal. He confesses to having been engaged in dacoities in Dinagpore, at Chagla, at Deon, and at Moorshedabad. The robbery committed at Salka opposite Calcutta about five years ago on some salt merchants, is traced up to him. Strange to say, he affirms, that he and his companions started from an Indigo factory managed by an individual with a European name, and that they gave him 200 Rs. of the booty. He says, he remained two years at the factory, during which three robberies were committed with the full cognisance of the European. Should the gentleman alluded to be still in India, it will of course be indispensable for him to come forward, and clear his character from the imputations cast on it by this Kachak.

THE INCOME TAX.—The last Mail brought intelligence that the receipts under the income tax for the first quarter of 1849 had amounted to One million, eight hundred thousand Pounds Sterling, which is at the rate of Seven millions and a half starting a year, nearly double the amount originally calculated upon. It has always appeared to us that an income tax fairly levied, was the most equitable and least burdensome of all taxes, however galling its operation might prove in individual cases. There can be little doubt that the sum which this tax is likely to bring into the Treasury, could have been raised by no other means at the present juncture, while at the same time its pressure is likely to be but partially felt by the community. The inequitable machinery of the tax is that which renders it most objectionable in the eyes of Englishmen; but its tendency is not only to induce habits of economy, but to assist them by reducing the expenses of living. It is also the friend of all schemes of improvement, more especially in the mode in which it has in this instance been applied; for while it exempts from contribution all those whose means are under 150*£* a year, it contains the wealthy to contribute to the state, in exact proportion to their resources. We trust that all inequalities will be gradually removed, and with them all ground of reasonable complaint, and that the tax itself will never be abandoned. Indeed, the equity and the success of this mode of assessment will probably be found to have wrought as decided a change in public sentiment, as to induce many even of those who were originally opposed to it, to give their suffrage for its continuance, when the period for which it was voted has expired.

This tax places the Ministry in a very advantageous position as it respects domestic taxation. It gives them no large a surplus income as to enable them freely to sweep away a whole litter of petty venial imposts, and to promote national industry by removing heavy burdens from the staple articles of consumption. It enables them to deal with the general question of taxation upon broad and sound principles. In reference to foreign governments, who had been led to fancy that England was rendered powerless by fiscal disabilities, and might be insulted with impunity, the tax cannot have failed to produce a very powerful and salutary impression. The imposition of a war tax in time of peace at once demonstrated the strength of the Ministry, and the complete command they had obtained over the resources of the country. The result of the tax has shown other states, that notwithstanding the pressure of a debt, the existence of which would have been deemed utterly incredible in the greatest empire the world has ever seen, notwithstanding the competition of the European world with our manufactures and commerce, the resources of England are quite as elastic as ever; and that in addition to all the other assessments to which she is subject, she can raise a new income equal to the whole annual revenue of Prussia, all without its being felt. Let there arise a necessity for more taxation to support the national honour and interests, and this tax may be trebled, and a revenue larger than the whole income of Russia raised, without at all impairing the springs of national prosperity. Within the last five years England has been engaged in expensive wars in Canada, in Syria, in Central Asia, and in China,—in countries scarcely known to romance in the days of Queen Elizabeth. In maintaining her interests on those widely separated theatres of action, her public finances have been thrown into disorder, and a debt of seven millions sterling accumulated. We are not going to censure the Whigs for this financial embarrassment. The war into which they were plunged, grew out of the imperious necessity of circumstances, and it is to their credit that these extensive operations by sea and land were carried on with so small an increase of debt. But debts were contracted, which filled the public mind with dependency. A single tax has since been levied, the least felt tax of such magnitude which could have been imposed, and the whole amount of the debt contracted in these operations, is paid into the Exchequer in a single twelve month.

The operation of the Income tax has disclosed the real state and condition of England with a degree of accuracy which could have been obtained by no other process; and the result is in the highest degree animating. It is now apparent that while our national debt has been enormous, for the last twenty-eight years, the incomes of individuals, which constitute our national resources, has more than doubled. It is seen that the debt owing by the commonwealth, expounded as it is, is less than the amount of three years' income of its members. It is established by the collection of this tax that the condition of the country is not desperate, as some have been led to suppose, and that there is still a firmness in our national resources, capable of meeting any crisis which the progress of circumstances may create. Had the income tax produced no other good than to disclose the actual state of the country, and thus to diffuse a general spirit of confidence through the community it would have accomplished an object of the first importance. Never we believe have our finances been exhibited in a more flourishing state than at the present time. The drain upon the Treasury from foreign wars has ceased; the home establishment have been reduced; a surplus income has been secured with comparatively little inconvenience, and the Ministry may now remove these burdens which have bent down the springs of national industry, and restore their elasticity. With an exchequer replenished from sources which are permanent, they may attend to the wants of the lower orders, with a generous courage, and again lighten up the countenances of the peasant and the artisan with a smile.

STOQUELIER'S MEMOIRS OF AFFGHANISTAN.—We have much pleasure in bringing to the notice of our readers, this valuable Compilation of the State Papers and Military Despatches relative to the War in Afghanistan. They extend from its commencement at the end of 1838, to its close in 1842; and include almost every document of value connected with the transactions of the war, with the exception of those which have subsequently appeared in the Blue Book, of which Mr. Stoqueler will probably avail himself should his work be reprinted in England. These documents are connected by a thread of narrative, which enables the reader to comprehend the events to which they relate. Had the writer been compiling a History of the War, he would of course have given more of a historical character to these narratives; but his object appears to have been simply to assist the recollections of the reader by recalling to his mind the sequence of events to which the papers refer. In this he has fully succeeded. The present volume is intended partly for reference,—and in this respect will be found of great value,—and partly for the benefit of those who have watched the progress of the war, and are already acquainted with all its most prominent circumstances. Though not a History of the Afghan war, yet it brings together and preserves from destruction, the most important materials for the construction of such a History. We are sorry to see that the support it has received is limited to about two hundred and forty subscribers; and we would hope that a sufficient number of copies may yet be disposed of, not only to cover the mechanical expense of printing, but to remunerate the mental labour of compiling it.

REVIEW OF LIEUT. EYRE'S NARRATIVE.

(continued from page 336.) The first day of the insurrection, when it might have been crushed with perfect ease, was allowed to pass without any effort whatever, and thus commenced a series of military blunders unparalleled in our annals in the east. From that day the army may be said to have been doomed to destruction by the indecision of its own military chiefs, not by the interference—as it is the fashion of the times to assert,—of the civil authorities. Had Sir William Macdonald been at the head of the Cantonment, there is every reason to believe that the catastrophe would have been averted. Napoleon, on one occasion, seeing the inactivity of the enemy opposed to him, exclaimed, the Austrians know not the value of moments, and the same remark may be aptly applied to the conduct of the General on whom the safety of the troops depended at this crisis. Of all emergencies, it is in a popular insurrection that moments are of most value, but on this occasion, hours and days were thrown away, when every moment was worth its weight in gold.

We have already stated, that on the first day of the insurrection, General Shelton was sent up into the Bala Hissar for the purpose of watching the progress of events, instead of endeavoring to control them, by clearing the city of the handful of insurgents who occupied it. The second day pass-of away in confusion, and that inactivity swelled the number of the enemy every hour. If any thing could have served to rouse the Commander from his torpidity, it would have been the triumphant return of Major Griffith, with the 87th, who had run the grueliest of the Khord Cabul, and fought their way gallantly through the ranks of an active enemy, without the loss of any part of their baggage, save a few tents which were abandoned for want of carriage. After his return, an attempt was made to effect a junction at the Lahore gate of the city with some troops from the Bala Hissar; but Major Swayne, who commanded the detachment, met with such opposition that he fell back upon cantonments, and this unfortunate commencement added fresh fuel to the flame of insurrection. The hope of quelling it even at this early period, waned faster and faster, and an order was despatched to General Sale to return to Cabul, and to General Nott to dispatch reinforcements from Candahar; and thus passed the second day, the 24 November.

By an act of unaccountable indelicacy, the Commissariat stores had been left in a separate fort at some distance from the cantonments, with Mahomed Sherif's fort and the King's garden lying between. By an act of still greater indelicacy, this fort, which had been entrusted to a young officer and a hundred men, was not reinforced during the 2d or 3d of November, nor was any effort made to bring the provisions and ammunition into the cantonments. On the 4th, the enemy took possession of Mahomed Sherif's fort, which lay within a hundred yards of the cantonment,—and of the royal garden, and laid siege to the Commissariat fort. Lieut. Warren who commanded it, earnestly represented the danger of his position. The General immediately determined to abandon the fort with all its stores, and sent Ensign Gordon to bring off the little garrison. The party was driven back and the Ensign killed. A second party consisting of two Companies of the 44th, was sent out for the same object. A destructive fire was opened on them from Mahomed Sherif's fort and the Garden; Captains Swayne and Robinson were killed, two officers wounded, and the party retired to cantonments. Capt. Boyd, the Commissariat officer, hearing of the General's intention to abandon the fort, represented that there were only three days' provisions in the cantonments; that if the supplies in the Fort were lost, the troops must be exposed to starvation; and the enemy inspired to an irrepressible degree. The General, on this, sent orders to Lieut. Warren to hold out the fort to the last extremity. He sent back word that the enemy was pressing him so closely that he could not hold out much longer, and that his men were deserting him. At nine that evening an assembly of officers was held at the General's, when the Ensign came in and stated his conviction, that unless Mahomed Sherif's fort was taken that very night, we should lose the Commissariat fort and all the provisions and ammunition. The General alluded to the disasters of the morning, and approved every suggestion to expose the troops to a second risk. Hours were lost in deliberation which ought to have been devoted to action. At length at five in the morning of the 5th Nov. orders were given for a detachment to advance, but it was dawn before they got under arms; and just as they were on the point of marching, it was reported that Lieut. Warren had been obliged to abandon the fort and had brought off his men through a hole in the wall. This was, says Lieut. Byre, the first fatal blow to our supremacy in Cabul. It is impossible to read the record of this insurrection and its fatal result, without feelings of burning indignation. As soon as the fort was evacuated the enemy rushed in and plundered it. A cry was raised in the Bala Hissar in the morning that the Commissariat Fort was lost. The officers and men hurried to the top of that fortress, when with the naked eye "the melancholy and heart rending sight was visible. Grain, wine, homesteadly sealed provisions, and stores of every kind, were thrown over the wall, and seized and carried off by the enemy below. The King was dreadfully agitated, and turning to the Vizier said, "the English are mad," and never did the old man utter a truer sentence. In consequence of the loss of the Commissariat stores, the party which had been prepared to go against Mahomed Sherif's fort was halted till midday. Lieut. Byre was appointed to work the Howe Artillery guns, under cover of which Major Swayne with the storming party, was to enter the gate. The guns were brought into play and continued to fire for twenty minutes, but Major Swayne, instead of rushing forward, remained stationary, under cover of a wall by the road side. The General, who was watching the operations, seeing the fire from the guns slackened for want of ammunition, recalled the party; and thus left the enemy to triumph in our disgrace. Our troops became disheartened, while the enemy gained confidence as rapidly as we lost it; and as Lieut. McNeill justly observes in his narrative, they themselves have since said, that the events of this day did more harm to our cause than all the others put together. The minds of the wavering were decided against us; the Kafilbashas, seeing our weakness and inefficiency, joined our opponents, while "the report of the imminence of the plunder taken from the Feringees spread like wildfire through the country, and the ploughman fled his plough, the shepherd his flocks and all ranks hurried to the cantonment, to share in the booty and spoil of the English dogs." From this day forward the insurrection may be considered as having become general.

(To be continued.)

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1.

— The Singapore Free Press, of the 18th of April, gives a long and painfully interesting account of the imprisonment of five Roman Catholic French Missionaries by the authorities of Cochin China who subjected them to the grossest indignities, and to severe torture, to induce them to abjure the religion of Jesus. They were at length rescued from the hands of their savage persecutors by the Commander of the French ship of war, L'Hercule, who threatened, if they were not released, to sail up to the capital and bombard it. We gather from this account that the present occupant of the throne is as bitterly opposed to the spread of Christianity as his predecessor was, who persecuted the Christians, and broke up their establishments, and obliged the Vice Apostolic, the late amiable Bishop Taberd, to fly for his life.

— Letters and papers from Moulmein to the 17th of May have been received. Major Broadfoot had begun his Government with a demonstration of rigor, which in the opinion of some was highly necessary, and according to others, altogether unwarlike. We are anxious to avoid mixing ourselves up with the discordant politics of Moulmein, having the highest respect for the abilities and energy of the new Commissioner, and scarcely less esteem for friends whom his measures may affect. Fetters last night always to be the motto of every functionary, whether supreme or subordinate. The pretentious connection of the Moulmein Chronicle with the Government of the place has been firmly dissolved on the ground that the language in which our contemporary sometimes indulged regarding Tharwaddy, being translated to that illustrious prince, served to alienate his mind from the Government with which it was supposed to originate.

— The appointment of Mr. G. R. Clerk, as Lieutenant Governor of the North West Provinces, is so confidently stated in all the papers, that there can no longer be any room to doubt it. A more appropriate appointment could not have been made. Mr. G. R. Clerk is, by universal suffrage, the ablest public functionary in the North West, and the interests of those provinces could not have been placed in better hands. The appointments which Lord Ellenborough has made are the glory of his administration; not merely because they have been made upon the purest principles, and because all private interest has been sacrificed to public considerations, but because the selections themselves have been so happy, and have reflected so much credit on his Lordship's discernment. Within twelve months from the present time two situations in Council will become vacant, by the retirement of Mr. Bird and Sir W. Cassam. It was at one time supposed that Sir Henry Pottinger would have succeeded Sir William, but he occupies too important a post in China to quit it. The claim of no individual stands higher for one of these vacancies than that of Mr. Clerk, and his elevation to the Lieutenant Governorship may also be considered as the precursor of his entering Council.

FRIDAY, JUNE 2.

— The Delhi Gazette reports the receipt of a return which gives the distribution of the Civilians in the Western Provinces, and it stands thus:

Secretary to Government,	1
Judges and Register of the Sudder,	4
Members and Secretary of the Sudder Board,	3
Special Commissioners for Resumption of Revenue,	2
Accountant of the Agrs Government,	1
Civil Auditor,	1
Commissioners and Sub-Commissioners of Revenue and Circuit,	8
Civil Judges,	20
Magistrates and Collectors,	31
Joint Magistrates and Deputy Collectors,	25
Assistant to Magistrates and Collectors,	4
Collectors of Customs,	130

Thus it would appear that two-thirds of the whole body of unmovable servants are employed in collecting the revenue and keeping the peace; and that the important department of Civil Justice is superintended by twenty individuals, being less than six of the whole number, and that not a single Civilian is training up for this important division of labour, excepting the Register of the Sudder Courts.

The Workers of this morning allude to the paragraph which appeared in the Panasy Gazette of the 24th May, which announced that a new Steamer of 500 tons and 200 horse power was actually on her way from England to the Straits to be employed in the conveyance of packets and passengers to and from those settlements. Messrs. Mackay and Co. some time since formed a joint Stock Company for the construction of such a vessel, and a recent mail informed us that she was on the stocks; but it must be twelve if not eighteen months before she will arrive, and by that time the new vessel will have secured all the patronage of the Straits.

The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette says, that the total number of men who have registered themselves as Emigrants to the Mauritius is 830. Yet in the same paper we are informed that the Mentor had already sailed with 294, and that the Argente Jume was to sail on that day the 23d, and to take no fewer than 910 emigrants. This must be a misprint. But it is evident that the number of emigrants from Bombay is not inconsiderable. Altogether we should think that 6000 must have gone away from the three ports. Yet the planters are crying out about the harvest of the season. Before Godwin was executed to them, it was the want of labour which affected the property of the Colony; now there are labourers in abundance sent; yet the depression of trade has not ceased.

SATURDAY, JUNE 5.

— The Tenasserim Steamer has at length arrived. Many fears were entertained for her safety owing to a very foolish report spread by the Bombay papers that she parted from the Chimayur in a gale of wind and had not reached Aden when that vessel left it.

— By the Tenasserim information has been received of the safe arrival of the Hindostan Steamer at Aden on the 6th of May, having left Calcutta at midday on the 20th of April. The only misfortune on board was that their store of ice was exhausted just as they left that port. We who have now been deprived of that necessary of life, for such it may be called, can fully sympathize with our brethren in adversity, though the proposition soon reaching the "Hills and Valleys of merry old England," may well have compensated for this misfortune.

— The Bombay papers state, that the Scindian steamer had returned to that port from Kerales where she landed part of the Highlanders. The weather, which at this season of the year is expected to be very boisterous, was exceedingly favourable to their landing. The sea was smooth, and so inconceivable was experienced.

— The Madras Quarterly of the 29th of last month informs us that that day was the limit for paying up the Capital of the Chartered Bank, and that not the least doubt was entertained, that the whole sum of thirty lakhs of Rupees would be paid before the period expired.

— The Doab Canal, one of the greatest and most important public works projected since we acquired the sceptre of India, is said by the Delhi Gazette, to be nearly at a stand for want of funds. The work was commenced when Government was obliged to resort to a public loan; but we were subsequently informed that a sum of Two lakhs had been appropriated to it. Whether this sum is exhausted, or whether the payment of it has been withheld, we are not told; but from whatever cause the suspension arises, it is greatly to be deplored. The vacuum created by the Afghan war in our finances is rapidly filling up. And with a generous confidence in the future resources of India, his Lordship might order 50,000 £ to be devoted to it with perfect safety.

— The port of Madras has been visited by a very heavy gale. It appears to have commenced on the 29th of May, when all the vessels in the roads shipped their cables and stood out to sea. They were all more or less damaged; but the Union brig has been totally lost with four of her crew. By dint of great exertion from pumping and throwing cargo overboard, she was kept afloat until the 31st, when, unfortunately while in a sinking state, the Union went in sight and made towards her, just in time to save the Commander and crew from a watery grave.

— An astrologer of great reputation at the Court of the Mah. Rajah Shere Singh has, we are told, recently arrived in Calcutta from Lahore. He had several opportunities of seeing Lord William Bentinck, Sir Alex. Burnes, Sir W. Massingbergh, Sir C. Wade, Mr. Clerk, and others. His extensive knowledge of astrology has induced many learned pundits and many merchants to visit him in our metropolis. On Saturday last, he had an interview with the Hon. Mr. Bird, and was rewarded with every mark of courtesy.

— We have copied from the Delhi Gazette a very interesting statistical report of the city drawn up by the Cutwal, which does great credit to his industry. The population which was estimated to be 300,000, is brought down by actual reckoning to 150,000, of whom 95,000 are Hindoes, and 54,187 Mahomedans. The number of Hindu Schools is 91; of Persian 29.

MONDAY, JUNE 6.

— The Star of yesterday mentions a fact, of which we have been some days in possession, that Mr. George Thompson has accepted the post of envoy from the Emperor of Delhi to Queen Victoria, before whom he is to lay a statement of the grievances under which his Majesty labours. The states, the monthly allowance as One Thousand Rupees; and the travelling expenses from Calcutta to Delhi, and from Delhi to Calcutta, three Thousand Rupees. We have heard them fixed at Twelve Thousand. We hope Mr. Thompson will take the precaution of having a better guarantee for the remuneration than his Majesty's word. Raja Rammohun Roy was thus employed by the descendant of Timur under a solemn engagement for the payment of a specific sum. His son was long a sailor at the Imperial Durbar for the same due to the Raja, but he died in vain, and the money, so far as we can learn, has never been paid to this day.

— The papers of this morning give full particulars of the voyage of the Tenasserim, and of the reason, of her protracted voyage. It arose from defects in her boilers which, though of copper, and though placed in her only eighteen months ago, are very faulty. This is very surprising. Good copper boilers ought to last five years without repairs. The copper boilers of the Diene steamer, when condemned some time ago, were found perfect, though they had been in use twenty years. The Ensign has taken up the subject discussed by one of our correspondents last week, relative to the navigation of the rivers; and reveals to us that the Government receive two lakhs of Rupees for keeping open the navigation of the river, and expend one fourth of that sum on the undertaking. Yet the rivers are closed nearly half the year; and we believe our contemporary is perfectly right in saying, that if no efforts were made by Government the navigation would be equally open. At any rate, the toll ought to be reduced to the level of the expenditure.

— The Delhi Gazette of the 27th states that the Ameer Shere Mahomed had taken up a position four miles to the north of Hyderabad with 10,000 men, and that Sir C. Napier intended to do battle with him as soon as the European reinforcements arrived.

— The Harkara publishes letters from Ferozepore, which state that Captain Thomas, the Political Agent at Bhawalpore had succeeded in lowering the duties levied on commerce both by land and water. Where ten Rupees were formerly taken on each camel and twenty Rupees on each bullock, the sum now taken is, in the instance Uo Rupees, in the other, Two Rupees.

TUESDAY, JUNE 6.

— The last number of the Christian Intelligencer states, that two girls removed from a Protestant School to the Loretto House, have been rescued from thence because an attempt was made to procure them. These facts were stated in a letter to us a week or two ago by a correspondent, who signed himself a Protestant, but we did not feel ourselves at liberty to publish them, partly because the letter was not authenticated, partly because we thought it indelicate to implicate the parents of the children without their consent in any discussion which the publication of the facts might involve.

— The Englistman has published with its issue of this morning a lithographed representation of the Company's Medalion of Sir Isaac Brunel, supported by one of the Tunnel excavators, the figure of Brunel himself as he appeared during his progress through the Tunnel, and the ceremony of opening the Tunnel, which has immortalized his name. The head is a noble Roman head and bears a strong resemblance to some of the busts which are in the marble hall at Government House.

— The last intelligence from Scinde is contained in the Gentleman's Gazette, just received from Bombay. The large army of 10,000 men which Shere Mahomed was said to have assembled with in two or three marches of Hyderabad, and with which he was to do battle a third time with Sir Charles Napier, for the cause of religion, has dwindled down to 3000 men, and they are said to be in the vicinity of Sukkar, and to be pursued by all Moind, a chief favourable to our interests. The Scindian and Beloches chiefs are said to be daily sending in proposals for terms, and are anxious to live with us on terms of peace.

— Capt. Hilce, the Master Attendant at Madras, has just issued a very valuable paper, containing instructions to Captains of ships, going up the English channel. It explains fully the cause of the melancholy loss of the Reliance and the Coyager, and gives such an ample description of the French coast, of the dangers to be avoided, and the lights by which the dangers are indicated, as cannot fail to prove highly useful to all those who have occasion to navigate the Channel.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7.

— The Harkara informs us that the Rajah Ramesh Roy, who has got a young Durwan Subah at Andoul, is getting up an address of thanks to Lord Ellenborough for his consideration to the Hindoes in the matter of the Sonmuth Gate. We believe, this is the same Rajah who was brought before the Supreme Court for maltreating an Editor. He had much better let the matter alone. Neither the subject nor the individual can be peculiarly gratifying to his Lordship.

— The Bombay Times states, that Capt. Harle, who recently returned from an embassy to Astrakhan, where he resided for nearly two years, was instrumental in liberating more than seven thousand slaves. He is now on his way to England with a large collection of rare curiosities from that country.

— The Agre Chitab states, that Lord Ellenborough would willingly have put off the party he had got up at Agre, for the Queen's birth day; but that it would have been an acknowledgement of his feeling sore. Every one, says the Journal, knew that his Lordship had received a notification in his Government, and they felt uneasy at the party; but he exerted himself, and as if by magic dispelled this feeling and raised the spirits of his guests, and every thing went off with great eclat.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums for the Friend of India:—

	Cash.	Rs.	As.
Baboo Hemnath Roy	to	Sept. 1845	10
T. C. Hutchinson, Esq.	to	April, 1846	20
Mr. A. R. Deouza	to	May, 1845	10
W. H. Brown, Esq.	to	March, 1844	20
Messrs. Barrett and Co.	to	May, 1844	20
Henry Randolph, Esq.	to	Idem	20
Major F. Pottinger	to	Aug. 1845	20
Capt. G. M. Sizer	to	April, 1844	20
J. Alcock, Esq.	to	May, 1844	20
John J. S. Butler	to	May, 1844	20
Baboo Nundlal Singh	to	July, 1845	10
Krishnoo Kishoreo Nee-
Rev. C. Kerksey	to	Sept. 1845	10
Rev. J. P. Mowbray	to	May, 1844	10
Capt. A. Cunningham	to	Dec. 1845	20
G. F. Froude	to	1844	40
Capt. E. Ommamney	to	Oct. 1845	20

TESTIMONIAL

To the Memory of the late Sir W. Hey Macleod, Bart.

The Union Bank has kindly consented to receive the following contributions:—
 T. Struben, Esq. Rs. 607 3
 H. Brownlow, Esq. 30
 Capt. M. R. W. Esq. 100
 W. H. Secord, Esq. 100

Calcutta, 3rd June, 1848.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION

The Rev. W. W. Evans, as Secretary of the Benevolent Institution, begs to acknowledge the following sums:—
 M. H. Gubbins, Esq. per Friend of India, 100

June 8, 1843.]

W. F. Gilmore, Esq.	16	0	5	P. M. of the 23th of April, at the time of our
J. W. Temple, Esq. Bombay , ..	32	0	leaving, the Cleopatra had at least 6 or 7 miles the
E. Cockburn, Esq.	8	0	start of us. The next morning at 8, she
A. Deacons, Esq.	32	0	about a mile and a half of us, where she was
J. Edwards Lloyd, Esq.	32	0	times gaining a little, and again losing until 11 A.
Harrington Palmer, Esq.	10	0	M. of the 20th of May, when our boiler appeared
G. F. Brown, Esq. Bangalore , ..	20	0	to fail. At this time the Cleopatra was good 7
R. Smith, Esq.	8	0	miles an hour. At 8 P. M. she was
D. B. Sykes, Esq.	5	0	of us 7 or 8 miles, and about 3 or 4 miles to the
E. Boyle, Esq.	5	0	west of us; our engines stopped, and sail was
J. Remmie, Esq.	30	0	put on the vessel, which might have been seen by
A. Friend,	5	0	those on board the Cleopatra , had they taken the
A. Turner, Esq.	10	0	open, (as she was plainly visible from us with the Friend at Delhi, per Dr. Yates, ..	16	0	naked eye, although she had no sail set,) and pre-
Mr. King, for Marat ,	10	0	vented the apparently monstrous report that she
Major Tomkyns, Solomon , ..	100	0	was inserted in the Bombay Paper . "Fears are en-
			W. W. Esq.

W. W. EVANS.

Calcutta, June 6th, 1843.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

DISSENT AND ECCLIASTICAL MOVEMENTS.
The Bishop of Calcutta and party arrived at Calcutta on Friday the 12th May, after a tedious voyage from Bombay. The following accounts of the incidents of the journey obtained by the Bishop at the Cathedral, on the 21th of the same month. The Rev. Messrs. Macaulay and Protheroe as deacons—the latter in labour of mind—arrived in connection with the Clergy Aid Society. The latter amongst the Hill Tribes at Rajpoot, near Simla, in connection with the Simla Mission—Rev. J. H. B. D. has reached Simla in improved health.—Messrs. Johnstone and W. Dawson were sent apart to the Missionary work in connection with the London Society's Mission in the Malabar Presidency, and have been during the month.—We announce with regret the deaths of Mrs. Constock of the American Baptist Mission, on the 21st April, and of Mrs. Simmons of the American Baptist Mission, at Tollymore, on the 2nd May. The Rev. W. and Mrs. Baynes were (D. V.) to sail for India on the 15th of May.—Mr. May, formerly of the London Society's Calcutta Mission, died recently in America.—Rev. T. Jackson of Stockwell, London, we believe, the only surviving founder of the London Missionary Society in the world, died in the month of March last.—Mrs. Bayne, the wife of the Rev. Mr. Bayne, formerly pastor of the Lill Base chapel, has entered into her rest.—The Rev. Messrs. Bennett and May, of the Berlin Missionary Society, have been chosen Chaplains for their labours. May the Lord bless them and make them a blessing to the people of their country and long neglected city.—Ed. Christ. Obs. for June 1843.

THE DOGAL CAVAL.
We greatly regret to learn from the Delhi Gazette that the operations for carrying on the only really great public work that has ever been attempted by the British Government of India, has not, as yet, brought to a stop, but so seriously checked and limited as to render them almost useless. We allude to the Dab Canal, a work which if completed would confer eternal honour on those who originated and supported it. The warm interest taken in this matter by the late Governor-General is well known, notwithstanding the demands upon his attention and treasury caused by a continued and expensive campaign. On the arrival of the present Governor-General all proceedings were suspended on the plea of the necessity of applying all the resources of the Government to bringing the war to a close—this was done, our objects were gained and our troops returned in triumph; peace was proclaimed in Asia, and the Governor-General, having no longer any excuse, rendered four lakhs of rupees annually disposable for carrying on this work. To those interested in the welfare of the country this was a source of satisfaction and rejoicing, but such enjoyment was not to be of long continuance; again his Excellency changed his mind and we learn from the Gazette the sum made available is reduced to two lakhs for the present, a sum so inadequate to the purpose as to be almost useless.

The Gazette alludes to indignation that the measure in question meets little favour in his Excellency's eyes because it originated with his predecessor; we do not believe in this exactly, but we do believe no man would have been so unwise with himself to ever meet any very warm support from him.—Calcutta Star, June 3.

THE TEMASAR.
We have arrived here at last in the Temasari, after a tedious, and boisterous voyage, which we expected would have been much shorter, on account of the excellent sailing the vessel made from Bengal to Suva, but we have had quite a chapter of disasters.

The Cleopatra left Suva at 9 30 P. M. and we at to be called pukka. The register of ships shown 8,720, of which, however, only 7083 are occupied by dealers. The number of inhabitants is 120,668 repeating the magnitude of the numbers which have in several instances, stated the population of Delhi at not less than 500,000. Of these, 65,262 are Hindoos, and 64,157 are Mussulmans. The inhabitants of the Palace were not included in this census, but they cannot be numerous as almost every servant of the actual residents passes the night with his family in the Palace, returning to his duties in the morning. Of these, 34,311 women, 9,800 boys, and 7,787 girls. Of the Mussulmans 21,865 are men, 23,313 women, 10,600 boys and 8,800 girls. The number of sailors of note is stated at 20, and that of celebrated physicians, a class of person in high estimation with the natives of all castes, 21. There is a copiousness in the returns furnished to us, not apart from the number of noblemen residing in Delhi, but it has not been filled up. There are 91 Hindoos and 29 Parsian scholars; 51 burial grounds, two public parks, and lastly 607 wells, of which 353 give good water, that in the remaining 255 being brackish and bad. Of extensive gardens the number is ten.

It would be very satisfactory if similar returns could be obtained of the principal towns throughout the country, as they would tend to bring out the nature of the population of Hindostan to some thing within the grasp of our knowledge, so long since the inhabitants of Calcutta itself were currently set down at nothing less than 600,000 souls, though the actual number of the city calculations have reduced the real number to less than one third. The number of inhabitants in most of the large towns has been greatly overestimated, and would be satisfactory in other respects, if more like accuracy, which could easily be accomplished as in the present instance, by means of the police authorities. We have, in addition to the above stated statistical details, been furnished others showing the division of labour, the number of traders, merchants and other particulars which will prove interesting and shall be hereafter given as they are communicated to us.—Delhi Gazette, May 24.

MR. BLUNDELL.

The H. C. Steamer, Enterprise, arrived at Amherst on Sunday last, having on board Major Blundell, appointed to the command of the 2nd of these Provinces. He came up to town and landed on Monday under the same salute. We do not know what any arrangements will be made for his office of Government. Mr. Blundell, our former Commissioner, embarked this morning on board the Enterprise, to proceed to Calcutta, and from thence to his appointment as Governor of the Straits. Mr. Blundell's long Commissionerhip has been a period of great prosperity to these Provinces. Their increase in population, wealth, and revenue, has scarcely a parallel in any other section of the Company's possessions. This condition of the Provinces we believe is owing chiefly to the mild administration of Mr. Blundell, his impartial justice towards all classes of the people, and his lenient and considerate demeanour towards the natives of the country, which has impressed them with a sense of security both in person and property, which they never could enjoy under Burmese rule. All his public acts, so far as we have been able to observe them, have had a direct tendency, to do to the people as much as they could, and to the object of his government was their benefit.

The liberal terms which he proposed to the Supreme Government, and which were approved in the form of a Government Notification, on which individuals might possess themselves of large tracts of land for cultivation, the Regulations for the administration of Civil and Criminal Justice, and the strong interest which he manifested in all attempts to promote civilization, and to develop the resources of the country, are the proofs of his official regards for the prosperity of the Provinces, and of his desire to attach the native population to the Government under which they were great progress was made in the removal of the causes and oppression of the neighbouring kingdoms. The native population, with that feeling of regret which is not in any respect incompatible with the strongest attachment, and hope in the well known character of his successor, regard the departure of Mr. Blundell as the end of an old and long association with both the Government of official duty and by a familiar knowledge of their language, was ever ready and capable, without the intervention of any one, to make himself fully acquainted with the feelings and wishes of these people, and to be able to express the character of the complaints of all who sought justice at his hands. We believe there are few public servants who have been so much beloved and respected by the natives under their Government.

STATISTICS OF DELHI.

The following interesting statistical details relating to this city have been prepared by the Kotwal of Delhi, and are given in his country. The city of Delhi, with reference to its political arrangements, is divided into a Kotwalies and 12 Thannas; the duties of which are performed by 4000 men, 12 Thannas, and 1400 Bar-kundans, besides an establishment of 2500 Nijabes under a Jemadar, two Nijab and 14 Duffadars. These are all paid by the Government. There are 4000 families who are the owners of the city, and may be described in the same category with the almost extinct class of parish watchmen as houses. The number of gates usually mentioned in all books by travellers, originate from the writers, copying one from another in seven, but in reality eleven; of which we give the names: the Khatwas, Jakhos, Khatwas, Badkhanas, Afsarwahas, Torkotomas, Delhi, Najafgarh, Nigrah, Lall, and Kaila. The last four are on the river side.

The number of streets within the walls is 577; of these eleven are described as main streets; they have 246 Mahomedan Mosques, 140 Hindoo Temples and 23,463 dwelling houses, of which 17,668 are of sufficiently solid materials to sustain them and jurisdiction as Mr. Blundell.—Moulmein Chronicle, April 18.

A correspondent at Moulmein writes:—Immediately on the arrival of the new Commissioner for these Provinces, Major Broadbent, the late Commissioner of Moulmein, who left in the Nemeter steamer via Calcutta to assume charge of the Government of Penang and Singapore. An address had been prepared by the British, Chinese, Mohl and other inhabitants of the place, which was to have been presented to Mr. Blundell the same day he left, expressive of the high sense they entertained of his exemplary, unobscured and successful conduct during a period of nearly twenty years he had remained amongst them in various civil situations, and the disappointment he not being able to present this address in consequence of his departure early in the morning, caused so great sorrow to the community in general, that a great number of the respectable native population crowded to his premises, and were just able to see him, as he was going to embark—they cried out he had been a kind friend and father to them, and hoped he would come again and live with them, or they would go and live with him at Singapore, and the Chinese seemed to feel his leaving so much that they declared that they had made up their mind to do so in the event of his not returning.

Mr. Blundell's loss will be long and severely felt in Moulmein. He possessed family early applied to Mr. Blundell for assistance, and he was a very industrious tradesman or man of business. To the poor he always gave liberally, and to assist people in business he frequently advanced from 1,000 to 2,000 rupees at a year or two, free of interest. No wonder then that this gentleman should have been so much beloved and respected; he possessed first rate talents and abilities and the conscientious and straightforward manner in which he was always known to transact his business, rendered him a most valuable public servant, and well deserving of Government. Hence has arisen the rapid increase of population, both Burmah, Naga, Chinese, &c. to these Provinces, and to induce which Mr. Blundell has certainly been the first and chief cause, giving every inducement to encourage trade any way in his power, and at the present moment Moulmein is in a flourishing condition, and capable of receiving large numbers of Chinese and alone to the amount of twenty lakhs, annually. The Exports are limited almost entirely to teak timber.

It must be confessed here that Mr. Blundell has been most fortunate in selecting as able Assistants to co-operate with him as Mr. Comandante and Doctor Richardson, who are both acquainted from long experience and residence with the country, manners and language of the people, and as Magistrates they are extremely valuable; indeed were it not for their possessing a thorough knowledge of the language, it would require at least double the number of Assistants to get through the business; for I should say there are here cases in the Police office in Moulmein during the week that there are in the Supreme Court, Court of Request and Police in Calcutta, in the same period.—Col. Star, June 2.

HUMANITARIAN TREATMENT OF PRISONER NINGOABIES BY THE CORVETTE

In the course of the week the French Corvette L'Harvie, commanded by M. L'Evêque, arrived at this port from Coochin-China, having on board five French Missionaries, and a large number of converts to the Catholic Missionaries already here, by whom they have been hospitably received. These reverend gentlemen are Messieurs Bureaux, Galy, Charrier, Miché and Durlas; all five of whom were detained in prison in Coochin-China, loaded with fetters, and suffering the most cruel treatment, when the Harvie, returning from her cruise to China, anchored in Tuen Bay, to demand their liberation.

The two first named, Messieurs Bureaux and Galy, had been in the prison, at April 1847, at a place in western Tongkin, about 420 miles distant from Hue, the Capital of the Coochin-Chinese empire. After being brutally knocked down, they were taken into the prison, and in which they were carried to the capital, which took them 40 days to reach; and where they were some time thirty times brought before the tribunals of different mandarins, and were cruelly scourged in the most inhuman manner, the blood springing from bloody stroke, and even the flesh sometimes flying in pieces under the lash. They were moreover three times brought before the French judges, which they were able to avoid without crime, and that it would be the happiest hour of their lives when they should be required to shed their blood for the sake of their blood ward this punishment, at the time prescribed. The Mandarins used every means to compel these prisoners to renounce the religion of which they proclaimed themselves the ministers, and tried under the most sacred emblem of their faith, which the Missionaries only the more determined to resist, and when they were charged while they refused in the most energetic terms to comply. It was then proposed to them that they should marry, under the assurance that on that condition the King of Coochin China would pardon them for having come into his Kingdom without permission, a proposition which the pious Missionaries rejected with horror. They were at last condemned to death, and sentenced to decapitation in the early part of October, 1841, and to have their heads exposed on the end of a pike in the public Market for the space of three days. The judges were eager to have this sentence carried into execution, but the King made answer to their representations, "they shall die when I desire it." In Coochin-China, no sentence of death can be carried into effect without the sanction of the King himself, and on the present occasion it was opposed by his intended victims that this delay was attributed to certain calculations connected with the operations of the English force in China.

M. Charrier was apprehended on the 6th of October 1841, and like his brethren was put bare naked, in which they kept him for 10 days. He was publicly scourged at the Hall of the prefect, loaded with a heavy cage, or wooden collar, of forty pounds weight, and a chain of iron round his waist, and was conveyed to the Capital, where he arrived on the 14th of November following. Respectfully but vainly urged to apostatize he refused to turn his back on the religion of his fathers, and his determined answers to the Mandarins—was condemned about the end of January, 1842, to death by decapitation. The King interposed in his case also, knowing by that time that there were French ships of War on the Coast of China.

Messrs. Miché and Durlas were not seized until the 10th February 1842, in a territory of the Kingdom of Pien, six days journey from the frontiers of Coochin-China. They were treated as the others, loaded down, deprived of their outer clothes, had their hands tied behind their backs, and a heavy cage round their necks, and after having been four times lashed by the hands of the executioners, were taken to the capital, where they were taken to the wooden collar and heavy fetters. Being brought before the tribunals, they were again scourged and bound with ropes in consequence of their refusal to apostatize, and to sign the false account drawn up by the Mandarins of their proceedings, to be laid before the King. These revolts of the interrogations they underwent, and the punishment, but as before, the King again prevented the execution of their sentence.

The account given by these French Missionaries of the interrogations they underwent, and the punishments they suffered, contains many curious and interesting details. They were confined in damp dismal cells, on a level with the ground, flanked either by prisoners, covered with vermin, from which it was impossible to keep themselves free.—Their allowance of food was limited to 20 porridge of rice a month, or rather poorly, as the meat was not removed, without either means to unhook it, or wood to cook it; so that they would have perished of hunger had it not been for the fact that the Government ordered some Native Christians, who found means to bribe the soldiers on guard, and introduce provisions into their dungeons. For the space of nine months they held out in the most heroic manner, and were allowed to wash them; and M. Miché having one day reproached the Mandarin with having for five months refused the small quantity of rice and the salt, which it is customary to give to the prisoners, the latter had the brutality to reply—"If you have neither rice nor money, eat earth;" and it is to be remarked that they had already robbed Messrs. Miché and Durlas of the money they had on them when apprehended.

The captivity of Messrs. Bureaux and Galy, had been in the prison, at April 1847, at a place in western Tongkin, about 420 miles distant from Hue, the Capital of the Coochin-Chinese empire. After being brutally knocked down, they were taken into the prison, and in which they were carried to the capital, which took them 40 days to reach; and where they were some time thirty times brought before the tribunals of different mandarins, and were cruelly scourged in the most inhuman manner, the blood springing from bloody stroke, and even the flesh sometimes flying in pieces under the lash. They were moreover three times brought before the French judges, which they were able to avoid without crime, and that it would be the happiest hour of their lives when they should be required to shed their blood for the sake of their blood religion. This fortitude and resignation astonished their judges, as well as all those who witnessed it. "Why do you not cry, why do you not weep when you are loaded with these heavy chains?" the Mandarins said to another, "strangers probably possess some charms to deaden pain." More than three times the Mandarins heard the soldiers, who led them to the prison, to know where they had been beaten and insulted, and the Mandarins:—"They have themselves made out that they are not suffering."

Although the commander of the Harvie had received no directions from his government to effect the liberation of the Missionaries, he took upon himself the responsibility of demanding their surrender in the name of his government, and of the French nation, as fellow-countrymen groaning in irons, and whose cries he had heard. He wrote from Tuen to the chief Mandarins of the province requiring that the Missionaries should be given up to him, and had an immediate reply to the effect that there were no Frenchmen in Coochin-China. The commander of the Corvette then despatched a second letter in which he mentioned the names of each Missionary, and specified the date of their seizure; adding the threat that unless his requisition was complied with, he would at once proceed in his vessel to the capital, and there renew his demand in still more energetic language. The Mandarins, however, no longer persisted in his system of evasion, but offered some pretended explanation, he consented to deliver up the Missionaries. On the 12th of last March their names were sent to him, and on the 10th they were sent to the Corvette, the commander of which received them with all the enthusiasm of a fellow-countryman, and lavished on them all care and attention on their confinement. "Now, you are mine, you belong to me," he told them—"Yes, Monsieur le Commandant, we are now at your order. We shall comply with all your wishes," replied the Missionaries. The Corvette had not yet made ready for sailing when a letter came from the Right Reverend Bishop, the Vice Apostolic of Coochin-China, to the commander beseeching him to restore his Missionaries to him and land them at Sucho, a place southward where a small barque would be sent to receive them, and return them back to their Mission. M. L'Evêque was not a little astonished at this demand, but the Missionaries, as soon they heard the voice of their Bishop, replied that they were bound to those of his lordship, to obtain that favour from the commander, but this gentleman persisted in his refusal. When they reached Singapore the Missionaries repeated their request, earnestly back by their brethren in Singapore, to M. L'Evêque that he would be pleased to leave them here as liberty men, and as converts to Christianity. But the commandant declared energetically that he would never agree to the proposition, it being his resolution to deliver them to the French government, in the name of which he took on himself the responsibility to claim them from the King of Coochin-China;—nevertheless, after many entreaties he consented to leave in Singapore Messrs. Miché and Durlas, the former being destined by his superiors to superintend the Chinese college at Palo Penang, and the second suffering much in his health when at sea.

Messieurs Bureaux, Charrier and Galy are to sail for France in the Harvie. The Missionaries on board the Corvette came at the table of the Reverend Major, they received from the French government the greatest attentions these gentlemen endeavoring to make them forget their sufferings in Coochin-China. Messieurs Bureaux, Charrier and Galy held out in the most heroic manner, and were allowed to wash them; and M. Miché having one day reproached the Mandarin with having for five months refused the small quantity of rice and the salt, which it is customary to give to the prisoners, the latter had the brutality to reply—"If you have neither rice nor money, eat earth;" and it is to be remarked that they had already robbed Messrs. Miché and Durlas of the money they had on them when apprehended.

RAILWAYS.

The Statistics of Railways which appear in the publications devoted to the subject are often instructive and interesting, and as a sample of the information so conveyed, the following condensed table of the statistics of the Great Western Railway, 112 miles in length, produced in the first half-year after it was open throughout 270,000, or 2,318, average per mile; the Grand Junction Railway, 90 miles in length, at 1,000, average per mile; the Manchester and Leeds, 40 miles in length, 116,000, or 2,900, average per mile; the Manchester and Sheffield, 31 miles in length, at 90,000, or 2,900, average per mile; and the Great Western, 38,000, or 2,000, average per mile. The receipts of the four railways, comparing the figures for the first half of the year ending in December, 1841, increased on the average 80 per cent, the Birmingham receipts being 450,000, the Great Junction, 241,000, and the Manchester and Leeds,

[JUNE 8, 1942]

Ditto, Lieut. Wm. James Barker, 2nd May, 1942.
 26th Regt. N. I., Lieut. (Hon.) 2nd May, 1942.
 Hamilton Works.

DOMESTIC OCCURRENCES

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 441. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, JUNE 19th 1848.

[Price 3 Cts. Rs. monthly, or Rs. 3s. yearly, if paid in advance.]

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The Editor of the Friend of India begs to acknowledge the following donation:
From H. Brounlow, Esq. Co.'s Rn. 23, to the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta.

CHINA.—Intelligence has been received from China to the 8th of May. The good understanding which appeared to subsist between the Chinese Government and the British Plenipotentiary has not been interrupted by the death of the old Commissioner, Eliepoos. The Emperor had appointed Ke Ying his successor, and he was expected to reach Canton before the end of May, when the negotiations relative to the Tariff were to be resumed. There appears to be every prospect of an early and satisfactory adjustment of it.

The smuggling which has for some time been carried on in the river of Canton by some of the mercantile firms, in conjunction with the Chinese officers, had at length reached a point at which it appeared to call for the active interference of the Plenipotentiary. This smuggling the reader must not confound with the opium smuggling; it refers only to the legitimate trade of the port. The attempts which had been successfully made to evade the port dues, chiefly by smuggling goods during the night and from vessels which had paid the usual charges, were not only disgraceful to our national character, but threatened to obstruct the settlement of the Tariff. Sir Henry Pottinger, considered it impossible any longer to remain silent, and under the apprehension that the Chinese authorities might be led to suppose that he either censured or approved of these practices, wrote to the Governor General of Canton to assure him officially that such practices were totally at variance with the instructions and wishes of his Government, and that he should be happy to unite with his Excellency in putting a stop to the evil. His Excellency in reply to this communication stated, that there were no doubt good and upright men among the English merchants, but yet it was to be feared that "out of every ten there might be one or two given to deceit. The Honourable Plenipotentiary for his part gives no encouragement whatever to smuggling. Now that we are consulting together about a Tariff of Duties, I still more devoutly hope, that the Plenipotentiary will come forward with a plan of Rules and Regulations to be inscribed in our Code as a leading guide, how we may set together in searching and preventing abuses." The friendly feelings with which the Chinese now regard our Government and people, are not more apparent from this proposal to unite in the formation of a commercial Code, than from the very favourable estimate which the Governor General has so generously formed of the English merchants in China, of whom he considers that only one in ten, or at farthest one in five may be given to smuggling. It is to be feared that the proportion of those who have engaged in these dishonourable practices, is far greater than his Excellency has the idea of. Sir Henry Pottinger designates it a "coarse and disreputable system of wholesale smuggling, which he regards with deep regret and unmitigated disapprobation. These are strong expressions, but not stronger than the enormity of the evil justifies. It seems incredible that gentlemen who pride themselves on sustaining the high and honourable character of British merchants, should deliberately engage in a system of disgraceful smuggling at Canton, from which they would shrink with abhorrence in London or Calcutta; and we can account for it only on the idea that the illegal traffic in opium, which has latterly been carried on with the ferocity of buccannery, has contributed in a great measure to obscure in their minds the distinction between right and wrong. The Plenipotentiary has announced to them his determination, on the arrival of the Imperial Commissioner, to devise means for bringing all parties, whether Chinese or Foreigners, to account for their share in the transactions; and to aid and advise the Chinese officers, as far as may be legal, in whatever measures they may adopt to eradicate these evils.

The Senior Officer at Chusan has issued a notice, declaring that no vessels should proceed from Chusan to Ningpo, Woosung, or Shanghai, till the settlement of the Tariff, and one of the papers received by this opportunity states that three vessels which had disregarded this order, had been seized. The Canton Press doubts whether the officer has any right to issue any such orders, or to act upon them. But if this be the case, the authority of Her Majesty's representative in China, who is invested with all the powers necessary for the Superintendant of Trade, must be merely nominal.

The papers also state, that one of the richest, the most influential, and the most honourable firms in China had fitted out for the eastern ports, two armed schooners, bearing the American flag, and laden them with opium. It is added, that other vessels of a similar character, and under the same protection, might shortly be expected in China. Thus the embarrassment which the question of the right of search has occasioned on the coast of Africa is about to be reproduced on the Coast of China. According to the doctrine of the President of the United States, no English ship of war has a right to board a vessel which hoists the American flag, to ascertain whether she be bona fide American property or not. The American Government has declared the slave trade, piracy; and it is a crime according to the republican Code; but the attempt to sell opium at the various ports of the Chinese empire is in the eye of the American law, no crime; and American vessels of war have no authority to prevent it. The vessels laden with the drug and protected by the star spangled banner may therefore bid defiance equally to the naval forces of England and America; and thus every effort to prevent the traffic, is baffled by new contrivances.

THE DONATION TO JAGGUNNATH'S TEMPLE.—The arrangement made by Lord Auckland for the support of the temple of Jaggunnath upon the abolition of the Pilgrim Tax, has been the subject of a very acrimonious debate in the House of Proprietors, and a strenuous effort has been made to nullify it by those who are opposed to the connection of Government with the shrines of idolatry. We find that a pamphlet has been also published in this matter by Mr. Strahan, formerly of Madras, but we have not been able to obtain a copy of it, and are therefore ignorant of the ground of his argument. It is not a little singular that a question on which the British Government has repeatedly legislated, should be involved in so much obscurity, and that the pledge said to have been given by the British Government, and which alone can have justified Lord Auckland's having perpetuated the donation, in the teeth of the Court's prohibition, should never yet have been discovered. As the subject is likely to be brought again under the consideration of the Home authorities, we propose to put together all the information we have been able to glean.

The Pilgrim tax originated with the old Hindoo dynasty of Orissa. Its sovereigns, we are told, devoted fifty lakhs of Rupees to the construction and embellishment of the temple, and we may naturally conclude, that they supported its establishment in corresponding splendor. The Mahomedan Government at first treated the image and its priests with the fury of iconoclasts; but they also found it eventually advisable to tax the pilgrims for the benefit of their treasury, and it is to be supposed that they gave enough of the crumbs of the tax to keep up the integrity of the establishment. The Mahomedans were succeeded by the Mahattas, and though the tax was not remitted by that Hindoo dynasty, yet a sum which has been assumed at 80,000 Rupees a year, was appropriated from the state treasury to the support of the idol. On the 18th of September 1803, the British authorities took possession of the temple. For two years they refrained from imposing any tax on the pilgrims, but being anxious to avoid all violent changes, they continued to supply the wants of the temple as they arose. The priests at this time enjoyed the revenue of the Sataish Haaz estates; the proceeds of a poll tax, which constituted one of the Bajer duties; and the benefit arising from the sale of the Muhaprasad, or food which had been offered to the idol. Whatever the priests demanded above these sums, was paid out of the land revenues. They doubtless enjoyed a golden harvest during these two years of our apprenticeship to the Government; for they appear to have received all they asked, and their demands were not therefore likely to be remarkable for their modesty. To check the increasing cupidity of the hierarchy at Pooree, it was judged necessary to come to some understanding with them in order to limit the expenditure of the Idol. The Commissioners for the affairs of Cutback, after having instituted a minute enquiry into the various items of expense at the temple, at length fixed the sum at 50,000 Rupees a year, besides bread cloth for the cars, which the Company, as they were then traders, supplied from their own warehouse.

There does not appear therefore to have been any other foundation for the annual donation, but the anxiety of the Commissioners to limit the demand on our treasury, which demand arose from no engagements with those who surrounded the country, or with the priests of the temple, but from that confusion of disquisition which so often characterized our Government in the earlier stages of its existence in this country, and to which so much of its subsequent enlargement is to be attributed.

On the 28th of September, 1805, the fiscal arrangements of the province were promulgated in Regulation XII. of that year, and it was provided that "nothing contained in this Regulation should be construed to authorize the resumption of the established donation for the support of the temple of Juggunesth, the charitable donation in the office of certain Hindoo temples, called Unoochutree, and the allowance for the support of the Hindoo temple called Sootram Takoor's bare."

One of the two latter allowances we have no means of knowing; but the established donation to Juggunesth, could not then have been more than six months old. On the 3d of April, 1806, the Regulation which imposed a tax on pilgrims, was passed by Sir George Hildebrand, who had risen from the ranks of the service to the post of Governor General. In that Regulation we find it stated in Sect. 6, that the fees of the officers of the temple should be paid out of the funds which have been or may be assigned for the support of the temple. These are the only allusions to be found in the Regulations to the donation made by the British Government for its establishment.

When the pilgrim tax, from the proceeds of which this donation had been paid, was abolished, a new arrangement became necessary. The broad cloth for the three cars had been commuted into an annual payment of 1000 Rs., making the whole disbursement in the year preceding the abolition, 57,000 Rupees. The British treasure chest, which under the management of the priests had yielded to the temple establishment only 12,000 Rs., had been rendered more productive under the honest management of our own officers. The poll tax had been abolished with the Sayer. The sacred food, the Mahagruud, afforded a small income; but when these items were put together, they were found to fall short of the annual expenditure of 57,000 Rs. by 35,000 Rs. and Lord Auckland determined that this sum should form an annual charge on the territorial revenues.

We have therefore to enquire, whether Lord Auckland was bound by any pre-existing engagement to make a perpetual donation of 35,000 Rs. from the British treasury for the support of the temple. And the solution of this question will depend not so much on the terms of the original agreement between the Commissioners in 1805, and the Ministers of the shrine, as upon the construction which may be put on Regulation XII. of 1805, in which the existence of the arrangement is legislatively announced.

"Nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the resumption of the established donation for the support of the temple." Do these expressions simply mean that at the time of the revenue settlement of the province promulgated in that Regulation, it was not the intention of Government to set aside the arrangement for the support of the temple which had recently been concluded, but that it was optional with Government at any future time to modify it by any subsequent enactment, or is it to be construed as giving a fixed and unalterable character to the donation, and bringing it within the category of vested rights? Did Government, by the enactment given in that Regulation, that it was not intended to disturb the arrangement, tie up its hands from interfering with it in all time to come? It may be argued on the one hand, that if Government did not intend to give a legal sanction to the established donation, there could have been no object in alluding to it, and that the adoption of the word "established," imports a kind of perpetual obligation to the arrangement. On the other hand, it may be argued, that as the established donation is mentioned in conjunction with other charitable donations, which can scarcely have been considered as possessing a permanent character, the clause must be considered as simply announcing the views of Government at the time, and not as imposing an obligation on every future administration. There is abundant scope for the exercise of reasoning and acumen on both sides of the question, and we leave it to the ingenuity of others to divine the scope of the legislature. Considerable light might be thrown on the subject by ascertaining whether the charitable donation to certain Hindoo temples called Unoochutree, and the allowance for Sootram Takoor's bare, have been discontinued. We know not whether this has been the case, or not; but if it turns out that the other two donations have been modified, notwithstanding the declaration of that law, it must follow that the donation to Juggunesth is not unalterable.

It must be manifest that a shrine so celebrated as that of Juggunesth, which is the resort of wealthy pilgrims from all parts of India, can stand in no need of any support from the state. Superstition supplies ample funds for its own maintenance, and the assistance of Government can be claimed only on the ground that some of the legitimate revenues of a shrine have been resumed by public authority. It must be borne in mind that this "established donation" was legally recognized for the first time when Government had announced its intention to appropriate to its own use the revenues of the shrine. That Regulation (XII. of 1805) declared that a tax was about to be established on pilgrims. Within seven months, the arrangements of this tax were promulgated by authority. Government set up an establishment of its own for collecting the pilgrim tax, and carried the proceeds to its own treasury, and prohibited the ministers of the temple from exacting any sums of money from pilgrims. The donation to the temple, which was altogether gratuitous on the part of our Government during 1804 and 1805, became obligatory after that period. When all the funds from which the idol had been supported were thus taken possession of by Government, it was bound in reason and in justice to keep up the establishment by appropriating to its use a certain portion of the revenue which it derived from the temple.

In 1840 Government abolished the pilgrim tax; but continued to prohibit the officers of the temple from demanding of the pilgrims those contributions which the Regulation of 1805 designated their vested fees. These fees are the natural and indefeasible right of the Rajah of Khoorda as the lord of the temple. Every proprietor of every temple in India has a right to fix his own price on the enjoyment of those religious benefits which are supposed to belong to it. Every other temple in India enjoys the undisturbed exercise of its right in reason and in justice. It was by law withheld from the proprietors of the temple of Juggunesth in 1840, and Government is therefore bound, in equity, to give the shrine an equivalent for the annuity given in that Regulation. We conceive that as long as the ministers of the temple are deterred from demanding of the pilgrims those fees, for its religious privileges which are their natural due, so long must the donation be continued. Whenever Government shall see fit to abolish Sect. 3 of Reg. 10, of 1840, which ordains that the "said Rajah of Khoorda shall not receive or allow to be received by any person connected with the Temple any payment other than such voluntary donations as may be freely offered from any person resorting to the said temple for the performance of religious ceremonies," and shall allow the Rajah to enter on the enjoyment of his natural rights, the donation from the state should cease.

There can be no doubt that the Rajah and the ministers of the temple, far from considering the withdrawal of the donation and the concurrent restoration of their right to demand the usual fees, as any violation of our pledge, would be "immersed in an ocean of joy," to use an oriental expression. And it is only with the proprietors of the temple that the pledge, on which the donation is supposed to rest, can have any thing to do. The pilgrims from various parts of India, who may be affected by this arrangement, will doubtless feel less satisfaction than the Ministers of the temple, at being obliged to pay for the performance of religious ceremonies at Juggunesth, as they do at every other shrine. But it is not a part of our position in India to take upon ourselves the payment of an equivalent for such religious fees, in order that the resort to an idolatrous temple may be rendered easy and inviting. The question is therefore brought within a very narrow compass; and the British Government, whatever construction may be placed upon the arrangements to which it becomes a party nearly forty years ago, may satisfy every obligation, and withdraw honorably from the construction by resuming to the proprietors of the temple the Sanath hereditary estates, the proceeds of the sale of the sacred food, and the privilege of collecting the usual dues from the pilgrims.

That the settlement made by Lord Auckland will not be allowed to stand, is beyond all doubt. The same party which constrained the Court of Directors, in spite of their repugnance, to relinquish their connection with idolatrous shrines, is now engaged to consummate the measure by abolishing this donation. That party is strong in numbers, but still stronger by its zeal and its indomitable perseverance. We have pointed out the mode in which we think our connection may be dissolved without any sacrifice of national honour, and with the highest satisfaction of the Priests. We have therefore only a few remarks to offer. The attack which has been made on Lord Auckland for this settlement, on the ground that it arose from his personal indifference to Christian truth and his partiality for idols, is any thing but just. His Lordship was obliged to consult and in some measure to act on the opinion of the local authorities of the district. They are believed to have strenuously resisted the abolition of the tax; and to have insisted on the grant of this monthly donation, when they found that the tax could not be repealed. Neither do we attribute their tendency to any foolishness for idolatry, but to that feeling of complacency for the religion of the country which is too apt to creep over the mind; and their anxiety to avoid any measure which might be disagreeable to the people placed under their guardianship. With such a predisposition, it was easy for them to persuade their own minds that there existed a pledge to support the establishment to the extent of 57,000 Rupees a year, which by the lapse of forty years had acquired the strength of prescription. Whatever may have been their motives, it is certain that Lord Auckland acted upon their representations; and we must take when the subject is again before the Proprietors, they will, in justice to our late ruler, call for the correspondence of the local authorities with Government on this subject.

THE SUDDER COURT AGAIN.—The Harkness reports the decision of a case in the Principal Sudder Ameen's Court, of the 24-Pergunnahs, on the 4th of the present, which is of very considerable importance, because it affects the value of all the existing Precedents and Constructions of the Sudder Court.

It appears that Messrs. Boyd and Co. instituted a suit against Mr. Henry Piddington for his share of the rum and sugar manufactory of the Court, and obtained a decree in their favour.

The Defendant appealed to the Sudder Court, and the case came on for hearing before Mr. Reid, one of the Judges, who remanded him simply to enquire whether the defendant at the time when the suit was instituted, or at any subsequent period, resided in Calcutta; and if so, to non-suit the case under Reg. III. 1788, Sect. 17.

The Section runs thus:—"The Dewanny Amdaris of the Zillah of the twenty-five Pergunnahs, is not to receive or entertain any suit, under any pretence whatever, relating to any land, house, tenement, or hereditament, nor any dispute regarding the boundaries of lands, houses, tenements, or hereditaments, situated within the town of Calcutta, (which, for the purpose of this rule, is declared to be bounded by a line drawn by the bridge and nullah of the bang-bazar, or cow-cross, the Mahant's enclosure, and the road adjoining to it continued to the westward of the Collingtree nullah, the Deringnullah nullah, and the river.) nor any suit whatever against a person who may be an inhabitant of Calcutta at the time the suit may be instituted, or may become a resident within the limits of the town after the suit may be commenced."

Mr. Smith, the attorney for the Assignees of Boyd and Co. stated that this Section had been relied on to refer only to personal actions of debt. He cited the Construction No. 991, which, in language not to be misunderstood, announces the concurrence of the Sudder Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta in the opinion, that suits of this nature, that is, suits for land or other real property, situated within the limits of the 24-Pergunnahs, and brought against residents of the Town of Calcutta, were cognizable in that Court. This doctrine was supported by a quotation from the Analysis of the Laws by Mr. Harrington, one of the highest legal authorities in the country. The attorney also appealed to the Court on the ground of reason and common sense; pointing out that under this no doctrine any person residing in the country against whom an action might be brought, had only to take refuge in Calcutta as soon as he had been served with a summons, to secure the plaintiff's being non-suited, and satisfied with his own and the defendant's costs.

The Principal Sudder Ameen replied, that according to C. N. No. 1073, whenever the Court there non-suited a case, and restricted the enquiry to a single point, the inferior Court was not at liberty to travel beyond the tenor of that order; that however reasonable or legal might be Mr. Smith's objections, he could not attend to them, since he was bound by the express directions of Mr. Reid's order, to limit himself to this single enquiry, whether the defendant did at any time subsequent to the institution of the suit reside in Calcutta. Mr. Smith was obliged to acknowledge that Mr. Piddington, who was residing in the 24-Pergunnahs, when the action was brought against him, did subsequently go and reside in Calcutta. The Principal Sudder Ameen, therefore, in obedience to the injunctions of the Sudder Court, non-suited the plaintiff.

Such is the report of the case in the Harkness, but we cannot bring ourselves to credit it. There must be some error somewhere; either some point material to a right understanding of the case has been omitted, or Mr. Reid's order has been misunderstood. It is much easier to believe that the report is incorrect than that a single Judge, with whatever power he may be clothed, would thus deliberately set aside a rule in which both Courts had concurred, and one which could not be superseded without opening a door for the most glaring injustice. It is incredible that any Judge of the Court should have ruled that a defendant in an action for real property in the 24-Pergunnahs may baffle his creditors by simply crossing a certain conventional boundary, and taking up his abode in Calcutta. But there is more at stake than this single principle of law, important as it may be. This decision weakens the authority of the whole body of Constructions upon which hundreds and thousands of decisions are based. If that be law, say Lord, said Dunning to Lord Mansfield, I'll go home and burn my law books. You had better go home and burn them, was the tart reply. But if, as in the present case, a solemn decision of the two Supreme Native Courts, can be upset at any moment without ceremony, it will be of little use to read the one thousand three hundred and seventy-five Constructions of the Courts. They are waste paper, fit only for a bonfire. Till we have better information, we must therefore conclude that the report of the Harkness, which is evidently furnished by the party cast, has some material omission.

THE PAY OF DAROGAS.—It is generally reported, that a plan for increasing the pay of the Darogas has received the sanction of Government, and will be carried into effect without delay. It is said to provide for four grades of Officers in that department, the lowest of which will receive 25 Rupees a month, the second 50, the third 75, and the fourth 100 Rupees. It will also make the Darogas irremovable except by the decision of the local Government.

Such a measure has been long called for. The people have learned from bitter experience that their peace and comfort are more dependent on the character and conduct of the Darogas, than of any other officers. Against no body of men are the complaints so loud and deep; and these indignant complaints are not founded upon imaginary grievances. It is because the people have been so incessantly subject to the oppression and rapacity of these Police officers, that the reputation of the Daroga has become an object of terror, and his approach to a village a signal for every man to provide for his own safety. The Daroga has large power and little pay; and he is in a measure constrained by the necessity of his circumstances to turn his power into money, and make up, by unjust exactions, the allowance which Government denies him. The first step in reform is of course to remove the excuse for extortion. A Daroga says he cannot be honest and live. If he keeps a conveyance he has nothing left for food and raiment; and without a conveyance it is physically impossible for him to visit the villages where his presence is required by the orders of his superior. It has long therefore been evident that no small portion of the misery which the people have so bitterly and so generally complained of, is to be attributed to Government itself; which seems to have forgotten that to entrust underpaid officers with great authority is to make itself a party to the abuse of it. The increase of salary may not change the nature of the man; and he who has been accustomed to fleece the people while it appeared to him necessary for his subsistence, may continue the practice when it is necessary only for objects of personal indulgence. But it is indispensable to the character and dignity of Government that the excuse for this alleged necessity should be removed; and the present measure, adopted twenty years ago, and which has since been a source of Government has at length opened its ears to the voice of reason and common sense.

This new arrangement deserves much commendation, though it may leave room for further improvement. The salaries allotted to the two higher grades, are sufficient to secure them a decent, and with their simple habits, in some measure a gentlemanly maintenance. But neither 25, nor even 50 Rupees a month will support a Daroga, in a manner corresponding with the position he occupies in society. Immense sums of pay is to be granted for length of service, but it is not to be proportioned to the extent of responsibility. In some cases, the circle placed under a Daroga of 25 Rupees, will be larger than that allotted to one who may receive 100 Ru. The same temptation to extortion, and the same excuse for it, which forms the opprobrium of our present system, will therefore be perpetuated in the case of more than half the Darogas of the country. Their voracity will be passed amidst scenes of rapacity, and it is to be feared that the habits they contract while serving in the lower grades, will adhere to them after their elevation, and keep the general tone of official morality throughout the service, low. If it had been possible therefore, it would have been wiser to have raised the salaries of the lowest grade of officers to 60 or 70 Ru. a month; but we must not expect too much at once. We are too grateful to Government for having at length adopted the sound principle that salaries should be proportioned to duties, to quarrel with the limited application of it in the first instance. Time and experience will suggest further improvement, and the conviction which has led Government to take the first step will lead it gradually to the adoption of others.

The establishment of a graduated scale of allowances, as a reward for merit, will be found to work happily. Hitherto Government has been labouring to produce good, honest and efficient officers of Police, by working only on their fears; it has now resolved to try the stimulus of hope; and there can be no question that the combined operation of both motives will be far more effectual than the solitary motive of fear. It is to be hoped also that the increase of pay will raise the office itself in public estimation among the natives. At present the post of a Daroga, who has more work than pay, and more trouble than salary, with no hope of promotion, is held in contempt by all the respectable classes of society, and will consequently be accepted except in the most desperate necessity. Let us hope that the new system will bring men of education, family and character into the service, and thus enable Government to make the Darogahship a step to the Deputy Magistrate. Certainly no man will be better fitted by local knowledge and experience for these higher offices than those who have served as Durges for eight or ten years.

THE AUXILIARY BIBLE SOCIETY'S NEW SPELLING LAW.—We publish in a letter from a Member of the Calcutta Bible Society, a comment on the Protest of the Twenty-seven Missionaries against the new law of the Bible Society and on our remarks thereupon. We think we have met this champion of the Society in the lists before, and are therefore little surprised at the acerbic acid with which his observations are laid up. He is afraid that our minds are being under the influence of party feelings, and intimation; "he hints that "he is small where our weak party lies"—which is really supposed to be half the battle—He has "there is one question, namely, which he is sure will direct our judgment;" and that we evidently write under "the irritating influence" of a recollection of the controversy between the Bible Society and the Baptist body could not fail to produce. But he does not tell us with which body he puts the blame of a controversy which necessarily produced such irritating effects. We will endeavour to set him right about this acid controversy.

It is well known that the Serampore Missionaries, with whom we had the privilege of being associated as Colleagues while the Serampore Mission lasted, commenced the translation and printing of the Scriptures in the Oriental language before the Bible Society had an existence. Dr. Carey's translation of the New Testament into Bengali was presented to George the Third in the year 1806. The Bible Society rose in 1804, and soon after expressed a wish to co-operate with and assist our deceased Colleagues in their translation labours. A Corresponding Committee was accordingly formed, which consisted of three Churchmen and three Dissenters—Presbyterians were not then born. In 1811, Henry Martyn preached his well-known sermon in the Old Church, which led to the formation of the Auxiliary Bible Society, into which the Corresponding Committee was merged. From the earliest period of its undertaking, the only condition required by the Parent Society at home, or the Auxiliary Society in Calcutta, before assistance was granted to the version, was that it should be faithful to the original and correct and idiomatic in its style. No question was asked about the mode in which any particular term was translated. Hence the word happiness, was translated by Martyn, by Killerton, by Thompson, and by the Serampore Missionaries in that mode which appeared to each of them best calculated to express the sense of the original. The latter of course translated it by a word which signified, inmersion.

Sometime about 1839, some of the Missionaries in Calcutta remonstrated with the Bible Society against the consequent use of versions in which the word was translated in a manner which did not accord with their own views of the ordinance, and they requested the Society both here and at home to direct that apocryphal version should be the word untransliterated. The Parent Society was compelled by the pressure from India to give in to these views, and they addressed Dr. Carey and his Colleagues on the subject, requesting that the word happiness should be given as in the English version. They declined to comply with this new requisition. They represented that the Society had hitherto acted upon a Calcutta spirit, and allowed each translator to follow his own conscientious convictions in this matter; that, if the Calcutta Missionaries objected to assist in the circulation of copies of the Scriptures in which the term was rendered by a word which signified inmersion, the Society ought to assist them to print versions which they could conscientiously distribute. They reminded the Society that half the versions which they printed for distribution on the Continent of Europe, had the term translated—and by a word which corresponded closely with that used at Serampore. They considered it unjust that there should be one rule for the west, and another for the east; and that the Society should insist on conditions in Asia, which they had not the courage to propose to the Bible Societies in Europe.

The Parent Society however resolved to adhere to its new law, and wrote to inform Dr. Carey that he could expect no further assistance from them. Dr. Carey had just been assigned to the tomb when the letter, which would have cut him off from all further connection with the Society, with which he had been connected for thirty years, reached Serampore. Dr. Marshman was at the time one of the Secretaries to the Calcutta Bible Society; and though he had been subject to such indignity, resolved not to withdraw from it. He considered it an instrument of great good in this heathen land; and he determined, at every sacrifice of personal feelings, to continue to give its operations all the assistance in his power. In these views he had the concurrence of his colleagues. Within three years after these events, he also was called to his reward, and the Serampore Mission ceased to exist as a public and organized body. Our correspondent will be able to judge from this simple narrative whether the controversy is likely to have left any such feeling of rancour in our minds as to influence every discussion in which the Bible Society may be concerned. We appeal to him as a Christian minister whether it is generous to taunt those who under such provocations, have invariably abstained, even from complaint, with writing under the influence of party feeling, prejudice and irritation, when they have occasion to discuss a question in which the same general principle of liberty is involved. We have since learned that the Bible Society in London have manifested the same inflexibility towards the Baptist Missionary Society, who have consequently been constrained to establish a Translation Society in their own denomination. With the controversy as carried on by them, we have no personal connection; though we still continue to think that in adopting one rule for the West, and another for the East, the Society has shown little sense of justice; and that in making a demand on those who were supposed to be too weak to resist, which they did not venture to make of those in Europe who it was well known would have scouted the proposal to alter their versions, they have exhibited little dignity of character. The only feeling which the controversy excites in our mind is one of regret for the inconsistency of the Bible Society. From that body we have nothing to ask; nothing to hope; and nothing to fear. If we could view the controversy in connection with the interests of the Baptist Mission in the East only, which at this Presidency embraces 61 Missionaries, while all other Protestant Mission put together number but 14, we should at once pronounce the action to be suspicious rather than the reverse; for it has led to the publication of twice the number of copies of the Scriptures, with the word translated by a term which signifies inmersion, than could have been expected if no separation had taken place.

We are sorry that this explanation has occupied so much space, as to leave us little room for the main object of this discussion. The Bible Society has for thirty years sanctioned a particular mode of writing the name Jesus. It has now taken another view of the case, and considers the old mode "opposed to the mind of the Spirit as revealed in scripture," and has resolved not only to adopt a different mode of spelling it, but to enforce its new views by refusing assistance to the printing of any version in which the new spelling of this word is not adopted. Twenty-seven missionaries of all denominations, have entered their protest against the innovation and are at issue with the Society. What then is to be done? We answer without hesitation, Let the Society yield. It is the strongest party, and there will be magnanimity in the concession. The Society ought to be exceedingly cautious how it creates impediments to the progress of divine truth, by exalting matters of indifference into matters of conscience. Granting that the spelling of the name as adopted by the Society is correct, and that the Missionaries are wrong, still no fundamental doctrine of Christian truth is involved in the mere spelling of our Saviour's name. Whichever mode be adopted, whether it be the old or the new mode, both will be equally understood to designate Jesus Christ, and none other. It is not a matter on which the Society would be justified in splitting with so large a body of disinterested and conscientious labourers. It is far more important that they should continue in active co-operation with the Bible Society, than that the name of Jesus should be spelt with certain letters, and not with others. It is infinitely more consequent that the Oracles of Divine truth should be given to the heathen, even with what the Society deems the incorrect orthography of this word; than that they should not be given. The Society may have a right to enforce an exact obedience to its own mandate, because it holds the purse strings. But there are hundred rights which it would be very prudent not to exercise. The whole business of life is managed by a constant compromise between rights and expediency; and we see not why the same wise principle should not be adopted by religious Societies. More mischief will be done to the interests of the great cause from the exercise of this right in the present instance than from leaving it in abeyance; and this ought we think to be a sufficient argument with those who hold in reverence the example of the Apostle who said, "all things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient." Two or three such victories, and the Society is undone. It is not the spirit of the Gospel to contrive new points of difference, and invent them with the importance of conscientious scruple, and thus to separate from each other in affection, zeal, and co-operation, the feeble band of Christian Missionaries already sufficiently bowed down by the difficulties they have to encounter. We have no party interests to serve, as our correspondent is pleased to think, and no sectarian feelings to gratify; but when we see the seeds of dissension thus wantonly sown among Protestant Missionaries and their hands embled by those who ought to strengthen them, we feel constrained to make our feeble but earnest protest against the folly, we had almost said the guilt, of making the spelling of a word of five letters, a new shibboleth of party.

STRAIT FERRY.—The subject of the Steam Ferry, a Dutch abortion, has been mooted in some of the papers of late, and we have received a letter from an individual who subscribed for ten shares, enquiring what has become of the funds, now the Society was dead and its assets had been disposed of. We are sorry to be unable to give him any satisfactory information upon the subject. Not having subscribed to any of the city bubbles since we took a share in the Sageur Island Society, we have felt no personal interest in the question, and have not therefore made any particular enquiry. Neither indeed do we know to whom to refer our correspondent. All that is publicly known is, that the affairs of the Society were grossly mismanaged; that it incurred obligations to nearly double the extent of its means, and that the vessels which came out were sold to pay its obligations. As they sold greatly under the cost price, we naturally suppose that the sum realised was just enough to cover the demand from home, and that the subscriptions raised in this country have been absorbed in the loss. We cannot therefore advise any friend who may be in possession of shares to bequeath them as a provision to his family; they will turn out to be of no more value than the Poyais scrip. But though the funds, and the hopes of the subscribers have thus been consigned to the tomb, they have a right at least to ask for a publication of the accounts, that they may have the consolation of knowing how the money has been absorbed; and if either the Secretary or the Treasurer be in India, it is to be hoped that he will come forward and enlighten the public.

A catalogue of the various Joint Stock Associations which have been born within the Dutch, during the last twenty years, and have been consigned to a premature grave almost immediately after they had seen the light, would be both an amusing and instructive document. Indeed the catalogue might be extended so as to embrace all those projects for which the public in general or in particular have been taxed, and which have ended in nothing, but in putting a round sum of money into the hands of particular individuals, sometimes by a legitimate process, and at other times by a process of doubtful honesty. We might begin with the subscription for the statue of the Marquis Wellesley, which never reached its destination. We might then touch upon the contributions for sending home a representative to secure the abolition of the half batha order, which did the enemy more good than the army. We might close the list, for the present, with the subscription for the statue of David Hare, of which half is collected, and none appropriated.

THE CASE OF THE MOONIFF.—We regret to find that we have been misled by a letter which we published some time since relative to the refusal of a Civil and Session Judge to grant the title of Sahib to a Christian Mooniff, and have been made the instrument of injustice towards an active and benevolent officer of Government. We have reason to believe that the letter sent to us was forwarded without the knowledge of the Mooniff, by some officious friend of his. We hasten to make the only reparation in our power, by publishing a correct version of the transaction.

In a proceeding, dated the 9th of April, forwarded to the Judge's Court by the Mooniff, he laid down the style in which he proposed to address the Native Judges, and then proceeded to prescribe the mode of address to be adopted by other courts in their correspondence with him. The form of address he proposed to use in his communication with the Native Judges, was that laid down by Government in the Circular Order of the 6th of July 1838, but this style is never employed by Courts of inferior jurisdiction in addressing those above them. The style on the other hand which the Mooniff proposed that the Native Courts should use in addressing him, was the one adopted by those courts in addressing the higher jurisdictions.

An order was passed on this proceeding to the effect, that Government had directed the use of a form of address to be observed by public functionaries in their correspondence with the different subordinate Courts, but that the particular style to be observed by these Courts in addressing each other was regulated by the customs of the country; that no reference on such a subject had ever before been submitted; and that with respect to the particular mode of address claimed by the Mooniff, the Judge saw no reason to change the usual style which had hitherto prevailed.

The Mooniff being dissatisfied with this order, made a farther reference on the grounds of his having been addressed by the Judge of Behar in the mode proposed by him.

The Judge willing to concede this point to the Christian Mooniff, if borne out by precedent, though still of opinion that there should exist no distinctions among the subordinate Judges, addressed the Register of the Sudder Court on the subject. The reply received was to the effect that there appeared no necessity for introducing the term Sahib in the body of a proceeding, and that it was not advisable to make distinctions between the several Mooniffs. On the receipt of this letter, it was forwarded to the Mooniff in a private note for his perusal, but as he continued to use the style which he claimed in his proceeding of the 6th April, the Judge sent him a private letter advising him to drop the term, as it added in no wise to his respectability, and only tended to strengthen an ill feeling against him on the part of the other functionaries. To this note a reference was returned for submission to the Superior Court which was again forwarded to the Register, who returned it with his opinion that there appeared no objection to the Mooniff's employing what term he pleased in designating himself. Thus the matter terminated; the Mooniff of course continuing to retain the style which he had previously used.

This is altogether a different story from that to which we were led to give credence; and we have only to express our regret that on this occasion we should have overlooked the fact, that one of the first of editorial virtues is—mis-trust.

Unavoidable circumstances have obliged us to postpone to the following week, the continuation of the Review of Capt. Eyre's work.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JUNE 8.

—The vacancy in the Sudder Court in Calcutta has been filled up by the appointment of Mr. E. M. Gordon, the Commissioner of the District Division to the office of Judge. If we look only to personal qualifications, and natural talents, the claims of Mr. Gordon for this office are second to none; but he has had little experience in the Civil Courts, and his constant employment in other departments has left him no leisure for studying the principles of Civil Jurisprudence. This is the fault of the present system, the evils of which become daily more and more apparent, as the older Judges quit the country, and are succeeded by men who have had no advantage of judicial training.

—Letters from Tiaship announce an earthquake as having been felt at that station on the morning of the 2d, which however appears to have done little damage beyond the terror with which it inspired the people.

—The Madras Athlete of the 5th inst. states, that on the previous Sunday, when the set in, no fewer than fifteen vessels whilst riding in the roads, were ordered out to sea by signal from the Master Attendant, of which only three had returned by the 2d. As yet however we have no account of the loss of more than a single horse in the gale.

—Some time ago we had occasion to notice a strange and barbarous decision of the Sudder Court at Bombay, which condemned a Mahomedan convicted of adultery to death, and the offending female to fourteen years imprisonment. The Court appears since to have thought better of the matter. The last Generalist's Gazette of the 29th May states, that the sentence of both the culprits has been revised, and that they have been condemned to one year's imprisonment without hard labour.

—The Register informs us, that cholera had broken out in H. M.'s 20th Regiment at Ghaneswore with great violence. It has been attributed to the state of the weather. The deaths at first were as four to five, of the cases admitted; subsequently they were nine to nineteen; and a further diminution of the rate of mortality to two to six has since been reported.

—The Star alludes to the orders which have been received to equip the Queen Steamer for sea by the beginning of next month, and adds whether Lord Ellenborough is going to Suez. We fancy not. The Madras Government has long requested that a Steam vessel might be placed at its disposal to be employed in communications between that port and the Madras troops stationed in the Straits. It is more than probable that the Queen is declined for this service.

—Mr. George Thompson takes his departure to-day, for India, to receive his final instructions from his Majesty, previously to proceeding to England as his representative. He travels, notwithstanding the importunate heat of the weather, by day.

—We have extracted from the Star an account of the operations of the Native Hospital, and its dependent dispensaries extracted from its last report. This is one of the oldest of our charitable institutions, and yet one of the most active and useful. It is more than half a century old, yet retains all the vigour of youth.

FRIDAY, JUNE 9.

—The Herbivore of this morning has a long and interesting article on Slavery in the Model Republic of modern times, in the course of which the writer alludes to the oft repeated assertion that Jefferson, the American President, who regretted that Jesus Christ was cut off so early as age, before his genius was fully developed, sold his own children. It has, we know, been said that all the children he had by his female slaves were sent to the slave market at New Orleans, but we have heard the fact stoutly denied by republican friends. Could the Editor lay his finger on any passage which substantiates it?

—The Singapore papers mention, that a neatly lithographed map of the town and environs of Singapore by Mr. Thompson, had just been com-plotted. This is the first successful attempt which has been made in the Straits to ethnograph inspe.

—The Penang Gazette reports the fatal effects of revenge and jealousy, in a Rajah who had married a pretty Malayan woman. The man seems to have lost memory of his ferocity from his visit to the straits at Mencia. He killed one of her relatives and set down five others, and wounded his own uncle by mistake in the dark. He then attacked the house of his father-in-law and wounded his own wife and her brother. They would have been killed had not his father-in-law rushed in and cleared his skull.

—The Java Courant gives an account of a fearful earthquake, which has nearly destroyed the Island of Pulo Kina on the West Coast of Sumatra. It occurred at the same time with the earthquake at Singapore and Penang. We have the following narrative among our extracts.

Intelligence has been received from China to the effect that the Emperor had appointed his son, Prince Kien Lung, as Commissioner for settling the tariff, and he was expected shortly at Canton, when the ratified treaty would be delivered him to be conveyed to his Majesty at Peking. The losses sustained by the Kien at Canton have been made good by the Chinese Government to the extent to which they have been proved. Some of the demands were very capricious, others were known to be altogether groundless. The settlement of the amount—a very tedious duty—had been committed to the Plenipotentiary. The utmost cordiality continued to prevail between Sir Henry Pottinger and the Chinese authorities, and no little interest between his Excellency and the merchants. Smuggling was still carried on in the most headstrong manner in the Canton river. H. M. Ship Swallow, 20, was about to be sent to the Coast of Japan to make a hydrographic survey of it.

—The Calcutta Gazette contains an official letter from Sir James Graham, after he had presented the dutiful and loyal address of the inhabitants of Calcutta to the Queen on the birth of the Prince of Wales. "This additional proof of the faithful attachment of Her Majesty's subjects to her person and family throughout the British dominions, was received by Her Majesty with heartfelt satisfaction."

—The Star quotes Bell's Weekly Messenger, a Tory paper of the 18th March, as saying that Lord Ellenborough's recent proceedings in reducing the Civil expenditure of India, nearly two thirds of a million sterling—will tend to repair his character from the injury inflicted on it by the Southey Proclamation. Two thirds of a million, about sixty lakhs of Rupees! Where is a reduction of even ten lakhs in the Civil expenditure of India? So much for the accuracy of the organs of public opinion at home.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10.

—The Gentleman's Gazette says, that the Bombay Government, notwithstanding repeated failures, is resolved to try anew the experiment of sending a steamer to Suez right in the teeth of the monsoon. It is much to be doubted whether any steamer on the Bombay establishment is able to face the monsoon.

—On Tuesday night, the 26th May, Lord Ellenborough left Agra to join his Council at Calcutta. He was fired, his troops were drawn up; His Lordship entered Agra with all the pomp and parade of a Governor General; he left it like a private gentleman. The Star talks of his moody departure. His Lordship may have come away in no pleasant state of feeling, for he detects Calcutta, but it seems to be forgotten that he had been ill for several days, and that somewhat serious illness was the result of any consequences he had ever experienced.

—The meeting of the British India Society held on Thursday evening was assiduously attended, though Mr. Speed took the Chair. We are really surprised to find it mentioned in the report, that the farewell meeting held on the previous Tuesday, to take leave of Mr. Thompson, was attended by only 5000 persons. Nothing seems to have been done at the present meeting beyond a resolution to receive the Report of the Committee appointed to sit on the Act for the appointment of Deputy Magistrates.

—The Star gives the number of emigrants who have left the port of Calcutta for the Mauritius in the month of May last; they amount to 734; of these 633 were men, 61 women, and 10 children; the proportion of women has, we are happy to perceive, considerably increased.

MONDAY, JUNE 12.

—The latest accounts from Seide are derived from the Deli Gazette, which states that Sir Charles Napier had determined on disarming the Bhobchore, a measure which he will not be able to carry into effect without much difficulty, owing to the inefficiency of his force, and the little hold he has on the country. Such a measure however is indispensable to the tranquillity of the province. Sherre Mahomed, the refractory chief of Meerpoor, was at a place about 42 miles to the north of Hyderabad with about 7000 men. He had offered to make his submission to the British Government on condition that half his property should be secured to him. The reply was that he must surrender unconditionally. Several very influential chiefs had in their submission to the General, and it was expected there would be no more fighting in Seide. Sir Charles Napier is confidently spoken of as likely to succeed to the post of Commander-in-Chief at Bombay.

—The Deli Gazette states, that serious differences have arisen between Sir William Nott, the Resident at Lucknow, and the King, but the nature of them has not transpired.

—The Star has a very pertinent question. All the papers in Calcutta have exhibited the strongest antipathy to Lotteries. How then can any of them, with any consistency of character, continue to assist them by publishing their advertisements? The question is more easily asked than answered. While we are looking for the sanction of the Directors to the entire abolition of all lotteries by a legal enactment, it is the Press alone which can lessen the evil, by refusing to admit advertisements. It is upon the up-country galle that the projectors of these lotteries depend for support; and the communication with them is entirely in the hands of the Press. Let the press do its duty and clear its columns of these gambling notifications.

TUESDAY, JUNE 13.

—The Portuguese brig Tres Jassos, coming from Mozambique to Bombay, has been totally lost at sea. Ten of the crew remained on the vessel and met a watery grave; fifteen embarked in the cutter, and the same number on a raft, which the cutter towed for some days, but subsequently cut adrift for its own safety, when the whole fifteen went to the bottom. The men in the boat, without water for many days and with only four biscuits a piece for food, were reduced to the last extremity, when a Patimar on its way to Bombay picked them up, and brought them safely into harbour.

—The loc is exhausted at Agra; and the Agre Elbow sends that this circumstance may have driven Lord Ellenborough down to Calcutta, altogether forgetting that one loc is equally common there as at Agra, and that the weather at Agra, rendered more intolerable by the loc of loc, which has sent his Lordship to Calcutta, but the very warm remonstrances of the Home Authorities on his continued absence from his Council. Every one seems to have followed the example of Lord Ellenborough in abandoning the city of Agra. The new Lieutenant Governor, Mr. Clerk, will reside in the hills; the Secretary Mr. Hamilton, and a large portion of his clerical staff, will proceed to the same destination, and it is said the Genio Trans later is bound for the same cool retreat.

—A full length portrait of Sir Charles Metcalfe has been executed by Mr. F. B. Bay, which appears to have met with unequalled approbation from all who have seen it. It is now proposed to obtain a first rate engraving of the portrait under the immediate supervision of the successful artist; and it is hoped that a large number of subscribers may be obtained to it from the numerous friends of Sir Charles Metcalfe in India. The price is fixed at a guinea, and we are happy to perceive that thirty-two names have already been obtained.

—The appointment of Lieut. Col. Richmond to succeed Mr. Clerk as Envoy to the Court of Shere Sing, has excited no little surprise in the country; because it appears to prevent the first departure of Lord Ellenborough from the second principle he has acted on of selecting men according to their capacity for the duties committed to them. The Lieut. Col. is a good and gallant officer, who saw a little fighting in the march to Calcutta; but to reward such small services with an office of 5000 Rupees a month, and the title of His Excellency, and to place a man absolutely without any political experience whatever in the most important political post in India, seems altogether unaccountable.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14.

—The Bombay papers give us reason to hope for the Mail by the 20th. It was expected to reach Bombay by the 10th. Will the Madras beat the express this time also? The Mail is likely to bring news of some moment. The accomplishment of her Majesty—the budget—the settlement for the year of the sugar duties—and the issue of the battle between the Church and all those who do not belong to her pale for the control of national education, which was to be fought immediately after Easter.

—The Star has a long article in this morning's paper on the disruption of the scheme which is said to have been formed by a certain party for reducing Calcutta to the condition of a provincial capital, and making the India the main channel of communication between England and the Western Provinces. Lord Ellenborough's journey to Calcutta knocks this plan in the head for the rest of his viceroyalty.

—Sir Charles Napier has at length succeeded in establishing a post by land from Hyderabad to Bhoj in Cutch, from whence it will be conveyed to Bombay. The communication by sea is closed by the monsoon for the next two months.

—The Star gives us a couplet which is not amiss, on Sir William Nott's approaching mystic:

The man who carried off the gates;

Is captive to a Dura.

—We are happy to find that the Prince of Wales, Capt. Deasy, in which the Hon. Mrs. Bird embarked, reached the Cape safely on the 7th of March last.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums for the Friend of India:

E. Hinder, Esq.	Nov. 1845,	10 0
Baboo Gourmohan Addy,	Dec. 1845,	20 0
Lieut. H. Siddons,	Nov. 1845,	20 0
M. Murray, Esq.	Nov. 1844,	20 0
Lieut. Goodway,	April, 1844,	20 0
W. S. Dunstons, Esq.	Dec. 1845,	24 0
Mrs. Watson	May, 1845,	20 0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

PUNISHMENT CASE AT ALABAHAD.

That the "Rules of the Service," whether that service be the Queen's, or the Company's, must be strictly adhered to, by each and all subordinate thereto, is a principle which we do not wish to see relaxed in any degree. We never shall complain of obedience to rules, by those upon whom they are imposed. But we may see reason to find fault with those rules, and we caution when the observance of them, produces consequences, that revolt alike against humanity and common sense.

Such in our opinion was the case, (which we extracted from the Harbours) in the recent instance of death at Allahabad. An European soldier, it appears, who had purchased his discharge, procured a large quantity of brandy, which he carried on board the boat in which he was to have proceeded to Calcutta, got very drunk, became violent and dangerous, and it was resolved to put him on shore. This was accordingly done, and as his passage had been granted to him free of charge, this was all very proper. However, he refused, to get back again, and in passing down the ghaut for that purpose, he fell on his forehead, receiving a violent contusion in consequence. In this condition he was taken on board, and a messenger dispatched to the garrison, for medical assistance, and an Assistant Surgeon of the 3d Buffs, in consequence of this application, came on board, but finding that the man did not belong to his, the Surgeon's regiment, he ordered an emetic, and declined further attendance, on the ground that according to the Rules of the Service, he was precluded from rendering further aid or attendance.

In consequence of this determination on the part of the Regimental Surgeon, the poor wretch was landed about 8 o'clock on the Steam grates at the Thaksh, and from the Thaksh to the Charitable Hospital, from thence to the Magistrate, then back again to the Hospital, where he arrived just in time, to die.

We will go no further into the particulars of the case, because it is not our intention to attach blame to individuals, but to expose a flagrant violation of the existing Rules of the Service.

Here is an individual, who had but just ceased to be a soldier, who meets with a dangerous accident—and the manner in which that accident occurred, or its occasion, does not effect the question. Nothing but the promptest medical aid can save his life, and yet that life is sacrificed, because Queen's and Company's Surgeons have certain points of etiquette relative to medical attendance on non-military patients, which cannot be surmounted.

Nor can we further our strongest comments upon such a system. We do not, as we said above, attach signs of censure to a Queen's or Company's Medical Officer, for adhering to rules, which it is his duty to adhere to; but that life should in any case be sacrificed to such rules, is, as we said above, revolting to common sense, as well as to humanity. Nor can we perceive any possible point of utility to be gained by such prohibitory laws.

If the object be to prevent a Regimental Surgeon, from devoting too much of his time to private practice, under the appearance of attending casualties, it can have no proper application in cases of casualty, of sudden and urgent danger, attendance upon which, would not take a medical man from his regimental duties.

In a word, we can perceive no sound reason for such a prohibition; we cannot discover any good that will result, or can result from it; and although whilst it exists as a rule of the service, we cannot find fault with those who obey it, we think that it manifests an unbecoming and undeserved suspicion, that the common duty of humanity of yielding assistance in case of need, would, if permitted to a medical man, be abused to the detriment of the service.—Englishman, June 14.

THE OFFICIAL TRADE.

The Harbours in a leader published last week, expressed his satisfaction that the opium trade is now placed in imminent jeopardy by the action of our contemporary, "three Lord Abbeys are most ineffectual people." We think so too, for that is the cause they profess to have at heart, though not to the smugglers. There is no way in which a good cause is easier injured, than by exaggeration. When one of these Lord Abbeys comes forward with a proposal for prohibiting the cultivation of the poppy in the fields of British India on the sole ground that the produce on the plant is occasionally applied to mischievous purposes, then he supports his case by alleging as facts, assertions that are notoriously false, he leaves an impression on all impartial persons that his arguments will not bear an accurate examination. Moreover when we find such a potent master of religion and morality and being at the same time the organ of two hundred and fifty mercantile firms, who several object to it to substitute their own manufacture for the Indian drug in the markets of China, we are naturally inclined to probe the enquiry a little further, and to doubt whether a higher motive than self interest or the love of monopoly, influences the petitioners and their supporters in the British Senate, when they know that every piece of Cotton goods which they wish to force upon the Chinese, must first effect the produce of that slave labour which they affect to hold in abhorrence. We have been for years past steady opponents, both of the monopoly of the smuggling trade, and so long as the letter was left to the Chinese, and the British merchant was merely the carrier of the drug, we considered his share in the transaction as involving no greater moral responsibility than that of a French brandy merchant, or British lace manufacturer, who sell to the contraband dealers of their respective nations. But when the trade began to be carried on by agents resident under the British flag upon the coast of China, when we heard of a sort of private war carried on by these agents of the British Government against the Chinese authorities, who maliciously reported opinion that such a traffic must not be suffered to continue. The British Government has felt powerful of interference in this respect, and if so, we Robert Peel has declared, it has given instructions for discouraging smuggling, the very first step of that discouragement ought to be the disarming of every British vessel upon the coast of China.

There can be no necessity for arming, in a time of profound peace, by vessels engaged in legitimate commerce, and those who are otherwise employed ought to be compelled to run the additional risk of carrying on their profitable business, without the means of retarding the public attention of the country whose laws they infringe. Nothing would be easier than this; by the law of England no merchant vessel fitted out in Europe can carry guns without an Admiralty licence. The extension of this law to India would either confiscation, or a severe penalty, to British vessels found to be armed without permission. The Houses in England is given under a bond that no improper use shall be made of the armament, and thus a proved complaint on the part of the Chinese authorities, would be at once visited with punishment, and the British Government would be bound by the comity of nations, to take this very easy step towards preventing bloodshed by its subjects upon a friendly coast. Had one quarter of the arms which have been procured in China, occurred in any part of Europe, ample redress would long ago have been demanded and conceded.

With regard to the monopoly we have always argued against it, as a mode of raising revenue wholly contrary to sound principles of political economy, and only defensible where no other mode of taxing the community could be devised, that would not be of greater inconvenience to the public. It is one of those interferences with the free action of individuals which throws the burden of reviving the society, entirely upon the Government. We need not pursue a subject which has so often been argued to demonstration. However, as our columns and those of our Indian contemporaries have hitherto been an armory, and our writers at home have drawn their best weapons, we will furnish them with another reason for abolishing the monopoly, which none of them have yet hit upon, and which Lord Ashley is quite welcome to use, when he next moves the House on the subject.

The monopoly ought then to be opposed by the enemies of the smuggling trade, because it is the greatest facility the smuggler possesses. Let Company by their careful inspection of the monopoly drug, their mixing and refining the whole produce of the season to one uniform quality, make a single ball a fair sample of the whole, or twelve thousand chests which one of their establishments produces. The consequence is that the quality of the goods is sold like wine, without inspection, when ever the parties dealing are known to each other. Nothing can be more favorable to a smuggling trade than this. The vessels compelled to appear and to be ready to transfer their cargoes into boats at a minute's notice, or to land them under cover of night, cannot submit to that minute inspection which would take place in a state of regular and lawful trade, with an article of variable quality. The effect of this in the Malacca peninsula, the quality of which is always uncertain, and is therefore far less fit for the coast smuggling trade, if maintained, would be Bengal were private, under an excise or export duty, there would be every variety of quality and the different marks would be differently estimated in those of tobacco or spirits. Inspection would be necessary, and this would require a secure place of deposit. If this is to be refused at Hong Kong, as appears by the Report of the Committee, it is clear that the British Government would do more to put down the British smuggling trade in opium by insisting upon the abolition of the Company's monopoly than by any other measure that could be devised.—Eng. Jan. 8.

THE CALCUTTA NATIVE HOSPITAL.

Here it is, with its independent Dispensary, having afforded in the space of 73 months relief, medical and surgical to 333,401 cases; it has expended of Co.'s Rs. 44,061—11—6 and there is in hand a balance which encourages its managers to contemplate the further extension of its operations by the establishment of another Dispensary. We can but bid it, God speed, and hope that, despite the fluctuating state of society in Calcutta, notwithstanding the opening of the Report, its support will continue steadily and increasing. And here it occurs to us to remark that such an Institution might be, and ought to be independent of the fluctuating state of society in Calcutta. Did not the Native residents imitate more largely, as they ought to do, the largest of the Europeans, it would be so. Some of them have indeed set the example nobly, as may be seen in No. 11 of our number, where mention is made of three donations, one of Rs. 20,000 in two of Rs. 10,000 each, by Rajah Badrinath Roy, Raja Sitabdev Roy, and Rajah Narasingh Roy, in 1837. These three gentlemen were the first natives who were elected Governors. We doubt not but that since then, others have largely liberal too, but looking at the list of the present contributors, the native gentlemen exhibit but a sorry figure, compared with what the Native Community might do, and we hesitate not to say, ought to do.—Calcutta Star, Jan. 8.

CHINA.—MOVEMENTS OF THE BAPTIST MISSION. The following is an extract of a letter just received from Hongkong, dated May 4th.—"We are glad to see the Church in China has such bright prospects."—Our cause here is evidently progressing, and we have large congregations both Chinese and foreign. At the death of Mr. Duns, we have heard of the arrival of Mr. Dean, after one week's dreadful illness of small pox, leaving a bereaved family, and a Chinese mission, which a final settlement of political affairs in China seems to be wonderfully tardy, and the end is not yet. The Baptist Mission has recently had a valuable accession in a Rev. Mr. Dean, who is President of New York and will likely be stationed with Mr. Dean at Foo-chow-fu. The distribution of our missionary doctrine is as follows:—
—Dr. Hobson at Hongkong; Dr. Parker at Canton; Dr. Cunningham at Amoy; Dr. Macgregor at Foo-chow-fu; and Dr. Lockhart at Shanghai. Rev. Mr. Shuck is stationed at Hongkong, but the others are not yet settled, with the exception of the Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Moravian Education Society, who is also at Hongkong."—Calcutta Christian Advocate.

ACCOUNT OF AN EARTHQUAKE AT PULO WIAH. Ignorant of the diurnal scenes which it would rise the next morning, the sun sank peacefully behind the hills of the Toli (east of Nias) on the evening of the 31st January last. At 6 p. m. the Thermometer (Fahrheit) marked 82° the sky was clear, the sun calm, the air pleasant and mild—and a breeze from the westward (a circumstance of rare occurrence in those parts) was felt.

The inhabitants of Nias, not aware of the fate that awaited them, were sleeping in the usual manner, when at about midnight they were roused by heavy shocks of the earth which at first were felt in a slight degree from the west shifting to the northward, but becoming more and more violent, so that at last no fixed direction could be given to them the shocks subsiding into a complete trembling of the whole land, and the ground was so excited that the whole island would disappear.

The shocks continued without intermission during 9 minutes; the ground was moved up and down, like the rocking of a swing,—to stand up or walk was alike impossible, houses were destroyed burying beneath the ruins their ill fated inhabitants.

A portion of the mountain Toli close to Goolung Si Toli together with the fortifications of the Benteng, and the other government buildings, with the exception of the Toli and the Company's mandarin house, were totally destroyed. Cane and other large trees which for upwards of a century the Bible Society, you should have touched it at all under the influence of the feelings which dictated your article on Thursday last. It is difficult, perhaps impossible for us to view any subject aright, while our minds labour under the influence of party feelings, prejudice, or irritation of any kind. Having a high respect for your judgment on such matters, but knowing at the same time, where your weakness lay, I hinted to you the propriety of a friendly discussion of this subject in respect of the Baptist question, as I know well that the least approach to that gentle cause, would distort your judgment. I am sorry that you did not attend to my hint, for had you done so, your opinions would have carried much more weight, and your article would have been very different in tone and spirit, even although it had been the same as to substance. It is evident that you wrote under the irritating influence which a recollection of the controversy between the Bible Society and the Baptist body, could not fail to produce, otherwise you would not have treated the subject so cavalierly as you have, (a fault which I must in justice say, is very unusual in the pages of the Friend.) The Author of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, in one place of his writings represents the controversy which agitated Christians in the third century as a mere difference about the spelling of a word i. e. Opaviviv or Opaviviv, and thus labours to throw ridicule upon the whole subject. According to you, the difference between the Calcutta Bible Society and some of the Mofussil Missionaries is merely about the spelling of a word, and hence you call the controversy, "The Calcutta Bible Society's spelling law, and the spelling mania." Now, Sir, were it not for the high respect which I have for your general fairness, I would call this a controversial trick. It is one way indeed of getting rid of an opponent, but it is a course which I am sure you would not knowingly adopt. There are those however, who will not be disposed to regard the matter so leniently as I do, for you have laid yourself open, unwittingly I believe, to a very serious charge. The point in dispute, as you must be aware, is not about the mere spelling of a word, it is not about regarding either the one party or the other. It would appear that the Bible Society regard the employment of any other term besides Calcutta as opposed to the mind of the Spirit as revealed in Scripture, this is a very serious matter.

The present question is just one of those which may come between a Bible Committee and a translator, and I have not the least hesitation in rating the defence of the Bible Society's proceed on the issue of this very question. How stand the matter, it is thus. The Committee maintain that the term Calcutta is etymologically expressive of the declaration of the Angel in Matt. i. 21, and that it alone expresses the sense of the Scriptures. On the other hand, it is not pretended that the term Calcutta signifies any thing, and it is tacitly admitted that any other term would do as well. The argument from etymology is not even attempted to be replied to (it does not enter into the arguments on either side, and it merely states the facts of the case). Are the Committee then to be compelled to publish with their sanction that which they believe to be contrary to the mind of the Spirit? Some of the Mofussil Missionaries object to the employment of the term Calcutta simply because of the probable evil consequences of the change among Mussulmans; that is, one party have conscientious scruples to the employment of any other term, the other oppose the change on the ground of expediency. This being the case, I leave it to you to say which ought to give way.

In regard however to the Urdu version which has given rise to this controversy, and which is just issued from the press, (and how thankful ought we to be, that we have now for the first time a correct version of the whole of the Scripture in that widely spread language), you must be wiser at fault. There is no dispute in this case between the Committee and the translators, they are quite agreed, in that the spelling of the Redeemer's name now adopted was the proposal of the translators themselves, one of whom is a Missionary from the Mofussil, and admitted to be one of the best Urdu Scholars in the whole Missionary body. There is therefore now a new element brought into this controversy, the dispute is not now between the Committee and translators, but between the Committee and translators on the one hand, and some of the disfranchised and readers of the Bible on the other. Are both translators and Committee to be brow beaten by this third party? What Committee would or could work in such circumstances?

It is not my intention to enquire into the relevancy of the arguments employed in the protest published by you, I may however remark that it appears very strange that the very arguments which have been fully met and answered in the Calcutta Christian Observer, should be reiterated in the form of a protest, without any notice being taken of the reply. There is one thing which I may be excused for urging on the friends of the protest, I think that a regard to justice and truth requires that wherever the protest is sent, it ought to be accompanied by the statements and replies on the other side. If this be done, the Calcutta Bible Society will have little occasion for anxiety as to the result. The evils arising from the separation of the Baptist body from the Bible Society are not so great as you seem to represent them. The Bible Society have lost no translators thereby, for at the present moment the Calcutta Baptist Missionaries have, with a commendable liberality, agreed to publish an edition of the Bengali Scriptures for the Society, and another Baptist Missionary is now carrying an edition of the Urdu Scriptures through the press for the Society and these acts of friendly feeling and liberality are appreciated by the Calcutta Bible Society, of which, by the way, Baptist Missionaries are still members. Allow me further to inform you that you labour under a mistake if you suppose that the gentlemen who have signed the protest, agree with you as to the step taken by the Society in reference to the Baptist question. The most of them, I believe quite approve of the course pursued by the Society in that matter, and some of these, I have occasion to know, were among the first to defend the Society.

In conclusion, allow me to state that I am alone responsible for what I have written on this subject. The Calcutta Bible Committee have nothing to do with any thing I have written, and in fact some of its members know that I now address you,—this explanation I deem necessary, for from some remarks made by you on a former occasion, it might be supposed that I wrote under authority. I shall be happy to see either yourself or some of your correspondents discuss this subject candidly and impartially, and apart from all party feeling, in fact to grapple with the simple question, what is the duty of a Bible Society in reference to the publication of Scripture translations. If this be done in the spirit of kindness and christian love, I think our views will approximate each other much more closely than we imagine. Let the writers place themselves in the position of the members of a Bible Committee, and enquire what they ought to do when such questions as the one now before us is to be decided.

A MEMBER OF THE CALCUTTA BIBLE SOCIETY.
Calcutta, 6th June, 1848.

EUROPE.

REMARKS.

FRENCH OCCUPATION OF TAHITI.—When the British Government, in the reign of George IV., declined to assume the sovereignty of the Georgian Isles, against the request of the Emperor, it was generally understood, that the King might rely upon the friendship, and, if necessary, the protection of this country, with which he maintained such anxiety to cultivate the closest relations. Neither the sovereign nor his people have ever done anything to forfeit their claim to be protected in asserting their independence. For many years, a British, a French, and an American flag, were hoisted at Papeete, and no disagreement of a political or commercial nature, so far as we are aware, has ever occurred between the representatives or the traders of the different nations.

The success of the British Protestant Missionaries in evangelizing the simple natives of the Polynesian Oceans and the adjacent Archipelago, has, however, now been a source of much jealousy to the French Propaganda, more especially to the College of Jansen at Valparaiso, who appear to be the principal instigators of the repeated attempts made by the French consuls in the South Seas. The first affair of the kind was the outrageous conduct of the commander of the French frigate Venus, in 1826, the pretext for which was the alleged refusal of the Queen and Government of Tahiti to allow the settlement on their island of certain Mofussil priests. The following year, a second invasion of the island was perpetrated by Captain La Perouse, the frigate Arctique, of 64 guns, and a crew of 1000 men, under circumstances of peculiar aggression. On her voyage to the Sandwich Islands, the Arctique struck on a reef about twelve miles southeast of Papeete, Tahiti. The vessel sustained no much damage, that it was with great difficulty she was brought into Papeete Harbour, to be here docked for repairs; and the safety of the natives employed at the vessel, night and day, for more than a month. When she was again sighted, the Commander convened a meeting of the Chiefs, for the purpose of informing them for the kind assistance they had rendered in repairing his ship and protecting his property, but, in reality, to demand the abrogation of their law prohibiting the entrance of ships and the introduction of the people in the Roman Catholic faith. With this requisition the natives were forced to comply, as Capt. La Perouse threatened to fire upon the town, and to devastate the island.

The vessel then proceeded to the Sandwich Islands, and visited from the King and his people the sum of $5,000 dollars, and she sailed on the 10th of May, for their refusal to receive French missionaries, with a threat to carry war throughout their country, unless the laws forbidding their admission were instantly repealed.

The recent affair of the Marquessa was in pursuance of the same system. And now we find Admiral Dupetit Thouars making possession of Tahiti, under the pretext of a treaty of commerce concluded with the Queen and the principal Chiefs to the King of the French. We are not yet in possession of all the details of this infamous transaction, but may state generally, that the consents given by the French officers are utterly false. The Queen, instead of being willing to place the island under French protection, refused to sign the Treaty till the 10th of June, and four and twenty weeks were allowed her by the French ruffian, under the threat of bombarding the island if she did not comply with the insolent demand. The conduct of the French Admiral is obnoxious in terms of the highest satisfaction in the Calcutta Journals; but at present, it is unauthorized by the French Government; and we are not without hopes that the representations which have already been made by our Ministers to M. Guizot, will lead to the discovery of an act which must otherwise inevitably lead, sooner or later, to a hostile collision between the two countries. The indication which the whole series of outrageous affairs, of the activity and audacious policy of the French Propaganda, is the most striking and most alarming evidence, that the French Government, the Protestants of America, as well as of Great Britain, what they have to look for, if they suffer the deep-seated schemes of Rome and Oxford to advance unopposed.—Ed.

TAHITI TO THE FRIENDS OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS TO THE HEATHENS, OF ALL DISPOSITIONS.—CHRISTIAN BROTHERS.—An event has occurred which cannot but make a deep impression on all our hearts.

For many years past, we have been excited by the contemplation, with great delight and thankfulness, the success of the Gospel of our common Lord and Saviour in the South Sea Islands. We have witnessed the total renunciation of idolatry, the adoption, in its stead, of the worship of the true and living God; we have beheld, with delight, the communication to them, in their own tongue, of the pure word of God, and the realization with which we have beheld the march of Christianity from island to island, and from groups to groups; and we have had to witness this progress, as we have seen the adoption, in the blood of some valiant servants of the Lord of Missions.

At length, in the inscrutable wisdom of the Head of the Christian Church, a dark cloud has been permitted to come upon our eyes, and to veil the bright sun of the western hemisphere of Christian Missions. The French Government has, under the most false pretences, by an act of unjustifiable violence

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 442. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, JUNE 22nd. 1848.

[Price 2 Cts. Rs. monthly, or 10 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.

OVERLAND MAIL.

THE Bombay Government intends to dispatch the Mail Steamer of the following month, on the date specified below, viz.

The Steamer for August on the 10th July.
Sept. on the 29th Aug.
With reference to the above, notice is hereby given, that the latest safe date for the transmission of letters to Calcutta, which may be intended for the Steamer appointed to leave Bombay on the 10th July, will be Wednesday, the 25th proximo.

W. M. MOORE,

Port William, General Post Office,
The 10th June, 1848.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The Editor of the Friend of India begs to acknowledge the following donation:
From R. Trotter, Esq. Co's. Rs. 20, to the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta.

OUR OWN STEAMER.—Seldom has the community in Calcutta been more agreeably surprised than it was on Wednesday last by the unexpected arrival of the Mail, which was not expected by the most sanguine to reach us before Tuesday, the 20th. It arrived in Calcutta about 4 p. m. on the 14th, and as it left London at 6 p. m. on the 6th, it was just thirty-nine days and two hours on the route. We need scarcely observe that this is the quickest journey ever made from London. Finding the Bombay express had thus forestalled our own Steamer, the arrival of which was not calculated on before Monday, the 19th, we had resigned ourselves in despair to the tedium which we knew the Bombay Press would not fail to pour on us, when they found the anticipations in which we had indulged on the first voyage of the Hindostan from Suva, so completely nullified. But to the astonishment of all, the Steamer itself was announced the very next day, having made the run from Suva, including stoppages, in 23 days and 17 hours; and, excluding stoppages, in sixteen days and a half. Thus the Steamer has trod on the heels of the most rapid express ever received in Calcutta. If she had not been detained four days and six hours by the wretched arrangements for coaling; if she had been employed only two days in receiving coal, she would have brought the London Mail to Calcutta in thirty-eight days and a quarter. When therefore the arrangements at Ceylon and Aden are completed, and the Peninsular Company is enabled to ship coals as quickly as the Honourable Company, the Calcutta and Suva Steamers may always be expected to bring our letters and packets as rapidly as the Bombay Express when most speedy, and frequently to anticipate the express itself, even at the most favourable season of the year. The Bombay folks will naturally ask, what advantage we shall derive from having our London papers of the Mail day brought by sea instead of by land, when the difference, as now established by experience, cannot be more than twenty-four hours either way? The advantage is in every respect great. Among the minor but not less gratifying results of this steam communication with our own doors, will be the early and complete receipt of our letters and papers. We may mention that, at the date of this writing, Tuesday evening, we have not received more than five of the April Newspapers, out of thirty which we expect from Bombay, and this after the express had been in six days. All our May periodicals, publications, which were sent by the Hindostan, have already been in our possession twenty-four hours. To the inhabitants of the metropolis the convenience of receiving all their letters and packages at once, and at a reasonable rate, is such as those only can appreciate who have been subject to the misery of having them delivered, day after day, in mortifying dribbles at an irritating price. It is scarcely matter of surprise that we should not obtain the sympathy of our worthy fellow citizens of Bombay, for they have never experienced our miseries.

We are sorry to find Capt. Moreby styling the voyage from Suva to Calcutta, the homeward bound voyage of the vessel. It is in very fact the mind of an Englishman with another. Whichever he is obliged to allude to any other place by that endearing name, it is done with a manifest conviction that nothing but the necessity of circumstances could justify such a misuse of the word. It is a poor compliment to the European community in Calcutta to designate the word, by applying it, even in the case of a steamer, to any city in India.

THE MAY MAIL which came in on Wednesday, is as usual pronounced to be newsworthy. Yet it announces the death of one member of the Royal family and the birth of another. The Duke of Sussex, the most popular of all the sons of George the Third, has at length paid the debt of nature at the age of seventy; and at his own particular request has been buried far from his royal ancestors, in the cemetery of Kensal Green. Her Majesty has been happily delivered of a third child, a daughter; and though the same interest has not been felt on this occasion which was felt on the birth of the first born, or of the Prince of Wales, yet the universal and affectionate esteem in which her Majesty is held by all her subjects, a few revolutionary Chartist exceptions—has created a national feeling of delight at this addition to her domestic happiness. Her Majesty was rapidly recovering; and it was expected that the visit of the Court to the Emerald Isle would not be delayed.

In the obituary of the present month, we regret to find the two honoured names of Lady William Beatrice and Thomas Clarkson. Lady William died at Paris after a protracted illness. Long will her memory continue to be cherished in this country for her affability, her unaffected piety, and her boundless liberality. She has left claims upon our grateful remembrance, independent of the association of her name with that of her illustrious husband; for she had a character of her own, and it was eminently distinguished by those virtues which serve to adorn human nature. Thomas Clarkson, has earned for himself an honourable place among those who have disinterestedly devoted their lives to the service of their fellow men. His name is indelibly associated with the abolition of the slave trade, to the success of which no man contributed more effectually, if perhaps we except Mr. Wilberforce. It was through his untiring exertions that the evidence of its enormities which first made so deep impression on the public mind at home, was collected and arranged. It was Clarkson, who travelled from town to town in the cause of humanity, at a time when it was regarded generally with feelings of profound apathy. It was he who raised up advocates in all parts of the country, engaged Editors of provincial newspapers to rouse public attention to the iniquity of the trade, and gave that impulse to the public mind, which in sixteen years secured its abolition.

The occupation of the Marquesas and Tahiti, has given a new direction to the national enthusiasm in France, and the country is rife with projects for colonization, which must eventually prove abortive. The French Ministry has determined to ask the Chambers for $40,000, for the erection of fortresses in the newly acquired islands of the Pacific, where French domination is to be rendered complete. These distant and useless possessions will only serve to drain France of men and money without contributing in the smallest degree to the increase of her foreign commerce. It does not appear that the British Ministry has lifted up its voice against the fraudulent and unjustifiable occupation of Tahiti. In fact, it is tongue-tied by Lord Ellenborough. With what color of decency can we reconcile with France against the acquisition of a petty island or two, while we are taking possession of countries, fertile as the Egypt, and annexing them without scruple to our magnificent empire in the East!

The subject of Slavery in India has been brought under the notice of Parliament by Mr. Stuart Wortley in an allusion to a report of two American Naval Commanders to Congress, which they stated that "Bombay and perhaps other British possessions in the East Indies were among the greatest markets of slaves." Sir Robert Peel offered an elaborate explanation, which was remarkable chiefly for its omission of all reference to the fact that the slave trade in India had long been illegal, and that by a law passed in the present year, slavery itself had been abolished throughout the British possessions. It would be strange indeed if this great act, by which the year 1848 will hereafter be characterized, should have been unknown to the Prime Minister; and stranger still, if, when in possession of the fact, he neglected to bring it forward, and to offer it as a final and satisfactory reply to all the importunities cast on our Indian administration by the slave fostering Republic.

Lord Ashburton, the Conservative Envoy to Washington, has received a vote of thanks for his treaty, upon the motion of the Whig Lord Lougham, and the radical Joseph Hume. It seems that some of the members of the old Ministry, Lords Palmerston and Russell, and Mr. Macaulay, had denied any merit to the arrangements of their former associate Mr. Baring, now Lord Ashburton. This roused Mr. Hume's 'dander,' to borrow an expression from the Clock maker, and he immediately proposed a vote of thanks to the negotiator. The measure is unprecedented. It is not customary with the House to thank diplomatists who avert wars. It thanks only Generals and Admirals who are successful in conducting them. But as Lord Ashburton had been abused—as what diplomatist has not been by one party or the other?—

and more especially as Joseph Hume volunteered to wipe his old friends by moving a vote of thanks to their political opponents, the Ministry consented to create a precedent. Since what time, said Napoleon to Fouché, when he remonstrated against the murder of the Duke d'Enghien, have you been so sparing of the blood of the Bourbons? With equal point might it be asked of the Tory Ministers, since when have you been accustomed to set such store by Joseph Hume's opinions?

Brazil has rejected the Ministerial proposal for a new commercial treaty. She demands that her agents shall be admitted on the same scale of duty as those of our own colonies; the alternative is, the closing a market of five millions a year against our starving manufactures, when the present treaty expires. The Brazil cabinet know we are as powerless as the Envoy at Calcutta after the insurrection, and they are resolved to dictate their own terms.

Sir Harry Inglis, the champion of the Church, who has been urging Church extension on the Ministry when not half the new churches in the metropolis are half full, has at length obtained some crumbs of comfort from Sir Robert, who proposes to aid the Church, without dipping into the pockets of the people. The reform of the Cathedral, against which Sydney Smith protested so loudly in the inimitable letters to Archbishop Singleton, has yielded 30,000*£* which is now available. The Prelate proposes to borrow another sum from ecclesiastical resources, on ecclesiastical security, to be repaid from ecclesiastical funds, and to devote, we suppose, the interest of it to the support of ministers of the Church, feeling convinced that where a congregation is raised, a church will soon follow, and that it is much more reasonable to provide a church for a congregation already collected, than to erect a church and then best up for a congregation.

THE ORDAINATION VOW.—We are not blind as Dissenters seem to think. We have carefully read over the Question and Answer he has quoted, with the best of spectacles. Every thing however depends on the kind of spectacles one uses, as Major Downing of Downingville says in one of his humorous letters. Read the ordination service with the new Oxford glosses, and nothing will be easier than to discover that to "banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines," means nothing more or less than to make perpetual war on Dissent. It was by the aid of these magical glasses that the Tractarians discovered that a belief in the invocation of Saints, and in the efficacy of holy relics, was not incompatible with a belief in the Thirty-nine articles, and with the enjoyment of Protestant livings. Our spectacles, bought of Twentyman and Co. are simple, honest glasses, and assist us only to the plain unadorned meaning of the words, in which we are altogether unable to discover the meaning which Dissenters unadvisedly attaches to them.

And what is this meaning? The Bishop asks the candidate for holy orders whether he will banish and drive away all strange and erroneous doctrine. He vows to do so by the help of God. The Preface to the form of ordination Priests says, It is evident to all men diligently reading Holy Scriptures . . . that from the Apostles' time there have been three orders of ministers in Christ's Church, Bishops, Priests, and Deacons. The asterisks should be thus filled up: "and Ancient authors." Now the Dissenters though they may discover three orders in the Ancient authors have been unable to discover them in Scripture;—therefore they are to be banished and driven away with all faithful diligence. By parity of reasoning the Priest should make perpetual war on Puseyism. It is part of the belief he expresses as his ordination, that the "Holy Scriptures contain sufficiently all doctrine required of necessity for eternal salvation." It is one of the dogmas of the Oxford School that the Scriptures are not the sole, or a perfect rule of faith, and that they are to be supplemented by tradition, and therefore the Puseyites who hold this "erroneous and strange doctrine" are to be banished and driven away with all faithful diligence.

This interpretation of the ordination vows has been brought forward since the S. P. C. K. Missionaries connected with Bishop's College have been charged with creating heartburnings and discord among the flocks of the Dissenting Missionaries. It behoves them, we think, if they covet a character for straightforwardness, to declare at once whether they intend to rest their defence on a denial of the facts, or on an appeal to the supposed necessity of aggression imposed on them by their ordination vows. We are from a long and acrimonious discussion with which the columns of the Harbinger have been recently loaded, that they repudiate the charge, and maintain their entire innocence of any attempt to seduce the Dissenting converts. This is mainly, whatever be the result of the enquiry. They can only injure their cause by setting up this theory of ordination vows; because it wears the appearance of disingenuousness, as though they intended to fall back upon the vows, and justify their aggression, if they find themselves unable to disprove it.

THE LOTTERIES.—The Harbinger has explained the inconsistency of advertising lotteries in one page, and denouncing them as immoral in another, by saying that the Editor of that paper is not responsible for the advertisements, which are under the absolute control of the Proprietor. This fact goes far to exonerate the Editor from blame; but we wish he would use his influence with the proprietor to exclude the gambling temptations altogether. This would certainly improve the character of the paper for consistency, while the pecuniary loss it might involve would serve to give additional value to the concession. That journal, since it has been in the hands of the present editor, has risen not a little in public estimation, and its returns must have been proportionately augmented. The Editor may therefore justly claim to have some voice in the determination of a matter in which the character, and consequently the interests, of the establishment are involved.

Of the Englishman we have little hope. He has the same excuse as the Harbinger for inserting them; the Proprietor being in London and the Editor in Calcutta; but he prefers to defend the publication on the ground that the lotteries are not as yet illegal, and that they are in the hands of respectable tradesmen. This may be true of one lottery, but of no other. If we remember aught, one of the lottery projectors was recently charged in the Englishman with having written that which was false. He cannot, therefore have much respectability left; and the Englishman ought not, on principle, to advertise his lotteries again. It will at any rate be some trifling mitigation of the evil, if our countrymen will limit the advertisements in future to those tradesmen of whose respectability he has undeniable evidence. And even they would find their respectability vastly improved, if they would avoid pandering to the vicious propensities of our nature, and content themselves with an honest profit out of an honourable business.

THE BOMBAY TIMES has been severely taken to task by the officers of Scinde for the groundless charges brought against them in reference to the ladies of the Zenana at Hyderabad. Some officious and mischievous individual informed the Editor, that they had been transferred unceremoniously to the tents of the officers, and the Editor, whose indignation at the occupation of Scinde has never slumbered, considered this conduct as an aggravation of the public wrong inflicted on the Amerees; and denounced it with unmitigated severity. He has thus inflicted a serious injury on a body of honourable men, and they have requested permission of Sir Charles Napier to publish an open refutation of the charge. It will be found among our extracts.

It is perhaps needless to say that the charge is altogether unfounded. The honour of the ladies of the Zenana was guarded with the most scrupulous fidelity, after they came into our power. However our national character in this respect may have been compromised at Cabul, it is unimpaired at Hyderabad. It is due also to the Editor of the Bombay Times to state that he had no sooner been informed of the unfounded nature of the charge, than he used every effort in his power to contradict it, and to counteract the mischief of which he had been made the instrument. He did not wait for a remonstrance from the officers, but spontaneously published a denial of the imputation. His conduct, after the receipt of the document from the officers, is such as to justify him as a continuance of that public confidence and esteem, which his talents and industry have earned. Of all men, Editors of newspapers and Ministers of state are most liable to be misled; because it is the interest of others to mislead them, for their own private interests, be they fair or foul. We have all been placed at some period in this predicament. There is no paper of any note, which has not been obliged at one time or another to retract assertions published on the authority of those who appeared worthy of confidence; and hence mistrust will always stand as a more steady than credulity.

The course pursued by the officers is also worthy of all commendation. Some would have advised them to seek the vindication of their character by an action at law; and thus to fix the value of their reputation by the vulgar standard of money. Every such procedure, except where the author of the calumny persists in maintaining it, wears a vindictive character, and divides public sympathy between the doer and the sufferer of wrong. They have acted upon a wiser and more magnanimous principle. Having been injured through the press, they have demanded reparation of the injury from the press, and it has been made promptly, cheerfully and effectually; and their honour is brighter than as though they had obtained 10,000 Rupees damages against the misled Editor; for, thanks to our system of law, there are so many considerations besides innocence, which go to make up a verdict, that it is always the least satisfactory reparation a man can obtain for calumny.

LEWIS' EYES' NARRATIVE OF THE CAMPAIGN OF 1844 IN AFGHANISTAN.—We resume our view of Lieut. Eyre's Journal, with the greater satisfaction, as we shall next week have an opportunity of comparing his statements with those given by Lady Sale in her Journal of the Disasters in Afghanistan. Though many of these were later in the field than our contemporaries, our readers may find it useful, previously to entering on the review of her work, to have their memories refreshed with the facts given by Lieut. Eyre.

Our last notice closed with the capture of the Commissariat fort on the 8th November by the enemy. On the 6th, a large force was sent against Mahmud Sherif's fort, which was stormed after a severe struggle. The Royal Garrison which adjoined it was filled with Afghans, and but, owing to the appearance of the enemy on a neighbouring hill, and an apparent attempt to intercept the return of the troops, the idea was abandoned. Lieut. Eyre says that it would have been easy to have occupied the garrison, and they have obtained possession of the Commissariat Fort opposite it, which had not been emptied of half its contents. But a fatality attended every movement from the first, and this measure, which would have secured many days supplies for the troops, was not attempted, and within six days after the insurrection had broken out, only single day's provisions could be obtained at a time from the village of Beymaroo, at a very high price.

On the 9th of November, General Elphinstone's weak state of health, rendered the presence of a conductor necessary, and in an evil hour, Brigadier Shelton was summoned from the Bala Hissar. The appointment of General Elphinstone to command in a country like Afghanistan, but recently occupied by those whose chiefs and people equally detested, is one of the most grievous errors of Lord Auckland's administration. It is true that he was specifically appointed from home to this division, but it was manifest to all those who saw him on his way to the scene of his command, and unhappy of his disasters and death, that he was physically incapacitated for so responsible a post; and that his mind had been affected by the weakness of his body. He should never have been sent. Brigadier Shelton came into cantonments on the 9th, despairing from the first moment of being able to save the army except by retreat, a feeling in which he was supported at first by none of the officers. To the calamity of the General's mental and bodily weakness, was now added the unwillingness of the Brigadier to assist in any movement except a retrograde one. From his arrival, the general feeling throughout the camp, whether among the officers or men, was one of despondency, which served to aggravate tenfold the difficulties and dangers of the position. The European soldiers who ought to have set an example of fortitude and courage to the native troops, were the first to give way to repining and apathy. Next to the indiscretion of sending a General so broken in constitution as General Elphinstone, to Cabul, was that of placing a Regiment like the 44th in so critical a post. Every one knew that from the peculiar, and happily unexampled, system of discipline, to which the corps had long been subjected, a universal spirit of dissatisfaction pervaded the men and that they could not be depended on in any emergency in which their confidence in the commanding officer and their attachment to him, was to be put to the test.

On the day when Brigadier Shelton arrived in the cantonment and took a leading part in all operations, though the troops were reduced to a state of starvation, and the whole country was in a blaze of insurrection, one master mind might have overcome all difficulties, and preserved the force till the approach of succour on the opening of spring. But the General in chief was a cypher vacillating between opposite opinions, and always swayed by the last adviser; the second in command was perpetually exclaiming that the game was up, and that there was no safety but in retreat, and the Envoy stood alone in advising vigorous measures, which were received with cold apathy, and never carried into execution with effect. On the 10th, the enemy appeared in strength on the heights to the east and west of the cantonments, and took possession of a number of forts, particularly the Roeka bahee, which was situated directly opposite the mission compound, within musket shot of our works. The Envoy fearing to be hemmed in on every side, was anxious to occupy this fort. Lieutenant Melville says, that urged this measure on the General and the Brigadier, who demurred at it, observing that they could not afford the loss of men it would entail. Sir W. Macmurtrei replied, "If you do not take the forts to-day, you must take them with three fold loss to-morrow." The General asked if the Envoy would take the responsibility on himself; and he instantly said, "On my shoulders be it." About mid-day a large force issued from the cantonments and proceeded to the Roeka bahee fort. Capt. Bellow hurried forward to blow open the gate, but missed it, and blew open a wicket, so small as to admit of only two at a time. Capt. Westmacott was out down outside, and Capt. McCree snared at the entrance, but Col. Macrell, of the 44th, made his way to the interior, with Lieut. Bird and a handful of Europeans and sepoy. The garrison fled out at the great gate. Just at this instant some Afghan cavalry charged round the corner, and the Europeans and natives gave way at once; a bugle sounded the retreat by mistake, and the flight back to cantonments became general. Major Scott, of the 44th, knowing the fearful predicament of his commanding officer, exhorted and besought the soldiers of the 44th to follow him in vain. One private, of the name of Steward, alone seconded his efforts. The Brigadier, whose personal courage was proverbial, exposed himself to the hottest fire while he endeavoured to rally the fugitives. They advanced to the attack and again retreated. A third time did the Brigadier bring them up to the assault, which now proved successful. The fort was taken, but what was the fate of those within? Col. Macrell was literally hacked to pieces, and of all those who had entered with him, only two survived, the gallant Lieut. Bird of the Shah's force, and a sepoy. These had taken refuge in a stable, and barricaded it with logs of wood and whatever else came to hand. From behind this defence they maintained a hot fire on the assailants for a quarter of an hour, when only five cartridges being left, they were rescued by the advance of our troops, who "found the pair grim and lonely, upwards of thirty of the enemy having fallen by their prowess." The subsequent loss of Lieut. Bird in the fatal retreat, is among the most melancholy results of that deplorable event.

Brigadier Shelton having secured this fort, obtained possession of four others, but not without a loss of 300 killed and wounded. The forts were found to contain 1400 mounds of grain; only one-half of which could be brought away before night fell. Capt. Boyd requested of the Brigadier that a guard might be placed over the remainder; but this was refused, and on the following morning the grain was gone!

On the 13th November there was another engagement with the enemy who had taken possession of the heights to the west of the cantonments, and planted two guns there, which gave no little annoyance. At the earnest entreaty of the Envoy, the General agreed to send out a large party under Brigadier Shelton; but the force was not ready till 3 p. m. The heights were carried with some difficulty; but only one gun was brought away, and that after dark. The enemy kept up a hot fire on the other gun; but as the Envoy had sent a message entreating that no effort might be spared to complete the triumph of the day by bringing away both of them, Major Scott of H. M. 44th repeatedly urged his men to descend and drag the 6 pounder, but with a few exceptions, they remained immovable. Nor could the sepoys be induced to follow where the Europeans would not advance; the gun was therefore spiked. This, says Lieut. Eyre, was the last success our arms were destined to receive. Henceforward the narrative of operations is but a "catalogue of errors, difficulties and disasters following close on each other, which disgusted our officers, disheartened our soldiers, and finally sunk us all into irretrievable ruin, as though Heaven itself, by a combination of adverse circumstances, for its own inscrutable purposes, had planned our downfall."

On the 15th of November, Major Pottinger and Lieut. Haughton, of the Goorka Regiment came in from Charekar, both severely wounded, the only survivors, except a few sepoy, of that gallant corps. The exertions they made to maintain their position, without success, amidst unexampled difficulties, present one of the brightest but most melancholy records of this disastrous campaign. On this occasion Major Pottinger not only sustained, but augmented the high reputation which he had acquired through the civil war for his defence of Herat.

The success obtained on the 13th by the capture of the Roeka bahee and other forts, made so deep an impression on the enemy that they refrained from annoying our troops for three days; but the incessant fatigue to which they were subject, from the routine of garrison duty proved a severe trial to their health and spirits. There was moreover a strong probability of an early fall of snow. Every consideration therefore appeared to recommend a retreat to the strong hold of the Bala Hissar. The Envoy was from the first greatly in favour of this movement, and it is now certain that if it had been adopted at this period, it would have been successful; and that the troops, though they might have been subjected to great straits, would have been enabled to hold out till they were relieved. But the Brigadier was strongly opposed to it, in consequence of the difficulties he saw in the way, though by a singular inconsistency he was eager to try a much longer and more difficult retreat to Jellalabad, through some of the most difficult defiles in the world—an attempt which must have compromised the safety, not only of the Cabul army, but of the brave troops under General Sale. The project was therefore laid aside for the present, but subsequently discussed on successive occasions, on each of which the dangers of the movement were found to have been greatly increased.

On the 18th November, a reply was received from General Sale, to the regulation which had been made to him to return to Cabul. He represented it as utterly impracticable. The hope of his return had served to buoy up the spirits of officers and men, and great was the disappointment when all succor from that quarter appeared hopeless. The eyes of the army, which ought to have been turned upon itself and its own prowess, were now directed to the Candahar force as the last resource; but the relief which had been sent on from that post, was unable to reach Ghuzni, and returned to its own cantonments.

The troops had hitherto been supplied with provisions from the Beymaroo Hill, the proprietor of which sold them at a high price to the Envoys. Lately, the enemy had daily taken possession of it, and thus intercepted the supplies. It was estimated only half a mile from the cantonment; and the upper houses commanded a portion of the Mission compound. On the 23d, a large body of the enemy was seen proceeding towards it, and it was resolved to anticipate them. Major Swayne, of the 5th N. I., was appointed to the duty, but the affair was as shamefully mismanaged as all the others had been. "His orders were to storm the village; he would neither go forward nor retire, but concealing his men under cover of a low wall, maintained a useless fire all day on the houses at Beymaroo." The troops retired without having accomplished any thing. The next day, decided the fate of the Cabul force. After the return of Major Swayne's force, a conference was held at the General's house, when on the special recommendation of the Envoy, it was resolved that Brigadier Shelton should take the village by assault on the following morning and maintain it against any number of the enemy. A force consisting of 1100 men moved off at 2 A. M. in perfect silence unobserved the Hill, and placed the gun in position. The enemy in the village, few in numbers, were taken by surprise, and forsaking the open space, took shelter in the houses and towers. It was urged on the Brigadier to storm the village while the panic lasted; he refused to do so. As day dawned, the enemy hurried from the village, so that not forty were left. A party under Major Swayne was ordered to storm the village. He missed the principal entrance, and approached a wicket which was barricaded; the enemy's marksmen took a sure and deadly aim at his men, and the Brigadier seeing large bodies pouring forth from the city of Cabul, recalled him.

The city and country around was now roused; large masses of the enemy moved on towards the conflict, till more than ten thousands were engaged. Unfortunately, only one gun had been taken out; it was well served till the vent became too hot, and its fire slackened just at the time when it was most needed. A hundred sappers had accompanied the troops to throw up a saps, or stone breast work, they were never ordered to do so; and the troops were thus exposed to the unmitigated fire of the enemy's rifles. Though the officers performed prodigies of valor, the men were panic struck, gave way, and at length fled. The Ghazies rallied upon them. "All order," says Lieut. Eyre, "was at an end; the entreaties and commands of the officers, in endeavoring to rally the men, were not listened to, and an utter rout ensued down the Hill in the direction of the cantonments, the enemy closely following, and the cavalry in particular making a fearful slaughter among the retreating fugitives.—Had not Osman Khan voluntarily halted his followers and led them off of all who went forth that day to battle not one would probably have returned to cantonments." The solitary gun was carried off in triumph. Thus ended the unhappy 23d of November, which, as the Afghan afterwards asserted, gave them the first positive assurance that the troops in the cantonments were entirely at their mercy. Lieut. Eyre notes no fewer than six military faults in this day's proceedings, and even those who have not made the art their study can perceive that it was lost entirely through the egregious mismanagement of the commander.

The troops had now lost all confidence. The officers gave way to the most gloomy forebodings. The spirits of the men were broken, the influence of the officers declined daily, and the reins of discipline were relaxed, till animation became almost extinct, and the enemy beset them with impunity from under the ramparts of the garrison. Even at this moment of universal despondency, Lieut. Eyre thinks that if our affairs had been in the hands of some master mind, they might have been retrieved. Capt. Conolly, immediately after the disaster at Beymaroo, wrote from the Bala Hisar to the Envoy, urging an immediate retreat to that fortress as affording the only chance of safety. But the General raised a host of objections to this measure, and he was vigorously seconded by Brigadier Shelton; and thus the last hope of saving the army vanished. Then commenced a series of ignominious negotiations, which were carried on with perfidy, and ended in the annihilation of the army. After the 23d of November, the commanding officers seem to have resigned themselves to the current of circumstances without a single effort to stem it. A bridge had been thrown over the river. General Shelton, seeing its vast importance in case of a retreat of which he never lost sight, had urged the erection of a field work to protect it. There was a small unfinished fort near at hand, which the sappers might have completed in a single night; and a small detachment might from thence have commanded the bridge. The enemy approached it on the 24th with the view of demolishing it; not a company was moved out to disturb them, and in the course of ten days the bridge was gone. Mahomed Sheriff's fort was left in charge of only a small detachment. The enemy attacked it, and the soldiers of the 44th packed up their bedding and retreated to the cantonment; the sappers jumped over the wall and escaped, and the Mahomedan flag was seen waving over it, as if in derision of our dastardly inactivity.

On the 25th of November, the negotiations commenced by an overture from Osman Khan, a chief supposed to be favourable to our interests. His communication was friendly and the Envoy immediately laid it before the General for his opinion. The General replied that we had been in a state of siege for three weeks; that the Camp was without provisions for man or beast, and that as it was impossible to retain our position in the country, the Envoy ought to avail himself of the opportunity of treating.—That same day a salute was fired in the city of Cabul to welcome Akbar Khan, who, after having been a fugitive for two years, had made his way to the city, and from that time took a principal share in the transactions by which the ruin of the army was consummated. On the 27th two deputes from the assembled chiefs came into the cantonments, with the terms of the treaty, which were no humiliating that the Envoy was obliged to reject them with indignation. The deputes took leave of him with the exclamation, "We shall meet again in battle." "We shall at all events meet at the day of judgment," replied the Envoy. Hostilities, which had been suspended during the negotiations, commenced again on the 1st of December by an attack on the Bala Hisar, which was bravely repulsed. On the 5th, the enemy completed the destruction of the bridge. On the 8th they obtained possession of Mahomed Sheriff's fort, as we have already mentioned, owing to a fresh exhibition of their New Orleans courage, by the 44th. On this occasion Lieut. Eyre deems it necessary at once to disclose the truth. It is notorious, he says, that H. M. 44th had been for a long time previous to these occurrences in a state of woful deterioration—military demoralization he should have said. The Regiment in question fell a prey to a disease which the Horse Guards alone could have remedied. Why then, in this state of military disease, was it sent into a country like Afghanistan, with the disease festering in its vitals?

On the 7th it was discovered that one day's provisions only remained in store, and Capt. Hay was sent to the Bala Hisar for a supply. Here it is worthy of remark, that the communication between the cantonments and the Bala Hisar seems to have been maintained up to this time without any interruption, and that large convoys were allowed to pass and repass without molestation. How easy would it have been to have gradually conveyed all that was valuable from the cantonments into that fortress, and then to have dashed on with the troops and at once made good the passage to it. On the 8th a Council of war was held in which some of the members thought to mend their position by a very unscrupulous abuse of the Envoy. It ended with a letter to him, dolefully describing the state and prospects of the garrison and begging him to open negotiations. This paper was signed by General Elphinstone, Brigadiers Shelton and Anquetil, and Col. Chambers. But as recrimination would not give food to the starving troops, it was determined the next morning to attack the fort of Khaja Haseenah. The next morning it was found that no orders had been given for the attack, and the project fell to the ground.

We beg the reader to bear in mind that this Council of war in which the Envoy was made the object of personal abuse, and in which the officers united in interesting him to capitulate, was held on the 8th. He will also keep in view the fact, that on the next day, the 9th, intelligence having been received of a victory gained by Sir Robert Sale at Jellalabad, the Envoy conceived it might have the effect of "mollifying the General's opinion regarding the necessity of an immediate negotiation with the rebel chiefs," and addressed him on the subject. The General in his reply declared, that the intelligence, however pleasing, could not in the slightest degree influence our position so as to affect the expediency of our treating. It was probably after the receipt of this last communication that the Envoy wrote that letter to his relative, Mr. Erskine, for assisting in the publication of which he has been punished by a six months' suspension from office and pay. The letter thus acquires a double interest from the circumstances under which we now know it to have been written, and from the ample and decisive corroboration its statements have received from the pen of Lieut. Melville, Lieut. Eyre, and Lady Sale.

"Calcutta, December 9th, 1841.—We have now been besieged thirty-eight days by a contemptible enemy, whom the cowardice of our troops, and certain other circumstances which I will not mention, have emboldened to assume an attitude of superiority. Our provisions will be out in two or three days more, and the Military Authorities have strongly urged me to capitulate. This I will not do till the last moment. We have resources that a few in coming to our assistance from Candahar, and I sincerely trust it may, for we have no energy or spirit amongst these here."

Urged by the impotency of the Generals, the Envoy opened negotiations with the chiefs, whom he went out to meet on the plain towards Shah Sang, attended by Capt. Lawrence, Mackenzie and Trevor. After the usual salutations, Sir William explained to them that the continuance of the British army in Afghanistan appeared to be repugnant to the feelings of the nation, he was willing to enter into negotiations to smooth over present difficulties, and to re-establish mutual friendship between the British and Afghan Governments. He then read to them a paper in which he had written down the basis of the treaty, as it was called, rather we should say, the terms of unconditional surrender. The principal articles were that the British troops should entirely evacuate Afghanistan; that Dost Mahomed Khan and his family should be released; that Shah Sojah should have the option of remaining at Cabul or returning with the British troops to Loodianah; that no British force should ever be sent again into Afghanistan, unless called for by the Afghan Government; that all spare ammunition, guns and small arms should be given up; and that the Chiefs should supply the troops with ample provisions and means of conveyance. To these terms the Afghans agreed, never intending however to fulfil one of them; and thus was concluded the most disgraceful convention into which we had ever entered since our victorious standard was unfurled at the battle of Plassey. The palliation which Lieut. Eyre offers for this ignominious treaty, must not be omitted:

"It is undeniable that Sir William Macnaghten was forced into this treaty with men whose power he despised, and whose treachery was proverbial, against his own judgment, by the pressing representations of our military heads. It is no less true that whatever may have been his political remissness or want of foresight before the rebellion broke out, he had, throughout the perils that afterwards assailed him, displayed a truly British spirit of unflinching fortitude and indomitable energy, and that, under more auspicious leaders, to have stimulated the zeal and valour of the troops, and to have cheered them under the trials and hardships they were called on to endure; and I can safely add, without fear of contradiction, that scarcely an enterprise was undertaken throughout the siege, but at the suggestion, and even the entreaty, of the Envoy, he volunteering to take on himself the entire responsibility. Justice demands this tribute to the memory of one, whose acts, as they will assuredly undergo the severe scrutiny of his countrymen, it therefore becomes the duty of every eye-witness, who bears testimony on the subject, not only to shield from misrepresentation, but, where they are deserving of it, to hold up to public admiration. I am led to write this solely by my public knowledge of the man."

No sooner had the treaty been concluded than Sir W. Macnaghten proceeded to set upon it with strict fidelity. The troops in the Bala Hissar were ordered to evacuate it, and this was accomplished in a day or two, though not without some difficulty, owing to Akbar Khan's treacherous attempt to get possession of that fortress. The day after the treaty of evacuation had been agreed to, the Chiefs made an unexpected proposition that Shah Sojah should continue King on two conditions, that of giving his daughters in marriage to the leading Afghan chiefs, and of abandoning the offensive practice of making the chief nobles wait for hours at his gate for an audience. To these conditions he yielded a reluctant assent.

As the retreat had now been determined on, the General ordered that some ammunition should be distributed among the camp followers, and commanding officers were ordered to indent for new arms and accoutrements. But so completely were the reins of discipline relaxed, that many of the officers sent their men to help themselves, and a scene of disgraceful confusion and plunder ensued, the camp followers rushing in by hundreds and taking away whatever they pleased. The treaty had been made on the 11th, and the first article of it was, that immediate supplies should be furnished to the troops, but no supplies were furnished for the next five days, and the horses and cattle were kept alive by eating their own dung, while the camp followers were destitute of any other food than that of the animals which expired daily from cold and starvation.

On the 18th the Chiefs stated that they would accept no provisions unless the Envoy proved his sincerity by giving up all the forts around the cantonments. As our troops were now completely at the mercy of these perfidious and blood-thirsty chiefs, the forts were evacuated and immediately filled with Afghans,—our Afghan "allies," as the order of the day styled them! and thus did they obtain possession of posts which commanded every part of the cantonments—and they kept their word by sending in one day's supply of oats.

On the 18th the position of the army was rendered still more desperate by a fall of snow, the first of the season, which lay five inches deep on the ground.

On the 10th, Sir William wrote to Col. Palmer at Ghazni, to Capt. Rawlinson at Candahar, and to Major Leese at Khelat-i-Ghilzie, to evacuate those forts at the earliest season fit for marching. On the 20th the Envoy had another conference with the chiefs on the bank of the canal. Their demands rose with our submission, and they now insisted, that a portion of our guns and ammunition should be given up, as a proof of our sincerity, and that Dringler Shaiton should be surrendered as an hostage. These demands were resisted. The object of the Chiefs was to prevail on the Envoy to treat with them separately; but he resolutely persisted in negotiating with them only as a body. Sirdar Mahomed Akbar at this interview took a great fancy to a brace of pistols which were in Capt. Lawrence's belt; and they were resigned to him at the Envoy's particular request, who little thought that within three days, they would be made the instrument of his own death. On the 21st, Sir William again met the chiefs at a conference, and it was resolved that four hostages should be given up. On the 22d there does not appear to have been any meeting between the chiefs and the Envoy, but he sent his own carriages and horses as a present to Akbar Khan.

That same night this man spread the toils in which the unfortunate Envoy was caught. At night, Capt. Skinner arrived at the Cantonment accompanied by the Sirdar's cousin, and the Lo-hanze chief, who brought a letter from Akbar Khan, in which he represented that it was folly to hope for any permanent treaty with the body of rebel chiefs, who had each his own interest in view; that he was grateful for the treatment which his father and his family had received from the British Government, and that he was ready to throw himself heart and soul into our interests, and to deliver up Ameemola Khan, supposed to be the most inveterate of our enemies, on condition that he should be made Vizier under Shah Sojah who was to remain King; that he should receive a large sum of money; and that our troops should evacuate Afghanistan in eight months. The unhappy Envoy, distracted by the desperate position of our troops, affixed his signature to the treaty. The whole of this negotiation was a villainous scheme got up by the chiefs to test his sincerity, and, as we may suppose, to afford some justification of his perfidious seizure the next day.

Sir William refrained from communicating the fact of this treaty to those whom he had been accustomed to consult. The next morning he directed the General to have two Regiments and two guns in readiness for action at a moment's notice. He left the cantonments at 11 A. M. "His accustomed calm and collected manner appears to have left him." On being told that the garrison was not on the alert, he replied rather petulantly: "It is all of a piece with the military arrangements throughout the siege." On approaching the banks of the Canal he unfolded the scheme to his aide; and when they represented the danger of it, he replied: "Dangerous it is, but if it succeeds, it is worth all risks; the rebels have not fulfilled even one article of the treaty, and I have no confidence in them; and if by it we can only win our honour all will be well. At any rate, I may rather suffer a hundred deaths than live the last six weeks over again."

The catastrophe is well known. The Envoy met the assembled chiefs—and among them was the brother of Ameemola, whose surrender was to be a part of the treaty then to be ratified. Had he not been labouring under a singular infatuation of mind, occasioned by six weeks of unrelieved mental anguish, this circumstance alone would have caused him to perceive the treachery of Akbar Khan. He presented him with a fine horse he had bought of Capt. Grant; dismounted, and threw himself along the bank, on a horse cloth, and was instantly seized by Akbar Khan, and dragged along. He resisted this violence, and Akbar Khan drew forth the pistol the Envoy had given him, and shot him dead. Capt. Trevor was immediately after hacked to pieces, and Captains Lawrence and Mackenzie were saved only by the exertions of some of the chiefs.

(To be continued.)

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JUNE 15.

—Among our selections will be found a brief report of the business done at the last meeting of the Agri-Horticultural Society. Mr. Spence's proposal for extending the Society's assistance to a new association, the Floricultural, which was to have come forth under his auspices, fell to the ground; the mover of the motion not having been present.

—The sum collected for a bust of Dr. Carey, the founder of the Agri-Horticultural Society, is about 1400 Rs. quite enough to procure one from a first rate, though not perhaps from the first rate artist in London. The only good likeness of Dr. Carey, was painted by his friend Home, and is now in the Library of Sturges College near London. That which Mr. Robinson spoke of as existing in Calcutta, was begun by Chalmers for the writer of this notice; but it turned out to be a failure, and the article was so much disgusted that he would not go on with it. It remained unfinished in his studio when he left India, and has shared the fate of his collection.

The pilgrims to Jagannath this year, we are told in the Hurkur, have reached the shrine with few casualties. Some cases of Cholera had occurred. The crowd of devotees is said to greatly exceed that of the last year, that the price of grain has been doubled.

An official notification in the Calcutta Gazette of yesterday evening abolishes the post of Envoy at the Court of Lahore and of Secretary of Legation. Col. Richmond becomes therefore Governor General's Agent in the North West Frontier. These rapid changes of the nature of public appointments, cannot fail to infuse a serious injury on the character of the administration. Burdick and the Sagar and Norwalka territories are however exempted from the jurisdiction of Mr. Clerk, and are to continue under his Lordship's own superintendence.

FRIDAY, JUNE 10.

The Delhi Gazette states that serious differences have arisen between the Hindoos and Mahomedans at Muttia. The indiscreet exhibition of the Gates at this celebrated shrine, has doubtless contributed to inflame the Hindoos and to exasperate the Mahomedans, and it may possibly be found to lead eventually to a serious disturbance.

An abstract of the receipts and disbursements of the General Committee of the Cabot Relief Fund is published in the Delhi Gazette, from which it appears that the amount actually collected amounts to 300,338 Rs. the amount expended, to 70,002 Rs. and the available balance in hand to 230,336 Rs.; in addition to which the following dependencies remain to be received. Interest on deposits, 7000 Rs.—unrealised subscriptions, about 10,000 Rs.—and refund of advances 5000; when these sums have been realised the balance in hand will be, 3,17,451 Rs.

The Madras papers describe the effect of the late gale in the interior of the country as having been very destructive. Whole villages have been swept away; more than 10,000 head of cattle have been destroyed, more than sixty lives lost, and property to the amount of more than a lakh of Rupees destroyed.

All Murad, our ally in Sindh, recently obtained possession of the person of one of the refractory leaders by treachery and brought him to Mr. Charles Napier. The General, like a gallant soldier and a true Briton, declared in open court that the English resorted to no such ignominious and dishonourable means, and set him at liberty.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17.

The last mail brings intelligence of the safe arrival of that noble vessel the Southampton at Portsmouth. The passengers were expected to reach London a few hours before the Marseilles mail started. All the passengers were well with the exception of Dr. Voigt, whose friends will be sorry to hear that the voyage had not improved his health. The attacks of epilepsy had come at more rapid intervals, and greatly affected his mind. The Southampton was to leave England again at the end of July, and would be ready for a return voyage in the middle of January. We hope, that the notwithstanding the competition of the steamers, Capt. Bowen will be enabled to sail with a full ship.

The grand Jury has thrown out the Bill for murder against Eastman and others, and a fresh Bill for manslaughter is to be preferred against them.

The Madras papers announce the total loss of the Arctis Thompson, which foundered at sea, on the 23d of May. Part of the crew, consisting of the Captain and five men, were in open boats from the Tuesday morning to Friday morning, when they were picked up by a native vessel and landed at Coringa. The Chief Mate and third Mate, the carpenter, steward, cook, and two seamen, went down in her, not having been able to swim off to the boat.

The Englisman has been favoured with a Memoir on Asphalitis Mastis, as applicable to flooring, roofing, &c. by an officer of Engineers. We have been for some time aware that the work has been passing through the press, and we hope it will obtain the widest circulation, which the enthusiastic author can desire. This composition is found to be far preferable to tar, which has latterly been found so valuable for floors by its long resistance of moisture. It is scarcely possible to confer a greater blessing on Bengal and all those provinces in Asia of which humidity is the crying sin, than by introducing the use of a material which will at once protect the floor from the inconvenience and danger of dampness, and from the deprivations of the white ants.

The Englisman has the following melancholy news from Ghazepore.

"I sent you word in my last, that the Cholera had nearly ceased to be known in H. M. 29th, but since then a more fearful disease (if possible) has been to this rank of these unfortunate Regiment. The Medical men call the disease that is now raging here 'Apoplexy of the hot winds' is being similar in its appearance and result to a malady which proved so fatal at Chumna some years ago. No less than 40 cases have already been admitted into the Hospital, one-half of which have ended fatally, and many of the remaining I much fear will, ere this reaches you, be numbered with the dead."

There was a hope held out sometime since in the Bombay papers, that a communication by mail might be opened between Bhoj and Hyderabad so as to ensure a daily transmission of Mails to and from Bhoj, but the Government Gazette seems to doubt the feasibility of it, as the intermediate country belongs to Shere Mahomed, who is up in arms against us.

The accounts from Gwalior of the 4th instant state, that a revolution has taken place there; the Regent approved of by our Government, during the minority of the young Rajah, has been overpowered by a large force, and obliged to fly the country. The houses of all his friends have been plundered. The influence of our Resident is gone, and his authority openly defied. The usurper has possession of the Royal palace and treasures, and is supported by the army. Our principle of non-interference lies up our hands.

MONDAY, JUNE 19.

The Sher of this morning states, that the Somerset Pinnace and Somerset accommodation Boat is towed by two Iron Steamers, reaching Moungy on the 19th. These are the vessels proceeding to Allahabad to bring down Lord Ellenborough. They were not likely to reach their destination before the 22d or 23d. His Lordship was expected to reach Allahabad on the 7th, and would probably receive his May letters by the 12th or 13th, and would therefore be ready to embark immediately; but he is not expected, and indeed cannot reach Calcutta before the first week in July.

The same journal tells us, that it is very strongly rumoured that Lord Ellenborough intends to give the Vicar Apostolic of Bengal 5000 Rs. for the poor of that faith; and the like sum for a stained glass window for the Chapel of the Namany. If this be true, what will the gentleman for the University of Oxford say? Is our contemporary ardent when he asserts, as he appears to do, that Lord Ellenborough, while he strongly disapproves of Lord Auckland's political measures highly approves of his liberality, and that he is resolved to imitate it, and again to send 5000 Rupees a month from Government House to the Dispersal Charitable Society.

The latest intelligence from Sindh is from Karachi, the 27th May. The Highlanders have 200 ill in hospital at Hyderabad, and the regiments a little above 400 strong. The weather is hot and the wind scorching. As we write this notice the thermometer before us is 94, the highest point the mercury has yet reached, but what is this to 120 in the tent in Sindh! Five officers have been carried off.

The Delhi Gazette Press says, that His Majesty the King of Delhi has been so much edified by Mr. Macaulay's speech on the Sonmuth Gates, that he has ordered it to be translated into Persian. The speech, which was the speech of the evening, deserves to be translated; but we pity the poor wretch who was set to find suitable expressions in the Persian for Macaulay's magnificent eloquence.

The Delhi Gazette informs us that the Sirdar Mahomed Akbar Khan has sent a present of six horses to the Shere Singh; and that Futtah Jung, who ascended the rocky throne of Cabul on the murder of Shah Sojah, and came away with our army, presented himself at the Lahore Court, in great pecuniary distress and was ordered to resign 200 Rupees.

The Hurkur gives circulation to a report that all the Danish settlements in this country—meaning their Tranquebar and Serampore—have been sold for 15 lakhs of Rupees. The report is premature. The Parliament of "Young Denmark" has been urging the sale on the King ever since it had a voice, and the King has instructed Mr. Haasen to open negotiations, but it seems the parties are not agreed on the price, and the matter has been referred back to Europe. We shall not lower our Scandinavian flag much before this day twelve month.

In the report of the last meeting of the British India Society we are told that the Report of the Committee on the new Act for the appointment of Magistrates was brought up, and that a part of the Committee was for striking it, but the majority resolved to go up and thank Government for it.

The Fourth Session of the Supreme Court was opened on the 12th instant. The cases for trial are few, but it is remarkable that in the Grand Jury, there is not a single Civilian. They are all merchants or Native gentlemen. This undue partiality for the mercantile community is scarcely fair.

TUESDAY, JUNE 20.

Papers have been received from Mouleina to the 21st May. They contain little intelligence of importance except that the impostor who has for some time disturbed the province has been seized and brought to Mouleina. A proclamation from Major Broadfoot, the Commissioner, denouncing the conduct of a Burmese officer who has aided a British subject, will be found among our extracts. It breathes a spirit of very worthy of the British Government, and will doubtless put an end to the annoyance to which British traders on the Salween have been subject. From it we learn that gun boats have been placed on the river for the protection of the trade, with directions to afford aid to those who are threatened by the Burmese. We have just heard that Mr. Blandell, has been deprived of the Straits Government; to which he had recently been appointed, and thus the cause of his deposition is the fact of his having placed gun boats on the Salween for this same purpose, viz. for the protection of our trade. We shall make more particular enquiry about this measure which wears at present all the appearance of vindictiveness, and offer our own observations on this extraordinary procedure next week.

Mr. Crisp, an English trader at Rangoon, has been ordered by Tharavady to quit the Burmese territories—he had previously left them—after having written a letter which appeared in the Calcutta Star, in which the misrule of that Government was severely exposed. We did not know that the King of Burmah read the Star as well as the Englisman. Mr. Crisp has come forward to make the Star known, and now declares that the Burmese Government has five cardinal virtues. 1. It gives cheap food; 2. cheap

Gentlemen; your reputation and mine are inseparable, and I assure you that my best exertions shall be united with you to defend our private character as gentlemen and our military character as soldiers.

I have, &c.
(Signed) C. J. Xavier,
Major General and Governor of Sind.
(True Copy.)
P. McPHEE, Major, Military Secretary.

—Bon'ny Courier, June 6.

We have seen a great many contrivances in Calcutta, for every damp floor, sheets of lead, roman cement, plaster of Paris, and tar or pitch have all been tried with various success. We have now before us a Memoir on Asphalte, Mastic, as applicable to Flooring, Roofing, Hydraulic works, &c., in India, by an Officer of the Engineers. The author remarks that the materials in common use in India for these purposes, are frail and perishable, unable to resist the wear and tear to which they are exposed from a variety of causes, and afford little protection from damp or from the attacks of white ants or other insects.

The employment of the proposed bituminous cement, was suggested by finding that it had been employed in some of the fortifications at Plymouth supposed to be of Roman construction. These works having been pulled down about 45 years ago, experiments were made upon the utility of this cement, and the results were so successful, led to its extensive adoption, first in France and then in England. It appears to be a natural combination of bitumen with carbonate of lime. It is used by reducing the material to powder and mixing with a proportion of pitch and fine grit, and when in a semifluid state is poured into the crevices, which is required to fill, in moulds prepared to receive it. The Company who prepare it for sale in England, send it abroad in blocks which only require to be heated for use. When properly applied, it is found to resist the hardness of stone, with a light elasticity which prevents the surface from wearing or chipping, so that even carriage wheels do not affect it. One great advantage is, that it is not subject to removal, after having been laid down for years, as a terrace in one building, it may be taken up and removed to another. It is incombustible, so that it possesses a great advantage over wood.

But what is of more importance in Bengal, is its total imperviousness to moisture, so that it may be employed to line basins, vaults, reservoirs. On the contrary, it has been extensively employed for various purposes. It is stated that pavements laid down in Paris six years ago, are still in excellent preservation, and even the severe trial of cavalry barracks has not impaired it. It has been used largely for roads, and for the floors of public buildings, galls, colleges and churches. It has also been found highly useful as an hydraulic cement. For ornamental work it is particularly well adapted, admitting of being worked into patterns, or laid down in intricate colours like marble.

The author of the memoir thinks that the mastic might be made here with the earth oil of Rangoon, after collecting the naphtha. He calculates the expense at about Rs. 4 Rs. 12 to Rs. 15 per 100 feet, exclusive of the substructure over which it is to be laid. The memoir contains minute directions as to what shall be placed here, as they would be scarcely intelligible without figures, and those who undertake to work it will find of course make themselves perfectly masters of the mode of application, which will be explained in general applied to floors in Calcutta, for nothing can be worse than the soft chalk mortar with which they are now in general covered, making a most indispensible when being pulled down, causes an accumulation of dirt, and affords a lodgment for ants and other insects. In any option a floor that could be daily washed with clean water is better suited to this climate than any other, and when it can be made highly ornamental, as is the case with the Asphalte mastic, it unites beauty with utility, and is a substance which cannot be matched by any other substance, except the very expensive ornamental marbles. The Metallic Hall would afford an excellent opportunity of trying the mastic, if it were in sufficient quantity. The author of the memoir states that an experiment has been already tried, and we believe with perfect success. Any quantity could be procured from the English land if time were allowed.—Eng. June 17.

NOTIFICATION.

BY MAJOR G. RICHARDSON, C. B.
Commissioner in the Tanjore Province.
1. Credible information has been received, that the Burmese Officer at Kokooret has arrested and imprisoned a British subject, named Nya Shway Gye, who was possibly coming down the Salween River, with a raft of timber.

2. The same Burmese Officer is reported to have detained a party on frontier, belonging to British subjects, coming down the River Salween, and to have stationed armed men to compel them to land on the Burmese bank of the river.

3. Explanations have been demanded on this subject from the Governor of Martaban under whose orders the Officer at Kokooret is, and there can be no doubt they will be promptly afforded, and such reparation made as the case demands.

4. But in the mean time, the Commissioner notifies to all British subjects, that the navigation of the Salween River is entirely open to them; and that no Government will, on their own, have any right to levy duties on them, or their goods, while passing up or down this river.

5. They are, therefore, hereby forbidden to pay any duties to the Officer of any foreign Government on the Salween, or to land on the Burmese shore for this purpose, even though threatened by armed men. If so threatened they must immediately repair to the nearest gun-boat, and measures will be immediately taken for their effectual protection and recovery of their property.

6. All persons desirous of conveying timber or other merchandise up or down the Salween, are directed not to proceed without an armed guard, which will be furnished to them on application in Moulmein at the Commissioner's Office; at Kokooret to Captain McLeod, Principal Assistant to the Commissioner, or other European Officer, and at other parts of the Salween to the Officer in charge of gun-boats, or commanding the troops.

All persons paying duty to foreign Governments on the Salween, or landing on the Burmese shore by order of foreign Officers, or otherwise contravening the above Regulations, will be apprehended and sent to Moulmein for trial.

The British Government has not left the Authorities in these Provinces without abundant means of protecting its subjects from every enemy. This protection will be given to all who are peaceable and obedient; therefore no payment of duty or obedience to foreigners will be permitted.

7. The Commissioner thinks it right to make known to all who are in the country of the Burmese Officer at Kokooret is entirely without knowledge or of the Government of Ava, and will send down its measures on them, if they are not set as flagrantly against its known intentions; but in every case the inhabitants of these Provinces will receive the perfect protection which just rights which the British Government every where gives to its subjects.

By Order,
(Signed) D. RICHARDSON,
Commissioner's Office, } Asst. to the Commissioner, Tanjore Province.
21 June, 1848. } since.
—Cal. Star, June 20.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

MINE GOTT FRIEND.—You must be blind. You say in your last that you "carefully read over the form and manner of ordaining Deacons and Priests" and that you "could no where discover any error or view, which could be tortured into an obligation of perpetual war on Dissent." Where were your eyes? Where your spectacles? that you did not see what follows—or seeing did not discover what is meant?

The Bishop.—Will you be ready, with all faithful diligence, to banish and drive away (very warlike words) all erroneous and strange doctrines, contrary to God's word!

Answer.—I will, the Lord being my helper.

What is this, mine Gott Friend, but a vow, and a vow of aggression on Dissent which is "erroneous" enough, God wot: though unhappily very far from "warlike"! For look ye to the Preface to the Form and Manner of Ordaining Bishops, Priests and Deacons and what is the first thing that meets your eyes? Why this—"It is evident unto all men diligently reading Holy Scripture . . . from the Apostles' time there have been these orders of Ministers in Christ's Church, Bishops, Priests and Deacons." But Dissenters deny this, and many other Church declarations altogether, and therefore they are to be banished and driven away with all faithful diligence, as aforesaid. Verily, mine Gott Friend, thou must be blind.

Your's,
2d June, 1843. DOUGHERTYWILL.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN RHINE SOCIETY.—The 80th annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society was held at Exeter Hall, London, Thursday, June 24th, 1848. The total amount received during the year applicable to the general objects of the society (including subscriptions, donations, legacies, dividends on stock, and contributions of auxiliary societies) was 35,021. 7s. The amount received from sales of Bibles and Testaments was 25,271. 12s. 3d.; for drawings, 3671. 3s. 6d.; making the total amount received from all sources 92,471. 2s. 8d. The number of Bibles and Testaments issued by this society from their depositories at home, was 727,930; from their depots abroad, 524,230; making the total number 1,252,160. The total number of Bibles and Testaments issued since the commencement of the society in 1804 was 15,020,004. The report also stated that the sum of money which had been expended in China for the extension of the Society, amounted to 11,196; of which the sum of 15,000 was received from the Government, provided to state that very urgent demands were made by the natives of New Zealand for the Holy Scriptures, 2001. The amount received from Tahiti towards the funds of the society.

The forty-third annual meeting of the Church Missionary Society was held May 2nd, at Exeter Hall. The Report stated that the income during the past year had exceeded 115,000*l.*, a sum unprecedented in the history of this or any other religious society. In a short time the society will turn its attention to China.

The report read at the annual meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society entered into full details of the operations of that society during the past year in India and Africa, and which contained an allusion to a proposed alteration in the constitution of the society, whose labours it is proposed are long to extend so as to take in the western world, and the British Isles. It appeared that 32,500*l.* had been raised by means of the Jubilee fund, and that the other receipts for missionary purposes amounted to 21,196*l.*; of which the sum of 15,000*l.* was received from the Government, provided for special objects. The promulgation of the Scriptures, and the increase of the members and schools of the society during the year, had been considerable.

At a special meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, on 28th of April, the Rev. E. Easton, President, presided. The Rev. A. Campbell, Secretary, read a paper on the subject of the Archdiocese of Canterbury, President, unanimously elected secretary in the room of the Rev. A. M. Campbell, resigned.—London Mail.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Our Summary of the incidents of the last month comprises two events of an important character—the birth of a Princess, and the death of a Duke of Sussex. We have the happiness of stating that the latest bulletin gives a favourable report of the health both of her Majesty and the Royal infant. It is unfortunately that some suspicious news should be marred by the contrast of the mournful details that come upon us at the latest hour, of the funeral ceremony of her Majesty's Uncle, the Duke of Kent. However, may be found in the fact that all climes and conditions of men, whatever their political feelings, join in a tribute of respect and admiration for his memory. The Duke of Kent was a noble and generous spirit, and his death has excited the sympathy of all sorts of people. The Duke of Wellington in the House of Lords, and Sir Robert Peel in the House of Commons, vied with each other in expressions of esteem and eulogy towards him. As a politician he was consistent, as a member of the Royal Household and dignified, and as a Christian and a man he fulfilled his duty, by the exercise of his power, the support of the Government, and the support of the people of literature and the arts, and the friend of the desolate and the oppressed. Seldom in England has there been a more noble and generous spirit of regret at the loss of any public man.

In the political world nothing of a very exciting character has transpired during the month, if we except the agitation against the edifying measures of the Factory Bill. The number of petitions against this bill is almost unprecedented. The Dissenters object to it on the ground that it is an interference with the rights of conscience. It is seen, however, that Sir James Graham has consented to make some very essential modifications in the bill, although, at the present time, it seems, very doubtful whether the Government will be able to pass it. The Anti-Corn-Law League has continued its efforts.

A Mr. Bain, of Wotton, near Wick, announces the discovery of an electrical printing telegraph, by means of which he can, "by one set of types, set up a newspaper in London and print it simultaneously in every town in England and Wales as fast as the steam-machine throws off the sheets."

On the 20th the first stone of the new courts of law in Lincoln's Inn was laid by Viscountess Folkestone, assisted by Lord Lyndhurst in the presence of a large assembly. After the ceremony was concluded, a dinner took place in the court of the Lord Chancellor. It was originally intended that Prince Albert should have performed the ceremony, but in consequence of not having a more suitable place to entertain his Royal Highness, it was abandoned. The Prince will, however, be invited to a magnificent banquet on the completion of the buildings. The erection is to be executed in the Tudor style, with red bricks and stone dressings. The roof will be of carved oak, the first of the kind since the time of Charles II., when Archbishop Juxon had the hall of Lambeth Palace, now the library of that venerable edifice, roofed so. The new hall at Lincoln's Inn is to be 120 feet long, 45 feet wide, and 65 feet high, being higher than any hall in England, except that of Westminster. At the lower end of the hall will be a magnificent vestibule, running to the height of the building, and grained on stone. Right and left of the vestibule will be the Brechers' counsel-room; and the drawing-room; and the library, to which access is to be had by an arched doorway from the vestibule, and a covered building. It will be 50 feet in length, 40 feet wide and 45 feet high. Judging from the plan of the erection, as also from the models, which exhibit universal admiration, the proposed erection will add ornament to utility. — London Mail.

At a meeting of the local council of the British Association held at Cork, it was resolved that this learned body should commence its next session at that city on 17th of August. The attendance is likely to be very large.

Sir Charles Metcalfe, the new Governor-General of Canada, arrived at Boston, on the 20th March. He had met with a storm on his passage to Halifax, and been most courteously received in the United States. Sir Charles had with him last season received Kingston.

Sir Charles Bagot had a serious relapse, and was understood to be again past hopes of recovery.

Boyer, President of Haiti, had arrived at Port Royal in the British brig of war, Ellen, having visited the government. He brought with him £300,000 of the West India Islands which have suffered by the earthquake are stated to be—Guadeloupe, Antigua, St. Kitts, Montserrat, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, St. Eustacia, and St. Martin; and the amount of British property destroyed, is estimated at 3,000,000 sterling; French, 1,000,000; Swedish, 3,000,000; and Danish, 4,000.

A second earthquake was experienced at the north point of Guadeloupe on the 3d of March. At the time a captain of a vessel off the north point of the island, stated that it shook the vessel with such severity that it was with difficulty the crew could keep their feet. A dense cloud of smoke ascended from the vicinity of the Brevoort, and serious fears were entertained for the safety of that place. It was quite sickly at Point à Petre, caused from the circumstances of the ruins of the town. The comet seen at St. Thomas's on the 2nd of March was so brilliant as to cause an alarm to the inhabitants. A shock of an earthquake was also felt at St. Thomas's on the 5th about half past nine o'clock at night. No material damage was done.

Accounts from Texas to the 18th ult. had been received at New Orleans. It was rumored, but the rumor wanted confirmation, that a proposition has been made by Captain John B. Breach to the General, to the Texas Government, to abolish slavery within the limits of the Republic; and that upon its agreeing to do so, he was authorized by that Government would effect the possible recognition of Texas independence by Mexico. — London Mail.

ACCIDENT TO MR. BRUCE. — The Bristol Gazette of Thursday says, "It is with regret we have to state that the valuable Mr. Bruce, the celebrated master has been placed in jeopardy by accident after a fall of an anvil which to amuse the children of a friend. The father and Mr. Bruce preceded by a friend, and, to pass the time, were playing a game of cards, and, after some time, when Mr. Bruce, playing a half sovereign in his mouth, it unfortunately slipped into the track, where it stuck, and every effort to remove it proving ineffectual, Mr. Bruce's head was called in, and an operation, by making an incision in the throat, determined upon. All endeavors to remove the coin from its very dangerous lodgment have proved ineffectual, although no less than three incisions have been made in the throat for that purpose by Sir B. Brodie, assisted by Mr. Aston Keys, Mr. Thompson, &c. The only mode by which amputation can be determined to be, is to cut through the windpipe, and the alveoli is, of course, in a liquid state. Mr. Bruce is in an extreme state of exhaustion." — Atlas.

THE PARIS AND ROUSE RAILWAY. — Two experimental trips have been made on the new railway between Paris and Rouse, which was publicly opened and inaugurated by the Duke of Nemours and Montpensier, on the 15th inst.

RAILWAY TAXATION. — A return to an order of the House of Commons, on the subject of railway taxation, has just been printed, and contains some interesting facts on that subject. The total number of English railways in 1833 was only 659½ miles, 182 by the Leicester and Swannington Company, and 621½ by the Liverpool and Manchester; whereas, during last session, the company alone had in construction, 22,500 miles; another (the Great Western), 25,044; a third (the Grand Junction), 13,545½; and a fourth (the South-Western), 13,044, being upwards of 77,000 miles, from four the principal companies. In 1837 we find the Greenwich Railway paying £382, and the Grand Junction and London and Birmingham then appearing for the first time, the former at £5,005, and the latter at £1,392. They have since been as high as Grand Junction (1840), 15,930; and London and Birmingham (1841), 56,237. The 6 duty exhibit a serious falling off in the amount of duty during the last year. — Hid.

ANOTHER EXPLOSION AT DUTCH CLIFF. — On Tuesday afternoon there was another explosion at Dover Cliff. This blast proved proportionally successful in effects to the original one, with the enormous quantity of 15,000 lbs. of gunpowder, the destruction of Roundabout Cliff was effected on the 30th of January. The mass of chalk operated on from which the explosion took place, was to the depth of sixty feet, was blown off by a blast consisting of 7,000 lbs. of gunpowder, on the 2d ult. The present blast consisted of upwards of 10,000 lbs. of gunpowder, which was placed in fifteen cells of chambers, at proper distances along the base of the chalky cliff about to be removed, and the conducting wires being properly placed, all were fired off at once, as on the last occasion, by an apparatus invented by the junior Engineer Mr. Hodges, which simultaneously communicates ignition by means of the voltaic battery to any number of wires attached to it, with a simple motion of the hand. This blast, like the others, was characterized by absence of noise or smoke, the only difference being that on the present occasion a large quantity of chalk blocks and rubbish was projected in the air to a considerable distance, and the shock was felt for hundreds of yards round, and the flowers created in the top of the cliff presented a most gorgeous appearance. This explosion, it is quite as great a sensation as the great blast of Roundabout. — Hid.

The Isle of Skye has within the last 40 years furnished the public service—21 Lieutenant Generals and 40 Majors General; 45 Lieutenant Colonels; 600 Majors; Captains, Lieutenants, and Subalterns; 10,000 foot soldiers; 120 pipers; 4 Governors of British colonies; 1 Governor General; 1 Adjutant General; 1 Chief Baron of England; and 1 Judge of the Supreme Court of Scotland. The Generals may be classed thus:—8 Macdonalds, 6 Macleods, 2 Macraes, 2 MacCullis, 1 MacKinnon, 1 MacQueen, and 1 Elder. The Isle of Skye is 60 miles long, and 20 broad. Truly the inhabitants are a wondrous people. It may be mentioned that this island is the birthplace of Colubus, the colubine hero mentioned in Ovid's poem. — London Mail.

A terrible and fatal explosion happened at Waltham on the 13th, at the Government-buildings for the manufacture of gunpowder. One of these was a room containing 200 casks of gunpowder, and was a narrow or buttress of solid material, twenty feet thick; in the first part there were, as we are to be ascertained, about 2,300 pounds of gunpowder, and in the second part, 2,500 pounds. The explosion was of about 170 yards from the southernmost of these, most the granulating-house, similar to the one just spoken of, but with two parts separated by a buttress. In one part of the coming-house seven men were working. Mr. Sudd, the master-worker, had just entered the building; and whether a bit of red had got into the machinery, or the men had violated the machinery do the approach of Mr. Sudd, who was rather severe from whatever cause, at five minutes before three o'clock in the afternoon the building blew up, with a loud explosion; and when it fell, it bore down with it, in a few moments the second part of the building blew up with another explosion—a minute more, and one part of the granulating-house blew up—and in a few moments a fourth explosion destroyed the second part of that. Of the seven men, five were carried to a great distance across the river, the body of one rising to such a height as to make an indication some inches deep in the ground where it fell; his body was blown off, legs broken, and one body was ripped up by Sudd was found a hundred and thirty yards from the building. One of the men had been half a century in the work. — Hid.

THE AERIAL STAIR-CARLAGE. — It is understood that the first line to be established is that to London, the carriages having the top of the Monument, fish-street-hill, every morning, and taking five minutes at the summit of the Great Pyramid, and returning, and to allow the passengers a short time to stretch their legs. From this point balloons will be occasionally started for the most important cities of the African Desert. The carriage is to be portable to India, thus (should the weather be foggy) affording to the traveller a delightful coup d'œil of the most interesting countries of the world. The arrangements are in every respect very complete. Lord Brougham is understood to have accepted the office of patron, being himself of rather slightly nature. The provision will be carried out for the consideration of the public, as by a new invention the absence of three sheep or goats, concentrated into a small fowling. The waiting-room for the ladies at the Great Pyramid, the most commodious kind, the ancient Egyptian style, the King Cheops being fitted up in the Oriental style for that purpose. Passengers who should wish to be dropped at any of the intermediate towns may be lowered by small hand balloons at the usual sub-prices. N. B. The "Rocket" Aerial Steam-carriage, will start on Monday next for a tour round the Coast, proceeding by many stages along the Milky Way. Sir J. Herschel has been engaged as conductor, and the only person who knows the exact road. — Peach.

There was a sale on 8th at Mr. Sotheby's of the very valuable collection of autograph letters, &c., and documents connected with English history, formerly the property of the celebrated antiquary Dr. Miller, Dean of Ely, and one of the founders of the Antiquarian Society, who died in 1784, together with many other remarkable autograph letters. Some of the letters from remarkable persons brought good prices: an autograph letter from Oliver Cromwell produced 42. 6s.; an autograph note of Oliver Cromwell for 71.; it was in fine preservation, and bore date 1648. A warrant for the payment of 1,000*l.* to the wife of John Hume, dated 1654, sold at 12. 1s.; an autograph letter from Dryden to his wife, 12s. 6d.; a letter from Charles I. to Sir F. Walsingham, 4*l.* 13s. 6d.; and a sign manual of Cromwell, 2*l.* 11s. A letter written by Dr. Johnson, purchased for 2*l.* 11s.; one from Lord Nelson, dated on board the Agamemnon, September 24, 1801, 3*l.* 3s. — London Mail.

At the last meeting of the Royal Society a paper was read "On a Method of proving the true leading properties of the Ellipse and Hyperbola," by Sir Frederick Pollock. The method, though founded on a well-known property of the circle, is described to us by a very concise and simple method, and is perfectly original, and demonstrated with great clearness and eloquence. That a good lawyer should also be a good mathematician is something to be envied, where should a first wrangler succeed if not at the bar? but that a gentleman at the head of his profession, and holding a public office of the first importance, should, and the multifarious and delicate duties which he has to discharge, and discharges so well as Sir Frederick Pollock does, be able to search a leisure hour to contribute to the philosophical transactions of his country, and endeavour to employ it, is surprising, if not indeed without a precedent in the history of Antiquaries-General. — Hid.

The Mercantile Advertiser contains the following curious and interesting statement:—"The census which was simultaneously taken in every parish in Ireland, on a given day, in 1841, and which has occupied a considerable staff in its preparation for publication, will soon be printed and laid before Parliament. A variety of curious and interesting details will be supplied for the first time. The exact amount of the population, rated according to sex and age, the districts which yielded the greatest number of male and female persons under restraint, with other statistical details, will, we understand, be given with a surprising degree of accuracy. The following is a return of the population."

	Males.	Females.
Leinster	963,747	1,008,594
Munster	1,182,192	1,209,671
Connaught	707,884	711,762
Ulster	1,161,046	1,224,579
	4,019,607	4,153,006
Total population	8,173,373
In 1821, the population was	8,601,857
In 1831, it was	8,173,373
In 1841, it was	8,173,373

Increase between 1821 and 1831 965,574
Increase between 1831 and 1841 407,483
" From this it appears that the increase during the ten years up to 1841 was 537,705 less than it had been in the ten years preceding. This extremely rapid rate of increase is certainly a remarkable and extraordinary fact. It is evident that, during the last ten years, there has been a very decided check to the progress of population in Ireland."

"The increase in England, during the ten years from 1831 to 1841, was 500,794, which was more than one-seventh upon the population of 1831."

The overland mail is arrived, and we should have believed that the nature of its intelligence was calculated to have been received with feelings of no ordinary degree of pleasure. The journals, however, seem to be far from entertaining plausible feelings at the news; and we must confess we are inclined to question the propriety of thus publishing for the well-informed eyes of foreign powers such wholesale condemnation which the Times and Chronicle level on the proceedings of the British Government. The following are the articles to which we allude:—

Our intelligence from India, which we announced in a second edition on Thursday, realises all our prophecies. The usual routine, consequent on our conquest, has been completed. Scinde is now annexed in the territory of the British Empire. Such is the termination of our negotiations for the navigation of the Indus. We began by treating for the privilege of traffic; we have ended by seizing a friendly territory. We first lulled the suspicions of the Ameyrs by professions of amity; we then supplied for the residence of agents, who were instructed to maintain a degree of friendly confidence, and to propose a reciprocity of commercial advantages with the natives; we finally drove their princes from their business-concerns, and courted them in their attempt to vindicate the honour of their country. We have commensurated by violence what we commenced in treachery. We will not attempt as yet to trace the progress of this new conquest. We are not at present sufficiently acquainted with the condition of the acquired territory, nor with the efforts already produced by its new relation to the British Government, to enable us to dispose to suggest immediate danger, even from so unjust an usurpation. Our Indian empire has been based upon a policy which if not altogether unaltered, is not altogether violent, must be acknowledged to have been not very scrupulous. And our political Asia have brought their own punishment along with them. With every addition to the bulk of our immense possessions, the difficulty of governing them has increased. Whenever our Indian power may be felt to be destroyed, there can be no doubt that the proximate cause of its fall will be—our own ruin. Until the arrival of our despatches with more ample intelligence, we are unable to speak distinctly as to the intentions of Lord Ellenborough—whether the brilliant victory at Hyderabad has elicited what his British appetite for conquest—whether he intends to emulate Lord Wellesley in a new field of foreign adventure, or Lord W. Bentinck in a course of domestic reform. We have been too long the victims of his letter of his vanity, and that he will now be aided by his professed intentions to cultivate the arts of peace in the vast empire which has been delegated to him.—Times.

In an early second edition of Thursday's Chronicle we were enabled to publish an outline of the intelligence from India in anticipation of the Governor-General's arrival at Hyderabad. The Governor-General had declared Scinde to be annexed to the British dominions. "This acquisition of territory and revenue (about 1,600,000,000) was found in Hyderabad," following immediately on the heels of military triumph, is too consistent with the history of our dominion in India to excite any surprise, after the victory of General Raghu at Hyderabad. When Buxar first applied for permission to pass up the Indus, he was told that he could not be allowed to "use the territory of the Ameyrs, for the soil the English looked upon they were sure to take." If this is not literally true, it may at least be said that the soil the English fought upon they are sure to keep. And prizes or fighting are never awarded if the prize be only brilliant conquest, and not the acquisition of the territory of the ruler for the time being. A political alliance—a treaty—a branch of treaty, real or implied—was a victory—then annexation of territory. Such is the progress of empire in India.

Two months ago we were begging a right of way for us through the territory of the Ameyrs. They granted it. We passed a treaty with the Ameyrs, and the Ameyrs, within a month of our receiving the tidings that the last of our soldiers had passed the Indus in safety, we have intelligence that the territory of the Ameyrs who had been our allies, and who had their people massacred, their capital demolished, and the whole country "declared to be annexed to the British empire," for all this there may be ample justification. We have received no information from Lord Ellenborough; and as we have been so often charged with insinuations to run down the character of the Governor-General, we also defer any opinion upon his share in the responsibility of these proceedings, until we have more detailed information than that contained in the brief notice of the Times of the 28th of June. But if Lord Ellenborough be not the most culpable, he is certainly the most unfortunate of Governors-General. Having declared his determination to turn the results into clear and palpable evidence of the people's improvement, and to confine the empire within the limits already established, the very essence of his government that follows this announcement is a military enterprise having few parallels even in the annals of Indian warfare, and an extension of territory that may compete with any former act of wholesale spoliation. Possibly, as we have suggested, Lord Ellenborough may have been driven, by considerations stronger than any of mere expediency, to perpetrate the policy by which we have acquired and governed India where we first set foot upon its soil; and that act, which has been justified by the necessities of a heavy capacity, may have been justified by military and political necessity. But a series of very strong necessity indeed must be made out to justify the public feeling in this country to the seizure of the territory and treasure of a powerful and hitherto an inoffensive, if not valuable ally.—Chronicle.

"The increase in Ireland, during the sanctorian years, was 407,872, which was little more than one-twentieth of the population of 1831.

"The increase in England has been in the ratio of nearly three to one, as compared with Ireland. This is the first time that Ireland has shown a less degree of increase than England."—London Mail.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—SLAVERY IN THE EAST.

—April 10.—Mr. S. Worsley called the attention of Government to a matter which deserved serious attention. He read in a list of names of persons for the house, having reference to the negotiations between Lord Ashburton and the United States, on the 8th article of the Treaty of Washington, the copy of a report forwarded to the Secretary of the United States by two officers of the American army, selected by that Government to make the report in question specially on the subject of the slave trade, and to state the extent and nature of the slave trade on the coast of Africa. After explaining their view of the arrangements which it would be desirable to make on the subject, these two gentlemen stated in this country, that the most surprising and astounding statement. Having referred to the slave trade on the west coast of Africa, these gentlemen proceeded to talk of the slave trade on the east coast, and stated:—"From what information we can obtain, it seems that a large trade is carried on by Portuguese colonists, the Arab chiefs, and sea-roving tribes. Their greatest markets are the Mozambique countries bordering on the Red and Persian Gulf, the Portuguese East India colonies, Bombay, and perhaps other British possessions in the East Indies. This part of the trade is probably in the hands of the Arabian merchants."

Sir R. Peel conceived that the hon. gentlemen were, of course, aware of the circumstances under which the document to which he referred had been communicated to the House. The noble Lord then proposed the Government to lay on the table certain papers referred to in the message of the President of the United States and certain papers in relation to the right of visit. He (Sir R. Peel) accepted the request, and among the papers he furnished was the report by two American naval officers; and he certainly did not consider himself entitled to exclude the passage referred to from that report, which contained the observations made by those two American officers to their own Government. But his hon. friend must suppose that any sanction he gave to the exclusion of the kind in question, because he (Sir R. Peel), in compliance with a motion for information, had laid the documents on the table of the House. At the same time, he was glad to have the opportunity of correcting the erroneous impressions to which the allegations in the report might possibly give rise. With respect to the slave trade being carried on by British subjects, in India, or natives of India under British control, there was no ground for believing that any such practice existed. This was a subject which had occupied much of the attention of the late and the present Governments—he alluded to the best mode of effectually suppressing everything partaking of the character of the slave trade and slavery in India. To this subject, it was but fair to say, Lord Ellenborough directed much attention, and many communications had taken place with respect to the alleged traffic of slaves on the coast of Africa. It was impossible to deny that such traffic did occasionally take place, and in the territories of the Nizam to a considerable extent; and that it occasionally found its way through the British territory into the interior of India. But the Indian Government had no control. In Nov. 1841, an agent of one of the Ameyrs of Scinde was brought to Bombay for taking four Arab girls from Scinde to Beiser, and he was tried, convicted, and sentenced to three or four years' imprisonment. The jury recommended him to mercy, but the Government refused to interfere, and the sentence was in course of execution. He was afterwards released, and the girls were taken in individual cases carried on in India, would be to make an assertion not consistent with fact. At the previous session at Bombay, for other purposes, had been brought to trial by the intervention of the British authorities for a similar offence, and were convicted and sentenced to five years' imprisonment. The Government had no objection to the slave trade in the territory of the Indian Government; but the case he had mentioned afforded a conclusive proof that the Indian Government were applying the British law as far as possible for the correction of this practice. There was a number of Arabs in some parts of India—persons who were really in the condition of slaves, but who called themselves the wives of their masters, and who lived, and were treated, as such. It was very difficult to detect them, and very difficult, with all the care and caution that could be adopted, to prevent occasional instances of slavery and the slave trade; but the impression that the paragraph referred to was intended to create, and which was intended to create, was that any slave trade was carried on by British subjects in India was without foundation. Every possible means were adopted to check the practice whenever it was found to exist. The coincidence of an act would come into force that very day which would have the effect of materially interfering with the possibility of the slave trade even by parties over whom the Indian Government had no control. By a recent regulation there had been established, under certain provisions, Vice-Admiral Courts on the coast of India, and the governors of all the British territories in India had been invested, by instructions sent out last summer, with the same powers as those possessed by the governors in the West Indies. On this day, as he had before stated, there came into force in India a measure of great importance. This measure, for amending the law respecting the condition of slavery within the territories of the East India Company, was founded on suggestions made by Lord Ashburton, who was to take effect on the 6th or 10th of April, 1843. The following was the substance of its enactments:—"1. It is hereby enacted, that any person who is not a British subject, in execution of any duty or of a contract, or for the enforcement of any demand of rent or revenue, shall not be sold as any person, or the right to the compulsory labour or services of any person, on the ground that such person is a state person, or a slave. 2. And it is hereby declared and enacted, that no right arising out of an alleged property in the person and services of another, or the slave shall be liable to any civil or criminal court or magistrate within the territories of the East India Company. 3. And it is hereby declared and enacted, that no person who may have acquired property by his own industry, or the assistance of any art, raffle, or profession, or by inheritance, assignment, gift, or bequest, shall be disposed of such property, or premises from taking possession thereof, on the ground that such person, or that the person from whom the property may have been derived, was a slave. 4. And it is hereby enacted, that any act which would be a penal offence if done by any man shall be equal to an offence if done to any person on the pretext of his being in a condition of slavery." He apprehended that these enactments would provide increased means for the suppression of the slave trade, and he thought he had satisfied the House that the attention of the Government had been for some years directed to this important subject.—London Mail.

DREADFUL SHIPWRECK.—The Sloop, West India Steamer, St. Pauline, on the 3rd of April, with the usual mails on board, and arrived at Corunna, where, having taken in mails, she left the harbour on her outward voyage at half past nine o'clock the same evening. She passed the lighthouse about an o'clock p.m., and was proceeding at full speed, when at about twelve o'clock midnight she struck upon a hidden rock. Immediately on the vessel striking, Capt. Dunning ordered the engines to be backed, and this having been done, she came apparently easy, the violence of the concussion having probably caused her to rebound from some slight danger. Her head was now put towards the shore, and all speed made, in the hopes of rounding the ship, and thus saving the passengers and crew. The injury she had sustained was, however, of too serious a nature to allow of this being accomplished, and within a very few moments of the ship striking, it became evident that she was setting fast by the head. She had still some way upon her, the engines having apparently suffered no injury, and when, while proceeding towards the shore, as described above, a general rush was made to the pinnace, which at that time was the only small boat on board, and when, after having been for some time, and having sent themselves, came out to those on board to "lower away," which was answered by some of the crew as soon as possible, and the vessel began to sink. The ship had still full speed upon her, and a heavy sea struck the boat as she floated for an instant, and swept every soul into the water. One or two sailors only, who, being out of the boat, were able to swim, and kept the vessel. Ten minutes only had now elapsed since the vessel first struck, during which every exertion had been made by the officers of the ship, with the exception of the crew, to save the lives of the passengers and crew. While thus engaged the boiler suddenly collapsed, and an immense quantity of steam, dust, and smoke, burst forth from the funnel, and the vessel lay on her back, and the vessel was now about to blow up, and two or three persons were so much alarmed as to jump overboard. By great exertion the last person was saved, and the vessel was now blown up, and in righting half filled with water. The rig had previously been lowered, and ten persons had got into her and rowed away. The first and second cutters were also affixed, enabled with the passengers and crew. Mr. Wilder, the chief officer, with Mr. Lane and two or three other officers, now lowered themselves into the life-boat, and brought her alongside the gangway. The engines had entirely ceased working from the moment of the explosion. The water had now reached the fire, and the ship, it was evident, could not float many minutes longer. Capt. Duncan and the other officers now handed the passengers into the life-boat, and endeavoured in the utmost to save all the female passengers. Fifty-two persons were already in the boat, and Capt. Duncan was still standing in the boat, when a general cry rose of "It is going!" and giving the necessary signals, she went down half filled with water. The life-boat now drifted away, and so great had been the confusion arising from the life-boat, that it was only then discovered that she had neither our nor rudder. Shoes and hats were used to bail out the water with which she was now then half filled, and after drifting about for a quarter of an hour, she fell against the second cutter, having Lieut. Hensworth, the Admiralty agent, and several others on board. From this boat they obtained one, and Lieut. Hensworth then returned to the wreck with the cutter; shortly after they fell in with the first cutter, which was greatly overboard. They took several persons from her, and obtained a bottom from Mr. Wilder, the chief officer, going on board the cutter, and taking the life-boat in tow, Curruveil being all the time visible. At daybreak, the mast from the first cutter was steered, and the boat, which was a legal one, when she started towards Corunna, and on entering the harbour was met by a Spanish launch, which coming out in quest of themselves in the hour of the catastrophe from those who escaped in the gig, which had made Corunna so early as five o'clock in the morning. The launch took the life-boat and came in tow, and brought them safely in, when the survivors were landed, and every attention paid to them by the authorities. At a short distance from the mouth of the harbour a signal was observed. A steamer here drove towards them, where it proceeded to the pinnace, described above as swamped at an early period of the catastrophe. It contained a young man named Michael Hendley. The steamer afterwards proceeded to the spot where the boat took place, and it appears that the ship sank in about three fathoms water, and about four miles from shore. Eight or ten persons were seen floating in the water, but they were dead, and as the upper portion of the boat and main masts were several feet above the surface of the water, they were enabled to hold on until daybreak, when they sinking, and the water rising, they were seen, and some boats put off to their assistance. Lieut. Hensworth, the Admiralty agent, had remained in the vicinity of the wreck during the night, but his boat was quite full, and he was finally unable to render any assistance to the unfortunate creatures who still clung to the rigging. The weather was tolerably calm, and the lives of the whole crew must inevitably have been sacrificed. The following is a list of passengers who are lost.—Mr. and Mrs. Fitzjames, four children, and servant; Mr. Haly; Mr. Montevray; Miss Bondy; the Rev. Mr. Bandy; Mr. Le Maie; Mr. Blakely; Royal Engineer; Mr. Burdell; Royal Engineer; Mr. Hunter; Mr. Nicolle; and Mr. Cartwright. Officers and crew lost 18. Total, 31.—London Mail.

In consequence of the loss of the Reliance and the Comet, East India men, of Cape Grimes, near Botocue-sur-Mer, the French Minister of Marine is having a maritime survey made of the coast of France, so as to ascertain the present state of the light-houses, and the erection of new ones may be more easily required, so as to prevent a similar catastrophe to that which happened to the above two ill-fated vessels. A similar survey is being made by the King of the Trinity House, as to the state and efficiency of the light-houses in the Channel and along the British coast, particularly that part facing France, the lights of the one (especially Dungeness and Cape Sable) being owing to the King for those of the other. The following appears in the Journal du Pat de Calais:—"A notice has been given by the Minister of Marine that the following light-houses at Dunkirk and France, and the defences of the de la Nord, have been completed, and will be lighted on the 1st of May next.—Dunkirk Revolving Light. The new light-house stands in lat. 51 deg. 33 min. N., and long. 2 deg. 25 min. E. The light is 100 feet high, and the light being 103 feet above the level of the sea, will be visible from a ship's deck at the distance of six leagues. On the first appearance of this light the present light of the de la Nord will be extinguished. Flare Light.—The new light-house, from which a flare light will be shown (on the 1st of May), stands in latitude 51 deg. N., and long. 2 deg. 6 min. 18 sec. E., of the coast of France, at the extremity of the harbour. The building is 83 feet high, and the light being 103 feet above the level of the sea, will be visible from a ship's deck at the distance of six leagues. The light will be shown on the 1st of April instant, the outer light at Houtreux, on the outer extremity of the jetty, was changed from the natural colour to a red light."—London Mail.

At treaty with France on Post-office affairs has been brought to a conclusion, and will come into force next month. The more immediate result of it, consisting by one-half the cost of sending letters from England to France, and from France to England, is not a small part of the object of this treaty. It considerably reduces the cost of postage on all letters passing through France, as well as on those addressed to France, and therefore at once affects the vast correspondence between this country and our East India possessions. It also regulates and reduces the cost of correspondence between the British colonies and France, and, of course, between France and our colonies. It facilitates the correspondence with those European countries to which France is the highway from Great Britain, and gives to this country the advantage of the postage arrangements existing between those countries and France.

The following order, relating to those places beyond the territories of the East India Company to which letters are sent by the overland mail, has recently been issued by the Post-office:—

"General Post Office, April, 1862."

"Letters for China, the Australian settlements, New Zealand, the Mauritius, or other places beyond the territories of the East India Company, intended to be sent by the overland mails through India, must be addressed to the care of correspondents in that country. It is understood, that, under recent regulations, they will otherwise be detained at Bombay for payment of the transit and ship-letter postage due to the Indian Post-office for their conveyance to their destination."

"It is not necessary that letters for places within the territories of the East India Company, forwarded by the India mails, should be addressed to correspondents in India; provision being made for payment of the Indian postage above alluded to in those settlements."

"By command."

"W. L. MABERLEY, Secy." The appearance of the above has created great surprise, not to say indignation, in the city. It involves the supposition that all persons who may not have correspondents in India are to be utterly debarred from communicating with their relatives and friends in those places which are without the Company's limits. The supposition is not at all affected by it, as the correspondents to whom they can direct their letters, but a multitude of persons whose letters would be purely of a domestic nature are most cruelly prevented from writing to those to whom they may property they feel the deepest interest. The relations of the English now in China, of the emigrants in New Zealand, while they know that their attention is fraught with danger, cannot address a single line to them if they have not formed a connection with Bombay, or some other place in India. Surely an arrangement might be made for receiving in London a number of postage which would cover the carriage of a letter all the way to China or elsewhere, for the parties who have friends abroad would rather pay the price more than find their letters stopped altogether. The only interest the Post-office can have in the maintenance of its own revenue, and yet this order is of a nature calculated to do that revenue a positive injury, as it renders the conveyance of letters to those places impossible. The order requires immediate amendment, for certainly never was debarment made with less regard to the wants of the public.—Id.

FRANCE.—The marriage of the Princess Clemantine with Prince Augustus of Sax-Coburg-Gotha was celebrated on the evening of the 30th of April, at the Palace of St. Cloud. At nine o'clock, the King, Queen, and the Royal Family entered the Gallery of Apartments reserved for the reception of the celebration of the civil marriage, the King giving his arm to the Princess Clemantine, and Prince Augustus to the Princess Louise. The King of the Belgians, with the Dowager Queen of Spain, the Duke Ferdinand of Sax-Coburg, and the Queen of the Belgians, the Duke and Duchess of Nemours, the Duke de Montpensier, the Prince of Wales, the Duke Alexander of Wurttemberg, and the Hereditary Prince of Sax-Coburg-Gotha, and the Hereditary Prince, and Prince Leopold of Sax-Coburg.

The witnesses were—Princess Augusta, Baron de Kersbourg, Minister of Finance of the King of Saxony, and the Marquis de Reussigny, the Ambassador of France at the Court of the King of the Belgians; for the Princess Clemantine, Baron Segur, first Vice-President of the Chamber of Deputies, and Marshal Goussier and Sebastian. Among the persons present at the ceremony were all the Ministers Secretaries of State.

The Royal Family and the witnesses having placed themselves round a circular table, Baron Fugère, the Chancellor of France, who filled the functions of the civil officer, announced the Duke de Nemours, the Grand Referendary, and M. Canchy, the Keeper of the Archives of the Chamber of Peers, read aloud the Marriage Act, and, after reciting from Prince Augustus and the Princess Clemantine, the King of the Belgians, in the name of the law, that the Prince and Princess were united in marriage. The signature to the act then took place. The august couple, the King of the Belgians, the Princess and Princesses, and the witnesses, respectively signed it. The act was signed by the Marshal-President of the Council, the Marquis of the Salm, and the Minister for Foreign Affairs, by the Chancellor, and the Grand Referendary.

Shortly after the act was signed, their Majesties, the Royal Family, and the whole assembly repaired to the chapel, where the Bishop of Versailles celebrated the nuptial marriage.

The Court went into mourning on the 2nd May, to last 11 days, for the Duke of Saxony.

There died lately at Paris a remarkable person.—Count Ribbing Leve, one of the aeminals of Gustavus III., King of Sweden.

Representatives of the French Government, and the coadjutors of Lord Aberdeen, there is an intention to set to work currently to make the recent occupation of Tahiti as available and profitable as possible. The French Government has been ordered to Chamber for $40,000.—Five millions of francs—for the expense of establishments at the Marquesas and Tahiti. He estimated the annual expense at 100,000. The French to be sent is 1200 men. Admiral Fournier defended the grant in a plausible speech, in which he asserted a great desire to protect the foreign missionaries.

Madagascar is at present attracting considerable attention in France. At Paris, there have been splendid exhibitions of the most costly articles prepared for the court of Tananarive, which have been ordered by the Queen of the Horns, consisting of massive crowns to deck her royal brow on days of grand ceremonies, and some more convenient and lighter ones for her habitations. The most magnificent of these are rounded with foliage of the same metal, and flowers ornamented with jewels, mounted upon female heads. One of them has for the peculiar ornament a globe, on which stand the figures of the sun and moon, being the symbol of the Horns' nation. The Queen's dresses are made of the finest velvet or scarlet velvet, lined with silk of the same colour; her snuff of red Cashmere, or velvet, also lined with the same material. The dresses are covered with embroidery of the finest gold, the designs of which have been drawn at Tananarive. One of the designs has required about 2000 carats of gold. The shoes are red, decorated with gold. The stockings, of the most beautiful silk, have their sides embroidered with gold of considerable thickness. All the gloves have likewise gold embroidery. Amongst other articles destined for her Majesty Queen Ravaofo-Manjaka is a knife and fork of exquisite workmanship. The blades of the one and the tines of the other are of massive gold, the handles of pink coral, carved with extreme delicacy by the most skilful workmen of Marseilles. Each represents a sort of lyre, surrounded with flowers and fruit.

All the grand dignitaries of the court of Tananarive will also have reason to be satisfied. The richness and elegance of the coiffures and costumes intended for these returned will be seen. Among them are to be seen chaplains of red or green velvet embroidered in gold, and ornamented, like the caps of our launiers, with plumes which represent the hawk; there are bracelets lined with red or plumed with silver, and the same lace at every part of the dress, and a uniform of green velvet, with twice more gold embroidery on it than is to be seen on the very rich ones worn by marshals. It is to be seen for the general use of the French troops and the French which accompany it are white, embroidered on all sides, and all over the part which covers the thigh: large boots of red morocco, also covered for the purpose of protection of the soldiers, as well as articles, are likewise embroidered in front and over the instep.

Nor has the Madagascar Church been forgotten: for its priests are intended to be richly adorned with very high, and loaded with pearls and little bells; gold medals all ornamented with various teeth in gold numbers, and necklaces which cover almost the chest and back. The ladies of the court are to be seen in gowns of silk and velvet, and with all the rings and rings. For the military there are lances, decorations, large epaulettes, and sashes as torse, which cannot represent an enormous collection of the epaulettes extending the whole body.

For the Queen's bodice, an arm-chain, a la Vierge, has been made, which is of the utmost elegance. It is of rosewood, with incrustations. But the most remarkable of the articles of this enormous exhibition are, certainly, the arm-chain, which is to go to her Majesty's throne, and the palanquin, which is to be

The Native Scouts and Demolition are permitted to work with these cash Bargees as by the regulations they are entitled to, and the Bowers who may thereafter remain to be disposed of, are transferred to the 6th Irregular cavalry.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 443. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, JUNE 29th. 1843.

[Printed by C. W. Smith, at the Serampore Press, by order of the Proprietors.]

OVERLAND MAIL.

THE Bombay Government intends to despatch the Steam Mail Steamers of the following months, on the dates specified below, viz.
The Stamer for August on the 10th July.

With reference to the above, notice is hereby given, that the latest safe date for the transmission of letters from Calcutta, which may be intended for the Stamer specified to leave Bombay on the 10th July, will be Wednesday, the 24th proximo.

Wm. MOORE,

Deputy Post Master.

For William, General Post Office,
The 10th June, 1843.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH'S UNCLE.—A correspondent of the Deli Gazette has hinted that Lord Ellenborough's Uncle was dismissed the Company's Civil Service for corrupt practices. Our impression, says the Star, is that the impression is unfounded. And we may add that the same doubt exists on our minds. We think the allusion made is to Mr. Thomas Law, the sixth son of the Bishop of Carlisle, and a brother of the first Lord Ellenborough. He was for some years Collector of Behar, and to him the temple of Gya was indebted for those arrangements which facilitated the resort of pilgrims to the shrine. But he is chiefly known in India as the individual who in one day settled eight hundred estates,—we may be wrong in the number, as we depend on memory—upon a Mookerjee or fixed jumma. They are generally known as 'Law's Mookerrees' and have been a source of constant vexation to the public authorities ever since. It is very probable that he incurred the displeasure and the censure of Government for this hasty and ill advised measure; but as he was subsequently raised to the post of member of the Council of Revenue, it is scarcely to be supposed that he was ignominiously dismissed the service. He took a very deep interest in the property of the country, as his 'Sketch of some late arrangements, and a View of the rising resources of Bengal,' a work now before us, fully attests. In 1791 sickness compelled him to return to England, and we suppose that he soon after entered Parliament, for we find him on his legs on the 30th of June 1794, when Mr. Pitt moved the thanks of the House to the Managers for their faithful management in discharge of the trust reposed in them. The report of Mr. Law's speech is somewhat amusing.

There was now in the House of Commons a rough Northumbrian, of the Honourable Company's service, who had passed some years in India—Mr. Law, brother to Hastings's counsel, the late Lord Ellenborough. As if to prove that a bad temper and a rough tongue were not peculiar to one member of his family, this Mr. Law delivered a speech against the conduct of Burke, in language more coarse and vulgar than any that had been heard for a long time in that place. With a burling allusion to Burke's early but exquisite essay on the Soldiers and Beautiful, this mannered Law said, "If any passage in his speech could be called sublime and beautiful, it was, at the best, but sublime and beautiful because; and at other times his expressions were so vulgar and illiberal, that the lowest blackguard in a beer-garden would have been ashamed to utter them." He professed to be astonished that a gentleman like Fox "should condescend to mix his character with that of the leading manager, whose fallacy and intemperance he had vainly endeavoured to correct." "And as for his information," added Law, "I am really astonished that a man who has been twenty-two years employed in Indian inquiries should still be so very ignorant of India."

Perhaps some of our readers may be able to throw more light on the subject. We should not omit to mention that there was another uncle of Lord Ellenborough's, who we conjecture, was also in the Civil Service in India. Ewan Law, the second son of the Bishop of Carlisle, married a daughter of Dr. Markham, Archbishop of Canterbury. A son of the Archbishop was in India during Mr. Hastings's administration—we believe at Lucknow,—and amassed a splendid fortune. His father, the Archbishop, on hearing Mr. Burke's examination of Mr. Auriol, another of the Indian sons of fortune, "in a very unbecoming violence of language and gesture told Burke, that he examined the witness as if he were examining not a gentleman but a pickpocket, and that the illiberality and inhumanity of the Managers could not have been exceeded by Murat or Robespierre." To this outbreak, Burke replied with much dignity, "I have not heard one word which has been spoken, and I shall not as if I had not." We find the name of Ewan Law in the list of thirty-seven Citizens, who were stated by Major Scott Waring in his place in the House of Commons to have returned to England with fortunes in the twenty-two years preceding 1784. It appears highly probable therefore that it was Mr. Ewan Law of the Civil Service to whom the sister of Mr. Markham of the same service, was married. We leave it to those who have been more successful in their researches than we have, to determine to which of the two belongs the historian alludes when he speaks of the rough Northumbrian who had some, that is in 1784, got into Parliament.

THE EDUCATION BILL.—The opposition which has been made to Sir James Graham's compulsory Education Bill by all parties in England who are not members of the Established Church, has constrained him to offer a modification of it. As the subject does not appear to be adequately understood in this country, though it has excited intense interest throughout England, we would take this opportunity of stating, that after the philanthropic Lord Ashley had brought forward his motion in March last relative to the brutal ignorance apparent in the manufacturing districts of England, which produced so powerful an impression on the public mind, Sir James Graham introduced a Bill for regulating labour in Factories, and imparting instruction to the children employed in them. This Bill for the first time provided for the compulsory attendance of children at School, and for the support of Schools by taxes levied by Act of Parliament. At the same time he declared it to be his intention gradually to extend its provisions to other parts of the country, and in fact to make it the basis of a system of national education. The two main features of the Bill were, first, the necessity which it imposed on all parents to send their children to these Schools by providing that no child should be employed in any factory who did not produce a certificate from the master; and, secondly, the preponderating influence which it gave to the established Church in the system about to be established. The Bill, which was understood to have been drawn up under the direction of that eminent Puseyite, Dr. Hook of Leeds, and of a High Tory Factory Inspector, was supposed to aim a deadly blow at Dissent, by entrusting the education of the country to an Establishment becoming daily more exclusive and intolerant by the infusion of Tractarian principles. We cannot better describe the specific objections of the Dissenters to the obnoxious clauses of the proposed law, than by quoting the following synopsis of them by Mr. Baynes.

'1st. The bill, for the first time, enacts that schools shall be built and supported, where any of the great manufactures are carried on, partly out of the poor's rate. Two-thirds of the sum required for building a school may be advanced out of public money—viz. one-third from the Parliamentary grant through the Committee of Council, and one-third out of the poor's rate. Whatever deficiency may exist in the means for the annual support of the school is also to be paid out of the poor's rate.

'2nd. The rate-payers are not, directly or indirectly, to have any species of control or influence over the schools, nor any check upon the expenditure.

'3rd. The bill not only for the first time authorizes the building and maintenance of schools out of the poor's rate, but it also for the first time places schools, thus paid for out of the public money, under the control and management of the clergy of the established church, and with such provisions as would make them essentially church schools.

'4th. The bill provides no assistance whatever for any other class of schools.

'5th. It actually forbids the employment of a child in any manufacture who does not attend one of these church schools,—except only a child may attend a National school, a British and foreign school, or a school within the factory where they work, but only after those schools shall have been reported by an Inspector of schools to be "efficiently conducted" (of which he is the sole judge); and is giving no pecuniary aid to such schools.

'6th. It makes it unlawful for factory children to attend any Wesleyan, Independent, Baptist, or other dissenting day-school.

'7th. It enforces the attendance of the children at the church schools, by penalties both on the mill-owner and on the parents, whilst there should be a National, or British school in the district, or a school within the factory.

'8th. The schools to be built and supported out of the poor's rate are to be under the management of seven trustees; of whom the only permanent one is to be the clergyman of the parish,—two others are to be churchwardens, chosen (when there is a greater number of churchwardens than two) by the churchwarden, and the remaining five to be annually appointed by the justices for the place or division.

'9th. The clerical trustee is to be the permanent chairman of the trustees,—to have a casting vote,—to have the sole and exclusive superintendence of the religious instruction,—to direct the master as to the religious instruction to be given,—to have the exclusive selection of the religious books to be used,—to testify, catechise, and examine the children in the principles of their religion,—and in all this to be perfectly transparent,—the inspection of schools being expressly forbidden even to require into the religious instruction given, to examine the scholars upon it, or to make any report thereon, unless he receive authority for that purpose from the archbishop or bishop.

*10th. The master and his assistants are to be appointed by the bishop.

*11th. The schools are to be Sunday-schools as well as day-schools; and the scholars are to attend the established church once every Sunday; but with the following exceptions—namely, that a child may be exempted from receiving religious instruction in the day-school, from attending the school on the Sunday, and from attending the church, if 'the parent shall testify to the master that, on the ground of religious objection, he desires such scholar not to attend the worship of the church of England,' or to receive religious instruction on week days, or to attend the church school on Sunday.

*12th. The church catechism and such portions of the liturgy as the clergyman may select, may be taught for one hour, out of three, every morning and every afternoon, except to the children whose parents shall object.

*13th. A millowner having a school within his own premises, is obliged to have the church catechism and liturgy taught there to any child being a member of the church of England.—pp. 4-6.

As soon as the character of the Bill became known, the spirit of the country was roused. All party differences were merged in a common opposition to a Bill which entrusted such extraordinary power to ministers of the Established Church. The powerful body of the Wesleyans, which had hitherto kept aloof from the Dissenters, had been driven into their arms by the insolence of the Tractarians; and they threw the whole weight of their influence into the scale. Even the Roman Catholics, with whom the Tractarians had been coquetting, took the alarm, and felt it necessary to defend their liberties against this new encroachment. The Bill threatened the existence of the Sunday Schools which have been the instrument of inestimable good to England; and those peaceful associations were constrained to petition the Legislature against this hostile measure. The Church looked on, in some instances with complacency, in others with approbation, though there were not wanting men who lamented that the Bill did not go far enough, and who objected to the unceremonious manner in which the Ministry proposed to employ Ecclesiastical agency in working out its own ends, as though the Church was the passive instrument of the state. But the more satisfaction the Bill gave to Churchmen, the more umbrage did it naturally give to Dissenters.

Parliament reassembled after the Easter recess on Monday, the 24th of April, and the first business of the night was the presentation of between two and three hundred petitions against the Educational clauses of the Bill. On Tuesday the number of petitions against it amounted to between four and five hundred. On Wednesday, between three and four hundred more were presented. On that evening Sir James Graham, acknowledged that he had incurred no small share of obloquy by venturing to bring forward this Education Bill, and announced his intention of making certain amendments of importance in its provisions, on the succeeding Monday, the 1st of May. On Thursday a great number of petitions were again presented against the Bill, and one in its favour from Manchester. On Friday three petitions were presented in favour of the Bill by Col. Sibthorp and two others, and three thousand one hundred and thirty-six against it. The scene presented on this occasion in the House and the lobby was not a little amusing. The lobby was crowded with gentlemen, having charge of large bales of petitions, regularly labelled according to the districts from which they came. They were either waiting for, or in search of members to present them. Multitudes of similar petitions had been transmitted from the country to the Representatives, and were brought down by them either in their own carriages or in hired cabs. Members were seen entering the house bearing porter's loads of petitions, or sitting with piles at their feet, waiting for their turn to present them.

On Monday, the 1st of May, two wagon-loads of petitions on the part of the Wesleyans drove up to the doors of Parliament, and the number presented on this day, was five petitions in favour of the Bill, and five thousand against it. Up to Wednesday, the 3d May, the petitions begging for the withdrawal of the Educational clauses of the Bill amounted to ELEVEN THOUSAND FOUR HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOUR. The modifications of the Bill proposed by Sir James Graham do not appear to have improved its character, as they leave precisely the same predominating influence in the hands of the clergy over the system of national education, which was found so objectionable in the first Bill. The Standard, with the view of reconciling Churchmen to the alterations, says, that "the changes are but trifling, changes in form, and scarcely at all changes in substance." Yet it is deemed extraordinary that the Dissenters who were repugnant to the first Bill, have not cordially welcomed the amended Bill! As far as we have been able to gather from the papers published between the 1st and 6th May, the amendments are generally unsatisfactory; and those who have petitioned the house against the original Bill will probably petition with greater force, and in possible in greater numbers against its amendments, and demand its entire abrogation. The Bill in its amended form was to be taken into consideration on the 22d May, when we may expect it to be consigned to the tomb of the Capulets. Sir R. Peel, who was not present when Sir James Graham's amendments were brought forward, had previously declared that he would not be satisfied with a mere Parliamentary Majority; and that he would not carry the measure through, unless he could carry the country with him. That is now utterly hopeless. The overwhelming torrent of petitions against this measure, which is altogether without example, has modified the tone even of the Tory Times and Post. This latter paper now denounces the Bill in very explicit terms: "We think Her Majesty's Ministers have hit upon as likely a method of engendering strife upon the great matter of Christian education, as any that could have been devised; and it predicts that as a practical measure, it must, even if forced through Parliament, altogether fail. The Times designates it as little more than 'a tyrannical attempt to force Church doctrines, or at least Church influences down the throats of Dissenters by Act of Parliament.'"

THE JOURNAL OF THE ASIATIC SOCIETY.

We are happy to find that the Asiatic Society has at length adopted this Journal as its own. For several years past the Society has been in that position which is usually called 'anomalous.' The enterprising James Prinsep, the Secretary of the Society, some years back was induced, from his love of Science, to issue a small and unpretending, but not the less valuable periodical publication, entitled Gleanings of Science, as a repository for the contributions which he received from his scientific friends. It was subsequently enlarged, and its title changed to that of the Journal of the Asiatic Society; but its pecuniary and literary responsibilities rested with the Editor. The subscriptions were not at first equal to the expense of bringing it through the press, but the indefatigable industry of Mr. Prinsep, combined with his extraordinary attainments, at length secured sufficient support to relieve him from loss, and gave the Journal a high European reputation. But as it was not the accredited organ of the Society it appeared under many disadvantages, and the Society itself suffered from the diversion of all papers of interest to this Journal, to such an extent as to leave no materials for the compilation of a volume of its Researches. On the death of Mr. Prinsep, Mr. Batherland and Dr. O'Shaughnessy became joint Secretaries of the Society, and proprietors and Editors of the Journal. On their resignation, Mr. Torrens was voted Secretary, and the proprietary right and management of the Journal devolved on him. Last year he felt himself constrained, partly from the pressure of official duties, and partly from the loss of that elasticity of mind to which men are exposed in all climates, and more especially in the East, when overburdened with engagements, to relinquish his connection with the Society and the Journal. The Society however soon after invited him to resume his office of Secretary, and agreed to adopt the Journal as its own publication.

Such a step indeed could no longer be deferred without serious injury to the interests of the Society. The Journal and the Researches could not co-exist. Contributors, with the choice of sending their papers for publication in a volume which appeared after the interval of several years, or in a periodical journal which appeared every month, were sure to prefer the latter. As Mr. Torrens justly observes, the Journal had absorbed the Researches. We have therefore lost the Researches, the royal quarto, with its magnificent amplitude of margin, the last memento of the patrician origin of the Society, and in its stead we have all the contributions to the Society embodied in a Journal, issued monthly, in an octavo size, in conformity with the utilitarian practice of the times. The change is in every respect to be commended. The monthly Journal will now be exchanged on the part of the Society with the Transactions of other learned Associations in Europe and America; and an additional stimulant will be given to those who conduct it to render it worthy of the high reputation of the body whose researches it embodies. At the same time, the personal labour of the Secretary will be lightened by the assistance he will obtain from the Committee of Papers, and he will enjoy more leisure for keeping up an interest in the labours of the Society by correspondence with other and kindred bodies abroad. The first number of the new Series, is filled exclusively with papers relative to the newly conquered province of Scinde. The information they afford is very valuable,—only we fear the liberality of Europe will be led to suspect that the choice of the subject is intended as a compliment to the nobleman who has made Scinde a province of the British empire in the East.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY CONTROVERSY REGARDING THE NAMES OF JEWS.—We are constrained by the rules of equity, to publish two letters containing remarks on the article which appeared on this subject a fortnight ago in our columns. Before we proceed to notice them however, we would condole our readers by the assurance that this is the last time of noticing the controversy.

The letter of a Mofussil Missionary, is on the same side of the argument with ourselves; and we need therefore only recommend it to the reader for its clear arguments and close reasoning. The letter of J. H. takes the opposite side, and we publish it with unfeigned pleasure. The tone of Christian moderation which it breathes, so different from that of our former correspondent, gives good reason to hope that if he has any influence in the councils of the Society, the threatened schism may be avoided.

Nothing can be further from our intention than to revive the discussion concerning the word heptate. We have quite enough to do with the name of Jesus. We alluded to it in our last article from a feeling of necessity. It was the taunt of the "Member of the Society" which constrained us to bring it forward in order to show that our views on the present occasion were not justified by it. Of the justice of that measure our opinion remains unaltered. We still think it was an instance of more than ordinary infidelity, in the British and Foreign Bible Society, to cast off associates of more than thirty years' standing, because they would not give up the use of a word which the Society itself had deemed innocent during that long period. We still think that it betrayed inconsistency in the Society, to insist on conditions in the East which they had not the courage to meet in the West; and to demand uniformity in Asia at a time when they were allowing every diversity of usage in Europe. But the separation is a fact; it is no longer an open question. In a practical point of view, indeed, we consider the results of that controversy insignificant. It is more advantageous for the Baptist Missions in the East, that they should enjoy independent sources of supply for the printing and circulation of the Scriptures, which will flow spontaneously and cheerfully, than still continue dependent on aid which would have been given with a feeling of reluctance, in a tone of condescension, and in a measure totally inadequate to the wants of the Missionaries.

Our opponent says, that we urge it as a matter of indifference how the name is written; and that if he could be satisfied of this, he would place a motion on the table of the Committee for rescinding the resolution now before the Mahomedan committee. Now every Mahomedan recognizes in the name Jesus, the Saviour, whom Christians adore as God; and the change of this name for Yasus can of itself carry no conviction to his mind of the divinity of Christ. The mode of spelling the name is on this ground a matter of indifference. But if the proposed change tends to confuse his ideas, and leads him to suppose that the terms refer to different characters, it may be productive of mischief, and will cease to be a matter of indifference. We were therefore perhaps somewhat indiscreet in treating it as an indifferent question; since it is a matter of no small importance that the orthography of our Saviour's name, which has been in vogue for 1800 years in the Mahomedan community, should not be altered. The importance of using a name which has a specific signification, and which on being pronounced shall of itself convey the idea of a distinct office, has ceased with the loss of the original language. Ninety-nine Mahomedans, out of every hundred in India at the present time, are as incapable of perceiving the intimation of a Saviour in Yasus, as in Jesus; and the adoption of the former term is therefore without advantage. And unless the benefit arising from the use of this term be great, and undeniable, the disadvantage of unsettling, by any change, the ideas of those who are addressed by the Missionaries, must be considered as decisive against it.

"When it is stated," observes our correspondent, "that the angel said to Joseph 'Thou shalt call his name Jesus.' 'I deny that he ever said any such thing. Can the denial be disproved?' If the denial cannot be disproved, more can it be disproved, that when the Evangelist wrote in Greek, 'Khris to enous anou Iesou,'" he departed as far from the Hebrew spelling, as an Oudoo translator will by using the term Ies. There cannot be much harm in misapplying after the example of an inspired penman.

The resolution of the Bible Society amounts to this, that they will not assist in the printing or circulation of any copy of the New Testament, in which the word Jesus is spelt differently from the mode in which the angel pronounced it. Upon this principle, they cannot conscientiously circulate the English version; for it is clear that the angel did not pronounce the name of our Saviour, Jesus. Neither can they circulate half the versions printed by the Bible Society at home, in the various languages of the world; for in how many of them is the name written Yasus? Neither can they ever assist in giving the Gospel to the Chinese, for their monosyllabic language admits only of a very distant approximation to the term which the Society consider to be alone orthodox.

Our correspondent objects to the strong language we used when we said that "we felt constrained to raise our feeble but earnest protest against the folly, we had almost said the guilt, of making the spelling of a word of five syllables a new Shibboleth of party." With his example before us, we cheerfully recall the words; we recall every expression throughout the article which can give pain to those whose practice we oppose. We will adopt only the language of courtesy, and close this controversy, so far as our columns are concerned, by entreating the members of the Society anew to consider whether it is worth while to alienate from their connection the devoted Missionaries in the North West Provinces, by insisting upon the adoption of a particular mode of spelling the name Jesus, to which they have a strong practical objection; whether it is worth while to interrupt the progress of divine truth in the smallest degree, by insisting upon a rule, in reference to transcription, which they cannot insist upon in reference to all. We ask them seriously to consider, whether that divinity in the spelling of the name Jesus, which is found to do no harm in other countries, is after all of such unequivocal detriment in India, in the case of a single version, that it must be excused even at the risk of a new schism.

LADY SALE'S JOURNAL OF THE DISASTERS IN AFFGHANISTAN IN 1841-1842.—We have just completed the second perusal of Lady Sale's interesting Journal. It is valuable as a record of transactions of the deepest and most painful interest; and its value is increased in no ordinary degree by the peculiar form in which it is given, and by the assurance, we feel that it was penned, from day to day, as events transpired, and that her Ladyship has in no instance been obliged to draw on her recollections. The entire loss of all papers and documents, private or public, in the disastrous retreat, serves also to give peculiar importance to the only record which escaped the general wreck. Lady Sale informs us that immediately before leaving the entombment she bound the little volume of her notes round her waste, and was thus enabled to preserve it from destruction. The Journal itself occasionally appears heavy from the repetition of trivial circumstances; but even these are not without their value, in as much as they give us a picture of the time, and describe the feelings and views of those who were in the camp. In the first part of the volume, embracing the events of the two months which elapsed between the outbreak and the catastrophe, we have almost as many rumours recorded as facts; but they are so clearly distinguished from each other, as to enable us satisfactorily to separate the chaff from the wheat. The character of the work is desultory, but this was inseparable from the mode in which it was compiled. Though not a History of the disastrous campaign, it furnishes abundant and valuable materials for the future historian. The style is lively and vigorous. This is no attempt at fine writing. It is the plain unvarnished narrative of a soldier's wife, who records with freedom her own impressions of the extraordinary events passing around her. If the work had been other than it is in point of style, arrangement or pretensions, we should have been disappointed.

Lady Sale has been censured for the freedom with which she has spoken of the conduct of some of the chief actors in that disastrous campaign. Some of her reviewers have gone so far as to say that her observations are not only indelicate, but malicious. We have been astonished to find how entirely this idea has been dispelled by a perusal of the book, which appears to us to be remarkable for nothing so much as for the moderation of its censures. When we bear in mind that in no instance in our national annals has so large a force been so entirely annihilated,—and that by an enemy whom at all other times we have invariably beaten;—that the military errors of that campaign, the vacillation, the indecision, the cowardly submission to calamity, are altogether unparalleled, we are surprised at the singular temperance of feeling with which the book is compiled. Lady Sale is, it is true, particularly severe upon Brigadier Skelton, who rendered every effort to extricate the army from its toils, by bold and energetic exertions; who croaked about a retreat from the first; who, knowing the General's weakness of body and mind, refused to take the lead in saving the army; who was ever anxious to shift responsibility from himself; and who brought his guilt to the Military Council, and doled while the discussions proceeded. But who of all the survivors of that slaughter does not believe that if another man had taken command; instead of Brigadier Skelton, that army would in all human probability have been saved? But Lady Sale does ample justice to his personal bravery; to his cheerful bearing in actual danger; and to the attachment of his men, who were so charmed with his contempt of danger, as to forget all they had suffered from his despatch severity. Lady Sale is her remarks on Skelton, only echoes the general voice of the army. It is far him to come forward and reveal his name from that everlasting infamy to which he will otherwise be inevitably consigned by the future historian. The only other persons of whom she speaks with disparagement,—and that but once or twice—are Capt. Grant and Belton, and the croaking Col. Oliver. She does indeed on one occasion censure an arrangement of Pottinger's, and laughs at the Military Board for having sent six nine-pounders instead of three eighteenes, as though two small guns would send a ball as far as one long one; but these are, we think, the only instances in which she has alluded with severity to the officers in a campaign, which presented so large a field for censure. She could scarcely have said less of the blunders which ended so fatally, and we have felt throughout the perusal of the work, that she has placed her feelings of just indignation under a wise and salutary restraint.

We now proceed to notice those facts in Lady Sale's Journal, which throw additional light upon the disasters of the campaign, as well as those which corroborate the previous statements we had obtained from Lieut. Eyre and Melville. And here we may mention generally that her narrative not only bears out their assertions to the fullest extent, but that in various minute details there is often so close a correspondence, as to lead to the supposition that she must have had the benefit of their materials. It is possible that Lady Sale may have depended on Lieut. Melville's report for the detail of some of the events which transpired in the Bala Hisar; but in every other respect her observations appear to have been noted down from day to day, and they bear the undoubted stamp of originality.

Lady Sale reconciles the contradictory reports which were in vogue respecting Sir William Macnaghten's demand for troops and his assertion that they were not necessary. We are told that two months before the outbreak, he wrote to Government for five additional Regiments, of which two were to be Europeans; that a written war succeeded between the Envoy and Government; and that latter after letter came calling for retrenchment; that it was Lord Auckland's sovereign will and pleasure that "tranquillity do reign in Afghanistan"; and that it was reported at Government House that the lawless Afghans were as peaceable as London citizens. Sir William, at length became willing to persuade himself that the country was tranquil, and acceded to the entreaties of Burnes—who was blinded on the subject—and wrote to Lord Auckland withdrawing his former request for additional troops, and saying that some of the regiments now in the country might be spared. There can be little doubt that Lord Auckland was anxious to believe that the country was as peaceable as Lord Palmerston had represented it to be, when he contrasted it with Algeria, and it is easy to suppose that Sir William should be anxious to indulge the same pleasing idea; but Sir Alexander Burnes's infatuation appears incredible, more especially after the distinct warning he had received from Capt. Grey.

The general cause of the rebellion, as stated by Lady Sale, tallies with every previous account. "In former times, under the feudal system, when the sovereign of Cabul required troops, such bold chieftains came forward with his retainers; but these vassals had been taken from them, and were embodied in corps commanded by British officers, to whom they owed no affection, and only paid a forced obedience; and the Shah's power was now greatly limited,"—and he was anxious to shake off this foreign yoke. The discipline of the lower orders had been raised to the highest pitch by the preaching of the Mollahs, who were anxious to rid the country of the Kafirs. But the immediate cause of the rebellion was the injudicious reduction of the allowances granted to the Chiefs. Of this however Lady Sale gives a different version, which shows the folly of the act in a more conspicuous light. The Forty thousand Rupees for which we risked the loss of a country which had cost us two thousand times that sum, did not consist of money to be actually paid from our coffers; but of reductions allowed in the tribute of the chiefs, for advantages withheld from them. The chiefs were reasoned with on the necessity of this measure of economy; they declared their perfect satisfaction at the arrangement, and then took to the road with their followers,—and the first scene of this tragic drama was opened.

The rebellion broke out on the morning of the 2d. The city was in commotion; the shops were plundered and a body of men, not exceeding three hundred, murdered Sir A. Burnes, his brother, and Lieut. Broadfoot. This appears to have occurred about eight in the morning, for the rumour of his death was in the cantonment at nine. Capt. Trevor's house and tower, and Capt. Mackenzie's fort, which were in the vicinity of this sanguinary scene, were not more than a mile and a quarter from the cantonment, with few if any intermediate interruptions. Had a Regiment with a small detail of Cavalry and Artillery marched instantly to the spot, not only might those posts have been defended and the supplies they contained have been preserved, but the rebellion itself would have been nipped in the bud; for Captains Trevor and Mackenzie, with only a handful of troops, were able to hold out for three days after the attack began. Such a demonstration of vigor, on the first day of the outbreak, would at once have turned the scale in our favour. We are told by Lady Sale that on the morning of the 2d, a number of chiefs, Osman Khan, Abdul Rahim Khan, Khan Sherwan, Khan, the head of the Kuzilbashes, Taj Mahomed Khan, and others went to lend Capt. Trevor assistance, and Zeman Khan sent his son as a hostage. The smallest exertion of vigor and energy,—one hour of the Daks—would have crushed the rebellion; but the General was bewildered. Sir William rode to the gate of the cantonments and back again, and within two hours removed from his house in the Mission compound into cantonments, a circumstance which could scarcely fail to be interpreted as an indication of mistrust, if not of fear.

Though the rebellion was allowed to gather strength during the 2d, 3d and 4th of November, it might have been subsequently kept down, if the troops in cantonments had been as well supplied with provisions as they were with ammunition. It was the loss of the Commissariat, that Fort, which compromised its safety, and which became the fruitful cause of every subsequent calamity. All parties are agreed that we were starved out of the country. The events of the night—the 4th November—when Lieut. Warren was defending that Fort against fearful odds, and the General was deliberating about his relief, possess a peculiar interest; and it is important to determine upon whose shoulders the blame of that fatal indecision rests which led to the loss of our supplies and placed us at the mercy of our enemies. Lady Sale agrees with Lieut. Eyre in representing that General Elphinstone, on receiving a letter from Warren, pressing for reinforcement, ordered him to evacuate the Fort, and abandon the provisions; that Captain

Grant and Belton represented to the General the infinite importance of preserving the supplies, and the ruin which must follow the loss of them; that the General thereupon determined to take Sheriff's Fort, which commanded the Commissariat Fort, that night; that he ordered troops to be in readiness for that purpose; that they vacillated, and at length did nothing; and the stores fell into the hands of the enemy, and starvation stared the British troops in the face. The General, who had no mind of his own, was evidently led to this fatal inaction, at the very crisis of our fate, by the advice of others. On this subject Lady Sale and Lieut. Eyre are at variance. The latter says, he was sent to consult Lieut. Sturt on the night of the 4th, who "at first expressed himself in favour of an immediate attack, but on hearing that some of the enemy were on the watch at the gate, judged it prudent to defer the assault till an early hour in the morning; and that this decided the General, though not before several hours had slipped away in fruitless discussion." From this statement it would appear as though Lieut. Sturt's advice determined the General to delay till it was too late to act—Lady Sale's account is different. "About 10 o'clock in the evening, Lieut. Eyre, Deputy Commissary of Ordnance, and Capt. Warburton came to Sturt, and as they had received information that there were men posted outside the Fort with matchlocks all ready, the plan of igniting by blowing open the gate with a bag of powder would not answer; they therefore, with Sturt, determined on getting the two nine-pounders into the bastion, and on setting to work forthwith to cut the embrasures to fit them; and between two and three in the morning was fixed upon as the time to throw in a proportion of shells to create confusion. The place is to be taken by assault. If this does not succeed, we shall have to retreat to Jellalabad." The Commissariat fort was not lost before morning had well dawned—between six and seven we suppose. There was therefore ample time for the successful accomplishment of the object, on the plan which Eyre, Sturt and Warburton had agreed on, and it does not therefore appear clear that the fort was lost through the General's following Capt. Sturt's advice.

It will be remembered, that no little surprise was excited by an indistinct rumour which reached Calcutta from Cabul while the troops were besieged, that Lieut. Sturt was directing every movement in the cantonment, though obliged to move about in his shirt and trousers, owing to his unhealed wounds. Lady Sale explains the circumstance by recording on the 8th of November, "that there was a report that we were to be attacked in cantonments to-night. Sturt went to General Elphinstone and Brigadier Anquetil, who both gave him carte blanche and desired that all his instructions should be obeyed. He has accordingly placed 15 guns in position." His carte blanche does not appear to have extended beyond the period of that night's panic; though there can be little doubt that on subsequent occasions the influence of his strong mind must have made itself felt among the weak and vacillating minds of the Commanders. But in one respect his advice was not taken. On the third day of the insurrection he strongly recommended that the troops should be removed to the Dala Hisar. That advice was repeated at successive periods, at each of which its propriety, and eventually its necessity, had been demonstrated by fresh disaster. Lieut. Eyre and Lieut. Melville concur with Lady Sale in stating that this was the plan which ought to have been adopted. The Envoys continued to maintain the same opinion, till it was too late to adopt the measure. Lady Sale says, that "Start advised that ammunition should be nightly sent thither, and when a sufficiency was conveyed, they might all make one hold night march in very light marching order. They were might be lodged (not comfortably, I grant) in the houses of the inhabitants, who would be well paid for vacating them. They have laid in their stores for the winter which would be bought at any price—and then we might defy all Afghanistan for any time." Once in the Bala Hissar, the army would have been in a great measure master of its own movements, and might have taken advantage of the favourable turn of circumstances which a knowledge of its impregnable position, must have created among its enemies. It is deeply to be deplored that Sir W. Macnaghten did not insist on this movement as soon as the Commissariat stores were irretrievably lost, and it became evident that the movements of the troops during the winter must be entirely defensive. This step became almost imperative when the disposition of the Commanders in such an emergency became apparent. When it was discovered that neither General Elphinstone nor Brigadier Shelton would accept any active measures for the relief of the troops, it became the dictate of common sense, to occupy the most advantageous post for defensive warfare, and to place the army in a position in which their vacillation and tergiversity could do least harm. Had Sir William taken this decisive measure on his own responsibility, however he might have risked public censure, he would have shown himself equal to the great crisis of the time.

Lady Sale's account of the engagement of the 13th November on the Boj name Hill, when the troops were sent out to capture the two guns which the enemy had brought up to play upon the cantonments, tallies very closely with that given by Lieut. Eyre. It was with great difficulty the Envoys prevailed on the General and Brigadier to consent to the despatch of the force. It was with difficulty the troops could be kept to their duty. "All was regular confusion; my very heart felt as if it leapt to my teeth, when I saw the Afghans ride clean through them. The onset was fearful. They looked like a cluster of bees; but we beat them and drove them up again."—"When the men of the 37th were upbraid for turning, they replied, we only retreated when we saw the Europeans run, and knew we should not be supported."

Lady Sale's description of the events of the fatal day of Bazaroo, the 23d November, is very graphic. Her Ladyship took her post of observation, like Rebecca in Iranhoe, on the top of the house, whence she had a fine view of the field of action and where, by keeping behind the chimneys, she was enabled to escape the bullets that continually whizzed by her. The events of that day were preceded by "great discussions in the military councils. High and very plain language had been used by Brigadier Shelton to General Elphinstone; and people did not hesitate to say that he should be set aside; a mode of proceeding recommended as forthright before by Mr. Baines, the merchant." Lady Sale notices the same military faults as Lieut. Eyre; the most fatal of which was the having taken but one gun. She says that the Brigadier, when he approached the village before down, and it was found to contain few defenders, was entreated to storm it, and refused. The number of the enemy afterwards increased rapidly to 10,000. The fight continued till 10 a. m. by which time our killed and wounded had been greatly increased. The vent of the gun became too hot for the artillery men to use it. At about half past 9 a party of Ghazees ascended the brow of the hill. They planted three standards. When they fairly appeared above ground, it was evident our men were not inclined to meet them. Every field glass in the cantonment was pointed to the hill with intense anxiety. The officers were seen to urge on the troops; the most conspicuous were Mackintosh, Laing, Troup, Mackenzie, and Layton; to encourage the men they policed the fusiliers with stones; the fusiliers returned the assault with the same weapons—but nothing could inspire our soldiers; they would not advance though the enemy did not appear to exceed 150; a Ghazee rushed forward, sword in hand, to defy the cowards; a scout of the 37th darted forth and met him with his bayonet. They both fell and rose again, but were eventually killed. The enemy rushed on and drove our men like a flock of sheep. They captured our gun. The artillery men fought like heroes; two were killed at the gun; Sergeant Mulhal received three wounds; poor Laing was shot while waving his sword over the gun and cheering his men. Our troops fled till they gained the second square which had not been broken; the fugitives here turned round and gave a shout, and the Ghazees, panic struck in their turn, abandoned the gun and made off. It was instantly re-opened on them. Sergeant Wade simultaneously made three splendid shots from the Kohistan gate of the cantonments, one of which struck the chief Abdoola, and he fell. His people surrounded him and bore him off. The panic and flight became general and the enemy never stopped till they reached the city. In the guns, the consternation was so great on hearing of Abdoola's wound, that the women were sent away in great numbers, and many in such haste that they did not wait for their yuloes, but ran on foot expecting to see our troops in Cabul immediately.

The day was ours till 10 in the morning. Lady Sale says she heard the Envoys ask the General to pursue the flying troops to the city—which he refused, saying it was a wild scheme, and not feasible. She then returned home for breakfast, under the idea that all was over. Had Brigadier Shelton at that time retired into cantonments, or had he taken possession of the village, the day had continued ours; but he would do neither. The enemy, seeing we were not disposed to pursue them, took fresh courage. About half past 12 they gradually came up the hill; their fire was severe; our men dropped fast, and at length the whole force, horse and foot was driven down the hill and the gun captured. All order and discipline was at an end; each man fled for his life, in spite of the remonstrances and the example of the officers, and if Osman Khan had not restrained his Afghans, probably not one of those who left the cantonments that morning would have re-entered it.

The particulars given by Lieut. Eyre, relative to the subsequent negotiations, are fully corroborated by Lady Sale's Journal. There is however some little discrepancy in the report of Sir William's reply to the first proposals, but it only serves to confirm the conviction that the narrations are both original, and not derived from each other. Eyre says the Envoys replied, that "they should at all events meet us the day of judgment." Lady Sale's version of the reply is, that "that death was preferable to dishonour, and that we put our trust in the God of battles, and in his name laid them come on."

On the 27th Lady Sale notices that the Akonmads, or old Molah from Candahar, who was one of Sir William's few Native assistants and was to have accompanied him to Bombay, where he would have obtained wealth and honour, had just abandoned him and gone into the city. On the 30th, when the danger was more imminent, the Envoys and his Lady left the tent in which they had been living in the cantonments since the 2d of November, and went to live at the Residency. The spathy of the General in regard to the bridge which he allowed the enemy to break up without molestation, and the cowardice of one company of the 44th who fled from the captured fort, are fully confirmed in the Journal. Lady Sale adds that the other companies of that Regiment refused to associate with their dastardly comrades.

The state of peril to which the army was now reduced, so far from rousing the Commanders to action befitting their national and professional character, appears only to have increased their palsy. "The General, unattended in his purpose, delegates his power to the Brigadier, and the Brigadier tries to throw off all responsibility on the General's, or on any one else's shoulders." Both of them however, though they differed from each other on almost every measure, agreed in the necessity of treating instead of fighting. The events of the 8th and 9th December, which we noticed more particularly as bearing on the Envoys's letter of the latter date to Mr. Enkin, the publication of which Lord Ellenborough punished with a severity beyond the laws, are substantially the same in both narratives, only Lady Sale remarks that Brigadier Anquetil appended to his signature; "I concur in this opinion, in a military point of view" and she adds that though there were but three days' provisions left and Capt. Conolly offered to take the Ben-I-sheer, which was rich in grain, with the aid of the escort only, he was not permitted to do so. On the 18th December she records, "Our horses and cattle have neither grain, bhooon, nor grass. They have pretty well eaten up the bark of the trees and the tender branches; the horses gnaw the tent pegs. I was gravely told that the artillery horses had eaten the trumion of a gun! This is difficult of belief; but I have seen my own riding horse, gnaw voraciously at a cart wheel. Nothing is satisfied with food except the Pariah dogs, who are gorged with eating dead camels and horses."

It was under these circumstances that Sir William Macnaghten entered upon negotiations with the rebels. The treaty which he concluded with them, he religiously observed in every particular. To that treaty it appears they never so much as affixed their signatures; its provisions they never observed; but daily rose in their demands, as if no treaty was in existence. It stipulated that ample supplies of provisions should be sent into cantonments—some hundred and fifty man-days of starch only were sent, sufficient for one day's consumption. It provided that the means of transport for the baggage and stores should be furnished—it does not appear that any carriage cattle were sent at all. Instead of giving us "certain men of consideration as hostages" according to the terms of the treaty, they demanded hostages of Sir William. They were given. Still no sup-place of food, though the troops were starving. They then demanded the surrender of all the forts which commanded the communications; they were given up. They next insisted upon the delivery of our guns and ammunition. Sir William complied with this request also. After having thus deprived the unfortunate army of the means of resistance, without affording it the means of existence, they laid a deep plot for the ruin of the Navy. They agreed that Akbar Khan should endeavour to treat separately with him, on the basis that no dependence could be placed on the other chiefs. Sir William, in a fatal moment of distraction, put his signature to the treaty; and the base and blood thirsty chiefs immediately exclaimed that he was no longer to be trusted! and left his fidelity of the hand shot him dead, and left his body to be hacked to pieces by the fanatic, and allowed its members to be exhibited in desecration on the public buildings of Cabul!

This treaty has been made the occasion of heaping the foulest obloquy upon the memory of Sir William Macgregor; and his conduct has been stigmatised as treacherous. Where is the treachery? He certainly was not bound by a reciprocal engagement of which one party had never observed the smallest item. The chiefs had so long engaged that they would supply his camp with provisions, and with the means of transport, and they left the troops exposed to all the rigors of a Cabul winter, and to starvation. There could be no doubt on the mind of the Envoy that it was their deliberate intention to cause the destruction of the troops, whom they had treacherously deprived of the means of resistance. In this extremity, one of their number offers terms of relief, and Sir William does with him. Where is the smallest shadow of treachery in this step? We do not call to our aid the maxim that the law of self preservation is above every other obligation, though upon this ground alone Sir William would have been justified in adopting any arrangement which held out a hope of keeping fifteen thousand human beings from starvation; but we claim his exoneration from all censure in dealing separately with Akbar Khan on the ground, that the treaty with the Chiefs had been rendered null and void, by their own conduct, and that it had long ceased to impose on Sir William any moral obligation to refrain from negotiating any other treaty.—In one respect however, we fear it will be impossible to exonerate the unfortunate Envoy from censure; we allude to that part of the engagement which embraced the capture of Ameeul-Jah. However great the provocation this man may have given, however base his treachery towards the English, Sir William ought on no consideration to have allowed himself to become a party to any plan for seizing him. With this exception, the treaty with Akbar Khan, which cost the Envoy his life, within twelve hours after it was signed, appears as entirely free from blame as the most honourable treaty recorded in history.

Next week we shall notice the fatal retreat, and the deaths of the three narratives now before us.

THE ENGLISH REVIEW.—We take great blame to ourselves for not having hitherto noticed the English Review since it has passed from the management of Dr. Corbryn to that of Mr. Grant. We have now before us the Third Number of the New Series, which contains a faithful and valuable account of the Venerable Ambrose Dal-try, to which is prefixed a portrait of him from the pencil of Mr. Grant, one of his most successful efforts.

This is succeeded by a continuation of Col. Phipps's Historical Researches, which are, we fear, too eccentric to obtain general favour. A full account of the Comet is then given, together with a view of its position in the heavens as seen on the 9th of March. This is succeeded by a pulpit sketch, of a minister in Calcutta, who is not a village Curate, but a Dignitary; but whether the sketch refers to the Bishop or the Archbishop we are not told. It is written with vigor, and in a truly Christian spirit. Then comes a long letter from Dr. Duff with some remarks on the autobiography of the Revd. Krishna Mohan Banerjee, which we have not read, and are therefore unable to comprehend more of the controversy than that the convert's reasons for quitting the Presbyterian to join the Episcopalian, are not considered by Dr. Duff to be stated with sufficient chronological accuracy. The personal of the letter strongly reminded us of the remark of the witty monarch who observed a century and a half ago, that Presbyterianism was not a religion for a gentleman. We have long leaned to the opinion that Brahmins converts would, in almost every instance, be found, sooner or later, to join the Established Church, and possibly manifest a greater partiality for those who advocate Trianon prerogatives, than for those who are content with Evangelical privileges.—The rest of the number is composed of extracts judiciously selected. Without meaning the smallest disrespect to our former contemporary, Dr. Corbryn, we may still be permitted to say that the work has gained by the change of Editors; and we hope it will meet with that encouragement which it deserves.

WEEKLY EPILOGUE OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JUNE 22.

—The Star has some speculations upon the probability of Lord Ellenborough's return home. His Lordship will of course throw up the Government as soon as the confidence of his own party ebbs. They have had enough to do to defend his measures already; and if a great outcry is raised about Scinde and the Ministry are put to their shifts to defend this measure, they may intimate to His Lordship that they cannot spare any more time for the continual defence of his plans. Lord Ellenborough has spirit enough to relinquish his post the moment the Duke and Sir Robert are tired of him. There is this difference between the connection of the present and the late Governor General with the reigning Ministry; that whereas those measures of Lord Ellenborough which his friends have been required to defend, originated with him, the Afghan war originated as much in Downing Street as it did at Simlah. Indeed there is said to be evidence that the first idea of this war in Asia sprang from Lord Palmerston's insipidation to plunge into a European war in order to curb the ambition of Russia.

—We are happy to learn from the Star that the Assam Tea Company have obtained a remission of the Three Per Cent. export duty charged on their tea.

—The Bombay Times couples the burning of the Thomas Grenville, which was not accidental, with the burning of no fewer than five Bombay ships last year, which could not have been all accidental. The Editor affirms that this is the first of a series of vessels which have been already doomed. The offenders are in every case the crew, who having refused six months advance, find it their interest to set the ship on fire and enjoy the money as bonum. Would it not be possible to establish a strict Registry office for Native seamen, and to make it a part of their engagement that the advance should be refunded if the ship was burnt. To secure a complete remedy nothing can certainly be wanting on the part of the merchants and commanders at Bombay, but a determination to put down the practice. An oriental apathy pervades all classes of society in India, which is most unfavorable to the removal of evils.

—Mr. Montcrio, a Barrister of the Supreme Court, has been appointed to the vacant Magistracy. In accepting it he relinquishes all private practice; the gain in this case therefore is more on the side of the public than of the Barrister. The appointment has given general satisfaction. It is much to be wished that the allowances of the Magistrates and of the Commissioners of the Court of Requests in Calcutta could be raised to a greater equality with corresponding appointments held by the Government. This would enable Government always to secure the services of gentlemen at the bar; which would be a most decided improvement.

FRIDAY, JUNE 23.

—A case of some importance has just been decided in the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs. Mr. Imhoff, who was attending the Court of Requests as plaintiff, was seized on coming out of it, by the Sheriff, on a writ issued from the 24-Pergunnahs. An application was made to the Judge for his release grounded upon two Constitutional rights of the Sudder Court. The Judge said that it was only defendants and witnesses, who being compelled to attend the Court were exempted from arrest, en route, en route and refused the request; but he advised the petitioner to appeal from his order to the Sudder, whose decision would be final—whether satisfactory or not.

—The papers state that Mr. C. Tecker, now one of the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Court, has been appointed provisional member of the Council, and will succeed on Mr. Bird's vacating his seat on the 14th of October. It was generally understood that the race lay between Mr. Tucker and Mr. Millett, the former of whom has the advantage over the latter of eleven years of additional service. Sir W. Cassam's retirement in less than a year will create a second vacancy, which will probably fall to the lot either of Mr. George Clerk or Mr. Millett.

—The Hindostan has thirty-five passengers already registered for the August trip. We hope the suggestions of the passengers will be listened to, and such alterations made in the accommodations as shall suit the climate. Four more trips are advertised for November, December, February and March. The December and March voyages are expected to be performed by the Bentley, the reine of the Hindostan, as she is called, though born a twelvemonth after her. The Bentley is expected here in November.

—The Englishman states on the authority of a correspondent at Benares, that there were five persons locked up in an insane hospital, and that one of them strangled two of his companions.

—We publish the remarks of our three daily contemporaries on the question of Lottery advertisements. The Star has, we think, much the advantage of the others in weight of argument. The Hindostan's objections are remarkable chiefly for their singular originality. He tells us that the advertisements are not published merely for the sake of profit—but in order that the paper may risk clear of inconsistency. We cannot see that to denounce the lotteries in one page and advertise them in another is to steer clear of inconsistency. As neither of our contemporaries appear to publish the advertisements for the sake of profit, that which we considered the main obstacle to the discontinuance of them, has ceased to exist.

SATURDAY, JUNE 24.

—The Hindostan mentions a rumour, which has an aspect of credibility, that the Teacasser Steamer will be employed in conveying Mr. Bird and Sir W. Cassam to Suva in October. The rumour is we think entirely without foundation. The next day for employing a Government Steamer in keeping up the direct monthly communication between Calcutta and Suez will diminish in the approaching cold season by the arrival of the Despatch. The orders of the Court against the measure are understood to be absolute. Mr. Bird will be able to avail himself of the Hindustan in November.

— We are happy to learn from the Star, that the quarantine between England and Egypt has been reduced from 21 days to 16. As the days employed in the voyage will be counted in the period of quarantine, there will be scarcely any detention in England, except when the Steamer reaches it in less than sixteen days. It is somewhat singular, that while such strict precautions are observed in reference to the voyage from Egypt to England, none should be deemed necessary relative to the voyage from Egypt to India.

— The Madras Athenæum states, that all the steam ships which left the roads at the commencement of the gale, have been accounted for.

— Lord Ellenborough has arrived at Allahabad on his way to Calcutta and taken up his residence with Mr. Matthews, a wealthy Indian planter.

— We are sorry to observe that the Bombay post office has this month been more dilatory than ever. It is now nine days since the Express arrived, and newspapers still continue to drop in one after the other.

MONDAY, JUNE 26.

— There was a grand Masonic procession of the brethren of the mystic tie, in all the habitations of woe, on Saturday evening last, from Free Mason's Hall to the Cathedral, to hear the Archdeacon "improve" the death of the Duke of Devonshire discourse. Mr. Deasy took his text from the Second Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians, chap. v. ver. 1. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

— The Madras Athenæum states, that the Marquis of Tweeddale has rendered himself extremely unpopular by abolishing remission of duties levied by the community of sending letters to the Express. This sort of act is disadvantageous to Government as it is disastrous to the merchants. The whole expense of the Express will now fall on the state; whereas under the previous arrangement the postage of private letters, fixed at a very high rate, not only relieved Government from all charge, but, when the wallet was full, left a small profit to the Post office.

— The Dahli Gazette states, that Omeroot, in the desert on the eastern border of Seinde, has been made over to the adjoining state of Jondpore. In our hands it would only have been a source of expense. The same paper also states, that the well-equipped Jondpore legion has been wanted for service in Seinde; a very judicious measure as the men are less likely than other troops to suffer from the climate.

— The Englishman states, that circulars have been issued at Barrackpore to join in a party to be given to the Governor General on his arrival at the station.

— One of the most benevolent actions of Lord Ellenborough, is the recent permission given by him to the disbanded men of the 4th Madras Cavalry to re-enlist. These men, by their instant attempt to resist Government in its determination on the better question, forfeited all claim to consideration; but their deep contrition, combined with the recollection of their former good conduct, has induced his Lordship to overlook the ebullition of the moment and to permit them to enlist again under the British flag.

— We learn from the Dahli Gazette, that Mr. George Thompson was daily expected at Delhi, and that the Emperor had given orders for suitable arrangements to be made for his reception and accommodation.

TUESDAY, JUNE 27.

— The Star informs us that Lord Ellenborough has arranged to leave Allahabad by the 22d of the present month. As the river is now in supposition, or may be expected to open in a day or two, his Lordship may probably be expected in Calcutta, early next week.

— At the last Opium sale, the drug fetched the same extraordinary price, which ruled at the preceding sale, and which by the by, was the highest of the last sixteen years. The Patna sold on an average of 1448 Rs. and the Benares of 1392 Rs. the chest. The output of the sale was a little above 40-lacks of Roppees. The gross receipts of the year have been two million sterling. If this source of revenue is continued to India for three years more, the debt incurred in the war beyond the India will be wiped out.

— The conflict at Gwalior increases. The insurgents which are taking advantage of the strength they have gained to help themselves from the public stores; and plunder in the order of the day. The deposed ruler has lost the aid and authority of the British Resident is set at defiance. It was reported on the 13th of June at Agra, that the insurgents had ordered the Resident to quit Gwalior, and the report gained ground up to the 15th, the date of the last advice from Agra. In that case, he will of course apply for advice to Mr. G. Clerk, who will take the most expedient measures. It would be a singular, but not surprising event, if the next or the succeeding Mail were to announce to the good people at home, that the territories of Seinde had been occupied by a British army.

— The Englishman gives an extract of a letter from Thiruvot of the 25th June, which states that a real change has come over the golden dreams of the Indigo planters. Many days of drought have burnt up half the crop, and the prospects of the year are dimmed. Notwithstanding a few croakers in Bengal, it is all but certain that the season will turn out favourably. 125,000 mounds are now spoken of, but the crop will more probably rise above that belief than much. Soldiers will know the river so low at the close of June.

— A case has just been tried in the Supreme Court which reflects great discredit on those who pretended to be gentlemen who formerly edited a paper and was engaged in mercantile pursuits at Bombay, ordered some shoes of a Constituent shoemaker, Mr. Harman, under the name of Montague, to the value of 20 Rs. There was some delay in the payment of the bill owing to Mr. Montague's having been out of town, but the money was paid. Mr. Harman, however, who had learned that the gentleman had formerly paid under the name of Montague Farmworth—he had dropped the latter name from family considerations on bringing him up to the bar of the Supreme Court, for fraud. He was honourably acquitted. Sir John Peter Grant in discharging him said that he left the Court unimpaired and with honour, and that there existed not the shadow of a shade for the charge.

— The Harbours says, we shall be happy to hear that the Deputy Governor has requested the Council to request the Government of England to repeal the law by virtue of which a man was recently sentenced to transportation for not appearing before a Court. The reader will remember that it was a law passed when the districts of Kishnagur was in possession of bands of dacoits; it was a severe law rendered necessary by the exigency of circumstances; a kind of suspension of the Habeas Corpus, which ought to have died out with the occasion. The Courts have declared that an alteration of the law will be inexpedient. It must be repealed therefore without their concurrence. It cannot be allowed to stand—in the forty-third year of the nineteenth century.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums for the Friend of India:

	Cs. Rs. As.
Capt. J. C. Flourens, ... to Nov. 1844,	40 0 0
T. C. Flourens, Esq., ... to June, 1844,	30 0 0
J. C. Flourens, Esq., ... to May, 1844,	30 0 0
J. Campbell, Esq., ... to Dec. 1843,	30 0 0
A. C. Dunlop, Esq., ... ditto,	30 0 0
T. Campbell, Esq., ... for the June,	30 0 0
High Lady, ... to May, 1844,	30 0 0
Capt. H. M. Stewart, ... to June, 1844,	30 0 0
Lieut. Col. H. Norton, ... to Dec. 1843,	48 0 0
Rev. J. S. P. ... to April, 1844,	30 0 0
Lieut. Col. L. W. Watson, ... to April, 1844,	30 0 0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

THE LOTTERIES.

The Friend of India has a few more words, on the subject of the Lotteries. Our contemporary says, that he is satisfied, as far as we are concerned, with our statement, that the Editor of a paper, as Editor, has nothing to do with the advertisement department, but he recommends us to use our "influence with the Proprietor to exclude the gambling notifications altogether." We have no doubt that the Proprietor knows well enough what it becomes him to do in these matters without any advice from us or from these wretched contemporaries. We certainly are not surprised to find that he is so. It is the revenue of the Lottery Advertisements, because the Harbours has arrayed itself against all lotteries, public and private. It has proposed to display his public virtue, in the matter of Lotteries, he would not doubt, have begun with the Government Lotteries. He would not doubt, have been consistent; but we cannot see the consistency of advertising the Government Lotteries, circulating the drawings of them, and then using a paper against the lotteries of private companies.

The Friend, at all events, may assure himself that the advertisements are not inserted in this paper, against the better view of the country, but against the lotteries of private companies. The Friend, at all events, may assure himself that the advertisements are not inserted in this paper, against the better view of the country, but against the lotteries of private companies. The Friend, at all events, may assure himself that the advertisements are not inserted in this paper, against the better view of the country, but against the lotteries of private companies.

But, even supposing, that the Harbours had not advertised the Government Lotteries, which it so strenuously denounces, it appears to us, that it is requiring somewhat too much of the Press to call upon it to cease from advertising whatever it may disapprove. We do not think, it would be right to charge the Times or the Quarterly Review, with inconsistency, because they may have advertised quack medicines, and decanted upon their injuriousness. To censure them for this, would be like saying, that some of our contemporaries would mind us, it is inconsistent in a journal to advertise a book, of the principles of which it does not approve. If we were to advertise a Paineite tract or a Gore pamphlet. We do not think it would be possible to set, to its full extent, up to the obligation of such a role as his; and it seems to us highly probable, that some of our contemporaries will be, ere long, discovered hard at work, straining at gnats and swallowing a camel. We shall not attempt, to follow them in their wretched course of consistency.—Harb. June 23.

Our Sanspore contemporary has little hope of us. He has given us an illustration, like the Indian God Yamen he will turn his eye of wrath upon us, for continuing to advertise lotteries after the unanimous voice of the press has condemned them. Well, we are not the only inconsistent persons. We have seen the most loud and most absurd of their present opponents, betting at a horse race and then crying out against the gambling. We do not understand how that agrees with the straightened morality that will not mention the temptation, lest some one should be led astray. For our part we have never been inconsistent. We object to Government Lotteries because they not only give the sanction of the State to the system, but they are also in general so devised as to hold out the highest temptation to gambling, and to cheat the distressed with the hope of sudden prosperity. A lottery for watches and snuff boxes, will not induce the poor to gamble, but to seek their hard earnings. It may take a little from the superfluities of the rich, not from the pittance of the poor.

At the same time we would prefer seeing all lotteries abolished by law, because they cannot be always rendered fair and harmless, and there is no public advantage in allowing their continuance, not so long as it is legal we consider the advertising of them on an exact par with announcing Horse races, or best French playing Cards.—Eng. June 23.

We quoted a paragraph from the Friend of India last week on the subject of the continued advertisement of the lotteries. The paragraph was as follows: "We object to Government Lotteries because they not only give the sanction of the State to the system, but they are also in general so devised as to hold out the highest temptation to gambling, and to cheat the distressed with the hope of sudden prosperity. A lottery for watches and snuff boxes, will not induce the poor to gamble, but to seek their hard earnings. It may take a little from the superfluities of the rich, not from the pittance of the poor." At the same time we would prefer seeing all lotteries abolished by law, because they cannot be always rendered fair and harmless, and there is no public advantage in allowing their continuance, not so long as it is legal we consider the advertising of them on an exact par with announcing Horse races, or best French playing Cards.—Eng. June 23.

it may rest, for if one proprietor is responsible for one department, another may be for a second, and another for a third. The protection proposed in the case of advertisements might with equal propriety be extended to every line that does not proceed from the editorial pen. But in the present case, as regards the Friend, the Friend has not looked at the question in its strongest light. He has not considered that in a Weekly Journal, with the same proprietor, these letters have been editorially denounced as fraudulent. This might have suggested that we are not singular in the view we take of official responsibility; for it is fair to infer that if that proprietor be looked upon as paramount in authority as to what shall appear and not appear, the liberty of employing a charge of an light character against him would hardly have been taken in one of his own journals. Again, we may observe that the Friend assumes that there is no prepotency in the Editor, though what is generally known we suppose he knows. We rather suspect that this is one of his strokes of quiet sarcasm, to which we are very sorry the Editor of the Friend should have exposed himself. We sincerely regret having had to write a syllable that may be disagreeable to that gentleman, but on a subject of this kind, essentially a public one, it was necessary that we should express what we considered, and still consider, a grave public wrong. As we have before said, the public man judge of the propriety of the course taken. We have already had some reason to know that our course has been approved. It will be seen that the Friend of India alludes to another Lottery; we don't understand, and we certainly do not approve, alluding on an occasion of this kind to parties, and not naming them. If it is right to speak at all, it is right to speak plainly. The paragraph which we sent to Messrs. Latty, Bradburn and Waring is our own; we would have done ourselves the justice of saying explicitly of whom we wrote. With one upholding their lotteries, we see a very wide difference between it and the lotteries of Messrs. Methold and Co., and we have only not alluded to the former before because we would not name them together.—Ed. Sin, June 23.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CALCUTTA NEWS SERVICE.
To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to make in your columns a few remarks on the last letter of "A member of the Calcutta Bible Society." That letter is fitted, though not intended, to make a false impression on the public mind by its misstatement of facts, and as one of the twenty-seven missionaries who have protested against the arbitrary proceedings of the Bible Society, however desirous to follow peace, I cannot think of allowing the misstatement to pass without correction. Had you known all the facts of the case, you would have put the "Member" right in your editorial column, which would have saved me the trouble of writing this letter, and you the trouble of inserting it. Arguments may be often left to themselves to be approved or condemned by what is called a "discerning public," but statements of what are called facts imperatively require counter-statements to be made by those who believe themselves misrepresented, that the public may have the means of putting a right judge in. Hitherto, like most of our brethren, I have satisfied myself with signing the Circular, which you have inserted, and writing my views on the quarto sent for the Society, with which I am connected. The decision of the Bible Society, and the acting out that decision came first, and the discussion came last, at least as far as the missionaries in Hindoostan are concerned. What should have been first, may be left by your readers to decide. I now state the facts to show what a snapper the course pursued by the Bible Society has laid on discussion, and to explain the attitude of mind of the missionaries. Such a letter however as that of the "Member" will not allow them to remain silent.

Permit me to give a statement of facts, which may be compared with the statement of the "Member." In the words of the minute published by the Bible Society, the form "Yai" has been

"To prevent leading my letter with characters which are strange to many who take an interest in this controversy, followed with few exceptions for 1200 years, has been adopted in the Koran, and by all Mahomedan writers and also in the Persian and Oordoo publications of the Auxiliary Bible Society. Our Baptist brethren have for some time used Yasin in their editions of the Oordoo scriptures. As their versions are chiefly read and circulated by members of their own denomination, members of other denominations did not feel themselves called on to express public disapprobation. Whether the Baptist missionaries in Upper India approved of the change appears questionable from the fact that most of them to my personal knowledge always speak Yai, although the books they circulate have Yasin. One of them when asked why he said one thing, while the book said another, frankly replied he did not like to use the new form when speaking to the people, lest they should think we had got a new Saviour. Thus in the use of Yasin no progress has been made, although we are beginning to reap the evil arising from the discrepancy between the books which are circulated, and the words we employ. The translation Society for Upper India has Yasin in its books, but its operations have been so limited, a scale, that any particular notice of them is unnecessary. The Calcutta Bible Society has within the last two or three years been sending forth editions of the Scriptures in Oordoo, in which the name of our Saviour is written Yai. (Yiad and Yasin are different modes of transferring the Arabic letters.) Strange to say, this departure from the practice of 1250 years, and from the course invariably pursued by themselves since the formation of the Society, was effected without the question being ever considered in Committee! Public bodies, it seems, as well as private individuals, must have their seasons of repose. The editions sent forth excited much dissatisfaction. They were incorrectly printed—some of them abounded with errors—proper names were grossly altered, and the name of the Saviour appeared in a form generally unacceptable. Complaints soon reached the ears of the Committee, and they wisely listened to them. To meet the complaints occasioned by the mode in which proper names were spelt, a circular was issued counselling, if my memory be faithful, 300 names. In this list the name of our Saviour was spelt Yiad. No person thought it likely this form would be adopted, and though most in reply wrote the name differently, I believed not an individual made a comment on the form proposed by the Bible Society. The impression was that in former cases when the advice of the Missionaries was asked, effect would be given to the views of the Majority. It appears that regarding several of the names a diversity of opinion existed among the missionaries, though I should think from the answers sent, a list of names might be drawn up, which would be generally acceptable. The Committee however deferred giving a formal decision on the names in general. Circumstances occurred which bring the name of our Saviour before them, and how did they act, when it was seen that their views and those of the Missionaries in Hindoostan diverged! The great majority of the Committee were ignorant of Hindoostanee, and had no occasion to use Hindoostanee versions. The Missionaries in Hindoostan by being asked to give their opinion of 300 names, of which the name of the Saviour was one, had not had their attention specially directed to the subject, and the reasons for their preference were not known. In order to the views of the Bible Society being carried out in Hindoostan, the approbation of the Missionaries was indispensable. Translators appointed and approved by the Bible Society itself were among the number of those who were opposed to their views. The question was a simple and direct one. The views and feelings of the Missionaries might be easily ascertained. In these circumstances what might have been expected from the Christian feelings, the brotherly kindness, the wise policy of the Bible Society's Committee? At the least might we not have expected them to have corresponded with their brethren in the Mofussil, and have tried by argument and persuasion to decide the matter, before proceeding to decide it by authority? What was the course actually pursued by the Committee? One of their number—a gentleman in the Civil Service, of whose character I cannot speak with too high respect—proposed that Yasin be adopted, and after some discussion his proposal was carried. The only Missionary from Hindoostan in Calcutta, who is as your Correspondent truly says, "one of the best Oordoo scholars in the Missionary body" objected to the proposal, as stated in the minute of the Committee, but finally yielded to give his adherence. When the measure was carried, the minute drawn up by the Committee was printed, and widely circulated. It was sent to the Missionaries, and they were informed that the decision was arrived at after much consideration. You may well suppose how astonished they were at this treatment. Far better that they had not been asked an opinion at all, than to be treated in this manner. This was not all. The Committee proceeded at once to act on the decision. They did not stop even here. It is understood that they sent their minute to the Religious Societies of England and America, entreating them to approve the step they had taken, and to refuse aid to those who would not fall in with their decision, thus taking the unusual course of bringing a strange question before the tribunal of England and America, to trouble the minds of the good people beyond the sea, without making the attempt to discuss and settle the question in this country. This step in common with my brethren I deeply regret. It is understood that the attempt was made to force their compliance with a measure for which they saw no good reason, and which they feared would in practice be attended with much inconvenience and evil, they had no resource left but either to yield to a measure which they conscientiously disapproved, or to appear before the tribunal, which the Committee had already chosen. The latter course they have pursued, but for obvious reasons with great reluctance. They knew they were exposing themselves to misrepresentation, and the letter of the member of the Bible Society verifies their expectations. The protest to the Home Societies was drawn up by one of our number, and read and signed by the rest because it substantially stated our views. Had we been able to meet together, and after full consideration to have written out our views, the protest might have been more complete, but as it is, it sufficiently expresses our sentiments. That decision you see is signed by twenty-seven Missionaries. To it are attached the names of Mr. Bowley of Chunar, Mr. Smith of Benares, Mr. Mathew of Mirzapore, and of other missionaries, whose translations of the Scriptures, published by the Bible Society, are widely circulated at the present day. The Missionary body have with great unanimity joined in the measure.

Compare this statement of facts with the statement of your correspondent. The facts I have stated I know to be correct. Your correspondent should not be ignorant, and yet there is a strange discrepancy in our facts. He says the Committee and translators are on one side, and some of the distributors and readers of the Bible on the other, and yet with the exception of one, every Missionary in Hindoostan, who has translated for the Calcutta Bible Society, is in the number of the protesters! The "Member" may say that those who have made the translation of the New Testament, which has just issued from the press, are on the side of the Committee. On this I remark, 1st. They are not on the side of Yai, I wish to use throughout Roman letters. I stand for (the Mussulman form) Yai for ياي and Yasin for ياسين the form adopted by the Bible Society. Throughout the "member's" letter ياسين is used by a mistake of the printer, always written in the Committee in the way which he represents. Your correspondent states that the proposal came from the translators themselves, one of whom is a Missionary from the Methodist. The minutes of the Society tells another tale. That Missionary opposed the measure of the Bible Society at first, and afterwards consented to it, when it appears he considered opportunity vain. To say that the proposal came from him is nearly as correct as to say that the Queen of Tahiti or her own second placed herself under the paternal care of France. The proposal proceeded from a member of the Bible Society, who is understood to have taken a part in the translation of the New Testament just published. Surely, does the measure, which has been lately passed, embrace future editions of the Scriptures? Such is the intention of the Bible Society. Such is the fear of the Missionaries; otherwise, why should they lay their views before their friends at home? Does not the measure then affect all the translators and distributors of the Old Testament? To speak of Mr. Revley and such as mere distributors and readers of the Old Testament, is not worthy of a member of the Bible Society, who should know their services. —After the facts I have stated, can you keep your gravity when you read these words: "Are both translators and Committees to be borne down by this third party? What Committee would or could work in such circumstances? This is enough to render one of the well known able of the world and the lamb coming to the same spot to drink. Surely the 'Member' must be like the man, who complained he was not free, because he was not at liberty to force others to not and think as he did.

Your correspondent gravely instructs us from a regard to truth and justice to send the papers of the Bible Society, wherever we send our protest, suggesting that the Bible Society had sent its documents before to the very parties to whom our protest is addressed. These papers are far more widely distributed than ours. May I therefore call on the 'Member,' from a regard to truth and justice to make the circulation of our protest as extensive, as the circulation of the Bible Society's statements? For instance, in his real fair play, why not get it inserted in the Gleaners Christian Observer?

I can shade the wonder of your Correspondent in reference to our silence about J. H.'s rejoinder to W. That rejoinder did not come to hand till the protest was written and extensively signed. As we were not convinced by J. H.'s rejoinder, we saw no necessity for preventing the protest from going home as it was.

I now leave your readers to judge of the facts stated by a 'Member of the Bible Society.' I had wished to have considered the 'Member's' review of the controversy, but the length of this communication forbids. You say 'brevity is the soul of wit.' I must be very wiles, for brevity is beyond my reach.—In a few days I hope to take up the point I have now left, and to show the incorrectness of the often repeated assertion that there is principle on the side of the Bible Society, and expediency with the objectors—that the one party are influenced by conscience, and cannot yield, while the others are not influenced by conscience, and should yield.

I have the highest respect for the members of the Bible Society, but I know the best of men can do wrong, and when they do wrong, they should be withstood to the face. The difference between the Bible Society and its commitments has become public, the Bible Society and its members taking the lead in the matter, and in self defence we are obliged to come before the public too. I hope that the Bible Society will still see the propriety of retreating its steps. That its members have been influenced by the best motives I am assured, but that they have pursued a course fitted to break up our harmony, I am equally convinced. Let them obtain another such victory as they have obtained, and co-operation is in the notion of things impossible. This separation of these who should be one is to be deplored for their sakes, for ours, and for the sake of our common Christianity.

Yours sincerely,
A. MARVELL MICHENER.
North Western Province,
June 21st, 1848.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.
DEAR SIR,—Will you favour me by inserting these lines in reply to your remarks on the resolution of the Auxiliary Bible Society relative to the Orthography of the name of Jesus? I would commence by requesting you to strike out every word that may savour of an unchristian or party feeling.

It is not my intention to advert to the circumstances which led to the separation of the Baptist Body from the Bible Society, the subject which occupies so considerable a portion of your article, further than to express my hope that none will now be induced to enter into a public discussion of the matter. It is a question of principles on which much may be said, and has been said, on both sides. While none may hold with you that in order to the full development of a Catholic spirit, a Society, like the Bible Society, should allow each translator to follow his own conscientious convictions, even in points of doctrine; others may think that "the law of Christian union is plain, set forth in the Apostolic exhortation, 'whereas we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing'"; and that unity of judgment and profession are here pointed out as calling us to united co-operation up to the limit of our present attainment." At present, however, the discussion can do no good. There is no body of Christians with whom a great many of the members of the Bible Committee co-operate with more harmony and good-will than with their Baptist brethren; and sincerely do I hope that you will not force on a discussion which may have the effect of disturbing the feeling which exists between them; a discussion, too, which is beside the real question at issue.

In regard to the mode of writing the name of Jesus, I do not find fault with you for a full and decided expression of your opinion; but I think the Bible Society may fairly ask for a correct statement of facts. The concluding part of your article leads to the inference that the question is one merely of spelling. The spelling of the name is unquestionably involved in it, but the real question is one of a change of name. Were one to take your name, for instance, and invert the order of the letters, you would scarcely say that this was a mere difference of spelling.

It is urged that it is a matter of indifference how the name is written, whether it be the same according to the New Testament, or whether it be the Mahomedan corruption. Could I be satisfied of this, as a member of the Bible Committee, I would, as some place on its table a motion for rescinding the resolution. But there is the name given by God himself, because it has a meaning; a term significant in itself. When it is stated that the angel said to Joseph, "Thou shalt call his name Jeh," I deny that he regarded any such thing. One he decided he discarded! Where is man's authority for changing, or maintaining the change of the name? It is not being wise above what is written, to call this a matter of indifference? To say so may be termed silly or bigotry or any thing else; but it is the folly or bigotry of adhering to the Word of God.

New most languages have their rules or practices for transferring proper names from foreign languages. The affinity between the Hebrew and the Arabic materially assists the transfer from the former into the latter language. The Hebrew name of the Saviour has its correct corresponding form in the Arabic, as shown by every Arabic Bible, and some Arabic Lexicons. The term used by the Mahomedan is not the name. The office of the Bible Society consists in their desire to supersede the Mahomedan corruption, and to restore the correct name.

You advise the Bible Society to concede the point. I am sure they would readily do so, did a sense of duty permit the concession. But in following this advice, you appear to have lost sight of a very material fact. It is one of the most powerful subsidiary arguments of the Society that the change which they advocate has been in some measure, at least, accomplished by the Baptist Body. Your statement is that this Presidency embraces 61 Baptist Missionaries, while all other Protestant Missions put together, number but 86. The 61 are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land, in the Upper as well as in the Lower Provinces. The Baptist Body are practically circulating the Scriptures in Oorissia almost, if not quite, as fast as the Bible Society. They write the name of the Saviour in the same form as that adopted by the Bible Society; and thus, were the latter to remain in resolution, the two great bodies publishing the Scriptures would in practice be opposed to each other, though agreeing in their views. I pretend not to know the opinions of individual members of the Baptist missionaries; but neither stimulate the Baptist editors, they would all practically be against the Society. It is advisable that the Saviour should be declared under different names! The Baptists declare him under one name. The Bible Committee believe that name to be the correct one. Agreeing in opinion with the Baptist Body in this is an unimportant point, would it be right for the Committee to differ from them in practice; and by this difference create an evil of the more prejudicial tendency to the cause of truth than one possibly be caused by a substitution of the true name for the Mahomedan corruption? Do you condemn the Baptist translators for the course they have taken? If not, then try rather to induce the minority to go with the majority, than seek to perpetuate differences between them.

In your concluding clause you say, "you feel constrained to raise your voice but earnest protest against the folly; you had almost said the folly, of clanking the spelling of a word of five letters, one Ethimoloth of party." This is strong language, dear Sir, when applied by the Christian Editor of a Christian Journal to a body of Christians men acting under a sense of duty, in resolving to call the Saviour in version of the Scriptures published by them, by the name, which their opponents themselves have judged, is the correct name. They forgo the use of harsh terms; the Christian men who part in this discussion you have taken, have not employed them, and would not wish you to do it. Terms such as these are calculated rather to irritate than to heal.

I am, dear Sir,
Yours sincerely,
J. H.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

SIR R. PEEL ON LORD JOHN RUSSELL'S FORMER EDUCATION BILL.

"I shall only (said Sir Robert Peel) the most strenuous opposition in my power to any plan that violates public liberty of education."

"I think the noble lord (Lord John Russell) must not attempt to introduce the system of compulsory education into the country. Where the Dissenters are a great minority, and the rest of the inhabitants of the parish are members of the Established Church, I cannot believe that the principle of compulsory education will give satisfaction to the Dissenters, or that they will submit in cases where the members of the Church preponderate in the vestry, to a tax imposed by them for the support of schools. I hope the noble Lord will take care that he does not expose the poor-rate to unpopularity."

* On Union with Religious Societies, by the Rev. E. M. ...

* Our statement was drawn from the Ministry in which the names of every individual of every denomination at this Presidency is given.—Ed.

larity, on account of any unnecessary interference with Education. I, for one, am deeply convinced of the absolute necessity and of the moral obligation of providing for the education of the people; but I am, at the same time, perfectly satisfied that this can be done in this country, where so much religious dissent prevails, only by leaving it to the voluntary exertions of the parties themselves, and by permitting each to educate his children in the library in which they do, in those great principles of faith in which they were born. I cannot help expressing my confident belief, that the Church of England is now awakened to the absolute necessity of being formed, by compulsion, not by interference, in the slightest degree, with the principles of religious freedom, but awakened to the absolute necessity of assuming that position which she ought to assume, in respect to civil and co-operation with the landed proprietors and others of the country; and that the only satisfactory way of having a system of Education, (which ought to be founded upon the basis of religion,) in this country, is for each party to not for themselves, imposing no restriction upon others."—Deliberation, February 12, 1846.

A meeting of the friends of the Protestant Mission was lately held in the great room, Exeter-hall, for the purpose of adopting such measures as were considered urgently necessary in consequence of the recent seizure of the sovereignty of Tahiti by the French, and for securing the interests of British missions in the islands of the South Pacific. The room was well filled. The following was agreed to:—That this meeting, representing as it does the Protestant Christian churches in Britain, has received with feelings of the deepest sorrow and the strongest reprehension, the intelligence of the unjust seizure of sovereignty by France, of the Kingdom of Tahiti, and the establishment by force of the system of Popery in that island.

The Rev. Mr. Closs, the Rev. Mr. Richardson, and others who attended from the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the committee having at first rather avoided a pledge on the subject of Popery, have rejoined.

CLERGYMAN PROTEST AGAINST PUNISHMENT AND FURY.—The following protest has been signed to, and is in process of signature by the clergy throughout England and Ireland:—

"The Declaration of Protest of the undersigned: Clergy of the Church of England, called forth by the arguments of the present times:—

"We, the undersigned prebends of the United Church of England, and of the dioceses of the same, unshaken attachment to the doctrine of our holy religion, as they are embodied in the formularies of our Church, expressed in its Liturgy, and defined in her Articles, taken in their plain and literal sense, and as the same are generally set forth in the Homilies, and other writings of the Fathers of the Reformation.

"And we do hereby protest against our present, in conformity with our avowed position, against the views of the Church of Rome, as those are confirmed by the decrees of the Council of Trent, authorized in the creed of Pope Pius IV., and maintained in the writings of Roman doctrine and modern apologists. And we further testify against any modified system of Popery, which, by undermining the sacred authority of the Holy Scriptures, so constituting all things necessary to salvation, by subverting the great doctrine of justification, as contained in Article X. and teaching for doctrine the commandments of men, tends to lead men's minds back to the error and practices abjured by our venerable Reformers.

"Finally, while we deprecate all attempts to re-establish a schism, and by dividing the people, we do all efforts of judgment in matters of faith, we desire to make a public profession of our unshaken attachment to the Church of England, her apostolic creed and wholesome discipline, and our willingness to render due obedience to our ecclesiastical rulers in all things lawful."—Fas.

On 20th April there was a meeting of the Church Education Society, at Deliberation, at which the president, Lord John O. Russell, presided. The speakers were Lord Chalmers, the new bishop of Caledonia (Dr. Dalrymple), the Rev. Dr. Rogers Robinson, Mr. Joseph Rogers, and Mr. Dalrymple. The subject for discussion, on the national system of education, and much indignation was expressed against the ministry for having adopted such a position, as to refuse to give to the subject Board, and to refuse aid to any other system.—London Mail.

REVEREND BISHOP.—Communications have recently been made to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners on the subject of the appointment of rector and incumbent bishops. An act of Parliament (26 Henry VIII. c. 14, repealed by 4 Philip and Mary, c. 8, and revised 1 Elizabeth, c. 1) is now in existence, which provides for the appointment of the Bishop of London, and the Bishop of London, in a letter addressed to the commissioners, requests that every diocese should elect and reappoint a bishop, to be appointed, to whom the sum of 1000, per annum might be allowed, and which might be easily provided for when the incomes of the bishops shall be fixed, and the great question, that interference might be apprehended with the just prerogative of the Crown as to the free appointment of new bishops to whom they may be at any time vacant, on account of the fact that the bishop who is appointed, is already being consecrated as a suffragan would have been, prior claim, is thus met by Dr. O'Day in his letter to the commissioners:—"Any such objection may be founded on a false supposition, that the advantage will ever be given to any person for an appointment to one of the episcopal sees from the mere fact of his having previously held the appointment of a suffragan bishop. The suffragan would assist the bishop in the consecration of churches, confirmations, and other duties, but the power of conferring holy orders would be reserved to the principal bishop of the diocese, except under very peculiar circumstances." It is contended that if such appointment were made for Liverpool, Manchester, and other towns in the diocese of Chester, there would be no occasion for the contemplated abolition of one of the sees in North Wales.—Times.

Mr. Wood, the Vocalist, who has been removed from his position at York, has since returned to the service, at Wooler Moor; the pain and anxiety of being absent from husband and child being greater than his religious enthusiasm.—London Mail.

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—The General Assembly of 1846.—In this good town of Paisley the most anxious preparations are really going on in earnest, by the most sincere and energetic of the Churches, for the purpose of their union with the British. The Rev. Mr. McNaughton, of the High Church, with every member of his session, and with at least a thousand of his congregation, are quite fast on a religious and in proof of their union with the British. The week taken from the lessons of the Old Low Church as a temporary place of worship. We believe the session of this congregation were in terms with more than one of the dissenting congregations in the city, and of their churches during part of the Sabbath, but by the bargees we have returned to, they will undoubtedly be better served, and, at small outlay, have a comfortable church entirely at their own disposal. It is well understood that Dr. Burns, of St. George's, and Mr. Stevenson, of the Middle, both remain in the Scotch Church, but besides a great body of the most numerous of the members, with the exception of one or two of the two sessions, all the other members of session will retire.—Free Press.

SCOTCH CHURCH.—The approaching meeting of the General Assembly is looked forward to with the greatest anxiety, and some entertain the belief that the "Moderator" will be a nobleman. From the Glasgow, of Glasgow University, Moderator, Dr. Chalmers has been elected a member of Assembly by the Presbytery of Edinburgh, in order that his supporters may bring him forward for the same high office; and the name of Dr. Lee has also been mentioned, but apparently without any authority.

Efforts are continued to prepare churches for the meeting ministers; but with what success is doubtful.

"With regard to the subscriptions in aid of the 'Free Presbyterian Church,'" says the Edinburgh Weekly Standard, "there appears some discrepancy between the report and rather disappointing appeals of the Non-instruction Papers, and the assurance of Dr. Chalmers that subscriptions and donations are coming in this year for the sum of 100,000, for the building of six hundred churches, which are to be erected and finished by the end of May. This we incline to think, will prove an impossibility at least if the edifice are to be of such solidity as to last for many future May-days."

The Marquis of Breadalbane, who has for some years past been his connection with the Non-instruction party in the Church, has at length seen fit to retreat from his alliance, in so far, at least, as regards an immediate success. It appears from a correspondence between his Lordship and Mr. Dalrymple, that the earl of Mar had requested him to become one of the provisional trustees, in whom the property of the new work was to be vested. The Marquis has declined the honor, and disavowed the propriety of a precipitate separation, at least, before the Legislature had definitively refused to provide a remedy for the existing difficulties. It is to be desired that Mr. Dalrymple's letter, that the session will eventually take place in May, and that there will be two General Assemblies, one at the Established and another of the Seceding Church.

The Standard publishes a long letter on the occasion, from Sir O. Sinclair to the Earl of Aberdeen, dated Brighton, 23rd April. Sir George writes under the title of the impending disruption of the Church, which cannot be a mere of churchmen who have taken him some time to write. He expresses a belief that the members will be numerous, and upon Government to make a last effort to avert the schism. "Permit me to suggest a more expedient. Let the Cabinet summon Dr. Chalmers to London, and let him, as a distinguished man, let each party set with the question be fully and dispassionately discussed, and I should entertain a most sanguine hope; when the Church has explained her minimum and the State its maximum, all difficulties might be removed, and peace through God's blessing be restored, indeed at the eleventh hour, but when twelve were just about to strike the hour of separation."

The Aberdeen Herald alleges that the Government has intimated to its adherents among the parsons, that they had better be prepared to present in case of any session. The Glasgow Chronicle says that the Government intend to bring in a measure for settling the affairs of the kirk in a few days before the meeting of the General Assembly. The heads of the bill have been seen by parties in Scotland interested in the matter, and we understand they are such as will satisfy the "fury thiers," and the Glasgow "memorials."

As it is impossible for us to estimate the probable strength of parties in the approaching Assembly, we give the statements of the Scotch press.

The Moderator have published a roll of the numbers of Assembly according to their being on a majority over the Evangelists of 16, or, if joined by the Middlemen—(calculated at 17)—of 55. The Evangelists, of all the baptisms, and the Seceding Presbyteries are black, and it is well that they have been double returns are claimed as having made only one return, while several individuals are mentioned as having been admitted to the Moderate party. Supplying the omissions, and taking the errors, so far as we have been able, the state of the returns appears to be as follows:—

Single returns,	153	153	17
Double returns,	48	54	1
Total Returned	201	207	18

—Edinburgh Witness.

The Edinburgh Evening Free Press makes out a clear numerical majority against the Non-instructionists in the meeting of the Assembly. The Standard also takes an opinion that the returns show that way; the Edinburgh Courier, while it offers no opinion on the relative strength of parties, says that the Assembly is expected respecting the Non-instructionists, and that party will be in the majority; and also that the Moderation of Dr. Chalmers will be contested, both Principles and Practice.

The Standard, of Glasgow, being again as competent. The Courant thinks, however, that the disruption will take place the winter, and before any business is resolved upon by the Assembly. The Standard also thinks, expecting that interdicts would be applied for and obtained against those parties taking their seats, and thinking it more probable that the Non-instructionists will simply return, rather than venture to break those interdicts. The Non-instructionists, or retiring, seems to intend meeting in Dr. Campbell's new church, Leith, road, the erection of which is proceeding so rapidly that the builder speaks with confidence of getting it up in time. It would certainly be judicious in the constitutional party to arm themselves with interdicts in the manner proposed, and in that way effect the exclusion of the good seceding ministers; although, if their majority should be very decided, the triumph would be far less required, were the same countenance as in the Free Press of Aberdeen, which, at its meeting refused to elect a Moderator, or proceed to business, unless the good seceding ministers, both ministers and elders, were present in full strength. The Standard estimates the strength of 100 to 55. Sir W. Drysdale at the Edinburgh town council meeting brought forward a motion for a remit to the law committee to consider the propriety of a public worship in the city churches which may be left vacant. A Mr. Scott met this motion with an amendment, proposing to offer the use of the churches to the Non-instructionists, and to the Seceding Church, and to erect churches for the retiring ministers, at such moderate yearly rent as may be agreed on. Consideration of both motions was postponed.—Berwick and Elder.

As the General Assembly approaches, the interest in the long pending church controversy naturally becomes more intense. No one now seriously doubts that a session, and the 120 Ministers in the Assembly, but much speculation prevails as to the mode in which the same will take place. That will depend on the relative strength of parties in the Assembly. According to the returns of a contemporary, the Moderate party are rated at 150, the Conventionists also at 150, and the ex Conventionists, or those who do not deem the circumstances adequate to justify a secession, at 100. The 120 Ministers in the Assembly, which returns from Presbyteries which split into two the good seceding question, each session making a vote of 100 Conventionists, on the other hand, include Twenty-one dresses, and eight-and-a-half yards of brown calico, from T. and W. B. Shaw.

Twelve dresses, and six remnants, from Mr. T. Sharpe.

Twelve hats, one dozen of stockings, 13 pairs of do.; 10 pairs of do.; 13 pairs of do.; 2 pairs of do. all white cotton, from Messrs. W. and G. Baines.

Eighty-five pounds of bacon, from Mr. John West.

Four pounds and a half of lead sugar, and 14 lbs. of starch, value of 12. 10s., from Mr. Manning, for a rate of 10s.

Copper money, to the amount of 14. 10s., from Mr. W. Thibault.

Soap, weighing 120 lbs., and one dozen, weighing 20 lbs., from Messrs. Arden.

Three runs of paper from Mr. White.

Three pairs of Blucher boots, one pair of Clarence boots, five pairs of men's shoes, and seven pairs of ladies' slippers, from Mr. Nelson.

Two copper tea kettles, two stop pans, two water cans, one watering can, and one Dutch oven, from Mr. Sherwood.

Four iron tea kettles, two milk pails, two chamber pails, and two water cans, from Mr. Baines, High-street.

A quantity of printing paper, of various sorts, from Mr. B. A. Collins.

Seventy-six lbs. of old cheese, at 7d. per lb., worth 5s. 12. 6d.; from Messrs. Swain and Paddy, for a rate of 15s. 1d.

Twenty-eight and a half lbs. of Salmon cheese, at 10d. Value 12. 10s. 6d. from Mr. Joseph Swain for a rate of 15s. 6d.

The attendance of the clergy and members of the Independent Churches of the parishes, and of the public in general, is respectfully invited.

Village Squares and Parsons' dole of bestowing gifts of clothing, provisions, &c., is a matter of course, but those who may wish to contribute, should be aware that the number of hidden is likely to be small.—N. B. No credit given.

EXTRACTS FROM THE REV. T. W. O'NEILL'S

On the 10th of 1859, a work entitled "A System of Divinity," which extends to 86 volumes.

His first attempt to publish, by subscription, but not meeting, he published the singular manner of printing it by his own hand labour.

To effect this, he purchased as many worn-out and one-off types of country printers as were sufficient to set up two pages, and a press for himself. With these materials he went to work in 1788, performing every operation himself, and working off page by page.

He struck off 40 copies of the first 200 pages, 30 of which he distributed among the University, the bishops, the Royal Society, and the reviewers.

Disappointed at not receiving the encouragement he expected from this proceeding, he intended to open himself any further expense of paper upon them before which he had eleven years in vain; and as he had only reserved 24 copies of the 40 which he had committed, 24 only he continued to print, and at the end of 12 years, unremitted toil, he finished the whole 86 volumes—a new resource for the bibliomaniacs of the century!

A parallel to the above is to be found in Franklin, the Norwich Pagan, who died in 1811.

He one day made this remark—"Every man has some great object which he wishes to accomplish, and why should I not have mine? I will choose such an one as no mortal being ever yet chose; I will get a cop and half, and I will reach the goal on the spiked and 400,000 times." And this he actually accomplished.

—West of England.

Mr. Thomas George Apreece, Bart., late of Walsingham Hall, Huntingdon, who committed suicide at Margate, on the 30th of December, 1848, has by his will, (dated 15th of June, 1848) bequeathed the whole of his property, amounting to 23,000*l.*, to St. George's Hospital.

His share, Mrs. Amelia Pennoke, intends to dispute the validity of the will in the ecclesiastical court on the ground that the deceased was not of sound mind at the time of executing such will.

—Bristolian.

TALKS OF RAW MATERIALS.—In the House of Lords, on Thursday last, Lord Montagu moved for a resolution relating to the returns made by the cotton and cotton during the last seven years, with a view to show the alarming decrease that had taken place, and the inequality of the returns made by the different mills, by pressing heavily upon our staple trade, give an undue advantage to the foreign manufacturer.

Lord Montagu explained how the duty on cotton had become so much more injurious than at former periods. Formerly, we exported the finished article; now, we export chiefly the unfinished article.

The duty on the raw material presses more severely on the uneducated cotton, than the article in the finished state. In what branches of manufacture are we least disadvantage competitors?

In the higher description of fabrics, into which the improvement of machinery enters.

What improvements enter the article, foreign goods can only compete with us. This, they begin, because the most handsome in proportion to the nature of the article in which the decrease is the least compared with us. The tax is as nothing on the higher classes of articles, but is most oppressive on the coarsest class.

We are, in fact, by this tax on the raw material, sending an adverse effect, and encouraging the inferior done to us by foreign powers.

The Americans have cotton within themselves; the French give a bounty of 10*l.* on the ton of cotton in the German Union or in Switzerland; in this country only, is there a duty on the raw article.

As to the state of the manufacture, comparing the exports of 1840 and 1848, there is a difference of 10*l.* in the value of the cotton year, of 3,600,000*l.*

The wages paid in the cotton trade amount to 18,000,000*l.* a year; and a falling off of 12 per cent. must create an immense abridgement of the comforts of those employed in the trade.

The woollen trade exhibits still more unfavorable results than the cotton. Comparing together 1840 and 1848, there has been a falling off in the declared value of woollens exported in the latter year, of from 5,000,000*l.* to 2,000,000*l.*

In the interval during which the woollen trade, once our greatest staple manufacture, has fallen from 5,000,000*l.* to 2,000,000*l.*, the French woollen trade has increased from 555,000*l.* to 1,064,000*l.*

It is calculated, that the wages in the woollen manufacture amount to about 6,000,000*l.* and 9,000,000*l.*; and that the loss to the manufacturer, who has a mass of the comforts of life in the number of his workmen, is estimated in the amount of wages.—Fat.

THE REVENUE—PROPOSALS FOR THE INCREASE.—From the Quarterly Revenue Accounts given to the House of Commons, it will be seen, that there is still a decrease, both on the quarter and on the year, in those branches which indicate the state of trade and the condition of the nation.

Thus, in the last quarter, the revenue of the Customs, on the quarter, of 578,162*l.*; on the year, of 1,078,380*l.*

In the Excise, the decrease on the quarter is only 17,862*l.*; while on the year it is 1,041,092*l.*

It may, therefore, be seen, that the diminished rate of decrease, that the deterioration of the condition of the great body of consumers has reached its lowest point, and that matters are not growing worse.

The result of the new Tariff cannot any more be ascribed to the falling off of the Customs, although there can be no doubt that it is chiefly owing to the unsettled state of our commercial relations, and the general hindrance of trade.

The decrease under the Revenue of 14,707,000*l.* on the year, and 6,811*l.* on the quarter, also indicates the stagnation of general business.

The Post-office has lost 100,000*l.* on the year, but on the quarter only 2,000*l.*

As "Miscellaneous," of 415,091*l.* on the year, and 219,308*l.* on the quarter, which is explained by the decrease of a portion of the 1850 revenue.

In the Income-tax, the decrease on the quarter would have been 136,397*l.*; and on the year, 1,741,203*l.*

But, by the operation of the Income-tax, there is a decrease of 178,942*l.* on the year, and 1,741,203*l.* on the quarter.

With the corresponding quarter of 1845, and of 714,932*l.* on the year.

The total produce of the Income-tax cannot at present be ascertained with certainty. The amount received in the last October and January quarters, gives, of course, the half-year's receipt upon funded property, viz., 277,004*l.*; or 1,148,112*l.* on the year.

The receipt of the last quarter is 1,053,222*l.*, of which about 300,000*l.* may be considered as derived from the tax on the dividends, and the remainder as the half-year's duty upon private income.

Were the whole of the first half-year collected, we might calculate that the tax upon private income, exclusive of the funds, would produce about 3,000,000*l.*, and with the tax upon funded property, 4,300,000*l.*

Below the official calculations; and as a large amount upon the first half-year remains to be paid in, it may be concluded, that the total of the year's receipt will not fall short of four millions and a half.

It has been stated, that the amount paid in the last quarter, contains the whole year's duty on the consols; but the large mortgage annuities; but while these have been paid, the mortgage annuities have not been paid in, may be doubted.

Lord Wharfedale understood there was a considerable error on the half-year. Lord Brougham's estimate, however, that the produce of the tax on the mortgage annuities and a half, must be set down as one of Ex-Chancellor Haughey's signs of extravagance.—Fat.

Our attention has been directed to an advertisement to be inserted in the Standard, for the creation of a Jewish monastery. A correspondent says, the parties advertise it for a Church, but it is in truth to raise funds for a Russian monastery.

Some of the consuls have been sent to be attached. The following is the advertisement:—

"A Baner will be held in the Large Room of the Manchester Town-hall, King-street, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, the 17th, 18th, and 19th April, for the sale of useful and heavy articles, needlework, &c., under the immediate patronage of—

His Highness the Prince of Wales.

The Most Noble the Marquess of Wellesley.

The Right Hon. the Countess of Harborough.

The Right Hon. the Duke of Devonshire.

The Right Hon. the Duke of Devonshire.

The Right Hon. the Duke of Devonshire.

The Hon. Lady Caroline Townley.

The Hon. Lady Beldingfield.

The Hon. Lady Beldingfield.

The Hon. Mrs. Wald, Luttrell Castle.

Lady General.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

Mrs. Ashurst.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 444. Vol. IX.]

SEMAPORE: THURSDAY, JULY 2nd. 1843.

[Price 2 Cts. Rs. monthly, or 10 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.]

GENERAL POST OFFICE NOTICE.

THE public are hereby informed, that the Government of the Oriental Express, will be dispatched leave to Bombay on Saturday, the 26th inst., on which date, letters will be received at this Office, under the rules published on the 24th of September 1842.

W. M. MOORE,
Deputy Post Master.

For Willam, General Post Office,
The 26th June, 1843.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The Editor of the Friend of India begs to acknowledge the following donation:
From G. O. Co's. Rs. 24, to the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta.

STATE OF THE COUNTRY AND ITS FINANCES.

The stability of our Empire in India was never more clearly demonstrated than during the past year. From the Himalaya to Cape Comorin it was known that we had been ignominiously expelled from Cabul, and that a large British army had been annihilated beyond the Indus, by the tribes who had heretofore established their dominion in India. To add to our misfortune, it was also known that our avenging army had been arrested for months at the threshold of the defiles, as if spalled by the difficulty of entering them. Yet this period of unexampled disgrace, in which we might have expected a spirit of opposition to revive among the chiefs who were depressed by our supremacy, passed away without a single hostile demonstration, except in the district of Bundelkand, and even there, in no instance have five hundred insurgents ever been able to assemble. The violence of the shock given to the prestige of our power, has only served to exhibit more clearly the strength it has acquired. It is scarcely necessary to add that our triumphant return from Cabul has served to consolidate our power, and that to all present appearance nothing is necessary to secure the tranquillity of the country for years to come, but the exercise of a little common sense and ordinary vigor in the administration of its affairs. There is of course a strong disposition in the Tory party at home, to ascribe the repose of India to the genius of the Governor-General. So far as that repose has been improved by our victories in Afghanistan, and so far as Lord Ellenborough contributed by his exertions to those victories, he is entitled to share in the credit. But the health of the patient is far more to be attributed to the strength of his constitution, than to the aid of political practitioners.

But is India tranquil? Comparatively speaking it is. In a country in which we have overturned so many interests, and created so many enemies, absolute tranquillity can scarcely be expected for a century to come. Bundelkand is a disturbed state; but after a careful perusal of the usual flood of letters which have appeared on the subject in the papers, truth compels us to say that the insurrection, which was from the beginning insignificant—a kind of tempest in a tea pot—is far less troublesome than it was a twelvemonth ago, when people talked of posting the fort of Allahabad in a state of defence. A province comprising no large number of independent little kings cannot be expected to exhibit the same aspect of repose as one of our own districts, where every man from the highest Zemindar to the meanest peasant is the Company's soldier. To us much reflecting on the diverse letters which have appeared in the papers, the tranquillity of Bundelkand seems to be considered rather a personal than a political question. Those who believe that Col. Stocman, who has put down Thingoes, and whose simple appointment to suppress Dacoits produced such a salutary dread on the minds of the profession generally, as to induce the most successful among them to retire beyond his jurisdiction, is the man to tranquillize Bundelkand, and that the peace of the country cannot be established by him, believe that the country is less tranquil than ever. Those, on the contrary, who are ready to admit the idea that the combination of savagery and vigor exhibited by the Colonel is just the thing for a province, half dependent and half independent, are disposed to look with a cheerful eye on its present condition and prospects.

At Gwalior there is not peace. On the death of the old Raja, our Government recognised the adopted son as his successor, and the Mama Saib as minister. But an insurgent called the Khapoor-walla, has suddenly appeared on the stage, ignominiously expelled the Minister, and acquired possession of the treasures and the personal dignity of the young sovereign. He has overturned the administration to which we made ourselves a party, and has obliged or induced the British Resident to retire from the Court to the camp of the Contingent force. It is said that Lord Ellenborough has refused to interfere, and has directed the Resident not to return to the Court till he is invited back. This determination is imputed to the tenor of the letters which his Lordship has received from England relative to the occupation of Scinde; but this we think is a far-fetched reason; a more probable cause may be discovered in the policy which his Lordship has invariably pursued in reference to all the states which stand in the same position to the British Government as that of Gwalior. That policy has been one of the most strict and jealous non-interference. But non-interference is next to an impossibility. In this very instance of Gwalior, the policy of non-interference has been sufficient to dispel the gloomy forebodings and to demonstrate the elasticity of our Indian revenue; and we can now smile at the idea of England's coming to the rescue of the Minister's failing credit. The comment of the Minister, was an act of intervention; and identified us in the opinion of the natives of India with the existing order of things. The premature departure of your Resident, followed as it is by the departure of your Resident, will be regarded by the people of the country, as well as by its princes, as a defiance of our authority, and it requires no secret to predict that we cannot long continue in the present state of neutrality.

In Scinde, Shere Mahomed has collected another Beloochee army and we are daily expecting to hear that Sir Charles Napier has annihilated it. But the tranquillity of that province, which by whatever means acquired, we may not, without relinquish, will be a work of time. Already Sir Charles's boast that not another shot would be fired in it, been belied by the event. The warlike Beloochees will not easily relinquish their hold on its fertile plains and, they must experience a succession of defeats before they can be brought to regard the recovery of it as health and vigor.

hopeless. While the province is under a Naper, there can be little fear for the result of their efforts; but let our troops once be subjected to the same imbecility, which cost us Cabul, and another military tragedy may be exhibited on the banks of the Indus.

The Finances of India may well form an object of congratulation, as well of surprise, to those who noticed Sir E. Peel's doleful anticipations in Parliament last year. It will not be forgotten how the Premier, when enforcing the necessity of an Income Tax, availed himself of the discomfiture of the finances of India, though he never intended that a farthing of that tax should be applied to their relief. "Bear in mind," said Sir Robert, "the probable demand I may have to make for the increase of the military or naval establishments of the country having regard to the position of affairs in the East"—"I am sorry to say that Indian finance offers no consolation for the state of the finance in this country." He described the deficiency of the next year as independently of the increase to be expected on account of China, and Afghanistan. On the 23d of March he enforced on the House the "obligation of being prepared with money in hand to maintain the falling credit of the Company"—"You do not believe perhaps that the financial difficulties of India will recoil on you; but if you think so, I shall convince you that the time is approaching, when you will know by experience that such a position cannot be maintained."—"Look at the war in India and China.—We have to send six Regiments to India in order to maintain the honor and power of this country." The Edinburgh Review, from which these extracts have been made, insinuates that these statements were intended to mystify an assembly notoriously ignorant of the real condition of the revenue and finances of India. Others, more considerate, have attributed them to a real dread on the mind of the Premier that our financial system would break down. Perhaps there was a mixture of both motives. A single year however has been sufficient to dispel these gloomy forebodings and to demonstrate the elasticity of our Indian revenue; and we can now smile at the idea of England's coming to the rescue of the Minister's failing credit. The Company's credit was as firm as ever even at the most serious period of the late crisis. If a five per cent. loan was not filled up with rapid subscription, followed as it was by the impression that the Indian Government would want millions more to maintain its authority beyond the Indus and would be constrained to open a new loan at six per cent. The current of subscriptions ebbed and flowed according to the reports of our intention to abandon or retain the country. When it became certain that our victorious army was actually on its return, Government was so overwhelmed with payments into the loan, as to be obliged, in its own defence, to close it. The fact is, that the embarras of the Indian treasury arose from no permanent increase of establishments, and no interruption of the established sources of revenue, but simply from the vast sums required for operations beyond the Indus. As soon as this chain ceased, our finances resumed their usual appearance of

Of this fact the present value of the public securities may be adduced as a proof. The old five per cents, are at a sickly premium of nine or ten annas per cent; while the last loan bears a premium of between three and four Rupees per cent. On enquiring into the cause of this difference in the market price of securities of the same value, we find it arises from a report that the Treasury vaults are choked up with money; and that the idle funds in it amount to two millions sterling. The report appears to us to be not far from the truth. This has given rise to an impression that Government intended to commence paying off its loans, and that the old five per cents would be the first victims. Assuming these facts to be correct, we find that instead of Sir Robert Peel's being "obliged to prepare himself with money in hand to maintain the falling credit of the Company," within some months after the last detachment of our troops had crossed the Indus, though there has been no retrenchment of domestic expenditure even to the extent of 50,000 £ a year, and though we have been called to provide the ways and means for conquering a kingdom, as large as Portugal and as fertile as Egypt, the accumulation of funds in the Treasury amounts, according to probable report, to the sum of Two Millions Sterling; and that three years will be sufficient to pay off all the pecuniary obligations incurred by the Afghan war—without the imposition of any property tax in India.

MR. THOMAS SIDNEY SMITH AND THE LIBEL CASE.—A very singular case of Libel has just been tried at Bombay, which has ended in the Court's awarding damages to the extent of 500 Rupees against the Editor of the Bombay Times.

Mr. Thomas Sidney Smith, a barrister of the Supreme Court at Madras, went down to Hyderabad, in the dominions of the Nizam, about the end of 1840, where a number of Natives who were dissatisfied with the Resident and the British authorities there, resorted to him and placed their cases in his hands. On all such occasions when a European gentleman makes his appearance at any station, receiving complaints and collecting evidence against those whom the natives have been accustomed to regard with respect, the whole frame of society becomes unhinged, and heats and animosities are generated, in which it is difficult for either party to keep its temper. A series of articles appeared in the Englishman simultaneously with Mr. Smith's advent at Hyderabad, in which the conduct of some of the British authorities in the Nizam's territories was attacked with extreme severity. These articles were generally understood to have been one of the consequences of Mr. Smith's residence at Hyderabad; and some even went so far as to attribute them to his pen, but of this there is no evidence.

Some gentlemen in the Deccan, roused by these attacks on the British authorities, took up their defence under the signature of Ryut, and sent two letters to us, forwarding copies of them at the same time to the Editor of the Bombay Times, but forgetting to alter the address. Of these letters we published the first; the second contained a personal insinuation, of the truth of which we had no evidence; and we declined inserting it. It appeared however in the Bombay Times of the 24th of March 1841, as a letter addressed to the Friend of India. Mr. Smith, fancying that it had appeared originally in our columns, sent us a reply to it, with an anonymous signature, which to the best of our recollection was in type, and appeared to have been carefully revised. It was accompanied with a letter from him under his own signature, in which he said that it "would be easy to name noblemen who were his relatives or members of Parliament who were his friends," and at the same time insinuated that we were actuated by base motives in our readiness to aid in defending the servants of Government. He also used other expressions which were intended to be very cutting. This virulent attack on us for a communication we had never published, served only to create a smile at the thought that so much indignation should be wasted. At the same time he sent a copy of his reply, which was signed Anti-Humbly to the Bombay Times.

The libel on which Mr. Smith founds his action against the Times is contained in these words. Ryut said, "a Native friend of mine, who occasionally consults me regarding his affairs, told me he had just had a very large Nuzerana unjustly taken from him by the Nizam's Government, and that he intended going to Hyderabad to pay and get the Chota Lawyer Sahab to write a petition for him, and forward it through his relation the Lord Burra Governor Sahab in Calcutta to his (Mr. B's) desi Ameras in Parliament, and before the Queen." If Mr. Smith made his fortune—(70,000 Rs. through writing petitions) by such imposition, and Capt. Malcolm was aware of it, I cannot think the Assistant Resident, in pressing his case, returned to Madras, recommended any thing out of the way."

Now it appears very singular that Mr. Thomas Sidney Smith, whose character and honor are said to have been so deeply compromised by this charge, should have slept on the diabolical for eighteen months, and then have brought an action against the publisher, when the original letter, together with all hope of reference to the writer, was lost.

It appears very singular that Mr. Smith, having engaged in a newspaper controversy with Ryut, having in his reply to the latter now deemed calumnious made no allusion to the stain cast on his honor, and having moreover encouraged Ryut to continue the controversy, by saying, "I am really glad he has taken the field so boldly and I promise to discuss every point with him," should, at the end of eighteen months, ground an action for damages on a paragraph in that same letter of which he had extolled the boldness.

It is singular that Mr. Smith, after having vindicated his character in the public papers, at the time, from this charge, by using the strongest term a gentleman can adopt, and designated it as a libel, should consider it necessary to seek a further vindication of his character, after so long a period, in a Court of law.

It is singular that Mr. Smith, having in his letter to us called Ryut a "mean liar," and a "smoking calumniator," should bring an action for the falsehood and calumny which he supposed to have been charged on himself.

It is singular that Mr. Smith, considering himself injured by Ryut's having said that a native had told him how he, Mr. Smith, obtained money by imposing on the Hyderabad natives with the assertion that he was a relative of the Governor General, while in his letter in reply to Ryut he brought a still more offensive accusation against another individual, Mr. Dighton, by stating that he had been charged with swindling to the extent of a lakh and a half of Rupees. It is singular that an individual smarting under what he considers a charge of "swindling," should turn round and charge others with the same crime, and eighteen months after doing his accuser, or rather the Editor who was the innocent instrument of publishing the accusation, before a tribunal, and demand heavy damages for the loss of his own character.

But the Judge's charges are still more singular, and we must give them a separate article next week.

COAL.—We publish among our advertisements a notice regarding the Coal obtained from the Palamow beds, which we are informed can now be delivered at Dinapore at a less cost than Coal brought up by a circuitous route from the miscalled, Burdwan field. We have been favoured with some particulars respecting this Coal, which may not be uninteresting to the reader.

Major Sage, who was employed by Government in 1830, in examining the coal measures in that part of the country, and who succeeded in conveying about 4,000 maunds to Dinapore at an expense of about 16,000 Rupees, which was not found to be adapted for the Steamers, says—Vide the Coal Committee's Report—Nor am I of opinion that there is at present either capital or energy sufficient in India for individual enterprises of such magnitude." He recommended Government to connect the Coyle, the Gorseman, and the Gangary river with the head of the great Pompon, &c. but as this would have involved an expenditure of between 20 and 30 lakhs of Rupees, Government did not follow this advice. Perhaps the difficulties were somewhat overrated by him; though the success which has now attended the enterprise has not been obtained without serious obstacles. One great difficulty is presented by a range of rocks four or five miles in length, through which the channel for boats is in some parts only 30 or 35 feet wide. The boatmen refused to transport the coal from the Coyle to the Soane for less than 30 Rupees the 100 maunds, but it has been accomplished for a less sum by the construction of boats by the enterprising individual who now offers the coal to the public. The coal did not reach Dinapore in 1841, at a less cost than 4 Rupees a maund. Last year, the expense was reduced, and coal reached the point of delivery at one Rupee, two annas. Greater facilities have now been created, and in the present year the charge will be further reduced. He expects in the course of time to be able to supply it at 7 or 8 annas the maund. Government now pay, as we are informed, 52 Rs. 10 annas the hundred maunds; or 13 annas 1½ pie per maund, on the whole line from Calcutta to Allahabad.

Should this enterprise succeed, and good coal be delivered from these mines at 8 annas the maund at Dinapore, the progress of inland steam navigation will be greatly facilitated. The expense of fuel forms one of the most serious items, and until the cost of it can be reduced, by the acquisition of coal from localities in the more immediate vicinity of the great towns on the line of communication, every other retrenchment will be comparatively useless. It is, we believe, mainly to be attributed to the high price of coal that this enterprise has not made any progress during the last eight years.

We fear, however, that unless a larger field for the consumption of coal can be created, or unless coal of a character resembling that obtained from England, can be discovered, those who are engaged in working the mines in different parts of the country will suffer serious loss. The Barman coal has been found too inferior to be of much use in sea-going steamers. The Effie, a steamer is understood to have been unable to make more than eight knots and a half an hour, in the first trip to Suva, so long as the country coal was used, whereas when supplied with the English coal taken in at Galle, she attained a speed of nearly ten knots. Capt. Englewood, it is said, will look at nothing but English coal. Meanwhile those who have opened coal mines are labouring to increase the supply, and it is expected that in the present season it will fall little short of two millions of mounds, while the demand continues almost stationary at twelve hundred thousand.

EXACTIONS AT VINGAPATAM.—We have been requested to give publicity to the following statement of exactions levied on the poor Natives at Vingapatam, by certain influential and orthodox Natives at that place, for the support of the Illudoo religion. It appears somewhat singular that assessments so illegal should have been allowed to exist for any length of time under the eye of the European authorities; but it does sometimes happen that the European officer is unconscious of every thing that is not brought officially before him. Be that as it may, the fact that such exactions exist is now publicly known, and we feel perfectly confident that the Madras Government will direct the most searching enquiry to be made on the subject, and put an immediate stop to all further demands of this nature.

THE WAY IN WHICH IDOLATRY IS SUPPORTED IN INDIA.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.
Dear Sir,—In reference to this important subject I wish to relate one fact that has come to my knowledge a short time since.

The temples at Vingapatam having fallen greatly out of repair within the last few years, and the greater part of the people caring nothing about them, a scheme was set on foot by some of the orthodox Hindoos of this place for repairing and beautifying the shrines of their ancient deities. View to raise the money was the difficulty, for it takes along time to move a Hindu's heart; and if the idolatrous shrines of this part of India were to depend only upon the voluntary offerings of the people for their support, they would soon fall to ruin. At last three of the chief men in the employ of Government at this place hit upon the following device; the owner of each bullock that entered the town with grain for sale, and the owner of every head of wood, was compelled to pay two dals for the repairs of the decayed temples. This taxing system has been going on for six months past, and though the poor ryots have been inclined to make complaint against this unjust tax, they have been kept back from so doing from fear of the influential native gentlemen at the head of the scheme. This plan for the support of Hindu temples in this town is conducted by the three principal Government native servants connected with the Court and Collector's Office. They have appointed persons, a gumastah (or writer) and a regular establishment to collect and disburse the money. There is little doubt that many of the poor ryots and coolies imagine that this tax is demanded by the Government, and thus the British name is disgraced, and British justice called in question, by the largest and most industrious portion of our fellow-subjects in this district.

It deserves to be mentioned that a similar tax was exacted some years ago in this place, but on being made known to the Government by the Circuit Judge, it was immediately abolished by an order from head-quarters. The sum collected in this way already amounts to upwards of 10,000 Rupees, and out of this and other resources 600 little Brahmins are daily fed and the temples repaired.

I hope, my dear Sir, that you will take notice of this glaring piece of injustice and duly animadvert upon the same.

I remain, yours sincerely,

VINGAPATAM, 17th June, 1848.

JOURNALS OF EVENTS IN AFGHANISTAN IN THE WINTER OF 1841. LADY SALE. LIEUT. EYRE. LIEUT. MELVILLE.—THE FATAL RETREAT.—The tragic death of Sir William Macnaghten was not positively known in the cantonments till the day after the event, the 24th December, when letters from Captains Lawrence and Conolly to Ladies Sale and Macnaghten informed them of the assassination. It was however evidently seen from the Camp that Sir William had fallen a victim to Afghan treachery, and had been either murdered or captured. The troops stood to their arms and manned the walls, but a single effort was made to rescue or revenge their leader. The Ghazees were seen from the walls to strip the body of a European in the very spot where the Envoy had met the chiefs, and it was afterwards ascertained that this was the body of the Envoy, which might have been recovered by a single charge of cavalry, but no movement was made. The loss of the Envoy created a deep sensation in the Camp, and the troops were ardent for action, but nothing could break up the apathy of the Commanders. All that General Elphinstone did was to send Capt. Grant to the head of each regiment to assure the troops that the conference had been disturbed by some Ghazees, that Sir William was safe, and was in Sherif's fort, and would soon return. As the General was known to have received no intelligence to warrant such an assertion, it was of course received with little confidence.

The confusion in the City was great. The murder of the Envoy and of Capt. Trevor, and the capture of Capt. Lawrence and Mackenzie soon became known. The Afghans seem to have been terrified at the boldness and success of their treachery. They fancied that there was some British spirit left in the cantonments, and reckoned upon being instantly attacked by an infuriated body of our troops. But their fears were idle. Lieut. Melville observes that, considering the excitement of the troops and the apprehensions of the enemy, an attack on the city might, even at that time, have been successful, and have turned the scale in our favour. Under favour of this success, we might have made good our way to the Bala Hissar, and there held out till summer. "If we attack the city," says the writer with the deepest feeling of scorn: "We had seen our Political Agent murdered, our magazine taken, our troops defeated, and had not attacked it; why should we attack it? No, no, it was our fate again to allow ourselves to be ensnared in their miserable treaties, and, vacillating to the last, fall victims in the end to their treachery, and seal with the blood of a hundred officers, and 12,000 men, including camp followers, the work so unimportantly begun."

On the 24th, the Afghans chiefs sent in the treaty with some important alterations; and at the same time attributed the murder of the Envoy to his breach of faith—as if they themselves had not violated every item of the treaty! The new terms were that all our guns, except six, and all our treasure should be given up, and that all the married men with their wives and children should be exchanged for the hostages now in their hands. General Elphinstone, on receiving this communication, requested Major Pottinger to assume the office of Political Agent, and though that officer was suffering severely from his wound, and incapacitated for active bodily exertion, he had too much public spirit to decline the office. On the 26th, the Naib Amier arrived in the camp, to obtain the ratification of the treaty. It appears that Sir W. Macnaghten had engaged to pay the Chiefs fourteen lakhs of Rupees, on the safe arrival of the army at Peshawur. They now insisted that this sum should be paid down before the army moved out of cantonments, by bills drawn on the Indian Government, which the bankers of Cabul were ready to cash. Major Pottinger was exceedingly averse to the payment of this money, or indeed to any treaty at all. He knew the Afghan character too well to put any confidence in the promises of the Chiefs. Even at this, the eleventh hour, he proposed to hold out at Cabul, or to force an immediate retreat to Jalalabad. But we must give the whole passage from Eyre:

"Major Pottinger being altogether averse from the payment of this money, and indeed strongly opposed to any treaty binding the Indian Government to a course of policy, which it might find inconvenient to adopt, a council of war was convened by the General, consisting of himself, Brigadiers Shelton and Anquetil, Col. Chambers, Capt. Beller, Assist. Qr.-Master-Gm., and Capt. Grant, Assist. Adjt.-Gen. In the presence of this council, Major Pottinger declared his conviction that no confidence should be placed in any treaty forced with the Afghan chiefs; that, under such circumstances, to bind the hands of government, by promising to evacuate the country, and to restore the deposed Amier, and to waste moreover so much public money, merely to save our own lives and property, would be inconsistent with the duty we owed our country and the government we served; and that the only honourable course would be either to hold out to the last at Cabul, or to force our immediate retreat to Jalalabad."

"This, however, the officers composing the council, one and all, declared to be impracticable, owing to the want of provisions, the surrender of the surrounding forts, and the insuperable difficulties of the road at the present season; they therefore deemed it preferable to pay any sum of money, rather than sacrifice the whole force in a hopeless prolongation of hostilities. It was accordingly determined to sue, and the Major Pottinger should at once renew the negotiations which had been commenced by Sir William Macnaghten, and that the same promises to the chiefs by that functionary previous to his murder should be paid."

On the 29th, the Naib Amier came in from the city with Captain Lawrence and the bankers, and the bills were drawn out, signed and delivered. The sum thus negotiated amounted to fourteen lakhs of Rupees, of which Ameen-olla, the head of the conspiracy, was to receive six. It was distinctly explained to the bankers and Afghans by Captain Lawrence that the bills would not be honoured unless the army arrived in safety at Peshawur; and that they would be of no value except this fact was certified under the hand of one of the Political Officers at that place. The same fact is understood to have been proclaimed in the city by Capt. Conolly. That the conditions of payment were never fulfilled, is as certain as that the Chiefs never intended to fulfil them. The hills were very properly disconcerted by our Government, and it is some consolation, amidst the dreary reflections to which this campaign gives birth, to know that with the exception of 50 or 60,000 Rupees, which the Chiefs consented to squeeze out of the bankers, they never derived any benefit from the hills. Four officers were given up as hostages. Three of the Shah's guns were made over during the day, together with the greater part of the treasure, to the evident disgust of the soldiers. The sick and wounded were sent into the city, but the very camels and doolies which conveyed them were plundered on their return; so admirably did the Afghan Chiefs keep their engagements with us, before the retreat commenced.

Those Chiefs had now gained all they had demanded. The forts around the cantonments had been delivered up; the guns and ammunition made over to them. They had obtained possession of nearly all the treasure in the camp. They had received Billa for fourteen lakhs of Rupees, on the Indian Treasury, and the Envoy was no longer in existence. They had gradually reduced this noble British army to a state of complete helplessness. It remained now for them to fulfil their part of the contract; to supply the troops with provisions, to furnish them with cattle, and escort them in safety to Peshawar. They did nothing. They sent in no provisions, no cattle, no escort; they put off the departure of the crippled forces from day to day, that the murderous Ghilzies might have time to occupy the passes and extinguish the army. Of this the inmates of the Camp received repeated warning. They were told that the Chiefs never intended to keep faith with them, and that it was their intention to obtain possession of the ladies, and to put every man, save one, to death.

"At length," says Lieut. Eyre, the fatal morning of the 6th of January dawned which was to witness the departure of the Cabul force from the cantonments in which they had sustained a two month's siege, to encounter the miseries of a winter march through a country of perhaps unparalleled difficulty.... Deep snow covered every inch of mountain and plain with one unspotted sheet of dazzling white. "It lay a foot deep on the ground and the thermometer was below freezing point. There was no appearance of the promised escort, though 40,000 Rupees, over and above the fourteen lakhs and the treasure which was surrendered, had been paid for 3000 men. After the advance had proceeded about a mile, an order was brought from Zeman Shah Khan to return to cantonments as the Chiefs were not ready; but this was no longer possible. The strength of the force on quitting Cabul to pursue its dreary journey to Jellalabad, which only one individual reached, consisted of 890 Europeans, 970 cavalry, and 3840-foot; altogether about 4500 fighting men. The camp was crowded with nearly 13,000 followers. From the state of the weather, the condition of the troops and the disposition of the enemy, it was manifest that the safety of the army depended entirely on its pushing forward rapidly through the terrific defiles, and reaching the valley of Jellalabad, in the shortest possible time. Had there been a master mind at the head of the army, the retreat might have been accomplished with comparatively small loss and some little renown. But, had there been such an individual at the helm, there would have been no retreat at all; by the 6th of January, the troops, instead of turning out of cantonments to perish on the mountains, would have been safely cantoned in the Bala Hisar. The troops started from the cantonments in military order, with an advance guard, a main column and a rear guard; but many precious hours were lost in passing the mass of troops and baggage across a narrow bridge, thrown up for the occasion, over the narrow river, while there was a ford a little above it. Thus the opportunity of pushing on through the Khoord Cabul the first day, at all risks, which the few friends we had among the Afghans, had so strenuously advised, was lost. The advance halted at 4 P. M. Previously to leaving the cantonments, Lady Sale picked up from among the books which were about to be abandoned, a volume of Campbell's Poems, which opened, alas, too prophetically! at those well known lines:

"Few, few shall part where many meet,
The snow shall be their winding sheet;
And every turf beneath their feet
Shall be a soldier's sepulchre."

The rear guard did not leave cantonments till near dusk; they were fired upon incessantly. As the cantonments were left by our troops, they were filled with infuriated fanatics thirsting for blood and plunder. As the evening advanced they set fire to the cantonments. "The night," says Lieut. Melville, "was dark and murky, while the columns of lurid smoke and flame, from the Envoys and General's houses, both burning, ascended high into the heavens, and throwing a red glow several times the thickness of Afghan banditti in the vicinity to resemble flames at their camp; while the faint moans of the dying, the louder cries of the wounded, and the harsh and exulting shouts of the Ghazies added to the effect. On every side lay women and children, dying from the cold, or wounded wretches wishing for the death which came not."

The rear guard was so long in clearing the cantonments that it did not get up to the encampment till two in the morning, when it was found that all order was already at an end. "The tents had been pitched without the slightest regard to regularity, those of different regiments being huddled together in one intricate mass, mixed up with baggage, camp followers, camels and horses in a way which beggars all description." Thousands of poor fellows were obliged to lie down on the bare snow without shelter, fire, or food.

On the 7th January, the second day of the retreat, the force broke up from Bagramas, at 8 A. M. without the faintest semblance of that regularity or discipline on which depended the only hope of safety. The Shah's 8th Infantry was no where to be found. It had wisely dispersed and returned to Cabul. As the troops moved on, they were attacked by the enemy, who dashed down and captured the mountain train consisting of three guns. "Their capture might have been effected, if the soldiers could have been prevailed on to make the attempt, a gallant example being shown them by Lieut. Green and his few artillery men, who made a desperate charge upon the foe, but being unsupported, was obliged to abandon the guns and spike them. Soon after the enemy charged down and captured a large quantity of baggage. The original intention of the General on starting from Bagramas was to pass on at once through the Khoord Cabul, which would probably have saved half the force. But on arriving at Bootkhak, Capt. Skinner fell in with a follower of Akbar Khan, who said that his master was encamped at some little distance. Skinner went to him on the part of the General, and Akbar stated that he had come on the part of the chiefs to escort the troops to Jellalabad. He had six hundred horsemen with him. He said we had been attacked because we had left the cantonments contrary to the wishes of the chiefs! He insisted on the army's halting at Bootkhak, at the mouth of the Khoord Cabul Pass till the next morning, in which case he promised to provide food, forage, and firewood for the troops. He said he should expect hostages to be taken up to insure our not marching beyond Tescup, till tidings should be received of the evacuation of Jellalabad. The infuriated General, never reflecting for a moment that it was physically impossible for Akbar to supply food and firewood for that host, listened to the treacherous foe, and ordered the army to halt. "Thus," says Lieut. Melville, "the Sirdar had gained his point. Instead of making the forced marches we intended, and which would have carried us at once both out of the snow and the power of the enemy, we allowed ourselves to be outmanoeuvred by this polite barbarian, and halted at the mouth of the passes till they should be occupied and harried by the Ghilzie force. Thus the general played into the enemy's hand and sealed the doom of thousands." The soldiers, exhausted by fatigue, cold and hunger, lay down at once on the snow, which was to many a grave and a winding sheet. Lady Sale says, that scarcely any baggage remained. In a small part of Johnson's they slept nine, all touching each other; their only food, consisted of a few Cabul cakes and some tea.

On the morning of the 8th the troops had no sooner started than the enemy opened a heavy fire on them. Major Thane, putting himself at the head of the 44th, led them on boldly to the attack, and they behaved with a resolution and gallantry worthy of British soldiers. Akbar Khan was in the neighbourhood. Capt. Skinner was sent to communicate with him, and he demanded that Major Pottinger and Capt. Lawrence and MacKenzie should be given up, which was no sooner done, than hostilities ceased! Just after this conference and the surrender of the officers, a note arrived from Capt. Conolly to Capt. Lawrence, telling him to be cautious how he put himself into Akbar Khan's power, and above all things to push on. "Once more," says Lieut. Eyre, "this living mass of men and animals moved on...." The idea of threading the stupendous pass before us, in the face of an armed tide of blood thirsty barbarians, with such a dense irregular multitude, was frightful, and the spectacle then presented by that waving sea of animated beings, the majority of whom a few fleeting hours would transform into a line of lifeless carcasses, can never be forgotten by those who witnessed it."

The Khoord Cabul defile is five miles from one end to the other, shut in on either hand by a line of lofty hills. Down the centre dashed an impetuous torrent, which the troops were required to cross and recross twenty-eight times. Through the whole passage the enemy kept up a fearful discharge from their unerring jezails. Some Afghan chiefs rode with the advance, and desired their followers to shout to the Ghilzies to cease firing, but in vain. They ran the same risk with the British soldiers, and their sincerity, on this occasion, is beyond suspicion. The ladies were exposed to the most eminent danger. Lady Sale received a ball in her wrist. On one camel were Mrs. Boyd and her youngest boy in one kajuja; in the other, Mrs. Mainwaring.

her infant of three months, and Mrs. Anderson's child. The camel was shot. Mrs. Boyd obtained a horse; her child was put on another behind a man who was shot, and the child lost. Mrs. Anderson's child was carried off in the confusion. Meeting a poney laden with treasure, Mrs. Mainwaring mounted it, but it upset, and with her infant in her arms she hurried forward on foot through the deep snow, picking her way over the bodies of the dead, dying and wounded men and cattle, the enemy keeping up a sharp fire, and several being killed beside her—but she reached the camp in safety. About the centre of the pass the slaughter was terrific; the panic became general, and each one rushed forward to get through the doleful, regardless of all around him. The rear guard suffered severely, and at length, finding that delay was only destruction, the troops which composed it followed the general example, and made the best of their way to the front.

Here fell Capt. Sturt, mortally wounded with a blow from an Afghan knife in the abdomen. After seeing Lady Sale and his wife lodged in comparative safety, he returned through the dells. Lady Sale says that he saw Major Thain's arms wounded, and went back, she believes, in search of the Major. We are happy to find, that this report was believed by any one, for it was generally understood among the captives that he went back in search of a goodness. On hearing that he was wounded, Lieut. Mein, of H. M. 18th, went in search of him through the pass, at the eminent risk of his own life, and finding him unable to move, placed him on a quilt, (perhaps the goodness), and with the aid of Sergeant Denne, drew him through the snow, while the enemy were dealing death around, and restored him to his relatives. This act of heroic friendship attracted the notice of Sir Robert Peel, who in the speech in which he moved the thanks of the House to the troops, and commemorated the deeds of those who had so nobly upheld the reputation of their country in scenes of unexampled danger, singled out the name of Mein, and presented it to the applause of the Commons. How does it happen then, that Lady Sale, so much more deeply interested in the transaction, should pass over in ungrateful silence, such an act of devotion to that son-in-law, in whom her soul was wrapped up, and with whose praises her book is filled? It is scarcely possible to suppose that the journal originally contained no affectionate record of her gratitude. It is still less possible to suppose that any subsequent alienation could have induced her to obliterate it. It is an eminently highly injurious to the character both of the book and its author. But though this act of the gallant youth has not been deemed worthy of notice in her Ladyship's pages, it may be amply consoled by the recollection, that it will be preserved from oblivion in a far more important and permanent memorial, the records of the Parliament of Great Britain.

Three thousand men perished in this day's march. The survivors, on arriving at the table land of the Khoord Cabul, found themselves in a still colder climate than that they had left. The snow began to fall on their arrival and continued to fall all morning. Only four tents had been raised, of which one belonged to the General, two were devoted to the ladies, and one was given up to the sick. It is marvellous that any survived that dreary fearful night.

"The morning of the 9th dawned, awakening thousands to increased misery. Many a wretched survivor cast looks of envy at his comrades in the quiet sleep of death. This morning Capt. Sturt died of the wound received the preceding day, and he alone of the multitude who left Cabul and perished in those mountains, received Christian burial. The General had ordered the march at 10 A. M. but two hours previously, a large portion of the troops, with nearly all the camp followers had moved on. Before 10, a message came from Mahomed Akbar strongly recommending that the troops should halt for the day, when he would use every effort to procure supplies. "In a bleak barren mountainous country, our enemy promises supplies, and is believed!" One day more; this day, the 9th, would have carried the troops almost out of the reach of snow. Yet the enemy who had lured the troops on, and planned their destruction, persuades the General to halt the troops for another day and another night, in the deepest snow, on the highest table land in the vicinity of Cabul, and he halted! In the course of the day Akbar Khan sent over a very gracious message to say that the camp was not a place for ladies and children, and that he would take charge of them, if they would place themselves under his protection, and conduct them safe to Jellalabad. Lieut. Eyre's description of the hardships to which they had been exposed will easily account for their preference of captivity with a faithless foe, to an execrating death. The ladies were accordingly sent over with their husbands and children on the noon of the 9th.

Akbar Khan had thus gained one of the points for which he had so long been labouring. He had obtained three hostages and had now possession of all the married women. One half the force was annihilated. It only remained to annihilate the other half, and to obtain the persons of the General and the Brigadier. He had promised to secure a safe retreat for the troops, and to supply them with provisions. Of provisions he never sent in so much as a grain. The protection he afforded was apparent the moment the troops left their encampment at Khoord Cabul, on the morning of the 10th. The camp had no sooner broken up than every man who from frost and wounds could not be removed, was massacred, almost before the eyes of the retreating troops. On leaving the encampment, the enemy rushed furiously on our troops. The Shah's 2d Cavalry was ordered to charge; they rode up to the enemy—and joined them, and then turned round on their own officers! A couple of miles from the last bivouac the troops came to a narrow gorge between two precipitous spurs of two hills. At this point the Afghans had prepared to receive them. As the column defiled through it, those men perched securely on the ridges, poured a murderous fire on the troops. Fresh numbers fell at every volley, and the gorge was choked up with the dead and dying. The surgeons seeing no escape and driven to desperation, cut away their arms and accoutrements and fled for their lives. The Afghans rushed down with their knives and butchered them without mercy. Here the last remnants of the Native Regiments were scattered and destroyed; and the public treasure and the remaining baggage fell into the hands of the enemy. Five miles—some pushed on to Kubbur-Jabber, five miles—head and halted to enable the rear to join. They waited long, but in vain; a few stragglers came up one after another, and then the astounding truth flashed on their minds that nearly the whole of the main and rear columns had been cut off, and that of all who had left the table land of the Khoord Cabul that morning, they were the only survivors—that is to say, 50 horse artillery men with one twelve-pound howitzer, 70 files of H. M. 44th and 150 Cavalry troops. But the Camp followers were still numerous.

A party of Afghan horse now approached, and they turned out to be part of Akbar Khan's escort. He seems always to have pre-empted himself, after every fresh slaughter of our troops. Capt. Skinner was sent to remonstrate with him on this new attack, and his reply was that he could not control the Ghilziees; but that if the General would surrender himself and all the Europeans, unarmed, and leave all the camp followers to be butchered by the enemy, he would give them a safe conduct to Jellalabad. To this proposal the General refused his compliance, and the small remnant marched on five miles farther to Taseen, attacked all the way by the murderous Ghilziees. They reached it at 4 P. M. on the 10th. This was the fifth day after leaving Cabul, and during this period, hunger and thirst, the sword and the snow had done its work on that unfortunate army with such fearful efficiency, as to leave only 4,000 men out of 16,000 who had quitted the city. The good Samaritan was again in their vicinity at Taseen also, and the General, though perfectly aware of his inability or unwillingness to arrest these attacks, sent Capt. Skinner to renew negotiations. The answer was again the same. Surrender yourselves unarmed, and leave the Camp followers to the tender mercies of the Ghilziees, and I will protect you. To this proposal the General could not in honour accede, and it was resolved, famished, frost bitten and exhausted as the troops were, to make an effort to reach Jugdulluk, twenty-two miles distant, under cover of the night, and if possible to get through that terrific dells before the enemy could occupy it. At 7 P. M. the troops began their diurnal march, leaving Dr. Cardew, who had been severely wounded, behind to his last gasp, which they were obliged to abandon. The Ghilziees soon put an end to his misery. At 8 A. M. of the 11th they had only been able to reach Kutah Sung, and Jugdulluk was yet ten miles off. The murderous Ghilziees were now on the alert and began to crown the heights. The progress of the troops was one continual conflict. Brigadier Staines, with his brave little band in the rear, holding overwhelming numbers in check, literally performed wonders. Alas, that the first day of the insurrection had not been distinguished by a similar display of the Brigadier's valor; we should not then have had this record of unparalleled disaster.

They arrived at Jugdulluk at 8 P. M. of the 11th, having been thirty hours without food, drink or rest, exposed to the incessant attacks of the enemy. The rear was still struggling gallantly, followed at every step by its merciless foe. To cheer them on the General called twenty of the officers, to form and show a bold front. Arriving at Jugdulluk, the men took shelter within some ruined walls. They were nearly maddened with hunger and thirst. A tempting stream of clear water ran in the front, about 150 yards from them, but no man could venture down without the certainty of being shot. Three bullocks were found with the remnant of the force; and they were slaughtered and eaten raw. Akbar had again dogged our troops and was at Jugdulluk as soon as they were. He sent a message to Capt. Skinner to come to him, and he went over to the enemy's camp at half past three. No sooner had he taken his departure than the mountainers began to pour their fatal volleys into, from every side. "The artillery men, those few the enclosed walls; but twenty gallant soldiers of the 44th drove them from their position. At 5, Skinner returned with a message that the General, the Brigadier, and Capt. Johnson would come to a conference. Akbar Khan would engage to put a stop to further annoyance, and give the troops food. Confiding in the pious faith of the Afghan, they proceeded to his camp, where they were received with kindness, and supplied with meat, drink and fuel. Akbar Khan promised the next morning to make an arrangement with the chiefs for the salvation of the few who remained. He had now fully accomplished his object. He had obtained possession of the ladies and married men, and of the General and the Brigadier, and the army was reduced to Three Hundred fighting men.

This small band remained in deep anxiety during the night of the 11th, looking out for the return of their chiefs, who came not. Suffice it to say, that notwithstanding every remonstrance on their part, Akbar Khan would not allow them to move; it was their prisoners. On the morning of the 12th, numerous Ghilzie chiefs flocked into Akbar's tent to pay their homage to him, and a conference took place, which the three British officers attended. The Ghilzies expressed the utmost hatred of the English race, and seemed to exult in the prospect of cutting the throats of the few who survived. On receiving a hint from Akbar Khan, they changed their language from Persian to Pushtoo, which the officers could not understand. The Siridar, to all appearance, endeavoured to calm them. It was at length agreed that two lakhs of Rupees should be given them to ensure the safety of the troops, and Mahomed Shah Khan went out to make the proposal. At 12, the Siridar himself proceeded to a hill in the rear of the British bivouac. Repeated enquiries were made when Mahomed Shah Khan would be back; and the General was always told, immediately. Frequent assurances were given him that the troops had been positively supplied with food and water. At sunset, Akbar Khan returned, and was soon followed by Mahomed Shah, who brought the intelligence that every thing was finally and amicably arranged for the safe conduct of the troops to Jellalabad. The Siridar said he would accompany them the next morning. Suddenly the sound of musquetry was heard down the valley, and a report was brought that the Europeans were marching off, pursued by the Ghilzies. At first the Siridar proposed that the officers should follow him. In a few moments he changed his mind, saying that if he did so, the whole hordes of Ghilzies would follow him. He then agreed to start at midnight, and then changed the hour to day light.

What in the mean time occurred in the encampment where the few troops and officers who remained, had been treacherously deprived of their commanders? During this day, the 11th, they had been exposed to a constant fire from the enemy. In the morning Major Thain and Capt. Skinner rode out towards a party of horsemen, when Ser Bullund Khan, an influential chief, rode up to them and passing by the Major, mortally wounded Capt. Skinner, who was taken to the encampment and died at three in the afternoon. While he was in the agonies of death, the enemy renewed their charge. The broken walls behind which our troops had taken up their position, were completely surrounded by one in the afternoon, and hundreds of rifles poured in their murderous charges gun to pelt stones. At length the enemy made a

At nine in the evening, this final, destructive but inevitable step was taken. The sick and wounded were necessarily left on the ground to be massacred. The confusion was great. The Ghilzies rushed down with their fearful knives, and the last shadow of discipline disappeared. Each one rushed into the roads and pushed forward. On nearing the summit of the pass, it was found to be blocked up with felled trees, which formed a barrier six feet high. Here the Afghans waited the arrival of the small remnant of the army. A terrific fire was poured in from all quarters, and the enemy rushed in furiously upon the pent up crowd of troops and followers, "committing wholesale slaughter."

Twelve officers, among whom were Brigadier Anquetil, Col. Chambers, and Major Thain fell here. At length the united efforts of men and horses forced the barrier down, and again the crowd decreased column pushed on. Three hundred men of all colors crossed the barrier, and pushed on towards Jellalabad. As they advanced, beacons were lighted up from hill to hill, to call the Afghans to the slaughter. At one in the morning of the 13th, the whole body of fighting men was reduced to about a hundred. At three, they arrived at the Soobal river, the bridge of which was occupied by the enemy. Part of the troops forced it; others crossed the bitterly cold stream. The troops now became dispirited beyond the hope of revival; parties were formed who chose their own leader; and wandering toward Jellalabad, met death at the hands of the Afghans. Six of the officers who had preserved their horses pushed on for that post, but one alone of their number reached the goal of their hopes. At seven A. M. eighty men composed the whole of the remaining body.

On approaching Gundamuk, the enemy pressed round them and they took refuge on a little eminence. After having been there ten minutes, a horseman approached, and waving his turban, requested a parley. Major Griffiths and Mr. Blawett, one of Capt. Johnson's writers, went with him to see what terms could be made; they were carried off to a neighbouring fort. Soon after, the enemy approached, and offered the troops some leave, but at the same time endeavored to seize the muskets of the soldiers, who drove them down. They took up a position on a neighbouring eminence, and "marked off man after man, and officer after officer, with unerring aim." The troops after having exhausted their little ammunition began to pelt stones. At length the enemy made a final onset, and with the exception of two officers and four men, the whole body fell victims to the sanguinary mob;—and thus perished the last remains of the Cabul army.

[We shall next week conclude this lengthened notice by reviewing the period of captivity.]

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JUNE 20.

— Letters and papers have been received from Singapore to the 1st of June; but they contain no information of importance relative either to the Straits or to China. Our advices from Hong Kong do not extend beyond the 7th of May, at which date the commercial negotiations had not recommenced, in consequence of the non arrival of the new Commissioner from Peking.

— The Star states, on the authority of letters from Bangalore, that Sir Hugh Gough was to take his departure on route to Calcutta about the present time. He may therefore be shortly expected here to assume the office of Commander-in-Chief.

— The Penang Gazette of the 1st of June mentions, that Mr. Blundell arrived there on that day from Calcutta on the Lord Ashurst, and landed immediately. We have not been able as yet to obtain any further and more certain intelligence regarding his removal by order of Government, in consequence of certain vigorous measures pursued by him at Madras, to reduce the encroachments of the Birmen. Government unit, to all appearance, have had full knowledge of all his proceedings at that settlement, before he took his departure for the Straits. If any dissatisfaction was felt in reference to those proceedings, it seems incredible that the authorities should allow him to proceed to Penang and assume the administration of the three settlements, and then send to recall him. Until, therefore, we have more decisive evidence of the fact, we must withhold our credence from the report we have received. Besides Government must be fully aware that nothing is more likely to maintain peace between Thursday and ourselves than a firm, and immediate resistance of any encroachments on the part of his officers.

— The Stonesmoky Pinnace, in tow of the Drumcreeper Steamer, arrived at Allahabad on the 20th of last month. Lord Ellenborough may therefore start for Calcutta as soon as he desires.

FRIDAY, JUNE 20.

— The Star states, that a letter from Singapore mentions the discovery of the tea plant near Kareeng, in the Darjeeling range, by Capt. Milling.

— The Sessions closed on Tuesday last, when those who had been convicted were sentenced. Eastman and his gang, who occasioned the death of Peterson, had been found guilty of manslaughter, and are sentenced to transportation for life. They will probably be sent to the Tennessee provinces, where, under the new arrangements introduced by Major Broadfoot, they will be subjected to severe labour, befitting the nature of their crime.

— Papers were yesterday received from the Mauritius, to the 6th of the last month, which mention the total loss of the Regulus, a vessel of 690 tons, bound from London to Bombay. During a heavy squall the vessel sprung a leak which caused her to take and at length compelled them on board to her boats. The weather continued very rough, and little hopes of ultimate safety were entertained, when they were happily described by the French frigate, la Clémence. They were picked up in a state of complete exhaustion and grievous brought on to the Isle of France, when the Governor went in person, accompanied by his staff, on board the French vessel of war, to return his thanks to the Captain for his generous kindness.

— The same vessels announce the wreck of the Thomas Redican, Capt. Newby, bound to the Mauritius with a general cargo. She struck on the reefs off Poudre d'Orton, on the morning of the 27th, the Captain supposing himself to be a degree to the eastward of the island through an error in his chronometer.

Another wreck is announced—the third—in these Isles of France papers. The Queen Victoria, which left Bombay on the morning of the 14th of March, was wrecked on the S. W. reefs off Rodrigues on the 7th of April last. Mr. Peole, the 1st officer, Mr. Robert Plunkett, a passenger, and three seamen were lost in endeavouring to save themselves. The rest of the crew were brought in safely by H. M. French brig Cadix.

The Raj of Ulver, in imitation of the example of the King of Delhi, has established a Lithographic Press in his Capital for the publication of a weekly newspaper. Such is the march of intellect!

As though commotions were not to cease in India, we now learn that considerable excitement prevails among the Soones and Seeks in the city of Delhi in reference to the collision between the two sects on the frontiers of Turkey and Persia. Great festivals have been given by the Shah in honour of the victory their brethren have gained, and the King of Lucknow has made similar demonstrations of his joy.

There has been some trifling delay in opening the Bank at Madras, but it is pleasing to learn that it is not, as in a similar case at Bombay, attributed to the jealousy of a Bengal clique. On this occasion however it is equally placed on the wrong shoulders. It is said to arise from Lord Tweeddale's mismanagement. It arises from the absence of the Governor General from Calcutta.

Col. Roberts left Solva on the 6th June to attack Sher Mahomed at Sukkur. His force at that place is respectable, and his post is strong. Sir Charles Napier, it is understood, will ultimately move to that point from Hyderabad. Sukkur is on the left bank of the Indus.

The Harkurs states, that Baboo Prasanna-moog Tagore has applied to be admitted as Vakil in the Sudder Court. It is believed that the Baboo looks to the post of Government Vakil, the very unsuitable title given to the Advocate General in that Court.

SATURDAY, JULY 1.

The Harkurs has commenced the republication of an able article on Fucemy, which appeared in the last Edinburgh. It has not the genius exhibited in Mr. Macaulay's article on the same subject in his reply to Mr. Gladstone, but it is written with great spirit, and with a thorough knowledge of the subject. Those who have been asking what is Fucemy, which half the clergy-men of the establishment are said to have embraced in the last ten years, cannot do better than peruse that article.

A letter from China of the 7th May, the latest date yet received, appears in the Bombay papers of the 29th of June, with some particulars which have not yet appeared. The reader will remember that two vessels had been detained by the British authorities at Chusan for trading with the eastern ports contrary to orders. It is said that the big houses at Canton and Hong Kong had determined to send vessels laden with opium to those ports under American colors, and that Sir Henry Pottinger was thus constrained to release the two ships and take off the embargo. Some ships had gone up the Yang-tse-kiang, and were openly selling opium and British goods at Woosung. Trade is also brisk at Shanghai. Gold of this touch is readily given in exchange for opium, and strange to say, the exportation of it is not forbidden like that of silver.

The Rao Raja of Boondoo, a Rajpoot chief, who was on his way to Brindaban to worship at the shrine, has been induced to return home without doing so, in consequence of the heats and snow-melting which have broken out between the Hindoos and Mahomedans. The Gates have furnished the dispute. There shall be peace in Asia, and discord in India.

The Madras Mail sent off on the last safe day, did not reach Bombay in time for the steamer, which has gone without them. This calamity did not occur to the Dish letters, and mighty was the indignation; and a meeting at the Town Hall was advertised, and burning speeches were rehearsed the night before to be spoken the next morning to an audience of 700, when it was held. Mr. Toke Prinsep, disappointed the town by publishing in the Gazette an official letter to the Bombay Government, with a severe signing. Unfortunately the Gazette arrived before the written letter, and great was the wrath of the Bombay authorities.

MONDAY, JULY 5.

The Hon. Mr. Madhoo has been obliged to undergo the amputation of one of his thumbs, in consequence of an injury received a short time back from a deer.

Lord Ellenborough was expected to reach the Presidency this week; but a correspondent of the Star states, that his Lordship was not to leave Allahabad before the 25th of last month, and did not expect to be in Calcutta before the 15th instant. The following is the proposed route: Chunar the 20th, Benares the 20th June, Ghazipur the 1st July, Bazar the 2d, Dinapore the 3d and 4th, Monghyr the 5th, Bhagpore the 6th, Rajmahl the 7th, Berhampore the 9th, and Benares the 15th July.

The Star on Saturday last published a short Katka announcing that Col. Roberts had come up on Shah Mahomed, a brother of Sher Mahomed, by a forced march of fourteen miles, during the night, and completely surprised and routed him. The enemy made but little resistance and fled in every direction. Eighty were left dead on the field, and Shah Mahomed himself, his wife and his standards were captured. The troops under Col. Roberts were to march forward immediately to form a junction with Sir Charles Napier, by whose admirable arrangements Sher Mahomed will be completely hemmed in on all sides and prevented crossing the Indus by the shortest route. The large body of men collected to the north of Sukkur, and who were supposed to be friendly, have turned out to be our enemies under Meer Mahomed Ali, who has been plundering a number of villages. Brigadier Paul, commanding at Sukkur, had been directed not to go to such a distance from his post that he should be unable to return to it by night; but he has deemed it necessary to march out with a good force against this new enemy.

The number of letters and covers sent by the last overland Mail which left Bombay on the 20th of June was 44,544, namely Letters 34,560 and covers 9,984.

One John Howell has been taken in Scinde fighting against his country, and his case, which is somewhat singular, is to be referred we learn to Government. He is said to be a man about 32 or 33 years of age, a native of India, near Lucknow, who has been in Scinde eleven years. He sought to escape with the savings of many years to join the British army on the eve of the battle of Meemo, but was stopped by the Belooches and obliged to point the guns during the battle. He did so in such a manner as to inflict no injury on his fellow subjects. As soon as he could, he gave himself up to Sir Charles.

The Harkurs states on the authority of a friend from the little maharaja, that a quarrel has broken out in the pine forest of Kusoowee, which continued to rage the whole of the 18th and 19th June.

A very aggravated case of Crim Con has just been tried at Bombay. A Lieutenant in a Queen's Regiment has destroyed the domestic happiness of a brother officer, and the Court have awarded damages to the extent of Two Thousand Rupees, though there was nothing brought forward in mitigation of damages. If the Press were to comment on the great disproportion between the crime and the punishment, as it is wonted, we suppose it would be set down as a fresh proof of its insensibility.

An action has been brought at Westminster by a passenger on the ship Marys of Hastings against the Captain, for breach of contract, in not carrying an experienced Surgeon according to the terms of his advertisement. There was no surgeon on board, but a passenger who had been placed under the Captain's charge in consequence of derangement, acted as Surgeon. The Supreme Court is now employed in taking evidence under a Mandamus.

TUESDAY, JULY 4.

From the Resolutions adopted by the Cabul Relief Fund Committee, at Kurnal, the 5th of June, we gather that the entire fund, including the subscriptions at Bombay, amounts to about three lakhs and a half of Rupees. The scheme now proposed embraces, 1st, a permanent provision for the widows of European officers and their children. It is supposed there will be ten annuists of this class. 2dly, The widows of European non-commissioned officers, soldiers, subordinate medical officers, and all others of a similar class, and their children. The Committee suppose that the number of annuists of this class will amount to 200. 3dly, The widows of every description and rank, the number of whom at present is about 150, and may hereafter amount to 200.

The confusion at Gwalior becomes greater and greater. At midnight on the 19th the war-pier ordered two Regiments of Infantry, and eighteen guns to enter the Jinsay and seize all the Christian officers in camp. No opposition was offered, as the Native troops had already been brought over to his party. The Christian officers, forty in number, were captured, tied up to the guns, and unmercifully beaten. Col. Bagpote, on the hearing of this, immediately ordered his camp to be fortified. He has three Regiments and eighteen guns with him; but it remains to be seen whether his man will be true to him, amidst the general defection. The Resident has left Gwalior, and gone to the campment at Sepehr. Had he called up the contingent force, or written to the British Government for aid, the insurrection would have been stopped in the bud. The Star asserts that Lord Ellenborough has determined to let matters take their own course, and has ordered the Resident not to return till he is formally recalled. If we could explain to the native princes the deep political reasons which recommended non intervention, the mischief would be mitigated; but they can and will attribute our inaction to fear alone; and the mischief of this inaction will not therefore be confined to the territories in which it originated.

The Commodore, Capt. Lobben, which we thought was by this time well on towards the Cape, is at Pennay / She left the Sandheads about the middle of April, but experienced very equally weather, and provisions and water soon began to run short, so that the commander was obliged to leave up the Pennang, from whence a letter has been received from a passenger dated the 5th of June. Mr. Trevor and his eight children had embarked in this vessel.

Mr. Montcriu, the barrister, who has been appointed one of the Magistrates of Calcutta, was this day sworn in as one of the Justices of the Peace. The Harkurs says, that he will take the Native division, and Mr. Blaquiere, the Chowdhury division, which will be a whimsical division of labour as that which prevails among the Court of Directors in Leadenhall street. Mr. Blaquiere is the best Bengalee scholar in India, Mr. Montcriu, being a stranger, cannot be supposed to know a word of the language.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 5.

The Bombay Times of the 24th June states, that a communication had been received from Government by the Chamber of Commerce, respecting a very daring robbery which has been committed on a large quantity of treasure which was on its way from Bombay to Mandoon, under charge of five speos. The party was attacked on its arrival at Chandore, on the 20th of April last, by a gang of robbers, who made off with 40,000 Rupees, after having wounded six persons, one of whom has since died. So daring an attack shows that the robbers must have been connected with a gang. If there was any plan for the suppression of robbery in that part of the country, similar to that which was organised in the North West Provinces, by Col. Sleeman, the gang would not remain long undetected.

— The Ceylon papers state on the authority of private letters from England, that the Pope had appointed the late Dean of Maynooth, named Russel, Bishop of Ceylon, and that he was about to embark for the island with ten or twelve Romish priests.

— The Carriage belonging to the Governor of Madras, which went to the bottom, between the ship and the shore had not been recovered, though divers have been employed in endeavouring to find it.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums for the Friend of India :—

		(Ys. Hs. As.)
A. M. Nesbit, Esq.	to Feb. 1844,	10 0
Capt. Geile,	to April 1843,	10 0
The Officers of the Mass of the 14th Regt. N. I.	ditto,	20 0
E. W. Pitt, Esq.	20 0
The Sinsla Library, ...	to Dec. 1843,	12 0
G. Respy, Esq.	to Dec. 1843,	10 0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS

SCIENCE,

[illegible]

his, that they may be in readiness to receive their prey.—Dallas Gazette, 24th June.

There is a report prevalent at Sukkur that the force of 8000 men with guns and ammunition is either at Sukmalote, or between that place and Sukkur; they profess to be friends, but are, it is said, commanded by another brother of Sherah Mahomed's. They ought certainly to be dispersed, whether enemies or professed friends, but we have no Colonel. The probabilities are that they will take this force further out of Sukkur. Contaminations will enable him to return the same evening, giving him a range of 8 miles at the furthest. It is to be hoped the Belooches will not become aggrieved. The probabilities are that they will return them to their own great advantage. The pikets at Sukkur seized a 6-pounder gun going through Contaminations two nights previous to the date of our last letters; the men who were with it were all belonged to Ameer Meerad, and were allowed to return.

[illegible]

To Correspondents.

The Family Domain of the Raja of Benares, next week.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent a "Mofussi Missionary," boldly charges me with a misstatement of facts, and as this is a matter not of argument but of veracity, I trust you will do me the justice to allow me to reply to so serious an accusation.

I shall be as brief as possible, and confuse myself to matters of facts, not but that there is abundance of room and provocation too, to enter the lists with any answer; but I fear, 1. Your correspondent will enter to a history of the controversy, regarding the spelling of the Defendant's name, and then call upon your readers to compare his statement with mine, from which one would naturally infer that I had made a similar statement. Now the fact is, that I neither did nor designed to enter into a history of this matter at all, and when I had read to the end of his narrative I was really at a loss to discover what were the mis-statements to which he alluded.

2. Happily however, he is afterwards more explicit, and so far as I can discover charges me distinctly with one misstatement. I said, that in regard to one version of the Scriptures, the translators and Committee were quite agreed, and in fact that the proposal came from the translators themselves. Your correspondent distinctly denies this, and says, "They (the translators) are not on the side of the Committee in the way which he represents." This is something tangible, and I repeat in opposition to it, that they are on the side of the Committee in the way in which I represented. Now than for the proof, let me have the evidence of my own conscience as to what I was present and must therefore know more about the matter than my accuser; I give you my own proper name. 2. I appeal to the members of the Committee for the truth of my statement. I spent some minutes of the last Committee, while to avoid the possibility of a mistake, I have just examined. In the meeting of January 17, 1843, it is stated that, it was voted unanimously resolved to adopt the spelling proposed. Both translators were present and voted on the occasion. 4. I appeal to the Missionary himself who is one of the translators, to whom your query can apply as he is now in the Mofussil. When asked by Mr. Webb whether he would corroborate his charge? He says, "the mission to the Society tells another tale." I suppose he refers to the minute published in the Caledonia Christian Observer in February last if so, I have no hesitation in declaring that, that minute does nothing of the kind. The minute in fact says nothing of the kind, nor does the report adopted. It is really, by implication at least, adopted. It is, in reality, a gross misstatement, and the correctness of my statement, as much as it is the minute of a Committee, of which the translators were members and present at the time. The facts connected with the adoption of the spelling in question, in Committee are briefly these. The spelling in the first instance was proposed by one of the missionaries, and objected to by the other.

After this the matter was discussed until the translators before the Committee, in a friendly and Christian spirit. The Missionary was convinced, fully acquiesced in the views of his colleague, and recommended the adoption of the new spelling, and not till then, did the Committee come to any resolution on the subject. The Missionary was afterwards induced by arguments of his colleague, and did not vote under the pressure by constraint, as you suggest, but voluntarily submitted.

3. I am fully surprised to see your correspondent trying to make out a case against me, by placing my assertion in a false position. My words were these,—"In regard however to the Urda version which has given rise to this controversy," &c. the dispute is not now between the Committee and translator, but between the Committee and the readers and distributors of the Bible on the other. Now, Sir, it is fair, it is becoming in one who hesitates not to accuse me of misrepresentation, to take my words out of their proper connection and to apply them to a subject to which I never applied them. I never intended nor did I apply the terms translators, distributors, &c. to any other than the question in question, and I never intended to convey any such idea as I have literally and so completely done. Whereas it is the mistake now, I will not call it, as my accuser does, a misstatement of facts!*

It is a strange fact, and shows how little dependence is to be placed in the courtesies (not to use a harsher phrase) of your correspondent. That the very paragraph to which he objects, as a misstatement of the views of one of the translators, and the part he took in this business, was suggested to me originally by that translator himself. Let the Mofussil Missionary reflect on this, it may furnish him with a wholesome lesson in future.

4. I know not whether your correspondent charges me with any other misstatement, if he does, let him be explicit, I shall honestly meet his charges, and if in error in the least, I shall cheerfully confess it. I hate all quibbling. Perhaps he means to call in question the correctness of my views when I said that the question was a matter of principle on the one side and of expediency on the other. If so, I may give in reply: 1. That this question is fundamentally a religious question.

* How far the revolution of the Society may or is intended to affect future versions, is a matter of opinion, regarding which your correspondent and I may differ without either being guilty of a misstatement of facts.

3 B

It is understood that the post held by the late Professor Gamelin, is to be filled by Professor Hupfeld, of Marburg, one of his most distinguished pupils. This appointment is generally regarded as the fulfilment of a prophetic vision, as the view of Hupfeld is very different from those of the late professor of Marburg. A severe attack on the lungs, which has terminated some months since, has been the only circumstance likely to be any impediment to the completion of the intended appointment.—Pat.

ANTHRAQUIN IN ANTIGUA AND ST. KITTS.—MEXICAN MINERS are yearly returning to the Colonies here, particularly the following amongst other extracts of letters, received from Antigua and St. Kitts, by the last West India mail. They are present at the same time their first visit to the Colonies, for the protection mercifully vouchsafed to the missionaries and their families, and for the preservation from utter ruin of the Sea Settlements, which have been more or less effected by the earthquake.

The islands which have been the scene of this wide-spread calamity, have for more than half a century, been among the most important and fruitful seats of missionary labour occupied by the Brethren's Church. At the present time, about 15,000 souls,—a small proportion of the negro and coloured population,—are under the influence of the mission societies; and about 3,000 children are enjoying, through their instrumentality, the blessing of Christian education.

EXTRACT OF LETTER FROM MR. B. HARRY.

"St. John's Antigua, Feb. 16, 1848.
"On the 6th of February, at about twenty-three minutes to eleven a. m. this island was awfully convulsed by an earthquake, which was felt in all the several parts of the island. Churches, chapels, schools, mills, sugarworks, and other buildings sustained of some, have by various exceptions, been thrown down or ruined. Our old wooden church, the only one remaining in town fit for use, and, I need hardly add, is crowded with hearers. Our lives have been mercifully spared. Such a fearful visitation I never expect to experience. All the voice of the Lord shall again shake terribly the earth. Pray for us, that our faith may be sustained, and our strength renewed, sufficient for the discharge of the important and harassing duties which devolve upon us. Yesterday, being the day appointed for general humiliation and thanksgiving, we preached six times, in three different places."

FROM MR. B. REICHER.

"St. John's, Feb. 16th, 1848.
"I was walking in the streets, when the earthquake occurred; the first symptoms of which I perceived, was a rattling noise accompanied by a gentle undulatory motion of the earth. This motion became more violent every second, till it became so violent, that it was impossible to stand upright. Before me was the cathedral, the walls of which I saw fearfully shaken, and at length partially give way, and fall together. On every side, the stone houses were falling in, and the clouds of dust enveloped the whole town. I suppose this convulsion of nature lasted nearly three minutes. As I looked around me, I saw numbers of people kneeling or lying on the earth, from whose lips, the cry 'Lord, have mercy upon us!' was continually repeating. On my return home, I found all my dear fellow-servants alive and unhurt, and the damage done to our mission-premises, less serious than I had expected. Our old wooden church, and three dwelling-houses of the same material, are but little injured; but the stone houses of Mr. Harvey, has so many rents in the walls, and is altogether so shaken, that it must be nearly rebuilt. The kitchen and other offices are in ruins."

FROM MR. G. W. WHITEHEAD.

"Lebanon, 18th, 1848.
"On the 7th inst. my wife and I paid a visit to Grenfell, and on the morning of the 9th, Mr. and Mrs. G. accompanied us to the island of St. Kitts, where a fort is built, whence there is a beautiful view of the whole of Antigua, and the island of Montserrat, about thirty miles distant. It was a lovely morning, and the prospect around us was no longer what we were used to see. We were all upon the ramparts watching the approach of the steamer from England, and I was in the act of studying a telescope on one of the great guns, when I felt it begin to vibrate. I knew at once what was coming, and seeing my wife by the hand, and calling to the others, I immediately rushed from the ramparts. We had not gone far before the motion of the earth became so violent, that we were no longer able to walk, and were obliged to take hold of each other to keep on our feet. It was a most awful shock, and our lives were in great danger. A little more and the houses were falling; just above us, on a rising ground, a heap of cannon balls were heaving and rattling in the most fearful manner, and on our right, the long signal-staff was heaving from side to side, and threatening every moment to fall upon us. I believe the shock lasted about three minutes. When it subsided, we looked over the island, and towards Montserrat, and in every direction, we saw clouds of dust ascending, a sign of the wide-spread ruin."

"We had not long retired to rest, when we felt another smart concussion, and immediately rushed out of doors. This shock brought down more of our church, than the first. We have had slight shocks on the 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th inst. Another has since died in the jungle, beside us."

"The island is in ruins; how the fine crop of sugar will be taken off, no one can tell! May the Lord make 'all things work together for good!' During the earthquake, the bells at Grenfell and Lebanon rang. Grenfell bell rang—Great bell rang—The bells of the open and threw out water. The barometer was higher than it had been for some time before."

"We now have our public services out of doors. These were attended, last Sunday morning, by more than a thousand persons. May the Lord bless the preaching of his word to many souls!"

"The church is to be rebuilt of wood. We must commence the work in faith. Whence the money is to come, the Lord alone knows."

FROM MR. B. REICHER.

"Basseterre, St. Kitts, Feb. 20th, 1848.
"With a thankful heart I hasten to inform you, that we have all been preserved from bodily harm during the late awful earthquake, and that our mission premises at this place have sustained less injury than might have been anticipated. Our new church and school-house have got several rents in the walls, which, however, can be easily made good. As to the damage done to the mission premises, both the church and the school-house have been severely shaken, but the walls, though cracked in many places, we hope are capable of repair. The guest-house, we hope will be repaired. Belief has nearly ceased."

"Ever since this severe visitation, our evening services have been attended by many, who have had never seen us at church before. On the 15th, the day appointed by the Governor as a fast and thanksgiving day, an immense crowd filled every part of the building, and even flowed over into the school-house. The service was marked by deep solemnity, and we trust an abiding impression has been made on the minds of those who attended it, and who were affectionately reminded of what they owed to him, who is the God of salvation, and to whom belong the issues of death. (Pain relief. 20th.)"—Record.

DISMEMBERED.

LONDON SOCIETY FOR TEACHING THE BLIND TO READ.—The Sixth Annual Meeting of this charitable and most interesting Institution was held on Thursday at the Hanover-square Rooms. The most Rev. Mr. Charles M. Marquis of Chesham presided. The proceedings opened with prayer, and the singing of a hymn by a number of the pupils of the Blind Asylum, who were present. The Rev. Mr. Marquis, the Chairman then briefly addressed the Meeting, reviewing the inability to provide of one of the Right Rev. Bishops, who had been accustomed to take the chair at the Meetings of the Society. The Rev. Secretary Ramsey read the Report, which spoke in grateful terms of the success which had attended the efforts of the Society, and of the facility with which the blind acquired the art of reading by the use of Mr. Leno's stenographic characters, which were stated to be far superior to those of Mr. Freere. The school in London contained thirty pupils and twenty day boarders. The receipts during the past year, ending December 31, 1847, amounted to 1,163, 18s. 9d., and the expenditure during the same period to 1,104, 4s., leaving a balance of 611, 14s. 9d. in the hands of the Treasurer. The subscriptions during the year amounted to 271, 16s. 3d., and the donations to 306, 14s. The children then read several passages from the Scriptures with an facility and accuracy, as exhibited at once the astonishment and admiration of the very large assemblage of auditors. Two little girls, natives of China, read a part of the Epistle to the Romans with a great deal of fluency and a very pleasing intonation of voice. Upon the Motion of Dr. Hugh Pearson, the dean of Salisbury, seconded by the Rev. J. Goring, the Report was accepted. On Mr. Motley's Motion, the Chairman read a letter from the Rev. J. Goring, the Chairman; and another hymn, sung by the children, concluded the business of the Meeting.—Record.

LOQUACITY OF AN UNION.—A short time ago, Sir Edward Sugden, the present High Chancellor of England, was at the Hotel Terminus, examining some pictures about to be sold by auction. Mr. Stewart Clarke, the Honorary Secretary to the Irish Art Union, was at the Hotel Terminus, and spoke to him relative to the assumed illegality of the Art Union, when Sir Edward said his opinion that the laws which have been referred to did not in any way interfere with the sale of the pictures. Sir Edward expressed his gratification at hearing this. Sir Edward said, "If you like I will give you my opinion in writing." And taking a pen, wrote an order to the Royal Bank to pay the Art Union three guineas annually without further notice.—Irish paper.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION.—At a Meeting of the local council held last week at Cork, it was resolved that this learned body should commence its next session in this city on Monday, the 6th of August. The attendance is likely to be very large, as the Meeting commences not only at the termination of the summer, but just previous to Her Majesty's contemplated visit in Ireland. The local subscription is going on fast, at the head of which stands the name of the Earl of Rose, the President. The Noble President has announced that his gigantic reflecting telescope will be completed and thrown open for the inspection of members.—Record.

QUARANTINE.—It is with no small degree of satisfaction that we announce to our readers, more particularly those interested in commerce, an immediate reduction in the quarantine. The quarantine from the Ionian Islands has been abolished in toto, although arrivals from Athens or Smyra are not included in the exemption. As regards arrivals from Egypt, the quarantine imports on vessels and cargoes has not been reduced, but that inflicted on passengers has been reduced from twenty to sixteen days. No reduction has been made as regards Turkey, either in passengers, vessels, or goods, but we have little doubt the will be shortly included in the list of exempted places. From Greece, India, and the East Indies, the quarantine, for on their arrival at Malta, provided they are furnished with a certificate from Her Britannic Majesty's Consul to the effect that no disease reigns in the country, their quarantine is reduced to six days, or are they under the necessity of discharging cargo.—Ibid.

PROBABLE REPARATIONS AT TIENTSI.—The Viceroy, Sir, (Cecil) Lord Dufferin, has been at Hanyuan Town, from China, in sixty-four days, on the 30th November. It was said, but we can hardly credit it, that Captain Nicolas would call at Ouhien, before proceeding to Valparaiso, and that he would some time ago perpetrated on Queen Pomei and her subjects by the captain of a French frigate, by placing the British standard on that island, thus placing the good Queen and her ally under British protection.—Manchester Telegraph.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur publishes the proceeds of the revenue during the first quarter of 1848, which show that they amounted to 183,191,000, being an increase of 19,728,000, as compared with those of 1847; and of 6,640,000, over 1845. The liberal Government has been anxious on the idea that the report of the Duc de Broglie on the best mode of obtaining the emancipation of the French negro slaves, though but in ten years' time, will be allowed to lie dormant in the archives of the Chamber. The Press mentions the death of M. Maguin, the parish priest of St. Germain l'Auxerrois, in his 94th year. "It was this dayman," says Le Presse, "who found means to escape from the Bastille, the prison occupied by Marie Antoinette in the Convention, and to administer to the illustrious prisoner the consolations of religion."

NEW-ALPHINE DIPLOMA.—Thou has been raised by a Royal Ordinance, on the 13th inst., to the dignity of Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour.—Pat.

CARRIAGE FURNITURE.—Arrives from Posen of the 1st inst. state, that the Provincial Diet had commenced the discussion of the Penal Code Amendment Bill, and pronounced by a majority of 25 to 23 the abolition of capital punishment.—Ibid.

THE COSMET.—M. Arago made another communication respecting the comet, to the Academy of Sciences, in the session of Monday last. He stated that the nucleus had been twice seen from Paris, but that a third observation was necessary, in order to determine the orbit. In this state of things the two observations of Paris were combined with that of Geneva, and it was concluded that the perihelion of the comet from the sun had been understood by the observer at Geneva. The comet passed on the 27th of February last at its nearest point to the sun; its rate of travelling was 104 leagues per second.—Record.

It appears, from the calculations made at Paris, that when the railroad from the French capital to Calais, and from thence to France, Holland, and Prussia, the whole passage from Paris to London can be made in sixteen hours.—Ibid.

A letter from St. Petersburg states, that M. Allier, Professor of the University of that city, has just discovered a new method of printing, and has been awarded the title of Knight of the Legion of Honour. He immediately imparted his discovery to a commission at Paris, especially occupied in collecting the letters of distinct orthography.

In the continental territories of the King of the Two Sicilies, there is (says Mr. Macgregor, in his Travels and Terrors No. 7) only one teacher to about 1,000 inhabitants, while there is a priest or monk for every 120. In Alsace, France, Holland, and Prussia, he adds, the schoolmasters greatly exceed the number of clergymen. The net revenue of the island of Sicily is 1,000,000 francs, or 16,000,000 of our money. Naples, never to return. Its population decreased upwards of 100,000 between 1839 and 1837.—Record.

DESCRIPTION OF JERUSALEM BY SIR DAVID WILKIE, IN A LETTER TO SIR ROBERT PEEL.—It is a luxury or belief that the art of our time and of our British people may reap some benefit that has induced me to undertake this journey. It is to see, to inquire, and to judge, not whether I can, but whether those who are younger, or with far higher attainments and powers, may not in future be required, in the advancement and spread of our knowledge, to refer to the localities of Scripture events, when the great work is to be essayed of representing Scripture history. Great as the assistance might be the imagination, the art of painting has derived from the illustration of Christianity, and great as the talent and genius have been this high walk of art has called into being, yet it is remarkable that none of the great painters whom the world has hitherto looked for the visible appearance of Scripture scenes and feelings have ever visited the Holy Land.

"What we therefore so much admire in the great masters, must be taken from their own idea, or from secondary information. In this, though Paul Veronese, Titian, Giorgione, and Sebastian del Piombo, all Venetians, have by commerce, and immediate intercourse with the Levant, succeeded in giving in their work a nearer verisimilitude to an eastern people, yet who is there who is more deeply interested in Scripture, Raphael and Leonardo da Vinci, great as they are, might not have derived a help that they owed and studied in the same land which Moses and the prophets, the Evangelists, and the Apostles, have so powerfully and graphically described, and which they would have described in vain to the conviction of their readers, but as witnesses and participators in the events which form the subjects of their sacred writings?"

"In my journey thither, desirous of taking a review of some of the grand scenes in Germany of Rubens and Rembrandt, I was deeply interested at Munich by the great and meritorious efforts now making by the native painters of that city. There I believe you have seen, and I doubt not with high admiration of the genius of the artist, and maintenance of the sovereign who has so called them forth. To you, therefore, I speak with deference, and under correction; but as they profess to revive a style of art that has formerly existed, whether it be early or late, I have doubts still as to their purpose, if such a style would either suit the disposition of the English painter, or awaken the same feelings in his mind, to whom it might be like bringing forward the Titans and the Fathers of the Church, instead of the Patriarchs and the New Testament.

"The time is now come when our supply in this walk of art must be drawn from our own land. The facility of travelling, as well as recent public events, favour our pursuit in this sacred quarter; and I am highly grateful at being permitted to see with my own eyes what Jerusalem in our day can still present to us.

"Here, after centuries of ruin and suffering, Jerusalem exists in her greatness. She is elevated on the high table land of Judea, 5,000 feet above the level of the sea. Except the Mount of Olives scarcely any hill now rises above her. Her walls, which encompass her on every side, are higher and more superb than any city walls I have ever seen. The square towers of her gates reach those of Windsor Castle; while their lengthened elevation, with the spires and cupolas they enclose, would have aroused the Poets and Chaucer in preference to all other cities. Her streets are stone-built, massive, surrounded by arches, through which the solemn vista claims the passenger's art, though by it still unknown and unperceived; and the people, who live in a state of comparative poverty and humble and destitute, who never change realm, by their appearance, period of antiquity in everything removed from the present time.

"But besides the habits of man and the stately fashion of his dwelling, which here bear the mark of no modern date, there are other features that carry the impress of sacred history which scarcely any time can change. This I strongly felt, a few days ago, when ascending from the vale of Jordan by the way of Jericho. I was particularly struck, as we got near to Jericho, with the great ruins of a village that lay on the path often frequented by our Saviour, and which opens upon the most beautiful view there is of Jerusalem, where the very point is shown the following scene (St. Luke, ch. xiv. v. 28).—

"And when he was come near he beheld the city, and wept over it saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes."

"Changed as this holy city must be since these words were uttered—her sovereignty gone, her people deprived, and of her temple not one stone left upon another; yet, shown of her beauty, this sacred place of her grandeur presents one of the most striking spectacles I have ever beheld.

"To the expenditure of Scripture, and to the painter of sacred history, this whole treasury must supply what can be learnt no where else; and professors of art must make a stir to meet the ideas that travellers carry on their minds. Indeed, since arriving here, I find a new species of criticism applied to our standard works of art; and my humble pursuits and inquiries appear to introduce somewhat novel subjects of discussion, which have been a question arising from the present habits of the people here, whether the ancient Jews and apostles lived most like Saracens or Romans; whether they sat on the ground or upon chairs; whether upon mats or upon beds; and whether the females were then as much secluded from public view as they are now in these countries? I find the learned, both of monks and rabbis, inclined to the former opinion; but as the synagogue upon Mount Zion is filled with seats, like a church, we may hope that the mode of sitting of the apostles at the table of our Lord may, by any new information, be found to be different from what Leonardo da Vinci has painted it.

"Indeed, nothing here requires any revolution in the opinions of the finest works of art; with all their discrepancies of detail they are yet constantly recalled by what is here before us. The back ground of the Melodians of Raphael is a Syrian building; the wall of the Temple of St. Paul is a Syrian people; and the indescribable tone of Rembrandt is brought to mind at every turn, whether in the street, the synagogue, or the holy Republics."—From his Memoirs, just published by Messrs. Colburn.

NEW ZEALAND.—(From the New Zealand Journal).—The news contained in the file of the Native Examiner to the 9th of November, and in the despatches of the New Zealand Company's agents at Wellington and Nelson, is among the most gratifying that we have yet had to announce. It is withal, that a very amiable understanding existed between the bishop and the agents of the company, and that on the part of the local Government there existed a desire to set at rest those disputed questions which have for some time past arrested the course of New Zealand colonization. Colonel Wakefield, who arrived with Mr. Coates, on the 10th inst. at Auckland, and the acting Governor had given assurance that he would lend his influence in aiding any arrangement by which the claims of the aborigines for title, or further compensation, might be terminated; and that the territory should be then formally proclaimed as Crown domain, and the titles of the company finally concluded. These arrangements will be expected by several persons to be the property of the Governor to the Port Nicholson settlement. In Nelson, the Bishop had shown great zeal and alacrity in the cause of pastoral occupation. He had already taken steps for erecting a church, and Church of England cemetery, Sunday and infant-schools, a native hospital and chapel, as hospital for the reception of sick natives, and a boarding-school for native children; and, in conjunction with the Chief Justice, his trustees in the management of the native reserves, was anxious to establish a general system of medical care and industrial education. Extensive importations of cattle had been made by the Eagle from Sydney, the price averaging 10s. per head; and 100 sheep imported by the Golden, also from Sydney, had at once received 25s. a head. Associations had been formed for working the coal-mines in Coal Bay, and four purchases of the coal had been sent home. The emigrant ships Thomas Harrison, Olympus, and New Zealand, had arrived, and landed the immigrants, with only three deaths. The Chief Justice had held a sort of legal levee in Nelson on the 24th of October, and had made a trip over Waimate, with Colonel Wakefield, and called thereafter for New Plymouth, whence he was to make an overland excursion to Auckland in company with the Bishop. A county court was to be held monthly at Nelson. The despatches which we have to relate will be read with interest by all the friends of New Zealand. Altogether, what vitiates the appointment of an efficient and zealous Governor, the friendly coalition of the acting Governor, the Bishop, and the agents of the company, the hearty exertions of the settlers, and the striking tokens of general progress afforded in the letters from private settlers, New Zealand bids fair to take a new and a more useful and realizable path than those vague hopes which have been temporarily obscured from various causes now almost certain to be removed.—End.

GOVERNMENT NOTIFICATIONS.

ORDERS BY THE HONOURABLE THE DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF NEW ZEALAND.
10th June, 1849.
Mr. J. Whelan, John Macdonald and Deputy Collector of New Zealand, for one month, to visit the Presidency, on private affairs, making over charge of his office to Mr. Herbert Abernethy.

Mr. A. S. Annand made over charge of the Magistracy of Sydenham to Mr. C. Reilly on the 5th instant.

Mr. E. M. Gordon has been appointed Assistant Secretary of the Office of Commissioner of Revenue of the 10th class, in succession to Mr. P. G. Cooke on the 14th inst.

12th June, 1849.
Mr. D. Pringle to officiate as Civil and Sessions Judge at Tirohanga, making over charge of his present office to Mr. R. V. Lewis, who will officiate as Collector of Tirohanga, until relieved by Mr. R. V. Lewis.

Mr. R. V. Lewis to officiate as Collector of Tirohanga, until relieved by Mr. R. V. Lewis.

Mr. H. C. Metcalf to officiate as Civil and Sessions Judge at Hanganui.

20th June, 1849.
Mr. G. U. Tule to officiate as Magistrate of Moneah, until further orders.

Mr. K. Jenkins to be an Assistant to the Magistrate and Collector of Bebar.

20th June, 1849.
Rev. H. R. Sturges, appointed Junior Prebendary Chaplain under date the 17th instant, is permitted to officiate at the Station of Dances till the 18th September, 1849.

Mr. E. H. C. Monckton, of the Civil Service, reported his departure for Europe on the Ship "Thames," which vessel was left by the Fleet on the 17th instant.

Mr. J. Allen made over charge of the duties of the Collectors to Mr. J. G. Campbell on the 18th instant.

The leave granted to Mr. J. L. Bradburn on the 15th February, and to Mr. J. L. Bradburn on the 16th March, and to Mr. J. R. Bradburn on the 17th ultimo, to remain attached to the Collector of the 10th class, for the purpose of studying in a third language, Hindostani, is cancelled from this date at their own request.

17th June, 1849. FREE PRESS, 10th DAY.

By the Secy. to the Govt. of India.

Albany, 10th June, 1849.

Mr. Assistant Surgeon J. Glendon, of the Bandmaster Legion, has obtained a month's leave of absence, from the 1st proximo.

J. THOMASON, Secy. to Govt. of India, with the Governor-General.

MILITARY.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA.

Albany, 17th June, 1849.

The Governor-General has the pleasure of making the following appointments and postings in the Department of Public Works:

James Singh to be a Sub-Assistant Engineer, on a Salary of Rupees (23) Thirty-two per Mensem, (50 Rupees) Pay and 10 Rupees House Allowance, from the 1st instant, to be employed on the works of the Road, under Lieutenant James Speer, of Engineers.

George Henderson, J.A.S. to be an Assistant to Captain Robert Nugent, Executive Engineer of the Kurnool Division.

Leontineus Trollope to be an Assistant Engineer in the Bangalore and Belgaum Divisions, to be posted to Bangalore and relieve Mr. Thomas Steele, Assistant Executive Engineer of the Bangalore Division, on the 1st instant.

On being relieved, Mr. Steele will report forthwith to Kurnool, and place himself under the orders of Lieutenant Speer, of Engineers.

Albany, 21st June, 1849.

The Governor-General has placed the following appointments:

Capt. F. Haverford, of the 14th Regt. N. I., and a Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, to be an Assistant Adjutant-General of Division vice Cooper deceased.

Br. Capt. Wm. Lyndall, of the 11th Regt. N. I., and Aide-de-Camp to His Excellency the Governor-General, to be a Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General on the 1st instant, vice Haverford deceased.

EDWARD SANDERS.

Secy. to Govt. of India, 10th June, 1849.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE HONOURABLE THE PLATINUM REGIMENT.

Port William, 22nd June, 1849.

No. 136 of the 10th June, 1849. The following gentlemen are appointed to the service, in conformity with their appointment by the Honourable the Court of Directors, as Cadets of Infantry on the 1st instant, and are to be posted to the rank of Ensign, from the date assigned to them in General Order No. 118, of the 1st instant.

Infantry.
Mr. Joseph McCarthy, ... 2nd June, 1849.
Robert Holden, ... 2nd June, 1849.

Major William Edward Leslie, Lieutenant of the 33rd Regiment N. I., having been declared incompetent and unfit for the service, is ordered to be placed at his own request, transferred to the Invalid Establishment.

The following gentlemen are made in the subordinate ranks of the Department of Public Works, from the 25th March last:

Assistant Over-seeer Sergeant F. Brist to be an Over-seeer, vice Rammohun Chatterjee deceased.

No. 135 of 1849. The Honourable the President of Council is pleased to direct the following Promotions:—1. Assignment of Rank in the Ordnance Commissariat Department.

Sub-Collector and Acting Conductor Terrence Reid to be Conductor.

Sub-Collector Richard Dwyer to be Acting Conductor.

Acting Sub-Collector James Hamilton to be Sub-Collector.

Resident Major Edward Leslie to be Acting Sub-Collector, 10th Regt. N. I., to be Acting Sub-Collector.

From the 31st May 1849, in succession to the late Major James Hamilton promoted to Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 445. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, JULY 13TH, 1848.

[Price 3 Cts. Rs. monthly, or 30 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.]

OVERLAND MAIL.

THE Bombay Government having fixed on the 20th of August, for the departure of the Steam Mail Steamer of September, notice is hereby given, that the latest safe date for the transmission of letters from Calcutta, which may be intended for that opportunity, will be Saturday, the 13th instant.

Wm. MOORE,

Deputy Post Master.

General Post Office, July 10th, 1848.

THE PAY OF DAROGAS.—We have extracted from the Bengal Government Gazette, the official communications relative to the increase of the pay of Darogas, to which we alluded some time ago. It will be seen that the pay of twenty-five Darogas is to be raised to 100 Rs. a month; of fifty to 75 Rs. and of a hundred to 50 Rs. monthly. For this improvement of the system, the country is indebted, we believe, to the exertions of Mr. Bird. If his brief tenure of office, scarcely extending over fifteen months, which will shortly close, had been distinguished by no other beneficial measure, this first preliminary attempt to remedy the defects of our Police system would be sufficient to render it memorable.

It is impossible however to peruse Mr. Halliday's letter without a painful feeling of humiliation. It is humiliating to find that the Deputy Governor, in pleading for this partial reform with the Supreme Government, is constrained to disavow opposition, by such repeated assurances that it will cost but little. The entire charge incurred by this effort to give the blessings of an improved Police to forty millions of people, is but 75,000 Rupees a year. Yet to secure the assent of Government to this small expenditure, he feels constrained to gild the pill by the assurance that there would be no necessity or indeed likelihood that the full proportion allowed, should receive the higher allowances. As though the chief consideration upon which the concurrence of the Council was likely to turn, was the smallness of the expense rather than the greatness of the benefit, this panoramic idea is repeated; and it is added "the increase would not actually, or at least not for a long time, come up to that maximum, that is to say, to 75,000 Rupees a year—one-half per cent. of the profits of the Opium monopoly." There can be no doubt that Mr. Bird has acted wisely in employing the strongest argument which could be devised to ensure success; but is there not something radically unsound in the principles of a Government, which requires to be consoled by such an argument, when the question at stake involves the peace and comfort of so large a community? The Supreme Council appears to have been sensible of the invidious position in which it would be placed in the eyes of the country, by this repeated reference to the smallness of the proposed expenditure, compared as it would be with the magnitude of the public revenues, and the necessity of the reform. In its reply, therefore, we have the grateful assurance that the measure will be hereafter extended, if the present experiment should prove successful. We hope the Court of Directors will not only give the measure the sanction of their approbation, but administer a gentle rebuke to the local Government for its timidity in a matter of such vital importance, and explain that this extreme caution on a question of expenditure, so imperatively required for the benefit of the country, is calculated to produce an unjust and injurious impression on the public mind of the views of the ruling Authorities at home; that they are ashamed to make public the correspondence between the Supreme and subordinate Government, lest it should be remarked that while the Indian administration felt no hesitation at expending seven or eight Millions in a war beyond the Indus, the appropriation of the thousandth part of such a sum to the improvement of the Police, was made with much difficulty. We trust the Court will once for all assure the Council that in every thing which can conduce to the welfare of the people, they are not only authorized but enjoined to display a noble spirit of generosity, and that the sanction of the Court will be proportioned not to their signification, but to their liberality.

The question of the Court of Directors to a more enlarged expenditure of the public funds for the improvement of the local administration, cannot indeed longer be withheld. Mr. Bird has the merit not only of having taken the initiative in this matter of police reform, but the still greater merit of having rendered it impossible for Government to stop at the limit which bounded his exertions. He has placed it on record that the Darogas are universally corrupt, that their Bazaar officers regard them universally with mistrust, and that the people they are appointed to protect, instead of feeling any sense of security from their presence have a very object of apprehension before them. He has traced these defects in our police, by which its object is almost entirely defeated, in a great measure to the indolence of their allowances. He designates the present system as impolitic and demoralizing, and affirms that it is vain to expect any improvement while it lasts. He has thus in a measure constrained his successors to continue the good work which he has commenced; for the point of reform at which he has been reluctantly obliged to pause, still leaves two-thirds of the Darogahs under the influence of this demoralizing system, to prey upon the vitals of the country, and carry dismay among those whom they are appointed to defend. It is impossible that the system thus laid bare and denounced by the highest and most competent authority in Bengal, can be permitted any longer to disgrace our administration. It is evident that the Court of Directors must—we might almost say will—immediately order the remaining 333 Darogahs to be placed upon 50 Rs. a month, and thus relieve themselves from the odium of being answerable for the continuation of this state of things. The Directors are not insensible to their own dignity and reputation. They well know that they are acting now in the eyes of Europe. They will reason wisely and discreetly in this matter. They will argue that it is far better to spend One lakh of Rupees in rooting out "an impolitic and demoralizing system," than to devote all their vast surplus wealth exclusively to the repayment of their loans. They will see at a single glance that five and twenty lakhs of Rupees laid out during the next five and twenty years in an endeavour to secure a vigorous and honest police, and to give internal peace and security to the people, will be more advantageous to the interests of the country than the redemption of their debt to that extent; and they will consummate the work Mr. Bird has begun.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MR. BLUNDELL.—We are sorry to find that the information which we had received sometime back regarding the superintendence of Mr. Blundell, is correct. The last Madras paper announces that Col. Butterworth has been appointed to receive his office.

We yield to none in admiration of the mode in which Lord Ellenborough has distributed the large patronage at his disposal. Though in some instances he may appear to have committed errors,—as in the instance in which our complicated interests at the Court of Labors were entrusted to one who had no other recommendation, than that he had improved an opportunity of exhibiting his gallantry at the head of his Regiment in Afghanistan,—yet the total disregard of all private interest, and the anxiety to reward merit, exhibited in the appointments made under his Lordship's administration, have secured the respect of society. But here our commendation must stop. The mode in which vacancies have been created, appears, in more than one instance, to be as objectionable as the mode in which they have been filled up is praiseworthy. Of this expostion, we can scarcely be distinguished from the example of the case of Mr. Mandell, affords a pregnant example.

He had applied for the usual furlough to England at the close of 1841, but it was refused by Government, on the ground that his presence was required at Moultin, while Thannweddy lay in its neighbourhood with an army. It is generally understood—it is never denied, that when furlough has been refused by Government, the application falls to the ground, and can be revived only by the applicant himself; in other words, Government having refused to grant furlough when it was convenient to its servant to accept it, cannot enforce the acceptance of it at a subsequent period, for its own convenience. This prescriptive rule was altogether disregarded in the case of Mr. Blundell. Lord Ellenborough wanted the post of Commissioner for Major Broadfoot, and Mr. Blundell was ordered to take his furlough. He replied that it would not be convenient to him, and his answer was immediately granted. Just at this time, Mr. Bonham happened to resign the administration of the Straits, and Government endeavoured in some measure to relieve the glaring injustice of which Mr. Blundell had been the victim, by appointing him to the vacancy. We took his departure for his Government; and last week's Calcutta Gazette announces that he received charge of it from Mr. Gurting on the 3d of June. Before he had been a month in office, we learn from the Madras papers that Col. Butterworth has been appointed to supersede him. Of Col. Butterworth's fitness for such an employ, those who have the advantage of his acquaintance, speak highly. But that is neither here nor there. We speak of the old, not of the new. His double superannuation, without any alleged offence or delinquency, without trial, and without conviction, tion, is an act of injustice which reflects little credit on the Government of India. His removal in the first instance, though indefensible, is intelligible. The Governor General wanted his post to bestow as a reward for services at Jelalabad, and he was suitably and unceremoniously bundled out. There was in this case a definite object which could not be mistaken. But in the second instance of imprisonment, even this excuse is wanting. His place is not required to reward Col. Butterworth's services; and his dismissal can arise only from objections to him, which are personal. There may, for aught we know, be public grounds of dissatisfaction. It is said, but we do not vouch for the fact, that certain measures which he adopted while Governor of Moultain to resist the encroachments of the Burmese, were deemed injudicious, as being calculated to involve us in a war with Tharavady. He made fast a rope to a rock in the Salween river, to prevent the timber cut by British subjects being carried over to the Burmese shore. The Burmese cut the rope at night; he renewed it, and sent some gun boats to protect it. Supposing this to be the main cause of that public displeasure which pursues him, the error, if it be one, is after all but an error of judgement; and the punishment exceeds the transgression. Besides, it must not be forgotten that the vigorous resistance of encroachments is officially meritorious or the reverse, not from its intrinsic character, but from the prevalent temper of Government at the time. To teach the Burmese to respect the rights of others, Sir Alexander Campbell burnt down Martaban—and was applauded. To teach them the same lesson and to afford protection for British interests, Mr. Huddell sends up two gun boats—and he is turned out of office. But this delinquency must have been fully known to Government when the administration of the Straits was committed to Mr. Huddell. Upon what principle then was that high office entrusted to him after he had forfeited the confidence of his superiors? If the Governor General was aware that his demerits at Moultain were so glaring, that no punishment short of suspension from the service could meet the case, why was he elevated to a post he was not to enjoy, and put to all the inconvenience of removing to a place, where he was not to remain? He may have committed an error of judgment,—though our Government ought to have directed itself of its Burnophobia, after we had humbled to the dust the Lord paramount of Eastern Asia—but, such treatment of an old and meritorious servant of the state, is unworthy of the Government.

THE LATE CASE, SMYTH VERSUS BUTTY.

We announced last week on the singular inconsistencies which marked the action brought against the Editor of the Bombay Times by Mr. Smyth, the barrister, who, after having engaged in a newspaper controversy with an anonymous writer of the name of Ryut, and promised to meet him point to point, and invited the continuance of the discussion, and applauded the boldness of his spirit, at the end of eighteen months, brought an action against the Bombay Times for certain passages in Ryut's of last letter. But the remarks made by the Judges at the trial appear, if possible, still more singular.

The Chief Justice said he could not conceal, as "his disgust on finding newspapers thus rendered a vehicle for private slander. If libels such as these were published, it would lower the character of the Press, and an Editor's box in such cases might have passed over it. "Libels taken in here, and no question asked." A more unfortunate opportunity could scarcely have been selected for this denunciation of the Press. The Editor of the Bombay Times, it was evident to the world, was as innocent as the Grand Lama, of any wish to make his paper the vehicle of slander. Mr. Smyth had gone up to Hyderabad, to collect the charges which disaffected Natives had to bring against the British Authorities. He had to have realised 70,000 Rs. by embodying their grievances, real or supposed, in petitions. At the same time, a series of articles appeared in the Englishman, which were generally attributed to the pen or the agency of Mr. Smyth, and in which the English officers at Hyderabad, were held up to public reprobation. Rumour may in this instance have been wrong; but it is necessary to bear in mind that the paternity of these articles was ascribed to Mr. Smyth to understand why Ryut should have come forward in defence of these maligned officers, and unfolded the proceedings at Hyderabad. In his letter he stated, that a native had informed him that Mr. Smyth had encouraged the resort of the disaffected by giving out that he was a relative of Lord Auckland; and that if Mr. Smyth had increased his fortune by such impositions Captain Malcolm should be returned to Madras. It was the scurrility which appeared in the Englishman that called Ryut into the field. His letter was part and parcel of a controversy then raging in the newspapers. With neither party had the Editor of the Bombay Times any concern. It was not because he was ready to take in libels without asking a question, that he published this letter. Indeed, the person attacked, applauded the letter and thought it innocent for eighteen months. Is it for publishing such a letter, that the Press is to be stigmatised as ready to make itself the instrument of private slander?

The letter was evidently published with no libellous intent. It appeared to fall within the line of that free discussion which makes the Press so great a blessing to society. The plainest himself thought so, till, as we are informed by the Madras papers, some eighteen months after, being anxious to discover the name of Ryut he thought the most ready way was to bring an action of libel against the publisher of his letter. The duty of an Editor in the admission or rejection of correspondence is as difficult, as it is dangerous. It is impossible for any man to say where free discussion ends, and libel begins. A libel is just what the Court pronounces to be a libel. With the sliding and slippery scale of the Libel law, no public writer is safe. In the majority of instances in which he is brought before the bar of a Court, his escape or condemnation appears to be equally the result of accident. An editor not only indites his own opinions, but he publishes those of others, with a halcyon and all his discretion, for him to steer clear of hidden dangers which beset his path. These circumstances an equitable judge might have taken into consideration in commenting on what, even in its most heinous aspect, was only an act of indiscretion. But to take advantage of an occasion to run down the Press,—

How Mr. Smyth's character as a barrister was so grievously affected by this charge, we are at a loss to conceive. As a barrister he certainly had no business at Hyderabad. It is not within the limits of the Supreme Court of Madras that he should be deputed thither on any official duty.

He went there for his own special advantage, and undertook engagements which were not in the sphere of his professional duty. Upon what principle then can he claim the protection of the Court for his professional character? His professional reputation was no otherwise damaged than it would have been by any other act which affected his character as a gentleman. If he had belonged to the medical profession, and had thus embarked in exorbitant, altogether foreign to it, could he have maintained that his professional character was attacked by such a charge of imputation? Sir Erskine Perry came to the aid of this argument of the Chief Justice, but with indifferent success. He stated that conduct which in other men would be free from all imputation would deeply degrade the high and independent character of the bar. For instance, a Clergyman or Medical man might without imputation enter familiarly into society with Attorney's wives and daughters, but this would be deemed unprofessional and unworthy on the part of a barrister. But the simile does not fit. The charge in this case is that of having obtained money on false pretences; of having raised 70,000 Rupees by pretending to be a relative of Lord Auckland. Does the learned judge intend to say that this would be as innocent in an unprofessional man as taking tea with an Attorney's wife, or dancing with an Attorney's daughter?

Sir Erskine Perry is also reported to have said that "attacks on character should be founded on truth." But it is not held as a legal maxim that the greater the truth the greater the libel. If the Editor of the Bombay Times had been able to prove that Mr. Smyth had really encouraged the resort of petitioners to him by giving out that he was Lord Auckland's relative—as he boasted to us, that he had relatives who were Peers and friends who were members of Parliament,—would not the Court have been obliged to award heavier damages?

It was also stated from the Bench that "where newspapers were mercantile speculations the interest of the proprietors, not the public benefit, were the immediate objects in view. Attacks on individuals were sure to be greedily read, and to ensure circulation." If these remarks have any bearing on the point at issue, they signify that a slander published in a newspaper which is a joint stock concern, deserves heavier punishment than one published in a paper which is the property of a single individual. Now the paper to which the letter under consideration was originally sent,—we mean the Friend of India,—belongs to a single individual. Had it appeared in this journal, and had Mr. Smyth dragged us into the Supreme Court, would the Judges have deemed it any extension of the offence that the proprietor was one and indivisible, and would they have mitigated damages accordingly? We should be loth to try the experiment.

All newspapers which are worth their salt, are mercantile speculations. The sole proprietor, equally with a proprietary body, brings his wares to market, and gets the best price he can for them. There is no intrinsic difference between a joint stock newspaper, and one where the pecuniary profit and responsibility belong to a single individual. The distinction is drawn where there is no difference.

Lastly, "in the Indian Press, individuals seem too willing to libel one another for their own private interests." This sentence is evidently carelessly reported; but if its design was to affirm that the Press in India is more addicted to private slander than the Press in other countries, then we would fearlessly challenge a comparison between the Indian Press and that of every other country in which the English language prevails. We may safely maintain without any dread of refutation, that no Press is more free from the guilt of propagating private slander, and of doing it for the purpose of gain, than that of this country. Public men and public measures may sometimes have been treated with little civility, and editors may have occasionally written under the impression that censure was the tax which men ought to pay to the public for being eminent, but if the Press in India is distinguished by any one feature more than by another, it is by an earnest anxiety to avoid being made the vehicle of private slander.

THE DOMAINS OF THE RAJA OF BENARES.
The oppressions under which the tenants of the Raja of Benares laboured, and which it was the object of Regulation 7, of 1828, to remove, are about to be renewed. The protection which the British Government afforded them has been suddenly removed, and they are delivered over to the tender mercies of a landlord, from whom they have nothing to hope, and every thing to fear.

When the Province of Benares was permanently settled in 1783, the Parganah forming the Raja's Family domains were, in deference to his privileges, excepted from the operation of the settlement, with the understanding that the administration of justice in revenue and judicial matters, which were confided to the Raja, should be carried on in strict accordance with the Regulations of Government. From the fact of no interior settlement having been made with the Malgoosars, the Raja was led to assume that he being sole Zemindar, no proprietary rights could exist under him, and that his holdholders were mere Farmers and Theodolites removable at his will and pleasure—forgetting that he was thus assuming a power which the very Government from which he derived his rights did not itself exert, and which therefore it could not transfer to him. Under this assumed right, a system of extortion and extortion was carried on, under which by the year 1828, the demands from the Pargnah were nearly doubled, and the greater part of the ancient families expelled from their possessions. In one Pargnah the rents were raised from Rs. 1,28,619 to Rs. 1,28,619, in another from Rs. 3,24,000 to Rs. 6,01,554.

In consequence of a simultaneous appeal to the Governor General from all the oppressed Zemindars, Mr. W. W. Hill was deputed as Commissioner in the year 1837 to investigate the complaints and it was through him that the injustice practiced towards the landholders of these tracts, by excepting them from the general settlement, was first made known. It also appeared from his report that torture to a certain extent had been applied in the realization of the Revenue.

At his recommendation, Reg. VII. of 1828 was promulgated, under which a Superintendent was appointed as an immediate controlling authority over the Raja, and who being himself invested with the powers of a Collector of Revenue, was directed to make an interior settlement with all parties who under the Denom. Regulation of 1783 could prove proprietary rights. This settlement was completed by Mr. W. H. Volpey in 1830, when the separate appointment of Superintendent was abolished and the duties made over to the Collector of Benares. It was however soon discovered that this officer, having absolutely more work than he could accomplish, was unable to pay the requisite attention to the Raja's domain, which almost equalled in extent the whole of his own Collectorate. The bad feeling between the Raja's officers and the proprietors, which his almost irresponsible powers of Collector gave them constant opportunities of showing continued with unabated animosity, so that after repeated complaints on the part of the proprietors, the separate appointment of Superintendent was again established in the early part of 1839.

Capt. Stewart, who held a military employment at Chunar, was appointed Superintendent of the Raja's estates, to act as an intermediate agent between the oppressing landlord and the oppressed tenantry. The various complicated questions which arose between the Raja and the Garkwars, were referred to him, and decided with such promptness and equity as to diffuse universal content through this extensive estate. During the three years preceding 1841, he had so far gained the confidence both of the Raja and the people by his abilities, assiduity and judgment, that the Board requested of Government that he might be altogether relieved from his Military duties, and thus be enabled to devote his whole time to the important civil duties committed to him. At the same time, the Board expressed their conviction that in order to secure to the people the blessings which had been procured for them at so great an expense of labour, time and money, it was absolutely necessary to continue the office of Superintendent. They stated that the Civil and Special Courts of the Company were so overladen with engagements as to be unable to give any adequate attention to the grievances of the people. Having established the necessity of a distinct Superintendent, they earnestly recommended that Capt. Stewart, whose ability and fitness for the employment were unquestionable, and who would be satisfied with a moderate remuneration, might be continued in the appointment. The address of the Board appears to have carried weight, for he was continued in his situation till April of the present year, when the Governor General thought fit to abolish the office altogether, because the expense, about 500 Rupees a month, which it entailed, was considered too much for the public treasury.

The poor Malgoosars are in dismay. Twice have they been rescued from the fangs of the Raja by the interference of the British Government, and by the appointment of a Protector. They are now to be made over again to their task master and his myrmidons, and insult is added to injury by telling them to apply to the overworked British Courts for the redress of their wrongs. They have now petitioned the Governor General to continue the Superintendent, offering to defray his whole salary themselves, and begging that it may be regularly deducted from their rents. In this proposal they have shown more wisdom than we generally observe in the natives, who are so remarkable for being pennywise and pound foolish. Supposing their payments to be Six lakhs of Rupees a year, the sum of 6000 Rs. they now offer to pay for a Protector will amount only to one per cent; and it will be strange indeed if the Raja, when they are left unconditionally at his mercy, should let them off under an additional exaction of Five per cent.

Their request is in itself so reasonable and so powerfully backed by all those public servants who are acquainted with the character of the Raja's administration, and who know the fatal consequence of removing the Protector, that we are inclined to hope Lord Ellenborough will agree to it; for we have no hesitation in saying that we are not among the number of those who think that the strongest argument against a proposition in his Lordship's eyes, is its conformity to reason.

The petition will be found in another page.

FINAL NOTICE OF THE JOURNALS OF LADY SALE, LIGHTHEARTS EYES AND MELVILLE.—THE CAPTIVITY. The two objects which Akbar Khan appears to have set before himself, were, the expulsion of the English from Afghanistan, and the restoration of his father and his family to liberty. The first of these he expected to accomplish by the annihilation of our army; the second, by securing the persons of a number of the officers and ladies as he could, to be detained as hostages. The narratives before us afford the strongest evidence that the destruction of the force was planned and designed by him before he left Cabul, and that the murderers Ghilzies were let loose upon our troops in the defiles, by his instrumentality. The various detentions on the road, though advised by him professedly for the safety of the troops, were undeniably designed only for their more effectual destruction. It is just possible that when the Ghilzies had been glutted for four or five days with blood and plunder, he might have been unable to put a stop to their atrocities; yet he seems always to have exercised a permanent influence over them—except when it was necessary to restrain their murderous attacks. They appear to have been sufficiently acquainted with his real wishes to pay little regard to his apparent anxiety to save the troops. They understood his Pushtoo addresses too well to care a rush for his Persian speeches, which were understood for the British officers, and not for them. Having at length in six days secured his object by the almost entire destruction of the force, and by making the officers whom he considered as most important, and the married ladies, his prisoners, his next object was to keep those prisoners alive, as hostages for the exchange of his father. Possessed of no substantive power at this time, he was too well aware of the value of the captives to allow of anything which should endanger their safety. He treated them with some degree of kindness and consideration, and though by nature the slave of his own passions, for the gratification of which he considered no sacrifice too dear, there were moments of kindness, in which he appeared as an angel of mercy, when compared with the generosity of his own countrymen.

In the afternoon of the 9th January when the married ladies were entrusted to his care, he requested an interview with Lady Macgregor, and expressed his sorrow at having been instrumental to her present misfortune, and his desire to contribute to her comfort while she remained his guest! None but an Afghan, accustomed to deeds of violence, would have thought of obtruding himself on the secret privacy of a widow, with whose husband's blood his hands were still stained. She was however obliged to march in his train, on the 11th, when the whole party started about eleven o'clock, and passed over the ground which our army had traversed the preceding day, combating their enemies every inch of the way. La. Melville who had received five wounds and had surrounded himself to a Chief the day before, had been transferred by him to Mahomed Akbar, and now rode by his side over the scene of the previous day's slaughter. The Sirdar halted at each European body, and asked him whether it was that of a Sikh or a Gora. He recognised the bodies of Major Scott, Major Ewart, Dr. Bryce, Captain Leighton and White, and Lieut. Sherr. Lieut. Bryce says, "terrible was the spectacle presented to our eyes along the whole line of road; the snow was absolutely dyed with streaks and patches of blood for whole miles, and at every step we encountered the mangled bodies of British and Hindoostanee soldiers, and hapless camp-followers, lying side by side, victims of one treacherous undistinguishing fate, the red stream of life still trickling from many a gaping wound inflicted by the merciless Afghan knife. Here and there small groups of miserable, starving, and frost-bitten wretches, among whom were many women and children, were still permitted to cling to life, perhaps only because death would in their case have been a mercy. The bodies of Major Scott and Ewart, and of Dr. Bryce, were recognized. Numerous parties of traitorous Ghazees, the chief perpetrators of these horrors, passed us laden with booty, their naked swords still reeking with the blood of their victims. They uttered deep curses and sanguinary threats at our party, and seemed disappointed that so many of the hated Ferooghies should have been suffered to survive." Lady Sale says, "The sight was dreadful; the smell of the blood sickening; and the corpses, lay so thick, it was impossible to look from them, as it required some care to guide my horse so as not to tread on the bodies."

Between Tezen and Sch Baba the party encountered the same horrifying sights as on the preceding day. "We passed the last horse artillery gun, the carriage of which had been set on fire by the Ghazies, and was still burning. The corpse of poor Dr. Cardew lay stretched beside it, with several of the artillery men. A little further on we passed the body of Dr. Duff whose left hand had suffered previous amputation with a packknife by Dr. Harcourt." In passing the ruined enclosures at Juggulak within which the remnant of the force had taken refuge, the spectacle was still more terrific; of the whole interior space being one crowded mass of bloody corpses. "The carnage," says Lieut. Bryce, "must have been dreadful. The body of Capt. Skinner was recognized, and an Afghan was persecuted by Capt. Lawrence to inter it, with Akbar Khan's leave. This carnage it will be remembered took place, at the time when the General, after having been trepanned by Akbar Khan, was assured that every thing had been sensibly settled. If such was the scene at Juggulak, what must have been the spectacle exhibited at the barrier, two miles on, where the most terrific slaughter of the whole march was perpetrated? That some of horror however the captives were happily spared. Their jailor commanded them four and twenty miles in a northerly direction across the steep and difficult Udrak-hadrah pass, to the fort of Kuta, which they reached at night, but not being admitted, were obliged to repose in the open air. The next day, the 15th, they crossed the Cabul river with some difficulty, but experienced the most polite attention from Mahomed Akbar. Moving in a then easterly direction they passed through the fertile valley of Laghman, studded with forts, from which both men and women issued forth, and poured a torrent of the most virulent abuse on them. At three in the afternoon, they reached the town of Tughur, within it was said, thirty miles of Jellalabad. Here they were allowed to halt the next day, which being Sunday, prayers were read from a Bible and Prayer Book, which had been picked up on the field at Boodkhal.

Here it became Mahomed Akbar to send the ladies and children on to Jellalabad, which he had solemnly promised to do when he received them under his protection; but nothing could be farther from his intention. On the contrary, he conveyed them eight or nine miles further up the valley, to Buddesabad, one of the strong holds of Mahomed Shah Khan Ghilzie, the most inveterate enemy of the British, perhaps in the country. In this fact the captives remained insured from the 17th of January to the 11th of April. The treatment they experienced in this confinement was on the whole considerate. They were supplied with provisions, which, however, were cooked in a very unsavory mode. They obtained some changes of linen; they were occasionally allowed to correspond with their friends at Jellalabad; and in one instance Akbar Khan supplied them with 1000 Rs. Their accommodation was very scanty, and of comforts in the European sense of the term, they were entirely devoid. The monotony of their life was broken on the 16th of February by the arrival of Major Griffiths and Mr. Blewitt, and subsequently by that of Capt. Souter and Capt. Bygrave.

On the 19th of February they experienced that severe earthquake, which shook down the defences of Jellalabad and destroyed in one moment the labour of three months. It seems to have been felt with extraordinary severity in the valley of Buddesabad. The fort was violently shaken; the room inhabited by Lady Sale fell in. The ladies and children were saved only by rushing into the open air. General Elphinstone, being bed-ridden, was for some time in a precarious position, but was rescued by the integrity of his servant Moore, a private in the 44th, who rushed into his room and carried him forth in his arms. The quaking continued for several moments with unabated violence; and the shocks were afterwards repeated for a whole month so regularly, that the day on which there was no earthquake is specially mentioned in the journal. The only other circumstance worthy of notice before the departure of the captives from this fort was the inhuman expulsion of all the unfortunate Hindoostanee camp followers, whose feet had been crippled by the frost. The atrocious Ghilzie, at the command it was supposed of Mahomed Shah Khan, dragged them out of the fort, and left them to perish miserably in the fields without food or shelter, or the consolations of human sympathy.

At length came the 7th of April, when the illustrious garrison of Jellalabad raised the siege of the town, by their own gallantry, and completely annihilated the besieging army of Akbar Khan. The rumour of the victory reached Buddesabad on the 8th. The arrival of Mahomed Shah Khan in the evening confirmed the joyful intelligence. He had a long interview with Major Pottinger, who endeavoured to propose terms for the release of the prisoners. The Khan however would not listen to them for a moment, but said we must follow the Sirdar's fortune, who would start for the hills the next morning. The poor captives now prepared to leave their dreary prison, and bid adieu to its grim walls, of twenty-five feet in height; but they were not to pass unscathed. The hospitable Mahomed Shah Khan first selected all the best horses for himself, and then robbed Lady Macnaghten of shawls, to the value of 5000*Rs.* and of jewels estimated at 10,000*Rs.* The prisoners finally left the fort on the morning of the 11th of April, and were conveyed about for five days in the train of Akbar Khan, in the most miserable conveyances, over terrific defiles, and heated sands, exposed to every inconvenience through the day, and lodged at night in the most wretched tents. Capt. Lawrence remonstrated with the Sirdar against dragging the ladies and children with him over such a country, when they were so ill able to bear up against fatigue and exposure, but the good Samaritan was inexorable. At length there was a halt for three days, to enable the Sirdar to regulate his movements, for his influence had been all but annihilated by his defeat. On the 19th, though it rained heavily, the captives were obliged to march sixteen miles to Tezen.

At Sch Baba they encountered a putrid smell from the decomposed bodies of their murdered companions. At Tezen they were lodged in another fort of Mahomed Shah's, which had been shaken to its foundation by the earthquake. The females of his family cooked a dinner for the captive ladies, and the whole party, large and small, in number thirty-four, were closely packed at night in a room 13 feet by 12, with a wood fire in the centre, and pine twigs for candles. The day after the arrival of the party at Tezen, Mrs. Waller was delivered of a daughter. This was the fourth addition to the number of captives since they had lost their liberty. Mrs. Borth, Mrs. Riley, and a soldier's wife of the name of Bourne, having been confined at Buddesabad. In no respect was the mercy of Divine Providence more manifest during the captivity than in the preservation of the females, while they were thus exposed to the utmost extremity of hardship, in the most delicate circumstances.

On the 21st of April, the Sirdar held a levee, —Major Pottinger being present,—at which he burst out into a violent passion, and declared that his own countrymen had basely deserted and betrayed him, though he had all along acted at the instigation of the Chiefs at Cabul, especially in the murder of the Envoy and the destruction of the army; yet these very men now refused to support him, and he solemnly swore that if ever he had the power, he would make a severe example of them. This speech serves to corroborate the statement, that the destruction of the army was not the spontaneous ebullition of Ghilzie ferocity, though they doubtless rejoiced in so unusual an opportunity of indulging their natural passion for blood and plunder. It was Akbar who kindled that fire in their bosoms, which he may afterwards have been anxious to extinguish when he found it raging too fiercely for his own purposes. The fact that he appeared at Cabul before the assembled Chiefs on the 21st of January, booted and spurred, and stated that he was going to slay the Feriengs Dogs; and that on the passage of the troops through the Khoord Cabul, on the 8th, he followed with some Chiefs in the rear, and called to the Ghilzie, in Persian to desert from, and in Pushto to continue, firing, explains the whole mystery of the massacre, and places his treachery beyond doubt.

The captives remained at Tezen on the 20th and 21st of April. Early in the morning of the 22d, an unusual bustle was visible. The keeper was aroused from his slumbers. A message had arrived from Cabul to say that Futeh Jung had come to rescue the captives with 400 horse. They were immediately removed in two parties. General Elphinstone, Major Pottinger, Capt. Mackenzie and Dr. Magnan, with Capt.

and Mrs. Waller and Capt. and Mrs. Eyre, with the ground. The Khoord Cabul pass, was sent to a fort two miles higher up the valley, found to be absolutely impassable from the stench of dead bodies. It will be remembered, that the rest of the ladies and gentlemen were dispatched up the Zunduk valley near the Aman Koh, about eight miles south of Tezen. This Akbar urged on the slaughter in Pashoto, while the sudden movement proved the death of General and of our soldiers and followers were slain. When the party was removed from Baddahad he was so weak as to be scarcely able to sit on horseback, yet he was constrained to ride on horseback, and the day after, the 23d, he was released from all bodily suffering and mental anguish. His body was placed in a framework, raised up together by an Afghan carpenter, and sent down to Jellalabad, under charge of a European soldier, disguised as a native. But the progress of the body was interrupted by the savage Ghilzies, who opened the case, stripped the body of the General, pulled it with stones, and would have burned it, but for the remonstrances of the Sirdar's men, who at length succeeded in conveying it to Jellalabad, where it was interred with due military honors.

On the same day, the 33d April, on which the General expired, intelligence arrived that the people of Cabul were deserting it in great numbers, from dread of our army, and that all efforts to induce the people to oppose General Pollock's advance, were fruitless. This information at once decided Mahomed Akbar to send Capt. Mackenzie to treat with General Pollock without delay, and though we had already paid dearly enough in our previous attempts to negotiate with him, overtures continued to be received and made for four months, from April to August, at the most precious season of the year, when had our armies marched at once to Cabul from Candahar and Jellalabad, they would have encountered no obstacles; their progress would have been a bloodless triumph, and the miseries of the captives might have been abridged by two months.

The captives remained in the Zunduk valley for a month. Their situation appears to have been as comfortable as could have been expected in so wild a region. They enjoyed considerable freedom, and not a little kindness from their keepers. Their minds were occasionally cheered by correspondence with their friends at Jellalabad, and their feelings soothed by the tokens of kindness they received in the despatch of various articles of food and dress from our camp. Meanwhile Mahomed Akbar, whose prospects seemed to have been for ever blighted by his memorable defeat on the 7th of April, had risen stronger from his fall, and had gradually acquired such authority at Cabul, by the native force of his genius, as to be able to send for the captives to be lodged in the vicinity of his own encampment, without the fear of a rescue. On the 23d of May, they left the Zunduk valley and traced their way to the foot of the Huft Kotul, or hill of seven ascents. Here they once more encountered the putrid bodies of their slaughtered companions in arms, which strewn the way to Khoord Cabul, and poisoned the atmosphere. A little beyond Kubbur-i-Jubbar they passed two caves on opposite sides of the road, filled with rotten carcases. From thence to Tungee Terecke the night became more and more awful. Their conductor asked Lieut. Eyre, whether this would not excite the fury of General Pollock's army, and he was told that he need not be surprised if every house in Cabul was levelled with the ground. The Khoord Cabul pass, was found to be absolutely impassable from the stench of dead bodies. It will be remembered, that the rest of the ladies and gentlemen were dispatched up the Zunduk valley near the Aman Koh, about eight miles south of Tezen. This Akbar urged on the slaughter in Pashoto, while the sudden movement proved the death of General and of our soldiers and followers were slain. When the party was removed from Baddahad he was so weak as to be scarcely able to sit on horseback, yet he was constrained to ride on horseback, and the day after, the 23d, he was released from all bodily suffering and mental anguish. His body was placed in a framework, raised up together by an Afghan carpenter, and sent down to Jellalabad, under charge of a European soldier, disguised as a native. But the progress of the body was interrupted by the savage Ghilzies, who opened the case, stripped the body of the General, pulled it with stones, and would have burned it, but for the remonstrances of the Sirdar's men, who at length succeeded in conveying it to Jellalabad, where it was interred with due military honors.

The fort in which the prisoners were now confined was three miles distant from Cabul, and close to the Logur river. They entered it on the 24th of May and continued to occupy it for three months to the 25th of August, when they were transported to Bamecan, on the approach of our armies. They appear to have enjoyed more freedom and comfort there, than in either of their previous jails. The fort furnished sufficient accommodation to admit of the ladies and gentlemen enjoying the luxury of distinct apartments. The monotony of their existence was broken from time to time by reports from the city of the gradual progress of Akbar's accession to power, and from the camp of the advance of our army; which latter information was less substantial than the former.

The successive journeys of Capt. Mackenzie, Troop and Lawrence to Jellalabad, with the proposal of terms from Akbar Khan, kept the captives in a state of feverish anxiety, their joys rising and falling as the prospect of deliverance appeared to approach or to fly from them. It was during these three months, while Cabul was distracted with factions, and the Chiefs were quarrelling with each other, that the advance of our army might have been effected without resistance. Had General Nott advanced towards Cabul as soon as he had received the reinforcements brought by Brigadier England, and General Pollock moved up simultaneously, with the cattle then in the camp, and with which alone he was obliged eventually to take the field, an easy triumph would have attended our arms. This fact, which has hitherto rested on conjecture, is now abundantly confirmed by the journals before us, which disclose the actual state of things at the capital during this period of our inglorious inactivity. As matters turned up, our triumph was more decisive and perhaps more salutary, from its having been believed after the resources of the country had been collected by Akbar Khan to obstruct our advance; but it will ever be a matter of course, that the progress of our armies was protected till opposition had been organized under an able leader, and till the near approach of winter exposed our troops to the additional risks of the climate, the rigour of which had already annihilated one army.

On the 18th of July, Lady Macnaghten had parts of her jewels restored to her by Mahomed Shah Khan, in a sadly broken condition. He had endeavored to raise money upon them in the city, without success, and now made a mistake of returning them, but the shawls were two valuable to be given up. On the 24th of July Major Pottinger received intimation from Jellalabad, that his political functions had ceased, and that he was in no way to interfere with any future arrangements which might be entered into regarding the captives. Surely, his eminent services at Herat and Candahar, his noble conduct at the Council of War, when he alone stood up for the maintenance of our national dignity, combined with his sufferings, ought to have protected him from a procedure calculated so deeply to wound his feelings. On the 27th, Capt. Troup returned from Jellalabad with intelligence that Lord Ellenborough had ordered the negotiations to be broken off, and the army to march to Cabul. The announcement of this fact, threw the Sirdar into a paroxysm of rage and he declared that the first movement of the army to Cabul should be the signal for the removal of the captives to Turkistan, where he would distribute them as slaves among the Chiefs. He resolved however to make one last effort at negotiation.

Capt. Lawrence and Troup were deputed that night to Jellalabad. The captives however who knew that nothing could arrest the progress of our armies, now made up their minds for death or slavery, for although they had been told, that the Afghan Chiefs would not permit their removal, the power of Akbar appeared too firm for them to indulge the hope of a rescue. While the two officers were at Jellalabad, Capt. John Conally, was carried off after five days illness. Mahomed Akbar promised to send his body for burial to Jellalabad; but on Major Pottinger's sending, to enquire when it was to start, Akbar replied that till General Pollock made peace, neither living nor dead should be suffered to go. The body was therefore buried in the garden adjacent to the fort.

On the 9th of August, Captain Troup and Lawrence returned from General Pollock's camp, and the next morning informed the captives that their mission had led to no result. The General demanded that all the prisoners should be sent down immediately; and Akbar positively refused to do so without a written engagement. On the 12th, Major Pottinger with the five hostages were turned out "bag and baggage" from the Bala Hissar, by command of Akbar, who told his people to "take those dogs away." On the 23d, the party was unexpectedly gratified by the arrival of the Ghuzni prisoners, nine in number, whom Akbar had gotten into his own power during the absence of Shumooddeen. On comparing notes, it was found that the treatment experienced by the captives of Ghuzni had been far more severe and cruel, than that of the prisoners who had fallen into Akbar's hands. Two days after, on the 25th of August, the last rays of hope vanished from the minds of the unhappy prisoners. They were informed that they should probably march that night for Turkistan, where hopeless slavery awaited them. In vain did they indulge the faint prospect of a rescue during the day. They knew that no one had the energy to attempt it, and the gloomy day was passed in packing up a few necessaries. In the evening, Capt. Troup was sent to see them off. Capt. Bygrave was ordered to be in personal attendance on the Sirdar. Mrs. Anderson and Mrs. Trevor, who were too ill to undertake the journey without exposing themselves to certain death, were left behind with Dr. Campbell for their medical attendant. The rest, sick or well, were obliged, to start at half past ten that night for Bamecan, under the command of Salah Mahomed, with an escort of between 3 and 400 men. As the ladies were now going into unknown regions, where it would be advisable to attract as little notice as possible, they adopted the national dress. Their road lay through scenes of beauty and sublimity which at another season would not have failed to elicit forth their admiration. They reached Bameean on the 3d. of September. The accommodation in the fort was such as they would not have selected for their dogs; still they enjoyed more freedom than they had ever done, and Lady Sale and Lieut. Eyre made excursions to the caves.

On the 11th of September came the crisis which they had so long anticipated with dread. A decisive order was received from Mahomed Akbar, for their immediate removal to Kooloon, where they would have been placed beyond the reach of our victorious armies. But Salah Mahomed their jailor, was not impervious to mercy. He had, formerly been in the Shah's service in Capt. Hopkins' regiment, and had deserted to Dost Mahomed in this same neighbourhood. The indefatigable Mohan Lal, had sent a messenger after him from Cabul, one Morten Khan, to promise him the most liberal rewards if he would permit the release of the prisoners. This had prepared his mind to receive with complacency the proposals which Major Pottinger had whispered in his ear. On the morning of the 11th, Captain Lawrence asked the use of Lady Sale's room for a conference, as being the most private. There Mohan Lal's envoy, Morten Khan and Salah Mahomed met Major Pottinger, and Capt. Lawrence, Johnson, Mackenzie and Webb, and in the course of an hour the business was settled. Salah Mahomed agreed to make over all his prisoners on condition of receiving 30,000 Rupees in ready cash, and 1000 Rs. a month for life. The officers (Capt. Webb excepted), put their names to the agreement; and all the other prisoners signed an agreement by which they pledged themselves to hold the four officers harmless, if Government refused to sanction the expenditure.

The next morning the 12th, Salah Mahomed hoisted the flag of defiance. As money was wanted, a cattle from Bokkara was intercepted; and 400 Rupees levied by way of tax. Major Pottinger next adopted the bold step of appointing a new Governor of the province in the name of the British Government; and presents and promises were distributed among the neighbouring chiefs. The most energetic measures were now adopted. The Meer Akbar, a confidential servant of Akbar Khan, who had been sent with the party, and who was entirely devoted to his master's interests, on seeing this turn of affairs, moved off with his 100 Ghilzie horse, and there was little doubt that he would soon bring his master down on the fort. It was resolved therefore to put it into a state of defence. A subscription of 500 Rupees was raised among the prisoners as a fund for provisioning the garrison. Salah Mahomed busied himself in laying in provisions. The water was turned into ditches, and every preparation was made to stand a siege. Major Pottinger exerted himself again as he had done at Herat. "It would be injustice," says Lady Sale, "to Major Pottinger not to mention the active part he took in affairs. From his perfect knowledge of the Persian language, and his acquaintance with the manners and customs of the people, he well knew how to manage them, and to take advantage of the slightest opening on their part in his favor. His coolness and decision were only equalled by the promptness with which he met the wishes of the chiefs; giving them bursts on the neighbouring lands, empowering them to receive the government rents, &c.; all which documents, though he executed them with an air of great condescension and with the gravity of a judge, he well knew were mere pieces of waste paper; yet they had a magic charm for the time; which was all we required."

On the 15th intelligence arrived that General Nott had taken and destroyed Ghazul, that General Pollock was approaching Cabul, and that Akbar Khan was supposed to have fled to Kohistan. Salah Mahomed thought the time had now arrived when the party might commence their journey to Cabul with safety, and he determined to start the next morning. On the 16th, they commenced their march towards Cabul, not however without deep anxiety, for they knew that the Meer Akbar had joined his master. Akbar, and announced the entire frustration of his plans. For aught they knew, the Siridar himself might be in the neighbourhood, and endeavor to regain his captives. It was with doubts fluttering between hope and anxiety that they issued from their cheerless prison, and as sunrise commenced their flight. Every horseman they met on the road was supposed to be the express courier of their enemy. The day however passed without any attempt to intercept them, and they encamped at Killa topoker.

At two in the morning, they were roused by the arrival of a messenger from Sir Richmond Shakespear with a letter—the most exhilarating they had received for ten months—stating that he had advanced to Sir-i-chaman on his way to their relief, with Six hundred Kuzilbash men. The next morning, the 17th, they marched eleven miles to the foot of the Kaloe pass, and then crossed that stupendous mountain, which is within a thousand feet as high as Mont Blanc, and had rested a couple of hours, when a body of horse was descried descending in the valley down the distant pass of Hajecuk. An instant all were on the alert to catch a glimpse of their liberators; and they soon recognized the friendly banner of the Kuzilbashes, streaming in the air. A few minutes more of eager suspense elapsed, when Sir Richmond galloping up to the party, congratulated them on their liberation, and dispelled every doubt. "At length," says Lieut. Eyre, "we felt the blessed assurance of freedom; the heavy burden which had oppressed our hearts for nine tedious months was removed; and from that moment we were altered beings. Our pallid countenances were greeted on our side with no boisterous cheers of triumph, for all seemed alike conscious that the utterance of such sounds would but imply express the deep feelings of gratitude, that agitated our inmost hearts. Our joy was too great, too overwhelming, for the tongue to utter, as it is for my feeble pen to describe. That we should have escaped unhurt, with so many delicate women, young children, and tender infants, through such numerous perils, fatigues, and privations, and to have all, from the hands of such merciless enemies as Akbar Khan and his Giljey confederates, seemed at first too much for the senses to realize; nor could even the most thoughtless among us fail to recognize and acknowledge, in all that had befell us, the distinguishing grace and protecting providence of a forbearing and merciful God."

As Mahomed Akbar was still at large with many of his powerful chieftains, it seemed probable that he would make an effort to recover his lost prisoners. Sir Richmond therefore lost no time in forwarding a request to General Pollock that troops might be sent to their aid. On the 18th and 19th May they continued their march, and at night obtained information that a hostile chief with a thousand followers had reached Kaloe to intercept their flight, a short time after their departure. At early dawn on the 20th September, they started for Argandee, distant twenty-five miles, where they had every hope of meeting a British force. They had not proceeded far when a horseman arrived with a note to say that General Sale was close at hand with his Brigade. A party of Sulan Jan's men were in the neighbourhood, and some Kokhees were driven off by the Jemzilees, so that as Lady Sale observes, "had they not received assistance their reapture was certain; but as it was, they dared not attack the force they saw. It is impossible to express our feelings on Sale's approach. To my daughter and myself, happiness so long delayed, as to be almost unperceived, was actually painful, and accompanied by a choking sensation, which could not obtain the relief of tears. When we arrived where the infantry were posted, they cheered all the captives as they passed them; and the men of the 18th presented forward to welcome us individually. Most of the men had a little word of hearty congratulation to each in his own style, on the restoration of his Colonel's wife and daughter; and then my highly-wrought feelings found the desired relief; and I could scarcely speak to thank the soldiers for their sympathy, whilst the long withheld tears now found their course. On arriving at the camp, Capt. Dackhouse fired a royal salute from his mountain train gun; and not only our old friends, but all the officers in the party, came to offer congratulations, and welcome our return from captivity."

We close this protracted review with Lieut. Eyre's remarks on this scene, than which nothing more striking, more romantic, more thrilling is to be found in all the works of fiction. "All doubt was now at an end; we were more under the safeguard of British troops; General Sale was there in person; and his happiness at regaining his long lost wife and daughter can be imagined; the gallant veteran's countenance was an index of his feelings, and apathetic indeed must have been the heart that failed to sympathize with his holy joy. The camp was still a few miles further on, and we formed a procession of glad spirits as we moved along towards the pass of Sagfed-Kot, whose heights we could discern crowned with British banners. These we found to be a part of the brave 13th Light Infantry, who, as the ladies successively ascended the hill, raised three hearty cheers to each of them;—sounds never to be forgotten, producing a thrill of ecstasy through the whole frame. The Mountain guns, under Capt. Dackhouse, wound up the scene with a royal salute. Ferment was our expressions of praise to Heaven at this happy, and of late unlooked for, termination of all our hardships and anxieties. Surely never had the hand of Providence been more clearly discernible, than in the wonderful preservation of so many ladies and children, through scenes of a nature to quail the stoutest heart and injure the strongest constitution; but more particularly in restraining the wrath of savage men, whose intense hatred of us was only equalled by their unscrupulous cruelty, and who longed to wreak their revenge upon us for the wrongs, whether real or fancied, that they had suffered at the hands of our nation."

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JULY 6.

— Last night's Gazette publishes an official despatch from Sir Charles Napier, relative to the operations of Lieut. Anderson. His Excellency states that Sher Mahomed, finding he could not recruit his troops in Scinde, resolved to draw reinforcements from the mountains of Belodistan. Lieut. Anderson was therefore sent with a steamer and a hundred men to destroy the boats col-board on the right bank for the Beloshoon to cross over into Scinde. This officer had performed his duty in a brilliant manner. Yet on turning to Lieut. Anderson's despatch, we find that he says nothing of having destroyed any boats, but alludes only to an engagement with the Beloshoon who had assembled to the number of 300. They were soon driven away; and the Steamer kept up a splendid fire of grape shot, killing and wounding it is supposed 140, or nearly half the number. One or two such attacks from the ubiquitous steamer, will soon teach the Beloshoon that it is safer to keep to their mountains in the quietude of the Scinde will be an easy work. Here again do we perceive the vast advantage which Government derives from the agency of Steam.

—The President of the United States, reposing special trust and confidence in the abilities and integrity of Mr. James B. Higginson has appointed him Consul of the United States in the Port of Calcutta. The French had already the seat of America in this matter of a Consul. It is singular that Calcutta should for so many years have been the only port of importance in which no foreign nation thought it necessary to appoint a Consul.

—Mr. Montrose, a member of the bar of Calcutta, who has just been appointed one of its Magistrates has, it is said, introduced a novel practice into the Court, which will probably give rise to some observations. It has been the custom hitherto for petitions to be presented in writing to the Magistrate. He has directed that they shall in future be made orally. If Mr. Montrose, were as strong in the Oriental languages as his colleague Mr. Macquiere, the innovation might have been tolerable, though from the peculiar habits of the people, likely to occasion some injustice. But it appears preposterous that all petitions should be addressed by word of mouth to one who does not understand the language.

—The Bengal Bank has just declared a dividend for the last six months at the rate of 14 per cent. per annum.

FRIDAY, JULY 7.

—The Madras papers announce that Col. Burtworth, the Deputy Quarter Master of the Army, has been appointed Governor of the Straits Settlements.

—Mr. A. G. Paterson, the Deputy Secretary of the Union Bank, is about to proceed to Singapore on business connected with that institution. Mr. Calder Stewart acts for him in the mean time at the Bank.

—The Star states on good authority, that Dost Mahomed had obtained the complete ascendancy at Cabul, and that all those chiefs who were at first opposed to him have succumbed. This was to have been expected. There was no party strong enough to oppose him; and it was for the interests of the people to support the only individual who was capable of establishing a strong Government. Candahar is in a state of great distraction. All those who had manifested any good will towards the English, had been plundered, and were about to fly. It has, we fear, fallen ill with that large number of Hindostanee servants who accompanied our army, but having become domesticated, refused to quit their new connections in the country and remained behind.

—The insurrection of Ali Mahomed to the north of Sukkur does not appear likely to be serious. He declares it to be his wish in all things to submit to our Government. He has taken up arms only to oppose the usurpation of his territories by Ali Mord, the British ally, to whom it is said Sir Charles Napier has innocently made over large estates belonging even to those who were friendly to our rule. Ali Mahomed has never interrupted our dawks, which is the first thing he would have done had he been hostilely disposed.

SATURDAY, JULY 8.

—We regret to find the death of the Honorable George Turner, late Acting Colonial Secretary, announced in the Ceylon papers. If we mistake not, this is the gentleman who has been so successful in tracing out the ancient history of that island and of Buddhism, from Pall records.

—There is a report in Calcutta that Lord Ellenborough goes home in the Edgemoor frigate, but it is certain that no one knows any thing of his Lordship's movements; and it is probable that he himself does not know the next move he will take. The intelligence by the next mail will, it is said, decide the point of his continuance or return. It will probably decide nothing. If the Gate and other Preparations, did not drive his Lordship from India, certainly the conquest of Scinde will not. His Lordship reached Gaspore with his suite on the 1st instant.

—The papers announce the death of Major General Hopper, of the Artillery, at Dum Dum in consequence chiefly of an accident which occurred to him a month ago, and which at his very advanced age proved fatal. The General had been not less than sixty years in the service, having come out during the administration of Warren Hastings. He had attained the age of 70.

—We are most happy to announce that the carriage of the Governor of Madras, which was submerged in going from the ship to the shore, has been fished up. A survey was immediately held thereon,—we suppose for the comfort of the underwriters.

MONDAY, JULY 10.

—The Star states that the Governor General's party reached Singapore on Monday, the 3d instant.

—Singapore papers have been received to the 8th of June. They give us but little intelligence, because there is but little to give. They however mention a report that the Plenipotentiary had been invited to Peking as a more convenient position for the settlement of affairs.

—In two instances within the last week, deaths have been announced in the papers which have not occurred. It is scarcely possible to reproduce so detestable a hoax in too strong language; and we trust that if the miscreants should ever be detected, they will be visited with the utmost severity the law can inflict.

—The Madras Athenaeum says, it is the intention of Mr. Smyth to return to the Bombay Times the amount of damages awarded against him. The Times of course has spirit enough to refuse such an offer with the scorn it deserves. It is stated that Mr. Smyth's object in bringing the action at the end of eighteen months, was a hope that the threat of it would have induced the Editor to give up the author. The Star very properly observes, that to pay the costs as well as to relinquish the damages, would be the proper way of confounding the error into which the prosecutor had been led.

—The Agre Ubbur states, that Dost Mahomed Khan had demanded of Amerecoola all the plunder he had obtained during the war with the English, but that he had refused to give it up. Khan Sher Khan, the head of the Kuzilbashes, had arrived at Calcutta and had an interview with the English, who endeavored to conciliate him, but he had returned to the hills. Mahomed Akbar Khan was busy in rebuilding Jellalabad, and settling the country.

—The British Resident at Gwalior left that place on the 10th. The Deputy Viceroy, who accompanied him from the Durbar, was not permitted to cross the Ghimlil. The Resident dismissed him. It is now confidently affirmed, that the Resident was not expelled by the Umper; but that the Rane on the contrary used every effort to retain him. "Then why did he leave the Court?" The residence of our Envoy at the Native Courts should be regulated by the same rules which prevail in Europe. His departure should be the signal for a war, and he should not depart till his Government is prepared to enter on hostilities.

—The Delhi Gazette states, that Mr. G. Thompson was to remain at Delhi two months and that a thousand Rupees had been laid out in putting a house in order for him. It is affirmed, though on what authority we know not, that the members of the Imperial family have been called to contribute to the embassy, and have reluctantly paid 7,000 Rupees.

—The Herbura states that the office of the Principal Clerk of the Bengal Presidency has become vacant by the death of the incumbent, and that it is the intention of Government, to reduce the salary from 500 Rupees a month to 300. We copy an article on the subject from the Herbura, who recommends that the whole system of Criminal law should be altered. Why, it was for this very object that the Law Commission was constituted; and the only attempt it made at legislation was the production of a Criminal Code, which shared the edict attached in this country to its chief contributor, and has never been noticed since it was printed and reviewed six years ago. We want an entirely new Code of Criminal Law; but if Government could not obtain one that it would adopt, even at an expense of ten lakhs of Rupees, how and we ever hope for one!

—The Bombay Times in noticing that rumours have been abroad for some time that Sir Henry Pottinger was labouring under disease which would shortly constrain him to leave his post, states that the very last letters from him make no mention whatever of any such complaint.

TUESDAY, JULY 11.

—The four Steamers, with four other vessels in tow, having on board the Governor General and his suite, were at Mongrion on the 8th, and are expected this day at Barmahore, where every preparation has been made for his Lordship's reception.

—Another case of libel has just been tried at Bombay. Some time last year the Eleonor, Captain Holderness, ran ashore at Altoppe and was burnt. Capt. Johnson of the Troy, who was in the roadstead at the time, was publicly charged by Captain Holderness with having neglected to afford him any assistance. Capt. Johnson in his own defence published a letter in the Herbura, stating that he went on board the Eleonor when she was aground, but found that he was not wanted, and returned to his own vessel. In that letter he intimated that the Eleonor had been run ashore and set on fire designedly, to defraud the Insurance offices. The Court found the libel proved, and awarded damages to the extent of 1000 Rupees.

—The accounts from Gwalior extend to the 24th of June. We have copied an article from the Agre Ubbur, which depicts the miserable condition to which the Christians in the Gwalior army have been reduced. We cannot however believe that the Umper has been so insane as to advise the Pindarah chiefs to pillage the countries subordinate to the British Government, and to station troops on the Ghimlil to oppose the advance of any English army. One single act of unequivocal hostility to the British Government, and his usurpation is at an end.

—The Madras Times was to have commenced business on the 1st of the present month. We perceive that some of the Bombay papers have charged it on the misconduct of the Bengal Government that it did not open earlier. The unavoidable cause of delay, as we have stated, was the absence of the Governor General from the Legislative Council.

—The Madras United Service Gazette states that Col. Smith of the 2d Cavalry killed no fewer than eleven tigers on his way from Kanchipur to Semmurai.

—The Agre Ubbur publishes intelligence from Scinde, which leads to the impression that the case of Sher Mahomed is desperate, and that our troops will not be much longer kept out in tents at no incommensurate season, exposed at once to insupportable heat, and dreadfully inundation. It is said that on the report of Col. Roberts' force being in his rear, Sher Mahomed resolved to attack it, but several of his adherents falling off, he was obliged to "run for it." He had only 5 or 600 men with him, and it is supposed that the Mass of his right will from the mouth of Capt. Jacob's sword and this may lead to his apprehension.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 12.

—The City of Madras is agitated by two events; the commercial community by the election, through the public influence, is said of Mr. S. D. Birch, an attorney to the new Chamber of Bank of Madras, which has been set on going at last. The bar is indignant at the appointment of Mr. Seela, as Registrar, by the Chief Justice Sir Edward Gannab; and some very stringent resolutions have been adopted. The matter will lead to an open schism between the bench and the bar. The Attorney General made some observations about a criminal indictment. The Chief Justice told him to adopt what course he chose, and in reply to some other observations which had been made said that the bench could maintain its own dignity and respectability without the aid of the bar. This announcement caused some laughter among the gentlemen of the bar.

—The following is the latest account of the progress of the Governor General.

9th July.—The Governor General reached Madras last night on the morning of the 9th inst. at Behampore, and like a good Christian attended church. A salute of 19 guns notified his presence in the Cantonments, and this evening his Lordship conferred with the Commander-in-Chief, his Staff, and the Civilian. To-morrow he will retrace his steps on a visit to the Nawab Nizam, who has invited the whole gentlemen of the station of Behampore to meet him at dinner. Rumour says it is his Lordship's wish to establish once more an European Regiment here—and for that purpose he intends visiting the Barracks having directed the Executive Officer and the Station Staff to be in attendance. Better Barracks India does not boast, and in spite of prejudices, the station itself is delightful. His Lordship leaves us for Calcutta on Tuesday morning. You shall hear further from me about the city.—Eng.

His Lordship reached Barrackpore at four o'clock this evening. He was saluted first from the Danial battery in the morning, and on leaving the Barrackpore by the artillery brought up from Dume-Dum for the occasion.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following names for the Friend of India:—

Jas. Campbell, Esq.	...	to June, 1884,	30
L. Scigler, Esq.	...	to Dec. 1883,	10
J. Curran, Esq.	...	to July, 1884,	20
J. T. Brown, Esq.	...	to Dec. 1883,	10
Baboo Srinath Mokherjee	...	to June, 1884,	10
Chandrasekhar Bose,	...	to Oct. 1883,	10
Sooroo Basu,	...	to Dec. 1883,	10
Bahadur Kaleschunder Roy,	...	to July, 1884,	5

The following sums have been received at Madras, by Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co. from April to June, 1884:—

J. D. Burdett, Esq.	...	to April, 1884,	20
The Bangalore Horse Artillery	...	to Dec. 1883,	20
Meas.	...	to Dec. 1883,	20
Capt. C. F. Le Hardy,	...	to Dec. 1883,	20
The Meas of the 11th Regt.	...	to Jan. 1884,	20
N. L.	...	to March, 1884,	6
Capt. J. V. Hughes,	...	to July, 1884,	24
Capt. F. Dimes,	...	to Dec. 1883,	20
Genl. Col. G. Fryer,	...	to Dec. 1883,	20
T. J. W. Thomas, Esq.	...	to Dec. 1883,	20
The Meas of the 1st Regt. Madras	...	to Feb. 1884,	20
Light Cavalry,	...	to Dec. 1883,	20
Dr. C. Thomson,	...	to Dec. 1883,	20
Rev. C. Campbell,	...	ditto,	20
B. Baumaner Man,	...	to June, 1884,	20
Capt. T. P. Ward,	...	to April, 1884,	20
J. Goldingham, Esq.	...	to Dec. 1883,	20
H. B. Rathford, Esq.	...	ditto,	20

IN THE FRIEND OF INDIA, of the 29th April last, for R. Clarke, Esq., to Sept. 1883, and R. Clarke, Esq., to Dec. 1883, Rs. 20.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

PROPOSITION OF DAROGAS.

From Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Secretaries of Police, Local Government, and the Commissioners of Outland, Assam, Arakan, and the Tenasserim Provinces, &c. dated Fort William, 18th May, 1884.

1. I am directed to forward for your information the accompanying copies of correspondence:

noted in the Margin,* relating to a proposition emanating from the Government of Bengal and sanctioned by the Supreme Government for improving the character and efficiency of the Police in this Presidency by holding out incentives to emulation among them of the higher grades.

2. You will observe that no Thannah Darogah is to receive less than 25 Rupees salary per mensem, and it is therefore requisite that you should in the first place cause the preparation of a statement showing how many officers of that grade in the districts under you are in receipt of monthly allowances below Rupees 25. This statement should be forwarded to this office without delay, in order that the necessary information may be communicated to the office of audit and account to pass the increase in the bills of Establishment, commencing from the 1st proxima.

3. With regard to the three higher grades of Darogahs who are to receive salaries of Rs. 50, Rs. 75, and Rs. 100, respectively, you are requested, after making the most careful enquiries concerning those with whose character you are not personally acquainted, and with the strictest regard to merit and faithful service, to submit a list of those whom you recommend for promotion to the higher ranks, specifying the degree which in your opinion each one deserves to obtain.

4. It is not intended that the full complement of those who are to be promoted to the higher ranks should be made with perfect equality in the several districts, much being impossible in a scheme where qualifications in the form of advancement. But it will be advisable as far as it can be done without occasioning too many removals and consequent detriment to the public service, to distribute the officers, so that there may be at least one or two of the three first classes in each district. Accordingly where some of the local Police are by merit entitled to promotion, you are recommended to transfer more deserving officers thereto, avoiding, if possible, to send the latter to places less desirable than those they have hitherto served in.

5. Considering how important it will be to mark whether the advantages now held out will produce the benefits contemplated, the Honourable the Deputy Governor of Bengal requests you will report concisely the case of every Darogah elected for promotion under this order, as well as of those who may hereafter be disqualified for misconduct, and the consideration and orders of Government.

6. This measure for the improvement of the Police of Bengal being experimental, His Honour the Deputy Governor requests that you will also report concisely the case of every Darogah elected for promotion under this order, as well as of those who may hereafter be disqualified for misconduct, and the consideration and orders of Government.

(Signed) A. TERNETT,
Under Secy. to the Govt. of Bengal.
No. 754.

From F. J. Halliday, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to T. R. Davidson, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Home Department, dated Fort William, 17th May, 1884.

1. With reference to the communication from your office, No. 12, of 17th Feb. last, in reply to mine of the 8th Idem, No. 210, sanctioning the re-creation of a Division by the Government of the Punjab of the Magistrate's Court of Tipperah, for meritorious exertions towards the conviction of certain heinous offenders, I am directed by the Government of Bengal to request you to transmit for the purpose of being laid before the Honourable the President in Council, the accompanying letter in original from the Superintendent of Police, No. 647, of 1st March last, recommending the bestowal of similar rewards on two Police Darogahs, who have for a considerable period distinguished themselves by their successful exertions in the duties of their situations.

2. It has not appeared to the Deputy Governor advisable to support Mr. Dampier's recommendation in its particular instance; but that Officer's remark on his inability to bestow any reward on deserving Officers of this class, and thus encourage them to persevere and stimulate others to follow their example, seems to His Honour view of it of great consideration.

3. It is needless to occupy the time of His Honour in Council with the numerous quotations which * Letter to Officiating Secretary to Government of India, dated 29th May, 1884, No. 754, dated 17th May, 1884.
* Letter to Officiating Secretary to Government of India, dated 29th May, 1884, No. 754, dated 17th May, 1884.

might be adduced to show the extent and force of opinion which have prevailed among the most experienced persons in the country regarding the importance of the Police, and the high rank or Thannah Darogah compared with the services rendered by him and the power with which he is invested. The Report of the late Police Committee is sufficient on this point. Not only however is his total pay inadequate for his remuneration, but his lot and prospect of any advancement or promotion to which he might look for the reward of peculiar exertions, is almost entirely wanting. The almost universal corruption among Officers of this class; the distrust which they are regarded by their European Superiors; and the apprehension of what they excite, instead of a sense of Security in the minds of the people they are appointed to protect.

4. It is, His Honour firmly believes, vain to expect improvement of Police while these are the most important functions are under the influence of so impolitic and demoralizing a system; and though a general improvement of their position in respect of salary long dues admitted to be necessary, must unavoidably avail a mere raising state of the general finances, it may nevertheless be possible without any serious addition to expenditure to improve the position of Police in all events to place before the functionaries a question some incentive however inconsiderable, to activity and industry. Some reward, though less than may be entirely sufficient, for praiseworthy and successful exertion.

5. For this purpose, it has occurred to the Deputy Governor, that the Supreme Government should not be unwilling to propose to the Government of Bengal a prospect of gradual increase of salary on the ground of merit and services alone rising from Rs. 4 a month, the ordinary salary now given, to 50; thence to 75; and thence in rarer cases to 100.

6. It might be supposed as a restriction upon the expense which this measure would entail, that the number of Darogahs promoted to each grade should never exceed a certain proportion of their whole number; and the promotions being made to expenditure, it would be necessary to make it not be necessary or indeed likely, that the full proportion allowed should receive the higher allowances. For instance, there are now altogether 208 Thannah Darogahs, of whom I draw 100 Rs. monthly; 2, Rs. 50; 1, Rs. 45; 2, Rs. 40; 3, Rs. 35; 3, Rs. 31-5-7; 1, Rs. 21-5-8; 1, Rs. 20; 20, Rs. 19; 30, Rs. 18; 10, Rs. 17; 7, Rs. 13. Their total allowances amount to Rs. 1,00,000, per annum, allowing twenty-five of these Darogahs to receive 100 Rs. per mensem, fifty to receive 75 Rs., and the remainder of three hundred and thirty-three to receive Rs. 25, a possible increase of expense would be incurred to the extent of about 75,000 Rupees annually, but the increase would not actually or at least not for a long time come up to that maximum and thus a commencement would be made at comparatively but little expense to supply those incentives to good conduct in the Police without which any improvement in the existing system has been found to be utterly unattainable.

7. The Deputy Governor directs me to express his anxious hope that this measure for the improvement of the Mofussil Police, so important to the welfare of the community may receive the favourable consideration of the Supreme Government of India.

8. You are requested to return the original enclosure which is no longer required.
(Signed) F. J. HALLIDAY,
Secy. to Govt. of Bengal.
No. 80.

From T. R. Davidson, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, to F. J. Halliday, Esq., Secretary to Government of Bengal, dated the 18th May, 1884.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge your letter No. 754, dated the 17th instant, conveying a proposition from the Honourable the Deputy Governor of Bengal, to the effect of proposing to increase the salaries of a certain number of Darogahs according to their merits, and in reply to communicate the entire concurrence of the Secretary to Government of India in recommending their adoption and to authorize its immediate introduction in the manner contemplated by the Honourable the Deputy Governor.

2. I am also directed to observe that the Honourable the President in Council, while admitting the inadequacy of the existing rate of pay of Darogahs and the necessity for raising it, was not so far as possible to make any recommendation among this class of Police Officers, by rendering their remuneration equal to their dearest superiors in the Police, in respect of the rate of pay of promotion, is very desirous, that the principle of the arrangement should be carried

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 446. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, JULY 20th. 1845.

[Price 3 Cds. Rs. monthly, or 30 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.]

OVERLAND MAIL.

THE Bombay Government having fixed on the 20th of August, for the despatch of the West Mail Steamer of September, notice is hereby given, that the latest safe date for the transmission of letters from Calcutta, which may be delivered for that opportunity, will be Saturday, the 12th inst.

Wm. MOORE,
Deputy Post Master.

General Post Office, July 10th, 1845.

THE JOHN MAIL arrived on Monday evening in forty-one days from London. It can scarcely be pronounced barren, when it announces events which so deeply affect our own native land, as the accession of four hundred and forty Ministers from the Church of Scotland; the first has rendered it an object of ministerial anxiety, decisive stand made against the progress of the London Mail does not tell us; it only states Puseyism; and the alarming progress of Repeal, that large bodies of men, to the number of 150,000 agitation in Ireland. In Scotland the event which and 500,000 had assembled to hear O'Connell's has been long anticipated with so much anxiety, harangues on Repeal. Sir C. O'Loghlin, and has at length occurred. The Ministers who have adhered to the Veto, exceeding four hundred in number, have seceded from the establishment. On the 18th of May, when the General Assembly had been constituted, a protest on their part was read by Dr. Welsh, after which they rose and walked out of the Assembly, which proceeded immediately to rescind their resolutions, and undo all they have been doing for seven years. The seceders proceeded to the Church of St. Andrew, and there constituted themselves the Free Protestant Church of Scotland. They have formed themselves into being them within the statute of treason, and as organized body, and raised subscriptions for the secession of other churches, and for their own resistance necessary. It is stated that all the funds support. The subscriptions amount according to the last account to 244,000£ and have been expended shortly to reach 2900,000. A very that ten steamers are to be sent to the Coast, and large portion of their congregations still continue that the army is to be increased to the extent to adhere to them, and though the vacancies of 10,000 men. Meanwhile all the Justices of which have thus been created will shortly be filled up, and the established Church may appear to have lost none of its integrity, it is evident that it will henceforth be able to reckon but a small minority of the people in its communion. In the present distracted state of England, it is difficult to say what may be the effect of this top or its religious state and prospects; but it is scarcely possible that a measure of such magnitude, grounded as it is on principle, however mistakes, and not on passion, should fail, sooner or later, to exercise a powerful influence on its neighbour.

Dr. Pusey has been suspended from his functions in the University for two years, in consequence of a sermon preached at Oxford, in which the Roman Catholic doctrines of transubstantiation, and of the sacrifice of the Mass for the remission of sins, were distinctly and unequivocally maintained. A "Board of Hierarchy" was immediately appointed to examine the sermon, and the result was the suspension of the Doctor, against which he has entered his protest. This decision very shews that there is still some spirit left in the University; and that its leading authorities are not so flattered with the favour of Transubstantiation, to the extent which some have affirmed. Why do not the Puseyites imitate the noble example set them by the Scottish seceders, and throw up their Protestant livings? Has Dr. Pusey less courage than Dr. Chalmers?

The condition of Ireland is appalling. Mr. O'Connell has for some time past devoted his time and energy to the promotion of Repeal agitation. He has succeeded so completely in inflaming the public mind, that the Ministry have felt it necessary to adopt the most vigorous measures to prevent the threatened dissemination of the empire. The declaration against Repeal made by King William in 1834, has been repeated by Queen Victoria, through her accredited ministers, and men of all parties, and of every shade of political opinion seem determined to stand by the Union. Of the precise form which the agitation has taken, and which ministers from the Church of Scotland; the first has rendered it an object of ministerial anxiety, decisive stand made against the progress of the London Mail does not tell us; it only states Puseyism; and the alarming progress of Repeal, that large bodies of men, to the number of 150,000 agitation in Ireland. In Scotland the event which and 500,000 had assembled to hear O'Connell's has been long anticipated with so much anxiety, harangues on Repeal. Sir C. O'Loghlin, and has at length occurred. The Ministers who have adhered to the Veto, exceeding four hundred in number, have seceded from the establishment. On the 18th of May, when the General Assembly had been constituted, a protest on their part was read by Dr. Welsh, after which they rose and walked out of the Assembly, which proceeded immediately to rescind their resolutions, and undo all they have been doing for seven years. The seceders proceeded to the Church of St. Andrew, and there constituted themselves the Free Protestant Church of Scotland. They have formed themselves into being them within the statute of treason, and as organized body, and raised subscriptions for the secession of other churches, and for their own resistance necessary. It is stated that all the funds support. The subscriptions amount according to the last account to 244,000£ and have been expended shortly to reach 2900,000. A very that ten steamers are to be sent to the Coast, and large portion of their congregations still continue that the army is to be increased to the extent to adhere to them, and though the vacancies of 10,000 men. Meanwhile all the Justices of which have thus been created will shortly be filled up, and the established Church may appear to have lost none of its integrity, it is evident that it will henceforth be able to reckon but a small minority of the people in its communion. In the present distracted state of England, it is difficult to say what may be the effect of this top or its religious state and prospects; but it is scarcely possible that a measure of such magnitude, grounded as it is on principle, however mistakes, and not on passion, should fail, sooner or later, to exercise a powerful influence on its neighbour.

The Repealers cannot of course long continue to the Church of St. Andrew, and there constituted themselves the Free Protestant Church of Scotland. They have formed themselves into being them within the statute of treason, and as organized body, and raised subscriptions for the secession of other churches, and for their own resistance necessary. It is stated that all the funds support. The subscriptions amount according to the last account to 244,000£ and have been expended shortly to reach 2900,000. A very that ten steamers are to be sent to the Coast, and large portion of their congregations still continue that the army is to be increased to the extent to adhere to them, and though the vacancies of 10,000 men. Meanwhile all the Justices of which have thus been created will shortly be filled up, and the established Church may appear to have lost none of its integrity, it is evident that it will henceforth be able to reckon but a small minority of the people in its communion. In the present distracted state of England, it is difficult to say what may be the effect of this top or its religious state and prospects; but it is scarcely possible that a measure of such magnitude, grounded as it is on principle, however mistakes, and not on passion, should fail, sooner or later, to exercise a powerful influence on its neighbour.

Whatever vigor of resolution, and energy of action can accomplish in putting down this seditious movement, will not be wanting. Still it is fearful to reflect on the horrors which must attend a civil war. Nothing assuredly could justify this resort to arms but the certainty that to grant this unreasonable demand and repeal the Union, would be equally fatal to the honour, the peace and happiness of both countries. Repeal the union! said George Canning; Revive the Hierarchy!

Indian affairs have not occupied much of the attention of the country, or of Parliament. We cannot always expect to have the Gasettes to ourselves. There was in fact no prominent event to fix public attention, beyond the occupation of Scinde, and the valour of the troops under Sir Charles Napier. It does not appear likely from the tenor of the papers before us that any particular notice will be taken of the conquest of Scinde. The Editors of the public journals will soon be reconciled to it, when they come to calculate the advantages of having obtained the province. After paying a few compliments to the victors of political moderation, and denouncing, as they have done for the last seventy years, all ambitious aggrandizement in India, they will dismiss the subject with a hope that the blessings of our administration will more than cover the inequality of the acquisition. We think that if any friend of Lord Ellenborough has been supposing that the present mail would bring so severe a remonstrance from his friends in the Ministry, as to induce his Lordship to relinquish the Government, he will find himself mistaken.—The Mail announces that Mr. W. W. Bird's period of service in Council has been extended for another year; and that Mr. Frederick Millett has been nominated provisional Member of Council, both which arrangements will meet with general approbation. It also announces the death of the President of the Board of Control, Lord Fitzgerald and Vesce; and the appointment of the Earl of Ripon, formerly known as Mr. Prosperity Robinson, to succeed him.

The Mail has not a word about the Educational clauses of the Factory Bill, farther than that the Methodist body object as much to the amended, as to the original Bill. We must wait for our regular files for particulars, but there can be little doubt that it has been consigned to the tomb of the Capulets. The only other item of intelligence worthy of particular notice, is the fact that there had been a serious misunderstanding between the Corn Law Conservatives and the Ministry, touching the admission of American wheat, when grown in Canada, as a fixed duty of 4 shillings, which is in fact to admit American corn, by a round about journey into England, at a low duty. The Ministry were firm, and offered to go out—and of course to let in the Opposition—if they were not supported. This soon brought the country gentlemen to their senses, which they are not likely to lose again for some time, for Sir Robert Peel can always work effectually on their fears by alluding to the Whigs, just as the nurse controls a forward child by frightening him with a "bugaboo."

THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL.—On Thursday morning, Lord Ellenborough left Barrackpore for Calcutta, where he resumed his seat in Council, re-appointed Mr. Bird whose functions had ceased on his Lordship's return, to the Government of Bengal, and on Friday evening came back to his country seat at Barrackpore.

For those who may happen to be unacquainted with the internal economy of our Government, we would mention that though the 69th Section of the last Charter Act allows the Governor General to appoint a Deputy Governor of Bengal as often as the exigencies of the public service require it, it has been usual for his Lordship when at the Presidency to exercise the office of Governor himself, and that a separate Governor has in no instance been appointed, except when the Governor General has quitted Calcutta for another Presidency. Lord Ellenborough has broken through this rule, and appointed the administration of Bengal from the office of Governor General, and appointed Mr. Bird to preside over it. We believe it will be generally felt that the present measure is one of the wisest his Lordship has adopted, not merely in reference to the individual on whom his choice has fallen, but to the general interests of the community.

Bengal includes, according to the most authentic accounts, thirty seven millions and a half of people, a larger population than that of France. The revenues of the Presidency are greater than those of Spain and Portugal united. It will be at once perceived that the management of a country so populous and so wealthy, ought to be entrusted to a separate administration, and should not be united with another office, the duties of which are as great as a single individual can get through. But we need not travel to Europe to illustrate the propriety of the present measure. The most satisfactory proof of its wisdom will be found in India itself, by a reference to Madras and Bombay. Madras is said to contain a population of thirteen millions and a half; Bombay, of six millions and a half; in all, twenty millions. The Presidency of the Lower Provinces comprises a population of nearly double that number. The revenues of Bengal, in the four articles of land tax, opium, salt and customs, are fifty per cent more than the united revenues of the two minor—rather sister—Presidencies. Each of these Presidencies however enjoys a separate Governor and a separate Council, exonerated from all political responsibility, with little else to attend to beyond the internal administration of the country. If two Governors and two Councils are found necessary for the administration of those Presidencies, how much more necessary is it for the Presidency of Bengal to possess at least a distinct administration, instead of being mixed up with the general government of the empire, and placed under the immediate control of the Governor General. It is impossible for him to do justice to the general interests of the country, and to the particular interests of this province. It is physically impossible for one man to manage the vast relations of an Empire as extensive as that of Rome, and at the same time to find sufficient leisure for the various questions connected with the Civil and Criminal administration, the management of the Land revenue, the Stamps, the Customs, the Post Office, the Alakars, the internal and external Steam establishment and the Education, of the Province of Bengal.

It was one of the most unwise provisions of the last Charter, which invested the Governor General with larger powers than his predecessors had exercised, and gave him a general control over all the Presidencies, and at the same time encumbered him with the internal management of the largest of its provinces. It was unjust equally to the empire at large and to the Lower provinces in particular to impose such incompatible duties on the same individual. It was ridiculous to call on the Governor General of India, in his capacity of Governor of Bengal, to decide on an estimate for the repairs of a catfish, or the appointment of a Sudder Ameen, or the supply of a Thannah with the Bengalee Government Gazette, while his attention was required for the more important questions connected with the political relations of the Empire. The framers of that act however inserted a clause by which the Governor General was empowered to correct this anomaly, and to appoint a Deputy Governor of Bengal, when the exigencies of the public service required it, and Lord Ellenborough has had the wisdom and courage to avail himself of the permission. The Hurshur enquires, where is the exigency? Look around, east, west, north and south, survey the province of Bengal from Buxar to Bandoway and from Sadiya to Chota Nagpore, count its population, and estimate its revenue, and then say whether the diversified, and weighty interests of such a province do not demand a distinct administration. The exigency has always existed; it has often been acknowledged, and it is now made the groundwork of a new and salutary provision. Through this extensive and populous region it is necessary not only to check the growth of abuses, to ensure the punctual and honest discharge of duties; but to provide for a progressive improvement in every branch of the administration; and the social and moral elevation of its inhabitants. Is it possible for the Governor General with his imperial responsibilities to devote that attention to a single province which shall secure these results?

The present measure shows that experience is not lost on Lord Ellenborough. Had Mr. Bird been distracted with other cares while engaged in the Government of Bengal, he would have had little leisure to digest those measures of improvement which have rendered his administration so beneficial. But Lord Ellenborough took charge of the Empire, while he left Bengal to Mr. Bird, and the result has been such as to point out the wisdom of the arrangement and to recommend its being prolonged. Who will venture to say that it would have been wiser in Lord Ellenborough to have consigned Mr. Bird to the comparative inactivity of the Council Chamber, and encumbered himself with all the details of the public administration in this single province? So far therefore from considering the appointment of a separate Governor unnecessary, we are rather inclined to hope that the arrangement will be made perpetual, and that the province will never again be left without a distinct and independent Government.

THE UNION BANK.—The Half yearly meeting of the Union Bank was held on Saturday last, the 15th. Instant. It was a stormy and protracted meeting, and left the main points for which it had been made special, to be discussed on a subsequent day. A statement of the accounts was laid before the Shareholders, from which it appeared that its total assets amounted to Rs. 1,48,77,344; and its liabilities, including the Capital stock, to 1,42,85,542 Rs. leaving an apparent surplus or profit of 6,91,801 Rs., on which it was resolved to declare a dividend of Eight Per Cent.

In the course of the discussions Mr. Clark alluded to the singular circumstance, that while the Bank had been subject to an actual loss of only three or four lakhs of Rupees by recent failures, its stock should have fallen thirty per cent. But the mystery is easily explained. The Bank is mixed up with so many transactions of a doubtful and dangerous character, from which it can scarcely be extricated without loss, except by a miracle, that the public look at the future with a feeling of dread; and are anxious to avoid being involved in indefinite obligations. Neither has the management of the Bank been such as to secure public confidence; and the determination to maintain the system which has worked well for the few, and ill for the many, has served to perpetuate mistrust. The direction of its affairs has been monopolized by a few Agency Houses in Calcutta, who seem to have had a kind of "standing" seat in the Direction, one member of the firm going out by rotation and another member taking his place. Every effort to break up this system, by which "An Amurrah an Amurrah succeeds," has been defeated. Under this close borough system, the funds of the Bank have been diverted from banking transactions, and devoted to the assistance of agricultural speculations; to that same species of speculation which drove the great Houses into the Insolvent Court, and reduced thousands to beggary. Of its capital of a hundred lakhs, sixty-three lakhs are thus scattered over the country, with little other security, except the favour of the seasons. Is it any wonder that the public should feel little confidence in such a concern? It is generally understood that the advances thus made, have been confined to six, seven or eight houses; and that the great bulk of the capital has been absorbed in advances to these firms. It is true that this system of advances has been effectually checked, partly from the strong expression of public feeling on the subject, which these discussions have elicited, and partly from the circumstance of the Bank's having no more money to lend; but "confidence is a plant of slow growth," and where it has been so seriously impaired, it will require a long period of good management to restore it.

Mr. Clarke has endeavored to limit the advances for the management of factories to a given sum; but any positive limitation may do more harm than good. Factories become valueless unless they are worked, and the suspension of all assistance may lead to a large sacrifice of capital. What appears to be wanted is the recognition of the sound principle that advances on agricultural enterprises are no part of the legitimate business of the Union Bank. This must be supported by the firmest determination to get out of the scrape as rapidly as possible, and never to get into it again. Mr. Turton's resolutions go far to destroy the pernicious system which has so deeply affected the character and prospects of the Bank; but they do not go quite deep enough. The system must be entirely extirpated; there must not be a single fibre of the root left for future vegetation. If any opening be allowed for such advances, there is reason to fear that, even under the most stringent restriction, it will be enlarged and improved. If any exception whatever be allowed, it will become the rule. As soon as the Bank has collected all the funds which are now in jeopardy in factories and mills, let its exertions be strictly confined to Banking transactions in Calcutta. If it has not sufficient employment for all its capital, let the idle portion of it be restored to the proprietors, to do what they will with it. It is true the Bank will thus shrink into narrower dimensions than it has hitherto occupied. It will no longer be the rival of the Chartered Bank; it will no longer be able to keep shoulder to shoulder with it in the matter of dividends; but it will become a much more useful establishment; and whatever it loses in dignity will be gained in safety. Those who are partial to agricultural enterprises, and think sugar and indigo and silk speculations safe and profitable, may then form a new association and establish an Agricultural Bank, and lend away their money to their heart's content.

Of the two propositions which are to be considered next Saturday, the one is that the Bank be empowered to buy its own shares, of course with the greatest discretion. Now the Bank consists of the proprietors; and if the proposal be carried, one portion of the proprietors will pur-close up, at par, the shares of other proprietors. It is reported that few of the shareholders of the Bank are anxious to buy any more shares, and that many would be happy to be relieved from those they already possess. By the proposed rule, the Directors would be empowered to do that on behalf of the proprietors which the proprietors would by no means consider it advisable to do themselves. The proprietors would in fact be doing that federally, which they would consider it unwise to do individually.—The other proposal refers to the proxies of absent members, which if carried, would throw a larger and more exclusive power into the hands of certain individuals and firms. Considering that their influence is already too great, and of very doubtful utility, nothing would be so likely to annihilate public confidence, as this injudicious increase of it.—But the June Mail is this month in, and there must be a truce with all parish business.

We have been obliged to omit the statement of the Bank accounts to make room for English news. As it is an important record, we shall give it a place next week. The letter from A. Calcutta Agent, we cannot venture to publish. A keen lawyer would find little difficulty in extracting from it the materials for a prosecution.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The last arrival from China brings intelligence that the Sandwich Islands have been provisionally ceded by His Majesty Ka-meha-meha the III., to Queen Victoria, and that the British flag has been hoisted on that group of Islands. Lord George Paulet, arrived at Honolulu in Her Majesty's Ship Corymbus, on the 11th February last, and demanded a personal interview with the King. The King was absent at the time, but returned on the 17th, and declined the interview. Lord George Paulet then sent him a copy of his demands, with an intimation that if they were not complied with by 4 p. m. the next day, he should immediately take coercive steps to obtain redress for his countrymen; that is to say, blow the towns to pieces. The next morning the King of the Sandwich Islands replied to his Lordship that he had "commissioned Sir George Simpson and William Richards as our ministers plenipotentiary and envoys extraordinary to the Court of Great Britain, with full powers to settle these difficulties and to assure her Majesty the Queen of our uninterrupted affection, and to confer with her Ministers as to the best means of cementing the harmony between us." But, said the king, in the mean time we will comply with your demands. The dispute appeared thus to have been amicably settled, and it was agreed that the Queen's representative should be received with due pomp, by an exchange of salutes. Here the correspondence we have received breaks off rather abruptly. On Saturday, the 25th of February, King Ka-meha-meha, "in consequence of the difficulties in which he found himself involved, and the impossibility of complying with the demands in the manner in which they were made," made a cession of the sovereignty of the Islands, the "life of his land," as he expressed it, to the British Crown; and Lord Paulet, in announcing this provisional cession ordered that the British flag should be hoisted on all the islands of the group, and that the Sandwichers should enjoy the protection and privileges of British subjects.

It is difficult to suppose that Lord George Paulet could have made so peremptory a demand, without the fullest instruction from his masters in England, as to the course he was to pursue, if it was refused. The peremptory character of his communication seems clearly to be connected with a design upon the independence of the Islands. Either, therefore, Her Majesty's Ministers were aware at the time of his departure that the French intended to occupy the Tahitian group, and determined to anticipate them in reference to the Sandwich Islands, or there was a secret understanding between the two Courts that the two groups should be respectively occupied by them. This transaction seems to furnish us with a clue to that feeling of complacency which Sir Robert Peel exhibited, when the French aggression at Tahiti was mooted in the House. He knew well that a British man of war was at that very time on its way to the Pacific on a similar errand, and that a much more important group of Islands was about to become the property of the British Crown, by means equally objectionable. Between the two transactions there is no other difference than the superior value of the prize which we have obtained. In both instances the demand appears to have been made with a view to the result which has happened. In the case of Tahiti, the cession was said to be voluntary; in that of the Sandwich Islands it is called provisional; but the dictates of national ambition will not be long in making it absolute. If we do not denounce this measure with the same vigor with which we denounced the French acquisition, it is only from the fear of repetition; and we beg the reader at once to do us the favour of transferring to this transaction all the reprobation which he will find in our article on Tahiti.

The English, who understand the management of colonial possessions, will probably govern their new islands with more consideration and wisdom than the French are likely to exhibit, and the islanders may probably be more happy under Victoria than they were under Ka-meha-meha the III. or his predecessors, but this will not wash out the original sin of the acquisition. As it regards the result on Missionary operations, it is difficult to speak with any degree of confidence. In this very episcopal age, one of the first measures of the British Government will probably be to send a Bishop to the Sandwich Islands. Now if the assertion of our Puseyite friend, Doctersweil, be correct, that Episcopal clergyman are bound by their ordination vows, utterly to root out and drive away dissent, we fear the Dissenting ministers who have laboured with such zeal and success for the conversion of the Pagan inhabitants of the Sandwich Islands will not fare much better under an Anglican Bishop, than the Missionaries in Tahiti are likely to do under a Catholic Prelate.

The intelligence will probably be received in England with no intense feeling of indignation. The acquisition of territory,—the unavoidable expansion of the Empire,—has always appeared rather a venial crime in the opinion of the English nation. In the case of India, where this principle of expansion has had the freest scope, it has been invariably rebuked with gentleness, and rewarded with munificence. A few patriots, who have ambition, may make some fuss about this matter in Parliament, and there may be some very eloquent speeches delivered on the occasion; but, on the whole, the great advantage of the position we are thus enabled to occupy, which will be made patent by the rage of the French and the envy of the Americans, will contribute to reconcile our magnanimous countrymen to the calamity. The occupation of these Islands by England will moreover prove the salvation of Lord Ellenborough's Scinde Policy. Every argument which the Ministry employ to defend the acquisition of Honolulu, will tell with ten fold strength in favour of that policy, which, after far greater provocations, has secured to the British Crown a much more valuable possession at the estuary of the Indus.

Since these remarks were written, we have received the London Mail. The intelligence we have alluded to had then reached Europe; and the French press had been thrown into a paroxysm of fury. The "Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary" whom His Majesty Ka-meha-meha the III. had sent to Queen Victoria to settle these differences, were at the Court of King Louis Philip, which looks somewhat suspicious. Of one of the Envoys, Sir George Simpson, we hear nothing, but William Richards the other Minister, is said to be accompanied with one Timoteo Hallilo, and they are described as Envoys to the French Court. On hearing of the cession, they protested; "with infinite promptitude," in the Paris papers of Friday the 2d June, against this wanton aggression of England, and threatened her with the consequences. We may therefore expect the next mail to announce the confirmation of the cession.

MR. BLUNDELL.—The Star thinks we have misused the matter of Mr. Blundell's suppression, and that we might have spoken with more decision. The "expriences which can scarcely be distinguished from injuries," our contemporary considers to be absolute and undisputed injustice. We are anxious to set ourselves right with him, and would therefore explain that in the first instance of suppression, not the slightest delinquency was for a moment imputed to Mr. Blundell. The correspondence which passed on the occasion, distinctly shows that the Governor General took advantage of his having applied for furlough in the previous year, to put him on the shelf, and provide for Major Broadfoot. No man will begrudge the Engineer of Jellalabad, the reward of the Commissioner-ship. He has nobly earned his promotion, and we are confident that when sufficiently "warm in harness," he will go on smoothly and rapidly, and make the little settlement a great one. At the same time we cannot but lament that a new and pernicious precedent has been created in order to provide for his elevation, at the expense of Mr. Blundell. Major Broadfoot was justly rewarded. Mr. Blundell was unjustly turned out. But neither the nature nor the object of the transaction could be mistaken.

It is not so with the second suppression. Mr. Blundell's post was not required for Col. Butterworth; and he has not been deposed at Penang on the same ground on which he was deposed at Moulemein. That there exists a strong under-current of prejudice against him, is but too apparent. It is just possible that it may have a just foundation; but it is equally probable that the fault may lie with those who cherish the prejudice. His removal is manifestly a penal measure. His guilt must have been contracted at Moulemein, for he had not time to commit any political sins at Penang before he was removed from his Government. If those delinquencies, which could be expiated only by the extreme penalty of dismissal, were known at the time when he was appointed to a post of such high responsibility, Government cannot be excused from a dereliction of duty towards the people of the Straits in placing them under one so unfit to govern them. If his transgressions were discovered after his departure, Government appears to have acted unjustly to him, by inflicting punishment before he could be heard in his defence. But in our present ignorance of the circumstances of this case we did not feel ourselves at liberty to speak with the same boldness as in the previous case. It is true that his friends have been unable to discover any other cause for the wrath of Government except the energetic measures he adopted to resist Burmese encroachments. But to suppose that a strong government like this, which has humbled the Dragon throne on the east, and punished obstinacy in Scinde by the forfeiture of a kingdom, should pursue a public servant after he had joined a new appointment, for having shown something of the same vigor in a subordinate post, appears incredible. We confess that the conduct as well as the motives of the Supreme Government on this occasion, are inscrutable. But we have so frequently erred in our estimate of the measures of Government, and have so often seen cause to withdraw the charge of caprice and injuries after it had been made, that we are anxious to guard against a hasty and erroneous judgment.

OBSEVATIONS ON THE JOURNALS RELATIVE TO THE DISASTERS IN AFGHANISTAN.—Our last review of the Journals of Lady Sale and Lieut. Eyre and Melville on the Cabul tragedy made so large a demand on our space, and on the reader's patience, that we were constrained to postpone our concluding observations to the present week.

These publications, while they afford so valuable materials for the history of that disastrous campaign, have by no means exhausted the subject. We have yet a number of circumstances to learn before we are enabled to form a correct opinion of those remarkable events. The journals of Lieut. Melville and Eyre were drawn up, as we learn, at Buddabad, from reminiscences of the campaign, then fresh in the memory. Lady Sale's original notes were brushed up and completed in the same retirement, with the aid of hints from the other prisoners. But there are other documents of equal, and possibly of superior, value, which we hope will not be refused to the public. There is reason to believe that Lady Sale was mistaken in supposing that every original record of these events perished in the fatal retreat, except her own. Lady Macnaghten's trunks, which contained a collection of important documents, accompanied her when she placed herself under Akbar Khan's protection. They were not taken from her, and they will afford her deceased husband's relatives at home ample materials for vindicating his character. Sir W. Macnaghten's own official despatch to Government, containing a narrative of these events, to which he made the last addition only a few hours before he fell a victim to the Sirdar's treachery, is safely lodged in the public archives. Two others of the prisoners are known to have kept journals of occurrences, and brought them in safely to India. From these various sources of information we are sure, sooner or later, to be put in possession of the truth; and the history of that period will eventually be as clearly known, as that of any other period.

For this desideratum, however, we must be content to wait. A complete and faithful review of the campaign would exhibit such a series of unparalleled errors, and be fatal to the reputation of so many, both living and dead, that we can scarcely expect to find the requisite ability united in the same person with the necessary independence of position. It must be written by a soldier; but if he ventured to give us the whole truth, he must relinquish his profession. The army would become too hot for him. If Lady Sale's occasional references to the individuals whose conduct compromised the safety of the army, has brought her into much odium, it is easy to imagine what a storm of vengeance would pursue the writer who should dare to unfold the mysteries of inactivity which marked the campaign. All that we can expect therefore at present is the publication of memoirs and narratives, in which discretion shall be the prevailing feature. Then, after twenty or twenty-five years have elapsed, and these events have become the property of history, and nothing is to be apprehended from personal animosity, we may look for a bold and impartial history. This must embrace the origin of the insurrection, as exhibited in the records of Government; the course of mismanagement by which it was rendered so fatal; as well as the impression which it produced on the minds of the ruling authorities in India, and the activity or lukewarmness of the efforts made by them to meet the crisis. It must be written with the assistance of the official and private correspondence of the time, and of the public records which are now hermetically sealed; it must be composed in a faithful, impartial, and fearless spirit, and it must deal with the public characters whose conduct it may have occasion to expose, as if they had lived and acted in the days of Cicero and Cæsar.—Among other advantages it will afford another proof how little any contemporary estimate of men and measures is to be depended on.

The events which occurred at Cabul in the winter of 1841, will be found of sufficient interest to justify the labours of the ablest historian. They yield in interest to no events in the History of British India. They arose out of the first effort to check the progress of Russian ambition in the East, which all men had foreseen must, sooner or later, lead to a collision, either in Central Asia, or in Europe, or perhaps in both quarters of the globe. Every previous war in Asia had been intended to baffle local ambition, or to overcome local aggression. In this instance the object was for the first time to arrest the advance of a European power, by occupying Afghanistan, instead of by kindling a war in Europe. The magnitude of the object, which was to establish a paramount influence in Central Asia, in order to shut out our European rival, imparts an unusual importance to the history of the enterprise. The success which at first attended it, in the hold we acquired on Herat and in the liberation of the Russian slaves at the Ultimate Tash of Khiva, at the bidding of the Governor General, combined with the subsequent subversion of the system we had built up, the expulsion of our envoy from Herat, and the revolt of the ghanistan, give an interest to these transactions which is attached to no other events in our local History, since the battle of Plassey first made us a political power in India. If any thing there was wanting to add to the deep interest of these scenes, it will be found in the entire destruction of a noble army. There is no parallel of such a disaster, not merely in our Indian annals, but in those of Great Britain. Never since we became a nation, and took part in transactions beyond the limits of our own island, has so overwhelming a calamity befallen us;—and seldom has there been exhibited by our public functionaries, such a series of indiscretions, and such apathy, indecision and neglect in affording the means of rescue to a beleaguered army. It is on this latter subject, that the labours of the faithful historian will be most dangerous and invidious. In detailing the errors at Cabul which led to the destruction of the army he will be called to deal,—except in one instance—with the reputation of the dead. In treating of the impression created by this unexpected and appalling crisis, on the minds of those who were at the head of affairs in India, and of the hesitation with which succour was despatched, he will have to touch on matters which affect the credit of the living. It is on this ground that we despair of an impartial History in our own times.

The journals now given to the public appear to confirm the suspicion that the complete annihilation of the army is to be traced in some measure to the neglect of the public authorities in India. Knowing as we now do, the state of parties at Cabul, the disposition of the people, the position of our armies from day to day after the retreat had commenced, and the comparative ease with which the troops were enabled to hold out in their encampments for more than two months after their commissariat stores were destroyed, there is a strong probability that if vigorous measures had been pursued in India to push on reinforcements, more than half the army might have been saved in the retreat, even if the necessity of a retreat had not been altogether obviated. The courage of the Afghans, and the boldness of their chiefs arose, for the most part, from our own deficiencies. It was not till three days after the outbreak had commenced, nor till it was discovered that there was no spirit left in the antagonists, that the chiefs who had been favourable to our interests, abandoned our party and joined the enemy. It was the total absence of any appearance of succour from India which gave confidence to Akbar Khan and his associates. Had there been two well equipped regiments at Gushanik in the beginning of January, the precursors of a relieving army, the aspect of affairs at the Capital and the tops of the leaders, would have been entirely changed; and if retreat had become unavoidable, it would not have been attended with those tragical results we have now to deplore. The certainty of co-operation from a body of fresh troops, burning with ardour to vindicate the national character, would have sustained the spirits of our men who had given themselves up to despair, and on the other hand cooled down the ferocity of the Afghans. We believe there is scarcely an individual among the liberated officers who does not believe that the arrival at Jellahabad, at that crisis, of the four regiments which were sent on, would have proved the salvation of the army. Every thing was favourable for such a consummation. The troops had been already assembled on the banks of the Suleiga, to relieve the returning brigade, and they were ready to move; the Commander-in-Chief was himself in the Western Provinces, and might have been at Ferozpoor in a week to superintend the despatch of succours. The Khyber was not closed, as it was after our sun had set at Cabul. By such extraordinary exertions as the emergency demanded, those four Regiments might have reached Jellahabad by the 1st of January. There were difficulties in the way no doubt, but they were not insuperable; there was no impossibility in the case. But days were wasted when hours were invaluable. To secure this object it was only necessary that the same energy should have been displayed, which was exhibited by the Head of the army in England during the last year, when an insurrection broke out in the manufacturing counties. As soon as the first intelligence of this disturbance reached the Horse Guards, there was no repose till an overwhelming force had been poured into the district. Troops made their appearance on the scene as if they had been brought by the power of magic. A large body was marshalled on the spot, ready for action, before it was supposed that any notice of the emergency could have reached the Ministry; and the insurrection was strangled in its cradle. If the same spirit had been manifested here, we should not now have to lament the direct calamity which ever befel our arms. On the other hand, if the same spirit of insubordination and comparative indifference which retarded the departure of the troops, and sent them at length without sufficient equipment, had been exhibited in England on that occasion, the insurrection would in all probability have gained strength till it was matured into a servile war, and had involved our manufacturing interests in ruin.

VIVA VOCE COMPLAINTS BEFORE THE MAGISTRATE.—Mr. Montzou, who has just been appointed to the Magistracy in Calcutta, received, it was said, to exclude all written petitions, and to constrain those who sought redress to prefer their complaints before him by word of mouth. This innovation appeared to us preposterous, and we ventured to express our disapprobation of it. We subsequently learned that the new rule was not to be compulsory, the editors having simply been informed that a written petition was not necessary, as a verbal complaint would be received, if they preferred it. This entirely alters the character of the measure, and obviates the objection which appeared to us against it. When the mode of complaint is thus left optional with the aggrieved party, the innovation appears worthy of commendation, in as much as it will afford an opportunity of ascertaining how far this plan is calculated to promote the ends of justice, and this will be manifested by the preference which it may receive from the natives. We think that the habits of the country, and the feelings of the people would be a bar to its general adoption, except in cases in which the Magistrate was so thoroughly acquainted with the language, as at once to win the confidence of the parties. Where a man is compelled to appear in person before a Magistrate and state his case, obstacles will inevitably be thrown, by interested officials, in the way of his approach, and he will consider it necessary to buy access to the Huzoor. The obstacles would be greater in the country than in towns, where the natives have acquired considerable boldness; but the difficulty would more or less be supposed to exist. When the complaint has to be translated to the Magistrate by an interpreter, the disaffected suitor will always attribute his defeat to the ignorance or venality of the interpreter, and the character of the Court will be in some measure involved in odium. If his plaint must be presented to the bench in a foreign language, it is more politic to allow him to choose his own translator, than to constrain him to depend on the official interpreter. Some men will feel themselves so dumb-founded, when brought in person before the Magistrate, as to be unable to do justice to their own case. These and other considerations led us to question the propriety of forcing the new practice on a people always indisposed to innovation; but as we before stated, every objection is removed which it is left optional with suitors to appear either with a written petition or a verbal complaint.

We fear we fall into a grievous error last week in confounding Mr. J. B. Norton of the Madras bar, with Mr. George Norton, the Advocate General. It appears to be the former gentleman who is opposed to the appointment of the new Registrar, and the latter who is prepared to defend it.

We have been constrained to omit all communications, in order to make room for the contents of the June Mail. We trust our correspondents will excuse the non appearance of their letters and notices, on the ground of unavoidable necessity.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JULY 13.

— Yesterday evening's Government Gazette announces, that Major General Simpson, of Her Majesty's 59th Foot, has been placed at the disposal of Sir Charles Napier for employment in Scinde. Capt. Baker, of Engineers, at present Superintendent of the Delhi Canal, has also been sent to Scinde, to be employed in the survey and superintendence of the water courses, canals, and forests of the country. The fertility of a considerable portion of the newly acquired territory depends upon keeping up the canals; and there can be little doubt that the disafforesting of the forests, would not only contribute to the comfort of the people, but to the salubrity of the country.

— The constitution of the several Stads has been remodelled. They will in future constitute one general department, remaining as usual under the control of the Military Board. The department will consist of two divisions, that of the North Western, and that of the Central Provinces. The salaries will be thus arranged: 3 Superintendents at 1000 Rs. a month, 3 First Class Assistants at 400, 3 Second Class, at 300 and 3 Sub-Assistants, at 200 Rs. Lieut. Col. Gwatkin takes the superintendence of one division, and Capt. Moyle Sherris of the other.

— An assault was made some time since attended with loss of life, by men of the 30th Regiment N. I. on the gun lacours and drivers attached to No. 14 light field battery. A Court of Enquiry was held on the subject, the result of which having been laid before the Commander-in-Chief, His Excellency stated in General Orders that such an outrage could not have been committed without the knowledge and connivance of the Native Commissioned and non-Commissioned officers, some of whom endeavoured to screen the guilty. As a punishment for this offence, it is ordered that no furloughs shall be granted to the corps this year, and that all promotion in it shall be suspended for a twelvemonth.

— The Bombay Times states, that H. M. S. the Endymion, which was under orders to proceed to England immediately after the arrival of the mail, has been detained; and it is reported that she returns to take home the Governor General. This is the second vessel which the papers have destined to convey His Lordship to England.

— The Bombay has reached the port of the same name from Plymouth, in Eighty days, which is considered one of the most remarkable passages on record.

— The Explications of this morning makes some reference to the Roman Catholic organ in England, the Field, which, under its present Editor has been remarkable for the violence of its hostility to Protestantism. "For our parts," says the Editor of the Field, "these poor Papisties who stand shivering at St. Peter's threshold, spending all their ingenuity and dexterity of their minds to the drawing of mobile distinctions and to discovering how much of Catholicism they can (they think) safely believe, or how much they can safely avow, without trenching on their thirty-nine articles,—we say these poor people who live in daily sight and contemplation of the most glorious and necessary truths, and no less in the daily neglect of them, these are the people for whom we tremble, and for whose future state we fear and stand aghast." Who would have thought that such sentiments could flow from a man formerly a Quaker; from one who made so strenuous an effort some time past to introduce the warmth of evangelical feeling into that body? He has now turned Papist; and in, we are told, the Editor of the Tablet.

— There is a vessel from China of the 20th of May, which announces the arrival of some Mandarins at Hong Kong where they were received with much distinction, and witnessed the imposing ceremony of conferring the highest order of the Bath on Sir W. Parker.

FRIDAY, JULY 14.

— It is stated that Lord Elginborough, after having viewed the barracks at Bikanpore, which are among the finest in India, but have been abandoned because of their unsalubrity, expressed a wish again to place a European corps there. The Explications is doing all in his power to dissuade his Lordship from such a course. It appears that the expense of these barracks was ascertained some time ago from the office of the Military Board, and the Accountant General, to have been nearly seventeen millions sterling; but on looking into the account we find that sixteen millions of this sum consists of compound interest on the outlay for 77 years; rather an odd mode of computing the cost of a building. At this rate Westminster Hall must have cost a sum which figures cannot comprise. It is stated moreover that the barracks cost 36 lakhs in the year 1787, which is impossible. The battle of Plassey was fought on the 21st of June of that year, and certainly the barracks were not finished in six months after.

— The Governor General proceeded to Calcutta yesterday, and landed in a private manner, accompanied only by his own staff. His Lordship refused to allow the troops to be drawn out either at Barrackpore or at Calcutta, from a consideration for their comfort.

— The Bengal Spectator has taken us to task for having ranked the Hare Testimonial among the city bibles. He informs us that 10,487 Rs. were subscribed, of which a little more than half has been allotted; and that every exertion is making to collect the balance. In this the Committee are likely to meet with indifferent success. The money already realised is safely lodged with the Union Bank in Government Securities. Enquiries have also been instituted in England whether a full sized marble or bronzed statue can be obtained for such a sum. We are happy to have elicited the information, and to communicate it with much pleasure to our readers.

— The Harcourt states, that since that very singular decision in the case of Boyd and Co. versus Fiddington, there have been upwards of 17 suits non-suited in the Court of the 24-Pargannahs. In our copy of the paper, there is apparently a figure to the right of the 17 invisible. It is more likely to be 170 than 17 suits. The defendants after being served with a summons, absconded into Calcutta. We would earnestly recommend to the Deputy Governor to abolish all the Civil Courts in the 24-Pargannahs, as a useless charge on the public treasury. According to the last dictum of the Sudder Court, if a defendant on being summoned, crosses the boundary and gets within the Ditch, which he must be an infinite as not to do)—the case falls to the ground. The Court will soon be as good as a loss for plaintiffs as now it is for defendants.

SATURDAY, JULY 15.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that Raja Dityan Sing, the powerful Mayor of the palace in the Punjab, has regularly quarrelled with Shere Sing and has retreated to the mountain fastnesses of his own domains in Jumboo, and that the Maha Raja has sent General Ventura to bring him to reason with fourteen Regiments of Infantry, two of cavalry and a brigade of guns. The Minister however has an equally powerful army of his own; and also the superior advantage of a difficult and almost inaccessible country. If discord once gains admittance into the Punjab, its independence is gone, whoever be Governor General.

— All apprehension regarding the Amer Sher Mahomed is at an end. Being summoned in on all sides by the calls of Sir Charles Napier, he fled the weakest of his opponents, and came down upon Capt. Jacob of the Scinde Regular Horse, with about 4000 men, and three guns. His whole army fled on receiving a few shots from our artillery. The Amer himself has escaped in the direction of the desert, with ten or twelve followers. The upholders of the Belooches appear to be completely broken; and unless we lose the country by our own folly, we are not likely to lose it by the energy or valor of the enemy.

MONDAY, JULY 17.

— The London Times gives us reason to hope that the Jess Mail may be soon discontinued. It was expected at Bombay on the 9th of 7th. The roads are now heavy, and the regular mail has of late frequently been twelve days on the route. We can scarcely therefore expect the Express to make the journey under ten days.

— Sir Charles Napier in his despatches to Government of the 19th June stated that a sudden change of the weather to extraordinary heat just after the troops marched from Hyderabad, had proved fatal to many of the Europeans, who were struck down by the heat and died within a few hours. He had then lost in the field, 1 Lieutenant, 1 Sergeant, and 30 Rank and File. In the act of Hyderabad, there had at the same time been carried off by the same cause, 3 Sergeants, 1 Drummer, and 14 Rank and File. In all 50 individuals.

— A Decree has been obtained in the Delhi Court against the eldest son of the King, and an order was issued to seize all his property which was found beyond the Palace. The decree was not sooner known than he took steps to remove his property beyond his reach, and to place it in safety within the precincts of that sanctuary.

— The Delhi Gazette mentions that leave has been refused to Mr. George Thompson, by the British authorities at Delhi, to enter the palace and see the King!! This is an act of such superstitious folly that we suspect our Western contemporary must have been misinformed.

TUESDAY, JULY 18.

— The Bengal Spectator again adverts to the circumstance that eight years have passed since a fund was raised for a testimonial in honor of the late Rameswar Roy, and a Committee appointed to carry the design into execution; and that nothing has since been heard of the matter. The Editor a twelvemonth ago called on the Committee to inform the public of the steps which they had adopted in furtherance of the design. But the Committee still continues in a state of "profound somnolency," and the public is yet kept in a state of "diminished darkness."

— All the accounts from the Western Provinces mention the fall of opium showers of rain, by which the enormous loss has been allayed, and the hopes of the husbandmen revived. In the lower Provinces, so dry a season has not been known for many years. Up to the present day, the 18th of July, there has scarcely been one heavy shower. We have had just rain enough to encourage the flowers, but not enough to irrigate the rice crops, which must suffer severely, unless there is a much more plentiful supply.

— The Bombay papers, on the authority of letters from Hyderabad, describe the mode in which General Napier humbled in the "test of the Adversary" Sher Mahomed, and obliged him to take to the desert with only a dozen followers. Col. Roberts was ordered to advance from the South; Sir Charles himself moved up from the North, while Capt. Jacob with the Scinde Irregular Horse advanced against him from the East. The Amer, then encompassed, made an attack on the weakest of his opponents, and advanced against Capt. Jacob, the first few shots from whose guns, dispersed his force. There was a report at Hyderabad that he had been taken, but it wants confirmation. Upper Scinde is said to be in a state of tranquillity and the dawks between Hyderabad and Shooj have been re-established.

— The Memoirs which left Bombay with 290 copies for the Mauritius, has returned with six of them whom the Governor would not allow to remain, because they did not answer to the descriptions given of them in the certificate. These men had taken the certificate granted to others. The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette says, that 100 were returned to Madras on the same ground, the substitution of one only for another who had made himself scarce on the day of embarkation. The punishment was inflicted on this fraud is likely to produce an official cure.

— The Bank of Bombay has declared a dividend at the rate of Six per Cent. per annum. Business does not appear to be altogether so profitable there as in Calcutta where the chartered Bank has just declared a dividend of double that amount.

— The London Mail of the 6th of June reached Calcutta yesterday evening. We have given Calcutta extracts from it below.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums for the Friend of India:—

	Rs.	As.
Lieut. T. H. Sale, .. . to Oct. 1847, 10	10	0
Messrs. Blunt and Co., .. to Dec. 1847, 10	10	0
Messrs. Blunt and Co., .. to Dec. 1847, 10	10	0
Barboe Gooroochurn Sen, .. to May, 1848, 20	20	0
T. J. Hogue, Esq., .. to May, 1848, 20	20	0
Col. W. Campbell, .. to May, 1848, 10	10	0
Capt. G. H. Halden, .. to June, 1848, 24	24	0
The Secretary of the Artillery
Messrs. Knapton, .. ditto, 20	20	0
Robert Stambrook Pundit, .. to Dec. 1847, 20	20	0
B. N. Coombes, Esq., .. ditto, 10	10	0
J. Maury, Esq., .. to June, 1848, 20	20	0
J. Goulcher, Esq., .. to June, 1848, 20	20	0
Capt. M. W. Fraser, .. to June, 1848, 20	20	0
W. Mearns, Esq., .. to Dec. 1847, 20	20	0
From some one whose letter dated Calcutta, 19th July, has no signature, .. . 10	10	0

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

The Rev. W. W. Evans begs to acknowledge the following sums for the Benevolent Institution Calcutta:—

	Rs.	As.
J. C. C. Sutherland, Esq., .. . 10	10	0
C. H. Cameron, Esq., .. . 20	20	0
Major J. W. J. Oakey, .. . 10	10	0
Major W. M. N. Sturt, .. . 10	10	0
W. Dunlop, Esq., .. . 10	10	0
Col. Forester, (of a year's Sub.), .. 25	25	0
H. Giblin Esq., .. . 10	10	0
Capt. A. Wilson, .. . 10	10	0
J. Wallace, Esq., .. . 13	13	0
J. W. Bennett, Esq., .. . 5	5	0
Thomas Steers, Esq., .. . 5	5	0
J. H. L. Hoff, Esq., .. . 25	25	0
A. Friend; J. B. No. 497, .. . 10	10	0
J. Holmes, Esq., .. . 10	10	0

W. W. EVANS, Secretary.

18th July, 1848.

LATEST EUROPEAN INTELLIGENCE.

GENERAL REMARKS.—The affairs of India have during the past month been very noisily discussed, either by the public press or in parliament; a foreboding which is solely attributable to apprehensions raised by a report, said to have reached Bombay two hours before the departure of the April mail, to the effect that another action had been fought near Hyderabad, in which Sir C. Napier had fallen. As soon as this matter is set at rest by the receipt of official advice, there is every reason to believe that Lord Ellenborough's policy will be very freely discussed both in and out of parliament. At the same time we must observe, that though the annexation of Scinde to the British territories was at first denounced as a violation of the principles laid down in his lordship's previous proclamation, the abolition of slavery and the beneficial results likely to flow from an unrestricted navigation of the Indus, have gone far to reconcile public opinion to an act, which, if at all, can only be justified upon such grounds as these.

The present mail will convey intelligence of the accession of Lord Viceroy to the office of those records of the office after but scanty means of judging. There was, however, one measure to which his declining energies were directed; and which we truly trust will not be postponed by his decease. Immediately upon receipt of Sir C. Napier's remembrance, perhaps before, his lordship appears to have concluded some officers of distinction; and he believed that there is no doubt that before his death he had come to the conclusion that it was essentially necessary that, at least, a captain should be added to every regiment in the service of the East India Company. How far Lord Ripon may adopt the views of his predecessor upon this or any other subject, it is impossible to say; but as the Courts of Directors are understood to be in favour of such an augmentation, it will no doubt be granted, if pressed for by the heads of the public service in India.

The financial statement of Mr. Goulburn, which was looked forward to with so much anxiety, shows, after all, a deficiency of at least two millions in the revenue, though the income tax has proved much more productive than was anticipated. But it is perhaps more unsatisfactory still, in so far as it gives no picture of the existing state of things, to which it is impossible to ascertain, to what, with any approximation to accuracy, what the resources of the country can produce. In this respect Sir M. Peel appears to have been lamentably mistaken; for, in 1842, taking a low figure, he estimated that the customs would produce £1,500,000, whereas it has yielded only £970,000;—that the Excise and the produce £1,700,000, yet it has returned only £2,000,000, and so on as respects various other particulars;—showing that the whole revenue under ordinary and extraordinary taxation, has only produced £4,500,000. If to this difference is added the Chinese ransom—£250,000, not calculated upon in 1842, and also £600,000, more duty, we shall have a difference of £1,570,000, upon the year, of course, all this has furnished the Opposition with grounds upon which to assail Ministers; but though Robert Peel, Lord John Russell, Lord Leveson, and the Education classes of the Factories Bill have occasioned them some little trouble, the only serious difficulty they have had to encounter has sprung from the fact that the Government's opponents upon the subject of the Canada Corn Bill. At this at one time assumed a very threatening aspect, a hostility having been aroused, which was only neutralized by the declaration of Sir M. Peel, at a meeting convened at his own residence, that the Government were prepared, if necessary, to go out of office upon the question. The measure is one permitting the introduction of Canada wheat at any shilling, and American wheat ground in Canada at four shillings, per quarter; but the real objection would seem to be the principle of a fixed duty thus recognized. As the two Canadas do not raise wheat sufficient for themselves, there is really little to fear from that quarter; especially as Lord Stanley has shown, that the price in Montreal averages from forty-five to fifty shillings a quarter, to which if we add duty, carriage, freight, &c., to England, we shall have the price several shillings above the present average in this country.

The aspect of affairs in Ireland is one of very alarming importance, the entire country having been roused to state of insurrection upon the question of a Repeal. The Duke of Wellington and Sir M. Peel have, on the part of the Queen's Government, taken the most decided measures upon this question in 1843; and, as a means of maintaining the legislative union vis à vis an immense military force has been sent from this country. A National Convention of the Irish people to Cork, and orders have been issued that recruiting shall be recommenced, in order to add sixty men to each regiment of the line, except those serving in the militia.

The Secession from the Church of Scotland, as yet established, has taken place, and is now as complete as could by possibility have been effected, either by the party who is in its possession, or by those who are in its favor. The disruption has taken place, and, be it for good or ill, it is for now, matters have gone too far to admit of reversion; unless a compromise be effected as yet, the separation, in which the two parties are so deeply pledged, that the idea of retraction cannot be entertained. On the one hand the Veto Act has been repealed; the representation of the Synodical system, proposed by the General Assembly, has been rescinded as an unof the Society, which at the commencement of the year was valued at 13,000*l.*, is now reduced to 13,000*l.* In the receipts of the year are included 5,005*l.*, 5,005*l.*, of the late Rev. John Hart, and a like sum of 5,000*l.* (5,000*l.* Consols), a magnificent donation by one who wishes to be remembered known as an Evangelist (less than the least). It is also gratifying to the Committee to report that the receipts of the year include a contribution from the Corporation of the City of London of 500*l.*

"The appropriation of the donation of 6,000*l.* Consols is thus limited by the donor to what I would describe as to a special object; an object, nevertheless, which I have observed has already occupied the attention of several warm friends of the Society, but which has not yet been taken up, it appears, for want of the necessary means; namely, an attempt to make known the knowledge of a Saviour to that vast country, China, to which, apparently, no access is now open to us. This sum, therefore, is not applicable to the maintenance of the Society's existing Missions.

"In pursuance of the course explained in the last Annual Report, the Committee, immediately after the Anniversary Meeting, took measures to reduce the scale of the year's expenditure to 55,000*l.* The arrangements for that purpose embraced the relinquishment of the Society's operations at Malta, Trinidad, and Jamaica, and a reduction of expenditure in some other Missions. It required, however, a considerable interval to carry out these arrangements in the distant Missions. The principal establishment at Malta has been entirely disposed of. In Jamaica, the Mission is now reduced to two missionaries and one catechist; but it was not practicable to effect the reduction of the Mission without involving an expenditure on account of it of the past year of nearly 6,000*l.* In Trinidad, the difficulties have been still greater in effecting a reduction of the Society's establishment. This has arisen partly from the sea being visited at the early part of the year, and partly from the absence at a later period of the Governor, whose co-operation is needed in order to a satisfactory adjustment of the matter. The cost of this Mission, therefore, is little less than in the preceding year.

"In the total of 92,446*l.*, above-mentioned, is also included 1,005*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.* for redemption's bills, forming part of the debt at the beginning of the year.

"In those Missions, the operations of which the Committee decided on continuing, they have the fullest reason to believe that the expenditure assigned to them will be strictly adhered to.

"In the year just closed, the various causes which have been specified have carried up the expenditure, as above noticed, to 92,446*l.*

"On analysing the aggregate receipts of the past year, with a view to fix the ratio of expenditure for the ensuing year, it was requisite to deduct the following items, either as not applicable to the general maintenance of the Society, or as not to be anticipated in the next year, or, as in the case of the contributions in the Missions, as applicable to the support of the Missions wherein they are raised, in addition to the sums allowed from home:—

Capital Fund	23,715
Disabled Missionaries' Fund	1,008
Nest's Legacy	5,005
Donation (Consols)	5,005
Negro Education Grant	1,850
City of London Grant	500
Contributions in the Missions	4,786

23,494

"The Committee, moreover, have not felt themselves warranted to calculate on the same amount of benevolence as received in the past year, when contributions were liberally made with the special view of liberating the Society from debt.

"On the best view which the Committee have been able to take of the financial situation of the Society, they have judged it right to adhere to the course pursued last year, and to limit the scale of expenditure for the year, on account of the existing Missions of the Society, to 55,000*l.* The discontinuance of the Malta establishment; the reduction of the Mission in Jamaica to its present limited extent; and the prospect of narrowing the expenditure of the Society in Trinidad, will, it is anticipated, leave at the disposal of the new Committee the means of some enlargement of operations in the existing Missions. The means thus available will, however, fall far short of what is made available to the Committee duly to improve the encouraging opportunities of extending the Society's operations, which are placed within their reach. Indeed, the Committee feel that the circumstances of the Society are such as to demand the persevering prayers and exertions of their friends to sustain the operations to which the Society is already pledged.

"It has been stated above that the donation of 6,000*l.* Consols is limited to China. With such a limitation laid for resuming the operations of the Society in that country, the Committee could no longer decline taking preparatory measures for that purpose.

They have, therefore, determined on engaging the services of two clergymen as missionaries to China, as soon as two individuals of suitable qualifications for this difficult undertaking shall be met with. At present, the General Fund of the Society is insufficient to provide for a Mission to China, even with the aid of the Committee. The Committee, have, therefore, opened a separate fund for the China Mission. They do so on the understanding, however, that it should operate to the diminution of the General Fund, at present inadequate fully to sustain the existing missions. They trust, therefore, that their friends in promoting contributions to the China Mission Fund will use the utmost precaution not to injure the General Fund. The Committee have yielded to the opening of a separate fund for China, from regarding the present undertaking as one of an experimental nature; with a view to ascertain what facilities for missionary operations in China may really be the result of the late peace with that country. Should the Mission be permanently established, the Committee would place it on the General Fund of the Society in the same manner as its other Missions.

"It is stated above, that the amount received on account of the capital fund during the year, was, 3,715*l.* This, in addition to the sum reported last year, makes a total of about 5,000*l.*—an amount wholly inadequate to effect the purposes for which this fund was opened. The proceedings of the past year have afforded an additional illustration of the necessity of a full description of considerable amount. In the course of the year, the Committee have been obliged to borrow to the extent of 19,000*l.*, to meet the inequality between the receipts and expenditure, which constantly occurs during a considerable part of the year. This involved a charge last year of interest of upwards of 700*l.* To this expenditure the Society must be constantly subjected, until a sum of money, constituting a capital fund, would be placed at the disposal of the Committee equal to meet the inequality between expenditure and income above adverted to; and so relieve them from the necessity of borrowing money to meet the current expenditure of the Committee, therefore, earnestly solicit contributions from their friends to this fund."—Record.

CHURCH OF SCOTLAND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

On Thursday evening the tenth anniversary meeting of the London Auxiliary to the Foreign Missions, conducted by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen Street. William Hamilton, Esq., took the chair, the Secretary read a report of the operations of the society and the state of the missions abroad during the past year. The establishments in every all in a prosperous condition, and the examinations of the children, educated through the instrumentality of the missionaries, gave great satisfaction to all who saw them. The ladies' newspapers had passed high eulogiums upon the manner in which the schools were conducted. Since the last annual meeting of the Association, additional schools had been opened and had been opened and were in progress, and many of the former count 700 scholars, and upwards daily. Calcutta, Bombay, Poona, Bengal, Madras, and the other places reported upon last year, continued, as regarded the missions of the Scottish Church, in a prosperous state. The income of the London Auxiliary during the past year amounted to 685*l.*, which had been paid to the General Assembly. The report having been adopted, the meeting broke up.—Fat.

ENDOWMENT OF ADDITIONAL MISSIONS.

On the Motion for the House resolving itself into Committee on the subject of endowment of additional missions in populous places.

Mr. R. Peel said, in reply to a question from Mr. Hume, that the proposition involved no grant of public money.

The House then went into Committee, and Sir R. Peel stated the progress which had been made to remedy the evils arising from the population pressure in various towns is a greater ratio than the means of providing them with religious instruction. This evil being admitted, the next question was as to the means of applying a remedy, and for these it was the present intention of the Government that ecclesiastical revenues should be applied to the purpose, but if they should hereafter prove to be insufficient, it would be for the Government to propose to the House. The Right Hon. Baronet adverted to the advantages which had resulted from the Ecclesiastical Commission appointed in 1834, and stated, that it was one of the results of the number of such ecclesiastical establishments a revenue of 25,000*l.* was now at their disposal, applicable to the augmentation of small livings.

This sum would in future years be largely reduced from the sum so proposed to be applied to borrow 800,000*l.* from the capital stock of 1,300,000*l.* standing in the names of the Governors of the Queen's Bounty, to be secured on the revenues accruing to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. He proposed that the loan borrowed should be applied to the purchase of spiritual instruction, to the extent of 30,000*l.* per annum, not the building of churches, but for the endowment of ministers to aid of local subscriptions. If a minister were endowed in a destitute district, he had no doubt but that the erection of a church by subscription would soon follow as a result of his labours. He believed that the Government should immediately proceed to action, and as he asked for no public money, he hoped the House would unanimously agree to the proposed plan. The Right Hon. Baronet then moved for a resolution upon which to found a Motion for leave to bring in a Bill to carry out the scheme he proposed.

Mr. R. Peel could not give his approbation to the plan, although he believed that the Government by any observations which could have the effect of strengthening the hands of those from whom the Church had nothing to expect. He himself would not forward to the time when the House would be asked for a grant of public money in furtherance of the religious instruction of the people. It was to the endowment of the Church Establishment that the country looked for the means of improving its social condition, and it was to be remembered that the greatest evils of the late instruction prevailed in districts insufficiently provided with pastoral care. He therefore hoped the present plan would prove beneficial though by no means came up to his expectations. Lord Darnley approved of the proposed plan, which he thought would be productive of lasting benefit.

Captain Bernal, in reference to the Puseyite scheme, asked Sir R. Peel whether he believed that the Government of England, as by law established, as it was but right to know what doctrines were to be inculcated by the new ministers.

Mr. Colquhoun denied the present measure as a step in the right direction, which he hoped to see followed up by Parliament hereafter.

Lord J. Russell was not prepared, so far as he understood the plan, to give his unqualified approbation, although it certainly contained the elements of utility. It was not, however, any defect, according to his views, that the plan required no grant of public money.

Mr. Hume thought they should promote the education of the people without augmenting the Established Church.

Mr. Fickington approved of the plan.

Mr. Gibson thought the question of Church extension was forced upon the Government, and upon the whole that he believed that at no moderate a shape as could have been anticipated.

Mr. Plumptre said, he had no reason whatever to disapprove of the proposal now made by the Right Hon. Bart. covered with the endorsement of ministers in populous districts, and he begged to add that he had been very highly gratified by the tone and language employed by the Right Hon. Gentlemen in bringing this proposal before the House. It was most pleasing to him (Mr. Plumptre) to hear the Prime Minister of this great country speaking of the application of religion as the main remedy for the many social evils that are to be found among us. Everything was to be hoped for if this great remedy could, under God's blessing, be brought to bear upon the population of the land. The Hon. and Gallant Member for Wycombe had referred, in the discussion of subject before the House, to certain opinions introduced of late years by certain members of the Church, and he begged to say that he was not prepared to quarrel against. He quite agreed with the Hon. and Gallant Member; and as he (the Hon. and Gallant Member) had introduced such a subject, (Mr. Plumptre) would say that he believed that the holders of these opinions, the Tractarians, were inflicting an injury of no common amount on the Church of which they are members. They are often in the habit of offering a quarrel (hear, hear), and when, in language almost as unintelligible as in his opinion it was altogether unsentimental and unsavoury, they ventured to consign to "the unconcerned masses of God," the members of any other Church than their own, they were creating disgust, and driving from their churches very many by whom such a course of action would be most regretted. (Cheering.) The Hon. Member for Montrose (Mr. Hume) had alluded to the empty state of many churches in the City. (Mr. Plumptre) had heard of this of this state of affairs, and he believed that a general opinion that the extent of congregations very much depended on the character of the preaching employed before them. He remembered a saying of Howard Hill, that in a place where a curate might be fired with the least risk in London on a Sunday, would be along the side of a church in which the Gospel was not preached, and that (Mr. Plumptre) thought this was pretty nearly true in these days. People were not satisfied now with a mere dry, unadorned discourse; they desire to hear the Gospel faithfully and affectionately preached. (Hear, hear.) And when this was the case, as for instance in that great church, St. Bride's the minister which the Right Hon. Bart. (Sir R. Peel) had appointed when he was for a short time in power in 1834, and in other churches, there was a crowded congregation whenever the church was opened. (Hear, hear.) The body of ministers to whom he had before alluded, the Tractarians, did, nearly he believed, towards emptying their churches, and he would not wish it to be otherwise. He treated they would not be countenanced. The Right Hon. Earl at the head of the Government had given proof of his sentiments with respect to the churches, and he had made to the bishopric of Chichester (here, here); and he (Mr. P.) hoped, from this little indication of his feeling that he had manifested during the present discussion, that the Right Hon. Earl would still discontinue opinions which he (Mr. Plumptre) believed sincerely were disconcerting to the Church of Christ generally, and greatly injurious to the establishment of religion in this country. (Here, here, here.)

Mr. Berwick complained of the practice of making shows of our churches, charging two pence for admission to them, instead of three pence open to all. He then proceeded to complain of the attacks that had that evening been made on the Titularists, as they were called, and to speak in the highest terms of the learning, piety, and benevolence of the gentlemen so described.

Lord Standon supported the plan as likely to prove beneficial to the temporal as well as spiritual welfare of the people.

Mr. Campbell, while he approved of the plan condemned the doctrine of Puritanism, and said he would not support any Motion calculated to promote the doctrine of a sect opposed to the principles of the Reformation.

After some further discussion, in which Mr. H. Curtis, Lord J. Manners, and Mr. Brotherton, took part.

Mr. Acland said, he thought that for that House to enter on questions of doctrine could lead to nothing but a discussion. He agreed with the suggestion thrown out, that the right place for such discussions was the Convocation. He should not regret that the Right Hon. Gentleman's plan because it had not been laid before Convocation, but he must protest against the constitutional right of the Church of England to express her opinion on her internal affairs being questioned. He thanked the Right Honourable Gentleman for the manner in which he had referred to it with carelessness made by private persons in the cause of religion, which would be gratefully received by those who had laboured in the cause, and taken as evidence that they had produced some effect.

Mr. H. Peel replied, and said that the difference of opinion expressed in the course of the debate upon the propriety of requiring a Parliamentary grant fully justified him in retaining the subject before the House. He believed the annual sum of 50,000 which he proposed would be found adequate, with the aid of voluntary subscriptions, to all the objects of the Church more effectively than if he had not required a large grant of public money.

The Resolution was then agreed to and the House resumed, after which leave was given to him to sit in the Hall.—Record.

MICHELLENDON.

RESPECT TO THE MEMENTO OF THE DUKES OF SUMMER.—The City, on Thursday, presented almost the appearance of the Babylon, scarcely a shop being open for business, agreeably to the wish of the chief magistrates, in order to show the respect of the citizens of London to the memory of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Somerset. Until one o'clock nearly the whole of the shops were kept closed, and during the morning the bells of the City churches were tolled at intervals of a minute. Some of the shops remained closed during the whole day, and business was entirely suspended, whilst scarcely one was not partially closed. In other parts of the metropolis the shops were closed.

We are informed that the personal property left by the late Duke of Somerset is considerable, his life having been insured to very large amounts in several offices. The interest of the bulk of his property, it is said, has been settled on the Duchesse of Devonshire; the principal to revert, on the death of her Grace, to the son and daughter of his Royal Highness by his former wife. It is also observed that his Royal Highness has been bequeathed to the various charitable institutions of which his Royal Highness was the munificent patron.

Brighton Gazette.
Sir Henry Hardinge has instructed his majesty's respecting the expediency of granting to soldiers a furlough of ten days service, to encourage a better class of persons to enter in the army.—Record.

A court for the declaration of the will of the late Henry Allen, publisher here, has been established at Stratford, and has received so well that the example is about to be followed in Leipzig.—Ibid.

A Spanish journal states, that in consequence of the abundance of the growth of oranges of the excellent quality in the south of Spain, and the difficulty of disposing of them for exportation at a good price, several of the growers convert them into wine, which is said to be of a delicious taste, and resembling much in favour the wine of Madeira.—Ibid.

THE WINE TRADE.—The breaking off of the negotiations with Portugal and Brazil, for establishing more liberal commercial treaties, will at least remove the state of suspense in which merchants trading with those countries have been so long kept. The falling off in port wine sales during the year 1846, will show the immense effect it has had, being no less than 1,361,250 gallons, as compared with the average number on which duty was paid for the three preceding years, and which at S. 6d. per gallon, and five per cent. duty, shows a loss to the revenue in 1846, of 300,175*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.*—Record.

We learn from a source on which we can place every reliance, that an intended change is shortly about to take place in the uniforms of the grades of officers in Her Majesty's navy.—Hampshire Telegraph.

A Bill has been introduced in the State Legislature of Pennsylvania, providing for the incorporation of a company, to whom shall be sold the principal State works. The object is, to appropriate the proceeds of such sale to a diminution of the State debt.—Record.

EMPLOYMENT OF CONVICTS IN THE DOCK-YARDS.—The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have ordered the officers of the dock-yards in which convicts are employed to furnish a report of the number of labourers it would be necessary to do the same amount of work as 100 convicts, and the difference of expense, taking into account the cost of the bulks, &c. This order is received by the friends of the honest labourer of the country, for they cannot but hope that it is only a preliminary step towards the entire abolition of convict labour from the anarchy.—Ibid.

IMPROVEMENT IN SHIPPING.—It is only a short time since our docks had an unusual number of vessels at whose masts had a broken was fixed, denoting that the sea was high; but within the last week the signs of depressed times has so rapidly decreased that there are now scarcely a dozen vessels advertised for sale; the others having been either contemptuously cheapened or sold. From this we may conjecture a speedy increase in the demand for export goods.—Lampard Standard.

DISCIPLINE OF THE NAVY.—The fact that the ships' companies of the three ships have manifested an opinion as to the estimation in which the hold officers have attracted the attention of the Admiralty. Within these few days, the crew of the Herald thought proper to obstruct Lieutenant Doreen on his return to his ship, after a slight sentence from a court-martial; and for this their Lordships have issued a decree of their disapprobation of the crew of the Herald, it being contrary to the naval instructions; and to those instructions they direct the attention of commanding-officers as regarding this point. It being in the opinion of the Admiralty, a strong proof of a lax discipline whenever the same were permitted to indulge in it. To the credit of Captain Elliot, the late Captain of the Spartan frigate, we are bound to record that he very shortly after returning on board, from the recent court-martial, turned the hands up, and expressed his sense of the breach of discipline they had been guilty of, though he felt grateful for the feeling they had evinced towards him. If men are permitted thus to express their approbation, who shall say how soon they will show their disapprobation, and then what becomes of the discipline of the service?—Hampshire Paper.

ENGINEER BEATLITY.—We hardly know, apart from serious crimes against the person of a more atrocious offence than the following, communicated in a private letter to a gentleman of this city, and from which we have been permitted to make an extract:—"Butts (Michele), April 30, 1843.

"I think I named you in a former note that I was exhibiting here, since which I have learnt that it belongs to Mr. Brett, of London, who, I believe, you have some knowledge of. But grieved am I to tell you, that some miserable low creature, between four and five o'clock, cut a piece about twelve inches by eight, out of the centre of it, in the temporary absence from the room of the King. The slave, with uplifted hands, with the promise king and warlike in armour in the part cut out, and fished away, and no trace of it was left of the parties who committed this execrable act, belonging to the town and immediately after he had left the room, the men, on going in, observed that the light was excluded, and on opening the window the darkness was made." The picture was valued at 1,000 guineas, and was being disposed of at auction, at 1*l.* 1*s.* each, the list of which was just completed.—Bristol Gazette.

THREATS OF THE IRISH.—Living observed, some eighteen months since, in your paper, about the nature of the threats which were made at the home asylum of this town, it may not be uninteresting to you and readers to know the result of that experiment, and how far the attempt has succeeded the intentions of the philanthropist and zealous director.

First allow me a few preparatory remarks. England boasts itself, and justly, as the cradle of those civilizing ideas which have been the basis of the progress of the human race, and in France, where that spirit of innovation so much attracted, few names are more honoured than that of Dr. Ellis. And even if the English, too, the French are not in advance even of the English in their treatment.

The present director, Dr. Girard de Caillères, was named here in 1839, in view of the law of 1839, for centralizing the lunatic asylums, and for the Hospital, as all those in France at that epoch, under the dominion of religious, and without any incident of violence, were sent to the asylums, and in some, that is, cell, asceticism, and straight waistcoat. The number of the former was to the inmates as 46 for 150 patients, and 23 more were actually contracted for when the change took place. The patients were like wild beasts, and left all day without employment. Need I say the cure was few? This treatment was immediately changed; a social life was changed for seclusion, employment was gradually given to all, idiots excepted; every kind of amusement was furnished, music and reading introduced; and such has been the effect, that about a month since, when conducted over the asylum, we were permitted to assist at the order and regularly every day remarkable, and as the cheerfulness and uniform politeness of all the patients, and the order of the establishment, more than a well regulated almshouse. The cells were everywhere empty, the doctors full. The patients are all present at meals. They walk, they promenade together, and in the evening they are seated in the parlours, and almost all the work of the house is performed by the patients. We found the tailors, shoemakers, carpenters, sempstresses, spinners, laundresses, all employed; and those who have no handicraft skill, work in the garden, cultivate the land, or are employed in digging a canal for bringing a supply of water to the establishment, street-cleaning for boys, boats, &c., and the least able at maim-making.

Monday, the 26th, was the anniversary of the establishment, and a great many in music were requested to perform by the inmates. Yes, and well executed too. The singers, about 50, were in the gallery, and the work was filled by about 120 patients. What a cheering sight! The contrast between the inmates and the pressure the patients appeared to be, all dressed in new clothes, entirely made by themselves, and proud of their power to unite together and give delight to others. Their respective occupations in the town: the prêt, the maître, judge, director, engineers, with their wives and families, who came to witness and applaud the complete success of this philanthropic experiment.

I could give you many curious illustrations of the effects produced by the music in particular cases, but general results are, perhaps, best suited to your readers, and here they are:—In two years (1841-2) 44 patients have been discharged as cured out of an average of 180 patients;—paupers nearly all, and only six to the establishment when it is impossible to have them longer at liberty in their communities.

Auxerre, 28th March, 1843.—Alcibiades.

RUSSIA AND SERBIA.—The Augsburg Gazette of the 30th ult. states, that Russia has confined her interference in Serbian affairs to the fact of requiring from the Ottoman Porte that a new election should take place in that province in a legal form. The Porte is consequently not to exclude any candidate who may be displeasing to them, and likewise to limit the dignity of the Sovereign to the life of the Prince elected. "It is therefore evident," adds the Gazette, "that Russia has no intention to interfere with the will relative to the question of principle, and that, consequently, the Emperor Nicholas has confined himself within legitimate bounds."—Record.

GOVERNMENT NOTIFICATIONS.

ORDERS BY THE HONOURABLE THE DEPUTY SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

24th July, 1843.

Mr. D. Pringle to be Civil and Sessions Judge of Tir.

Mr. E. V. Lewis to be Collector of Tirhoot.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

Mr. J. H. Young, Officer of Police, to be Collector of Tir.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 447. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, JULY 27th. 1843.

Price 3 Cts. 6s. monthly, or 30
Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.

OVERLAND MAIL.

THE Bombay Government having fixed on the 30th of August, for the departure of the new Mail Steamer of September, notice is hereby given, that the latest safe date for the transmission of letters from Calcutta, which may be introduced for that opportunity, will be Thursday, the 10th inst.

W. MOORE,
Deputy Post Master.

General Post Office, July 10th, 1843.

THE BISHOP OF MADRAS AND THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The Madras Record of the 4th instant has a rumour that the Bishop of Madras had refused to ordain a gentleman connected with the Church Missionary Society on no other ground than that he was so connected; and adds, that the domineering spirit manifested by the present Diocesan more especially when contrasted with the humble piety of his predecessor Bishop Corrie, is not calculated to increase his own popularity. A correspondent of the Herkara, a Churchman's, addressed a letter to the Editor on Saturday last, in which he asserts that the Record has not stated the whole truth, and enters upon a vindication of his Lordship's proceedings. The subject is not without some general interest, as it serves to illustrate the tendency and development of Puseyism in India. The circumstances on which this refusal is grounded are these. A Missionary connected with the Church Society at the Madras Presidency, had exhibited very unequivocal evidence of belonging to the Puseyite School. The Madras Committee of the Society pronounced him to be disqualified from labouring in connection with the Church Missionary Society. The parent Society concurred with their local Committee, and the Revd. Mr. — was, as the Churchman says, "expelled from the performance of the duties to which he had been licensed by the Bishop, and from which his Lordship had never relieved him"—in other words, the Church Missionary Society refused to devote the funds entrusted to them to the propagation of Puseyism, and the connection between the Society and the Missionary was dissolved. The Churchman is no suspect somewhat of a Puseyite himself, for he denounces this measure as a flagrant instance of the Society's "entrenching on the spiritual independence of the Missionary, and trespassing upon the ecclesiastical powers of the Bishop himself." He styles it a "trampling on an office, the purity, dignity and independence of which the Bishop is bound by his consecration vows to maintain." And as the Society had "deliberately insulted the very order which they vished the Bishop to confer;—as the Society would neither confess their delinquency, nor guarantee its non-repetition in future," the Bishop refused "to trust the sanctity of the priesthood to their patronage;" that is, refused to ordain the candidate of the Church Missionary Society.

We need not stop to examine the nature of this reasoning, we look only at its practical effect on the operations of the Church Missionary Society. It is of course well known that the Hundred Thousand Pounds sterling subscribed to that Association in England is entrusted to its agency for propagating the doctrines of the Gospel, as received by Protestants; and that any subscriber who thought his money would be devoted to the propagation of Puseyism, would at once withdraw his support from it. The Puseyites give their money to the Gospel Propagation Society. Now according to the doctrine laid down by A. Churchman, the Church Missionary Society has no kind of control over its Ministers on the most important of all questions, the doctrines they teach the Heathen. The business of the Society, as it appears, is to find the money; it is the province of the Bishop to judge of the doctrine; and until the Bishop shall denounce any doctrine which the Missionary may think fit to propagate, the Society is bound to maintain him in the dissemination of them. If for instance, any Missionary were to preach to the heathen the doctrine of transubstantiation, and of the sacrifice of the mass, as inculcated by Dr. Pusey on a recent occasion in the University pulpit in Oxford, and the Bishop of Madras were to concur with the Puseyites in maintaining that these doctrines are in strict accordance with the ritual of the Church of England, the Church Society are without remedy. They must continue to support their missionary, and assist in the propagation of religious sentiments which they and their constituents hold in abhorrence. And it seems that the Bishop of Madras refuses to grant ordination to any candidates, until the Society shall not only express their contrition for having cut off the Rev. Mr. — from their connection, but promise never to repeat the transgression; that is, until they shall bring themselves under an obligation to leave all spiritual questions of doctrine to the sole decision of the Bishop. Now as it is impossible for the Church Missionary Society thus to tie up their own hands, and solemnly renounce the power of withholding support from any Missionary who may think fit to teach Puseyism, in as much as this would inevitably lead to the extinction of the Society; and as on the other hand, the Bishop, as it would appear from A. Churchman's letter, is "bound by his consecration vows," not to ordain any candidate for the Society unless they will part with the power of dismissal in such cases, and leave all questions of Doctrine to the Bishop, whoever he may chance to be, both parties are in a position which, brother Jonathan would call a "fix."

The ground upon which the Bishop's demand on the Society is founded, is hinted by A. Churchman to be that "the Church of England requires her candidates for ordination to produce titles from some respectable quarter, whereby they may be secured from the temptation of engaging in secular labours for their livelihood, before they can be admitted into the sacred ministry. If a Bishop confer such an order without seeing his candidates so secured by a satisfactory title, he is bound to maintain them himself, in order to prevent the desecration of their sacerdotal office by entrance into secular work." He adds, "the Bishop cannot be expected to make ministers for a Society which assumes the power of unmaking them without ever consulting him." As to the unmaking a clergyman here charged on the Society, it is evidently introduced in order to round the last sentence of the letter; but it is singularly misplaced. The Churchman ought to have known the principles of his own Church better than to suppose that it is in the power of any body of men to destroy Holy orders which are in their own nature indelible. The Society has not unmade him. He is now on his way to India as a Chaplain on this establishment, on 500 Rs. a month; and, if the Churchman will forgive a little pleantry on a very gloomy subject, the Society may really be said to have been the making of the Missionary, and as far as he is entitled to his gratitude. The Correspondent of the Herkara appears also to be incorrect in stating that this title from some respectable quarter,—which corresponds with what is designated among the Dissenters as a "Call"—is intended to secure candidates from the temptation of engaging in secular labour before they can be admitted into the Church. The writer evidently means after they have been admitted. The Church cannot be supposed to care much about the avocations of a candidate, before he is brought within the pale of the apostolical succession. It is only to his subsequent conduct, after imposition of hands, that its anxieties are directed, lest "the sacerdotal office should be desecrated" by the Clerk's engaging, like the Apostle Paul, in any secular employment.

As to the general argument, the reasons given by A. Churchman for this regulation of a title, are unfortunately too original to be of any value, for they are not in the Canon to which he alludes, which is altogether silent as to motives, and simply says, "We do ordain that henceforth, no person shall be admitted into sacred orders, except he shall at the time exhibit to the Bishop of whom he desireth the imposition of hands, a presentation of himself to some ecclesiastical preferment then void in the diocese, or shall bring to the said Bishop a true and undoubted certificate that either he is provided of some church within the said diocese where he may attend the cure of souls, or of some minister's place vacant either in the Cathedral Church of that diocese, or in some other Collegiate Church therein also situate, where he may exercise his ministry.... And if any Bishop shall admit any person into the ministry that hath none of these titles, then he shall keep and maintain him with all things necessary till he do prefer him to some ecclesiastical living." And the penalty for a Bishop's refusing thus to support him is, suspension from the faculty of giving orders for a whole year. But this Canon simply prohibits the Bishop's ordaining without a certificate: it does not compel the individual who gave the title or certificate to continue the minister in the ecclesiastical preferment. It is true that in ancient times, the names of the persons who granted the titles were entered in the acts of ordination as "standing engaged;" as a testimony against the person entering, in case the clerk (ordained on such title) should at any time want convenient maintenance. In the register of Archbishop Winchelsey there is "an order to a Bishop to oblige a Clergyman who had given a title of a certain annual sum to pay it till the Clerk should be provided for." There is but one Archbishop Winchelsey in the list of Archbishops, and he flourished in the days of Edward the II. We believe the rule has long since been obsolete, and that it is never acted on. All that the ecclesiastical law demands is, that the Bishop shall be satisfied of the candidate's having "a predilection to some ecclesiastical profession," before he ordains him. After ordination, the Cleric is left to his own resources; there is no stipend in the part of the individual who gave the little to maintain him for life, or even for a twelvemonth. A Rector or a Vicar appoints a man to a Curacy, in order to give him a title to holy orders, but till poor Curate is contented at the mercy of his patron; and may be dismissed any day without ceremony. Such at least is the impression of the practice in England, and we believe that in no instance is the grant of the certificate considered to create any obligation on the part of the grantor. All the authorities we have been able to consult concur in maintaining that an assistant curate to a Rector or Vicar is removable at pleasure. No Bishop would therefore be at liberty to refuse ordination upon a title or certificate, on the ground that the clergyman refused to bind himself not to displace the newly ordained clerk; and, by parity of reasoning, the Bishop of Madras is not constrained by "his consecration," to refuse ordination to a candidate of the Church Missionary Society on the ground that they refuse to come under an engagement to grant perpetual support to the Missionary, whatever doctrine he may teach, till the Bishop shall see fit to disapprove of them.

DOUBLE RATIONS TO CONVICTS.—We are happy to perceive that the Deputy Governor, on the recommendation of the Medical Board, has been pleased to order that the convicts shall in future be furnished with two cooked meals during the twenty-four hours. As measures of humanity, this rule will meet with general commendation. For men employed like the convicts in hard labour, of course, a single meal of cooked food in the day is utterly inadequate. It was an unnecessary aggravation of the punishment awarded them by the law, to subject them to a long and painful fast, and expose them to those bodily complaints which inadequacy of nourishment was sure to produce. It is much to be feared that the mortality which has been exhibited in the returns from some of the jails may be in some measure attributed to the rule which limited them to a single meal a day. The principle of the ration system is sound. It subjects men who have disturbed the peace of society to restrictions, which form a very appropriate part of their punishment, and deters them from those enjoyments which would injudiciously lighten it. But while the new system is rigidly maintained wherever it can be introduced without affecting the caste of the parties, it is equally necessary that the quantity of food supplied to the convicts should be such as fully to sustain life, and to keep them in a healthy state. The new rule, combined with the directions given by Mr. Bird that the quantity of food allowed by Government shall be faithfully given to them, will secure this object, and wipe out the suspicion of cruelty.

MR. BIRD'S RE-APPOINTMENT TO COUNCIL.—THE TAMAR ELEPHANT.—The prolongation of Mr. Bird's tenure of office in Council announced by the last Mail, and his appointment as Deputy Governor of Bengal, appear to have given general satisfaction. The Englishman's London Correspondent has however given some cause of a whimsical turn to the appointment, which, of course, were reflections. He appears to be somewhat pointed to blame for the decision of the Council of Directors, as though they had never intended this prerogative in the case of individuals who had acquired their confidence; and under the idea that the additional year of service given to Mr. Bird has reference to the state of the Council, he adopts the conclusion that a kind of star is thereby cast on the other members of that Board, more especially on Mr. W. Casteen. The conclusion however is far from conclusive. It does not follow, because the Home Authorities may desire to detain a particular member in Council for an additional twelvemonth, that they thereby disapprove all his fellow councillors. Mr. William's period of service expires in June next year; and we cannot see how his interest, or his honour can in the most remote degree be affected by Mr. Bird's continuance, which neither hastens nor retards the lapse of his tour. The Correspondent of our contemporary has been very diligent in endeavoring to discover the secret springs of this measure; and he fancies he has found them in Mr. Cotton's relationship to Mr. Bird, Mr. Cotton being the Chairman of the year. But lest this conjecture should prove groundless, which it needed no conjure to predict it would, he has another resource in the fact of Lord Ellenborough's being still a wild elephant, who can be subdued and civilized only by tame elephants. So the Court having, by the aid of letters misive, succeeded in bringing the Governor General down to the Council Board, have determined to keep Mr. Bird to act the tame elephant.

It is however quite possible that the Correspondent may be entirely wrong in his conjectures; that the wild and the tame elephant may after all be on such terms of cordiality as to render the idea of any control on the one part, and submission on the other, ridiculous. Judging indeed from the appointment of Mr. Bird to the Government of Bengal by the Governor General on the day of his return, before the mail had announced the Court's determination, we are rather inclined to think that the prolongation of Mr. Bird's tenure of office, is in accordance with Lord Ellenborough's own wishes, rather than in opposition to them. So far as an Editor may judge from appearances, we should suppose that Lord Ellenborough had so much reason to be satisfied with Mr. Bird's management of the Lower Provinces, as to feel a strong desire to prolong the arrangement, in order that he might have leisure to attend to the general interests of the Empire. For the accomplishment of this plan it was necessary that Mr. Bird should be continued in Council after five years had expired, seeing he had resigned the service, and after the 15th of October was debarr'd by act of Parliament from holding the Government of Bengal, or any office whatever. It would appear therefore that the resolution to prolong the administration of Bengal in his hands was the cause of his continuance in Council. And it is only to suppose that his services had been as much appreciated by his Masters in Lendalhall Street as they have been by the Governor General, to account for the extra year of labour and honour, without any reference to his relationship to Mr. Cotton, or his being selected to act the part of the tame elephant.

Without attempting to offer any fulsome flattery on this occasion to Mr. Bird, or to obtrude any congratulations on the country, we may still be at liberty to say that the decision of the Court, combined with the arrangement effected by Lord Ellenborough is very satisfactory. Mr. Bird is the last Deputy Governor who has identified himself with the improvement of the Bengal Provinces; and the present is the first instance in which the government of them has been separated from other and distracting responsibilities. We look forward, therefore with confidence during the next sixteen months to a series of beneficial measures grounded upon the intimate knowledge of the country and its wants which those who occupy the burden of Bengal, are known to possess, and calculated to simplify and improve the administration in every department.

EXPENSE OF MAINTAINING SINGAPORE AS COMPARED WITH ITS VALUE.—The Singapore Free Press of the 8th June last furnished us with a statement of the receipts and disbursements of that Settlement, and in that of the 22d of June we have the number of ships which arrived at and left the island, together with their tonnage for the year 1848-49. From these important documents we learn that although Singapore is a free Port, without a single export or import duty, its revenues during this period, amounted to 200,000 Rupees; and strange to say, the expenditure was only 49,029 Rupees, leaving a surplus of 15,000 Rupees. This is the first year in which the expenditure has not exceeded the income. The amount, as inserted in this account, includes every charge of every description, save indeed of which ought never to be imposed on the local revenues of the island. Thus it not only comprises the Civil charges of the island, 226,721 Rupees, as well as those in the Military branch, 153,087 Rupees, but one-third of the expense of the general Government, and of the Dixie Steamer and the gun boats, as well as 15,166 Rs. for the magnetic observations conducted by Lieutenant Elliott and his assistants; and nearly 50,000 Rupees for the expenses of the convicts with which it is peopled from the continent of India. The Singapore Free Press considers that the expenditure might be still further reduced, by dispensing with the office of Governor altogether, who is said to be of no more use to the settlement than the man in the moon. This is a very sublime simile, and we cannot take on ourselves to pronounce how far it may be correct; but to those who are not deeper in the secret than we are, there seems to be no adequate necessity for a separate Governor to look after the three subordinate Chiefs of three Settlements, whose united income does not exceed that of many Zillahs at this Presidency, and which, with the aid of Steam, are now brought as near to the seat of the Supreme Government as Bombay. That Journal also begrudges the Salary of the Registrar of the Court, all whose duties are performed at Singapore by the sworn Clerk. If this be correct, the value of this sinecure 18000 a year, ought certainly to be saved to the Settlements. The charge for convicts might also be reconsidered with reference to the justice of carrying it to the separate account of the provinces, which the practice of transportation benefits. Barrington, on being transported to New South Wales, wrote a prologue to a play which opened with this stanza:

"True patriots we, for he is understood,
We left our country for our country's good."
Now the 1185 convicts who are at Singapore, are sent thither primarily for the benefit of the three Presidencies which are gainers by their absence. If, therefore, their services are not required in that colony, or if those services could be obtained cheaper, by free than by convict labour, the charge ought to fall on the transporting, and not on the penal settlements. The expenses of the Magnetic observations ought to be borne by Great Britain. It is quite enough that she enjoys the benefit of such an establishment for her manufactures, gratis. It is ungrateful to saddle the tender resources of the island with the cost of her own scientific experiments. If the items we have alluded to were equitably adjusted, there would remain a surplus of some 50 or 60,000 Rupees a year for local improvements, and sound policy demands that this sum, created by the enterprise of this rising and valuable settlement, should be correctly devoted to that object.

It is impossible to contemplate the state of property which the colony has now reached without a strong feeling of exultation. Here is a maritime entrepôt, in one of the most advantageous commercial positions in the world, to which during the past year 555 square rigged vessels resorted, and 2834 native vessels, from the various ports and islands in the Archipelago. The burden of these vessels was 368,000 tons, and the value of the goods they imported and exported amounted to 750 crores of Rupees. This settlement is maintained at an expense not exceeding 30,000, a year! and this sum is raised on the island itself. All the advantages which it confers, directly and collaterally, on British commerce in the Eastern seas, are gained without one farthing of expense to the mother country. We question whether the records of the Colonial office could shew us any Crown colony, of equal importance and value, which is managed with the same economy; or which makes no annual demand on the British Exchequer. Singapore stands almost alone in our colonial establishments, as a self-supporting colony.

Looking thus as we now do, at the principle of rigid economy which appears to pervade every branch of the expenditure at Singapore, and which has produced such large results at so small an outlay, we cannot avoid noticing the contrast it affords to the expensive establishment at Bencoolen, which we wisely relinquished to the Dutch, after it had swallowed a mass of money. We believe that if the profligate extravagance which marked the public expenditure of the ten years preceding the cession of that place; and the systematic—we had almost said the unprincipled—proceedings by which the public was fleeced, and private fortunes were accumulated, were laid bare, it would be regarded with an incredulous smile in this reformed and economical age. There are two jobs, which for the benefit of society, we have long desired to be fully exposed in all their naked deformity. The one is, that Imperial job; that job of all jobs, the Carnatic and Tanjore Commission, after it had dexterously obtained an Act of the legislative decreeing that, like the Long Parliament, it was not to be dissolved except with its own consent; and the other is the last of Colonial jobs in the East, the great Bencoolen job, in which every functionary from the highest to the lowest, seemed to be animated by one impulse, that of making the most of his position, at the expense of the state.

This allusion to Singapore reminds us that we have been culpably negligent in not bringing forward the claims of Mr. Moor's family on the generosity of the public. He was formerly Editor of the Malacca Observer, the Singapore Chronicle and the Singapore Free Press. In 1837 he published a valuable collection of Notices of the Indian Archipelago and adjacent countries. He was subsequently entrusted with the charge of the Singapore Free School, in the management of which he appears to have earned the approbation and confidence of his supporters. He has now sunk into the grave, bequeathing a widow and eight unprovided children to the sympathy of the public. The gentlemen at Singapore who were acquainted with his worth, have opened a subscription for their relief; and express a hope that though he was little known to the community of this Presidency, the fact of his public labors both as an Editor and as an instructor of youth in a neighbouring settlement, combined with the very destitute condition in which he has left his family, will not fail to draw forth those generous feelings which have seldom been appealed to in vain.

Bacon's NOVEN ORGANUM.—The Rev. T. Smith, of the General Assembly's Institution, has just conferred a great boon on the youth of this country, by preparing and carrying through the press an English translation of Bacon's Novum Organum, for the Christian School Book Society. A translation of this treatise appeared in England in 1818, but its defects both in point of style and fidelity were glaring; and scarcely a copy of it was to be obtained in this country. The Novum Organum was therefore a sealed book to the native youth, whose minds have been expanded by instruction, and who may be supposed to have imbibed an anxiety to examine a work so celebrated in all countries during the last two centuries. Mr. Smith has placed it within their reach, in a simple and attractive style. We hope most cordially, that notwithstanding the secession from the Kirk, of those who have taken the warmest interest in the Assembly's Institution, and with whom the Miscellaneous are identified in feeling and in position, there will be no interruption of their valuable labors, and that Mr. Smith may long enjoy the opportunity of inculcating on the minds of youth, those important truths which he has now enabled them to study.

THE LATE GENERAL ELPHINSTONE.—The apparent discrepancy between Lieut. Eyre's representation of Capt. Sturt's advice relative to the attack on Mahomed Shurreef's fort on the evening of the 4th of November has induced him to come forward with full particulars of the events of that memorable night. We have extracted the most material portion of his letter which appeared in the Herald of the 13th Instant, and placed it among our selections. It is as important as any part of his interesting narrative, and in one point of view, infinitely more so. It lets us, so to speak, into the real secret of the destruction which befel our force; and enables us to trace it distinctly to the total want of confidence in his own judgement, which the General in chief exhibited on every occasion, and to that essential weakness, and indecision on his part, which neutralized the ability, zeal and courage of the subordinate officers. The transactions of that single night show at once that with such incapacity at the head of affairs, the army was doomed from the first to annihilation, and that nothing but a miracle could have saved it.

There were but three days' provisions when the insurrection broke out in the cantonments. All the Commissariat stores were in a fort at a little distance from them; which was closely besieged by the enemy, and defended only by one officer and a few men. He had repeatedly sent intelligence of his critical position and impotency for succor. Between the Commissariat and the Cantonments, lay Mahomed Shurreef's fort, which it was necessary to capture before it could be relieved. It was painfully felt that the loss of the supplies it contained, must prove fatal to the hopes of the army, and leave it no other prospect, but that of a dreary winter without provisions. The salvation of the troops appeared to hang upon the success of the effort to be made that night to capture Shurreef's fort and relieve the Commissariat fort. With these feelings, the emergency of that crisis, and the value of moments, a meeting of officers took place at the General's House on the night of the 4th at which Sir W. Macnaghten was present. It will appear utterly incredible to the world, that the propriety of attempting the capture of the fort was made a matter of débat even for a moment; yet it is a lamentable fact that it was debated for hours, and that some of the officers present brought arguments against the measure. General Elphinstone, after the matter had been long discussed without any favourable result, told Lieut. Eyre into his private room and asked his advice. He urged the expediency of assaulting it without delay. The General then alluded to the severe loss sustained in the ally of the previous day under Capt. Swayne, and said that he feared a repetition of that same, and could not bear to contemplate such a sacrifice of life. Lieut. Eyre replied that no secondary consideration should be weighed in the balance against a measure which involved the honour and safety of the army. The General walked about the room in great agitation, urging the same objections. At length, he opened the door and called in Major Thain and Capt. Grant, and consulted them, flying off repeatedly to other subjects totally irrelevant. To fix his determination, it was proposed to consult Capt. Sturt, the only Engineer officer in the garrison. The General again seized the idea, as one that released him from the burden of responsibility. He ordered Lieut. Eyre to go to his quarters, but above all to tell him that the enemy was on the alert in the Fort. Sturt said that the Fort must undoubtedly be taken before morning, but so far gave in to the General's views as to fix the hour of departure at 3 A. M. This reply was reported to the General, and his repugnance was not overcome, and he began to narrate stories of misadventure which had befallen the troops in the Peninsula, in successful expeditions. At length he was brought, at midnight, to consent to the attack, but postponed the hour from 3 to 4. Four o'clock came without any preparations, and it was broad day light before the troops were got together; when, just as they were about to start, intelligence was brought that the Commissariat Fort was in the hands of the enemy!

After this detail of the transactions of this memorable night, when the salvation of the army depended on the improvement of moments, the subsequent destruction seems to be a matter of surprise. The same lack of energy, the same spirit of procrastination marked every subsequent movement. Even when the right thing had been determined on, after dreary and sickening discussion, it was not done at the right time. This unhappy temper of the General, the result of age and infirmity, soon became contagious, and diffused a universal despondency through the whole body of the army, which soon lost the characteristic distinction of British soldiers, and eventually allowed itself to be harassed, defeated, starved and massacred by a foe, while the least display of energy in the General, would have enabled the troops to pursue due as they had done before, and have since done in every instance.

It has become the fashion of the day to decry the "Politicians," as they are called by way of contempt, and to ascribe our expulsion from Afghanistan to their mismanagement. In every instance of national disaster and misfortune, the Government and the community stand a victim. On the present occasion of the direct calamity which has ever befallen our arms, the officers to whom the political administration of that country was entrusted, have been selected for the sacrifice, and they have been punished with the most virulent obloquy, till the very term "politician" has become a byword of reproach. As it regards the wisdom of appointing Political Agents to the various provinces of Afghanistan, after it had been adjudged, not a little may be said on both sides of the question. The division of responsibility and the clashing of power which it entailed, was injudicious and even inconsistent. The authority to direct the tolls of Akbar Khan, is allowed by the common consent of all to have been beyond all price. Every movement of the troops which was crowned with success, owed its origin not so much to his command, as to his impetuosity. If he had not unchallenged been thwarted by men who hesitated and grumbled when they should have acted; if there had been at the head of that army, an officer who breathed the same daring and noble spirit with the Navey, the winter of 1841 would not have been the darkest period of our Indian History. We are confident that when the animosities and prejudices of the present generation have been interred in its grave, and the Historian sits down to do justice to the actors in those transactions, the services of the Pollocks will not be overlooked, and that the present judgement regarding them will be reversed.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JULY 20.

— The Star mentioned yesterday that information had been received by the last mail, of the appointment of Sir Lawrence Peel, as Legislative member of the Supreme Council. It is contradicted in this morning's issue. It was supposed at one time that the office would be abolished, but the advantage of having the disposal of such a piece of patronage, worth more than the post of any other office, was too great to be lost. The decision, will be only weighed by the Ministry before it is thrown away. Why should not the Advocate General, who is paid 3000*£* a year, act as legal adviser in the preparation of laws, which require a reference to English legislation? Hitherto the Advocate General have been men fully qualified by their legal experience and acumen to assist such assistance. If it is possible to say that the office is not wanted, it would be better to direct the Government to discontinue the office irretrievably to all up that office on the ground of merit and on no other.

— We have been favoured with a letter from Captain Biddulph at Darjeling, stating that the report of his having discovered the Tea plant in that locality is entirely groundless.

— The Star gives an account in this morning's number, of the capture and death of an enormous Alligator at Akra, on Saturday evening last. We have placed the whole article, though somewhat lengthy, among our selections.

— Sir Hugh Gough may, we suppose, be daily expected at Calcutta to assume the command of the army. Garrison orders were issued by the Governor General on the 17th instant directing the whole of the troops in garrison, as well as the town guards to hold themselves in readiness to turn out in full dress, as might be hereafter directed to receive His Excellency.

— The Harbuz states that Mr. George Thompson reached Delhi on the 9th of the month. Three miles from the city he was met by half a dozen of the nobles of the Court with a large party of attendants and was conducted to the residence allotted to him on the king's elephant, richly caparisoned, with a glittering Howdah and splendid trappings. Every possible attention was shown him. It appears that no obstacle was made to his entering the palace, and the report that the Commissioner had forbidden it, is, therefore, as we suspected, utterly groundless.

FRIDAY, JULY 21.

— The accounts received through the Delhi Gazette of the innumerate proceedings of the too powerful Rajah Dhyana Sing, seem to indicate the approach of a conflict between the Sovereign and his Minister, which will probably end in the establishment of a paramount British influence in the Punjab. It is said that the Minister has appropriated ten crores of Rupees, or ten Millions Sterling, from the public treasury since the death of Ranjeet Sing. When called on to account for the expenditure of this sum; he said that it had been laid out in securing the allegiance of the troop, but he appears to have given no other explanation. It is known that a large portion of this sum has been abstracted from time to time from the treasury, and sent to Jumbo. The Khitral, in his natural oration, said he was the Raja's slave; but his actual acts show he was not. He has taken himself with a large force, to his own mountain fortress in Jumbo, and is accompanied by many chiefs of distinction. General Ventura is said to have been sent to bring him to reason. The country appears to be on the eve of a civil war. If at this juncture, a strong and united Government existed at Cabul, an effort would assuredly be made to recover the lost provinces of Peshawar, and to extend the Afghan dominion again to the banks of the Indus.

— The Raja Kulekiesin Bahadour, again figures in the papers of this morning. He got up a translation of a Samskrit work, the Maha Natak, with the aid of others, and sent copies of it to all the Kings and princes of the earth to whom he could obtain access, and their flattering acknowledgments have from time to time been sent to the public journals for publication. On the present occasion, he announces the receipt of a letter from the King of Prussia. We suppose that as an amiable intercourse has been maintained between the King of Prussia and the British Government, a copy of the Maha Natak, will be sent forthwith to Peking, and that the papers will be called on to minister anew to the Raja's vanity, as no distant period by the publication of a letter signed with the vermilion pencil.

— The Star, in reference to the announcement of Sir Lawrence Peel's having been appointed a Legislative member of the Council of India, states this morning, that the post has been offered to him. The Chief Justiceship is worth 8000*l.* a year; with a retiring pension of, we believe, 1500*l.* a year, after ten years service. The situation in the Supreme Council gives 10,000*l.* a year, without any pension.

—The Star of this morning states that notwithstanding the vigilance of the British officers in Scinde, the Ameer Sherre Mahomed had contrived to cross the Indus and had betaken himself to the mountains of Delochistan, where he will endeavour to raise the tribes, and bring them down to the reconquest of the country.

— The same paper has a long and interesting article on the Assam Tea Company which the Editor says, "promises well, all things considered." It appears however that the extravagance of expenditure which has marked its career, from the beginning has not ceased; and an agent is to be deputed to Assam to examine the establishments. Is it true, that Mr. Masters, the only practical botanist connected with the Society, has been dismissed?

— The Hurkare states, that an army of observation, 15,000 strong, will be assembled in the ensuing cold weather on the Seikh frontier, under the command of Sir Robert Dick.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 22.

— The Express reached Calcutta last Monday afternoon. Up to yesterday evening, the first instalment of the regular mail had not arrived. Seldem has the patience of Editors, and of the community been put to so severe a test, and we are sorry to say the strength of this virtue has not been improved by the experiment.

— A number of the Christian officers, commissioned and non-commissioned, who were employed in the service of Seloules, have addressed a letter to the Rev. Mr. Price, the Chaplain at Agajoye, their grievances before him, and stating that they were seized, tied up to the guns, abused, kicked, thrumped, and cruelly and unmercifully belaboured, besides being deprived of eight month's arrears of pay. It is not a case in which the British Government can interfere. Nothing can be done for them, but through the sympathy and generosity of private individuals.

— A general meeting of the Dundum Temperance Society was held on the evening of the 18th for the purpose of presenting Sergeant Major Wolfe, with a silver medal, having a suitable inscription previous to his leaving the station, and proceeding to Agra. It is a testimonial of the respect and esteem of the members of the Society for his unswerving endeavours and disinterested zeal in promoting the cause of Temperance.

MONDAY, JULY 28.

— Saturday's Calcutta Gazette contains an extract from a letter of the Court of Directors relative to the splendid victory gained by the troops under Sir Charles Napier on the banks of the Pulahies, in February last. The Honourable Court have postponed the bestowal of marks of distinction on the Troops, having heard that there had been a subsequent battle in which they trust another victory had been achieved. In this they will not be disappointed. The most gratifying portion of this despatch is that in which the Court have applied an omission in Lord Ellenborough's notification, and made the most honourable mention of Major Outram's services, giving the stamp of their own authority to the epithet "the fearless and distinguished Major Outram," bestowed on him by Sir Charles Napier.

— The Star states on the authority of letters from England that Mr. Dyer Soudra had become deranged in intellect, and is placed in a lunatic asylum. The borough of Sudbury, with which his name is so disgracefully associated, retains its franchise. The papers brought by the last Mail state that the Bill for disfranchising it, which had passed the Commons, had been thrown out by the Lords, because general bribery and corruption could not be proved against it. It was saved because ten righteous men were found therein.

The Dail Gazette affirms that Shah Kamara was never murdered, that the Persian Monarch, whose composition of Haris is confirmed, has commenced the eulogy of him in his own name at that place. Central Asia is thus again in confusion as it was in 1838; and, to add to the confusion, we have now the prospect of disturbances in the Punjab. The Affghans, when we were quitting their country last year remarked to several of the officers that we should assuredly be back there before many years had elapsed. Will their prophecy turn out to be as correct as that of Don Mahomed, who long before there was any appearance of the insurrection, affirmed that the country could not be settled without him, and that he should be at Cabul in two years?

— A meeting of the Creditors of Messrs. Ferguson and Co. was held on Saturday, Mr. Beek with in the Chair. There were 39 or 40 gentlemen present, and it was resolved to cancel the trust deed, and to transfer the estate to the insolvent Court. When the trust was originally established, it was remarked that the estate could not long be kept out of the Court. It is affirmed and believed that the intermediate operation of the trust has been beneficial to the interests of the creditors.

— The matter of the appointment of Mr. Serle, as Registrar of the Supreme Court at Malacca, has been again brought under the cognizance of the Court. There is evidently some under current of private interest, in this matter, which we as a distance are unable to discover, and which the Editors on the spot are too prudent to unfold. Whether the opposition arises from private disappointment or from public virtue, it is not for us to say, but it is rather a novel sight to see two Judges pulling one another's caps, or rather vice in open Court. We are told that the Chief Justice "was very severe in his language with reference to Sir John Norton, and the course which that Judge had pursued." We are also told that on the break-up of the Court, Sir John said he would have nothing to do with Mr. Serle's appointment, in any shape whatever, and looked as if he would carry the matter farther.

— We are happy to find from the Harkura, that Government has at length bestirred itself on the matter of the Dinagore district, which has been so long the scene of tyranny, oppression and torture. The Shristadar of the Civil and Sessions Court, who entered the office a beggar, and has been enabled upon a small salary of about 50 Rupees a month, to obtain landed property to the value of 150,000 Rs., which yields him a clear income, of 10,000 Rs. a year, or 1800 Rupees a month, has been expelled from his office. It is true that the creature with which he has filled every office, still remains, and that he himself is allowed to continue in the district; but though it may be a sufficient reason for removing a man from the head of an office, that the amassed property which he could not have come by honestly, it would be unjust to banish him from the district without a legal conviction; and in this case, banishment would be an inadequate punishment.

TUESDAY, JULY 28.

— A correspondent of the Harkura states, that "some short time back, the corpse of a respectable gentleman was seized by a bailiff of the Court of Requests for a certain sum of money due to a certain creditor, and the friends of the defunct were obliged to pay it before they got the remains removed for interment." Our contemporary states that the practice is illegal, though it was successfully applied to procure the payment of poor Sheridani's debts, when his friends allowed to view unopposed in a spunging house, and when his spirit had sunk under his misfortunes, paraded their carriages at his funeral.—We have under notice that the same disgraceful procedure was adopted in the case of William Pitt, and that the body was released by Parliament's paying his debts, but as the Harkura does not mention the circumstances, we conclude that our impression was erroneous. But how shall the Harkura identify the illegality of the act, obtain legal force, and prevent a creditor's resorting to this disgraceful practice for the payment of his debts, with this example of success before him?

— Mauritius papers to the 29th of June have been received; but they contain no other intelligence than that the Colony had been some time out of rice; yet such was its depressed condition that the few bags which remained, were with difficulty disposed of at a dollar the bag.

— We regret to learn from a London letter given in this morning's Harkura, that Mr. H. M. Parker, was far from well, quite unable to go, and that he had been advised to visit the German baths.

— At the last meeting of the Landholder's Society, Mr. O. Thompson was appointed Agent for the Society in England, and Mr. Thosbald accepted the office of honorary Secretary. An instance was brought to the knowledge of the Society of a Collector's having refused to receive Company's paper from a mortgagee for the postponement of the sale of an estate, when it was received immediately to memorialize Government on the subject.

— The Englishman's Gazette announces a Catholic Marriage between one Mr. Hoston and a Miss Corvelli, which is said to have been solemnized by "His Grace, the Most Reverend Dr. Carey, Lord Archbishop of Edoara, and Vicar Apostolic of Bengal."

— The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette complains that the Victoria Steamer has not brought any Magazines, or light reading. Thus it appears that the good people at Bombay have for once experienced a disappointment to which we have been but too often subject. This detention of this packet at Suva is much to be regretted, more especially as it contained the last Quarterly Review, which has evidently changed its tone towards the Protegees, and denounces them almost as violently as it formerly encouraged them.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 28.

— A grand entertainment was given by the officers at Barrackpore on Monday night to the Right Honourable the Governor General. His Lordship reached the House about ten p.m. when a salute was fired from guns which had been brought up from Dumdum for the occasion. The stumbers of his Danish Majesty's luges were broken soon after midnight by another peal of cannon to announce his departure. The Governor General made a speech, in which he expressed his warm attachments to the interests of the army, and alluded to their services in the acquisition and maintenance of the Empire. It was eagerly listened to, and loudly applauded.

— It is very gratifying to learn from the Star, that we may soon expect a large supply of that necessary luxury, Ice. Two ships left Boston for Calcutta direct on the 22d May, having, between them, 1000 tons of Ice on board. A third, with 800 tons was to leave that place in June. Another may be expected in a fortnight, with 400 tons for us, and the same quantity for Malacca.

— The proprietor of the Englishman new at home has engaged the services of a new Editor, Mr. (Stephenston, who is to come out immediately. He has received a University education, and is quite at home in the Editorial staff, having for some time written the Editorial articles of the Monthly Times. We had just penned some observations on the tone and style of this journal; but we must not dwell through the time honoured rule of reviewing every editor on his first appearance with courtesy. We have therefore destroyed them. The Harkura has engaged Mr. Stoeckenius, the late Editor of the Englishman, as his London correspondent.

— The Star notices this morning the happy mode in which the Legislature of the Mauritius has contrived to evade an act of Parliament. Parliament, in the exercise of its wisdom, has imposed a heavy duty on the importation of salt provisions into the Isle of France. It is an article which the island cannot do without; so the Government has very ingeniously contrived to defeat the law by offering a bounty on the importation, to the same amount as the import duty.

— We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following name for the Friend of India:—

Messrs. McGregor, Browning, and Co.,	...	to June, 1844, 20 0
K. M. Longley, Esq.,	...	ditto, 20 0
Thos. Marshall, Esq.,	...	ditto, 20 0
Messrs. Forbes and Co.,	...	ditto, 20 0
J. Cowie, Esq.,	...	ditto, 20 0
Lieut. A. D. Turnbull,	...	ditto, 27 8
Lieut. G. Nesbitt,	...	to July, 1844, 24 0
A. Urann, Esq.,	...	to July, 1845, 28 0
H. Atherton, Esq.,	...	to June, 1844, 20 0
Lieut. H. Strachey,	...	ditto, 20 0
R. Hampton, Esq.,	...	to June, 1845, 30 0
K. C. Harmsworth, Esq.,	...	ditto, 36 0
R. H. S. Campbell, Esq.,	...	ditto, 36 0
G. Logan, Esq.,	...	to Decr. 1844, 40 0
R. D. Garrett, Esq.,	...	to April, 1844, 20 0
Daboo Loknath Doss,	...	to Decr. 1843, 10 0
Kashinath Mitter,	...	to Decr. 1845, 10 0
A. J. M. Milla, Esq.,	...	to June, 1844, 48 0
Miss H. E. Stark,	...	to June, 1844, 20 0
T. D. Dick, Esq.,	...	ditto, 20 0
J. Waller, Esq.,	...	to Decr. 1843, 20 0
Cyrt. F. Lloyd,	...	to June, 1844, 40 0
C. Beeson, Esq.,	...	to June, 1843, 20 0
H. S. Bonfielden, Esq.,	...	to May, 1844, 20 0
Capt. G. M. Hill,	...	to Nov. 1843, 10 0
Mr. Kneet,	...	to July, 1844, 20 0
E. Tandy, Esq.,	...	to June, 1843, 20 0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

THE CAPTURE AND DEATH OF AN ALLIGATOR.

A very large alligator was hooked and safely landed at the Acra Farm on Saturday evening last. He was deposited in a strong brick building for the night, his exertions having put off to the following day that notice might be sent to the curious to attend. At day light he was waited upon by several gentlemen from the surrounding country who had their respect from the top of the walls that confined him, and appeared very much affected with delight at the prospect before him of a little sport. The alligator was lying on his side with its disengorged legs extended, and might have been conveniently measured in all his proportions but it was thought as well to put it to rest and the necessity of life in the amphibious monster had been maintained. The hook which was a single bar and straight shank, about 11 inches long, had caused

[illegible][illegible]

The meeting yesterday of the Proprietors of the Union Bank was very numerously attended both by European and Native Shareholders. The business for which the Meeting had been made special seemed to create the greatest interest.

In consequence of Mr. Gordon labouring under a severe cold and sore-throat, Mr. Clarke officiated for that gentleman in the reading of the following balance sheet of accounts, which, was finally put to the meeting and passed as being correct :

Dr. The Trustees of the Union Bank in Account Current with the Proprietors of the Bank.
June 30, 1843. To Establishment and House
Rent, from 1st January to this date,			82,812 4
To charges General & For Law Charges,			5,782 1
Painting Stamps, &c.,			2,141 12 0
To Advances for Stationery,—For amount written off for the last year, To Cash Balance,
" Drawn Stock,		2,085 10 10
" Printed Bank Notes,		3,000 0 0
" Advances for Stationery,		3,000 0 0
Readable,—Government Bills Discounted,
Private Bills Discounted,		3,103 9 9
Loss on Deposits of Bullion and Paper		17,082 42 10
Securities,		11,88,794 11 0
Loans and Credits on the Collateral
Security of Indigo Pastures and Sugar
Wares,		64,74,291 8 10
Silk Filatures and Silk,		1,48,926 0 0
Tradesmen,		4,77,892 8 5
Public Buildings,		1,90,175 4 0
Goods in Possession,		14,18,676 4 8
Government 4 per cent.
Paper,		18,67,098 5 8
Government 5 per cent.
ditto,		3,64,013 5 4
		22,35,006 10 9
Less Discount,		62,368 0 4
		21,70,808 10 5
Exchange Account,		54,489 7 9
Insured on Open Accounts, &c.		2,25,000 10 4
Singapore Agency,		6,06,112 12 9
		14,701,172 13 8
		14,667,944 8 8
Due.—Circulation,
Printing Deposits,		1,37,110 0 0
Vined Deposits,		8,20,708 0 8
Bills Payable,		16,12,142 0 1
Post Bills,		17,78,792 8 0
Unclaimed Dividends to January, 1843,		1,00,000 0 0
		1,772 14 1
		42,82,419 9 10
		1,07,24,824 9 5
Showing on a Paid up Capital of	1,00,00,000 0 0
A surplus after deducting former Dividends,	7,24,824 9 5
		107,24,824 9 5
		Co.'s Ba. ..	1,07,28,780 14 8

Calcutta, 30th June, 1943.

The accounts on the table, it will be observed, exhibit an amount of profit corresponding very nearly to that of the former half year, namely—

Rs. 4,13,000	8
against,	" 4,10,900 10

in the preceding six months.

No one could tell an anecdote better, and, unfortunately for us, he always had one ready even at the most unseasonable time. Meanwhile several officers, departing of getting him to get inured of self, had gone away disgusted, and when at last it was decided to attack the fort, it became no easy matter to urge them to go. But, fortunately, they were in different parts of our extensive cantonment. I myself, accompanied by Captain Bellows, went to the magazine to prepare the powder bags, after which I visited the hospital, and, finding myself as best I could until the appointed hour drew nigh, when I began to marvel at the stillness that prevailed, there being no signs of preparation. In great uneasiness I called I went to the General's house, and seeing a light in Major Thain's room I entered. He was awake, but told me I better not disturb the General. He however, urged me to put the fall on the gate now promising himself to do the same. Meanwhile previous time was spent as a fearful rest, and what with running higher and dither all night long, I was thoroughly fagged, and but for the necessity for continued exertion could have fallen asleep on my legs. The troops turned out but slowly and in dribs, and, to my horror, it was broad daylight ere they were collected at the West-end gate in readiness to move on. The rest is almost known. The delay had been fatal to the garrison of the Commissariat fort, who were by and by the enemy and departing of relief, retreated to post at dawn of day, and marched into cantonments just as we were on the very point of moving to their assistance.—Hurbar, July 15.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

POLICE DAROGAH.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I was glad to see your remarks in your issue of the 15th July 1843, on the subject of the pay of Darogahs. There can be no doubt that persons who held such responsible situation ought to be well paid. Indeed 100 Rs. a month, for the higher class, is less than a Subadar Major of Native Infantry receives when on command. (107 Rs.) and little more than when in Cantonment (92 Rs.) A Subadar of Native Infantry gets 67 Rs. a month, 58 Rs. marching, and 107 Rs. if he Subadar Major. The Subadar Subadar gets more; a Baper a day; other ranks less. A Subadar of Native Infantry gets 25 Mopass a month in Cantonment. That there are advantages for gallantry; the order of British India, &c. But the usual regimental incomes should be the guide, as promotion to Jemadar or Subadar, and Subadar Major is not according to seniority. "The Darogahs will not get the increase to 50, 70 and 100 Rs. by seniority." My object is to point out that there should be certain rewards, as in the Native Army, beyond the above departmental increase of pay. There are said to be 808 Darogahs, and their annual incomes are Rs. 1,50,820 yearly.

The 808 Darogahs are to be thus paid :

25 to 100 Rs. a month,	80,000 Rs.
50 " 70 "	40,000 "
100 " 50 "	60,000 "
350 " 25 "	90,000 "

New plan, 238,500

Old plan, 100,230

Increase, Rs. 74,000

Now we do not see in the 808 Thannals, the extent of population or size of District or Thannal, over which these Darogahs have control. Would it not be better to make the scale on such a principle?

I would recommend that the advance from 25 to 100, though ordinarily of gradual increase, yet, for very important services, should be from the minimum to the maximum at once. Thus, without reference to the rate of pay, individuals should, for very distinguished services, receive a Medal commemorative of the occasion with a suitable inscription in the English and Native languages. That presents of swords and pistols from Government on other occasions would be much prized. I believe these who are killed, have a pension or provision from Govt. made for their families.

If a man distinguished himself in either of the classes of 25, 50 and 75 Rs. pay, we will suppose a Medal, or Sword, &c. and his name should be registered for future notice, promotion, &c. A copy of each name should be kept at the Headquarters of the Magistrate, or Deputy Magistrate of the District. The grades of 25 to 100 Rs. should be distinguished by their dress, and every title should be done to ensure them to feel confident of being noticed and rewarded for meritorious acts! The proposed increase of 74,000 Rs. makes the total Rs. 2,38,500 annually. If there were Subadars and Jemadars or 07 and 22-50-2-16 Rs. monthly, the annual cost would be 2,80,410 Rs. The very important duty of these Darogahs, points out that they should be well paid. If the sum of 300,000 Rs. were allowed, they would be paid more with reference to the labour of daily and night calls.

But may not the expense of living be greater in some districts in Bengal than in others, and should not that be taken into consideration? The Darogahs get less than the pay of a Subadar of the Calcutta Native militia compare the duties and risks of the two classes! It is not so much the number as the calm and energy of the Darogah, on which the peace, happiness, and protection to life and property depend. The Darogahs get no extra, but, as command allowances, or when on service, as Subadars and Jemadars in the Army do. Hence they should be better paid 500,000 Rs. (50 Rs. a month) would be Rs. 304,800 annually. The Subadars and Jemadars get the invalid pay, pensions, &c. There seems to be too great a number on 25 Rs. If there were 5 classes of 25, 50, 75 and 100 Rs. it would be a better plan. Though indeed, I should make the classes according to a scale of amount of jurisdiction, population, &c. which create so much more work, liable to be done. I think the plan must be hereafter modified, the good pay of the Darogahs will stimulate the exertions of those under them; and if it works well, the plan should be extended beyond Bengal. A Darogah ought to be mounted to be fully useful.

DAROGAH.

HOMER'S HOME.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

"We are sorry to find Capt. Mowbray stating the very age from Suva to Calcutta, the homeward bound voyage of the vessel. It is a very bad time. The word home is usually associated in the mind of an Englishman, with England. Wherever he is obliged to abide by any other place by that enduring name, it is done with a painful conviction that nothing but the security of circumstances could justify such a misuse of the word. It is a poor compliment to the European community in Calcutta to describe the way, by applying it, even in the case of a stranger, to any city in India."

DEAR SIR,—I fear, from the above quotation, that you are the "Friend of India" only in name, and that you belong to that numerous class, who conceive that they confer great favour (forsooth!) on the people of India, by coming to live among them for a while, and then return home (as you call it) with wealth, of which not one farthing will ever be expended for the benefit of the country from which it was obtained.

Notwithstanding what you have stated, I cannot help thinking that Captain Mowbray was perfectly right in styling the returna voyage from Suva to Calcutta the homeward bound voyage, nor do I believe that he intended to pay any compliments to the community of Calcutta, or to any other place, by doing so. "Our own Suva" he belongs, I presume, to the port of Calcutta, and the expression of homeward, and outward bound, is therefore quite correct.

Moreover I have always understood you to be a great advocate for promoting the visits of respectable Indian gentlemen to England, by means of Steam communication—and to have rung the changes upon "an illumination of the natives"—"the two countries brought more closely together"—"a great of knowledge and intelligence"—and all that. Surely to Indian gentlemen, the voyage from Suva to Calcutta would be their homeward bound voyage. Why then claim for Englishmen the exclusive right to use the word "home" as you have applied it?

But I will go farther than this and maintain that so long as an Englishman resides in India, (and how many have done so, long and happily) it is, to all intents and purposes, his home—and that it is not a "misuse" of the term to call it so. Why disparage the country in which we live, and cast our daily bread, and which, after all, will bear a fair comparison with the miserable, cold, raw, damp, dark atmosphere of England from October to April inclusive, with its train of colds, coughs, consumptions, influenza, and what not? The people too as inhospitable as their climate, never have plenty of money in your pockets! Away then with all that maddening, mawkish, palping, pitiful babble which we so often hear as "dear old England!" The real friend of India is he who spends his whole life in it, and who does all the good he can in his own immediate neighbourhood.

I remain, dear Sir,

Your very obedient servant,

A REAL FRIEND,

Upper Provinces, 28th July, 1843.

SCHOOL.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I shall feel highly obliged by your kindly inserting the following few lines in your valuable journal.

Perhaps all your readers are not aware that an English Seminary has been established by Government at Jessore, where it was long felt as a desideratum. This school was established in 1838 by the exertions of the European gentry of the station.

On Monday the 17th July, the third annual examination of the pupils of the above Institution took place at the School, in which the presence of the station assembled. The examination was ably conducted by Messrs. Dentall, Morris, Anderson and Hamber, who were highly satisfied with the progress of the school during the last period they have been in the school. The studies of the senior classes consisted of History of Greece, England and India, Poetry, Geography, Grammar, Government, &c. &c. The Junior Translations, in which the boys acquitted themselves to the entire satisfaction of the Examiners, and reflected the greatest credit on their instructors.

In conclusion I beg to remark, that from the great demand of English education which exists in this part of Bengal, it is earnestly hoped, that the Institution will be able to meet the increasing and able management of Mr. Smith, the Head Master, and his zealous coadjutor Baboo Theodoros Chatterjoo.

I am, Sir,

Yours, &c.

20th July, 1843.

A VIRTUO.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

CHRISTIAN UNION.—On Thursday last, (1st June) at an early hour in the morning, Essex Hall was visited by a great concourse of persons, sufficient in number to have filled a building three times its dimensions, yet close as it is. An advertisement had appeared in various religious periodicals, headed "Christian Union," and announcing that "a Public Meeting to promote this most desirable and blessed object," would be held there and then. Although the Meeting was designated "public," admission was only procurable by tickets, the issue of which for the most part was limited to "members of Churches," a regulation necessarily applying to the terms as the terms are commonly used, to those denominations not at all connected with the Established Church, with respect to the members of which it was understood that there was also a restriction; tickets being given only to communicants at the Lord's table. Nevertheless, the great room was literally crammed, and there were present some few persons whose particular mode of religious belief was not within the sphere of the religious which it may be presumed, from a full participation in the proceedings. The great room was so crowded, 4,000 persons, not so closely packed was the auditory upon this occasion, that there was hardly a considerably more than that number. Even the reporters' box was invaded, a place barely sufficient for the proper position of the reporter, and the interference of the Chairman and Secretaries, the pressure of the intruders must have rendered the duty of the representatives of the press upon this occasion more difficult than usual. It is to be regretted that some persons, however, in spite of every remonstrance, pertinaciously retained their position in a place to which they had no right whatever, until the very last. Other Meetings to save the church and society from entire desolation, were held in the lower room, and in the Wesleyan Chapel, Great Queen-street, both of which were equally crowded. It must be said that the numbers returned to their homes; among those who retired, we many delicate females, unable to endure the pressure and with torn dresses and other damages almost un-another. It must be a real, a hating love, and a visible love. The more earnest feeling of attachment to all we deem true Christ is, the more we are in the injunctions of Scripture, or the needs of the Church. How can the words of our Lord be fulfilled?—By this shall all men know that we are his disciples, if we love one another,—unless that love be visible! When our Lord entrusted that his disciples should be as one as he was one with the Father, it was that the world might believe that he really dwelt in us; but if their unity is concealed, what influence can it have upon the world? How would a concealed union bring the whole force of the body to act upon any feeble part of the Church? How could it strengthen, for instance, the hands of the persecuted Christian missionaries in Tahiti? How can we efficiently protest against a powerful trait I have in my hands, in which the author condemns Dissent from the Established Church as a sin, and all who in any way countenance Dissenters as incurring equal guilt? Such sentiments would fill the whole land with anxiety, and prevent any hope of union among the universal body of Christians; they are utterly at variance with Christian charity, and would debase the Church. Here is the another trait, by a professed minister of Christ, in which he authenticates the principle of Protestantism in all its forms, and undermines all Protestants. In the absence of visible union, the Church is divided, and resisted and refused? I have communicated in other Protestant temples than those of the Church of England, and hope to do so again, notwithstanding this sentiment; I have recognized as a brother. Here then, is another motive to manifest the union of Christians. The Hon. and Rev. Gentlemen proceeded to show that Christian union could not consist in conditional communion, and therefore the idea of making any form of Church government dominant over the rest must be given up; at present, inevitably some one might possibly prevail, but the past history of the Church did not seem to favour the expectation. An agreement is essentially incompatible with separate opinions on minor matters, and the few expressions of them upon minor occasions. The elements of Christian union were the grand ideas of the Christian faith, as stated by the apostle in Ephes. i. 1-6. These being held by all, no disagreement in subjects brought to the grounds of dissension or division. A single subject would settle many points of difference, and in all cases we should give each other credit for sincerity in pursuing our own course to the end, and in all cases we should sweep common upon each other. Let not any Dissenter, for instance, hearing heard of the anathemas uttered against him by the clergyman who wrote the tract just mentioned, say, "See what the Church of England is!" That would be unjust, for there were many in the Church who would condemn that tract. On the other hand, if a Dissenter, who had been expelled from a public Meeting to read upon the Common Prayer-book, and pronounced it to be fit only to wipe his feet upon, it would be unjust in a Churchman to exclaim, "Then, you are that Dissenter in the Church!" The Hon. and Rev. speaker concluded on several addresses of which we are able to give little more than an outline, by moving the third Resolution, which recognized the Bible as the basis of all Protestant Christian Churches.

The Rev. J. Sherman explained that the Dissenting minister alluded to by Mr. Ford, had denied the conduct attributed to him; what he did was, to elevate the Bible with one hand, and to denounce the Prayer-book in the floor, denoting, that so far from the latter being fit to be placed upon the altar, it ought to be in the dust in comparison with it. The Motion was seconded by the Rev. Mr. La Cruz, of Switzerland, and supported by Mr. T. Farmer (Treasurer of the Wesleyan Missionary Society), and unanimously adopted. Prayer was then offered by the Rev. Dr. Beane. The Rev. J. A. Jones, of Birmingham, proposed the fourth Resolution. Mr. James Taylor seconded the Motion, which was adopted unanimously. At the suggestion of Dr. Letchfield, the Committee were requested to continue their meeting on the next number, and to confer together on the next step to be taken to establish Christian union. The Rev. H. McCallum, and the Rev. B. Abbot seconded the Motion. It was carried unanimously, as was also a vote of thanks to the Chairman, and after another hymn and prayer, the Meeting adjourned.

We have been unavoidably obliged to omit some of the addresses, thinking it better to give a few speeches at length and many briefly. The above report gives a fair representation of the proceedings of the Meeting. The following are the Resolutions proposed and carried:—

1. "That this Meeting is fully persuaded that real and essential unity of the children of God, and of God, and that being united to Christ, they are, in principle and affection, united to each other by the Spirit of Christ."

2. "That this Meeting is therefore convinced of the duty of rendering visible the unity of all who hold the Bible, Jesus Christ the Lord, notwithstanding the diversity of their opinions and practices with regard to minor points of faith and doctrine; and that, in order to the attainment of this end, controversy, missionary operations, and public sentiment at the present time, renders it peculiarly desirable to attempt the furtherance of such an union."

3. "That this Meeting doth itself assemble here on the ground of truths common to all Evangelical Churches of the Protestant Reformation from Popery, and based on its first principles, the sufficiency and authority of the Holy Scriptures as the sole rule of Christian faith and practice, and the right of every man to judge for himself of the meaning and interpretation of that rule—and recognises as the bond of Union, the great doctrine universally received by all Evangelical Christians, viz.—the doctrine of the Holy Trinity; of the infinite love of the Father; of the perfect atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ; of justification by faith alone; of the necessity of regeneration to a Christian life and character; and other truths in harmony, and in essential connection with these. And the Meeting believes that agreement in these fundamental truths among Evangelical Christians, to be the foundation in substance and spirit, as to lay a firm foundation for common and united action."

4. "That this Meeting utterly repudiates the assertion that a true Church, a true ministry, or a true Christian can be constituted, in the absence of spirit, and of the qualifications by the Holy Spirit, and of the power, even though of Divine appointment. At the same time, it declares the least compromise of what is essentially regarded as true doctrine on any point of doctrine, discipline, or worship, by any individual bearing part in its proceedings."

5. "That this Meeting deems it an imperative duty, for the defence of the truth, for the strength of the Church, for the spread of the Gospel, to seek Christian Union—not in ritual uniformity; not in exact agreement of creed; not in a universal reformation of Churches; but in the blessing of love to the truth in things great, and in the harmonizing power of forbearance in things subordinate. For this union would the present Meeting bear witness before the world, and before the ever-living God. For the promotion of this blessed union, and of the ground of their Service's will and prayer, that thus our holy religion may be known to all men of the world, and the world be converted to our holy religion."—Resolved.

Dr. Pusey's Surrender.—The condemnation of Dr. Pusey, in due form and under the protection of a statute "for such uses made and provided," is an event of no slight importance. It removes this notorious relic of the Treason of 1791 from the service he has hitherto occupied, and places him in a very unquestionable way, among the teachers of error. We say, in the most unquestionable way,—for nothing can be more frivolous and ungrounded, than the exceptions taken by Dr. Pusey's friends, and by Dr. Pusey himself.

The objections started by the Times, and other journals in the Treasonist's service, are such as to show—that the proceeding was an "obscure one"—and that the Board or Committee was unfairly constituted.

A sermon which is now fully ascertained to contain heretical statements is preached in the University pulpit, and a public complaint is made by the proper officer. It is then published in the University-Chancellor to direct an inquiry into the charge? If so what kind of conduct would then writers propose to the preaching of heresy in an University pulpit? Or would they have any check at all? Are they content, on the sudden into air-trials?

But the statute was "obscure"—in other words, no such degradation of the name of the University as to that of Dr. Pusey's, has been known in Oxford for a century past. And this is gravely assigned as an objection to the present proceeding?

The University-Chancellor's ship's service is the last; namely, that the Committee was unfairly composed. Happily, however, there is no allusion ground for this imputation. The whole proceeding was a public and a private one, and it is evident, it has manifested itself in a favourable leaning towards the accused, in just that respect which it is taken, did not this fact now render the sentence more corrected and impressive. Let our readers mark the circumstances.

The Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Wynter, is a High Churchman, and has been considered in latter years as the most High Churchman in the country. It was only on the receipt of a positive complaint, that he took up the matter, and he is said to have acted unwillingly, and as in the discharge of a duty, and as a disingenuous duty, throughout the whole transaction.

The selection of the Committee of examination, of the Board of Hierarchy, was as follows:—One only of the members, Dr. Frouse, could be considered as a declared opponent of the Treasonist party, and he formed one of the Board, not by choice, but necessarily, ex officio, as Margaret Professor. On the other side, however, there was named Dr. Jell, who is one of the greatest of the great, and who is therefore, according to the recognition of the judicial proceedings, ought not to have been of the number. Our readers will remember that it is this gentleman who has professed himself to find a middle between Protestantism and Treasonism. A third member was Dr. Olney, who was formerly Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and who was afterwards by his Grace to the Bishop of Exeter. The other three members were Dr. Jankyn, the Master of Balliol; Dr. Hawkins, Professor of Oriel; and Dr. Synnott, Warden of Wadham; all the latter personal friends of Dr. Pusey, and all three most respectable men, no doubt, but at the same time unquestionably High Churchmen.

Nor did these six judges arrive at a verdict of guilt, by a mere vote carried by a majority. Each, individually, gave in his judgment of the impugned sermon. With these six deliberate opinions before him the Vice-Chancellor proceeded to pass sentence; and that sentence passed a language which cannot be neglected.

We come, then, lastly, to Dr. Pusey's own complaint. This is obviously for the popular ear; for, to those circumstances which are mentioned in the Doctor's pleas will appear utterly trivial.

He complains that his judges did not enter into controversy, or paper war with him! that they did not select particular passages of his sermon for proof or disproof; and that they did not hear him in his own defence. It is quite sure that he was not "misapprehended," and that he could have satisfactorily defended, or explained, every sentiment in his sermon, had he but been allowed the opportunity.

This sort of complaint will have some little effect upon weak minds. But what is it really worth? A theologian of mature age, and well practiced in controversy, delivering a written and well considered course, in an University pulpit. A charge is brought against him, of maintaining, in that sermon, false doctrine. The manuscript is called for, and laid before six members of the University, that they may examine the charge. Is it not abundantly clear, that if these six men, two of them personal friends, and another one of great respect with the accused, find no difficulty in their own minds, and find no fault in the character of the sermon,—the permission to the author, to defend himself, in writing, or viva voce, would not affect the result? Dr. Pusey avers that these six men, all writing or writing, are well-informed and theologically discerning, have unanimously "misunderstood" him, who kind of a idea does he convey of his own skill in the English language? What could I mean of all these six, by any means discover the real meaning of Dr. Pusey's discourse! Are his sermons usually so obscure, that not even learned divines can decipher their real meaning? If so, then assuredly it is quite time that he was prohibited from any longer perplexing the University by public discourses which by his own account of the matter, it would appear that nobody can understand.—Resolved.

LAW, ARCHES COURT, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26. OFFICE OF THE JUDGE PROMOTED BY BARON AGASSIZ HEARD.—This was a proceeding by letters of request, at the instance of Mr. Ralph Sanders, of Exeter, against the Rev. Henry Enkliffe Head, Rector of Fenton, Devon, for having offered against the laws, statutes, constitutions, and canon ecclesiastical of the realm; for having published and caused to be published in the Western Times newspaper, of Exeter, for August 31, 1841, a letter entitled—"A Review of the Duplicity of the Present System of Episcopal Ministry in a Letter addressed to the Parishioners of Fenton, occasioned by the Bishop of Exeter's Circular on Confirmation," in which letter he (Mr. Head) distinctly affirms that the Church is the Cathedral, the order of Episcopacy, and the order of Confirmation, in the Book of Common Prayer, contain erroneous and strange doctrines, and which he also distinctly affirms that the said Book of Common Prayer, contrary or repugnant to the law, statutes, constitutions, and canons ecclesiastical of the realm, and against the laws of the Church; and that in the said letter were contained the following passages:—"There spoke the spirit of the present system of Episcopal ministrations. All the bishops, and all the clergy, are in the presence of the Bishop of Exeter; but, inasmuch as they cannot act and co-ordinate the service of the Cathedral and Episcopacy and Confirmation Services in their present state, and constitute to ever that they act in a system by which the Episcopal order is exalted under false pretences, and at the expense of the doctrine of the Bible, the reformation is in the hands of the laity, and as it also as pledged by my ordination vows, as a minister of the Church of England, to banish and drive away Applications may be made to Mr. John Cashman, at the General Post Office, or to any of the Booksellers of Calcutta.

Street.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 448. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, AUGUST 30, 1848.

Price 3 Cts. 6s. monthly, or 30
Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.

OVERLAND MAIL.

THE Bombay Government having fixed on the 30th of August, for the departure of the steam Mail Steamer of September, notice is hereby given, that the latest safe date for the transmission of letters from Calcutta, which may be forwarded for that opportunity, will be Thursday, the 12th proximo.

W. MOORE.

Deputy Post Master.

THE JURISDICTION OF THE 24-PERGUNNAH.

Considerable interest has been excited by a recent decision of the Sudder Court in a case in which Mr. Piddington, the former occupant of the factory of Goussapore, situated within the Civil Jurisdiction of the 24-Pergunnahs, was sued for 84,000 Rs. by the assignees of Boyd and Co. We were given to understand that the suit had reference to land or other real property situated in that district; hence the determination of the Sudder Court that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction in the case, appeared to be at variance with a previous Construction which had been established by the concurrent decision of the Allahabad and Calcutta Courts of Sudder Adawlut. On turning however to the Reports of Cases decided during the last year, we find that the Sudder Court did not consider the suit to have reference to land July, 1781. The 23d Article of those regulations for the first time imposed those restrictions on the jurisdiction of the 24-Pergunnahs which Government has now been requested to alter; and in almost the same words which appear in the Regulation of 1793. The object of Sir Elijah was to prevent a collision between the Company's Court in the suburbs, and the King's Court in the city; and the limitations were manifestly intended not to apply to any other Court in the interior, the jurisdiction of each of which was distinctly described in that document. Secondly, Regulation 8, 1810, declares that no person being a resident in Calcutta shall be at liberty to defend an original suit in any Zillah Court unless he shall furnish security for eventual costs by a surety or sureties residing or possessing property out of Calcutta. It is manifest from this enactment that personal actions had been constantly instituted in the other Zillah Courts against persons resident in Calcutta. If the Legislators had considered that the provisions of 1793, barring the jurisdiction of the 24-Pergunnahs in such cases, was binding on all other Courts, they would not have made provision for the management of suits, which, upon that interpretation, it would have been illegal for them to entertain. The Regulation of 1810 gave no additional powers to the Mofussil Courts, which they did not before possess; it merely made provision, as the Preamble states, for demanding that previous security from residents in Calcutta, of which experience had shown the necessity. Thirdly, Act 23 of 1840, which supersedes the Regulation of 1810, goes upon the same principle, viz. that personal actions against individuals, resident in Calcutta, may be entertained in the district of this Presidency; and it prescribes forms for summoning a defendant resident in Calcutta, who had been sued for debt in the Court of Hooghly, and who was directed to attend in person to the 24-Pergunnahs; and not to extend to suit and answer the complaint. If Goussapore had been situated on the right bank of the

We are aware that the Harkara has taken a different view of its applicability; but we think our impression is fully borne out by the following reasons:—

First, The original regulations for the administration of justice in Bengal passed by the Governor General in Council (Mr. Hastings) on the 11th April 1780 directed that all mercantile disputes, all matters of personal property, all disputes about bounds and limits of landed property within the town of Calcutta should be subject to the jurisdiction of the Calcutta Court of Dewaness Adawlut; that is, to a Company's Court. In the course of that year Mr. Hastings laid upon the memorable expedient of stopping the encroachments of the Supreme Court by making the Chief Justice a pensioner of the Company, and appointing him to preside over the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, on a salary of 90,000 Rupees a year. This appointment took place on the 24th October 1780; and Sir Elijah, soon after entering on his office, laid the foundation of our present Code by preparing Regulations for the administration of Justice comprised in Ninety-five articles, which were passed by the Governor General on the 5th of July, 1781. The 23d Article of those regulations for the first time imposed those restrictions on the jurisdiction of the 24-Pergunnahs which Government has now been requested to alter; and in almost the same words which appear in the Regulation of 1793. The object of Sir Elijah was to prevent a collision between the Company's Court in the suburbs, and the King's Court in the city; and the limitations were manifestly intended not to apply to any other Court in the interior, the jurisdiction of each of which was distinctly described in that document. Secondly, Regulation 8, 1810, declares that no person being a resident in Calcutta shall be at liberty to defend an original suit in any Zillah Court unless he shall furnish security for eventual costs by a surety or sureties residing or possessing property out of Calcutta. It is manifest from this enactment that personal actions had been constantly instituted in the other Zillah Courts against persons resident in Calcutta. If the Legislators had considered that the provisions of 1793, barring the jurisdiction of the 24-Pergunnahs in such cases, was binding on all other Courts, they would not have made provision for the management of suits, which, upon that interpretation, it would have been illegal for them to entertain. The Regulation of 1810 gave no additional powers to the Mofussil Courts, which they did not before possess; it merely made provision, as the Preamble states, for demanding that previous security from residents in Calcutta, of which experience had shown the necessity. Thirdly, Act 23 of 1840, which supersedes the Regulation of 1810, goes upon the same principle, viz. that personal actions against individuals, resident in Calcutta, may be entertained in the district of this Presidency; and it prescribes forms for summoning a defendant resident in Calcutta, who had been sued for debt in the Court of Hooghly, and who was directed to attend in person to the 24-Pergunnahs; and not to extend to suit and answer the complaint. If Goussapore had been situated on the right bank of the Hooghly, instead of the left, and a suit had been instituted against Mr. Piddington in the Principal Sudder Ameen's Court of that district, the Sudder Court would not have quashed it.

It is a singular fact, and it tends to show how much our legislation has been the patch work of successive legislators, and how much it stands in need of a revision, that the law laid down exclusively for the 24-Pergunnahs, was extended in 1803 to all the Ceded Provinces; and it was ordained that the Courts in the Western Provinces should not entertain any suit whatever against any individual resident in the town of Calcutta, unless such suit related to real property situated without the limits of Calcutta. It appears therefore, that in the 24-Pergunnahs, and in the Western Provinces, no personal action will lie against any person who resides in Calcutta, nor can it be prosecuted if after its institution he has the wisdom to abscond and take refuge in that city. In every other district of the Lower Provinces such an action may be brought against any resident in Calcutta, and the most ample provision has been made for serving writs on the defendant, through the machinery of the Supreme Court. It must be self evident that this permission to sue a debtor in Calcutta is more urgently required in the district of the 24-Pergunnahs which surrounds the town, than in a silah, four hundred miles off; yet it is refused to the Court in which it is most needed; and in which the non-possession of it leads to the greatest injustice. As soon as a suit is commenced against a debtor, living in the suburbs, and the summons has been served upon him, he crosses the line of demarcation, gets within the Mahmud ditch, and sets his creditors at defiance. They have no remedy but to bring an action against him, in the city Courts, and he then re-crosses the boundary, and again evades their pursuit.

By this admirable contrivance of the law, a debtor is enabled to play at hide and seek with the Courts, and to baffle the individuals he has defrauded. The anomaly created by this Regulation of 1793 does not cease here. If a debtor lives in the suburbs of Calcutta which he crosses the river and are within the jurisdiction of the Hooghly Court, he may be pursued into the city; if he lives in the eastern suburbs, he may not. Thus there is one law for the western and another for the eastern suburbs of the city. If this anomaly is to be perpetuated, there will be little wisdom, in maintaining any Courts on the Eastern side of Calcutta, where every legal process may be so easily evaded. The time has now arrived for removing this anomaly, and assimilating the powers of the Court of 24-Pergunnahs with those of the Hooghly Court, and of every other Court in Bengal. The reason in which this enactment originated having ceased, the law itself should be abrogated. There is no longer any dispute between the Supreme Court and the Sudder Council; there is no fear lest the Governor General and Council should be served with summonses from the Supreme Court in a place of trespass. There is no necessity for purchasing an immunity from vexation by creating an unconstitutional office—by creating the Cl...

Justice's mouth with 8000*£*. Parliament has created a local Legislative Council with equal authority over the Queen's and over the Company's Courts; and an enactment which grew out of their collision, and which inflicts injustice and misery on a large body of people, ought therefore to be expanded forthwith from the Statute Book.

THE NEW REGISTRATION ACT.—Government has been somewhat unfortunate in its attempts to establish an efficient system of Registration for this Presidency. About three years ago, a very complicated Act was drafted by the legal member of the Legislative Council, which was said to be very complete, but which was found to be very unintelligible, except to the initiated. The draft was published at two successive periods in the Government Gazette, but was left by Lord Auckland for the consideration of his successor, Lord Ellenborough, shortly after his arrival, went to the North West Provinces, where he was too busy with wars and foreign politics to command the time necessary for understanding the machinery of the proposed Act. It was therefore laid on the shelf, and in its stead was published a brief Act, in which the most palpable error of the previous law, an error which had rendered it altogether inoperative, was corrected. That Act was directed to come into operation on the 1st of May in the current year. A draft of an Act has just been published repealing it, with the exception of the provision we have alluded to above.

The original law of 1793 declared that if a person had any knowledge, or had been informed of, the existence of a prior unregistered deed at the time when he registered his own deed regarding the same property, his registration became of no value. This clause created an opening for endless fraud and litigation, and entirely destroyed the security afforded by registration. Evidence of this prior knowledge sufficient to invalidate any subsequent registered deed, could always be obtained in the market, and at no great expense; and hence registration was altogether omitted. The same rule existed in the Equity Law of England, and the Real Property Commissioners in their Report state that it had ruined registration. The 1st Act of this year repealed this clause, and declared that no previous knowledge or notice had by parties of the existence of prior unregistered deeds, should affect the validity of their registered titles. This salutary provision of the new law has been retained in the Draft Act now promulgated, though the Landholder's Society, when rescued from their long slumbers by George Thompson, addressed Government against it, and praised the old law, by which they said the Civil Courts possessed the power of protecting the innocent party, that is, the party which refused to obey the law and neglected to register its deeds, trusting to the eminent facilities which exist in India for obtaining proof of any thing—for a consideration.

Act I. of this year also provided that all registered conveyances or other instruments affecting titles to land, or any interest therein, should take precedence of every other deed or instrument of the same nature which was not registered. This in fact was compulsory legislation, and nothing was wanting to complete the process of compulsion, but to declare that the validity of a deed should date from the day of its registration, not from that of its execution. It was soon found however that, under existing circumstances, the new law embraced too large a circle; a deed affecting any interest in land included leases as well as large deeds of gift. The natives have a natural repugnance to registration, as they have to every thing else which enforces order. But even if their desire to register had been as strong as their repugnance to it was, they could not have quitted their homes and travelled to a distance, of several days' journey with witnesses to the execution of every deed, in order to obtain its registration. Neither was there any machinery ready to meet the new and almost boundless demand for registration which the comprehensive terms of the Act were sure to create. That Act has therefore been repealed, and the draft of a new law promulgated, which limits compulsory registration to deeds of sale, gift, and mortgage, and certificates of the discharge of incumbrances. Every registered deed or document of this nature will invalidate every prior or subsequent deed, relating to the same property, which may not be registered.

It would be unjust were we to omit to mention that after Act I. of this year was passed, the Landholder's Society came forward and addressed a long and able memorial to Government in which the objectionable clause of the new Act, in which is now about to be repealed, and certain other unobjectionable clauses which have been retained, were censured. Whether the new Act is owing to the representations of that body, as the Harkers suppose, or whether the brief experience of two months has shown that with the existing registration agency, the Act could not be enforced, we know not. But the present Act is so limited in its nature, that it can be regarded only in the light of a temporary arrangement, till Government has the leisure to digest a new and comprehensive law, and to create such local facilities for registration, as shall leave every man who refuses to register his deeds without excuse. The Act makes the law regarding the registration of certain deeds stringent; this is necessary; in fact a registration law cannot be too stringent; but then it leaves the old clogs on registration untouched, and it establishes no machinery for universal registration. All leases of any value ought to be registered. It is the non-registration of them which diminishes the value of estates. We think we speak within bounds when we assert, that if purchasers had an opportunity of knowing the exact circumstances of an estate, and the extent to which it was encumbered with leases, the value of landed property would be increased twenty per cent. As soon as a suitable apparatus can be established in every district, registration should be rendered universal, preceptory and compulsive, however contrary to the habits and feelings of the people. The machinery will pay for itself, and form no charge on the state. Mr. Bird's administration, so to speak, will be immortalised if he should succeed in introducing a measure, which, independently of its effects in augmenting the value of property, would do more to introduce peace and security, and to lessen the amount of litigation, than any other plan which could be devised.

APPEALS TO THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—The Legislative Council has at length published the draft of a Regulation which devolves on the Appellant the expense of preparing two copies of all papers and proceedings connected with Appeals to the Privy Council, including the charge for translating into English these documents, which are in the Native language. The preamble of the Regulation declares that this measure is just and necessary. The Harkers seem to doubt the assertion, and intimates that the Landholder's Society will be down on Government on the subject. We are curious to see the arguments by which the Committee of that Society may endeavour to prove that this expense ought not to be borne by the parties who prefer the appeal. Whatever argument is brought to bear on the subject of appeals to England, will apply with equal force to all inferior appeals in this country. If it be right that the state should assist an appellant to the Privy Council, by sharing the expense of his appeal, it must be equally right and just, and necessary that it should grant the same aid from the public purse to those who appeal from the Munsiff to the Judge, or from the Judge to the Sudder. If this principle be once admitted, and the wishes of the appellant be allowed to regulate the duty of the state, there can be no reason why Government should not also defray a portion of the valuer's fees, or indeed of any other charge connected with the management of an appeal.

The Regulation of 1798 on which the practice which it is now intended to abrogate was built, does not declare, in so many words, that the expense of translating and inscribing papers in such cases shall be borne by Government. But as it made no provision for the appellant's defraying these charges, while at the same time it required him to pay the expense of the suit in England, and of making any copies of the papers he might desire for his own use, the practice grew up of drawing the expense of the two copies which were sent home from the public treasury. While the minimum of appeals remained fixed at 5,000*£*, the appeals were few and far between, and the expense was little felt by Government. But several years ago it pleased Her Majesty's Privy Council—doubtless with the laudable desire of giving the natives of India the inestimable blessing of English justice to a greater extent than they had previously enjoyed it, and thus of drawing more business to the Cockpit—to reduce the value of appealable suits to 10,000 Rupees. This necessarily multiplied the cases of appeal more than five fold, and made the demand on the public funds a serious consideration. With this increased facility for appeal, abuses began to grow up in this rank soil. An appeal was lodged in numerous instances without the remotest intention of prosecuting it, simply to annoy the respondents, and to bring him to terms, by the dreary prospect of a law suit at the distance of half the globe, of which it was impossible to foresee the termination. This process of intimidation cost the appellant the sum of Two Rupees, and security for the costs in England. When this had been furnished, the Sudder Court ordered the translation and transcription of papers to commence, and frequently happened that they had no sooner been completed, than the respondent compromised the matter with his opponent, and agreed to accept less than the sum which had been decreed him, and the appellant filed his rescission, and withdrew his appeal, leaving Government saddled with all the expense which had been incurred in the preparation of the documents. To such an extent has this privilege of appeal been abused to defeat the ends of justice, in the manner thus described, that if we are rightly informed, an appeal to England has become the rule, and not the exception. It is not necessary, we think, to say that Government should foster this system of legal chicanery, by taking on itself the expense of preparing the documents. It is proposed therefore to require a deposit of money equal to the expense likely to be incurred, before the appeal is allowed to be admitted. This rule will effectually check fictitious appeals, without obstructing those in which the appellant, with a bold confidence in the justice of his case, resolves to submit it to the investigation of the Privy Council.

PROGRESS AND PROSPECTS OF PURSLEY.—The intelligence brought by the last Mail regarding the prospects of the Established Church, both in England, Scotland and Ireland, is in the highest degree ominous. In Scotland, a large body of the most pious and zealous ministers and laymen have seceded from the Establishment in a body, and thereby given it a shock from which it will in all probability never recover. In Ireland, the Roman Catholic population has been organized against the Protestant Establishment, by the ablest demagogues of modern times; and unless the agitation can be put down by military power, there is little prospect that it will cease, while the grievances of which the people complain—that of supporting an establishment to which they do not belong—continues to exist. A quarter of a century ago, the Papists might have been satisfied to leave the Protestant Church its endowments, if their own Priests and Bishops had been taken into the pay of the state; but any such proposal at the present stage of disaffection, would be viewed as an index of fear, and only serve to give fresh impulse to their demands. In England, the Church is torn with dissensions from Puseyism to Berwick; the great majority of the Clergy are said to be Puseyites both in doctrine and practice, and the uniformity to establish which two thousand ministers were quoted in the days of Charles the Second, and Dissent created, has ceased to be any thing but a name. In all these commotions it is the principle of Establishments which is placed in jeopardy, and whatever change they may produce in the views and feelings of society, it can scarcely be favourable to the Establishment Church of England and Ireland. Those who are sincerely and conscientiously attached to its communion, cannot escape the painful conviction that its integrity would be as deeply affected by the triumph of O'Connell and his Irishmen, as by that of Dr. Pusey and his Tractarians.

It is true that Dr. Pusey has been debared from preaching in the University for two years, but this step will neither silence his party, nor check its increase. On the contrary it may possibly invest him with the sanctity of a martyr, and give new importance to his doctrines. Every such exhibition of force, either proves completely successful in subduing the refractory, or it serves to invigorate them. In the present instance it is likely to produce this latter effect. The objectionable doctrines maintained in Dr. Pusey's sermon, we gave in our extracts last week. It is said—though we have not been able to discover the fact in our files—that of the six members of the Board of Heresy, three were favorable to his views, and that the condemnation of his sermon was carried by the casting vote of the President. Dr. Pusey has entered his protest against the decision of the Board, and complains that he has been condemned unheard. This has given occasion for the remark, that if such be the case, he has only had notice out to him the measure he meted to Dr. Hampden some years back. The condemnation of their Chief appears to have produced the same effect among his followers that the out-larry of O'Connell would produce among the Repealers. The Tractarians are in a fury. The misfortune is, says a Puseyite organ, "that matters cannot end here." It is to be hoped they will not. Every well wisher of the Church must be happy to see any probability that the battle will be drawn to a head, and the controversy brought to distinct issue, whether the Articles and Liturgy are to be interpreted in a Catholic or a Protestant sense. A second victim, according to the Puseyites, has been already selected by the Vice-Chancellor in a Mr. Morris, who is to be summoned, it appears, before the Board of Heresy, for having in a sermon preached at Christ Church, declared his belief, that Archbishop Laud was then interfering for the English Church. "If," adds this Puseyite journal, "such sermons as have been heard continually within the University are repeated, denying as has often been done, Regeneration in the one Sacrament, and the Real presence in the other, or the Apostolicity of orders, we can only have arrived at the commencement de facto."

The excitement at Oxford has been increased by an action for damages, brought by the Rev. G. Macmullen, against Dr. Hampden for preventing his obtaining the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. The Regius Professor proposed these two theses for the candidate to maintain. 1. That the Church of England does not teach, nor can it be proved from Scripture, that any change takes place in the elements in consecration in the Lord's Supper. 2. That it is a mode of expression calculated to speak erroneous views of Divine Revelation to speak of Scripture and Tradition as joint authorities in the matter of Christian Doctrine." Mr. Macmullen, who is a disciple of Dr. Pusey, refused to maintain the theses, and claimed the right of selecting his own subjects, which being denied by the Regius Professor, he was unable to obtain his degree, and forthwith instituted an action against the Professor—a proceeding admirably calculated to strengthen the bonds of discipline in that learned and Conservative University.

The good Bishop of Norwich has shocked the Tractarians by a sermon he preached at the anniversary of the Gospel Propagation Society at St. Paul's Cathedral. The most satisfactory account of the Sermon is given in a Puseyite journal. "It was enough to affect a Christian to tears to see the exhibition which was made by one of the Bishops of the Church from the pulpit of St. Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday last, the 10th of May...The Bishop of Norwich from the pulpit of St. Paul's, denied, scilicet verbis, the apostolical succession of the priesthood of the English Church; he denied it to be the necessary mark of a true Church; he denied that it could be traced with any certainty." The Journalist expresses a fervent hope that the Society will not permit the sermon to be printed with its annual Report, adding, "should it appear there, the hand-writing is upon the wall, declaring that the days of the Society are numbered."

The term here referred to are years of regret. It is right therefore to bring out to view on the other hand, an event which is enough we suppose to affect such a Christian with tears of joy. We allude to the opening of a Puseyite Church at the Land's End. "Our readers will have seen, in our last publication, the specimen of what the efforts of the Cambridge Camden Society are intended to produce, recently given at the opening of a new chapel at Penzance. There was the approach to the chancel by three bold and well-ascended granite steps." Then a rail, "or rather screen;" and within the rail, three more steps. Then the vestry, and seven sedes, and the crucifix and piscina. Then, "on the first altar-step are two elegant candelabra, five feet and a-half high, containing candles of wax, four feet and a-half high," making ten feet in all. Then "the service is read from a lectern, which is situated on the upper chancel-step." "The Litany is said from a faldstool, placed on the second chancel-step, and looking towards the altar." "The lessons are read from a lectern, which stands on the pavement of the chancel."

"We have then a description of how no fewer than six clergymen contrived to divide the service among them; the whole "effect" of which is said, again and again, to have been "impressive," and "most impressive;" but of which, it is abundantly obvious, the chief peculiarity must have been, the distracting and dazzling effect of the whole glitter and parade, and perpetual changing of the dramatic person, inevitably making quiet and abstracted devotion almost impossible. Those of these clergymen, we are sorry to say, were members of the Church Missionary Society."

The Bishop of London, whose memorable charge appears to have given new heart to Puseyism, had been employed during the month of May in giving admonitions to his clergy relative to certain innovations on established usages, which are styled a restoration of ancient practices. These admonitions were subsequently converted into injunctions. The preaching in the surplice, which the Bishop had previously enjoined, had been in many instances dispensed with, owing to the strong repugnance of some of the clergy and nearly all the laity to it. Of the new injunctions, the principal item referred to is "the restoration of the weekly Offertory, by which the offerings and oblations of the people, should be collected every Sunday, and placed on the altar; to be at the disposal of the Bishop." Archbishop Hale, who enjoys the entire confidence of the Pope, has entered into a calculation that a revenue of no less than half a million sterling might thus be raised. The collection will of course be accompanied with the prayer for the Church Militant; and certainly at no period, was it more necessary to offer up, not only weekly, but daily, the supplication contained in it, that "it would please God to inspire the Church with a spirit of truth, unity and concord."

But the innovation has met with much stern opposition, more especially on the part of the laity, to whose exertions at the present crisis the Church must look for its salvation. The laity object to this weekly demand on their funds as seriously affecting their means of assisting the various objects of secular and religious charity which they have been accustomed to support. To this and other innovations, Sir W. Baynes, and seventy-three of the parishesmen in St. Paul's Chapel have sent a very spirited remonstrance. In their letter they state: "It is not necessary for us to particularize these novelties, or to inquire whether at a remote period they were in use; if it be said they are trivial and of no moment we can have occasion to harness our feelings, and to witness that scheme which your Lordship need not be told bids fair to shake to its centre the Church of England; but, on the other hand, if these alterations in the service to which we have been accustomed be important, we cannot discount them from those obnoxious and invidious doctrines which have been promulgated in the Treatise for the People, and which need not be said are embraced by a large portion of the clergy of the Established Church."

They conclude by entreating that his Lordship "will allow the congregation of St. Paul's Chapel to have the Church Service as preached to their fathers, without mutilations or additions, which, though they may appear trivial, the undersigned can only view as the insidious advances of those doctrines which they firmly and conscientiously believe could only lead, if adopted and confirmed, to the re-establishment of Popery and the overthrow of the Church of England."

The particular object of this weekly collection is not clearly stated, but from some hints thrown out in the papers, it would appear as if his Lordship intended it for a Mission to China, which is to begin with the establishment of a Bishop at Hong Kong.

Next to Dr. Pusey's suspension from the pulpit, the most important event of the month, in reference to the progress of Tractarianism, is the defection of its most influential advocate, the Quarterly Review. For several years past, the weight of this important periodical publication has been cast into the scale of the Tracts; but change has come over the spirit of its dreams. The rapid spread of this sect, its nearer and nearer approximation to the doctrines of Rome, the increasing arrogance of its pretensions, which it submitted to would bring back the times when the Church trampled the State under its feet, combined with the alarming strife and distraction which it has introduced into society, and which threaten the very existence of the Establishment, have aroused the fears of this Conservative organ, and it has sounded the note of alarm to the people of England. From some indistinct allusions in the papers before us, we are led to infer that the article, which is written with great spirit and vigor, is from the pen of John Wilson Croker. Whether the hand which penned it be of clerical, its intrinsic boldness and excellence, and its appearance in so popular a journal, will give it extraordinary influence, and serve to hasten the crisis, which cannot come too soon. Our own copy of the Quarterly Review is now at Essex, waiting for the arrival of the Blackwood Steamer; for the following quotations from the article on Puseyism we are indebted to the papers which have reached us.

"The zeal of the writers grew hotter and hotter as the flame they excited, till at last growing blind at the blaze, they have burned their own fingers, and I very nearly, if not actually, set fire to the Church."

"They have been carried away into excesses in matters of both doctrine and discipline—and all in a Popish direction—which appears to us quite extravagant."

"Open defection, even when we suspect it to be the result of an irregular intellect, or a morbid vanity, is less deplorable and infinitely less dangerous than the masquerade orthodoxy whose heart is already reconciled to Rome, though its hands are still willing to carry the boy and the ape, and to participate in the communion of the Anglican Church, as Jesus did at the Last Supper."

"The reader sees that all these additional ceremonies have the same Popish taint as the others we have commented on, and are intended to give to the elements something of antipastoral sanctity, and confer on the table the character of a sacerdotal altar."

"Next we arrive at a series of innovations introduced by the Tractarians and their imitators, which, in fact, deserve no other title than foeties, and are individually so puerile that, if it were not as symptoms of a Papistical spirit, we really should be ashamed to waste time and paper in exposing them."

The Reviewer's protest against all movement is thus expressed:—

"Our first and main objection to it (bowing to the east) is, that it is another of the series of attempts, great and small, by which the Tractarians are endeavoring to introduce Romish forms into our Church. We object to the trifles we have just been discussing because they are parts of a system; we should equally object to this practice, even if it were also a trifle, as another part of the system."

On the use of the Surplice the Reviewer remarks:—

"May we not venture to declare that, because a few clergymen have thought proper to interpret the Rubric about the Church militant prayer in a way different from the usage of at least a century and a half, and then dislike the consequent trouble of changing their gown, the Church of England is to be involved in ecclesiastical, yet, when revived, thorny and angry controversies as to the old rivalry between that 'roy of Popery,' the white surplice, and that 'badge of Calvinism,' the Geneva gown."

The confusion introduced by the Tractarian is next denounced:—

"It is easy to make a jumble and confusion, but not so easy to set it right again. It is not seemly that a preacher should be enjoined to wear a white gown at one end of London-bridge, and a black gown at the other; which must be the case till the Bishop of Winchester shall have adopted the Bishop of London's views, or, which we rather hope, the Bishop of London may reconsider the case, and revert to what has been, we think we may say, the unvarying practice in parish churches at least since the Reformation."

And finally, the subject is closed with the following earnestness:—

"If, as we believe, the whole Episcopal bench, and the vast majority of mankind, are agreed that the greater part, if not all, of these deviations from the established usages of the Church are frivolous, unwarrantable, and, in their consequences, dangerous, let the reverend depositaries of authority honestly and bravely, and with one voice, say so, and save, if possible, those who headlessly practice them from the sin,—and the Church from the peril,—of a schism about trifles and toys—hooseys, curtises, and candlesticks."

THE CHAPLAINS.—The Englishman stated on Friday last, that he had been looking into the state of the subscription lists of the various institutions supported in this country by voluntary subscriptions, and was struck with the decline of bounty on the part of the Clergy who were once the chief supporters of many of these charities. The reason, says he, is obvious. The clergy are no longer paid as they were. The augmentation of the numerical strength of the Chaplains was accompanied by a reduction in the salaries of their respective grades. Our contemporary has we think been misled on the subject. The salaries of the Chaplains have never, as far as we have heard, been subject to any serious reduction. Full Chaplains receive the same allowance they did twenty-five years ago, which is from 8 to 900 Rupees a month. We are not certain that the salaries of the two Presidency Chaplains were not curtailed on the appointment of a Bishop and an Archdeacon, but with this should have been men more endowed with Christian exception, if it be an exception, the salaries have not been affected by any subsequent change. The allowances of Assistant Chaplains, were not made up by any deduction from the salaries of the older Chaplains than on the site; they formed an additional charge on the state to the full of the salaries.

Neither has there been any real decline of bounty on the part of the Clergy to our charitable institutions; nor were they at any time the chief supporters of any of the charities, with the exception perhaps of small local charities. If our contemporary alludes to the magnificent donations of Mr. Brown and Dr. Buchanan, he must bear in mind that their pecuniary resources were derived, not from their allowances as Chaplains, but from their well paid offices of Provost and Vice Provost of the College of Fort William. Those who have been identified as belonging to the same school, gave liberally and nobly, but not because they were in the receipt of larger allowances than their successors. If their names appear more conspicuously in the list of donations, it was because the number of institutions which demanded their aid was exceedingly limited. At present the number of public institutions, and the calls on the clergyman's purse, have been so greatly multiplied, that the amount he can subscribe on each occasion appears comparatively small. If however we had an opportunity of summing up the unostentatious charities of the clergy of the present day, we are certain our contemporary would have no reason to complain that the exercise of this Christian virtue had diminished.

The Editor proceeds to speak of the necessity of having not only a numerous, but a high caste clergy in this country. If by high caste clergy he alludes to a Puseyite clergy, we should say, from a reference to some of the appointments which have recently been made in the grade of the Assistant Chaplain, that his wishes are likely to be realized. Not only have we had these high caste clergy sent out ready-made from England, but some of those who came out of an inferior caste, have subsequently risen to that higher order which is thought so desirable. Perhaps however we are doing violence to the views of our contemporary, in supposing that he considers a high caste clergyman necessary to cope with a high caste brahmin, and his allusion may possibly apply to the mental endowments of the Chaplain, under the augmentation rule. In this case also we think his opinion is open to correction. Doubtless the Company have had some very "hard bargains" among the Chaplains, as they have in the Civil, Military and Medical departments; but among those who have arrived within the last two years in India, there are men of equal learning, and equal talent and zeal, with those whose names are found on the list thirty years ago. We cannot expect to find a cluster of men like Brown, Buchanan, Martyn, Corrie and Thomson, in every Ianstran; but to assume that there is any general and perceptible inferiority in the clergy-men now appointed, which would place them in a disadvantageous contrast with their predecessors, would be contrary to the result of our observation. A Chaplaincy in India is not in the list of clerical prizes; and those who have prospects of rising in the Church at home, would probably refuse an Indian appointment. But if the salaries of the chaplains were troubled, it is much to be doubted whether we should have men more endowed with Christian piety, zeal and humility, or even with University learning, than we can expect under the present system of moderate allowances. Rich Chaplaincies would become objects of ambitious competition, and would in all probability be used as counters in the game of politics. Men who were sent out here to make rapid fortunes would consist of those who had more interest than gifts; and although they might be men of higher caste, of more patrician birth, and not been drawn, though the reason was plain of nobler connections than those who accept as a pike staff;—the paper had been impugned the office at present, it is not certain that they rated to a sturdy Association which would not would apply themselves with more assiduity to take the trouble to draw out and pay over the the discharge of their duties, or enlarge their interest.

THE UNION BANK agitation is on the wane, and will probably not be revived till the period of the next half yearly meeting comes round. The meeting which was made special to consider the propriety of altering the Rules of the Bank in various respects, was held on Saturday last, when not one of the proposed alterations was carried. The qualification of a Director was not raised to double the amount of the qualification necessary for a Director of the Bank of Bengal; neither was the Bank allowed to advance money on its own shares, nor were the Directors vested with discretionary power to buy up the shares of the Bank; and the propriety of allowing proxies in certain cases, was not admitted. The object of those who signed the requisition to the Secretary, appears to have been defeated, almost with their own consent, for never were measures urged with greater feebleness and indecision. We believe this result is mainly owing to the exertions of the press, and so far as those measures were likely to be detrimental to the Institution, the Proprietors owe a debt of gratitude to the fourth century, which we fear they are ill disposed to pay.

We hear it repeated, that these discussions by the press are injurious to the Bank, and are calculated to shake the confidence of the public in its stability. But if the assertions so repeatedly made in the public journals could be fairly met, and proved to be utterly groundless, by a reference to figures, their interference, so far from doing harm, would serve to increase the stability of the Bank. If the press had been as faithful four years ago, as it is at present, much of the distress and anxiety which is now felt, would have been averted. The capital of the Bank would not have been diverted into channels from which it cannot be recovered without much risk and difficulty; advances would not have been made upon produce not in existence; goods would not have been hypothecated to the Bank and left in possession of the borrower to be pawned to other parties. And however distressing to individual feelings; however detrimental for a time even to the interests of the Bank, this unceremonious agitation may be, yet it will probably be discovered in the end to have averted far more mischief than it may have created.

The remarks of the Press, more especially of the Star, were embodied by Mr. Tait in a series of questions, of which he required an answer from the Directors of the Bank. Mr. Grant responded to the call, and offered various explanations of the balance sheet, which served rather to strengthen than to remove the impression that the statement which had been published in the papers, was intended to cover and to reveal the untoward position of the Bank. The Directors have evidently aimed in that direction at making the best of a bad matter. Mr. Grant's explanation disclosed some matters which would otherwise have remained unknown; he acknowledged that the mode of keeping the accounts would admit of much improvement; and he confessed his inability to assign any reason why the interest on the Government Securities, to the amount of Twenty-one lakhs and seventy

The object of every discussion on the subject of the Union Bank ought to be to restore, and not to impair its credit; and it becomes those who have taken part in these discussions, to consider whether any good can be expected, from prolonging the agitation. Every one is perfectly aware that by the predominating influence of Directors seeking their own relief, the funds of the Bank have been directed into dangerous channels; that the object of the Institution—the support of commercial transactions,—has been defeated, by locking up its capital in mills, factories, mines, and other speculative speculations. That these proceedings will not be repeated, may be safely gathered from the energy of public reprobation which the disrepute has called forth. The object now is to place the affairs of the Bank; to recover with the least loss, the funds which have thus been placed in jeopardy, and to re-establish public confidence. It is the part of wisdom therefore to bring these discussions to a close, and to place a general reliance in the Directors whom the proprietors have chosen; and in the effect of that public opinion which has been so unequivocally expressed. The Directors have a serious task before them; but we have every confidence in their zeal, their fidelity and their eventual success. The present season is favorable for liberating the Bank from its unwise agricultural engagements. If at the next meeting it should appear that any opportunity of disentangling the institution from those indulged speculations into which it has most injudiciously plunged, has been wantonly neglected; that any fresh measure can be traced up to a wish to continue the speculation, or that the funds of the Bank have been devoted as heretofore to the relief of distressed firms on insecure pledges, it will then be time for the public to come forward and make its voice heard. Meanwhile the Directors should be allowed a season of repose for the undisturbed performance of the duties committed to them.

THE EDUCATION CLAUSES OF THE FACTORY BILL.—The reader has not forgotten that the Educational clauses of Sir James Graham's Factory Bill, in which provision was to be made by public assessment, for the establishment of schools which were to be under the control of the Establishment, and in which no Disinterested was to be allowed to become a teacher or an assistant, were met by so determined an opposition on the part of the Disinterested, as to stagger the "unimpaired Baronet," as the Puseyites term him, and to induce him to amend the Bill. It was found, on examination, that the amended Bill had received only a few alterations in the details, and none in its principle; while its spirit was more objectionable than that of the original measure. The opposition to the Bill was not abated, but rather augmented by the revision it had undergone. Still however Sir James Graham announced his determination to carry it through the House, evidently hoping that a counter demonstration would immediately be appointed. A petition in favour of the bill was, it is true, presented from Manchester, with 23,000 Church signatures, but the value of it was completely neutralized by another petition from the same place, with 90,000 Disinterested signatures attached to it. The Baronet is said to have been conquering with the Wesleyans, which may or may not be true, but we find they are immovable in their opposition to the Bill. The day originally fixed for the consideration of the amended Bill was Monday, the 23d of May. It was then postponed to Friday, the 26th, then to Monday, the 5th of June, on which day Sir James Graham stated that he should be prepared to proceed with it that day forthwith. Meanwhile the 11th use continues to be inundated with petitions, and it is fully expected that the number will reach 15,000, and the signatures amount to three Millions by the day fixed for the debate. The Englishman, when alluding to the remarks we offered on the subject on the arrival of the last mail, expressed some surprise that we had given no editorial opinion of the measure. We thought the general tone of our observations, and the exultation with which we dwelt on the opposition it had encountered, would have been sufficient to indicate our own views. But lest he should again suppose that we are in any measure favourable to it, we would distinctly state that the plan of raising funds for national education by taxation, and of excluding all but Churchmen from the office of teacher, and placing the whole system under episcopal control, is open to the most serious objections. The claim of the Church to be the sole instructor of a people, among whom two-fifths, at least, have separated from her communion, cannot be admitted. We are fully convinced that the voluntary efforts of private communities are not sufficient for the education of a nation; that they are too feeble to cope with the evils of national ignorance. Private individuals and bodies have assuredly done more in England than has ever been done in any age and in any country, by unofficial agency. It is owing to their exertions, among Churchmen and Disinterested, that England has been kept from degenerating into absolute barbarism. But the experiment of the voluntary system has only served to point out more emphatically the duties of the state, and to demonstrate that national education must be supported by national funds, and that it must be made compulsory. But in the present divided state of England, and more especially in the distracted state of the Church, while its due weight is given to episcopal agency in the system, it must not be allowed to absorb every other influence. If the Disinterested are to pay for the Schools, they will reasonably object to any arrangement which shall exclude them from all share in the management of them, founded on the assumption that they are a tolerated sect. The Bill, it is said, makes every concession which could be expected; but the very terms of concession, especially in reference to district, the seats of manufacturing opulence, in the majority, implies a degree of degradation on the one part, and of supremacy on the other, which cannot fail to wound the feelings of the Bill.

But it is the growth and prevalence of Puseyism in England which has given its bitterness and pungency to the opposition manifested to the Bill. The principles of the Oxford School are now described as having perverted the majority of the Establishment. The feelings of a Puseyite to a Disinterested exhibit perhaps the highest instance of intense contempt of which the human mind can form an idea. The contempt of the 'Son of Man' for the outside barbarism—of a Mahomedan for an infidel,—of a Brahman for a chandal, is mild compared with the feelings of repulsive contempt which a full grown Tractarian feels towards a Dissenter. Can any man wonder that Dissenters should so strongly object to entrusting the scheme of national education for which they are to pay, and in which the welfare of their own families is bound up, to such keeping? Whatever might have been the propriety of placing the Church at the head of public instruction at any former period of our history, assuredly the present is not the time at which any friend of peace and religious liberty would think it prudent to do so. But there are other considerations which forbid it. In doctrine, the heart of the Wesleyites is at Rome. They abhor the "odious Reformation," and all that Dissenters hold dear of Christian truth; at the same time, so important do they consider trifles that they scruple not to introduce a schism in the Anglican Church about "crises and toys, nosegays, cursties, and candlesticks." Is it to such men, so unlearned in doctrine, so pusill in conduct, that the business of public instruction is to be confided? We beseech the reader not to imagine that we write thus under the influence of sectarian feelings; if that were the case, we should exult over the progress of Wesleyism, which is the firmest and most successful friend of Dissent; but we feel painfully that whatever superstitionism our beloved country, effectually destroys its happiness, its peace, its glory, and disables it from the performance of those high duties in an unworldly and heathen world which Divine Providence seems especially to have confided to its instrumentality.

The Bill cannot pass. With the Scottish Church rent in twain, and the Establishment consigned almost to a skeleton by the life Bond which has been drawn from it; with the English Church divided against itself to a degree which almost betokens the arrival of the period when, in the emphatic language of Holy writ, it cannot stand; with Ireland demanding the repeal of the Union, in the hope of stripping the Saxon Church of its endowments, and restoring them to the Church of St. Patrick; with Ireland in a state of insurrection, requiring the presence of 25,000 troops, and a fleet of observation, as though it were the country of an enemy, Sir James Graham will not be so insane as to push through a measure, against which fifteen thousand petitions signed by three millions have been presented, and which cannot be carried into effect, without the cordial co-operation of those who are its uncompromising antagonists. Giff evidently wants only a decent pretext for giving up the Bill, and looking out of the foolish scrape into which he has been drawn by his Clerical prompter, who will long rue the day when they urged a measure which has served so unequivocally to demonstrate the strength of Dissent, and to show the country that whenever the Dissenters are unanimous on any question touching their religious privileges, the Church is powerless, and the Parliament submissive.

MOULMEIN.—We have received Moulmein papers to the 12th of July. They announce that all differences with the Burmese authorities at Martaban had been successfully adjusted by Major Broadfoot, and the navigation of the river freed from all interruption through his exertions. The papers publish a series of Proclamations issued by the Commissioner to the amber of eight, during the progress of these negotiations, for which we cannot afford space. It is sufficient however to announce the result to which they have led. The imposition of an excise duty of fifteen per cent. on timber, the staple production of the province, requires to be reconsidered. It may possibly appear to the controlling authorities here that the removal of the impost would be more advantageous to its interests than the retention of it.

It is manifest that the success of Major Broadfoot's exertions has been owing to the vigour which has marked them. The Burmese Cabinet will not go to war with us, even on a great pretence, much less for a few rafts of timber. Our triumph in China has settled the question of peace or war, not only with the Burmese, but with the other Indo-Chinese nations, for the next ten years. Any encroachments which the Burmese officers may make in the frontier provinces, will be glauced and punished, as soon as a vigorous remonstrance is offered. We owe it to the peace and security of our own provinces, to use the advantage which we have thus acquired, for their benefit; and to resist with firmness the very first attempts to encroach, which the Burmese may exhibit. Major Broadfoot deserves credit for the energy of his conduct, which has thus been crowned with success. But in proportion as these exertions by the new Commissioner appear commendable, the punishment which has been inflicted on the previous Commissioner for having adopted the same measures, though not perhaps with the same energy, appears unaccountable and unjust.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JULY 27.

—The Star of the 26th instant, has a long and able article on the Salt Company, written with a perfect knowledge of the subject and in lively and vigorous style. We recommend it to the especial notice of our readers. It will be found among our extracts.

—The convention with France regarding the conveyance of letters by way of Marseilles, which was announced by the last mail, has by some oversight not been made public by the post office authorities, and the last Calcutta Gazette still contains the old announcement of three years standing, that all letters sent by way of Marseilles will be charged 2s. 6d. under a quarter of an ounce. As a double mail will be despatched this day week to England, one by the Hindostan, the other by way of Bombay, it is important that the public should bear in mind the new arrangements which we copy from the Star.

—Most of our readers will rejoice to hear that under the new convention with France the postage for letters to England by Marseilles will have been reduced to 1s. 10d. for letters under a quarter of an ounce; and to 2s. 6d. for those under half an ounce—but on the other hand newspapers are to be charged 2d. instead of 2s. 6d. as formerly. This increased postage on Newspapers has occasioned some remonstrance which it is stated will probably have the effect of reducing it to the former rate of 2d. Arrangements are in progress for the convenience of persons posting letters to England for places beyond India, as China, Australia, &c. &c. and the late regulation of the Post Office prohibiting such letters being sent by the India overland mail has been cancelled.—See our Star.

—Mr. A. F. Smith, the Sheriff of the year, has presented the Jail with a number of books calculated to amuse and instruct. This library is intended equally for the unfortunate and the guilty, the debtor and the culprit.

—The Harbours states, that the last express reached Madras on the evening of the 18th, just four days before it reached us; its difference of time is said to be disproportioned to the distance of space. The distance between Madras and Bombay is 703 miles; the transmission of letters therefore in six days is at the rate of six miles and a quarter an hour.

—The Managers of the Military Orphan establishment have resolved to maintain the Boys' school, instead of placing the wards at other institutions. As the expense of the establishment was excessive beyond all precedent, owing to the very small number of boys educated in it, it was proposed to break it up and send the lads to England, where they would be better educated for the same sum. The plan would also have had the advantage of destroying an odious and galling distinction now made between those born in and out of wedlock. The Court of Directors however refused to sanction the arrangement, and the question therefore came up whether the present extensive establishment should be kept up, or more economical and equally efficient plan adopted. The managers have now prevailed on the former.

—The Theatre at Prince of Wales' Island is about to be sold—to defray the arrears of wages, due to the people who had charge of it.

FRIDAY, JULY 28.

—The Star of this morning has a very spirited and humorous translation into Hindoostanee of Lord Ellenborough's speech at Harlequins. It is intended for the use of the native officers, to whom it is important to convey the fact that his Lordship is the Friend of the Army. The concluding part of the translation, in which Lord Ellenborough's determination to throw off all parade, and live like a country gentleman at Harlequins, is peculiarly happy, and almost superior to the original. Though we have given the whole speech elsewhere, we cannot refrain from quoting again this well turned peroration,—"Our uh him yihah ak shrah kooch amn long, Inshallah! myn devshil bar turat kurat ham; myn salant kharah kahkhar ham; girish ka tar pur myn eta ham; girish ka tar pur toon milia ham; Man Sahib log has salant,—bus!"

—The last Delhi Gazette seems to hold out some hope of an accommodation between the Rajah of the Punjab and his refractory minister. The son of the minister, a young man of excellent abilities, has been sent to persuade his father to return to Court. This he may probably effect, and the storm may blow over for the present, but only to burst with greater fury at no distant period. The relative position and strength of the parties, now that mutual trust has been manifested, field the hope of any permanent reconciliation.

—Mr. Cochrane, formerly of the Calcutta bar, who proceeded to Bombay two or three years ago, and met with much success, has now returned from England, to which he had gone, and has determined to give Bombay the benefit of his talents, which, considering the overflowing state of the bar in Calcutta is a wise determination.

—The King of Delhi has given Mr. George Thompson a Saumant in Fardis, handsomely engraved and framed, in which he is styled "the wise, the high in rank, the well winner of either side, the deputed of the Shah of Hindoostan."

—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Ferguson, Brothers and Co. held in pursuance of the orders of the Insolvent Court, it was resolved to recommend Mr. R. C. Jenkins to act as assignee in conjunction with Mr. O'Dowd.

—It was also resolved to give the Assignee a remuneration of five per cent. which, as the estate is valued at Fifty lakhs of Rupees, will be a handsome purse of two lakhs and a half of Rupees.

—The Delhi Gazette states, that Alee Mahomed as well as Sher Mahomed, has succeeded in crossing the Indus, and reaching the Sooman mountains. Scinde is therefore quiet while the thirve overservants. Should the Amoy be successful in raising the hill tribes, there may be some more honours for our troops in the next winter, but the Beloches will do little in the plains against disciplined troops.

— Lord Ellenborough has presented Capt. Scott, who was Commander of the fleet which brought his Lordship down, with a silver tankard as a token of appreciation of the particular skill and attention manifested by him. Lord William Bentinck presented a similar token of his appreciation to Mr. Taulor, who first introduced the blessing of tea into the country.

— The Harkness states, that Mr. Long has been admitted as an authorised pleader in the Sudder Court. But the Editor does not say in what language he is to plead; if in English, then the rules of the Court regarding the use of Oorloo is suspended. But in whatever language he may plead, the admission of European barristers into the Native Courts will be the beginning of a new and happy era. In England the improvement of our Courts has been far more owing to the bar than to the bench.

SATURDAY, JULY 20.

— The Bombay Times states, that the nobles in the Scottish Church has extended to this town, and that it has been resolved to set up a free Presbyterian Church, and bring out a free minister.

— The Police of Calcutta has taken the field in earnest against the unlicensed Punch Homes in Calcutta; and three men have been brought up on the charge of keeping them, and have been fined on their conviction, the first in the sum of 50, and the two others in the sum of 40 Rs. each.

— The Board of Revenue for the Western Provinces, it is said, has applied to the Commissioner for 8000 acres for packing up their records, preparatory to their moving up to Agra. There can be no longer any doubt that the Sudder Court and the Sudder Board will be removed from Allahabad to Agra in the ensuing cold weather.

— The Gazetteer's Gazette mentions a series of operations recently conducted in Lower Sindh, under the judicious arrangements of Mr. J. G. Lumsden, Political Agent in Cutch, and Col. Shukler, commanding the troops in that province. The first attack was made on the Fort of Dwerga, across the Rann which was taken possession of and blown up. Metee was occupied on the same day. It contained eighteen large guns, nine of these brass. The force then advanced to Wangs, which was occupied on the 10th. Nawrota, one of the strongest forts in Sindh, was taken on the 15th, the enemy dispersing as our troops advanced. It contains good barracks, has two wells and ten guns, four of them being brass. The fort is 3300 feet square. In consequence of these successes, it appears that the most communication between Hyderabad and Cutch, had been completely re-established. All these operations have taken place in Sher Mahomed's territories, he himself being aggressive in the mountains of Beluchistan.

SUNDAY, JULY 21.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that the Lieutenant-Governor of the North West Provinces has replied to the King of Delhi's application regarding Sir George Thompson, that he might have free access to the Palace, and that His Majesty was at liberty to appoint him his Agent and deputy him to England; but that he was not to confer a Khilafat upon him;—that is, he is not at liberty to perform an act of sovereignty.

— We have much pleasure in stating, that the statement published in the Harkness last week, regarding the detention of the dead body of a debtor by the bailiffs, till it was released by the payment of his debts, is discovered to be without foundation.

Four bailiffs of the Court of Requests have addressed a letter to the Commissioners, denying the fact of their having ever exercised any power on the corpse of any individual, or recovered any money from the friends of the defunct before the remains were allowed to be removed for interment. The Editor of the Harkness also acknowledges that he had been misinformed on the subject. From the mail with which the matter has been taken up by the Commissioners, there is every reason to hope that no disgraceful a proceeding will not be permitted.

— The Indian Museum states, that Sir Hugh Gough was to leave Bangalore for Madras on his route to Calcutta, to assume the command of the army on the 10th of July. His Excellency can not therefore be here much before this day week. We perceive that General Smith, the Adjutant-General of the Queen's Troops, has already passed through Delhi, on his way to join Head Quarters in Calcutta.

— A Commission has been sitting for some days in Calcutta, to enquire into the sanity of Baboo Durgachurn Sain, before Messrs. Prinsep and Leitch as Commissioners. The Jury found him not of unsound mind, but of weak intellect and recommended him and his property to the protection of the Court. At the close of the inquest, Mr. Seppings, the foreman of the Jury, stated that he and his brother jurors had determined to donate one half their fees to the Seamen's Hospital, the other half to the Free School.

— The Star states, that the H. C. Steamer Queen is ordered to proceed on an early day next month to Bombay, with treasure. Lord Ellenborough does not proceed in her, as some of the papers indicated.

— Sir Robert Harry Inglis will be happy to learn, that Lord Ellenborough visited the Catholic Nunnery in Calcutta, on Friday, the 25th instant, where he was received by the Mother Superior the Visar Apostolic, and conducted to a throne surmounted with a Royal crown, which had been prepared for his Lordship. A suitable address was presented to the Governor General, who accepted it with great pleasure, and assured the Visar Apostolic that it would always afford him great gratification to converse in every way in his power to the welfare of the Establishment.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 1.

— A writer in the Harkness, under the name of Shams, has been so deficient in the Political officers employed in Afghanistan, and he has executed his task admirably. But there is one fault to which he alludes altogether new to the public. It is said, while Jallalabad was besieged, a Council of War was held to discuss the propriety of a retreat, and that it was chiefly through Major Maingrove's arguments that the plan was abandoned. Of course every thing that occurred in that garrison is now the property of History. Is it a fact, then, that a Council of War was held to consider a retreat? If so, where are its records? Have they been abstracted, or are they in the public archives? Who supported this plan of a retreat? Who opposed it? Is it to the man, or to the men who successfully opposed it, that the salvation of that force is to be attributed.

— We yesterday denied on the authority of four of the bailiffs, that a dead body had been seized by the bailiffs, for sale; but we never seem to know where we have got the truth. A gentleman in the Harkness comes forward this day and positively asserts that the body of Mr. Higgins was detained for a debt of 25 Rupees by the Bailiff, who said it should be detained till it stank. This bailiff is an old leech; but he is to be confronted with his corner on Friday next. The Commissioner, Mr. Britton, has determined that there shall be the strictest investigation of the subject, and of course the severest punishment of the bailiffs, if the crime is brought home to him.

— The plot thickens at Gwalior. On the night of the 10th inst., all the men under Col. Jacob's command, and these under his son, went over to the Gwalior side. The British officers of the Brigade are placed under arrest and are to be detained. Col. Jacob, and Col. Baptist, who was previously dismissed, are said to be essentially, will have little cause to regret their separation from the Gwalior army. They say that about hundred guns are undergoing repair, that the utmost activity is apparent in the arsenal; and the conjecture of some is that these exertions have reference to objects the British Government will not approve of.

— A letter addressed to the Albion at Madras, on the subject of the arrested Bank, gives us the singular fact that of a capital of thirty lakhs of Rupees, not more than three lakhs and a half remain by the Merchants of the town, and that seventeen lakhs are held by the servants of Government.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following names for the Friend of India—

Ct. No. Rs.
R. Smith, Esq.	to April, 1884, 20 0
Capt. Fennell, Esq.	to Feb. 1884, 20 0
Esq.	to Feb. 1884, 20 0
Rev. Dr. Charles, Esq.	to June, 1884, 20 0
Saloojee Nairam Dutt, Esq.	ditto, 20 0
Obhoy Churn Dutt, Esq.	to June, 1884, 20 0
Magn. Gibson and Co. to June, 1884, 20 0
R. H. Chatterjee, Esq.	to June, 1884, 20 0
Mr. D. C. Chatterjee, Esq.	ditto, 20 0
G. L. Ban, Esq.	to July, 1884, 20 0
J. V. Looze, Esq.	to Dec. 1884, 20 0
G. T. Venkatesh, Esq.	to March, 1884, 20 0
H. Holm, Esq.	to July, 1884, 20 0
G. Van Someren, Esq.	to Aug. 1884, 20 0
Glenn J. Thill, Esq.	to July, 1884, 20 0
Jan. Grand, Esq.	to March, 1884, 20 0
Lieut. Col. A. Spier, Esq.	to June, 1884, 20 0
G. U. Yule, Esq.	ditto, 44 0
Saloojee Nairam Dutt to Jan. 1884, 10 0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

VISIT OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LORD ELLENBOROUGH TO LORDS ROYAL AND ST. THOMAS'S.

On Friday the 26th instant, the Right Honourable the Governor General honoured with a visit the Loretto Community. His Lordship, accompanied by the Archbishop, Visar Apostolic, and conducted to the spacious and splendid drawing-room, where the Ladies of the Institution were assembled. At the southern extremity of the room, a throne surmounted, with a Royal Crown had been tastefully reserved. Whilst His Lordship was proceeding to take his place upon the throne, the National Anthem, God Save the Queen, was exquisitely performed on the Piano by one of the Nuns, and the strains accompanied with a happy effect by the voices of four of the young Ladies of the Institution. At the close of the performance, the Lady Superior arose and after paying her respects to his Lordship read the following address.

My LORD.—We the sisters and pupils of the Loretto Institution beg leave to tender to your Lordship the tribute of our warmest and most grateful thanks on this occasion to convey to your Lordship our acknowledgments for the distinguished honour you have conferred upon us by accompanying to visit our Community. We humbly hope that the course of instruction and the arrangements adopted in it will be found to deserve your Lordship's approval, and that the earnest prayer, that your Lordship's administration may augment the glory of the British Empire and the future of your own fame. We beg with profound respect to commend your Lordship to most obedient servants.

Signed on the part and of the Pupils, DELAPLAIN HALL, Superior.

Loretto House, July 20, 1884.

To this address His Lordship graciously replied:—I accept with pleasure the address presented by the Sisters and pupils of the Loretto Institution.

It will always afford me great gratification to co-operate in every way in my power to the welfare of this Institution.

The Lady Superior next submitted to his Lordship's inspection some specimens of fancy needle work and drawings executed by the pupils and begged his kind acceptance of some of the articles of needle and needlework prepared by a member of the community. From the drawing room the noble visitor proceeded to the school, which was a building of stone, and the range of baths lately erected. With each of these apartments, his Lordship expressed himself highly pleased. Of the dormitory, in particular, more than once remarked that he had not seen, in Calcutta, a room so admirably adapted for the purpose for which it was employed. All the school furniture, and the drawing room annexed to the dormitory drew forth also his marked approbation. Such excellent arrangements, his Lordship remarked, were exceedingly well calculated to bring the pupils, before, to habits of regularity and order. From the convent the Lady Superior passed under the newly built seminary, which his Lordship examined with much attention. After a few minutes delay, during which the 19th Psalm, for the preservation and happiness of the Sovereign was sung and performed on the Organ by the Sisters, escorted by some of the children, the Right Honourable the Governor General retired, evidently much gratified by his visit to the Loretto Community. We commend him to the consideration of the friends of the Loretto Community, to profit of this opportunity, to add, that

1. Chlorophyll a and Chlorophyll b were determined by the method of Arar and Collins (1971) using a Shimadzu 1010 spectrophotometer. The concentration of chlorophylls was expressed in mg g⁻¹ of dry weight.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 449, Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, AUGUST 10TH, 1848.

[Price 3 Cts. Per Annum, or 10 Cts. Quarterly, if paid in advance.]

OVERLAND MAIL.

THE Bombay Government having fixed on the 26th of August, for the departure of the East India Company's ship, notice is hereby given, that the latest safe date for the transmission of letters from Calcutta, which may be intended for that opportunity, will be Thursday, the 16th proximo.

Wm. MOORE,
Superior Post Master.

General Post Office, July 16th, 1848.

EXTERNAL COMMERCE OF THE HINDU PRESENT DURING THE LAST COMMERCIAL YEAR.
We have been favored with a copy of Mr. Willinson's Commercial Annual for the year 1848-49, and avail ourselves of the valuable information it furnishes, to present a brief view of the present state of our external commerce.

The entire value of the Imports during the past year in the Port of Calcutta exhibits an increase over the preceding year of nearly thirty lakhs of Rupees; the imports in 1841-42, having been, in round figures, Rs. 5,42,00,000; and in 1848-49, Rs. 5,71,00,000. In the Exports there is a decrease of seventy-four lakhs of Rs., the value in 1841-42 having been Rs. 8,98,00,000 and in 1848-49, Rs. 7,63,00,000. This is accounted for by the diminished export of the single article of Indigo, of which the quantity sent abroad in the last year was seventy-five lakhs less than in the preceding period. In fact, our exports are always liable to great fluctuations, owing to the variation in the produce and price of Indigo, and the steady value of Opium; two articles which form nearly one half our entire exports.

It is quite possible therefore that the result of one year may appear more unfavorable than of the year which preceded it, though in every other article of export, except these two staples, there may in reality be a general increase. To ascertain the strength of commercial improvement it is necessary, therefore, to take a wider field of comparison than that of any two consecutive years; and in this view of the case we shall find that there has been a steady and most gratifying increase both of imports and exports. Thus, the average of Imports in the six years ending April 1838, was Rs. 3,23,00,000; the average of the five succeeding years, ending with April last, was Rs. 5,24,00,000. In the first named period, the average of our Exports was Rs. 5,49,00,000; in the last mentioned period, Rs. 7,58,00,000. During the last five years there has been an increase of two millions sterling a year, or two crores of Rupees, in the value of our Imports, and the same augmentation in the value of our Exports; which proves that the capacity of the country to consume British manufactures, as well as its productive powers, have been steadily on the increase.

Of this trade, one half is connected with England. Our Imports from, and exports to, England constitute fifty per cent. more or less, of our whole external commerce. If the trade from the other Presidencies which finds its way to England, bears the same proportion to their general trade, it will appear that, as a customer, the value of India to England is second only to that of North America; and that the value of the entire trade to the East, including the Straits and China, is quite equal to that which Great Britain enjoys with the United States. Nay, when the superior permanence of this trade, subject as it is to no hostile tariffs, is considered, as well as its expansive facilities, it will not be too much to affirm that it is the best foreign commerce which England enjoys.

The import of Cotton twist and cloths into India, which followed the relaxations in the Charter of 1810, had been for some time previous to 1835, stationary. It reached a certain mark, owing, it was said, to over trading; then receded, and again advanced; but in the year 1835-36, it stood no higher than 80,00,000 Rs. The manufacturers of England value a country in proportion as it takes off the produce of their looms. Hence the value of India, that is of the Indian market, had been in their estimation for several years, fixed and not progressive; but in the eight years which we embrace in our comparison, the importance of India, at Manchester and other piece-goods and cotton-twist towns has been nearly doubled. Since the year 1835 we took off in one year not less than two millions of their cotton cloth and twist. But as this may have been owing rather to the necessities of the manufacturers than to those of the consumers, the best mode of testing the increase, is to take two periods of four years each. In the period from 1836 to 1839, the average imports, were Rs. 1,08,00,000; in the next four years, from 1839 to 1842, they amounted to Rs. 1,84,00,000, exhibiting an increase of nearly eighty per cent.

In Woollens however there is little increase of consumption. In a country where the thermometer ranges two-thirds of the year above 65°, there can be little demand for the fabrics of Leeds and Bradford. In the four years extending from 1836 to 1839, the average consumption was 10 lakhs of Rupees worth, 100,000 pounds sterling; in the four succeeding years, it rose to 130,000; in other words seventy millions of people took off as much woollen cloth as a second rate town in England. China will be the country for our woollens, as soon as the people to the North of the Yang, find out how warm and cheaply we can clothe them.

In the article of Metals, copper, spelter, tin, lead, iron, steel, and quicksilver, there has been no very perceptible alteration in the period under review. In 1835-36 the importations amounted to 40 lakhs of Rupees; in 1842-43, they did not exceed that amount. But on dividing the period into two parts, we find that in the first four years the average imports were 37 lakhs; in the last period, 40 lakhs.

Of Books and Pamphlets the importation of 1842-43, was less than that of 1835-37; having been in the earlier year, Rs. 2,33,000; in the past year, Rs. 2,31,000; but upon a comparison of the four years ending in 1839, with the same period ending in 1843, we find that there has been an average increase of 14,000 Rs., not worth mentioning. In the article of Millinery however there is a very palpable difference in the transactions of these two periods. Thus, we have for the average of the first four years, of 5,15,000 Rs. annually of caps and bonnets and dresses; and for the last four years not less than Rs. 11,20,000. Eleven lakhs of Rupees worth of Millinery to two lakhs and thirty thousand Rs. Philosophy, have remarked that female influence is one of the surest tests of civilisation. Judging by this criterion, we shall find that the rapid strides in civilisation made in the European community in India, since the year 1836, are almost without a parallel.

The consumption of Tea has been more than doubled, in the last four years. In the year 1835-36, the imports were, Rs. 1,34,000. In the past year, Rs. 3,02,000. But comparing the two periods, on which our calculations are based, we find that in the first four years the imports were to the extent of two lakhs annually; in the last four years, they averaged four lakhs and forty thousand. It is possible that some portion of this increase may have arisen from the importation of Tea which was eventually sent to Great Britain, during the troubles in China; but since the year in which the largest importation occurred, there has been a steady and considerable increase upon the average of preceding years; and we are much disposed to attribute it to the increased consumption of this article among the more wealthy natives. Brandy was imported to so large an extent in 1835-36, (five lakhs of Rupees worth) that it required three years to consume it. Accordingly, in the next three years the entire imports did not amount to more than three lakhs and eighty thousand Rupees. But the last four years exhibit an increase, which tells awfully upon our temperance habits. The average of the first four years was, Rs. 2,20,000; that of the last four years was, Rs. 5,20,000; that is to say, the average of this last period exhibits a larger importation than the year 1835-36, in which the market was glutted. As the habit of drinking brandy is decidedly on the wane in the European community, we can attribute the increased consumption of this "liquid fire and distilled damnation," as Robert Hall designated it, only to the increase of intemperate habits among the natives. But the Import of Wines, red and white, Port, Sherry and Champagne exhibits almost the same progressive augmentation. Of the period we have chosen for comparison, the importation in the first half averaged Rs. 7,67,000; in the latter half, Rs. 12,80,000. Of this wine, we fancy that a large portion has been denatured into native stomachs.

The importation of Salt from abroad, has steadily increased during the past five years, as the following schedule will exhibit.

In 1838-39, we imported 2,07,000 Mds.
" 39-40,	4,38,000
" 40-41,	5,71,000
" 41-42,	6,14,000
" 42-43,	8,93,000

yielding Government a clear custom revenue in the last year of twenty-seven lakhs of Rupees. Whether the revenue from the manufacture of salt in Bengal has been reduced to this extent we cannot say; but if it has not, this sum will stand as a clear increase of revenue. This progressive increase of importations, shows that the objections of the natives to salt except that manufactured in their own provinces has been gradually giving way. It is proper however to remark that of this entire quantity of nearly nine lakhs of years, not 600 manna came from England; the great bulk was imported from Bombay.

We will only detain the reader among the Imports for another moment, with the butts and hogheads of Ale. In the consumption of this article there is little perceptible difference. In 1839-47 we imported 10,781, and in the last year, 10,164 hogheads. In 1840-41, the importation rose to nearly 15,000 hogheads, but that was evidently a year of speculation. Although however there has been little variation in the quantity of beer, during the last few years there has been a complete change of brewers. There are many now living who can recollect the time when Hodgson reigned without a rival in this market. There may be some alive who can even recollect the time when he spread dismay through India by announcing that he was about to re-join his brewery, and should be obliged to curtail the supplies. But Hodgson is gone, never to revive; a worn out firm, like a worn out superstition, never has a second lease of life. In the last year, Hodgson—who was said at one time to clear 30,000l. a year from the profit of the casks which he insisted upon supplying for his own beer, because he kept so much better in them,—sold few hogheads, and his return from a country which was once all his own, was One Hundred and Seventy-five Rupees! The market is now in the hands of Bass and Allport; but they have a formidable rival in Brewsters, a brewer unknown to India eight years ago, but who in the last year supplied us with 1485 hogheads. His is a rising mark, though the competitors for our custom have in the last eight years increased from twenty-two to forty-seven, and even Brother Jonathan, among his other notions, has indulged us with sixty-six hogheads of true re-putable Ale.

In treating of the Exports from this Presidency, our first duty is to shed a tear over the grave of the now defunct trade in Cotton piece goods, once the great source of wealth to India, and the envy of Europe. In no one instance has the uncertainty of all human possessions and prospects been so decidedly exhibited, as in the value of our export trade of Indian made cotton piece goods. In the years 1816-17, the value of the Cotton goods imported into India from England, the produce of our steam machinery, was Rs. 3,17,003; a little above Thirty thousand pounds sterling. In the year 1848-49, the importation of Cotton cloths and twist had advanced to nearly two crores of Rupees; two millions Sterling. But exactly in proportion as the British article has been making progress in this market, has the Indian manufacture been losing ground in the markets of Europe. It is instructive to trace its steady, unchecked, progress down the inclined plane, as the following statement of the export will exhibit:—

1816-17, Rs. Rs.	1,85,94,380.
1817-18, "	1,32,73,884.
1818-19, "	1,15,87,386.
1819-20, "	90,30,796.
1820-21, "	85,40,769.
1821-22, "	75,64,820.
1822-23, "	60,09,432.
1823-24, "	56,70,533.
1824-25, "	60,10,539.
1825-26, "	58,94,633.
1826-27, "	58,48,443.
1827-28, "	58,76,313.
1828-29, "	22,23,163.
1829-30, "	13,30,423.
1830-31, "	5,57,289.
1831-32, "	5,10,887.

1832-33, Rs. Rs.	5,32,501.
1833-34, "	wanting.
1834-35, "	do.
1835-36, Co's Rs.	5,79,468.
1836-37, "	7,45,978.
1837-38, "	8,94,350.
1838-39, "	5,90,181.
1839-40, "	5,54,634.
1840-41, "	4,64,845.
1841-42, "	1,76,394.
1842-43, "	1,69,618.

In the Article of Raw Cotton, there has been also a steady decline, unchecked except in the last year. In the four first years of the period we have chosen, namely from 1835-36 to 1838-39, the export was, on an average, 5,64,234 manna annually; in the last four years it does not present an average of more than 1,61,900 manna, and unless the American gentlemen sent out by the Court of Directors, should succeed in improving the quality of the Cotton, it will probably experience the same gradual decline as our Cotton fabric.

Of Raw Silk, the exportation has on an average increased within the last four years over the preceding period; for though the quantity exported in 1842-43 was not quite equal to that of 1838-37 (69,00,000 Rs.) yet the average of the first period was 50 lakhs of Rupees worth a year; of the second, 66 lakhs annually. In the article of Silk Piece Goods, the export has been declining for some time, owing partly to the improvement of machinery at home, partly to the dishonesty of manufacturers in India; who have endeavoured to put off their customers with an inferior article made up to the proper weight by water, and rendered smooth and plausible by ironing. Judging from the progress hitherto made, we should be led to conclude that it will require at the least another hundred years to teach the natives of India, that 'honesty is the best policy.'

We close this protracted notice of the work by a reference to the article of which the improved export has been the most decisive and manifest during the past eight years; we allude to that of Sugar. In 1835-36 the quantity exported to England amounted in value to 16,80,938 Rs.; in the last year it had increased to Rs. 1,48,35,773, that is to nearly One million and a half sterling in value. There has been no instance of such growth in any article of commerce at any previous period. There has been no development of the resources of India, to be compared with this sudden increase. Last year we supplied England with one-fourth the sugar she consumed; and there can be no doubt that India, would in time, be able to supply the whole of the home demand, if the prospects of the trade were not rendered so uncertain, by the vacillation of the Ministry at home in regard to this staple article.

It only remains for us to offer a brief remark or two, on the subject of Duties collected in Calcutta, which, under the operation of the new Tariff have increased, since 1831-32, from Rs. 6,42,000 to Rs. 27,80,000, without creating any inconvenience in the country. The abolition of the Transit duties has been felt throughout the country, from Delhi to Calcutta, as the greatest and most meritorious act of this Government since it obtained the sceptre of India. At the period of that abolition, which was point, Mr. Holt Mackenzie, Mr. Palmer, and concurrent with the establishment of higher duties, it was affirmed that Government would lose nothing by that act of generosity; that the continued maintenance of custom house stations on the North West frontier, for the collection of duties on goods coming from foreign states into our territories, and the establishment of higher duties on the import and export of articles in Calcutta, would amply compensate for any loss which the abolition might occasion. We regret that we have not the means of bringing this prediction to the test of facts. We know that in the year 1831-32, the whole amount of the transit duties, and of the sea Customs,—exclusive of the charges of establishment—was, Rs. 43,39,000. In the last year, the Collection of Sea Customs in the Port of Calcutta alone was, 27,80,000 Rupees; from this sum is to be deducted the expense of the establishment, and to it is to be added the receipts from the frontier customs of the North West Provinces. It is probable that the whole sum then sacrificed to promote the convenience and prosperity of the country may have been entirely made up; but even if that should not be the case, the actual loss cannot be much above five lakhs of Rupees, or 50,000l. a mere drop in the ocean of Indian revenue.

REMITTANCES TO ENGLAND.—The Governor General has notified in the last Calcutta Gazette, that it is the intention of the local Government, if the measure obtains the sanction of the Court of Directors, to discontinue advances upon the hypothecation of produce sent from India to England, as a means of remittance, and to depend entirely upon the sale of bills in London on the Indian Treasuries. This early intimation of the intentions of Government is given with the view of enabling those whose interests may be involved in the present system, to make due provision against its discontinuance. Both the object and the spirit of this notification have elicited general approbation; and the merits of Lord Ellenborough will stand high with the commercial community for this determination to abolish a system so detrimental to their interests. The interference of Government with the Calcutta market for produce, which was regulated by no rule but the exigencies of the state, tended to give an uncertainty to all mercantile calculations, and to disturb the natural current of trade; and it has long been the anxious desire of the great body of merchants, that this powerful, and, in effect though not in design, capricious customer, could be kept from interfering with these operations. Their desires are now likely to be consummated.

Yet it seems very singular that Lord Ellenborough, immediately on receiving from the Court of Directors and the Board of Control the two letters published in Friday's Herald, in which they distinctly refuse to bind themselves by any promise to relinquish the system of remitting money on the hypothecation of goods, should come forward and make this announcement to the mercantile community, as though he were certain of overcoming with equal ease the repugnance of the Court and the Board. In the course of the enquiry instituted by Parliament, at the close of the last Charter, the great anxiety was manifested lest the Company should find themselves unable to make the necessary territorial remittances to England, if they relinquished their commercial transactions Government since it obtained the sceptre of India. Those who were examined on this dia. At the period of that abolition, which was point, Mr. Holt Mackenzie, Mr. Palmer, and concurrent with the establishment of higher duties, it was affirmed that Government would lose nothing by that act of generosity; that the continued maintenance of custom house stations on the dia would give it fresh activity, and that the idea of an understanding among the leading merchants of Calcutta to force the Company to their own terms of exchange, was out of the question. They do not appear to have contemplated the early arrival of a period when the Company would be able to dispense even with advances on goods, and to obtain the whole sum they required to bring home, by the sale of their bills on the Indian treasures. But during the last ten years, the trade of India has experienced so large an augmentation, the two cities of London and Calcutta have been so closely approximated by steam communication, and the intercourse between India and England has been so vastly extended, that the remittances from this country may be provided for in a single morning in Leadenhall Street. The advantages to the Company of adopting this as the sole channel of operations, whether we regard the facility with which it may be effected, or the security which attends it, are great; but not greater than the convenience the merchant will experience when relieved from the presence of so powerful a competitor in the exchange market. The advances on produce will now be regulated on mercantile principles, and the current of operations will not be disturbed by the intrusion of the State. The remittances made from this country to England, must of course, consist of its produce; only that produce will now be sent home by private individuals instead of being transmitted direct by Government. In whatever point of view we regard this measure, it appears to be sound and satisfactory.

With the close of the system of advances, the functions of the Import Warehouse keeper will cease, and the last link between the Merchant and the Sovereign will be dissolved. This office has latterly been paid rather with reference to the claims of the individual who held it, one of the oldest servants on the Establishment, than to the importance of his duties. The Company will now cease to give to the appraiser of Indigo and Silk, a salary equal to that enjoyed by a Secretary of State in England. The Import-Warehouse keeper has for sometime been doing duty as a superintending Member of the Board of Customs, and his duties will now be confined we suppose exclusively to that Department.

PRIVATE AUDIENCES.—A brief notification from Capt. Durand, the Private Secretary of Lord Ellenborough, in the last Calcutta Gazette, announces that the time honoured privilege of private audiences, which the members of the service have continued to enjoy during every successive administration, has ceased. Those who have any object of individual interest to advocate with the Head of the Government, are required in future to send in their applications in writing. The old practice has 'probably been found' an inconvenient tax on the time of the Governor General; but it is an inconvenience inseparable from the eminence of his station. Lord Ellenborough has probably also found that the invidious duty of saying No, often than Yes, may be performed more agreeably to his own feelings, by a letter, than in person. It falls to the lot of few men to be able to deny with such grace, that the author finds the suavity of the refusal almost compensate for the chagrin of his disappointment. But however convenient it may be to the Governor General, this innovation is so contrary to the gracious condescension of his predecessors, and runs so entirely counter to the wishes and feelings of society, that it will be extremely unpopular. Every man admitted to a private audience on matters connected with his own interest, always provided himself with a good stock of arguments, which he intended to array with much dexterity, and enforce with great eloquence. And though in the majority of instances he was disappointed, he still had the satisfaction of reflecting that he had enjoyed an opportunity of personally urging his claims. Under the new system, that intercourse between the members of the service and the head of the Government which was advantageous to both parties, will be destroyed. The suitor will receive a cold and formal denial through the Secretary, whose duties in this respect, will be so uniform, that much of his valuable time might be spared by having lithographed forms of refusal ready for use. We are certain the prohibition will be found generally distasteful, and create a strong hope that the next Governor General, whenever he may come, will revert to the practice of former rulers, and give a share of his personal attention to the requests and grievances of the public.

STEAM PROJECT.—Our correspondent S., the steady and untiring advocate of Steam communication direct from Calcutta, Madras and Ceylon to Suez, has sounded the note of alarm in our own and other journals, on the disclosure of a project for depriving us of this advantage, just at the time when it had been placed within our reach. He has drawn from the columns of the Monthly Times published in London, the evidence of a conspiracy against our interests, of which that paper appears to have undertaken the advocacy. The matter had escaped our notice, as it appears also to have escaped that of the Herakura; for the only occasion on which any Editor can be supposed to consult the Monthly Times, is when the other monthly journals do not happen to arrive in time. The character of that paper has been so completely altered since the first number appeared, that we feel ashamed whenever we reflect on the commendation bestowed on it. The Editor seems entirely to have forgotten that when we open with eagerness any of the Monthly London Journals published for circulation in India, we do not expect to find three editorial columns, filled with the most bitter and reckless party invective. But it is not merely the partiality of this unuseful guide, which fills the mind with regret; the most momentous subjects are treated with a degree of flippancy which makes us turn for relief to any other journal that may be procurable. As the organ of the Peninsular and Oriental Navigation Company, in the operations of which our interests are bound up, however, it has an importance which would not otherwise possess. The article which have successively appeared in it regarding the derivation of that Company from its original design, are apparently put forth to feed the public pulse. The object now proposed is to send the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, from Galle to Bombay and from thence to Suez, during eight months of the year, and thus save the Government of India the expense of maintaining a complement of Steamers at Bombay. It is intended during four months of the year, in the height of the monsoon, to send a little steamer from Bombay to Galle with mails and passengers; to employ the same vessel in bringing back the

The objections to this plan, are numerous; first and foremost stands the breach of faith which it involves with the Indian Subscribers to the Peninsular Company, who were induced to take shares with the express understanding that the vessels should proceed to and from Calcutta. It is true there was no stipulation that the vessels should not go out of their way to call at Bombay, or at the Mauritius, or at the Cape; but this silence arose from the perfect confidence which the public reposed in the good faith of the Association, and from the evident improbability that any such deviation would ever be dreamt of. In the next place, this alteration of the route of the vessel, will occasion a delay of at least five days, possibly of a greater number, during which all the passengers from Bengal, Madras and Ceylon will be subject to heavy charges on board. It will also protect the receipt of our letters, papers and parcels for five days; to us a most serious inconvenience. This can only be obviated by sending them through Bombay; in which case we shall be added with the same exorbitant charge for postage, from which we now suffer so severely. In fact, if this plan be adopted, all letters which demand speed must be despatched by way of Bombay, and the advantages we now enjoy by the establishment of a steam communication with our own doors, will be in a great measure neutralized.

But these arguments will we fear weigh little with those who have the disposal of the question in their hands; we mean the rulers of India. The measure will probably be carried without the slightest reference to the inconvenience it may occasion to the community. All that the Government at home in Leadenhall-street or in Cannon Row cares for, is the monthly transmission of about 40lbs. weight of despatches to and from India, in the shortest space of time, and at the smallest expense. On the question of steam navigation, the Court of Directors have shewn from first to last—except in the one instance in which Mr. W. B. Bayley prevailed on them to grant 30,000*l.* a year for the establishment of a line of steamers between Calcutta and Suez—a narrowness of mind and of views, which will be remembered in after times to their deep discredit. During Lord W. Bentinck's administration, they threw every possible obstacle in the way of establishing any monthly communication at all between India and England. Repeatedly did they reprimand that statesman for having employed the Hugh Lindsay in navigating the Red Sea. They appear at that time to have adopted it as a fixed principle, that the greatest calamity which could befall the Company would be the approximation of England to India. When the necessity of establishing a monthly communication was forced on them by circumstances, and by the example of the civilized world, they still clung tenaciously to the project of limiting the communication to one port; and every attempt to extend the advantage to Calcutta, was repelled with scorn and indignation. When at the beginning of this year, Lord Ellenborough endeavored to establish a regular intercourse between Calcutta and Suez, by the despatch of one of our redundant steamers, the Court is understood to have promptly forbidden the repetition of the attempt.

S. seems to think that the plan now proposed will produce no great saving. The Company have evidently formed a different idea. It is in the hope of being able to discontinue the despatch of their own steamers from Bombay to these, and then to save the whole expense it entails on them, that they are as eager to force the new arrangement on the Peninsular Company. It is a mere money question with them. They reason thus: "We are now constrained to give the Peninsular Company Twenty thousand Pounds a year, for keeping up the communication between Calcutta, Madras, Galle and Suez. If by making some addition to this bonus we can prevail on them to go out of their way and take up the Bombay Mail, we need not send steamers from that port, and we shall save all the expense they now cost us." How far the Peninsular Company is ready to go into this plan, we cannot say. If the Monthly Times represents their views correctly, they would appear to be so favourable to it as to require little coaxing from London Street. But if they were as much opposed as they are probably favourable to it, the plan is proposed by those who can make it worth their while to yield, and yet be themselves into pocket. Yet it seems strange that the Government of India, with ten or twelve steamers on hand, for which they can hardly find adequate employ, should thus covet the use of Steamers which have been established for the special benefit of the two Eastern Presidencies, and endeavour to turn them out of their natural and legitimate course.

But why should the Hindoostan and Beatrice steamers be turned out of their course at all? Under the proposed plan, the communication between Bombay and Suez must be maintained during four months of the year by an auxiliary steamer to be dispatched to Galle with mails and passengers. Why should not the same plan be adopted with the same vessels during the remaining eight months of the year, and a launch steamer be sent from Bombay to Aden to carry out and bring home the Bombay mails and passengers? There would be common sense in this arrangement. It would be fair to us; fair to Bombay; fair to all parties; and would probably cost Government but little more than the scheme which is now proposed. Instead of making all the passengers from Bengal, Madras and Ceylon, together with all the letters and covers go five or six hundred miles out of their way to a single port, it must strike every one as a more rational plan to send the heavy steamer with her freight on as rapidly as possible to her destination, and to meet her at Aden, by a small steamer with the passengers and letters from Bombay. It is more rational that Mahomed should go to the mountain than that the mountain should be constrained to go to Mahomed.

THE PUNJAB.—The Delhi Gazette informs us that the dispute between Shere Sing and his powerful Minister, Dhyen Sing, has been accommodated for the present without a resort to arms. The Minister, either thinking that the time for raising the standard of rebellion had not arrived, or dreading the possible interference of the British Authorities in favour of his master, has come down from his mountain fastnesses in Jumbo, and made his appearance and his submissions at the Durbar. But the terms in which he ventured to address his sovereign evidently show that he is fully aware of the strength of his position. He promised to render a faithful account of the sums he had eluctated from the public treasury, at some future time, which will of course be regulated by his own convenience. He complained of the ill offices which some of the chiefs were doing him at Court, and he was assured that no one should be permitted to slander or to injure him. He even ventured to upbraid the king in the presence of the whole Court, with his insatiable love of the chase, and his intemperate habits, to which he attributed the disorganization of the Government. It must be evident that no prince would have put up with such open reproaches, if he had not been conscious of his own weakness, and no subject would have dared to offer them, unless he had great confidence in his own power. The return of the Minister at the earliest and subject entirety of his sovereign, serves to establish his authority on a firmer basis, while it reduces the sovereign to the rank of a cypher in his own Court. Unless Shere Sing can manage to form a stronger party among the chiefs of the country, all real power will henceforth centre in the powerful Minister; and the deposition of the impotent monarch becomes only a question of time and circumstance. The triumphant attitude which Dhyen Sing has now been able to assume, can scarcely fail to create new occasions of irritation and discord, and the appeal to arms, though suspended by concessions on the one hand and discretion on the other, cannot long be averted. If the integrity of the Government of the Punjab be once fairly disturbed, and it is distracted with intestine discords, it must speedily drop into the hands of its more powerful and envious neighbour. When a fair and honourable opportunity is presented of making the country British, it will not be left unimproved by those who are restrained from the attempt by no political or military considerations. Some such opportunity cannot but turn up, whenever it becomes the seat of a civil war; and as it has fallen to the lot of Lord Ellenborough to extend our boundary to the Indus in the south, it will probably belong to the administration of his successor, to give our empire a corresponding extension in the north; and thus to bring us again in contact with the Afghans, by giving us possession of the country beyond the Indus, to the foot of the Khyber pass, at the same time that we obtain the command of the five rivers, and make Cashmere contribute her exquisite wools to the looms of Yorkshire. The poor is ripening gradually, and must drop into our mouths at no distant period.

THE SOMNATH CAVE.—The last number of the Journal of the Asiatic Society, contains a report of the Officers assembled by order of General Nott to report on the state of the Gates brought from Ghuzni. It would appear from this valuable document, which will be found among our extracts, that they are really and truly the Gates which Mahmood of Ghuzni carried away from the Temple of Somnath to adorn his own tomb. It is not the least remarkable circumstance of these trophies, that they should have remained in so high a state of preservation, during so long a period, notwithstanding the danger to which they were exposed, in their journey across India, and subsequently when buried in the ground. The Committee state that "the upper portions of the gates still retain much of their original carving, which is in high relief, of beautiful execution, and in a wonderful state of preservation." We are also told that the tomb of Mahmood of Ghuzni has been for ages a place of pilgrimage, almost of adoration, to Mahomedans, and that the gates were objects of especial attention. This would prove that the loss of these gates is probably a greater source of grief to the Mahomedans beyond the Indus, than the acquisition of them is a matter of exultation to the Hindoos within the river, who know little and care less about them. Of the Mace which the Governor General ordered to be brought away with the gates, the report says nothing. It was not to be found; and the popular opinion is that it was borne off as a trophy by the first British conqueror of Ghuzni.

But what is to be done with the Gates? It is a very manifest that they will never be sent across the country to Somnath, to be placed in any restored temple. The voice of England has forbidden it; and indeed Lord Ellenborough's own feelings on the subject must by this time have cooled down to indifference. They are entirely lost to the world, while they continue to be entombed in the Fort of Agra. What more fitting repository for them than the Museum of the Asiatic Society? As trophies of our victory over the Afghans who had so signally discomfited us, there is a degree of political importance attached to them, and they ought to be deposited in the metropolis of our Empire. As the most ancient wooden gates, perhaps, in existence, and as the only memorial we have of the conqueror who first broke up the Hindoo empire, and planted the crescent in the room of the trident, they possess a degree of historical and archaeological interest, which points out the Asiatic Society as the fittest body to enjoy the custody of them.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3.

— Sir Hugh Gough arrived at Madras from Bangalore on the 21st ult. His Excellency intended to embark on the Samson for Calcutta.

— The latest accounts from Bombay lead us to fear that the monthly Steamer may take her departure without our Mail. Though we are perishing here for want of mail, there has been so great a redundancy on the road to Bombay, that the progress of the Mail has been greatly impeded. Neither the Express nor the Mail of the latest safe day had arrived on the 18th, and the despatch of the Steamer was postponed to 6 p. m. The Mail had not arrived at 4 p. m. and it was resolved, if the Governor General's Express arrived during the night, to despatch the steamer—leaving the whole of the letters of private individuals behind. Most fortunately the Governor General's Express did not arrive during the night; and at 5 a. m. the next morning another notice was issued stating that the Mail would be kept open till 4 p. m.

General Simpson of H. M. 25th Regiment goes to Bombay by the Queen Steamer, to be placed at the disposal of Sir Charles Napier for employment in Seinde.

— Last night's Calcutta Gazette contains the draft of an Act, which may truly be called an Act for a General Jail Delivery without ever or term. It ordains that whenever, within discipline has been made more strict of late years, than now in jail is to be let off one-fifth of the remainder of his period of confinement; and that in future, every man is to be sentenced only to three-fourths of the legal term of imprisonment. We may offer a few comments on it next week. At present we would only observe that some of those who are fond of looking on every occasion at the lame leg of Government, have remarked that since the abolition of corporal punishment, the jails have been crowded beyond their capacity of comfortable accommodation; and that two alternatives were before the Supreme Council; the one that of enlarging the prisons; the other that of letting out some of the jail birds; and they have wisely and economically adopted this latter alternative.

— The Hindostan Steamer goes off; if possible, more than full. Among the passengers are two of the gentlemen who rendered themselves memorable in Affghanistan, Captain G. Lawrence and Major Rawlinson. Sir John Peter Grant, Mr. W. P. Grant, and several others, go to Galle in the Steamer, and from thence to the new and charming Captains of Alaric which will shortly become rather a formidable rival of Darjeling.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 4.

—Our Mail has gone by the Bombay Steamer. It seems that the Government express, arrived at some of the public mails of the last safe day, the 5th July. Those of the 6th and 7th had also arrived and were quite in time for the Steamer, which was originally advertised to start on the 18th, but did not quit the harbour before 8 p. m. on the 20th. At half past two all the missing Mails from Calcutta came in, and were sent on board.

The Delhi Gazette states, that Dost Mahomed has thrown the "infamous" Amencolla and his sons into prison; and that Khan Sherwan Khan, the head of the Kunel-bahs, had fled to the Hazarah country. Dost Mahomed does not appear to be firmly fixed on his throne; the nobles still continue to indulge in the national propensity of intrigues.

—The papers mention the death in Calcutta of Mr. T. B. Scott, at the age of 57, after having run a very long and useful life; but latterly, we fear, unfortunate course. He was the printer of the India Gazette, we should think, thirty years ago, at a time when that ancient establishment was in its glory, and the profits were such as a member of the Board of Revenue might have envied. But the Auctioneers took away their catalogues; the price of printing came down twenty, thirty, fifty, and even a hundred per cent. His Directory succeeded Scott and Co's. older work, and Mr. Scott was thrown upon his wife, and eventually the Press itself was brought to the hammer. In any topographical history which may be written of Calcutta, Mr. Scott will deserve honourable mention.

—The Governor General has considerably ordered that the troops and officers for the monthly relief sent from Barrackpore to Town, will be accommodated with the use of Steamers. Two Steamers came up from Calcutta on Wednesday afternoon, and the next morning took down the troops in two cargo boats. In the evening they returned with the boats filled with troops which had been relieved from Fort and Town duty.

—The Governor General has also ordered the gun which used to be fired at eight in the evening in winter, and nine in summer, to be fired at noon every day. A noon day gun is convenient; but why could we not have had the convenience of both?

—A Buggy Mail is just advertised for the first time to start from Meerut to Delhi and Delhi to Meerut on the 1st of next month. It will continue to leave either station each day at 3 P. M. Accommodation is afforded to passengers at the rate of 14 Rs. a head.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 5.

—At the last Meeting of the British India Society there were twenty members and visitors present, and it was resolved to send thirty guests to the interior of the country. We wish there had been a little more discretion in drawing them up. One of them runs thus, "What, in the opinion of the H. E. C., constitute the necessities, the comforts and luxuries of life?" What distinction can a poor ryot draw between luxuries and necessities, who if he is found to be enjoying anything that will bear the name of a comfort is soon squeezed dry. It was said that Mr. George Thompson had written to a member of the Society complaining of the "speaking of the Press on his accepting the appointment of Ambassador from the King of Delhi." Certainly the acceptance of that appointment, after the professions made in Calcutta, was very singular. Mr. Thompson cannot surely have been so foolish as to complain of the remarks of the press on the occasion, which were remarkable chiefly for their laudity.

—The affair of the arrest of a dead body in Calcutta by a Bullock, has been thoroughly investigated at the Court of Requests, by Mr. Brienwho is anxious to clear the Court from so unfortunate a charge, if untrue; or to punish it, if true. The investigation has not ended in substantiating the charge. The Herak has promised to give fuller particulars on Monday.

—The Bombay Times has some very pertinent observations on the refusal of Lord Ellenborough to grant compensation to the Cabul Captives for the loss of their baggage. They lost indeed everything but their lives and their honour, in the service of their country; and the resolution to refuse them any relief, after the heavy pecuniary sacrifices they have incurred, is harsh and ungenerous.

—The last Delhi Gazette quotes letters from Sukkur to the 18th of July. They supply no news. The country is under water, and quiet. The two refractory chiefs, Shere Mahomed and Ali Mahomed, had crossed the river and betaken themselves to the mountains. All opposition has ceased, and unless the Beloochee hordes can be prevailed on to leave their mountain homes, cross the river and make a fresh effort to recover their hold on the country, it may be found to submit peacefully to our rule as Bengal did.

—Since the period of Queen Caroline's trial, in which the witness gave evidence to whom the sobriquet of non est recordo was applied, we question whether there has been any examination in a Court in which the deponent exhibited so short a memory as Mr. Charles Brownfield the Pawnbroker, who has taken the benefit of the Act. His discharge was opposed by Mr. Leith, on Saturday last, on behalf of Messrs. Mackillop, Stewart and Co. The amount of his transactions was between 200 Rs. and 30,000 Rs. a month; a business of three lakhs of Rupees a year. Yet he had not an account book, nor a scrap of paper. He could not remember whether he had been at Serampore or not this year, or when he went to Chandernagore, or how long he remained there, nor when he returned. He did not recollect at what house he lived at Chandernagore, or the name of the corner, or when he went after he left that settlement, though he thought he went to Calcutta; but what was most remarkable of all was that he could not tell whether he had a short memory or not. The only thing about which he appeared to have any kind of fixed and certain notion was that natives would not advance money unless they had the goods in their possession, in which matter they are certainly wrong; but a certain instance not twenty miles from Serampore.

—The Delhi Gazette says, that the Nuzwan Hussain Ali, the uncle of the present Nawab, being dissatisfied with his present allowance of 3000 Rs. has resolved to enlist the services of Mr. George Thompson, with the hope of getting more.

Mr. Thompson resolves to undertake the cause of all those who have any thing to complain of, or any thing to expect, he will soon find his hands full of engagements. He will find in fact that there is no end to grievances in India.

—Sub-Assistant Surgeon Channam Lall has been presented with a pair of shawls of the value of 550 Rs. by Mr. Joseph Skinner, an acknowledgment of his services. This young man was brought up at the Medical College in Calcutta, where he was distinguished for his professional acquirements.

—Standard, the correspondent of the Herak, says that we have misapprehended him; that he did not say that a Council of war had been held at Jullahabad, about retreating; but that discussions were in those days frequent within the walls of the beleaguered fortress, and that a retreat to Peshawar was proposed; and that he is not at liberty to mention the name of those who urged the step; nor how he thinks that any advantage would be gained by the disavowal. In this he is acting not only with consideration, but generosity. The Herak, in a note says that the fact mentioned by Standard is unquestionable and that he could name the parties to whom alliance is made.

Does the Herak mean, only that "discussions were frequent," or that a Council of war was held, the proceedings of which were recorded? In Sir Robert Sale's Narrative of events at Jullahabad, there is no mention of a Council of War. It is important, highly important, a historical point of view that this fact should be known, if for no other purpose, at least that we may ascertain whether the honours which have been given to some, and the neglect with which others have been treated, be just or not. We will not lose sight of this Council of War.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 8.

—His Excellency Sir Hugh Gough's arrival from Madras in the Assagore was announced by Standard yesterday. He was expected to land yesterday afternoon, and the troops were accordingly in readiness.

—An advertisement appears in this morning's Exchange Gazette from Messrs Carr, Tagore and Co. stating that the Steamer Assam with a flat in tow would be dispatched to Allahabad on the 18th, and that during the present scarcity of freight in consequence of the Government Steamers not being able to meet the public want, this was an eligible opportunity, &c. &c. It appears then that the Assam paid in her last trip. We are happy to see any prospect that internal steam navigation will become an object of private speculation. Government cannot be expected to supply the wants of the public in this respect to their fullest extent.

—The Sheristadar of Dinapore is, it seems, going to bring an action for libel against the Herak. We, for saying that he had assumed a large property, though in the receipt of a small salary; and had been at length dismissed. The man had better be content to remain in obscurity with what he has got, than tempt public scrutiny. We have a list of his estates before us, and a memorandum of his pay during the period in which that property was accumulated. If the state of that district and his administration should become matter of public observation through the publication of a session, all those who provoked the enquiry will rue it to the end of their lives.

—The number of letters and covers sent by the last Mail from Bombay, was 49,980; namely letters, 30,143; papers 10,837.

—The firm of Messrs Wooler and Co. Bombay, has stopped payment for 5 lakhs of Rupees.

—The Herak publishes a letter from a correspondent signed Dreg Digen, stating that in a certain district, names not given, "the Magistrate has taken it into his head to leave the station, and to hold his Court at B, some thirty miles off. Hundreds of unfortunate persons already far from their homes are obliged to follow him in the heat of a July sun, and the middle of the rains, without a place to lay their heads in." Looking further into the letter, we find the under current of motive in which the charge may probably originate. The writer has had a summary suit which has lingered seventeen months—no wonder his patience is exhausted—and he considers the Magistrate actually tyrannical to European. The removal of the Court however to a distance of thirty miles to suit the Magistrate's convenience, if true, must be a matter of notoriety. We are told of such fantastic tricks; but we are satisfied that Mr. Birli has only to be made acquainted with the fact that any Magistrate has wantonly inflicted such injury on the suitors in any district, to relieve him of his public duties.

—There has been some discussion in the papers about the sale of Farquhar and Co's. Union, Share 300 in number, at 600 Rs. each, which is 140 Rs. below par. Mr. Roberts, the Broker, declares that he has found many buyers but no sellers at this price. The two brokers who correspond with the Englishman affirm that those shares have positively been sold for 800. On this ticklish subject, in which the interests of so many are involved, we say nothing. We give statements as we find them.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 9.

— Mr. Roberts, the Broker, has come forward in his own name and affirmed in the Markets that the whole of Ferguson and Co's. Union Bank Shares, amounting to 200, have been bought for 200 Rs. each.

— Sir Hugh Gough landed yesterday morning about half past six with all his baggage.

— By the Water W'f Intelligence has been received from China to the 26th of June. The Imperial Commissioner, Kiating, had arrived at Canton, and was expected at Hong Kong on the 24th, where he was to be received with the highest demonstrations of the Treaty. It was understood that the notification had been fixed for the next Tuesday, after which it was expected that a Steamer would be dispatched forthwith to Singapore, and Bombay. A Criminal and Admiralty Court had been established at Hong Kong.

— The Hiawatha Steamer starts to-morrow morning at six o'clock, with a full complement of passengers.

— The Marine Board, it is said, is to be abolished, and a Marine Superintendent appointed on a salary of 3000 Rupees a month. Mr. Greenlaw is to be Marine Secretary upon a salary of 2000 Rs. a month. The Star of this morning seems to think that the office and the pay of the Master Attendant will be merged in that of the Superintendent, and that it will be conferred on Capt. Rogers. The Marine Board has been the same as the Customs Board, and the Sals Board, and the Opium Board. In all such cases, the Board is a copy, and the Secretary, the lawyer; or as some will have it, the Secretary is the manager, and the Board his screen.

— A sale of Assam Tea took place yesterday, partly on the part of Government, partly of the Singapore. The samples of some of the Government Fobos were peculiarly good, but the general run of the lots was decidedly inferior. All shippers from the previous sales have burnt their fingers at home.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums for the Friend of India :—

O's. Rs. As.
Lieut. Col. J. Home, ... to May, 1884,	30 0
W. W. Crawford, Esq., ... to July, 1884,	30 0
Capt. G. B. Trummers, ditto,	30 0
C. F. Brown, Esq., ... to May, 1884,	30 0
Rev. Messrs. Newton and
Willson, ... to April, 1884,	30 0
Lieut. Col. A. Dick, ... to June, 1884,	30 0
A. Larrardette, Esq., ... to June, 1884,	36 0
T. C. Scott, Esq., ... to June, 1884,	44 0
J. Atkinson, Esq., ... to Dec. 1883,	40 0
T. P. Woodcock, Esq., ... to June, 1884,	28 0
Lieut. Geo. White, ... to June, 1884,	20 0
J. O'B. Summers, Esq., ... to Aug. 1883,	40 0
M. C. Sammers, Esq., ... to June, 1884,	30 0
J. Stephen, Esq., ... to Aug. 1883,	40 0
T. R. Hampton, Esq., ... to April, 1884,	40 0
Lieut. R. S. Simpson, ... to Dec. 1883,	48 0
P. Bonnard, Esq., ... to July, 1884,	20 0
Messrs. Turner and Co. ditto,	30 0
J. H. Barton, Esq., ... to June, 1884,	30 0
Rev. T. Jones, ... to Aug. 1883,	40 0
Rev. John Roberts, ... to Feb. 1884,	30 0
Capt. J. Sutherland, ... to July, 1884,	20 0
Major J. T. Belliss, ... to June, 1884,	18 0

The Secretary to the Benevolent Institution begs to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the following sums :—

O's. Rs. As.
Edw. L. Ryder, Esq.,	10 0
B. W. Allen, Esq.,	10 0
M. D'Agulard, Esq.,	10 0
R. L. Guthrie, Esq.,	5 0
J. Lyall, Esq.,	10 0
C. H.	5 0
Major Gen. Cooper,	80 0

Major Dehman,	10 0
W. Dawson, Esq.,	5 0
G. Harkley, Esq.,	10 0
Edw. Steiding, Esq.,	10 0
Major Bowman,	10 0
Col. Dick,	10 0
L. W. A.,	5 0
J. C. Marchman, Esq.,	25 0
Rev. John Mack,	10 0
David Jardine, Esq.,	10 0
Alex. Williams, Esq.,	16 0
John Durier, Esq.,	10 0
Lieut. Chell,	5 0
Capt. C. Y. Baget,	40 0
G. O. per Friend of India ,	24 0
R. Trotter, Esq.,	20 0
R. Forbes, Esq.,	4 0
D. W. Madsen, Esq.,	5 0
Capt. J. Woodley,	4 0

W. W. Evans.

By.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

No. 1028.

FORT WILLIAM, FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT, THE 4TH AUGUST, 1882, NOTIFICATION.

Notice is hereby given that the Government of India has recommended to the Home Authorities the expediency of discontinuing as soon as possible the present system of making advances in India upon the Security of Goods to be hypothecated to the East India Company.

The Governor General in Council is of opinion, that the full supplies required to meet the wants of the Home Treasury can be raised in England by the Hon'ble the Court of Directors by the Sale of Bills on India, without any necessity for the intervention of the Government in the Indian Markets, and he is desirous of relieving the trade of India from the irregular intrusions of a competition that is governed principally by the Political Expediency of the State.

The Governor General in Council is aware, that private interests may be injuriously affected by the sudden discontinuance of any system that has been long in operation, and he issues this timely notification of his views upon a subject of the greatest importance to the Mercantile community connected with the trade of India, in order that they may not be unprepared for a change of measures, which the Government of India is urging strongly on the attention of the Home Authorities, and will be ready to carry out at the earliest convenient opportunity.

By order of the Right Hon'ble the Governor General in Council,

J. A. DORIN.

Secy. to the Govt. of India.

THE AFFAIRS OF THE ARREST OF A CORPSE.

The investigation into the affair of the alleged arrest of a corpse, by a Bailiff of the Court of Requests, was on Friday. Messrs. Lewis, Clerk, Watson and Stanistreet were separately examined by Mr. Bristow, at considerable length. The Bailiff, Shields, also put in his statement of the matter, and delivered a letter from the undertaker, who declared that he had not met with any opposition when removing the body. On the whole it appeared, that the Bailiff had not positively kept the body in custody until the money was paid, which has not to this day been paid. The fact seemed to be, that Mr. Higginson had been arrested before his death, and while a prisoner of the Bailiff, had died. The Bailiff, with a view to get out the money which he thought he would be held responsible for, perhaps showed a few airs of authority, and talked of keeping the corpse and so forth, but he does not appear to have actually refused the removal of the body.—Harbinger, August 7.

MALACCA.

To The Right Reverend Father in God DANIEL, Lord Bishop of Ceylon and Metropolitan of India.

My Lord,

We the undersigned Protestant Inhabitants of Malacca beg to represent to your Lordship that in consequence of your Lordship's promise and undertaking that our Church should never be without a minister in case we complied with your Lordship's proposal to consecrate a Christian Church at settlement (which, before it was open to the proposal of the Board by Protestant Ministers of every denomination, the services of the Church of England, we made no objection in complying with your Lordship's wish).

It is, however, a matter of regret to us to have to remind your Lordship that ever since the departure of the Reverend Mr. G. H. G. in December last, we have had no divine service performed in the Church, and that we are deprived of the necessary rituals of Baptism, Marriages and Burials, so essential under the blessing of God, to a Christian community.

We therefore feel it to be our duty to suggest to your Lordship the expediency of providing us as early as practicable with a Minister, especially now that the removal of the Anglo Chinese College to Hongkong, has left us without even the services of an ordained Minister of any Christian persuasion, excepting Mr. SARA, a Dutch Missionary, whose whole time is devoted to the Benevolent Institution, in which there are not less than 250 Boys.

With the greatest respect

we have the honour to be,
Your Lordship's most obedient servants,
(Signed by 118 residents in Malacca.)

SINGAPORE.

The Friend of India contemplates the economical management of Singapore with the prodigal extravagance of Rensselaer; but the latter was not even a place of general commerce of free commerce. It was one of the cherishes monopolies which enabled the Company to supply the natives with pepper, by the aid of a differential duty, at about four times the price above principal.

It would have been hard if such an establishment should have yielded profit only to the proprietors of Indian Stock, and left no opening for patronage to the Directors. A Benevolent Civilian on his arrival, got about as much pay as a Judge of the Sudder does now, which it must be owned was little enough for such a dreary task. We hope the Directors will be better. Singapore is a good model of an economical establishment, and shows what can be done, when there are no spare funds to make ducks and drakes of. The settlement is even equipped with various expenses which do not belong to it, such as the maintenance of convicts, which ought to fall upon the producing countries, and the expense of the police, which should be borne by the Admiralty. There would then be a surplus, which we think ought to be in the first place applied to the construction of permanent defences, sufficient for the protection of so valuable a commerce in case of sudden hostilities. We know that the utterly defenceless state of the island, was accurately reported to a foreign Government by a Commander who visited the place on purpose, because we had his remarks on his own lips. In case of a maritime war there, a sudden visit from a hostile squadron might do incalculable mischief before any force could arrive for its protection. We are not friendly to expensive fortifications in countries where our forces are sufficiently numerous for defence, but a well-outpost, the seat of a most valuable commerce, is sure to attract hostilities if merely for the sake of plunder, and ought not to invite such a risk by its repeated weakness.

We have been informed that a very moderate expense would suffice to make our harbour secure against a corps de arde, and as a powerful expedition, if directed against the British possessions, the British Government certainly have more important objects in view than Singapore, it would not be requisite to take more extensive precautions.

The success of Singapore ought, one would think, to have encouraged the British Government to seek out other suitable stations for the extension of their empire, now threatened by the jealousy of all its immediate neighbours. And under an equally free system ought to become the seat of an equally important trade, or at least to engage the trade which now goes to the neighbouring native ports. But it is already burdened with duties, and unless they are removed, the principal impediment to an extended traffic will be wanting.—Explicite.

CANAL.

It is not right that we should pass over the reported events at Cabul without some casual remark. Does Nizamuddin, as would appear from the Delli Gazette, consolidating his power upon a basis as firm as the frail tenure of authority he has disturbed a last seen edition, now, as it is said, Persian influence begins to make itself felt in Khurasan consequent upon the reported murder of Shah Kamran of Herat by his Viceroy Yar Mo-

Copy and Translation of an Arabic Inscription upon the Gate of a Mosque, which have been brought from the Tomb of Mahomet of Ghazni.

The same rendered in modern Arabic.

Translation.
In the name of the most merciful God—(may there be forgiveness from God for the most noble Amer, the great King (who was) born to become the Lord of the State and the Lord of Religion, Abul Kasim Mahmud, the Son of Sahabkhan). May the mercy of God be upon him [remaining phrase illegible].

(Signed) J. A. RAWLINSON.
Translation of the Inscription of the Chieftain on the Sarcophagus of the Tomb of the Sultan Mahomet of Ghazni.

Translation.
May there be forgiveness from God upon him, who is the great Lord, the noble Nizam-ud-din Abul Kasim Mahmud, the son of Sahabkhan. May God have mercy upon him.

Mem.—On the reverse of the Sarcophagus, there is an inscription in the Nasta character, recording the date of the deceased Sultan Mahmud, as "Thursday, the 7th remaining day (i.e. the 23d or 24th) of the month of Rabi Akbar, A. H. 421.

(Signed) J. A. RAWLINSON.
Copy in the Sanskrit Character of the Copy Inscription on the Minor Monument, 1) nearest the village of Bana.

Translation.
In the name of God, the most merciful.
The High and mighty Sultan, the Mulla of Islam, the right arm of State, Trustee of the Faith, the victory-crowned, the patron of Moslems, the aid of the destitute, the munificence-endowed, Mahmood, (may God glorify his Testimony,) son of Sahabkhan, the Champion of Champions, the Emir of Moslems, ordered the construction of this lofty edifice of Moslems and of a cemetery which has been happily and prosperously completed.

The Sanskrit Gates.
Translation.
In the name of God, the most merciful.
(Erected.) By order of the mighty Sultan, the Mulla of Islam, the standard of dominion and wealth, the august Mahmood, son of the supporter of the State, Mahmood, the Mulla of Islam, the right arm of the Faith, Emir of Moslems, the right arm of dominion, the Trustee of the Faith, the master of the secrets of the nation, the noble and Imperial Sultan, Lord of the countries of Arabia and Persia. May the great God perpetuate his throne and kingdom, commemorated by his beneficence. May God forgive the sin of his parents, and of all Moslems.—Journal of the Asiatic Society.

To Correspondents.

The letter from D. C. we must decline, simply because the publication would do no good.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir.—The following letter, and the note by the Editor appeared in the Bengal Harbinger of the 2d instant.

As you must be well acquainted with the rules and regulations of the Court at Serampore, I have to request, you will be pleased to inform me, (as the parties are all Mahomedans and reside at Serampore), if the case will be decided at that place by the Mahomedan law—and if the view taken by the Editor of the Harbinger be a correct one.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

Calcutta, 6th August, 1862.

An answer in your next Thursday's paper will greatly oblige.

Notes.—The rules followed by the Court at Serampore is the same as that laid down in Regulation 4, 1703, Section 14. All suits regarding inheritance between Mahomedans are decided according to the Mahomedan law as far as it is known and understood.—En. Fr. of Ind.

To the Editor of the Bengal Harbinger.

Sir.—A Mahomedan woman adopts a son and on her death bequeaths the whole of her property to him, with this condition, that the Executor is to allow him a certain sum monthly out of the principal, and he is to enjoy the rest of the Landed Property; but never, on any account to dispose of the said property. Within a year or two the adopted son also dies, leaving a widow, without any issue, and exercising no will whatever. By the Mahomedan law, is the adopted son's widow, or the Mahomedan woman's blood relation (mother and sisters) entitled to the property?

Your obedient Servant,

2nd August, 1862.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

Note by the Editor.—As the Mahomedan woman had heirs she could not, by the Mahomedan law, (vide McNaughten, Chap. VI. of Wills, Prin. 2) bequeath more than one-third of her estate to any person. The adopted son had therefore no claim; even to the provision made for him, much less can his widow claim any thing through him.—En. Bengal Harbinger, 3d August.

ARRIVALS AND DEPARTURES.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir.—What is become of the recommendation about the Deputy Magistrate, that was to take place on the 21st June last? Is the augmentation of the Deputy's pay, intended to commute the honorarium institution of the Deputy Magistrate? The people have now fallen to think seriously upon the subject, and engaged themselves to the study of Regulations. I most sincerely wish the Governor General of India will gradually embrace the opportunity to contribute, to the prosperity of India for its deserved son, and thereby render his name immortal.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant

1st Aug. 1862.

Cant tell.—En.

OVERSEA.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH ENGLAND.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir.—It is said that coming events cast their shadows before them. I hope most sincerely that the shadow, in the Monthly Times of 6th May and 6th June last, of an eventual change in the route of the Steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company from Calcutta will not be found to verify the adage.

I think, however, it behoves all those who are interested in a direct communication between Calcutta and Bana—touching only at places in the direct line—to be alive to the matter, if possible, in time to prevent that change, if it should be in agitation, which from the manner in which it is mentioned in the Monthly Times, the organ it may be said of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, I very much fear is the case. In the Monthly Times of the 6th May the question is somewhat elaborately discussed, as if the writer was sensible that he was proceeding on unground premises.

The writer, after referring to the resistance made at Bombay to the extension of the communication to the other Presidencies, observes as follows:—

"In the January number of this journal it will be seen there is no disposition at present by the part of Her Majesty's Government to do more than they can help towards a communication with the East; though the Western interests are sufficiently strong to obtain delivery of the public treasure to the extent of £200,000 annually, to aid the communication with that less important portion of our empire!"

From Suva to Calcutta old Bombay, the distance is 5,200 miles—from Suva to Calcutta, direct, 4,770, or 400 miles more steaming, supposing the boat to touch at Bombay from Suva on its way to Calcutta—and also on its way from Calcutta to Suva—landing at Bombay a light mail on its outward voyage, and receiving a light mail on its homeward voyage—considering, in fact, this portion of the post similar to that by the Mariner's route in Europe. Under such a plan, this advantage would be gained—the largest possible revenue would be collected from private capital, and, though the demand would even then be considerable from the public purse, it would be much less than if both lines are to be maintained independent of each other, and consequently it would be more likely to be obtained from the Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury.

During the month of June, July, and August, branch boats would convey the mails from Calcutta to Galle; from thence proceed quickly to Aden, and there receive during those months the mail and passengers from England for Bombay.

This speaks plainly enough, and, considering the quarter from which it emanates, requires that the people of Bengal and Madras should be on the alert.

The Monthly Times of the 6th June again says in a somewhat similar article, "We are of opinion, that at present a monthly Communication between Suva, Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta, via Bombay would be sufficient."

On the 6th May, referring to the former question, he observes:—

"We are aware of objections to this arrangement; but we have carefully examined them, and unless others can be urged than those we at present know of, we greatly incline to this plan for future operation, and urge all parties to unite in a strong pull to obtain it. We may return to this subject in a future number."

He does not refer to the objections; as indeed he scarcely advances any grounds for the change.

All that appears is that there is no disposition on the part of Her Majesty's Government to do more than they can help towards a communication with the East; but it is not at all shown that more would be required of them to carry out the resolution of the House of Commons of 1854, namely, eventually to establish the Communication "according to the smallest plan suggested by the Bengal Steam Committee." The sum total of the public expenditure over the receipts for postage being equally divided between the Governments of England and India, that is necessary on the plan via Bombay. This is only said it would be the case in so many words, but there is no proof of it; and before I refer to the objections to the plan, I shall endeavour to show that little more would be required from the Government on one plan than on the other; or at all events not sufficient to weigh in comparison with the amount that will be necessarily required under the proposed plan via Bombay.

It is admitted by the advocates of the change that it cannot be carried out during four months of the year, but that during that period the direct route to Suva must be taken; it is, therefore, only for two-thirds of the time that he proposes to change the route. Now during the remaining one-third there must be maintained, according to the writer's own admission, a vessel to proceed to Galle from Bombay with the mails for England, and thence to pass to Aden, to await the return of the Steamer for Suva, in order to carry the mails and passengers to Bombay, so that it is only the additional expense of the smaller vessel on her run to and from Aden during eight voyages that is saved by the change; while, on the other hand, there is the additional charge of the larger Steamer, consequent on her going out of the direct route to Aden, increased by the necessary Port charges of Bombay; and on a balance being struck it cannot possibly amount to a sum at all worthy of consideration, seeing that the writer himself is looking to obtain from the two Governments, 16 lbs annually to run every month from Bombay alone, and 20 lbs to add a monthly communication to proceed from Calcutta via Bombay!

It is, therefore, ridiculous to talk of so much more being required from the Government by the direct route from Calcutta to Suva, Bombay, joining on at Aden and Galle, according to season, than by the plan now proposed, so as to cause the Government to adopt the one, and refuse the other.

But the objections to the change are branch of little, and delay to the people of Madras and Calcutta in the receipt of their letters.

[August 10, 1842.

there is no more to be observed. All that is valuable in the parochial system will be maintained, but we will have a better prospect of success. We will have a more intimate connection with our people, and we will cultivate the country parsonage; and one glorious result of this abandonment of parochial divisions, is that we shall be enabled to send forth our missionaries, without asking whether he resides on a Moderate district or no, and promise to all, the Gospel of Christ. (Hear.) We should send forth our evangelists as we send out the young of Turkey for the same purpose, to plant our Church. I have only another remark to make, say, I have said, this is not the time to discuss the expediency of this measure, but I am availing as we went along, to arrange not only, as I demanded, but as to the supply which can be provided for the various dioceses; and for this purpose we must have a more intimate connection with our people than we have. In considering this subject, we have found that some ministers may be employed with great advantage. For instance, we have seen in the Synod of Argyle, and we propose to let loose upon it some of the Gaelic preachers from other parts of the Highlands. (Argyle, and especially the Synod of the Highlands, are the only Gaelic speaking people in the Kingdom.) These are, and some of the most devoted amongst them, hold the situation of parish schoolmasters, we have had some of the most successful preachers, and we have had some serious consideration, and a Committee was appointed on schools as well as on colleges, to inquire minutely into the matter. But in the meantime we have been able to send forth our missionaries, and to have to our principles should take any precipitate steps in quitting their present position. It is not as if they were to be expelled from the Universities, or that they were under no moral obligation to do so. Their adherence to our Church does not amount to a forfeiture of their situation; and even though it did, they should be free to leave it, and to go and do good, to leave on such terms; for it is not our duty lightly to take any steps that may throw the education of our youth into the hands of those whose principles we do not approve. We have no objection to say, that they might with advantage give those candidates for the ministry who were thought competent, on immediate admission to preach the Gospel for the same purpose.

[illegible][illegible]

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 450. Vol. IX.]

SERAPMORE: THURSDAY, AUGUST 17TH. 1848.

[Price 3 Cts. Rs. weekly, or 10 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.]

THE NEW MAGISTRATE ACT.—Lord Ellenborough's return to his Council has quickened the movements of the Legislature, and given us no fewer than five Acts in fourteen days. Among these is the Act for the appointment of Deputy Magistrates. It has been enacted with little alteration. The clause which provided that the office should be open to natives of India without regard to religion or descent, has been wisely omitted. No allusion is now made in the Act to any class, and these situations are therefore open to all classes. Such indeed was evidently the intention of Government from the beginning, and it was on this ground that we objected to the use of any expression which should seem to limit the appointment to particular classes.

The greatest alteration made in the Act is the addition of a new section, which provides that the office of Deputy Magistrate may be held in conjunction with that of a Deputy Collector, and of an unencompassed Civil Judge. The unencompassed Judges of the two first grades are already invested with Magisterial powers to a certain extent, and it is probable that the object of this Section is to extend their judicial powers, and to enable them to take cognizance of cases which are at present beyond their jurisdiction. In this point of view the additional section appears calculated to facilitate the operations of the Police, by providing a more extensive machinery for the adjudication of cases brought up by it. The object of uniting the office of Deputy Collector with that of Deputy Magistrate is less apparent, and as far as it is apparent, less satisfactory. Whenever fiscal and Magisterial duties have been united in the same person, and an office connected with the peculiar interests of the state conjoined with one established for the interests of the people, the result has been, that the one has obtained an undue preponderance over the other. It is the natural result of the weakness of our nature that in such cases the interests of the Master should have the cream of the officer's time and attention. The flapper of the Board of Revenue falls more heavily on the ear of the Magistrate-Collector than the suppler of the Superintendent of Police. In all cases therefore in which the state is rich enough to pay two distinct officers, these offices should be dissevered.

The department of the Police should not be distracted by any other duties. Its time and attention should be devoted exclusively to the great object of ferreting out offenders. It should be deeply impressed with the idea that if any offence against life or property be committed, which it is unable satisfactorily to trace up, it is to that extent inefficient. When a crime is announced to a Deputy Magistrate as having been perpetrated within his beat, it should be his duty to give himself or his officers no rest till the offenders have been discovered and brought to justice; and if he has any other duties to perform calculated to interfere with the pursuit of those investigations, which he must be prepared to institute wherever they are necessary; if there be any other calls on his time which oblige him to postpone those enquiries, and thus to give to transgressors the advantage of time and circumstances, the public interests committed to him must suffer.

The Deputy Magistrate who is entrusted with the charge of the Police, should be always ready to move at a moment's warning to the scene of crime; and whatever fetters his movements detracts from his efficacy. If we had such a body of Deputy Magistrates distributed over the country, in the centre of small and manageable circles, and occupying a middle place between the Daroga and the Magistrate, crime would be prevented by the vigilance with which it was pursued—and it is in the prevention of crime, much more than in its punishment, that the secret of good Government consists.

The confessions of the Kechuck robbers, which the kindness of Mr. Dampier enabled us to review sometime ago, disclosed the fact that there existed in Bengal bodies of robbers who carried on a system of plunder, in large and organized parties, with perfect impunity; in some cases evading the vigilance of the Police; in other cases, overawing it by their numbers. Independently of these professional robbers, whose depredations are co-extensive with the boundaries of the province, there are local associations of men who prey upon society, and which our Magistracy has hitherto been unable to break up; and for this apparent reason that there is no agency charged with the special duty of hunting them out. The deposition of the Budhucks to which we have alluded, throws much light on the subject, and it ought to be turned to good account. It informs us that these men pursued a system of robbery upon the largest scale for a quarter of a century, and successfully baffled our ill organized Police; but that no sooner was the duty of pursuing them committed to Major Sleeman, who brought the system he had so successfully pursued against the Thugs, to bear upon them, than the whole gang was immediately broken up. The most notorious of the band was captured, and in his deposition stated that as soon as the Budhucks heard that these officers had been appointed especially to apprehend them, they found the country too hot for them, and retired beyond our territories. Let the same system be organized under the Deputy Magistrate, and these confederacies will dissolve of their own accord, and the security of life and property will be improved to a degree of which we have at present little conception.

THE JAIL DELIVERY ACT.—The Draft of an Act for shortening the period of imprisonment was published a fortnight ago, and has naturally furnished abundant food for comment to the public journalists. It is based upon the assumption that the increased strictness of prison discipline which has been enforced within the last year or two, has rendered the punishment of imprisonment more severe, and that it is necessary therefore to curtail the period of confinement upon the principle that increase of suffering should be accompanied by a diminution of its length. The fact of increased severity is defined by many, who affirm that a prison life, even at present, is easy and cheerful, and with the exception of the loss of liberty, more comfortable than the life which half the prisoners were accustomed to lead before they entitled themselves to free quarters. Upon the accuracy or the reverse of this statement hangs the propriety of the first part of the draft, which forgives every prisoner one fourth the remainder of his sentence.

If the severity of punishment has been found to have increased, and imprisonment has been rendered more disagreeable than it was, it appears reasonable to curtail the term. And there is every reason to believe that in those districts into which the measuring system has been introduced, and restrictions have been imposed on the enjoyments in which the prisoners indulged, the punishment of the jail has been rendered much more severe. Of this a convincing proof has been afforded in the disturbance created at Chuprah by the attempt to introduce it, and which at one time threatened the peace of the district.

This measuring rule has been introduced into all the districts under the Government of Bengal, with the exception of two. But if it be right to curtail punishment on the ground of its increased severity, where is the propriety of curtailing it where the measuring system has not been tried? Strictly speaking, the Act should have been confined in its operation to those districts in which the new and stricter arrangements had been introduced, and should not have been made applicable to the North West Provinces, to Madras, or to Bombay, where the same reasons do not exist; for it is altogether a gratuitous assertion that increased strictness of prison discipline has been introduced generally into the Territories subject to the Government of the Company! For aught we know, the prisons in those districts, may present scenes as much comfort and gaiety as our own jails, before the Reform, and in that case the reduction of the term of confinement, far from being a relief, will be a hardship. Be that as it may, we are exceedingly curious to know, by what rule of Cooker, the Legislative Council intends to calculate the remaining period of a man's imprisonment, who is sentenced for life, so as to be able accurately to remit one fourth of it.

The second part of the law which directs that no offender shall be sentenced to imprisonment for any period longer than three fourths of the period now ordained by law, evidently arises from an idea that the present periods of confinement are too long; and of this there can be little doubt. If the object of punishment be the reformation of the culprit, and his restoration to society an improved character, this is more likely to be attained by strictness and even severity of discipline, than by length of confinement. During a protracted imprisonment, a man becomes in a measure disincarnated from social ties, and habituated to his jail life; and he is not likely to be deterred from the commission of fresh crimes by the mere dread of returning to it. The present sweeping enactment, so far as it respects the general reduction of imprisonment, appears to be premature. A careful revision of the system of prison discipline at all the Presidencies, and in every district, ought manifestly to precede any attempt at fresh legislation on the subject.

SERAPMORE.—We had occasion, a fortnight ago, to review the finances of the settlement of Singapore, which appeared to be in a highly satisfactory state. We have now analysed the Singapore Free Press, of the 26th of June. It republishes the Notification issued by Mr. Birt, the President in Council, on the 26th of April, which announced the resolution of Government to sell all lands which were public property beyond the precincts or proposed limits of the Town of Singapore and Palang and in Province Wellesley, in full property, without any reservation of quit rent, at the general rates of 10 Rs. and 5 Rs. per acre, that is at the rate of a little more than 3 Rs. the bigha in one case, and less than 2 Rs. in other cases. The Editor, who may be supposed to be intimately acquainted with the exigencies of the Settlement, pronounces it "one of the greatest boons ever conferred on the Straits Settlements," and adds that the consequences which may be expected to result from this measure are many, and will all be productive of good. "We could almost have wished that there had been a small quit rent provided for, to be levied at some future period, upon a fixed and unalterable principle, to meet the expenses of the local administration. A Night assessment, when the land had been brought into full cultivation, would not have been felt by the proprietors, and at the same time it would have obtained all necessity for the imposition of any future taxes, which, however trifling, would from their very novelty have been unpleasant. But we will not quarrel with the completeness of a measure which is likely to give so great an impulse to the prosperity of this valuable island. The previous attempt to form a lead settlement upon a narrow and less liberal basis, appears to have so completely defeated its own object, that, there may have been eminent propriety in selling the land out and out, without any reservation of rent. And it is satisfactory to know that the measure is likely to be so extremely beneficial. The Editor informs us that "within the few days since the intention of Government was notified, the inhabitants have manifested the greatest eagerness to avail themselves of it. On the road which has been recently opened up between the river Valley and the Orchard road, where a single acre nothing was to be seen on either side but jungle and deserted gambler plantations, no less than ten individuals have commenced clearing the ground, and the jungle has nearly all disappeared before the axe for upwards of a mile along one part of the road. In fact wherever there are roads, the land is being rapidly appropriated." There are, it is said, 12,000 acres in cultivation, which are ready to be granted out and paid for. If these are sold at the maximum rate of 10 Rs. the acre, they will yield an immediate return of 120,000 Rs.; and this sum cannot be more advantageously laid out than in opening roads in various directions which would lead immediately to the purchase of the land in their vicinity, and thus not only produce a large and progressive increase, but also complete the great object in view, the rapid cultivation and improvement of the whole island.

The Editor of the Free Press seems to think that the best use of the ground now under cultivation is to be made by selling it for less than 10 Rs. the acre, and to meet somewhat of an invidious remark; which is an exceedingly small sum for the fiction on his predecessors, as though they had been and unfeared possession of land, as the boon deficient in the discharge of a duty which His Majesty grants term it, "as long as the sun and his Lordship prided himself on performing. In the mean while." Should Government devote speeches which are reported to have been made more than thirty times in the last instance to the at these entertainments, the thing is so much squandering of roads, it might reasonably expect, that we exceedingly doubt their sincerity. If his Lordship, we are satisfied, could not have uttered any sentiments which were calculated to draw an invidious distinction between the members of two honourable services, ing Singapore, was not to realise a large profit and create a revenue for Government, but to form a depot for the reception and distribution of British manufactures throughout the islands of the Malayan archipelago. The settlement of Singapore has fully answered this object. It is the entrepot of a vast and beneficial commerce, and it has not only ceased to be a burden upon the resources of India, but by the progress of improvement, has formed a little nest egg of surplus revenue. The present arrangement will hold out a prospect of additional prosperity to the island, and may probably serve as a model for other settlements established for similar purposes. While our commercial intercourse with the continent of Europe, and America North and South, is daily subjected to increased interruption from the rivalry and jealousy of foreign nations, England cannot adopt a wiser course than thus to establish in other quarters of the globe, beyond the reach of her envious rivals, these marts of commerce, which shall furnish new vents for her manufactures.

THE HALF BATTAL ORDER.—Lord Ellenborough has received various tokens of gratitude from the Military Officers since his return to the Presidency for the gracious sentiments he has so repeatedly expressed towards the army. Within the last three weeks his Lordship has been sumptuously entertained by the officers of H. M. 10th Regiment in Fort William, by the Station of Barrackpore, by the General commanding the Division, and by the officers at Dum-Dum. On all these occasions his Lordship expressed his warmest admiration of the achievements of our troops, and renewed the assurance of his being emphatically the Friend of the Army. The applause which he has bestowed upon the recent triumph of the British armies in the East, by whose valor our honour has been regained beyond the Indus, and our influence established in China, is in the highest degree appropriate. They have richly earned all the commendation which the public authorities both at home and in this country have given them. But his Lordship appears in our humble judgment to have allowed himself to be carried away by the ardor of the moment, into the expression of sentiments which, under a strict interpretation, it would be difficult to reconcile with his position as the head of an Establishment composed of many component parts. The repeated assurance that he was the Friend of the Army, is liable to the construction that he was not to the same extent the Friend of any other branch of the service; and in this point of view may appear incompatible with that general duty of watching, without partiality, over every branch of the service, of which a Governor General cannot divest himself. There would be precisely the same impropriety in a Governor General's selecting the Civil Service or any other section of the service for the object of his special favour, and avowing himself the patron of that single class interest. It should be paid for less than 10 Rs. the acre, and to meet somewhat of an invidious remark; which is an exceedingly small sum for the fiction on his predecessors, as though they had been and unfeared possession of land, as the boon deficient in the discharge of a duty which His Majesty grants term it, "as long as the sun and his Lordship prided himself on performing. In the mean while." Should Government devote speeches which are reported to have been made more than thirty times in the last instance to the at these entertainments, the thing is so much squandering of roads, it might reasonably expect, that we exceedingly doubt their sincerity. If his Lordship, we are satisfied, could not have uttered any sentiments which were calculated to draw an invidious distinction between the members of two honourable services, or which could be interpreted into an assurance that the light of his countenance was bestowed, almost exclusively, on one of them. We cannot suppose that his Lordship, while indulging in those national feelings of exultation as a Briton, which the contemplation of our recent triumphs could not fail to inspire, became unmindful of that prudent restraint, which his political position at the head of a great Government, would naturally impose.

It is wise however to improve the circumstance of having at the head of the army a nobleman who delights to be regarded as its Friend, and it is not unreasonable to indulge expectations of that substantial boon, which we have failed to obtain under the two preceding administrations; the repeal of the half battal order. It is scarcely possible to speak of the Court of Directors in reference to this order, with those feelings one would wish to cherish towards them, as our Honourable Masters. It is perhaps the most unjust, and the most inconsistent order which ever issued from a civilized Government. It is unjust to subject one division of the army to arbitrary reductions of pay, from which every other division is free. The half battal arrangement, to have been just, should have been extended to every Regiment. It is inconsistent to curtail the pay of the officers at those very stations which are most expensive. It is preposterous to regulate the relief of a great army upon the principle of establishing certain penal stations, and of giving to each corps its turn of punishment. It was unwise to risk, as the Court did in 1829, the affections and confidence of a whole army by a measure of partial economy, which brought no substantive relief to the treasury. We are ready to acknowledge that, considering the feelings which the obnoxious order excited, and the peremptory tone in which the repeal of it was demanded, it could not have been safely conceded at the time. Government can concede nothing on the principle of fear, without the certainty of creating a dangerous precedent. The Court at that period had at least this excuse, that they could scarcely retroact their steps without a sacrifice of discipline. No such excuse exists at the present moment; the agitation is created has long ceased, and the Army goes the round of the half battal stations in a spirit of patient resignation to the injustice of the measure, which is exemplary in the highest degree. Government might now restore the full batta to these stations, and re-establish an equality of allowances throughout the Army, not only without the imputation of fear, but even with something of a grace. The present season is most favourable for granting what continues to be the ardent wish of the army. It has fought and conquered in countries where British prowess was only a matter of indistinct report. The reverse which it sustained in one instance, it has gloriously wiped out, and British valor shines the brighter in Afghanistan for the temporary eclipse it suffered. It would be wise in Government to seize this opportunity for relinquishing the obnoxious order, and by its repeal gain the credit of rewarding the valor of our troops, when it was only undying an act of inconsistency and injustice. But the most favourable circumstance of the times is the commanding position of the Friend of the Army. During the last seventy years we have had no Governor General so entirely independent of the Court of Directors as Lord Ellenborough. No Governor General in the present century, Lord Wellesley perhaps excepted, has appeared to enjoy such absolute power in India. It is in vain for determination to question his Lordship's power. It was only in the last week we had occasion to remark an instance of that concentration of power which Lord Ellenborough so manifestly possesses. The Court of Directors and the Board of Control both refused their sanction to the measure of remitting funds to England solely by the sale of Bills in London; and his Lordship immediately announced to the mercantile community that they should prepare themselves for the early adoption of this plan, because the strongest representations had been sent home on the subject. If Lord Ellenborough has such confidence in his own powers, when he is opposed of the wishes of the Court, surely he has only to insist on the abolition of the half batta order, and it will cease to dishonour our administration. The Court, it is true, clings to the order with the tenacity with which men too often adhere to an error of their own persuasion; but Lord Ellenborough is omnipotent in Leadenhall Street; and we hope therefore to find at an early period that his Lordship has vindicated his claim to the title of the Friend of the Army, by the issue of the following notification: The half batta order is rescinded.

MR. T. SYDNEY SMITH.—The Madras Examiner, a paper entirely unknown as this Presidency, except to one or two of our daily contemporaries, has undertaken the defence of Mr. Sydney Smith, in reference to the action for libel which he recently brought against the Editor of the Bombay Times. The Examiner appears to be in high dudgeon with us for the remarks which appeared in the Friend of India on the 18th of last month; and has so far lost his temper as to forget the rules of editorial propriety, and allude to us by name, as we learn from the following extract from his paper which appeared in the Hurkaru of Saturday last.

"MR. MARSHMAN AGAIN.—We perceive that in the last number of his paper, The Friend of India, this gentleman has repeated and dilated upon several of the mis-statements which we contradicted and corrected in our last paper. He, personally, as residing in a Danish settlement, is, we believe, beyond the reach of British law; but as certain parties in Madras have chosen, subsequent to our contradiction, to republish his mis-statements, (which they have thereby adopted as their own) we understand they have been already informed that they will be called upon to substantiate them publicly if they can, (whether by themselves or through means of Mr. Marshman, the author of the mis-statements) in a Court of Justice."

"Under these circumstances, we decline at present giving Mr. Marshman's mis-statements the detailed refutation they would otherwise receive."

This determination to prosecute a Madras journal which had been so unfortunate as to copy our remarks, is in perfect keeping with all the previous transactions in this case. It is a pitiful revenge which seeks to persecute the Editors who may have innocently borrowed an article, because it cannot reach the original offender; and we trust that the new Libel law now in progress through Parliament, will effectually prevent the repetition of it. We have carefully read over the article to which the Editor of the Examiner alludes, and are at a loss to discover any thing which even Mr. Smith's ingenuity could contrive into a libel. If any thing had been necessary to enforce on us the duty of adhering to the strict truth, the presentation of the Bombay Times, after the lapse of eighteen months, would have been a sufficient warning. We took extraordinary pains to admit no assertion which was even a doubtful aspect. We knew indeed that Mr. Smith had in his own letters, descended to the use of epithets to which the Press of India had long been a stranger, that he had told us that his forbearance to us should be attributed to his contempt; that our correspondent was "a mean liar," and a "weakling columnist;" and that Mr. Dighton had been "charged with swindling to the extent of a lakh and a half of Rs.," but we knew at the same time, that there was nothing Mr. Smith was less likely to forgive than the imitation of his example, and the application of such phraseology to himself. We were therefore peculiarly careful to guard against every thing which did not fall within the strict line of legitimate argument, or which the Courts could fix on as libellous. At the same time we felt that it was impossible to escape a prosecution, if the Courts should adopt the maxim that the greater the truth the greater the libel.

The organ of Mr. Smith, the Madras Examiner, alludes to certain mis-statements, which he says we have repeated and dilated on; and hints at our being beyond the reach of British law, as residing in a foreign settlement. Our residence in a foreign settlement, where happily British law is not administered, is an advantage which we will not controvert; but if the Editor will send us the "detailed refutation," of those mis-statements which he appears to be prepared to give, we will shew him that we are not beyond the pale of British justice and equity, by giving them the widest publicity in our power. As we do not happen to exchange papers with the Madras Examiner, and as none of our other Madras contemporaries are likely, after what has transpired, to touch this gunpowder case, and reprint this article, we shall send a copy of it to the Examiner; that he may not remain in ignorance of our willingness to publish the refutation, provided it does not exceed three columns.

On the general question which the Englishman and Hurkaru have discussed, whether it be right to name an Editor or not, there can be but one opinion. Universal custom has established the rule that the Editor of a paper, should not be alluded to by his personal name, and experience has shown the value of the rule.

It serves to soften down those asperities which journalism is apt to generate, and to maintain a feeling of mutual courtesy among Editors. And of this there can scarcely be a more convincing proof than the fact, that an Editor never breaks through this restraint, except when his passions have mastered his reason, and he has lost all command of himself. Differences among the Editors of public journals cannot be avoided; nor indeed is it advisable that they should. It would be a public calamity if they were always of one mind, and presented only a dead level of stagnant thoughts. It is from the friction of opinions that the sparks of truth are elicited. But in these necessary and inevitable contests, it is quite possible for an Editor to expose his own view of a question with such order, as gradually to lose his egotism, and to treat his opponent's arguments with a severity which leads eventually to personality. On such occasions, our conventional rule of the impersonality of the Editorial character, is found to be of the highest service, and if scrupulously maintained cannot fail to produce the most beneficial results.

We perceive that one of our contemporaries who has recently broken the rule, and who ought to be condemned to a month's penance for his transgression, seems to think that we set him the example by alluding to Mr. Sydney Smith, by name. But how could we have avoided it? Mr. Smith is not (now at least) the Editor of a newspaper, or a member of Parliament, and we could not have marked his identity by naming his journal or his borough. He is a barrister of the Supreme Court at Madras, and nothing more. If we had not used the name of Thomas Sydney Smith, how would the public have discovered the individual to whom we alluded? We have not therefore broken through the rule of Editorial propriety, and we intend never to do so, even under the severest provocations; for these provocations, as they are called, are after all but trials of editorial patience, and may be turned to the best account, by being made the instrument of strengthening that virtue. The press will always find its own dignity most effectually promoted by adhering rigidly to this doctrine of impersonality, and by guarding every editor as an abstraction. The fourth Estate cannot do better than to imitate the conduct of its superiors of the third Estate; and to bear in mind that to allude to any Member of that estate by name is deemed highly unpardonable, and is never for a moment permitted. Even the Speaker himself never pronounces the name of any honourable gentleman, except in cases of incontestable delinquency; and it is always the practice to his being made over to the Usher of the Black Rod. We wish we had an Usher of the Black Rod attached to the Press, to take charge of such delinquents.

GENERAL ELLENBOROUGH.—Lady Sale, in her memorials of Afghanistan had stated that Capt. Grant, the Assistant Adjutant General of the Cabul force "with cold caution obstructed every enterprise, and threw all possible difficulties in the way." Capt. Patrick Grant, anxious to obtain a vindication of his deceased brother's conduct from those among the survivors of the Cabul tragedy who were intimately acquainted with him, addressed Capt. Eyre and Johnson, begging them to state honestly and candidly their opinion how far his brother's conduct justified those expressions. The correspondence has been published in the Dellis Gazette, and, but for its length, we would gladly transfer it entire to our own columns. We must therefore content ourselves with borrowing those parts which serve to vindicate Capt. Grant's character, and which throw additional light on the cause of our dispute.

Capt. Eyre's letter is not so much to our taste as his book was. We allude more particularly to the introduction, which appears to be a laboured condemnation of Lady Sale, not altogether appropriate in the present instance. It looks more like the highly wrought opening address of an advocate in an action for libel, than a letter intended simply to vindicate the character of a deceased friend. It appears to great disadvantage when contrasted with Capt. Johnson's frank remarks on the same painful subject. "We are all liable to error, and as Lady Sale could not, to the best of my recollection, have founded her opinion of your brother from much personal knowledge of him, but from what other people who knew little of him chose to say, I am sure her Ladyship will be much grieved at having been the means of propagating so erroneous an impression of an Officer who in every point of view was an honour to his profession."

Capt. Eyre admits that Lady Sale's observations were made upon report, he admitting the reports in the camp, arising from ignorance of the General's infirmity of purpose, were frequently to Capt. Grant's disadvantage. He says "it happened not unfrequently that an officer after having as he imagined, impressed the General with the necessity of a certain line of action, and yet finding that he adopted quite a contrary course, would angrily cast the blame on Capt. Grant, from the mere circumstance of his being the last person consulted. I believe that in this manner Capt. Grant came to be undesirably for a large share of odium, the more so perhaps, because from his usual reserved habits of speaking on public matters, his opinions were but imperfectly known." This acknowledgment shows that the reports which Lady Sale has recorded were actually current in the Camp, and that none but those who were in constant intercourse with the ruling authorities were acquainted with their inaccuracy. What ever therefore might have been Capt. Eyre's opinion of other assertions in Lady Sale's Journal, in this particular instance his censure exceeds the transgression, and must be considered as an indication of that feeling of hostility which the boldness of some of her Ladyship's assertions appears to have so generally excited. This opinion is confirmed by the tone of Capt. Grant's letter, in which he demands in terms, heavily couched, considering that they are applied to Lady, "an unqualified retraction of the aspersions which you have cast on the memory of a brave man." We allude to these circumstances with much pain, because Capt. Grant's aspersions arise from the inevitable necessity of vindicating from obloquy the names of a beloved brother who met his death like a hero in the service of his country; and the object of Captain Eyre's letter was to correct the report of his having obstructed every enterprise for the relief of the army, which Lady Sale had incorporated in her work. We regret that in either instance, the additional strength which truth acquires from the union of severity with firmness, should have been so greedily overlooked.

The utter incompetency of General Elphinstone for the crisis which had arisen, and which demanded the firmest decision of character, combined with the clearest judgment, is well described in the following extract from Captain Eyre's book. "True it is that our unhappy General, crippled in body and distracted in mind, could neither act vigorously nor deliberate wisely; but let it not be therefore supposed that he was a mere lifeless automaton to be moved at the will of another. Happy for us and for our country had he been so! Devoid with difficulties, both real and imaginary, and seeing the necessity for doing something, yet utterly unable to determine what that something should be, General Elphinstone was in the habit of applying for an opinion to almost every one of the numerous officers who at various hours of the day went to him for orders, and it is not at all wonderful that being surrounded and surrounded, without any opportunity for consulting together and thus coming to a mutual understanding, the opinions given by them were frequently of so conflicting a nature as to tend rather to mystify the already dim faculties of the General than to clear up the difficulties that were continually presenting themselves to his mind. Had these same Officers been asked to form a festus stultus of their ideas with a view to framing some definite plan of operations, I have little doubt they would have speedily resorted to a standing dilemma, and come to something like a saturnian decision."

The annoyance which the deceased Captain Grant himself felt from the ventilation of the General is clearly pointed out in the following extract:

"But Captain Grant often complained bitterly to me in private that after imploring the General for hours together to decide on some point of emergency, and at length obtaining definite instructions, he had no sooner commenced to carry them into effect than he received a sudden counter order, and on returning to ascertain the cause, would find that some fresh difficulty had occurred to the poor old man's mind, which was not removed until the time for action had passed away."

In the following sentence Lieut. Eyre lays the whole blame of the catastrophe on General Elphinstone: "No one can feel more desirous than myself to shield the memory of poor Elphinstone from undue reproach. But no private partiality shall deter me from speaking the truth when called upon to do so, as in the present instance. His infirmities were the main cause of our ruin at Kabul, but he is far less deserving of blame than of pity. Had not Brigadier Shelton incurred his dislike or distrust, I believe, Elphinstone would have gladly resigned the entire command into that officer's hands, but having retained it to the last, it is quite clear that he, and he alone, was the responsible man, and that the staff officers over whom he exercised control, ought not, in common justice, to be blamed for the disasters consequent on his impermissible want of decision and unprecedented bad generalship. Fit justice, rest taken."

Here however we must remark a slight discrepancy between the statement of Capt. Eyre and Captain Johnson. The former says, "Had not Brigadier Shelton incurred the dislike or distrust of General Elphinstone, I believe he would gladly have resigned the entire command into that officer's hands." Captain Johnson on the other hand says, "It was principally by the advice of the deceased Captain Grant that General Elphinstone consented to lay himself up on the 8th Nov. 1841, and make over the whole and sole control of cantonments to Brigadier Shelton." Which statement is to stand? We ask for the purpose of historical accuracy, and not in a captious feeling.

Captain Johnson brings forward four instances in which Captain Grant's conduct afforded a complete refutation of the unfounded reports which reached Lady Sale, and which she embodied in her narrative.

"On the evening of the 4th November, when Captain Boyd and myself went over to General Elphinstone's bungalow to entreat of him to strengthen, instead of abandoning the garrison, your brother and other officers were either then present or dropped in during the consultation. As the General took each officer in turn, he made his appearance at the time into an inner room to ask his advice, I of course know not what each individual then said. I can only judge by what occurred in my presence, and your brother did not utter one word that could lead me to suppose he was averse to the measure we proposed. There were some gentlemen who did give advice which caused ventilation, and this led to the loss of all our provisions."

"I was present with your brother at another consultation at General Elphinstone's on the evening of the 6th December, 1841, to which Eyre in his book makes some slight allusion, and at which both Boyd and myself had been desired to attend. This consultation had reference to the advisability or otherwise of sending a detachment during the night to surprise the village of 'Khoja Barwah.' I perfectly well recollect all that took place. Your brother did not utter a word that could be possibly construed into a wish to show impetuosity in the way of the expedition, but on the contrary, so soon as it was determined upon, he showed every alacrity to carry the General's orders into effect. The expedition did not take place, but the blame, if any, attached elsewhere."

"On the evening of the 6th January, 1842, the night before our fatal retreat, I recollect as well as if I only heard it yesterday, your brother coming up to me and saying, 'Thank God, I have got the General to push on at all hazards to-morrow through the Khoori Kabul pass.' Had this advice been followed, and nothing was more easy, by sacrificing our baggage, and had proper arrangements been made, with which your brother had, however, no concern, it would have saved the Kabul Army."

"On the 7th January, 1842, as the advance was approaching Boodkhat, at about 1 P.M., I was riding near the General with your brother, when, at the suggestion of a certain officer the former to the astonishment of us all, ordered a halt for the day, instead of going at once, as he had intended not five minutes before, through the Khoori Kabul pass. Your brother immediately rode up to him and entreated he would push on to Khoori Kabul, pointing out the ill effects of that halting. His advice was again unheeded, as, to my knowledge, it had repeatedly been. What was the consequence? We gave our enemies time to make their preparations for our annihilation, and fearful was the slaughter the next morning through the pass."

The noble bearing of the deceased Capt. Grant, at the close of that fatal retreat, when the last remnant of the heroic band, after surmounting the bloody barriers of Jugaluluck, fought their way to the last scenes of conflict and perished at Gundaumuk, is thus described, by Capt. Eyre. "Nothing could be more soldierly than his conduct on the retreat. At Jugaluluck he received a wound in the cheek, when prominently exposing himself with some other officers in an attempt to check the increasing numbers of the enemy. This was for some quelling his spirits that then showed up, up to the final massacre at Gundaumuk he was among the foremost to encourage his companions in arms to fight manfully while they had life and limb. Being at length rendered powerless by wounds in both arms, he ordered an Artillery Sergeant who had lost his own weapon, to draw his sword and rush eye once again on the merciless Ghazies, which the poor fellow did, and after sustaining several of them, himself received a mortal wound."

It only remains for us to give Lady Sale's reply to the demand of Capt. Grant, and we think her frank avowal of the error into which she had been led, forms the best apology for the error itself.

"FROM LADY SALE,

To Captain Grant, Asst. Adj. Genl. Sikh Kassees, 25th July, 1842.

My dear Sir,—I received your note and the copies of Captain Johnson's and Mr. Eyre's letters too late yesterday to reply to them by that day's dak, but I lose no time in writing to express my regret that I should have been misled as I was regarding your brother's conduct. My journal was sent away in parts during the time I was in captivity as occasion offered, and never was sent again by me or corroborated in England. I believed what I wrote at the time, and am very sorry to find, from the able testimony you have sent me, that I was in error; I however greatly deplore having been the medium through which a slur has been so undesirably cast on his name. It is not likely that this journal should go through another edition, but if it should do so, I will remedy the error as far as in me lies by sending by the next overland, a copy of this note with copies of the letters you kindly sent me. You will, I think, publish them in the papers in this country.

Believe me, yours, &c.
(Signed) FLORENTIA SALE.
(True Copy.)
PAT. GRANT.

THE MARINE BOARD IS ABOLISHED, says a notification in the last Calcutta Gazette. Government has assigned to the task in five words that ancient and venerable Board which has existed, under one denomination or another, from the earliest days of the Company, and was considered an establishment of the first importance when the Military Board, and the Revenue Board, and even the Customs, Salt and Opium Board were unknown. It has resolved to concentrate all responsibilities on the head of a single individual, to be designated the Superintendent of Marine. There is nothing to be said against the measure, and a great deal in its favour. The Company's Marine is a source of expense and not of profit. The Board, which managed it was in fact four Boards rolled into one. It was also the Customs Board, and the Salt Board, and the Opium Board; three departments of large profit and little expense. There is always an objection to the union of a department which is a source of revenue with one that is only a source of expenditure; because of the temptation—often irresistible—to give more attention to the former than to the latter, under the idea of securing commendation by improving the revenue. Where a Board is charged with such multifarious duties, it becomes in a great measure a nominal body, and the Secretary is the Board, without its responsibilities. The increasing duties of the Marine from the increase of shipping and the multiplication of steam vessels, seemed to demand that it should form a separate department, and not continue attached to a body, with more functions than it could perform; hence the present arrangement. A writer in the Star of Tuesday, states that the Marine Board comes within the province of the Government of Bengal; and hints that the paternity and credit of remodelling it belongs to the Deputy Governor, and that Lord Ellenborough has the merit of having concurred in it. We believe the writer is perfectly correct.

Government has appointed Major Irvine, an Officer of Engineers, the Superintendent of Marine, apparently only as a temporary measure ; for it is not we suppose unlikely that the Court of Directors may desire to keep the patronage of this office to themselves, as they do that of the Master Attendant. The nomination of one who is not a seaman to such a post, has created some surprise, but only among those who have not reflected much on the subject. The Superintendent of Marine may be considered as the counterpart of the First Lord of the Admiralty, a post which in England is often given to a landman than to a sailor. Under the Whigs, it was successively filled by Sir James Graham, Lord Auckland and Lord James. Under the present Ministry by the Earl of Haddington. The present appointment has therefore the countenance of his favour. It is also recommended by the fact that Major Irvine is a man of great versatility of talent, and good habits of business, two qualities which may possibly be found of more consequence in the new office than even a thorough knowledge of every rope and sail in a ship.

With the able assistance of Mr. Greenlaw, the Master Attendant, and the officers of his department, there can be no doubt that the Marine will be managed with as much ability and success as if it had been entrusted to a seaman. Nor must it be forgotten that our Marine is likely to be composed in an increasing ratio of Steamers, and that the appointment of an Engineer officer to superintend it, is any thing but inappropriate: The department also requires na-forms, and perhaps they will be most effectually carried out by one who is devoid of all professional partialities or prejudices. It has been found in England that the appointment of a husbandman of talent and energy, to the Head of the Admiralty during the last thirteen years, has been of no detriment, but rather an advantage; for at no former period was our Navy in so efficient a state, or so well able again to meet the world at sea, than it is at the present moment. It is not unreasonable to hope that as the present selection has been made with great judgment, the same beneficial results may be produced here which have been exhibited at home.

MR. GEORGE THOMPSON.—The Hurkar thinks we have acted ungenerously towards Mr. George Thompson, in saying that the remarks of the Press on his acceptance of the offer to advocate the claims of the King of Delhi in England were remarkable for their lenity; and has published a letter from that gentleman on the subject which we cheerfully copy. Though we have had occasion to differ from Mr. Thompson on many questions connected with the Indian administration, and may still be called to meet him, in the field of controversy, we have such respect for his personal character, and are so thoroughly convinced of the purity of his motives, that if any remark of ours has inflicted a wound on his feelings as a man, we most willingly retract it. In accepting the post offered to him by the King of Delhi, Mr. Thompson has committed no offence against the rules of morality, or even of propriety. He is as much at liberty as any other man, lawyer or layman, to undertake the case of the prince. The employment is honourable; and we are certain that the advocate the king has now chosen will throw his whole soul into the business, and amply repay by his exertions whatever allowance may be given to him. At the same time, judging of Mr. Thompson by his own high standard of philanthropy, and bearing in mind his frequent assurance of having come to this country from motives of perfect disinterestedness, the mind is apt to question the delicacy of his accepting an office which makes his visit to India a source of advantage to himself. Somehow or other, it appears to want the 'graces of congruity.' But when we have said this, we have said all that we have to allege against the measure. We have no idea that Mr. Thompson will give up the advocacy of what he considers, the interest of India, because he has a special retainer from one of its princes.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 10.

— The New Military Police, which has been organised in Bundelkhand, seem to act on the principle that discretion is the better part of valour. In the Star yesterday we are told that a dissuam has been taken there. 50 or 60 of them were sent out with 1 or 3 horsemen of the Bundelkhand legion to summon dialoyal Thakours. The whole village turned out, and the new Police took to their heels, though the horsemen did every thing to rally them. They lost two killed and a great number wounded. Capt. Beston, on hearing of the disaster, mounted with his sawars immediately, but the river was swollen, so that he could not cross it, and the rebels have therefore for the present shied of it.

— General Cartwright, not having the fear of the Hurons before his eyes, ordered up guns from Dum-Dum on Wednesday, to salute "Lord Ellensborough," to whom he gave an exte-tainment that evening, which four hundred merry hearts enjoyed. About half past nine, a salute of thirteen guns announced Lord Ellenborough's arrival, and about midnight, half the children in Serampore were waked by another peal of cannon which told of his Lordship's retirement. As the Harkers seem to be really in earnest on the subject, and appeals to Sir Hugh against the Dum-Dum nine pounders being used like Chinese crackers, we have given the whole of his article.

— The Ster states on the authority of Mauritius papers that the number of emigrants landed in the island up to the 30th of June, after the interdiction had been taken off, was 8233; namely, from Calcutta 4000; from Madras 2240; from Bombay 508; from Anjouan, one of the Comoro islands, 111; and 468 Chinese.

— The Semiramis Steamer which left Bombay on the 19th June, in the teeth of the Monsoon, arrived at Aden on the 7th July, in eighteen days. When the weather was favourable she made the

— The Semiramis Steamer which left Bombay on the 19th June, in the teeth of the Monsoon, arrived at Aden on the 7th July, in eighteen days. When the weather was favourable, she made the voyage in half the time. On reaching N. L. 10° the winds were found so moderate that she was enabled to cross over without finding it necessary to approach the equator so near as 4 or 5 degrees, as is usually done.

— One of the purchasers of the Union Bank shares has come forward in the Englishman and stated that the shares belonging to the Estate of Fergusson, Brothers and Co. were bought at 900 Rs. without the dividend.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 11.

— The Bombay papers arrive very irregularly. The Times of the 25th ult. reached us yesterday, the 10th, having been six days in reaching Calcutta. The paper of the 28th arrived this morning, having reached town in thirteen days. The roads are evidently very heavy. We fear therefore that the advantage of the early arrival of the July Mail at Bombay, which is expected, will be neutralized by the length of its transit across the country.

— It has been remarked with much regret that in the present rainy season there has been a smaller fall of rain than in preceding years. The complaint is general throughout Bengal. The Western Provinces and Cutchak have enjoyed a liberal supply; but in the lower Provinces, the hope of the husbandman, owing to two months of comparative drought, was on the point of being ruined, when the fall moon of yesterday morning brought us a succession of hearty showers. The fields are inundated, the drooping ears of corn are looking strong and green, and the river is rolling on as though there could be no more flood.

—The Bombay Chronicle's Chronicle of the 29th, says, there is a rumour that Ali Mordad's Army had turned against him and taken possession of the fortress of Dejeu ka kota, just above Khyrpore. Ali Mordad has, according to the Bombay Times, obtained through the impolitic generosity of Sir Charles B. Hall a territory which yields eighteen lakhs of Rupees annually. The Government's permanent has kept lands only of the value of 22 lakhs, to pay all its expenses. May we hint to the Editor of the Times that he would confer a favour on many of his readers, and on us among the rest, if he would give us a Genealogical Tree of the Talpoora dynasty. We cannot trace out the relationship of the Amers now in power to the Amers, with any satisfaction, though we have consulted all the bookshelves here appeared on Sindia.

— The Steamer Hindostan, went out into the stream very early yesterday morning, and got away about half past 11 with 112 passengers. How many more would she have room for if she had been destined to Bombay, to take up the passengers of that port?

Q — We had scarcely said we could not tell what had become of the draft of the Magistrate's Act, when it made its appearance as law in last Thursday's Calcutta Gazette.

The Star says, that some of the creditors of the late firm of Fergusson, Brothers and Co. have given notice to the Assignees that they intend to contest in the Insolvent and the Supreme Court the validity of the securities held by the Union Bank and the right of the Bank to the return of this season's Indigo. This was generally expected, notwithstanding the assurance that the lien of the Bank on the securities it enjoyed to the exclusion of the other creditors, was tight and inviolable.

The friends of Mr. Robertson, late Lt. Governor of the North West Provinces, have resolved to raise a subscription for a full length portrait of him to be suspended in the Metcalfe Testimonial at Agra. The surplus funds will be devoted to the foundation of a scholarship in Mr. Robertson's name in the Agra College. The sum subscribed, as given in the Duff's Gazette, amounts to 2618 Rupees.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 12.

A very splendid entertainment was given to the Governor General by the officers at Dum-Dum on Thursday last which came off with great eclat. Sir Hughough was also present on the occasion, and was highly delighted by Lord Ellenborough, for his able conduct in China. This terminates the series of entertainments given to his Lordship by the officers of the army in and around the Presidency. There was one circumstance connected with the entertainment at Dum-Dum which we find it difficult to account for. It is told in the report of the Harkers that the health of Her Majesty was given by Col. Forester, and drunk in honour; while the health of Lord Ellenborough was drunk with three times three, and all possible enthusiasm.

The Ceylon Herald, has embodied in broken English the feelings of deep veneration and esteem which the inhabitants of Ceylon appear to feel for the late Honourable Mr. Turnour, who was not less distinguished for his exertions as a public servant, than for the variety and success of his literary labours. Of the very few European gentlemen who have latterly settled themselves to the learned languages of the East, and to literary labours, two of the most eminent have been removed by death within the last two years. Mr. Lancelot Wilkinson and Mr. Turnour.

The Sessions of the Supreme Court was opened on Friday last, when Sir Henry Seton, now the only Judge on the Bench, charged the Grand Jury. The Calendar is rather longer and more formidable than usual.

MONDAY, AUGUST 14.

The Mauritius papers last received seem to intimate that the number of Cooly emigrants had reached the number of 12,000, that the Colonial treasury had been exhausted in paying a bonus for their importation, and that the Government would not send any more. The Star seems to doubt the accuracy of the intelligence, having received of a later date from the Island which makes no mention of it.

Major Irvine has been appointed Superintendent of Marine. Col. Benson, now at Barrackpore, succeeds Major Irvine as member of the Military Board.

Sir Jasper Nicolls, we are told by the Bombay Gentleman's Gazette, goes home to England from Bombay in one of the Steamers on the 1st of January next. If this intelligence should be correct, he will probably embark on the Scylla, and move down the Indus to Karachi, without visiting Calcutta.

The Harkers state, for the convenience of the public, that a visiting book is kept at Government House, and that parties wishing to pay their respects to the Governor General have only to enter their names and residences. But we can give you of what use this visiting book can be those private audiences are abolished, and no man is allowed to address the Governor General in person on any matter connected with his own interests. Besides, his Lordship now lives with all the hospitality of a country gentleman at Barrackpore, and goes down to Calcutta generally on Friday morning and returns on Saturday afternoon. What time is there on those two Council days for these private visits the Harkers alludes to?

The Harkers states, "Pursuant to the advertisement put forth by the Scotch Missionaries, Divine service was held at Free Mason's Hall yesterday both morning and evening. On the former occasion there were about a hundred and fifty persons present, but among them were scarcely twenty members of the Rev. Dr. Charles' congregation." The Rev. Dr. Duff conducted the services in the morning, and delivered a most admirable discourse from Proverbs x. ver. 28: "The hope of the righteous shall be gladness; but the expectation of the wicked shall perish." As a sermon, perhaps, the discourse might not bear very strict examination; but as a piece of composition, Dr. Duff's address was assuredly one of the most eloquent, animating and beautiful that has ever been read from the desk.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 15.

The Governor General has appointed three Commissioned Officers, as surveyors of the second class under Capt. Baker, the Superintendent of the Water courses, Canals and Forests in Seinde, together with Mr. Hooper as Assistant Surveyor, and four non-commissioned officers as sub-assistants. His Lordship appears to have taken up the improvement of this new conquest with particular ardour; and there can be no doubt that a few years of our administration will go far to repair the injury done to this fertile province by the selfishness of the Amers, and restore its former prosperity.

We regret to see the death of Lieut. Col. Peggs, mentioned in the papers. He had been nearly forty years in the country, and during the whole of the period was constantly engaged in some literary pursuit or other, in which however his success was not equal to his diligence. He had latterly turned his mind to historical speculations, which were of rather an eccentric character, and of which the only advantage was that they served to interrupt the monotony of antient life and afford occupation for the mind.

We were informed at the close of last week that the troops at Agra and Muttra had been summoned to hold themselves in readiness to march at a moment's warning. The Harkers of this morning states, that the formation of these corps for the coming cold weather has been determined on; one of 10,000 men at Agra; one of 5000 in Bundelkhand, and one of 5000 at Khyal. The Commander-in-Chief, we are told by the same authority, will be at Cawnpore about the 14th of October. The object of this assembling our contemporary does not explain. Why 5,000 men should assemble in Bundelkhand does not appear. Every thing perfectly quiet both there and in the Ganges District, with the exception of a small portion of the northern part of the Sanger territory which borders on the Gwalior district of Chundwara where the very few adherents of the ex-rajah of Jaipur have joined the few insurgents still at large from Sanger and would vainly attempt some enterprise, for they have little food. They have been joined by many of the marauders with which the Gwalior district abounds, and on the 20th of last month they had a brush with the police, in which they suffered little loss. There is nothing in the present or prospective state of Bundelkhand to call for an army of 5000 men. The assembling of 10,000 men at Agra has evidently an aspect to the state of Gwalior, where the Duke Khajoor has shut himself up in the palace with the Tara bane, aged 15, and the Maharajah, aged 9, in whose names he rules. He does not move out, and the insurgents troops are prevented from raiding or killing him only by the assurance that they can quietly separate out of him all the juice of the Gungahjee Orange, or Treasury, which still contains one Crore of Rupees. In these circumstances, with a rebel army glared with plunder on our frontier, the assembling of troops in the neighbourhood is a precautionary measure, which could no longer be delayed with safety.

The Commander-in-Chief held a levee yesterday morning, which was numerously attended, not only by military officers, but by many civilians and gentlemen not in the service, who availed themselves of the opportunity of being presented to his Excellency. The Harkers says, that the presentation of the mercantile community would have been greater had it not been the morning for despatching the Express "to which all other things give place."

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 16.

The Englishman thinks we have been misinformed in the matter of Scott and Co.'s Directory, and as our remarks may possibly have an injurious effect on the interests of his family, we willingly insert the correction furnished by our contemporary.

"From the press of other matter, we have omitted to notice an article in the last Friend of India, which, unintentionally we feel sure, may have a very injurious tendency in respect to the interests of the late Mr. T. B. Scott's family. We allude to the notice of the Directory published by Scott and Co., relative to which we find the following observation: 'Samuel Smith and Co.'s Directory superseded Scott and Co.'s older work, and Mr. Scott was thrown upon his wits, and, eventually, the press itself was brought to the hammer.' All of this is likely to depreciate, and much of it is foreign to the fact. Our contemporary has been misinformed. We will not run ourselves into the error, that we condemn, by asserting that some might think the reverse was the case with reference to the two compilations; but without denying the merits of Samuel Smith and Co.'s publication, we feel bound to declare that the preferential assumption is, at least, gratuitous—that Scott and Co.'s Directory is still looked upon as a standard one, and deserves to be so looked upon—that its production was, in the last hour of his life, one of the chief means by which Mr. Scott supported his family, and that the work has experienced no falling off in the quantum of its subscribers."

"When Mr. Scott gave up his last daily journal, his press was not disposed of by auction. He sold the paper with his good-will, and so many of his presses as were not required for his Directory and job work—these he continued to prepare to the last, and his son is now prosecuting the same labour with the same press. The Friend will, we are certain, not hesitate to correct his mistake." We should however state that the Press to which we alluded was the India Gazette Press; and that, to the best of our recollection, the publication of Scott's Directory was suspended when he left Calcutta. He resumed the publication of it, we think on his return; and it is happy to learn from the Englishman that it is in sufficient favour with the public to afford his family the means of subsistence.

Messrs. Lattay, Brothers and Co. finding that the time fixed upon for the sale of Tickets in their Lottery had proved too limited; that is, finding that the public had not bought a sufficient number of Tickets, have most reluctantly postponed the drawing to the 26th of September and the 10th October.

The July mail may be expected this evening or to-morrow morning. Last year it arrived on the 16th. The Bombay despatch have latterly arrived in Calcutta in eleven days. If the Mail reach Bombay on the 7th, it may be hastily expected.

try, in General Order, No. 426, date 18th July 1942, is found.

No. 167 of 1933.—The following Subedar Majors and Subedar "Bahadours" are advanced from the 2d to the 1st Class of the Order of British India, with the Title of "Order Bahadour," to all existing Vaccinies:

Sentence.—The court do sentence the prisoner, Lieutenant Charles Almy Mount, of Her Majesty's 50th or 100th's own regiment, to be publicly and severely reprimanded in such manner as His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to direct.

Continued.

REMARKS BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

CHIEF IN INDIA.
The Commander-in-Chief has confirmed the finding and sentence on the 1st charge, though he does not wholly con-

The Commander-in-Chief now conveys to Lieutenant Mount his decided disapprobation and censure of his conduct on the night of the 11th May. The disgraceful altercation with Assistant Surgeon Swin, was commenced by Lieutenant Mount, and considering that some disagreement had existed between these parties but a few weeks

This reprintand is to be read to Lieutenant Mount, in presence of the Major General commanding the station of Cawnpore, and before the officers of Her Majesty's 80th regiment, assembled for that purpose; Lieutenant Mount is then to be released and to return to his duty.

1st.—In having at the billiard room of the regiment, on the evening of the 11th of May 1943, and in the presence of several officers of his own and of another corps, made use of highly provoking language towards, and giving the lie to Lieutenant Charles Aubrey Mount, of the same regiment.

30--12 having gathered around and making remarks of a flatteringly nature, that the expressions he had used on the previous evening at the biliard room, were used generally, without individual application, and without any intention to insult the said Lieutenant Mount, the same morning being made in a document written by him (Assistant Surgeon Burke) dated May 12th 1843; that document likewise expressly purporting to be "a simple and correct record of

On the second count, guilty.
On the third count, guilty.
And the court do find that the conduct of which, they have found the prisoner guilty is unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.
Sentence.—The court do sentence the prisoner to a whole

Confirmed, but the results are restricted.

2. Value: The value of the property is determined by the fair market value of the property at the time of the transfer.

and—The prosecutor Lieutenant Colonel Andrews, declined to call upon Lieutenant Mount, as it would have been "a departure from his sense of justice," and the primer also objected to it, "business this silence of Lieutenant
 Allen and Smyth deprived him of the power of disproving

The Commander-in-Chief desires Assistant Surgeon arts to reflect on the depth to which the mark was of one and was the means of striking him, and he trusts that he will never again apply the offensive term to any gentleman.

Head Quarters, Madras, 12th July, 1942.
The Research Division order of the 20th Indian Division

Country, is promoted to the rank of Sergeant, transferred to the Town Major's Hat and appointed Senior Sergeant at Bourne, Bismarck, vice Coleman deceased.

entry, is transferred to the Town Major's list, and appointed Quarter Master Sergeant to the Munro's battalion at Ipoh, via Seremban.

The undersigned Ensigns, recently admitted into the service, are posted to the corps specified opposite to their names, and directed to prepare and join:

Unposted Ensign Robert Robinson Harris to the 97th

The undisciplined drummers and fife, of the 43d Light Infantry, are transferred, in their present rank, to the 10th regiment of native infantry :

With a view to his being appointed trumpet Major to that corps.

Major James Hurling, of the 60th regiment of native infantry, is transferred, as a private, to the 2d European regiment.

MARSHES.—In General Orders of the 20th ultimo, was

Headquarters, Manila, 1944-July, 1945:
The Company, Division order of the 6th Infantry, assisting Sergeant E. Nelson, recently assigned Quarter Master Sergeant in the 3d regiment of native Infantry, in communicating daily with the 3d company, 2nd battalion of ar-

Head Quarters, British, 12th July, 1942.
The following orders are confirmed:
The registration order of the 12th witness, by Lieutenant Colonel A. Collins, representing the 57th anti-aircraft battery, reporting Lieutenant and brevet Captain W. R. Murray

The grand jury divided order of the 6th instant, directing the undersigned to issue a writ of habeas corpus.

Corps.	Rank and Name.
6th Troop 1st Bde. Horse Artillery	Schwabe Major Thomas
14th Cavalry	Stephens Major William Elmer
60th Regt. Light Cavalry	Schwabe Major Smith Elmer
10th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major Francis Ring
12th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major Eugene Ring
23d Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major Francis Ring
21st Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major Charles Young
24th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major Henry
38th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major Henry

The undersigned National Officers are admitted to the list of Chiefs of the Order of British India, with the Title of "Bachelor," in full acting Comanches and to complete the Establishment.

Corps.	Rank and Name.
14th Regiment Light Cavalry	Schwabe Major Smith Elmer
7th Regiment Light Cavalry	Schwabe Major Smith Elmer
1st Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major Henry
5th Regiment N. I.	Stephens Major Charles Ring
9th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
10th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
12th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
14th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
16th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
18th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
20th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
22nd Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
24th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
26th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
28th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
30th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
32nd Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
34th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
36th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
38th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
40th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
42nd Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
44th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
46th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
48th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
50th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
52nd Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
54th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
56th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
58th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
60th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
62nd Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
64th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
66th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
68th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
70th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
72nd Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
74th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
76th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
78th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
80th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
82nd Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
84th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
86th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
88th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
90th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
92nd Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
94th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
96th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
98th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring
100th Regiment N. I.	Schwabe Major James Ring

EDWD. SANDERS,
Offg. Secy. to the Govt. of India, Mil. Dept.
—
BY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Charges.—1st.—For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, at Bangalore, on the evening of the 11th of May 1888, in having at the Billiard room of the regiment and in the presence of several officers of his own and other regiments, and of several ladies, been drinking and smoking, and having been in a state of intoxication, and having been guilty of indecent exposure, and of other conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.

was in the presence of several persons, and the same was the case with another case, made use of highly prejudicial language to Assistant Surgeon Joseph Moran, of the same institution, when he was greatly insulted by an unbecomingly passionate expression.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 431. Vol. IX.]

SEMAPHORE: THURSDAY, AUGUST 24th. 1843.

[Price 3 Cts. Rs. monthly, or 30 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.]

THE JULY MAIL came in rather earlier than the state of the weather authorized us to expect, on the 17th of the month. It brought intelligence of no transaction of any magnitude, but it told us how the elements of extensive changes were at work in the United Kingdom. Foremost in importance is the condition of Ireland, where O'Connell is pushing on the Repeal agitation with unabated energy, arraying the whole Catholic population against existing institutions, rousing their minds with the most inflammatory addresses, but carefully avoiding any expression on which the charge of sedition could be fixed. On the other hand, the Ministry continue to pour his followers in troops, and to put the island in a state of defence, but refrain from any movement which might serve to bring on a collision, and end in a civil war. It is evident that the demagogue is much more master of Ireland than the Queen; but it is impossible to discover the means by which he intends to bring the masses of the population to bear upon the establishment of his independent legislature, which must in the present temper of the people, terminate, in an attempt to establish a separate government. He declares his object to be constitutional, the repeal of a certain obnoxious act of Parliament which united the two countries; but he has manifested no disposition to petition the Legislature for the repeal of the act; on the contrary, he seems determined to make no application at all to Parliament; as the following extract from his last address, in which, we have also the last edition of his Schedule of Repeal blessings will show. "And as he told the tardy offer of justice to Ireland, 'You're too late; you should have spoken sooner.' (Great cheering.) Mr. O'Connell then alluded to the opinions of Savaris, Plunkett, and Baile, regarding the illegality of the act for abolishing the Irish Parliament. The union was passed in violation of law, and they required no act of Parliament to obtain a restoration of their Parliament. Their beloved Queen had only to issue her writ, summoning a Parliament in College-green, and the measure would be accomplished. (Hurray, then, for the Queen! Long-continued cheering.) The blessings of local legislation were insensate. They should have this principle established, that every man—the Protestant, the Catholic, the Presbyterian, the Methodist—should pay his own almsman. (Cheers.) They would have free-trade. (Cheers.) They would have three pounds of sugar for the price of one pound now; and the same increase in tea and coffee; and the old women would then have three pennyworth of tobacco for every pennyworth they obtained now. Then the absentee drain would be stopped—nine millions a year would lie by in the country. The tennantry would be treated with justice, the extermination system would be at an end, and the rectorial murders—the horrid scenes of blood which resulted from the extermination system, would also cease. (Cheers.) Would they not, then, join him in struggling for Repeal? (Tremendous cheering.) They were now temperate teetotalers. In his mercy the eternal Creator raised up Father Mathew, and gave to the people the grace of becoming his disciples. (Cheers.) The star of freedom was rising, it was on the horizon—soon would it shine over them, and, whilst they played the fute of other nations, they would rejoice in the glory of their own beloved land. —

"The actions have fallen, but then still set young; They are the best cities whilst others have set; And though slavery's stones s'er their morning bath hung, The full sons of freedom shall beam round them yet!"

As yet O'Connell has taken no one step towards Repeal; he has done nothing but maul the Repealers, and keep their minds up at fever heat, rather we should say at the point where "spirits boil." Any single overt action in contravention of the Act of Union, will bring the Repealers within the grasp of the law; but any attempt to enforce the law would probably bring on the crisis which O'Connell evidently longs for, and enable him to appeal to his followers against the ruling authorities, as having first "made war upon them." But it is impossible that matters should continue in their present anomalous state for any length of time. Though O'Connell's strength lies in that almost miraculous change which Father Mathew has made in the national habits, and in the perseverance of his followers, who would otherwise have long since brought on a row and a rebellion; yet in the present inflammable state of his three millions of repealers, a single spark may create a general flame, and that spark the most trifling circumstance may supply. Upon the result of this movement it is utterly impossible to speculate. The Repeal of the Union, England cannot, under any possible circumstances, concede. There must therefore be a farther, perhaps a larger, instalment of the reform of grievances. The disfranchisement must be of a different genus from that which Sir James Graham offered the Disfranchisers, and which they regarded as a stingless nettle. No reform can be successful in healing the breach, which leaves the ecclesiastical scene untouched, and continues to consign all the ecclesiastical revenues of the country to a Church which embraces only a twelfth of the inhabitants. This grievance reformed, and the evils of absenteeism abated, it is possible that the Irish may fold up for a few years the hope of being again a nation. But it is much to be doubted whether any concessions, such as a British Ministry would dare to offer, can ward off a civil war.

The Education clauses of the Factory Bill, Sir James Graham pledged himself on the 15th of June to withdraw, in consequence of the strenuous opposition which had been offered to them by the Dissenting community. Since the repeal of the Test and Corporation Act, and the admission of Dissenters to an equality of civil privileges with the members of the Established Church, there has been no occasion on which their actual strength has been prominently exhibited, and hence, many of the organs of the Church had been led to suppose that Dissent itself was on the wane. That idea has now been somewhat rudely dispelled; and it is become evident that whenever any such infringement of their privileges is attempted as may serve to produce unanimity among them, they are sufficiently powerful to defeat it, whoever may be their opponents. This power we wish them always to possess and to exercise; more than this would not be desirable: The Educational clauses of the Factory Bill were objected to because they were based upon the old idea, which had long since been attempted—but in vain—to maintain by poins and penalties, "that there was to be one church as there was one nation." The "church is no longer co-extensive with the nation" as Dr. Arnold has justly remarked, and the determination to establish a system of national education, to which Dissenters were to contribute, while it was to be entrusted almost exclusively to the agency of the Church, with a trifling concession to the tender consciences of seceders, was found to be impracticable at the present day. If Dissenters are to contribute to a system of public education, they will of course expect, not as a matter of grace but of right, to have a voice in its administration. We most sincerely hope that during the recess of her Majesty's Ministers, discarding the advice of the two factory inspectors, Messrs. Saunders and Horner, who are supposed to have concocted the Bill, and whom the Dissenters cannot trust, will be able to mature a scheme of national instruction, which shall enlist the energies of every denomination, and secure the cordial co-operation of all classes; and this can be accomplished only by the careful omission of every clause, which shall place Dissenters in an inferior and humiliating position.

The papers state that Puseyism is losing ground; but having as yet received but one journal beyond the Monthly Times and the London Mail, we are unable to ascertain upon what facts or appearances this idea is founded. One more clergyman has quitted the ranks of Puseyism and joined the Catholics, and doubtless many others would follow the same example if they could carry their lives with them. Two centuries ago we had a similar movement in England, and it ended in the temporary abolition of Episcopacy. "Mr. Speaker," said Lord Falkland, on the 9th of February 1641, "Some have evidently laboured to bring in an English though not a Roman popery; I mean not only the outside dress of it, but equally absolute; a blind dependence of the people on the clergy, and the clergy on themselves; and have opposed the Popery beyond the seas, that they might settle one beyond the water (Lambeth). Nay common sense is more than ordinarily false, if none of them have found means to reconcile the opinions of Rome to the preferences of England; and to be so absolutely, directly and cordially papists, that it is all that 1600s a year can do to keep them from confounding it." And Lord Falkland lived in our days he could not have described the present state of things in the Church more accurately than he has done in this nervous language. Next week, we shall again revert to the progress or decay of this sect, if we should find anything worthy of notice in our files. The only two circumstances, which the papers we have received state, are, that Archbishop Wilberforce, perhaps the hottest zealous in the Puseyite camp, has been selected by Her Majesty's Ministers as the Preceptor of the Prince of Wales, who is however fortunately too young to have any arbitrary principles instilled into his mind, which would unfit him to govern a country like England; and the other face in the injury sustained by the Factory Bill is the injury sustained by the Factory Bill were objected to because they were based upon the old idea, which had long since been attempted—but in vain—to maintain by ner it was the usual custom to go to sleep in the hottest time of the day; in that every party was awakened in the evening to partake of a supper which protracted a drunken and until a late hour of the next morning. Amidst constant repletion, and frequent irregularity, the climate operated with fatal influence. A reformation highly commendable has been effected, partly from necessity. (Hamilton states that when the whole English residents in Calcutta did not exceed 1800, there were 400 burials in six months) "but more by the example of a late Governor General, whose elevated rank, and noble birth, gave him in a great measure the guidance of fashion. Regular hours and sobriety of conduct became as decidedly the test of a man of fashion as they were formerly of irregularity."

The practice which it is now proposed to introduce, would in all probability lead society back to the pernicious habits of former days. If sold that the same principle of non-interference with the proceedings of your Society in respect to any Missionary Stations, already formed among the Heathen, will be exercised by the Committee on any opportunity they may have of extending their labours away from large cities." The charge of bad faith thus brought against the Society attracted the attention of Bishop Wilson, who appointed a Committee to examine and report on it; and that Report has now been published, and will be found in another column. The Committee appears to have been fairly constituted; the aggressors were Puseyite Missionaries, and the Bishop placed one Puseyite and two anti-Puseyites on the Committee, which has come to the conclusion that the charges of the London Missionary Society's agents are wholly unfounded.

It would appear from the extracts we have given, that in the idish time, all business ceased at two. It must therefore have begun early; and accordingly we find frequent notices of breakfast at seven in the morning. But the attendance to which the Markara alludes, provides for resuming business at 3, and continuing it till 7. It is easy however to foresee that the business done in the afternoon, will be little more than nominal. Men who have three hours thrown upon their hands in the middle of the day will surely resist the temptation of devoting a considerable portion of it to the pleasures of the table; and to return with any zest and alacrity to the desk upon a full and sleep exciting meal, will be impossible.

It is difficult to suppose that the arrangement can have been seriously contemplated. Calcutta is not now what it was when the town could conveniently close the business of the day at two, and retire to dinner and sleep. Half the business of India, political and commercial, is concentrated within the circle of the metropolis. The public establishments have increased ten fold. The houses of business have been multiplied from six to sixty. Instead of a dozen or fifteen large ships from Europe, visiting it once a twelve month, its port is crowded with shipping at all seasons of the year. The quantity of business which requires to be attended to, comes with so little abatement or interruption that the day is scarcely sufficient for completing it. No man has any time hanging heavily on his hands, except the Members of the Supreme Council. To create so large a gap in the time for business, as three hours in the day, would introduce intolerable confusion. It would be found impossible to resume the vigorous prosecution of labour after so long a relaxation; for all practical purposes the day would close at noon, and the disorganization thus occasioned in every department of labour, public and private, would render a speedy return to the old habit of completing the business of the day at one stretch, indispensably necessary.

BISHOP CORRIE'S ALLEGED PLEDGE TO THE DISSENTERS.—Within the last month, there has been a long correspondence in the pages of the Markara relative to the interference of the Bishop's College Missionaries with the dissenting congregations to the South of Calcutta; in the course of which a letter of Bishop—then Archbishop—Corrie to the Rev. M. Hill has been brought up, with the intent of shewing that these encroachments were a violation of his pledge. This pledge was given when the buildings of Tallyho were made over by the London Missionary Society to the Christian Knowledge Society, and is contained in these words: "I need scarcely say that the same principle of non-interference with the proceedings of your Society in respect to any Missionary Stations, already formed among the Heathen, will be exercised by the Committee on any opportunity they may have of extending their labours away from large cities."

The charge of bad faith thus brought against the Society attracted the attention of Bishop Wilson, who appointed a Committee to examine and report on it; and that Report has now been published, and will be found in another column. The Committee appears to have been fairly constituted; the aggressors were Puseyite Missionaries, and the Bishop placed one Puseyite and two anti-Puseyites on the Committee, which has come to the conclusion that the charges of the London Missionary Society's agents are wholly unfounded.

It is manifest from a perusal of the documents adduced by the Committee, that the negotiation which gave rise to the pledge of Bishop Corrie, had reference only to the particular district, in which it is called, of Tallyho; and it seems to have led to stipulations binding on both parties. The London Society's Missionaries engaged not to establish fresh schools in that district. This stipulation is recorded on two occasions. They were therefore at liberty to establish Missionary Schools, and of course Missionary stations, in any other district, far or near. The Report says, the Church Committee "purchased the Tallyho Mission house, as the centre of a prepared missionary field, and with the view to keep that field their own, free from all other agency." What that field was, is to be determined not by any large views which the Gospel Propagation Society may have cherished, and which were not before the parties, but by the definite language in which the transaction was recorded at the time. It was the district of Tallyho, and no other, from which they bought out the London Society's Missionaries, and into which, as the result of that purchase, they required a stipulation that those Missionaries should not in future intrude.

Bishop Corrie, on his part, engaged that the Gospel Propagation Society, when they had an opportunity of extending their labours, should not interfere with the operations of the London Missionary Society. We are sorry to see that something like an attempt in the Report to weaken the force of this pledge of non-interference. It must of course be taken in the sense in which that devoted and single hearted Minister used it, and it can be regarded in no other light than as the counterpart of the agreement entered into by the London Missionaries, and as based upon the principle of mutual non-interference.

After the arrangement had been made, the London Society's Missionaries as the Report states, established a mission at Ramakalechok, which Mr. Bone describes as lying in a neighbouring district. With the converts at this station, the Propagation Society's Missionaries have sorely interfered, and this has given rise to the insinuation of bad faith.

Unfortunately the limits of this district, which the Gospel Propagation Society were to keep exclusively their own, free from all other agency, were not defined. That Society give it the most extensive dimensions; and repudiate the idea of having, by the purchase, shut up their Missionary sphere, and the operations of a growing Institution like Bishop's College. Who then is to define the boundaries of the Tallyho district? It is no civil division of territory, but rather an ecclesiastical diocese, the circumference of which has never been ascertained. Who is to determine whether Ramakalechok lies within its limits or not? Yet upon the determination of this point the question of bad faith appears to us entirely to rest. If Ramakalechok be within the boundary, the London Missionary Society's Missionaries are chargeable with bad faith in having intruded into it. If it be not, then the pledge which Bishop Corrie gave of not interfering with stations already formed, cannot be said to have been kept. With an agreement so loosely worded, in reference to a large tract of land the limits of which have never been fixed, it is impossible to sustain a charge of bad faith against either party; and we are sorry it was ever brought forward.

The Report puts a construction on the words "already formed," which, however ingenious, is not tenable. It endeavours to limit its application to the stations of the London Society which existed in 1823, whereas it evidently implies that the Propagation Society should not interfere with any stations, after they had been actually formed by the London Society, even from large towns. It would be preposterous to suppose that Bishop Corrie intended to limit the operations of a growing institution like the London Missionary Society to the stations which they actually occupied at that early period of their mission, and to affirm that in whatever other portion of the country they might hereafter establish Missionary stations, the Church Society claimed a right to interfere with them, and thus to do what was as anxious to avoid, "to create a hindrance to the accomplishment of the object we all aim at."

It is impossible to rise from the perusal of these papers without the painful impression that these disputes are occasioned by the loss of those noble Christian feelings which dictated Bishop Corrie's letter. If there had been the same conviction in the minds of those now in the field which then existed in his mind, that the Missionaries of various denominations in this country were engaged in the same glorious enterprise, and that mutual discords would prove a serious obstruction to its accomplishment, the necessity of the present enquiry would never have arisen. If the spirit which his pledge exhibited, had continued to animate the Gospel Propagation Society, it would never have been made a matter of discussion, how far its Missionaries might make war on the stations of the Dissenters, without violating the letter of it.

So much for the past. As to the future, the Report is clear and decisive. It defines explicitly the course which Missionaries connected with the Church of England, will hereafter pursue. "The future operations of a Society of like Church of England cannot have regard in all its operations to the proceedings of a Society in avowed dissent from her. There is a world of meaning in this well turned period. It dispels at once and for ever all hope on the part of Dissenters, that Missionaries of the Episcopal Church will not interfere with their labours. As if however, there might be some possibility of mistaking the object of an assertion apparently so reasonable, the last sentence in the Report closes the nail. "What we would insist on is the utter incompetency of a Diocesan Committee, or even of a Home Committee to pledge a Society of the Church of England to an engagement of the kind,—that is of non-interference—with Dissenting Missionaries of any denomination." This Report has been received and unanimously adopted by the Committee, and ordered to be printed and published.

This entire repeal of the engagement of Bishop Corrie, and this declaration that any subsequent engagement of non-interference which even the Home Committee of the Society, its responsible Directors, may make, cannot be binding on any of its Missionaries, has created no surprise in our minds. We knew well, that the disputes between the Dissenters and the Purse-payers Missionaries in the South, must come as late as this termination. For, though the Church of England is not the Established Church in this country in anything like the same sense in which it is the Established Church in England and Ireland, yet, its feelings towards all who dissent from it are not changed, by this circumstance. It still continues to regard Dissenting Missions and Missionaries in all parts of the world as its pretended Holy Orders, and their ministrations as irregular, and wholly inefficient for salvation; and it must therefore regard the acquisition of converts from whatever churches they come from, not only unseemable, but commendable. How far these views, which are essential and not incidental to the Established Church, are consonant with the spirit of the Gospel, is one part of the controversy between Church-men and Dissenters; but while the Church maintains them, it is natural that it should act up to them. With some members of the Establishment, with Corrie and Martyn for instance, these Church principles were softened down by the sweet influence of evangelical feelings, and they regarded the Dissenting Missionaries of their day as brethren and not aliens, as fellow workers and not interlopers. But a party has now arisen in the Church of England distinguished for carrying these principles to the utmost limits of sectarian intolerance. They not only deny the validity of all ordinances performed by Dissenters, and regard their converts as mere Heathens, but maintain the propriety of making them over to the secular power, to be burnt to death, if they will not recant. This contempt of others is, as usual, accompanied by an overbearing conceit of their own prerogatives. They consider the child regenerated as soon as they have baptised it; they regard the bread and wine, when consecrated by them as transubstantiated into "the very flesh and blood which were given and shed for the life of the world," and as the means of spiritual life. Such men must of course consider it an act of religious merit to banish and drive away Dissenters with all faithful diligence or as our friend Douzet describes it. The declaration of the Report that no Committee can bind them to non-interference, will give a fresh spur to their zeal.—On the other hand, if a Dissenters regards the doctrine which the Purse-payers teach as deadly errors, and considers that men who depend for salvation on any acts performed by a Christian Priest, are equally as far from the Kingdom of heaven as those who look for eternal happiness to an act performed by a Heathen Priest, he is likewise bound to use all the means his power to reclaim such men from their fatal delusions. The Dissenting Missionaries, then, have no option but to reckon every Episcopalian Missionary an antagonist—except when personal acquaintance enables them to recognize a brother in a nominal opponent: and they are also delivered from all restraints of delicacy in dealing with the pernicious doctrines and influence of Puseyism.

THE BONDED WAREHOUSE.—At a meeting of the Committee of the Bonded Warehouse last week, it was resolved to recommend the construction of a set of offices contiguous to the Warehouse, at an expense a little exceeding £1000 of Rupees. The change will probably not fall short of 1,25,000 Rupees, which is to be provided for, partly by the sale of a quantity of superfluous iron castings, prematurely ordered some years back, and partly by a call of 2 per cent. on the Capital Stock, from the Shareholders. They have, it is true, received no very satisfactory return for their money since the Warehouse was complete; the dividends have indeed been poor; and some of them may think it hard to be called on for another instalment, equal, if we remember aright, to last year's dividend; still they cannot do better than to obey the call. If the Bonded Warehouse had been erected in the spirit of rigid economy, it would long since have yielded a sufficient return, but the extravagance which marked the first movement has kept it in the back ground. Notwithstanding unenviable appearances, however, it is an enterprise which contains the germ of prosperity, and which promises to yield a satisfactory return at no distant period to those who have embarked in it. The present proposal will serve to hasten that period. The counting offices which it is intended to erect, will afford such convenience to the mercantile community that they are likely to be immediately occupied. The merchant will not be long in finding it to his advantage to lodge all his goods in the Bonded Warehouse, and thus to relieve himself from all care and anxiety on their account, and at a few more times to rent an office, consisting of a few rooms, in its immediate vicinity. This will probably soon become the vogue, and will render the erection of further accommodation necessary. These offices will not only yield a fair return for the capital invested in them, but bring more profit to the mill, and serve to destroy the vacuum in the Bonded Warehouse itself.

THE IDLER'S LETTERS.—We have received a copy of the Idler's Letters to friends at Home. They have appeared in successive months in the Star, and are now collected together, and published in a more permanent form. They furnish an interesting record of events, at one of the most critical periods of our Indian History, and, written as they are, in a light and attractive style, will afford much amusement and some instruction. The remarks with which they are largely interspersed, embody the impressions of the time, at a period when it appeared to be the special delight of the Governor General to justify the press. They must therefore be received with considerable allowance. If the writer himself were to revise them, with his present information, he would find much room for correction, before they could be considered a safe guide to the events of the past year. They must be regarded therefore, as the name imports, the Letters of an Idler, who does not aspire to the honour of inditing Historical commentaries.

The Dedication to Lord Ellenborough, whose actions form the great staple of remarks, appears to our mind to be too strong; it is more adapted to the meridian of London than of Calcutta, and will therefore be viewed as another proof of the extreme licentiousness of the Indian Press.

ELLA.—We have received from the author, Mr. T. W. Smyth, a volume of Poems he has just published, containing Ellis, or a tale of the Waldensian Martyrs, which now appears for the first time, and a number of Miscellaneous Poems, some of which have already been given in the Periodical publications of the Town. Poetical Review is by no means our forte; and we shall therefore refrain from any critical examination of the merits of the volume, which we leave to more competent judges. The writer, in his Preface, very properly disclaims exclusive originality; or originality, as Lord Byron is said to have remarked, being quite out of the question in our days. "Of an intentional plagiarist," says Mr. Smyth, "I am not conscious; though of allusion and imitation," and his imitations are sometimes so close, that even a lenient critic might easily mistake them for plagiarisms. "Whatever," he observes, "may be the fate of this thing of rhythm, and though not destined 'virum voluere perire,' I shall at least preserve the consciousness that the motives which led to this publication were not unbecomingly." The benevolence of the motive is unquestionably the strongest argument for this publication; as the profits of it are to be divided among four or five of our charitable institutions in Calcutta; though we have some misgivings as to the success of poetical publications in Calcutta, and the assistance they are likely to minister to the public Societies which are to reap the profit of them. We close this brief notice with a sincere hope that the present effort may prove an exception to the general rule; and do them more good than it is likely to do to the author.

THE LATE J. O. VOIGT, Esq.—The last Mail brings intelligence that the disease which constrained Mr. Voigt to return to Europe, terminated fatally, in London on the 22d of June, before he could reach his native land. During his brief residence in London he received the kindest attention from his old Indian friends, and more especially from Dr. Martin, formerly of Calcutta. Mr. Voigt had been a resident in Serampore, for more than fifteen years, in the service of His Danish Majesty; and he very early renewed his application to the study of botany, under the late Dr. Carey, in association with whom also Dr. Wallich, while Surgeon in this town, commenced his botanical career. After the death of Dr. Carey, Mr. Voigt undertook to superintend the garden he had formed, and in which he had collected a large variety of valuable plants from all parts of the world; and he continued to attend to it with great assiduity till he was invited to take temporary charge of the Company's Botanic Garden, on the departure of Dr. Wallich, last year, on leave to the Cape of Good Hope. During the last year of his residence in Serampore, he gave up all the time he could spare from his professional duties, to the compilation of a Catalogue of the Plants in Dr. Carey's Garden, and in and around Calcutta. The very devoted attention he bestowed on this work, severely injured his health, and was one cause, we fear, of the attack which constrained him to quit the country. He took with him the manuscript of the Horae Suburbanæ Calcuttensium, in the hope of being able to carry it through the Press. That pleasure was denied him; and it will now be placed among the manuscripts of the University of Copenhagen, his Alma Mater. Mr. Voigt endeared himself to all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance by the generosity of his feelings; and his gratuitous attention to the poor of this Settlement, and to the Hospital after it was established, will long continue to be remembered with gratitude.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 17.

— The Star gives us the Report of the embarkation of Coolies for the Mauritius during the month of July last. The number was, 1000 men, 138 women and 45 children, in all 1183. As the Mauritius appears now to be stocked to the full extent of the funds available for the encouragement of labourers, it would be advisable to turn the tide of emigration to the Island of Ceylon, in which commercial enterprise has experienced no unusual impediment within the last few years, and appears likely to be checked for want of labourers.

— A correspondent of the Hurbers states, that the Sicilians who fled from Candahar on the approach of our army and took refuge in Persia, have returned from thence, and are plundering and imprisoning all those who have, or are suspected to have, any wealth. Suffering, Shah Soojah's command to be in their hands. Yar Mahomed, still paramount at Herat, "the most accomplished general in Central Asia," as he has been perhaps justly called by those who know him. But the time has passed by when the intrigues or revolutions of Central Asia, excited any interest in our councils.

— A large party is to be given by the community of Calcutta to Lady Gough, which has been fixed for the 1st of September. An absurd report seems to have got abroad, and it is mentioned in this day's Hurbers, that it is given, not so much out of honour to her Ladyship, as out of disparagement to Lord Ellenborough. It is impossible there should be the smallest ground for such a suspicion. His Lordship never expected to be fitted by the denunciations of Calcutta and he is not disappointed at the loss of a dinner. We have no doubt the report was got up from malignant motives, in the hope of deterring gentlemen from acting as spectators.

— We mentioned last week that a widely extended confederacy of rogues had been discovered at Bombay; and that their books had been seized and examined; and that they confessed the worst suspicions of the Magistrates. We are now told that the Forty Thieves, as the Courier facetiously designates them, intended to bring an action for damages against Government and its servants for the illegal seizure of their books and papers.

— We have placed among our extracts an high wrought eulogy of Lord Ellenborough, from the Bombay World, a paper recently established in that city. The Hurbers says it has the merits of originality; which is saying a great deal. We have now two papers in India, the Bombay World and the Bombay Gentleman's Gazette, devoted to the praise of the Governor General. In time there may be a third. These journals, thus expounding the cause of those in authority, will serve to mitigate the guilt of the Hindustan press of India.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 18.

— The Hurbers states on the authority of a Foreigners correspondent, that a valued Hindustani Prince Aga Khan, has arrived from Can-dahar, for the purpose of obtaining an interview with the Governor General to solicit either land or money for his master. Aga Khan is said to have done the state some service, when he was with General Nott's Army. He is also the spiritual head of a sect of Ismaelites, and possesses great influence in the south of Persia. But as we are likely again to meddle in the affairs of Central Asia, the probability is that his errand will be lost.

— The Somerville Steamer arrived at Bombay at 10 p. m. on the evening of the 7th of August with the London Mail, which reached Calcutta about midday yesterday in about nine days and a half. The passengers for Bombay by this vessel, from Suva did not exceed ten individuals; the number of passengers to Bombay by the July Steamer of last year amounted to nearly four. The sum drawn on the Indian Treasury by this mail amounts to about sixteen lakhs of Rupees, against four lakhs and a half drawn in July last year.

— The Explicator states that Baboo Harrowman Sen, the son of Dewan Ram Fomul Sen, has resolved to give a prize every quarter to the best of the students in Mr. Grant's Drawing Class in the Mechanic's Institute. Our contemporary describes it as "an act of that quiet sort of liberality which proceeds from the genuine impulses of a kind heart and clear head, without seeking to make an ostentatious display of munificence." We are anxious to be able to join in this commendation, and are therefore desirous of knowing the amount of the quarterly prize, and the accident by which this very unostentatious act became so public.

— A case of almost unparalleled cruelty it is said, pending before the Magistrate. The complainant is a native of Bengal, who was returning to his native land from England in a Liverpool ship, and who after having been treated in various ways was at length put into an empty sack set sideways with the top open. The sack was placed in the fore-castle with the complainant in it. He states that he was so kept night and day for two months! The case is under investigation before the Chief Magistrate. We have extracted a full notice of it from the Hurbers.

— The Lahore Government has declared itself against the pernicious publicity of the Press, and has, as the Star remarks, forbidden the further composition of the Albion, or native manuscript journals which were allowed to issue from the Court. Whenever a Government begins to gag the press, we may be sure that there is something which it is ashamed should see the light; and the public repay the complacency by always believing the worst. The safety and dignity of a Government will be best secured by allowing the press to take its own course. Either there will be a diversion in the camp, and one journal will correct another, and thus save the honour of the state, or the people will become so outrageous in their attacks that they will cease to attract credit.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 19.

— The Agre Uthar states, of the 10th instant, states that the order which had been issued to the troops in the neighbourhood of Agra to hold themselves in readiness for service, has been countermanded.

— Intelligence has been brought from Moulemin by H. M. S. Suez which left there on the 9th instant. It is reported that two King's messengers had arrived at Rangoon to learn and report on the cause of the misunderstanding between the English Chief at Moulemin and the Burmese Governor of Martaban. Notwithstanding rumours of preparations which may look warlike, there can be no doubt that there will, or rather, there can be no war between the two powers, while their present mutual desire for peace continues. A report was said to be current that Mr. Binnell was to be reinstated; but this is of course out of the question, so far as the wishes and power of the Government in Calcutta is concerned.

— A meeting had been held at Moulemin, on the 8th of August when a Committee was formed to consider the most eligible spot for the formation of a dry dock. The scheme to be divided into 100 shares, of which 100 were taken before the meeting closed. We rejoice to see so much enterprise at Moulemin.

— The settlement of Moulemin having gotten a new master, the Chronicle has got a new man for its editor, and he seems to enter on his duties with some spirit. He says that salt might be exported from Moulemin to Calcutta with advantage.

It appears to all in the province a little above eight annas the munda, and the Editor makes out that after paying for freight, warriage, and every other charge, and the Government duty here, there would remain a profit of some 40 per cent. We imported acres lakhs of mounds from Bombay last year. Why should it not be advantageously imported from a settlement as so much shorter a distance?

— The Provisional Committee of the Free Protestant Church of Scotland in Calcutta have just received an anonymous donation of 2,000 Rs. from an N. S. P. W. member, one-half being intended for the support of the Church properly so called, and the other for the support of its Missions.

— The Agre Uthar states, that all the insurgents drive out of the Bundeelkand and Sanger Districts are believed to have collected themselves together in the Chandore district, which belongs to Seidhs. The present disturbed condition of the frontier state makes it difficult to reach them, and it is probable that they may hereafter issue from thence and create new disturbances in our territories.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 21.

— The Catholic Herald of Saturday last has a glowing article expressive of his gratitude to the Star, for his noble and generous conduct, in defending the Catholics. The Star accepts the compliment, and turns round upon "some Protestant writers," whom he reproaches for their "want of charity." We cannot but applaud the Editor for his anxiety to diffuse a spirit of charity among the Protestants; and we think that a similar effort in reference to the Catholics and their organ, the Herald, would not be altogether superfluous. In this very article, the Protestants are called the rebels and fanatical sects among us; the Star is lauded for having exposed the fanaticism and prejudice of the fanatical sects; their writings are called the base productions and expressions of unprincipled men; and our contemporary is described as having been actuated by his love of truth to expose the follies, the fanaticisms, and motives, of those who are constantly at their dirty work of calumniating our Holy Religion.

— The Delhi Gazette of the 12th contains items of intelligence from various quarters among which are the following: that Shere King was far from satisfied with the conduct of his minister Dhyani Singh; it would be no wonder indeed if he were; and that Shere were in progress to deprive him of his friends at Court by doing away with their services and filling up their appointments with other individuals. We are also told that Cabul is in a very distracted state, and that Dost Mahomed's oppression of all people, more especially of those who had been in any way the friends of the English, while there, were beyond description.

— The Explicator gives a letter which has been received in town, from some place not mentioned, which says that a Syce who had been in Brigadier Anquett's service had come in and stated he was with him in the retreat from Cabul, that he was not wounded, but taken prisoner by the Afghans, and after swallowing a diamond ring, laid himself down and died. In the same paper however we have a narrative of Sergeant Paul of H. M. 44th, one of the few survivors of the retreat, who could not be so re-exposed previously given that the Brigadier fell at the fatal barrier at Aginikhal.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 22.

— The Star of this morning publishes the very complimentary letter which Sir Robert Peel addressed Sir Edward Ryan when inviting him to become a Privy Counsellor, and giving the benefit of his knowledge and experience to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. We learn from the same paper that the Portrait of Sir Edward to be placed in the Grand Jury room for which a subscription was raised, is now in progress by Sir Martin Archer Shee.

Sir Hugh Gough, says the Harkness, leaves Calcutta in the next steamer, for Allahabad, about the 10th or 12th proximo. An entertainment is to be given for him by the officers at Barrackpore before his Excellency's departure. It is also confidently stated in the Contestant that Lord Kitchener intends to return the compliments recently paid him by the Military bodies by giving a grand entertainment at his country seat, as soon as the weather becomes favourable on which occasion the Park is to be splendidly illuminated—but there will be no guns from Dumdum.

Mr. Fiddington has been rewarded for his labours and persevering efforts to ascertain the law of Success by being appointed to the vacant post of Coroner of Calcutta, so long held by a national man, the Secretary of the Marist Bazaar. The Harkness says that Government has taken the opportunity of reducing the pay from 375 to 300, out of which the Coroner is to provide an office. The Harkness says moreover that this is ably very shabby. Our contemporary is doubtless right in his information but we have always understood that the allowance of the Coroner did not exceed 300 Rs.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 23

While the letters received by the last mail from England describe the Ministry and the Directors as entirely undecided about our new acquisition of Soland, which they fancy to be in a very disturbed state, every fresh notice from the country describes it as altogether tranquil, since Shere Mahomed fed beyond the Indus. Sir Charles Napier had completely recovered his health and strength. Though the country presented but one sheet of water, the climate is said not to be found unwholesome; and the petty chiefs are described as coming in daily to make their submissions.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following sums for the Friend of India:—
W. Bell, Esq. ... to Feb. 1844, 50
Baboo Tarachnath Sen, ... to Dec. 1843, 24
The Hon. T. H. Madhock, to June, 1843, 36
G. Fennant, Esq. ... to June, 1844, 50
C. C. Jackson, Esq. ... to June, 1843, 32
Capt. F. Nicholson, ... to Aug. 1844, 20
Rev. E. Whitehead, ... to ... 4
Lieut. Col. J. R. Ouseley, to Aug. 1843, 40
Rev. G. Lacy, ... to Dec. 1844, 20
Capt. Cunningham, ... to April, 1844, 20
J. Walker, Esq. ... to Dec. 1843, 10
Rev. J. D. Prochnow, ... ditto, 6
Mr. W. D. Lewis, ... to June, 1843, 12
E. A. Renda, Esq. ... to June, 1844, 50
W. H. Woodcock, Esq. ... to Dec. 1843, 20
Capt. Morrison, ... to Aug. 1844, 23

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

Head Quarters, Calcutta, 11th August, 1844.

1. Her Majesty having been graciously pleased to nominate General Sir Hugh Gough to be Commander-in-Chief of all Her Majesty's Forces serving in the East Indies, and the Honourable the Court of Directors have appointed him to the Command of the Honourable the Company's Forces in India, from his assumption of the foregoing Appointment, he deems it right to announce, that he will assume the duties of his important Office on the 8th instant, with the concurrence of the Governor General in Council, as promulgated in the foregoing Order.
2. It would not come within the limits of an Order to convey to the Army Sir Hugh Gough's views and his expectations on assuming a Command of such vast responsibility, other than to express his perfect assurance, that, in carrying through the important Trust confided to him, he will have the energetic support of every Officer, from the General of Division to the junior grade in the Army, and the ready and willing obedience of the Soldiers, both European and Native. Sir Hugh Gough's Interests and his Character are identified with these.

3. An honourable record of brilliant Deeds in the Field and well performed Duties in Quarters, has deservedly established for this Army a high character, and ensured for it both admiration and confidence.

4. In following the Example of a long list of distinguished Predecessors in command, the Hon. Gough trusts he will, under the guidance of Divine Providence, be enabled to hand over the Army of India, whenever he may cease to be its Head, with unimpaired honour, and in a state of undiminished discipline.

5. General Sir Hugh Gough much regrets, that he is precluded by the tenure of his immediate Profession, from deriving personally from that gallant Officer, that valuable information, which his long residence in India so well qualifies him to afford.

6. The same honours, which have hitherto been paid by the Military, will be continued to General Sir Hugh Gough.

7. The General Staff of the Army and Office Establishments will join the Commander-in-Chief at Calcutta, by the 18th October next.

8. His Excellency directs that all Reports, Returns and Correspondence relative to Her Majesty's and the Honourable Company's Forces shall be addressed to his Military Secretary and to the Assistant Adjutant General of the Army at the Presidency, respectively, until the arrival of the Deputy Adjutant General of the Army, and the Assistant General of the Queen's Troops, at Head Quarters.

9. The Commander-in-Chief will receive the Heads of Departments, or, during their unavoidable absence, their Deputies or Assistants, on Mondays from 10 to 12 p. m. every day on the week, Council days and Sundays excepted.

10. His Excellency will be happy to receive all Officers and Gentlemen who may wish to see him, on Mondays and Thursdays, from 12 until 2 o'clock.

11. In cases of public emergency, the Commander-in-Chief may be seen on any day or at any hour.

By Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,

J. R. LECHE, Captain,
Assistant Adjutant General of the Army.

REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE OF THE S. P. G. DIOCESAN COMMITTEE ON THE SUBJECT OF CORRUPTIONS (ALLEGED) PLACED TO THE DISCRETION.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Corresponding Committee of the Calcutta Diocesan Committee S. P. G. P. P. and 2nd June 1844, at the Palace, by summons from the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Calcutta.

11. The Right Reverend the President stated, that certain allegations of a breach by the S. P. G. Missionaries of a pledge given by the late Archbishop Curzon in behalf of the Diocesan Committee to the Bengal Auxiliary Missionary Society have appeared in an Editorial in the Bengal Herald of May 10th, and given rise to sundry letters in the same paper, bearing the signatures of the Secretary and others, he had judged it fit to call the present meeting, in order to take the sense of the Committee as to whether the matter should, or should not be left as it is. He then expressed the opinion of the Committee being, that further investigation is advisable, it was proposed by Mr. Malley, Esq. seconded by W. H. Alcock, Esq.

And carried unanimously.—That a Special Committee be appointed to examine into the state of the question as now before the Public, and, if necessary, institute further enquiry into the facts of the case, and report thereupon to the corresponding committee.

It was also agreed unanimously on the proposal of Mr. Malley, Esq. that the Special Committee should be composed of the Venerable the Archbishop, the Rev. the Principal of Bishop's College, and the Rev. H. J. Pratt.

In discharging the duty laid upon us by the above Resolutions, we have thought it sufficient to report attention to the following statement of the charges which appeared in the Bengal Herald of June 15th, in a Postscript to a letter signed Thomas Boscawen, Secretary Bengal Auxiliary Missionary Society.

Mr. Boscawen says, "The statement is this: The D. C. Committee [the Calcutta Committee] of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge [through Archbishop Curzon] did not manifest any pledge to the London society, that, if the Mission premises at Tallymore were given up to the [Discession] the Mission of the London society, apart from large cities, should not be interfered with; and that this should not be violated in the L. M. Society's Mission at Bhamahma (the Calcutta districts immediately proximate to the Tallymore station.)"

The following is a copy of Archbishop Corrie's letter referred to by Mr. Boscawen:—

To Mr. M. HILL.

Calcutta, November 27, 1832.
My DEAR SIR,—I am about to meet you, in the spirit in which it is intended.

"The fact of missionary labour in this country is large enough, for all the missionaries of the various societies at present in the country, without interfering with each other. The differences which subsist between them in the mode of conducting their labours, however well understood among ourselves, are not understood by the natives; and would, I apprehend, were they promiscuously brought before them, serve in many cases as a hindrance to the accomplishment of the object we all aim at. On this account, and on this alone—I am requested to communicate with you on the subject of your relinquishing your station at Tallymore, to the missionary lately appointed to take charge of the Diocesan Committee's schools in that quarter. When you assume an age offered to experienced the committee's schools, and the fact of your resignation, I think, inform, that the reason for declining your offer was, that we were expecting a missionary to arrive, who would take charge of that and of the other schools of the Diocesan Committee's neighbourhood. A missionary has now arrived, and will enter on the superintendence of these schools. If you will kindly consult the Committee with whom you act, and it should be agreed to accede to his wishes, the expense your society has been at in the erection of buildings at Tallymore will be cheerfully reimbursed by the Diocesan Committee; of course time allowed for finding another suitable abode, and I need scarcely add, that the same principle of non-interference with the proceedings of your society in respect of any missionary stations, already formed among the Mission, will be exercised by the Committee on any opportunity they may have of extending their labours away from large cities."

I am, my dear Sir, yours sincerely, (Signed) DAN. CORRIE.

We have carefully considered all that we could discover bearing upon the question, and are decidedly of opinion, that the charge of bad faith now brought against the S. P. G.'s Agents is wholly unfounded. We consider in fact, that no such pledge as the one referred to for ever given, and that, for the following reason:—The charge is at variance with the actual language of Archbishop Curzon's letter. His words are, "the same principle of non-interference with the proceedings of your Society in respect of any missionary Stations formerly formed among the Mission will be exercised by the Committee, on any opportunity they may have of extending their labours away from large cities."

Archbishop Corrie does not speak of Stations that shall be heretofore, but of stations already formed; whereas that charge of the L. M. society's Agents proceeds on the assumption, that his words (which moreover are incidental, rather than essential, to the transaction in question) have a prospective bearing, and are to limit, in perpetuity, and in all parts of India, the operations of the S. P. G. P. P. That Archbishop Corrie's reference to the fact of the existence of stations is not to the contingencies of the future is further manifest, from the language used by him in the opening of his letter, which is, "the fact of the existence of stations to the L. M. society." The fact of missionary labour, in this country," he says, "is large enough for all the missionaries of the various societies at present in the country, without interfering with each other."

11. "The charge is at variance with the real design of the letter, as well as with its avowed design. For the avowed design was to avoid collisions with the L. M. society's Agents, by inducing them to move to a distance. "The interference," it says, "which subsists between them (the various missionaries in India) as to the mode of conducting their labours, however well understood among ourselves, are not understood by the natives; and would, I apprehend, were they promiscuously brought before them, serve in many cases as a hindrance to the accomplishment of the object we all aim at. On this account, and on this alone—I am requested to communicate with you on the subject of your relinquishing your station at Tallymore to the missionary lately appointed to take charge of the Diocesan Committee's schools in that quarter."

It is manifest from this that collision was expected to be the consequence of future position, and that notwithstanding the jury did so act with the view of relieving some injury, or producing some public benefit, he was protesting to the nature of the crime committed, if he knew that he was acting contrary to the law, by which expression they understood to mean that the jury was acting in defiance of the law. What was the proper question to be left to the jury, in respect of a person labouring under an insane delusion, and such delusion was set up as a defence to the indictment? The second question was, in what terms ought the question to be left to the jury, where the unconscious mind appeared in the course of the trial? The judges thought that these two questions ought to be answered together, and their opinion was that the jury ought to be told that every man was presumed to be of sound mind, and in possession of sufficient reason to be responsible for his acts, and the contrary was proved; and that to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be proved that the party was labouring under the defect from such a disease of the mind as not to be in a state to know the nature of the act, or, if he knew the nature of the act, then not to know whether he was right or wrong in the doing of it. The fourth question was, if the person was under an insane delusion only as to the existing case, what consequence ought to follow?—ought he to be thereby excused? The answer to that question must depend on the nature of the delusion. But making the same assumption as before, that the person was labouring under a partial delusion, and was not in other respects insane, he must be considered the same with respect to his responsibility, as if the fact to which he was deluded was a reality. The fifth question was, Can a medical man, conversant with the disease of insanity, who never saw a prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial, and the examination of the witnesses, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or his opinion whether the prisoner was conscious at the time of doing the act that he was acting contrary to law, or whether he was labouring under any and what delusion at the time? The judges were of opinion that the question could not be put to the witness in the precise form stated above; for by doing so they would be assuming that the fact had been proved. That was a question which ought to go to the jury exclusively. When the question was put to the witness, then the question, as one of science, could not be generally put to a witness under the circumstances stated in the interrogatory. [From the discussion on this question Mr. Baggallin said that he did not see the ground of the opposite practice, hitherto sanctioned by the judges.]

"Rebecca and her Daughters" have grown in the sanctity of their crucifixion, and to the people of Wales, until they have drawn tribulation on themselves. On the 14th, a party of farmers of the hundred of Elyet met in the neighbourhood of Talog, and released "a demoniac" from the hands of a creditor, a cattle trust a debtor and credit account for the last eighteen years; and if found fair and correct, and the money received from the sale fairly and honestly laid out on the roads, then the gate at Wase River is not to be disturbed; but if unsatisfactory to them, then the gate is to be immediately demolished. On the nights of the 15th and 16th, all the gates between Carmarthen and the Tivy, and along the banks of the river, were destroyed. On the 17th, a party of police, twenty-two in number, with twenty-eight prisoners, went from Carmarthen to Talog, and levied a distress on a person who had refused to pay toll. They did so; and soon after they were surrounded by a party of 400 men, many of them armed; who dispersed the police, and made their way to the house of Mr. Davies, the magistrate who had signed the distress-warrant, obliged the constables to pull down the wall round the house, and then released them. In the next time, rumours spread abroad that there was to be a great "demonstration" in Carmarthen on the 19th; and a large body of magistrates, with the mayor, assembled in the Town-hall, to be prepared for any emergency. Representations of the excited state of the neighbourhood had been sent to the Home Office; and a troop of the Fourth Light Dragoons had been ordered from Carmarthen to the Tivy. From an early hour the streets were crowded; and about ten o'clock was announced the approach of the rioters by the Newcastle-Emlyn road. Mr. J. L. Davies endeavoured to persuade the rioters to retire to the houses. They read a list of their complaints and the changes they desired; which included not only the removal of all the turnpike-gates in the county, but also the abolition of all the turnpike roads, the abolition of the total alteration of the present Poor-law, abolition of church-rates, and an equitable adjustment of their landowners' rents. These with other alleged grievances, are or were stated to be the basis of their determination to get remedied. An express was sent to meet the Dragoons and hasten their arrival; and in the next time the Royal Artillery and Foot Guards were called out and stationed near the Workhouse; and a number of special constables were stationed at the Hall and at other points. About noon, the rioters began to move into the town, through Water Street gate, headed by Mr. J. L. Davies. The leading body consisted of some thousands on foot, many of whom were Charles and rabble of the town; a large number of women was among the crowd, and many bearing inflammatory placards, such as "The women followed by the rioters to represent Rebecca; some bearing banners with which to sweep the foundations of the toll-houses and the Workhouse, and the rear brought up by about 300 footmen on horseback. They passed the toll-gate, passing the hall, and hoisting the magistrates, and proceeded to the Workhouse, which they attacked. They climbed over the high wall with which the building is surrounded, and then burst open the lodge-gate and porter's door; the horsemen rode into the yard and surrounded the premises and the rioters on foot soon forced an entrance into the building, and commenced their work of destruction. While the rioters were at the act of pulling down the premises, the military arrived. Mr. T. C. Morris read the Riot Act, and summoned them to surrender; but they made an attempt to rush on the military. The dragoons charged, using the flat of their swords, and soon put the rioters outside the wall to flight. These within offered some resistance, but at the moment the flat of the sword was turned upon them; when they vanquished. Many escaped over the wall; but about a hundred were taken prisoners, and several horses were abandoned by their riders. Two men and women were wounded by the swords, but not very seriously. A farmer fell from his horse, and his head was cut by a kick. Several prisoners were immediately examined before the magistrates, and were committed to a disaffected provincial barrister is said to be a leader of the riot; and the brother of a Member of Parliament is supposed to be among the prisoners.

The Rev. George Talbot, M.A., formerly of Balliol College, has resigned the living of Evershoe-cum-Casterdale, Somerset, and joined the church of St. Anne, Rome. This is the fifth member of the University of Oxford who has turned Roman since the conversion of the Rev. R. W. S. history. A handsome building, in the English Roman style of architecture, with a tower, there capable of accommodating 600 persons, has just been completed at the corner of Beaulieu-street, in the City, at a cost of £7,000, for the delivery of the Graham lectures. The Rev. Henry Erskine Head, rector of Fenion, Devon, has been, at the suit of the Bishop of Exeter, sentenced to three years' imprisonment in the office of the ministry, the loss of his living, and the costs of the action, for having published a letter, in which he maintained that the Church of England, the order of Baptism, and the Order of Confirmation, in the case of excommunicated persons, retained erroneous doctrines. Mr. Head is an evangelical clergyman, and the Bishop of Exeter belongs to the Puseyite school. Mr. Head preached his farewell sermon on the 25th, to a crowded and deeply affected audience, choosing for his text the well-known words, "The lively oracles of God." He commenced by remarking, that on the early day he was expected to be seated on the church door as a victim of an ordinary magnitude. He recapitulated the whole of the circumstances connected with the proceedings which had been taken against him, and expressed his undiminished attachment to the great truths, for the advocacy of which he has been made a living martyr. He stated that he was now cast upon the wide world without a farthing in his possession, not knowing where he was to go, or what he was to do; still he rejoiced at the stand which he had been enabled to make against the fearful error to which he had referred, and on behalf of the great truths of evangelical religion. The scene towards the close of the Rev. excommunicated's sermon, when he earnestly, and with the deep solemnity of one who has been in the presence of Divine holiness, he said to have been "a most affecting and earnest witness."

COLONIAL.—The Zealandia, now on her passage from Jamaica to Liverpool, has on board three thousand weight of Sea Island seed cotton, grown and ginned on the estate of the Hon. Mr. J. H. B. and is the product of about a mile and a quarter from the sea-beach, and in a dry sandy soil. The cultivation of cotton, which at this time formed one of the principal staples of the island, has been greatly increased since the introduction of the new seed, and the introduction of the new seed and coffee plants. Hundreds and thousands of acres, along the coast, which used to be profitably employed in its cultivation, have been suffered to lie fallow. Mr. George, who has been in the island since they might again be made both available and profitable. In Jamaica much anxiety will be felt to know what prices the cotton will realize, and how much it will be sufficiently remunerative to induce other growers, along the coasts of the island to employ their land and their small capital in its cultivation.

Mr. C. Bagot, late Governor General of Canada, expired on the 19th May. His remains here were conveyed to the funeral service in the Victoria, on board which ship Lady Mary Bagot and family have also returned to England. The correspondent of the Colonial Gazette remarks, that of all the many Governors of Canada, Sir C. Bagot's is "the only memory that will live in the affections of the colonists." His popularity, exercised in the most judicious and kind and honour, his love of truth and justice; and secondly, to that policy of ruling by and for the many, by which he converted the colony into a majority of ten to one." His success in this matter, as in converting the rebels of French-Canada into loyalists, was not owing to any levity in his character, but to his courage and his sense of half measures, from repugnance to the false pretences, the shuffling, and the lying which it requires; he did thoroughly what he thought right, and intended to do, not because he was a realist, but because it would have been against truth and honour to do less. It was the thoroughgoing character of his acts which crowned them with success; but the seeming boldness was only honesty and consequent earnestness of purpose." The same writer states that Sir C. Metcalfe differs from his predecessor in some important particulars. He says—"Those who ought to know, say that he never reads the newspapers! He says that he, he looks into everything else, works like a horse, and keeps his opinions to himself." I observe that the class of jobbers and tricksters seem to mind of him: they say they can't make him out. As respects parties, he at present leaves everything as he found it—what is perhaps inevitable; and speaks publicly of his predecessor's policy as a system of terms, which may be only a generous departure from his ordinary and very marked course on matters having any relation to party. He says that he finds the difficulties of his position greater than he had been led to expect, though he had been prepared for no easy task. People who had been long on the spot know that his difficulties are not great—that it is an easy task to govern Canada if you only know how; and it is hence inferred that Sir C. Metcalfe resembles all his predecessors during the early years of his government, being considered as a rule as to the best mode of proceeding. Others think (and I own to being one of them) that he is somewhat disposed to resemble some of his predecessors, but not as to the best mode of proceeding. Others think (and I own to being one of them) that he is somewhat disposed to resemble some of his predecessors, but not as to the best mode of proceeding. Others think (and I own to being one of them) that he is somewhat disposed to resemble some of his predecessors, but not as to the best mode of proceeding.

The difference which has hitherto existed between the New Zealand Company and the Zealand Company, respecting the title of the latter to land, having been satisfactorily adjusted, colonising operations are now about to be commenced on a large scale. We have seen a prospectus put forward by Mr. C. Rennie, the late member for Ipswich, Mr. W. Gargill, and Mr. W. P. Crook, which we understand has been very favourably received, and which would be the formation in the colony of a settlement for Scottish emigrants of all the various classes, which constitute society, which shall comprise a provision for religious and educational purposes, in connection with the Presbyterian Church of Scotland; the whole of the Emigration Fund arising from the sale of the Company's lands in the settlements, being employed in promoting the emigration of persons of the labouring class from Scotland only; Englishmen and Irishmen, however, being permitted to join if they approve of the scheme. It is proposed, therefore, to open a new settlement, for the purpose of forming a distinct settlement, the Company shall appropriate £25,550 acres of land; to be divided into 2,500 lots of 10 acres each for the town of the settlement, and 2,000 lots of 10 acres each for rural lands. That there shall be reserved, free of charge, for future municipal purposes, 250 town lots. That one town lot, one suburban lot, and one rural lot, shall constitute a single property; 200 properties in land reserved for the Company; and the remaining 1,900 properties being reserved for the private sale of the Company. That the purchase money received, viz. £12,000, shall be disposed of as follows:—£4,000, to the Company, as the price of the land, at 10s. per acre, £8,000, for services rendered by the Company, £1,000, for roads, bridges, &c. £5,000, as a Church building fund, £10,000, as a provision for ministers, £10,000, as a school fund for the settlement.

The New Zealand Company are to choose the place of settlement, and be trustees for that portion of the purchase money to be appropriated to specific purposes.

FRANCE.—The Minister of Marine and the Colonies has announced that the harbours of the Marquis and Society Islands shall be opened to the vessels of all nations.

The Chamber of Deputies spent three days in discussing a bill to provide for the maintenance of the new French settlements in the Pacific. Ministers demanded 5,500,000 francs. They vindicated the neces-

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 452. Vol. IX.]

SERAPPORE: THURSDAY, AUGUST 31st. 1848.

[Price 3 Cts. Rr. monthly, or 30 Cts. yearly, if paid in advance.]

DEFENCE OF COL. SLEEMAN.—Since the appointment of Col. Sleeman to the management of the Bundelkand and Sagar territories, he has been the object of repeated vituperation in the columns of the Delhi Gazette. These attacks on his public character have been so interrupted, and occasionally so virulent, as to shake the public confidence in their truthfulness. They evidently originate in the personal feelings of some one to whom the Editor has lent a favourable ear; he cannot therefore be too cautious in mistrusting the authority on which they are published. Such a crusade against a public officer, is not usual with our public journals. In almost every instance in which it has been exhibited, the public has been enabled, sooner or later, to trace it up to the malice of some individual, who has laboured to accomplish his own base object, by poisoning the sources of public information, and who, by writing to various journals under different signatures, has hoped that by a kind of ventriloquism, he will be considered as echoing the public voice.

An attempt was made last month to enlist the Bombay Times in this attack on Col. Sleeman's administration. Some individual sent a long paper to that journal, cast in the form of an editorial article, in the hope that the Editor would be soft enough to adopt his prejudices, and give them the weight of his own authority. There is something of supererogatory impudence in such attempts to entrap an Editor, and to make him the instrument of giving effect to the passions of another, upon his own responsibility. We have carefully noted the various instances in which correspondents have attempted to supply us, and our correspondents with articles which were intended for the editorial columns, and we have found that, with few exceptions, their object has been to wound the reputation of some opponent. Those who have any genuine and important information to communicate, are generally content to send it in the shape of a letter to the Editor, with some appropriate signature. A contribution to the editorial columns, always comes in a very questionable shape, and is usually found to be dictated by malignity.

The paper which appeared in the Times, furnishes no more particulars, than with the exercise of a little ingenuity, we should probably find it no difficult matter to establish the identity of the writer; but we will not attempt to draw him from the obscurity which he has chosen. The spirit exhibited in that document is indeed so misanthropic, that we are almost tempted to believe that we have met the slanderer before; but we will dismiss every thought of his personality, and attend only to the subject matter of his communication, which is to show, "that Col. Sleeman has disappointed public expectations, and is altogether unfit for the situation he holds;" that "he is totally unqualified for the duties which it is generally believed"—and as erroneously as generally—"he is totally unqualified for"—"that there can be but two opinions"—"namely that of the writer"—"of his total incapacity for so responsible a situation as he now holds,"—that having an object in view, which every eye must recognize, "he set himself to work to have all the old district officers removed, ruining their reputation and prospects in the pursuit of his own views of advancement." How Col. Sleeman was instrumental in removing the district officers, we have no means of ascertaining. General and uncontradicted reports attribute that measure to a higher source; but if the writer of this communication be one of those officers,—which seems scarcely probable, if they were gentlemen—there was at least one exception to the injustice of that sweeping assertion.

The measures on which the writer endeavours to establish the total incapacity of Col. Sleeman, are fully detailed in his communication. If his premises were correct, his conclusion would be unanswerable. But the Colonel, in a letter which he has addressed to the Bombay Times, and which we give below, has so entirely demolished his facts, as to leave his conclusions without a leg to stand on.—The writer stated that the Jytpore Rajah was the most powerful chief in Bundelkand, and was looked up to as their head. On the contrary, it is a fact that he is one of the least considerable of those independent Chiefs, and that they look down upon him, and upon all the other descendants of Chutural, because he was the rebel servant of their ancestor.—The correspondent of the Bombay Times, who aspires to the chair, states that the notorious leader of banditti, Dhakunjee was murdered for a bribe; whereas it turns out that although a reward was offered for his apprehension, no man was sent in pursuit of him, and that he was murdered by his own nephew, whose father, brother, and wife he had deliberately put to death five years before. That his nephew, Jawahir Sing, tracked him with an unquenchable thirst of revenge, and as he came suddenly on him, would not suffer any of his followers to fire, till he had lodged his own ball in the heart of his uncle, whom he then approached as he lay weltering in his blood, and perceiving some signs of life, gave him the coup de grace with his sabre on the right side.—The writer states that Dhalum Sa, the chief of Mudumore, is a lad of fifteen and that Nizam Sa, his uncle, is the ruler of the state; when the truth is that Dhalum Sa is a man of more than sixty years, and Nizam Sa is his brother.—Lastly, the writer states, that Dhalum Sa and Nizam Sa, the noted marauders whom our troops had long pursued in vain, were secured by the admirable arrangements of Capt. Boland, but that instead of being hung, they were pardoned by Col. Sleeman, and restored to their country, with an entreaty that they would keep the peace. This tissue of misrepresentation is at once destroyed by the assertion that these men surrendered themselves to a Native officer, Rameshwar, a Tuluwaddar, on condition that their lives should be spared, and that their property should not be confiscated. All the documents of the case were submitted to the Governor General, without note or comment from Col. Sleeman, and his Lordship declared that the pledge of no British officer under his Government, whether wisely or unwisely given, should be violated. They were released with much reluctance, but even their enlargement is a less calamity than the violation of a solemn promise made by a public officer, would have been. Should they renew their depredations, our police will, doubtless, be found strong enough to recapture them; but had our national faith been violated, no subsequent efforts could have restored its integrity. Thus falls to the ground this malignant attack on the new administration of Bundelkand.

Col. Sleeman has acted wisely in thus making the press, which has been the instrument of abusing him, the channel of his vindication. He had the option of a prosecution for damages against the Editor of the Bombay Times for the injury his public character had sustained, or of a plain and mainly justification of his conduct by a counter statement. He has chosen the latter alternative, and his triumph is complete.

We are fully aware that a public officer, responsible as he is to his own Government for his public measures, may well rest satisfied with its approbation. His referring to notice newspaper attacks, and his determination to stand on the ground of his established character, cannot be considered as a confession of guilt. But every gentleman who holds a prominent position in the administration of this country has the public eye in England, more or less, upon his conduct, especially since the establishment of steam communication has brought Indian affairs more prominently into notice. He cannot be indifferent to the unfavourable impression which such dangerous assertions may produce, if they remain uncontradicted. While the census of his proceedings spreads through the land of his birth, wherever his name happens to be mentioned, and his character receives its stamp from these charges of incapacity, it is poor consolation to him to reflect that the archives of Government, which the present generation are never likely to see, contain the amplest vindication of his conduct. He has relatives and friends at home, whose feelings cannot be so deeply wounded by those malignant representations, and it is in some measure a sacred duty he owes to their affection, to put them in possession of counter statements, that in this instance the attempt to remove an unfavourable impression by means of the Press, will be found to have been completely successful.

Of the general merits of Col. Sleeman's administration in Bundelkand, it is too early to speak. His established character as a public officer affords every promise of success; and the present tranquillity of the province, during the season when it was predicted that the distracted would have full swing for their designs, because our troops could not keep the field, is a favourable omen of future peace. Col. Sleeman may possibly err on the side of mildness and conciliation; on the other hand, a bloody campaign against our own dependents, is a measure which cannot be too highly deprecated. Considering the force already established in that country, and the troops which can so easily be poured into it, it is quite possible that the mildness he has adopted may not be considered by the disaffected as an index of fear, and may not lead to subsequent disturbances.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I received from Mr. Abbott, whose letter you have published in your paper of the 23d of last month, has made some mistake which you will perhaps permit me to correct.

1. He states, that the British was the most powerful Chief in Bundelkhand—that he is looked up to by the British as their head, being the blood descendant of Chattruhal; and that no chief considers himself as his own Raja without receiving the Khut from him.

2. That the notorious leader of Banditti who infested the Ghauts state for some years, was awarded for a bribe!

3. That the chief of Mundpore, Dhalan Sa, is a boy of fifteen years of age, and his Uncle, Nizam Sa, the ruler of the estate de facto.

4. That the leaders Dhalan Sa of Mundpore, and Narwar Sing of Delwar, were secured by the admirable arrangements of Captain Boland, and ought to have been hung, or transported, or at least imprisoned for life; and would have been so had Mr. Fraser remained in office.

5. That I shall excite the indignation of the British nation for not hanging them, and for having sent them back not even as pardoned criminals; but with an avowal that they will exert their influence to preserve peace throughout the country.

These are your correspondent's facts—with his arguments I have nothing to do.

1. The Jyepoor Rajah, the smallest of the Bundelkhand chiefs who are descended from Chattruhal, as you will find by a reference to Mr. Runkton, and was peremptory a creature of the British Government, his estate having received in free gift from us, in the year 1808, one-half of his estate, and been suffered to retain the other when he had by his actions lost all claim to it. Their estates are all east of the Damua. But the large Bundela chiefs, who are all west of the Damua, Orcha, Duma, and Chanderi, look down upon all the hanging Rajas, as they are termed, the descendants of Chattruhal, because he was a rebel servant of their ancestor, and got possession of his estate by treachery. Of the other large chiefs west of the Damua, the Jhansas, who are a Brahmin, and the sumpter a Gajur; and they have no fellow feelings with Bundelas of any kind. No chief ever received a Khut from the Jyepoor man, who has his personal character, and associated with by only one of the Chattruhal descendants, and by none of the others. A more atrocious rebel and murderer could hardly be named.

2. A reward of two thousand rupees was offered by me through Captain Ross, the Agent at Jhansas, for the apprehension of Dhalan Sing, who had murdered and plundered. I believe I may say, some hundreds of innocent and unoffending men, women, and children, among the peasantry of the Jhans territory. I never sent any man in pursuit of him; nor had I ever any communication whatever with any man who went after him.

He was shot while sitting by a fire at the head of his horrible gang, just after he had murdered and maimed twelve innocent villagers, not by a person bribed, but by Jowahir Sing, the only surviving son of his older brother, Dugal Sing, whom he, Dhalan Sing, had in 1838 deliberately and treacherously murdered in order to get the exclusive possession of the family estate. He murdered, at the same time, the brother of Jowahir Sing and his wife, and inflicted eighteen sword cuts on his mother who survived!

Dhalan Sing was about six feet four, and the handsomest man in Bundelkhand. He was considered the bravest warrior in the country. Jowahir Sing, I believe, about six feet high, but I have never seen him. He is said to be almost as fine a looking man as his uncle was; and his uncle was often heard to declare, that he was the only man on earth that he feared; and that he felt that if he was to die by any man's hand it was by his. He did all he could to murder Jowahir Sing, as he had murdered his father, brother, and sister-in-law; and in his attempts murdered many other people. Jowahir Sing knew that such could not long live in the same province, and was too proud and brave a man to quit his inheritance to make room for him.

He tracked his uncle with an unquenchable desire to avenge his father's and his brother's blood, and when he saw him he felt that he was at war with his gang, he had with him fourteen true men of his own clan. He was considered the best shot in these parts; and he would not suffer any man to fire at him, but he passed through the heart of his uncle. They then fired at his followers as they made off, and killed one and wounded four. Jowahir Sing called up to the body, and finding some signs of life still in him, he goes on to the right side with his sabre.

The horses of the gang, five in number, were plashed near the fire. Of these they took possession; and mounted on that of his uncle Jowahir Sing accompanied the body to Jhansas, where it lay in state the whole day, by Capt. Ross's orders, for the inspection of the people of the city to whom his name had been so long a terror. Jowahir Sing thought that in putting him to death, he had done his duty to his father, brother, and sister-in-law, and he was not ashamed to show his wounds; he was satisfied, and he should blame him, or call him a brave warrior? I was at Jhansas at the time, but I neither saw the body of the uncle nor the person of the nephew.

3d. Dhalan Sa is not, as reported, a lad of fifteen, but a man of more than sixty years of age; and Nizam Sa is not his uncle, but his younger brother.

4th. & 5th.—In reply to these statements, I must beg you to do me the favour to publish the enclosed translations of documents which were submitted by me to the Right Honourable the Governor-General of India, with the letters which accompanied them, and without any comment of my own. His Lordship, feeling like an English politician, directed the release of the prisoners, and their restoration to their estates, determined that the pledge of no British officer under his Government to reward any man who would do what he never before violated. I transmitted his Lordship's orders to the officer in charge of the theatricals, Captain Elliott, and never held any communication whatever with the persons who were to be released. Alas! did I regret the necessity of releasing such men, but, as an Englishman, I felt that his Lordship's orders were the only ones that could be honourable to be given. What Mr. Fraser might have done, I know not; but I know him to be a man of the highest honour, and believe that he would have recommended the measure that has been adopted.

It would be charity to believe that your correspondents know nothing whatever of Bundelkhand; for if they do they must know that there is not a word of truth in what they state regarding it. Of course they will tell you, that the above points are all mis statements in which it is usual to state what is not true; but they should remember, that facts are the only foundations for arguments; and that Gentlemen's characters are judged of more from their statements than from their reasoning powers. Yr. Servant, W. H. SERRATT.

JHANSAS, 2d August, 1843.

—Bombay Times, Aug. 12.

LEUT. EYRE'S COURT MARTIAL.—The documents connected with Lieut. Eyre's Court Martial, which was held at Ferozepore in January last, have just been reprinted in the journals of Calcutta from the United Service Journal of London; but they throw no additional light on the dark tragedy of the retreat. Lieut. Eyre was tried on the charge of having abandoned the British force on the 9th of January, and sought personal protection in the Camp of Sirder Mahomed Akbar, the leader of the camp. He was honourably acquitted on the plea that the Sirder was not regarded—officially we suppose—as an enemy, but rather as our ally; that our troops were forbidden to fire on him both before and after the 9th of January, and that in going over to him, he acted in strict conformity with the orders of the General. Capt. Johnson, who was called to give evidence at the trial, put the matter in the clearest light by saying, that Mahomed Akbar “was the chief of the enemy who followed us from Cabul; or rather I cannot call him an enemy, as he was looked on as a friend at the time by the late General Elphinstone.”

He was officially our ally; in reality, our bitterest foe. To move appearances, some of his horsemen, as Lieut. Mev deposed, accompanied our troops through the defile on the 8th, and called out to some Ghilzies who were keeping up a heavy fire on our troops, and on their calling out, the firing ceased. It appears then that the enemy, who at that day put three thousand of our troops to death, in the Khooor Cabul, were not beyond the influence of the Sirder. Our unqualified army had full opportunities of appreciating the generous sympathy and friendship of this good Samarian, in their melancholy retreat, on the 7th January, when the troops might have pushed on through the Khooor Cabul, with comparative safety. They halted on his earnest entreaty, if not at his express command. The next day (the 8th) the heights were crowned by the enemy, and the slaughter of our troops was terrific. It was at the particular desire of the good Akbar, again, that the army halted at the Khooor Cabul on the 8th, on the promise of obtaining supplies, which promise, like every other, except that of exterminating the army, he never honoured. On that fatal day, while the half starved troops were exposed to the utmost severity of a Cabul winter in the bleakest part of the mountain range, the enemy were assembling for the next day's slaughter, which nearly annihilated the army. Two thirds of the troops who perished in that retreat, fell in marching up the defile of Khooor Cabul, and in descending from it. In both instances, had they pushed on at the time when they halted, a large remnant might have been saved; in both instances, they halted in consequence of the friendly advice of the Sirder Mahomed Akbar. It was owing to the fatal mistake of regarding him as a friend, and placing a reliance on his promises, that the army of Cabul perished in the mountains. Had the General not been so infatuated as to regard him in the light of our ally; had he pushed on at once after the 6th, without paying the slightest attention to the treacherous advice of the Afghan chief, there is every probability that one half that army might have reached Jelalabad.

FOURTEEN.—We have carefully examined the papers of June, which have dropped in at successive intervals, and find that they fully bear out the assertion that Pusyam is losing ground—that is, in the political world and among the Leity. The Treacher movement originated in a great measure in a desire to counteract the liberal views of the Whig Ministry, in ecclesiastical matters, and the growth of that Dissenting influence which it was supposed such a Ministry would not fail to foster. The liberal tendencies of the age were to be checked by disseminating and enforcing certain Church principles, which it was thought would strengthen the spirit of conservatism. Hence the movement found favour with the great political organs of the Tory party, the Times and the Quarterly; and it was encouraged, not so much for the spiritual elements of which it was compounded, as for the support which it was likely to minister to the politics of the party. In a political point of view, Pusyam is identified with Toryism. It is true that the British Critic, the mouth piece of the Oxford School, has thought fit to keep its vituperations on Sir Robert Peel; but this is only the ebullition of that disappointment which the Pusyam experienced, when they found that the Ministry whom they had assisted in their struggles for power, forgot them after their success. When the Whigs, as a party, had been all but annihilated, and the Conservatives had obtained an overwhelming majority in the House of Commons, the aid of Pusyam was no longer necessary. The increasing bigotry of the party was also found to be inconvenient to a Ministry, which, having discovered that during its ten years' absence from office, liberal principles had taken deep root in the country, had adopted the wise conclusion that it was no longer either safe or practicable to conduct the administration of the country without a large admixture of those principles. The Quarterly has therefore thrown Po-making overboard, and the Times is evidently making preparations for doing it the same kind of office. Tractarianism having lost all its political importance, has been repudiated by the Ministry; for though Mr. William Gladstone, who appears to have taken his stand on the verge of absolute Puseyism, has obtained a seat in the Cabinet, yet Sir Robert Peel's repeated cheers when Mr. Hampden denounced it in the House, more than counterbalances this advantage. The hope of seeing Dr. Pusey enthroned at Lambeth, and of reviving the Convocation, is, therefore, more remote than ever.

From the origin of the Tractarian movement, it has been steadily opposed by the Laity, and for reasons which it is not difficult to understand. Puseyism aims at reviving that spiritual despotism of the Priesthood, and that abject submission of the Laity to the Church, which Protestantism has broken up. Is it therefore any matter of surprise that the Laity should have resisted its encroachments, and placed themselves in opposition to a system, which nourishes ecclesiastical arrogance, and embitters all the relations of society by the malignity of its bigotry? Laymen, however warmly attached to the Establishment, recoil from that supererogatory intolerance which only wants the power, to establish an Inquisition in England, and to establish the face of society with universal gloom. Nor are they less disgusted with the ritual innovations of the sect, with its surplus preachings, its candlesticks, its waltzings, its crucifixes on the altar, its "postures and impostures, its feignings and grandeurings;" its new "ecclesiastical millinery;" and its spang the ceremonies of the Romish Church. In the House of Commons, Lord John Russell, who has written a book to show the propriety of restoring the Romish holidays, and Mr. Milnes, we believe the only two representatives of the Tractarian party. The Laity generally are sound and firm in their attachment to Protestantism; and their increasing opposition to these innovations serves to justify, in one sense, the assertion that Puseyism is losing ground.

But there can be no doubt that it is making fearful progress among the clergy. We hear of no clerical dissenters from its ranks; on the contrary, the increase of its adherents throughout the country is matter of painful notoriety. Almost every paper gives fresh evidence of the spread of this pestilence among the clerical members of the Church. The instances which are continually turning up of the adoption of these sentiments and practices by one Clergyman after another, in various parts of the country, would almost lead to the supposition that the majority of the body was tainted with them. The University of Cambridge appears to have adopted them almost to the same extent as the University of Oxford. The Camden Society of Cambridge is the hot bed of Puseyism. At its last anniversary Meeting, a strenuous effort was made by some members of the University to obtain a disapproval of some of the most objectionable passages which have appeared in the Society's publications. Their evil tendency was faithfully exhibited, but every fresh allusion to them, was received with rapturous applause. In the course of the proceedings, the President spoke of Dr. Pusey in the most flattering terms; and the room rang with acclamations. From the statements given in the papers, it would appear as though Cambridge has gone almost as far as Oxford in the adoption of Puseyism.

The suspension of the Head of the party from preaching in the University of Oxford so far, from damping the ardour of his partisans, appears rather to have inspired them with fresh zeal. He has now the credit of being a persecuted man; he is enriched with the glory of martyr; and the cause of Puseyism is considered to have acquired a fresh claim on the mind, from the very opposition which it has experienced. Thus is the Church of England torn with internal discord, at a time when the elements of change, of religious change, are powerfully at work in the two other divisions of the empire. Had Puseyism been vigorously discomfited at the very outset by the Hierarchy, as an anti-Protestant movement, it might probably have died a natural death in its cradle. But the Puseyites flattered the Bishops with the offer of a profound submission to episcopal authority, and thus lulled too many of them into fatal security. That submission is now reserved only for the Bishops who look favourably on the Sect. It has struck its roots deep, and extended its branches widely, and more than half the clergy are said to be reposing under its shade. We question whether it be any longer in the power of the Episcopal bench, by any effort they can make, to arrest its progress. It appears to gain additional strength from opposition; and even the contempt of society is deemed a badge of honour. It must, we apprehend, run its mischievous course through the establishment, till it perishes in the convulsion which it creates.

This article has extended to such length that we can afford only two quotations, both of which however will serve to show the spirit of the Tractarian movement, and its inevitable tendency, if not design, to root out Protestantism. At the last anniversary meeting of the Catholic Institute, the President thus alluded to recent transactions at Oxford:

"Look at the controversy now going on in the established church, especially at Oxford. There was one Regius Professor (Dr. Pusey) just condemned and suspended for having advocated the doctrine of the real presence in the Eucharist; whilst another Regius Professor of the same university (Dr. Hampden) had been subjected to a sentence for denouncing his maintenance of an entirely opposite doctrine. Now, if the action were to terminate against Dr. Hampden, he thought that the University of Oxford would be in a worse state than the University of Cambridge. He had heard at one of the meetings of that Institute a hope expressed that they (the Roman Catholics) might live to see the day when high mass would be celebrated in Westminster Abbey. He knew not how probable such an event might be, but this they knew, that the doctrine of the real presence is the cornerstone of the University of Oxford (loud cheering); and it had been authoritatively declared, that if Dr. Pusey's sermon had not been condemned, it would have been a direct and direct (transcendent cheering and applause). There was indeed a very slender barrier between Puseyism and the Church of Rome; and, oh! what a field was now presented for the Roman Catholics to demolish that slender barrier at once, and to restore this great country to that Catholicism which is so exceedingly desirable. (Vocal cheering.)"

Some letters from Oxford appeared about two years ago in the L'Univers, the organ of French Catholicism, which were evidently written by one who was no friend to Protestantism. They have now been traced up to Mr. Delpech, the disciple and friend of Mr. Newman, with whom he frequently resides at Littlemore. The following extract from them will serve to show the character of Tractarianism more than a hundred sermons and tracts, written under a feeling of nervous, and with a conviction that it is lawful to punish death for the benefit of a spiritual patient.

"Mr. Newman, one of our theologians, published at a few days since, the nineteenth number of the Tracts for the Times, in which he designs to demonstrate that the Church of Rome has fallen into no formal errors since the Council of Trent, and that the innovations of the saints (the Ordo proinde for example), purgatory, and the supremacy of the Holy See of Rome, are in no way contrary to the Catholic tradition, and even the most established formularies; in fine, that the dogma of transubstantiation should be no obstacle to the union of the Churches, as in this Article there is only a verbal difference between them. As the Council of Trent is but little satisfied with our Thirty-nine Articles, although he maintains throughout that the provisions of God himself render the Reformers from openly teaching in them the Protestant dogmas to which they were but too much attached. You will perceive, Sir, all the importance of these opinions, and the more so, as they are not the opinions of an isolated theologian. I can assure you, that at the same time that an opposition was raised by the older members of the University, (as might be expected, seeing that they lived under the system of the eighteenth century), that very opposition gave me an opportunity of observing that even the most moderate of the Catholic party at Oxford were ready to sustain the author of the tract."

Again this gentleman writes:—"In the second place, we have a sacred duty to discharge towards the Catholics, and of our Church. We cannot yet bring ourselves to believe that our dear England is in the same position as the heretics who learn in the same manner, Luther and Calvin. Of a truth, Sir, as the Episcopate and the clergy will worth something! A sacrilegious king may, indeed, have stolen from the altars of Canterbury the sacred bones of St. Thomas, but think you he had the power to drive away the great soul, who, from his throne in the skies, ever watches over the Son which he has illustrated by his life, and consecrated his blood! God forbid that the angels like of Landgrave and of Andalus should ever cease. If we have not preserved it, it is no more; for of a truth you will not say that its mission has been kept by us. There is no Archbishop in portions of Canterbury or of York, as there is in Canterbury or of St. Denis. But perhaps you may say that the names of Archbishop and of Bishop, which have been used with Rome, he also ceases to exist. But permit me here to become a little scholastic, and to borrow the terms with which the school supply me, in order to give more precision to my ideas."

"There are at this moment in the Anglican Church a crowd of persons who balance between Protestantism and Catholicism, and who, nevertheless, would reject with horror the very idea of union with Rome. The Protestant position, which, for three hundred years, has been the basis of our Church, is unhappily too deeply rooted there to be extirpated without a great deal of violence. We must, then, offer in sacrifice to God this ardent desire which concerns us of seeing once more the perfect unity of the Church of Christ. We must still bear the terrible void which the isolation of our Church creates in our hearts, and remain still ill it please God to convert the hearts of our Anglican converts, especially of our holy fathers, the bishops. We are destined, I am persuaded, to bring back many wandering sheep to the knowledge of the truth. In fact, the progress of Catholic opinions in England, for the last seven years, is so inconvertible, that no hope should appear of extinguishing it. For the last seven years, till, by God's blessing, the men of England have become accustomed to hear the name of Rome pronounced with reverence. At the end of this term you will see the fruits of our mission."

BYRAN VIA BOONBY.—In the Monthly Times of the 6th of July, there is a brief notice of a negotiation between the Peninsular Company and the Court of Directors, which seems to confirm the suspicions of our correspondent S. It runs thus:

CONCURRENCE WITH INDIA.—The returns moved for in Parliament under this head have been produced, and we gather the following results therefrom:—Over a period of four years the communication between Suez and Bombay has cost the East India Company £280, 177, or at the rate per annum of . . . 70,000
Annual grant from the Crown . . . 80,000
£202,954 capital embarked—war and tea:— calculated 16 per cent. . . 32,473
Insurance, 6 per cent. . . 18,000
Egyptian expenses . . . 10,000
Interest on capital, at 4 per cent. . . 15,000
Annual cost . . . £203,000

The Peninsular and Oriental Company have offered to contribute for a bi-monthly communication between Bombay and Bencoolen for an annual sum of £150,000. It may be said the East India Company do not insure. Admitted; but then a larger per centage should be allocated for war and loss.

Upon this we have to remark, that the insertion of the annual grant from the Crown, of £50,000, as a part of the expenses of Steam navigation to Bombay, appears altogether unaccountable. In what can it have been expended? It does not refer to the communication between England and Alexandria, for the memorandum expressly mentions the communication between Bombay and Bencoolen, and no other. The first item of £70,000, gives all the expense incurred in this pay and allowances of officers and crews, fuel, stores, provisions, &c. deducting the amount of passage money received. The third item of £45,000 covers the wear and tear of the vessels, calculated at 12 per cent. per annum. The entry can be assigned to no imaginable utility, and must have been introduced either by inadvertence, or with the view of swelling the apparent charge, and assisting the negotiation then pending. The actual cost to the East India Company must therefore be taken at 155,000*£*—of which Parliament pays one third—and the Peninsular Company appears to have made an offer of contracting for a bi-monthly communication between Bombay and Bencoolen, at 150,000*£* a year.

Although the negotiation refers only to the line of navigation between Bombay and Bencoolen, there can be little doubt that it is intended to embrace the other Presidencies, likewise, and that it will eventually result in an arrangement by which the Peninsular Company's steamers shall start from Calcutta, not, during eight months of the year, sail at Bombay on their way to Bencoolen. It is to this project that our correspondent, the, has endeavored to rouse public attention, with the hope of preventing its consummation, by the united expression of public opinion at this Presidency, and at Madras and Ceylon. And thus as we desire to see the steamer which the Peninsular Company have devoted to the communication between Calcutta and Bencoolen, employed exclusively in that line, we can surely desire ourselves that the feeble voice of the community will be sufficient to defeat a project in which the interests of the Steam Company and of the Government of India, are so closely involved. It must be for the interest of that Company to secure a large bonus from Government, as well as all the passengers to and from Bombay; and they will easily persuade themselves that the inconvenience to the Calcutta, Madras and Ceylon passengers of being detained four or five days longer on board, will be but trifling, and scarcely worthy to be compared with the advantage of obtaining a sight of Bombay on their way to Bencoolen. Although Government will gain little actual relief from expense, yet it will doubtless be considered no small advantage to be exempted from the necessity of building new steamers for this line, when those now employed become unserviceable; to have the present vessels disengaged for the service of the state, and to enjoy an opportunity of sending and receiving despatches every fortnight. Those despatches will of course be sent, as at present, by express, and will constitute no new charge on the public exchequer. The public will however be subjected to the same charge for postage across the country which is now incurred, and which is so severely felt; but this inconvenience will be little heeded by those who do not suffer from it. It is quite possible that Government may calculate that the bulk of letters and newspapers will be brought from Bombay by way of Bombay by the steamer, quite as quickly as they now come across the country, and of course at a more reasonable charge; and that through the derivation of the steamer to that part will derive Calcutta of the benefit of receiving communications direct from Bombay as speedily by steam as they are now obtained by express, yet on the whole, the community will be in a better position than it has been in for the last four years. Thus, by magnifying the advantage to the state, and extenuating the inconvenience to the public, Government may persuade itself of the propriety of this new arrangement. On this view of the interests of the two more powerful parties to this negotiation, we are inclined to think that it will be completed at no distant time, and that the inconvenience it will inflict on the third, or weaker party, will create little concern or sympathy. But it is quite possible that some fresh improvement in steam navigation may turn up before the plan is matured, and produce another revolution, and demolish all our present calculations.

THE EXPORTS OF JAVA AND MANILA.—We have been favored by a friend with an official statement of the exports from the Island of Java from 1835 to 1841. Although the trade between that island and Calcutta makes no figure in our annual return of exports and imports, the subject will not be altogether unimportant to those engaged in mercantile pursuits. It may even afford some interesting reflections to the general reader, who remembers how fondly the English nation cherished the idea of recasting this fertile island among its colonial possessions, and how bitter was the disappointment which Lord Castlereagh's surrender of it, at the Congress of Vienna, occasioned. They will now have an opportunity of estimating the value of this possession, which was restored to the Dutch, under the impression that the Prince of Orange would espouse the Princess Charlotte, and in the hope of cementing the alliance between the two countries.

We pass over minor articles of export, to examine the progressive increase of the great staple productions of the island, which supply its export trade. And first, with regard to the article in which it has been supposed to threaten the interests of the Bengal Presidency with a formidable competition; we allude to Indigo. In the cultivation and export of this article, there has been a gradual and steady progression during the last seven years, as the following statement will show.

Mds.		Mds.
1835	76	1836	8610
1836	126	1837	7029
1837	100	1838	5365
1838	310	1839	10,522
1839	600	1840	9778
1840	480	1841	15,689
1841	568	1842	87,246
1842	2213	1843	24,044
1843	3981

The value of the Indigo exported in the last year is put down in rounded figures at sixty lakhs of Rupees, or at 600,000*£* of about 250 Rupees Java Rupees. It is however to be observed that the average price taken which it attains in the market, Bengal has little to boast of in any increase of produce in Java; for the augmentation of the supply, will necessarily lower the price; and eventually give the command of the market to those who can raise the article at the least cost; and our price cost in India.—Agents' charges of course excluded—is within a Hundred Rupees a mound.

The increase in the exportation of Coffee has been almost equally remarkable. The export is

1835	was, pks. 277,632	1836	460,018
1836	340,059	1837	460,371
1837	390,558	1838	468,078
1838	416,172	1839	684,947
1839	381,682	1840	569,810
1840	526,742	1841	757,470
1841	399,096	1842	11,23,373
1842	314,174	1843	961,407
1843	360,166

The value of the exports in this last year are estimated at 288 lakhs of Rupees, or about two millions and a half sterling. Hogendorf, a warm reformer, and a bitter opponent of the Government of his day, writing in 1806, said that under a more liberal system of administration, he had no doubt Java could raise without difficulty fifty millions of pounds of Coffee a year. In the year 1841, in addition to the coffee consumed on the island, she exported One Hundred and thirty millions of pounds.

The exportation of Rice is not noted in any year before 1837; in that and the subsequent five years, the export is put down at about 30 lakhs of Rupees annually.

The value of the exports of Mace, Nutmegs and Cloves, in the year 1835, is stated at 11,23,000 Java Rupees; in the year 1841 at 21,23,000.

The gradual and uninterrupted increase in the export of Sugar shows the growing capabilities of this fertile island. The exportation is

1835	was pks. 16,357	1836	372,865
1836	19,793	1837	439,624
1837	33,290	1838	538,514
1838	23,870	1839	676,065
1839	73,780	1840	784,980
1840	108,640	1841	845,017
1841	190,898	1842	10,13,373
1842	245,872	1843	10,31,094
1843	210,948

In seven years it has risen from about 30,000 mounds to 18,45,000, that is, more than six thousand per cent. And the value of the sugar thus exported is estimated at One Hundred and twenty-three lakhs of Rupees.

In the article of Bamboo Tea, we also find an increase of more than 500 per cent. in the exports; though the price appears of late years to have fallen considerably. In 1835 the quantity exported was, 9118 pekils, valued at 519,500 Java Rupees; in 1841, the exports were 48,300 pekils, and the value was estimated at a little less than 20 lakhs of Rupees.

The exportation of that whimsical luxury of the flowerly nation, Dive's nests, presents almost as great a fluctuation in quantity as in price. Thus in the year 1838, the export was 394 pekils, valued at about 670,000 Java Rupees. In 1842, the export did not exceed 264 pekils, but the official value is reckoned at more than 7½ lakhs of Rupees, or Two thousand Rupees the mound.

But in an article of real necessity, Ten, we find the export so small as entirely to baffles all our expectations. We were given to understand that the cultivation of this plant had been so violation of the principles of the Chapel. In the perfect confidence that the future donations of the benevolent will be distributed with the same caution and discrimination by the Missionaries, as the fund already entrusted to them, we trust Mr. Britzke's appeal will not fail to produce a happy result.

WEEKLY EPIPHONE OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 24.

— The Madras Advertiser states, that Mr. Steadholder will not return to this country, and that during the brief period of his stay at Madras, he engaged himself as the monthly correspondent of that paper. That paper goes on to say, "A more suitable person could not be found, nor one better qualified to meet the varied tastes of the readers of Indian newspapers."

— Col. Butterworth, who has been appointed to supersede Mr. Blandell in the Straits' Government, embarked at Madras on the 11th instant, on the Charles Forbes, under a salute of eleven guns. The Singapore papers last received, allude to the recent suspension of Mr. Blandell, in terms of just indignation. It is evident that when he proceeded on public duty from Penang to Singapore, he had not the least idea of the blow that was likely to fall upon him. The report that has been somewhat widely disseminated, therefore, that he has voluntarily resigned the Straits' Government, is totally without foundation.

— Victims are sometimes as contagious as vice. The worthy Sheriff of Chester, Mr. Adam Pears Smith, having resolved to become the founder of a library in the Jail, usually denominated No. 1, Chaverington, the Sheriff of Madras, Capt. Biden, has determined not to be behind his brother of Calcutta, and has resolved, likewise, to found a library in the jail of Fort St. George.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 25.

— The Star of this morning has an Editorial article on the subject of Railways in India, occasioned by a proposal which has been published in the Monthly Times. That we will read in India of any length and cost, cannot be completed by a joint Stock Company, is self-evident. There are no funds here adequate for the purpose, and capitalists at home have no confidence in British management. It must be done by the Government, the great Landlord of India; and there can be little doubt, that such a road, connecting the Western provinces with the part of the Ganges;—there is but one point, and will probably not be another in this country—would be of the highest service, and afford a good return. But we notice this article more particularly on account of the following sentence: "As it is, we have but one made road in Bengal, and that wants bridges."—We think our contemporary will find on examination, that very large sums are now in course of expenditure on the bridges of this road.

— The Weekly Times of the 16th August contains from Hyderabad, of the 27th July, which states that Sher Mahomed was collecting a force among the Marwats and Beguins. It was rumored that the Afghans from Duder,—that is we suppose the marauders of the Bolan,—were to join him, and that his negotiations had been extended to Multan. This journal also remarks that rumors were rife in England that the conquest was not to be retained; but it is to be hoped that we shall be spared the exhibition of so gross an act of jealousy.

— The Dell's Gazette gives an excellent item of news from Cabul, through the news writers of the Lahore Durbar stationed there, which is not without interest. From this source, we now learn that Dost Mahomed had offered a reward of 2000 Rupees, besides a Jaygee, to any one who would bring in Amersham; and that nearly all the buildings destroyed by the English had been rebuilt.

— The Singapore Spectator states, that Mr. Lyall, the Advocate General, has been appointed Law Officer at the College of Fort William; and that the students of the Hindoo College will be allowed to attend his lectures. This is the first instance in which an Advocate General has had leisure for any exertions out of Court, and Government has shown liberality in trusting it to the best account. The Lectures here spoken of will, we suppose, refer to the Laws of England, and not to the legal institutions of British India. After this was written we met with the correspondence which led to this appointment, and have copied it from the Star.

— There has been an unusual degree of sickness in the city of Delhi, for some time past, which seems to have affected all classes. The Dell's Gazette says, on the 16th, that it is on the increase. The King has been advised by his spiritual master to order a fast for ten days, and the fast to be subsequently exposed with vessels full of wine, sherbet and milk, on each of the ten days at the three gates of the palace, with a view to stay the progress of the disease. The Editor tells us, that the same superstitious ceremony was observed at each of the gates of the city, by permission of the Magistrate. Impossible!

SATURDAY, AUGUST 26.

— His Excellency the Command-in-Chief has appointed Major Harrold, of H. M. 10th Light Infantry, Persian Interpreter. He held the same appointment in Afghanistan under Sir Willoughby Cotton and General Elphinstone; and subsequently bore an active share in the labours of the illustrious Garrison of Jellalabad. The appointment is spoken well of in the Star and Harbinger, and will we believe meet with general approbation.

— A correspondent of the Star, in the number of this morning, informs us that Government has deputed Col. Lloyd to investigate the causes which have led to the frequent insurrections, which have of late broken out in Assam. The writer who is evidently no friend of the public Authority in the country, traces the dissipation to the repeated appropriations of fresh territory which have been made of late years. We were rather surprised to find him censure the occupation of Ferozabad Sing's territory. The resignation of this fine country to a man so totally unfit to manage it, was a mistake; and the re-annexation of it was considered by all men at the time as just, politic and benevolent. We must however have the other side of the question, before a fair and safe opinion can be formed on the subject.

— We have papers from Singapore to the 2d of August, on which date the steamer with the treaty, ratified by the vermilion pencil, had not arrived from China. We regret to learn that H. M. S. Sumner, which had been landably employed in destroying various nests of Pirates in Borneo, had struck on a shoal in the river, at high water mark, and as the tide receded, fell over on her side and filled. The only other item of news from the settlement is the increasing ravages of the tigers. It appears that Government formerly gave a reward of a Hundred dollars as head money for every tiger brought in. This sum was afterwards reduced to 50; and the inducement to destroy them ceased. The tigers began accordingly to increase and multiply, and they have now extended their ravages to a degree, as to affect the value of property, in the interior. A patch of land which fetched 300 dollars some time back, cannot obtain a purchaser at 25 dollars, owing to the dread of these animals. Our Government in Bengal usually gave 10 Rs. a head, or rather a tail, for every tiger, and this reward was found strong enough to clear some of the districts of them.

— A correspondent of the Englishman states, that the Indigo season has been as favourable in Tirhoot, that the district is likely to yield the enormous quantity of 40,000 mannds, which is, we believe a greater quantity than it has ever manifested. If the same abundance marks other districts, the year will probably be one of the most productive on record.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 28.

— The Appy Ubbler states, that the Chelms has been raising at that station with fearful violence, and that several of the neighbouring stations have been visited with this malady. It has created such alarm among the natives that the cessation of rain, which, at this season of the year, is a source of great anxiety, has scarcely been noticed.

— Both the Harbinger and the Star have this morning published the decision of the Privy Council in the appeal case in which Agi Kureekee Mahomed and others were appellants, and the Queen, on the presentation of Mahomed Kureekee, was respondent. The Council has reversed the decree passed by Sir John Grant and Sir Henry Selous, and taken the same view of the case which Sir Edward Ryan, and Sir Lawrence Peel, both Advocate Generals, took.

— At the close of last month a volcano broke out on one of the group of islands lying on the S. E. shore of the Island of Celebes, on the coast of Amama. It has led to the formation of an entirely new island. We have copied a few remarks on the subject from the Star.

— The Military Staff of Calcutta has resolved to give an entertainment to Lord Ellenborough on the 9th of next month. The master was settled at a meeting held in Calcutta on Saturday morning, when we are told there was a stormy debate whether the Civil portion of society should be invited to join in the compliment. 118 are said to have voted for, and 10 against their admission; but the proposal fell to the ground on the announcement that Lord Ellenborough had been already informed that the dinner was to be given exclusively by the Military, who will thus have all the credit to themselves.

The Dell's Gazette of the 19th August states, on the authority of advices from Betwa, that Kaim Dill Khan, one of the Candahar Sardars, who fled to Peshawar on the approach of our army, and returned to it on our retirement, had come down to the Peshawar valley to watch the progress of events in Seinde. It is said that the fugitive Amier of Seinde, Sher Mahomed, has joined him, which is some indication that he himself has been joined in any satisfactory manner by the British tribes.

— The Harbinger of this morning alludes that the charges of unbecomingly brought by a Native returning to India against the Captain of a Liverpool ship, who put him in a tub and exposed him to the elements, for two months, has entirely broken down. The case has been carefully investigated by the Chief Magistrate and Mr. Montford, and they found that the man had been after all kindly treated by the Captain, that he was ill the whole voyage, and very poor.

— The Harbinger also chronicles a rumor that the Board of Customs is to be abolished and the management and responsibility of the department committed to a Commissioner or Superintendent. The Board will in this case have no other duties to attend to but those of the Jail, and the Opium departments.

— Mr. Montford has revived the laudable custom of whipping criminals. The culprit will deserve his score of stripes. He is a notorious offender, in better accordance with the House of Correction than with any other House in Calcutta has never pursued an honest calling, and knows no profession but robbery. He is a hulk of one of the twice been; he belongs to the class, which a friend of ours facetiously described as furnishing the oldest gentlemen in the world.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 30.

— From an extract given among our selections from the Madras Spectator, we find that the Rev. Mr. Wolf, who assumed the society of India ten years ago by his eccentricities, discarding the seal of Col. Stoddart's and Captain Comely's murder, and offered to proceed in company with any officer, or, if necessary, alone, to Bokhara to procure the release of the prisoners. He would not be employed on a more appropriate or benevolent errand; and we hope the same Government and the Court of Directors wire, connected with a copper plate at one extremity and with a zinc plate at the other, is now all the electrical apparatus required. The principle on which the telegraph operates with this simple self-acting battery is as follows:—Each terminus there is a corresponding magnet, the ends of whose wire, the electrodes, which are set in motion by powerful springs or weights; this apparatus is so contrived that when the letter is to be telegraphed, as may be marked thereon, that letter is printed on paper; the hands on the dial at each station are adjusted alike; therefore, when set in motion and supported at the same instant, the hand of each electrical agency is required only to set the apparatus in motion: this is effected, whenever the voltaic connection is broken, by deflecting a coil of wire, which action removes a stop; the instant the voltaic circuit is removed, the machinery ceases to act. The communications may thus be carried on for any time with great rapidity; the symbol indicated on one dial being indicated on the other instantaneously, however far apart. As the velocity of electricity is immeasurable; and as the conducting power of the earth is without stint, there appears to be no assignable limit to the action of this terrestrial voltaic telegraph. Should the Lords of the Admiralty consider satisfactorily the pending negotiations, by constructing the construction of a telegraph on this principle between Portsmouth and London, the copper sheathing of the ground in the present harbour would form a necessary and adequate plate for the assisting battery; the positive pole of which could be supplied by the water-tanks at the Admiralty, this system being constituted an earthwire cable, on a large scale.

These curious results of scientific investigation are probably capable of many other and even more important applications than Mr. Bats at present contemplates. To military men, for example, it may suggest the idea of applying the galvanic agency of the earth to the means of impregnable defence against invasions by converting the islands of Great Britain and Ireland into gigantic batteries. It is well known, that instant contact with a few plates of metals differently oxidized will melt the hardest metals, and that the strongest animals who then can annihilate the others when all the copper and zinc in the bowels of Cornwall combined with the iron of the sea produce a never-ending series of shocks!—Spencer, July 1.

THE REV. MR. WOLFE.

In the STANDARD of July 24, we find the following remarkable notice from the Rev. Joseph Wolfe, the well known Missionary to the East. It will be seen that he disabellows the reported murder of Colonel Stoddard and Captain Conolly at Bokhara, and in stilling it furnishes a plausible and moderate a journey there for their liberation. We far however after the circumstantial accounts received of their death, there is little hope that these unfortunate Officers may yet survive.

PROPOSAL FOR THE LIBERATION OF COLONEL STODDARD AND CAPTAIN CONOLLY.

TO ALL THE OFFICERS OF THE BRITISH ARMY.
15, Richmond-green, Richmond, July 2.
Gentlemen,—Though a missionary and a clergyman myself, and not an officer, I do not take to my pen in order to excite your sympathy in behalf of a clergyman and a missionary, but in behalf of two of your fellow officers, Captain Conolly and Colonel Stoddard, who are at present captives in the great city of Bokhara; not having been myself two months at Bokhara, and knowing as to the character of the inhabitants of Bokhara, I am fully convinced that the reports of their having been put to death is exceedingly doubtful, and that they are by the scores from which the report originated. I, therefore, one of you, gentlemen, would be inclined to accompany me to Bokhara, or merely pay the expense of the journey, and I am anxious to go there, and I am fully confident that I shall be able, with God's help, to liberate them from captivity with the assistance of my Turcoman friends in the desert of Khiva and to seek out the values; but I would undertake the journey without making myself responsible to the British Government, and entirely upon my own responsibility. I merely want the expense of the journey, and not one single farthing as a compensation, even in case of complete success. I shall be 10 days more at Richmond, Surrey; I, therefore, one of your brave and noble soldiers, or one of your men, or to assist me in making the journey, let him come to me—and we may talk over the matter more fully.
I am, gentlemen, your humble and obedient servant,
JOSEPH WOLFE,
Late Curate of High Wycombe, in Yorkshire, and formerly Missionary in Persia, Bokhara and Afghanistan."—Spencer.

To Correspondents.

Observer's letter and our observations next week. We have four letters from another Observer, most of which are intelligible.

We are thankful to Mr. Grant for his communications, and shall avail ourselves of it in the next number.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SPECIAL MEDICAL EXHIBITION FUND.
To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—A considerable body of your subscribers, are deeply interested in the proceedings of the Bengal Medical Relief Fund, I shall feel obliged by your offering room for the following resolutions of the Medical Officers of this station, on a correspondence between the Committee of Management, and J. T. Pearson, Esq., "relative to the funding annually of 50,000 Sicca Rupees and to the necessity of continuing the maximum rates of subscription."

Your obedient servant,
W. JACKSON,
Off. Superintending Surgeon.

Dinapore, 16th Aug. 1849.

At a Meeting of the subscribers to the Bengal Medical Relief Fund, at Dinapore, on the 9th of August, the Medical Officers in the "Margin" agreed to the following resolutions.

- 1. That the Meeting approve of the exertions of J. T. Pearson, Esq. to reduce the present heavy rates of subscription to the Medical Fund.
- 2. That the Meeting agree with Dr. Pearson, that the present rates are ruinous to the younger Assistant Surgeons, who will pay more than double the real value of the annuities, if they are continued, and by impoverishing the service, it prevents us from raising a Bazaar Fund, a source which has so much improved the prospects of our Bombay brethren.
- 3. That we do not agree with the managing Committee that the "reserve Fund" now amounting to 1,500,000 Rupees should not at present be dissipated from its purpose of making up the value of 5,000 Sicca Rupees, to be added to each annuity so long as it may be required, but with the hopes which will soon bring in a large sum, we see no reason for continuing the present heavy rates of subscription and we should further urge upon the Committee, that the surplus of that sum which may have been accumulated, should be appropriated to the granting of annuities, whenever the Committee think it safe and expedient.
- 4th. The Meeting, therefore, are of opinion that the subscriptions may with perfect safety be reduced one third from the maximum rates which we are paying. Thus, let a Surgeon pay 40 Rupees, and so in proportion through all the grades. We shall then preserve the justa equitas, the "Something intermediate between the minimum and maximum rates," without endangering the stability of the Fund.
- 5th. That the safety of the Fund is completely secured by Article V. which empowers the managers, with consent of the 4th Quarterly Meeting, to enlarge the subscriptions for any year, always providing that they are never to exceed the maximum rates.
- 6th. That we are fortified in the necessity of reducing the subscriptions, from the conviction that the present heavy rates are felt as an intolerable burden by the great body of subscribers.
- 7th. That if the Fund works well with this reduction and the "reserve" is not much encroached on then we should return as soon as possible to the maximum rates, as at first, the managers having it always in their power, to raise for any particular year, the sum originally stipulated, namely, 50,000 Sicca Rupees, and that we consider Dr. Pearson has completely established his position, that only one surplus sum was originally intended to be ready to meet contingencies.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

FESTIVAL—Mr. HEAD.—The Bishop has given the benediction of Fenton to the Rev. Mr. Goring, of Chudleigh. Mr. Goring was the curate of Chudleigh, who contended that living with Mr. Palt, and by whom contended the Bishop was enabled to get up a case (though a bad one) for contesting the title to that living. On Sunday last the Rev. Dr. Cornish did the services. His congregation consisted wholly of the gentry and household of Mr. Justice Patterson, and has a residence in the parish. The parishioners feel deeply indignant at the treatment which their Reverend pastor has received at the hands of the Bishop.—Exeter Times.

THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT AND THE ISLAND OF TAHITI.—The two following despatches contain the substance of the communications which have passed between the British and French Governments on the subject of Tahiti.

"LOUIS COWLEY TO THE EARL OF ABERDEEN. (Extract.) Paris, March 30. "I had some conversation with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, yesterday, on the subject of the proceedings of the French squadron in the Pacific, and particularly with relation to Otaheite. Mr. Guizot told me that the sovereignty of that island had been tendered by the Queen to the King of the French, and had been accepted provisionally by Admiral Duperre Thonart."

"He said, 'We have nothing to conceal with respect to our proceedings in the Pacific. We should gladly avail ourselves of any means of strengthening or improving our possession of the Marquesas, but beyond this we have no views of conquest or aggression in the Pacific. With respect to Otaheite, and islands, for instance, we are quite ready to acknowledge their independence.' This he repeated several times. He afterwards observed that there were grounds for apprehending that the inequality of the islands in the Pacific might be disturbed by dissensions on account of the difference of the religious tenets of the Catholics and Protestant missionaries. He did not, however, say that any disturbances had yet taken place."

"H. GUTHRIE TO LORD COWLEY. Paris, April 6.

"Monseigneur L'Ambassadeur.—I have received the letter which your Excellency did me the honour to address to me yesterday, in which you speak of the facts that are circulating in England respecting the future welfare of the Protestant missions established at Tahiti. The language held by the Government of the King ought to have been sufficient to allay any such apprehensions. M. L'Ambassadeur, you very candidly acknowledge, yourself, that the British Government was entirely satisfied with it. I, however, appreciate, as you imagine, the interest which you take in me, in a spirit of amiable confidence and conciliation, the confirmation of these assurances; and I have no hesitation in repeating to you, that the Government of the King, in the system which it proposes to apply to the Marquesas and Society Islands, will remain faithful to the three great principles which it has never departed from—the liberty of religious worship, protection of the subjects of all the Powers, and, finally, the no less sacred duty of assisting in the labours taken to spread the benefits of Christianity. Accept, &c."

—Record. (Signed) "GUTHRIE."

HOUSEHOLD.

GENERAL REMARKS.—We are happy to say that the present mail conveys to India particulars of the rewards which her Majesty has thought proper, at present to confer for the distinguished services lately performed in Sicily. In addition to the G. C. B., the colonial of the 97th Reg. has been given to Sir C. Napier. Nothing definitive has been determined upon respecting the distribution of the prize money captured at Usterbois, and secured by the late Mr. Napier's statement in parliament, the Government have been unwilling impudences which we hope has reached them by the mail just received. The news received from India by this opportunity is considered rather of an unsatisfactory character. It appears quite evident that the establishment of our

OF KILMARNOCK,
Rifle Maker to H. R. H. Prince Albert.

NOTICE.
ESTATE OF W. H. TWENTYMAN DECEASED.
TWENTYMAN AND CO.
Watch-makers, Goldsmiths and Jewellers.
No. 2, Baze Street, S. E. Corner of Tank Square, Calcutta.
CONTINUE to sell off their Stock at very reduced prices for Cash only.

CONCENTRATED SYRUP
OF SENNA, PREPARED BY
BATHGATE AND CO.
and 5, Old Court House Street
CALCUTTA.

Chairs and Hutch—by McCabe and other makers, portable to order of the deceased, just landed ex Mallin, Fourth St.
Silver Plate—Breakfast, Dinner and Tea Sets.
Furniture—every description from the first houses in London, just landed, and in great demand. Second St.
Now exposed for sale, consisting of elegant Laid and Genesim's Chaises, Albert Chaises, Ringe, &c. &c.
Plated Ware—Dinner and Breakfast Sets, Castleshire, &c. &c.

Parties in the Mercantile will be so good as to apply through their own Agents, or send a remittance with their orders.

Parties indebted to the Estate are requested to make immediate payment to the Executor.

THIS agreeable purgative, made from a recipe of the celebrated Dr. Christison, Professor of Materia Medica in the University of Edinburgh, is chiefly recommended by its facility of administration to children.

From one to two tea spoonfuls is a dose for a child according to its age, and one to two table spoonfuls for an adult according to constitution.

THE Friends and Acquaintance of the late Mr. JOHN HENRY MOOR, for many years Head Master of the Singapore Institution Free School, will learn with regret the decease of this gentleman, who died on the 10th inst. at the residence of his wife, at the age of 81 years. Mr. Moor was a native of England, and was the father of eight Children, the eldest of whom is a Girl of fifteen and the youngest an Infant of three months old, are thus left in a state of absolute destitution. In a case so peculiarly deserving of notice, it is trusted that the Christianities of the Colony will be quick to sympathize with the bereaved family, and that the friends of the deceased will feel that this Orphan Family have no common claims on their charity and benevolence, which are hereafter never been appended to a visu. The friends of the deceased are requested to send their contributions to the Rev. Mr. George Gilling, a gentleman who will form a temporary Committee for the collection of the funds subscribed and until the same be placed in the hands of the Trustees appointed by the Subscribers. It is further requested that the friends of the deceased will be so good as to forward their contributions to the Rev. Mr. Gilling, who will be happy to receive them, and to forward them to the hands of the Trustees appointed by the Subscribers. It is further requested that the friends of the deceased will be so good as to forward their contributions to the Rev. Mr. Gilling, who will be happy to receive them, and to forward them to the hands of the Trustees appointed by the Subscribers. It is further requested that the friends of the deceased will be so good as to forward their contributions to the Rev. Mr. Gilling, who will be happy to receive them, and to forward them to the hands of the Trustees appointed by the Subscribers.

Mr. J. H. Widdowson, Agent of the Calcutta Union Bank was kindly condescended to act as Treasurer :
 The Honourable Thomas Church, Esq.
 Rev. Richard Pasting,
 Rev. J. T. Dickinson,
 Doctor Mougenotte,
 Doctor Orley,
 Joseph Balestier, Esq.
 John Purvis, Esq.
 J. H. Widdowson, Esq.
 Josephus D'Almeida, Esq.
 Wm. Napier, Esq.
 E. J. Gilman, Esq.
 December, 30th May, 1848.

REGISTER OFFICE
FOR THE SALE AND PURCHASE OF
C COMPANY'S PAPER—BANK SHARES—AND SHARES IN OTHER JOINT STOCK SOCIETIES—BILLS OF EXCHANGE—BANK OF ENGLAND NOTES—SOVEREIGNS, AND DOLLARS.
MONEY INVESTED AND LOANS NEGOTIATED.
No. 16, Writers' Buildings. J. W. ROBERTS.

EDUCATION.

A MINISTER in one of the University towns of Scotland, who has had some experience as a tutor in the best circles, can accommodate two or three boys in his family, where their education will be superintended, and the utmost attention paid to their comfort and character.

References to be made to Wm. Muir, Esq. C. S. Fatty-pore, the Rev. James Kennedy, Bannock, the Rev. J. Mack, and J. C. Marhaman, Esq. Scrappore.

August 1st, 1843.

THE best INDIGO SEED, in the original sealed bags, always on sale on Commission, by CLARK and SONS, Bogwangalla, at the lowest rates.

BATHGATE AND CO.
INVITE ATTENTION TO THE UNDER-
MENTIONED ARTICLES PREPARED
AT THIS HOUSE, 101 N. 4th
OLD COURT HOUSE STREET
CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION
OF JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA.
CONCENTRATED COMPOUND SYRUP
OF JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA.
CONCENTRATED ESSENCE OF JAMACA GINGER.
CONCENTRATED SYRUP OF SENNA.
FLUID MAGNesia AND LEMON SYRUP.
LAVENDER, HONEY, AND HUNGARY
WATERS.
COLORLESS EFFERVESCENT LEMONADE.
TASTELESS CASTOR OIL.

FOR SALE,
AT THE SERAMPONGE PRESS,
NOTES ON THE BOOK OF NATURE,
with references to the Power, Wisdom and Goodness of God. Eight Annas.
A brief Account of the Jews. Four Annas.
A brief Sketch of the History of India, pp. 38. Two Annas.

Singapore, 20th May, 1842.

ARRIVALS.

Aug. 22. The English Barque Merrin Luther, H. Palmer, from London 6th April and Glasgow's day 1st July.—The English Barque Alfred, W. Ramsey, from London, 8th April.—The English ship Fleurie Ramet, C. Randle, from Mauritius 2nd July.

—23. The English Brig Dido, E. Saunders, from Singapore 5th August.

—24. The English Barque John Willam, Dorr, A. 13th, from the Mauritius 30th July.—The English Barque Theresa, G. G. G. G., from Calcutta 18th August.

The English Ship Union, J. Middleton, from the Mauritius 2nd July.

—25. The English Ship John Bell, T. B. D. Gardner, from Glasgow 17th February and Cork 2nd April.—The English Barque Cookson, G. Patterson, from Liverpool 1st August.

MESSRS. ALLAN AND CRAIG beg to announce to the public, that they carry on the Joint Trade of Engineers, Iron and Brass Founders, &c. in Howrah, and that their prices will be found from 30 to 35 per cent. lower than the rates hitherto charged in Calcutta. Blacksmith's work also done at moderate rates. All orders executed with dispatch.

BEST UP COUNTRY INDIGO SEED.
CAMPBELL, PORTEOUS and Co. are prepared to accept contracts for October and Spring sowings. Apply to Messrs. Hathrade and Co., Calcutta; Messrs. Glaz and Sons, Ropangollah; Dr. Begg, Tirhoot; B. Liddle Esq. Mirzapore. and ourselves at Cawnpore.
Cawnpore, 5th Aug. 1843.

FOR SALE.
TREASURY, NAVY, MISSIONARY AND
PRIVATE BILLS, of first rate character, in convenient sums and dates for family remittances.

With reference to the above advertisement, Messrs MACKENZIE, LYALL and Co. beg to add that they will be happy to purchase any of the above mentioned bills for parties in the Mofussil for forwarding them home if required, free of Commission on a

THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT GAZETTE.

THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT GAZETTE is published under the authority of Govt. every Tuesday morning, and contains, in the English and Bengali languages, the Decrees of Acts; the Acts when passed; the Constitutions of the Sadar Dewanny and Nisamut Adawlut; the Circular Orders of the Sadar Dewanny and Nisamut Adawlut; of the various Boards of the Special Commissioners, and of the Superintendents of Police; the Civil Appeals made by the Governor or the Local Agents in Bengal, and the Appointment of Members by the Sadar Dewanny Adawlut as well as all Government Notifications of whatever kind.

The Subscription is EIGHT Rupees a year, payable in advance: subscriptions commence on the 1st of January and 1st July, of each year. Those who may begin to subscribe to the paper at any intermediate periods are expected

It is circulated in Calcutta, and its neighbourhood, by Chandrasekhar, Chinsurah and Hooghly by Panna, without charge; and to other stations by Post, bearing postage, at an expense of two annas a cover, or Six Rupees Eight annas a year.

Applications should be addressed to the Editor at the Bureau.

Just published from the Serampore Press,
IN TWO VOLUMES,
THE BENGALÉE VERSION

FOR SALE.

	NEW.	[SHELL]
Transfer 5 per Cent. Paper,	Prm. 13	8 4 12
Stock { Transfer Loan of 1833-36 }
Paper { interest payable in Eng. }	70	do. 8 do.
Romney 8 per cent.	71	3 19 8 3
Second 5 do.		1 0 3 3
Old Stock Rs. 4 per cent Loan Note. Dist.		4 0 3 3
New " " do.	72	4 0 3 3
New " " do.

FOR SALE.
GENUINE ASSAM ARROW ROOT, MANUFACTURED BY

JOHN D'ROZARIO OF SINGAPORE,
Superior to any manufactured in India.
Price per Mound, 30 Rupees Cash.
Do. 50 Cents, 1 Rupee ditto.
Twelve Certificates have been received from the Principal Medical Gentlemen in India, respecting its quality.

THE GUIDE TO THE CIVIL LAW OF THE PRESIDENCY OF FORT WILLIAM, containing all the unrevoked Regulations, Acts, Constructions, and Circular Orders; to which is prefixed, an Epitome of every Enactment and Rule. Compiled by JOHN CLARK MARSHMAN, and corrected to the 1st March 1843. The Applications may be made to Mr. John Cashman, at the Serampore Press, or to any of the Booksellers of Calcutta.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 483. Vol. 12.

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7TH. 1848.

Price 3 Cts. Per Month, or 30 Cts. per Annum, in Advance.

THE MAIL.
The Mail for Seram, is due on 24th of October next, and the latest news from Calcutta, which may be of opportunity, will be in it.
J. H. GREY,
Off. Post Master Genl.

ENTERTAINMENT TO LORD ELLENBOROUGH BY THE CIVILIANS.—The Civil Branch of the public service, and the Civil portion of the community in Calcutta, have at length resolved, to give a ball and supper to Lord Ellenborough, as a "mark of attention," on his Lordship's return to the Presidency from a successful termination of hostilities in Afghanistan and Scinde. This entertainment, which creates a new precedent in society, will close the series of festivities to which this happy event has given birth. The Army took the lead on the occasion, and the Civil Service, to avoid the imputation of singularity, has resolved to bring up the rear. The entertainments offered by the Army have a character of appropriateness on two grounds. His Lordship has taken every occasion of declaring himself the Friend of the Army, and these marks of attention may therefore be regarded as an expression of its gratitude for the magnitude of the obligations under which his Lordship is understood to have laid the Army by his good wishes. The Army, moreover, has no other legitimate mode of exhibiting its satisfaction with the conduct of the Head of the Government. It has been decided by high military authority, that an address of thanks from those who hold military commissions to those at the helm of affairs, would be incompatible with the position which the army occupies in the commonwealth; and would imply an equal power of expressing its disapprobation of the public measures of its superiors. Hence a public entertainment appears to be the only mode in which the Officers of the army are able, without impropriety, to offer a compliment to the Head of the Government.

The civil community of Calcutta, however, stands in a different position. It comprises a large body of independent gentlemen, engaged in various professions, and a small percentage of the civil servants of the state. It is not deterred, by any sense of impropriety, from the expression of its sentiments upon the measures of the Governor General; and it has been usual, during the last fifty years, to mark his return to the Presidency from the accomplishment of any successful enterprise, by an address of congratulation, framed with such caution as to secure the concurrence of all parties, however discordant may be their views of the policy of the undertaking. We cannot at this moment lay our hands on printed authorities, but if our memory does not deceive us, we believe that in the case of Lord Cornwallis, Lord Wellesley, Lord Minto, Lord Hastings, Lord William Bentinck, and Lord Auckland, the entire population of the community of Calcutta was the presentation of a congratulatory address. It is possible that a ball and supper may have been solemnly given to the Governor General's Lady, or Sisters, but of this our recollection is indistinct. An address however appears never to have been omitted except on the present occasion; and the omission will probably be as unpleasant, as the presentation of it would have been agreeable. A ball and supper may afford amusement to the gay, and throw some additional labour on the physician and the apothecary, but it is not that token of approbation which the Governor General's predecessors have been in the habit of receiving from the Civil community of Calcutta, and it must be comparatively unsatisfactory. It has no political importance; it cannot be quoted by Sir Robert Peel, in the House of Commons, when the Opposition taunt him on the subject of Lord Ellenborough's administration, for it may have originated quite as much in a fondness for gaiety, as in a regard for Lord Ellenborough's political character. The little value which might be attached to it, has been miserably diminished by the tardiness with which it has been given. It comes in the wake of half a dozen other balls given by the military, and wants the freshness of a spontaneous movement. In these circumstances, an Address would certainly have been peculiarly appropriate; more especially as the individual intended to be honoured is a Statesman, and not a Lady.

THE JELLAHABAD GARRISON.—A correspondent of the Herkers having some time back incidentally alluded to a Council of war which was held at Jellahabad, while it was beleaguered, we acquired through the subject of a retreat was brought under discussion or not, and expressed some desire to know how the votes stood for and against that movement. At the defence of that place is one of the most memorable transactions in a very memorable campaign, there is an historical interest attached to the vicissitudes of feelings and opinions of its illustrious garrison. One of the most remarkable incidents connected with the battle of Plassey was the Council of war which Clive held before he engaged in it, and the resolution which the great majority of the Council adopted against the engagement. It has been observed with regard to such assemblies that their votes are invariably given against the prosecution of vigorous measures; and Clive remarks that if he had followed the advice of the Council, he should have been ruined. We must confess that we had some curiosity to know whether the Jellahabad Council of war afforded an exception to what has been considered the usual result of such councils. We were aware that if the majority of the council voted for a retreat, their reputation for courage could be little affected thereby, as their opinions would necessarily be attributed to prudence and not to pusillanimity. We know also that no such disclosure could injure the character of the General, because he must have met aside the resolution of the Council, when he resolved to maintain his post. To explain the motive of our enquiry, we beg the reader to bear in mind that public journals must be considered in the light of editors for the future Historian, and that the value of their services will be estimated by the abundance and accuracy of the facts they are able to accumulate. In our humble sphere, we had therefore a duty to perform to posterity, of which we were not unmindful.

John Brown has sent a letter to the Delti Gazette in reference to our enquiry, in which he states that there were four Councils of war held; and he furnishes us with details of all but the last, which referred only to the proper time for the attack on Akbar Khan's camp, so successfully made on the 7th of April. The first two Councils were of minor importance; but that which was held on the 12th February, appears to have elicited great contrariety of opinion. The names of the members are given by the correspondent, who states that the debate was stormy. We have not the Blue book at hand to refer to, but if we are not mistaken, this was the Council of War held on the arrival or approach of Akbar Khan with his forces; and we may easily suppose that the subject under consideration referred to the course which it became the garrison to adopt in these difficult circumstances; in other words, the question discussed probably was, the propriety of standing a siege, or attempting a retreat through the Khyber. It was a period of intense interest, for upon the determination thus formed, depended the character and safety of the garrison. It would not have been surprising if, in the flushed state of the troops, with a powerful enemy ready to lay siege to the place, and without any immediate prospect of relief from General Pollock, some members of that Council had advised a retreat upon Peshawar. In proportion to the importance of the crisis, is our anxiety to learn how the votes stood; for the disclosure made by the correspondent manifestly shows that the determination to hold the post at all hazards, which gave its character to the campaign of 1848, and led eventually to the recovery of our honour by the recapture of Cabul, is to be attributed to the wisdom and firmness of some, two or three of its members. John Brown tells us that the proceedings were duly recorded; we suppose, therefore, that they will be found in the Military records of Government, and be available for the future historian. He has however thought fit to rebuke our curiosity by saying,

"And now I really will conclude, with a gentle hint, namely, that the paper which endeavours to draw out secrets (on occasions of this nature) voted for this measure, and also voted for that measure, commits the interest of the community no more than its own, and so I take leave of my Friend."

This remark is more conclusive than satisfactory. It teaches us that the present generation cannot safely push its researches further in this matter, and that the next age is likely to know more than we do about it; and, in fact, more than we do know, or can know, about the secrets of action either in the disastrous or the victorious campaign. Whether we should do ourselves good or harm, by any further attempt to gratify a curiosity which John Brown seems to think important, is a question on which we may possibly differ from him; but when he tells us that it would do no good to others, we give him full credit for his equity and benevolence, and at once take leave of the subject.

THE REASON.—It is but rarely that our pub-

(Exhibition 7. 1842)

to journalists, like to this very English magazine, the Weekend, but the present season has been so remarkable, and to deserve a distinct notice. It is remarkable in many respects. We have had, perhaps the mildest hot summer on record for twenty years. The days of excessive heat, in which all bodily and mental energies are tried, were extremely few. The burning, blistering month of May was so repeatedly rebuffed by showers, at two intervals, so of its summer the arrival of the rains, which are looked for on the 10th of June, scarcely perceptible. June came without its supply of rain, and the month of July, in which the country is generally saturated with water, passed off without any heavy showers. At the end of July, the hanks were nearly as dry as at the end of May. The rice crop had grown seriously to feel the want of rain, and the natives anticipated a famine. The rains did not set in fairly before the beginning of August, when we had a month's supply in a week. During the last three weeks, however, the rains have been again suspended, and showers have descended at long intervals, and in scanty measure. Our books, the blinding of which exhibits so great sympathy with the weather, and is usually covered with such mouldiness as to require constant attention during the rains, have been remarkably free from all appearance of mould. The river has not, up to this moment, risen to its usual height during the rains, and in another fortnight will begin to subside. The current of the stream, which during the months of July, August and September usually rolls almost with the rapidity of a cascade, has been extremely languid; and the influence of the flood tide, which is generally suspended during these three months except at the spring, had been fully an unusual degree. In short this has been the most extraordinary season we have had for twenty years, and its singularity is attributed—and possibly not without reason—to the influence of the Cape.

The Indigo season is perhaps the first one to record. A planter always anticipates a larger crop than he obtains; but in this year of the Comet, the planter, with few exceptions, have already obtained more than they anticipated, and they have nothing to quarrel with but the reduction of price which the exorbitant bounty of the season, is likely to inflict. Thirteen thousand 40,000 mounds. Other districts, though not equally blessed, will yield an unusual harvest. We see the crop stated by brokers, at 130,000 mounds; but all brokers, those of Calcutta excepted, have an interest in moderating the public expectations. If the accounts we hear from every quarter without exception, be authentic, the crop is likely to exceed, rather than to fall short of, 150,000 mounds. These accounts refer not to plant on the ground, still exposed to the vicissitudes of the seasons, but to that which has been already cut and manufactured. We have not of course the same means of ascertaining with accuracy the extent of the crop, on those who are professionally engaged in watching its progress, and comparing the produce of such individual factory with its former output; but we still venture to say that, not even in the most prolific of past years, have the reports of the planter been so generally cheerful as in the present year. For apace, the croakers are in a noticeable minority; and long will the year of the Comet stand out to be remembered as the first harvest.

Deborah, has married her sister's widow to the third eldest son of a Town day by the Native Officer of Wingmang, and his father-in-law, who has been killed, it seems, has been succeeded in the chieftainship. A high feud existed for a number of years under the idea that it was a voluntary contribution; and this excuse is deemed sufficient to mention its continuance. It appears that a petition against the payment of this 'contribution' has been presented to the Collector by a body of the Khambya tribes, and that the Collector of the District has directed that it shall cease to be exacted from them. This is at least in one proof that the tax was not voluntary; or rather voluntary in no other sense than that in which the three stalwart Highlanders who were proceeding in a cart to the Head Quarters of the corps, bound hand and foot, described themselves as the Countess of Southampton's volunteers. Another proof of the involuntary nature of this tax is afforded by the fact that a respectable cloth merchant of the Town, having been engaged for a supply of rice in a neighbouring village, the seller was obliged to convey it by night into the Town to evade its import.

It seems very singular that a Collector of Land Revenue under the Madras Presidency, should find it so difficult to distinguish a voluntary from a forced contribution, or to determine the circumstances which impart a voluntary character to any gift. To us it appears evident that if an impost be remitted to one class, and not to others, it is compulsory. If men enter a town at night to evade payment of a demand, that demand is not a voluntary gift. If poor men station themselves to collect it, and on its being refused by any individual, detain his goods to the extent of the demand, it is not a voluntary, but a compulsory tax. If men are not allowed to enter a town without a certificate that the contribution has been paid, then it is a "forced benevolence," similar to that which the Long Parliament abominated; it is not the voluntary contribution. It is said that the establishment of persons is kept up to secure this fund from being devoted to other purposes. But if any such establishment be permitted to exist and to act at all, it will inevitably become the instrument of extortion. We are not acquainted with the precise organisation of this Mahadeva fund; but we suppose that the money is either paid to a Committee of Native, or to its Secretary, or its Treasurer; or at some shrine in the town of Vingsampett. What could be more natural than for the pious devotees, to proceed to the house where the office is held, or to the temple, and there deposit their gifts of their own free will and mere motive? This would be termed in Bengal a voluntary contribution. What could be easier than for the Collector to prohibit this system of depositing gifts under any form or pretence, and to induce profligates by best of their inferring the public that no more was under the smallest necessity of making any payment to the Association. If he did not wish it; and that any attempt to exact money from him would be severely punished. This great change, however, representing would of course extinguish the whole system. It is the system which any Collector, who had the face of the Deputy Governor of Bengal, when he was in office, would not permit to exist. It is the system which any Collector would not permit to exist.

guilt of violating the positive injunctions of the Home Authorities, and expose them to the censure which such disobedience will draw down on them.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S LAST NOTIFICATION.—The following notification appears in last Saturday's Gazette:—

3024 JOURNAL 1943

Some misconception appears to exist with respect to the Power which Officers of both Services have over the Documents and Papers which come into their possession officially. The Governor-General-in-Council deems it expedient to notify that such Documents and Papers are in no case to be made public, or communicated to individuals without the previous consent of the Government to which alone they belong.

The Officer in possession of such Documents and Papers can only legitimately use them for the furtherance of the Public Service in the discharge of his official duty; and it is to be understood that the same Rule which applies to Documents and Papers applies to information of which Officers may become possessed officially.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India in Council.

J. THOMASON, Secy. to the Govt. of India.

The notification has reference of course to the communication of intelligence regarding the proceedings of Government to the public press, which it is intended simply to instruct. As regards official documents and papers, the rule laid down by the Governor General compassed itself to every man's judgment. These are the exclusive property of Government, and the promulgation of them without permission is a breach of official discipline. But the instruction in the notification, regarding the confidential character of all information which public officers may come by officially, appears equally worthy objections; and the instruction is likely to be misunderstood by the ignorant individuals in the service, and of the state itself. The Notice is evidently based on the assumption that some of the public servants, misapprehending the nature of their service, have actually communicated information of which they had become officially cognizant. Yet we cannot recollect a single instance in which any information has been divulged by which the interests of the state could suffer in the smallest degree. The officers of Government have not needed any formal prohibition, to hold, as under the seal of confidence, any intelligence the communicating of which would have compromised the public welfare. The present notification is therefore unwarranted, as the as cabinet secrets are confidential, as they have sworn, that we have no secret of them made public; but the general prohibition to impart any information in reference to those measures of Government which there should be no object in making a mystery of, will occasion much injury.

While the press continues to be free, the character of official news is exposed to attacks from the enemies of the multitudes and the big business and they have no means of maintaining the highest standard of their reputation but by giving their explanations and justifications in the newspapers. This condition the same currency which the masses have accepted. The press which has been the instrument of attack, becomes the most effective and the most powerful means of defense. It is not necessary that the press should be given by a public officer absolute freedom of expression, for the chances of it being abused are great, but the chances of its being abused by the confidence with which they are treated are small. It is not necessary that the press should be given by a public officer absolute freedom of expression, for the chances of it being abused are great, but the chances of its being abused by the confidence with which they are treated are small. It is not necessary that the press should be given by a public officer absolute freedom of expression, for the chances of it being abused are great, but the chances of its being abused by the confidence with which they are treated are small.

far to measures which the writer could have been acquainted with only from his official position. Under the operation of the rule now promulgated, he will be entirely debarred from any such mode of justifying his public conduct, and his character must continue to suffer from the unjust aspersions cast upon it. It is important better than to state the personal impropriety of the rule than by referring to Col. Stowen's family visitation of his proceedings to which we alluded last week. In his pamphlet last concluding letter to the Bombay Times, he has disclosed an estate meeting; he has betrayed an official confidence; but by a simple statement of facts, which are neither of historical date of political importance, and which therefore he has no object in concealing, he has effectively compromised himself from all blame; still of these facts he became possessed officially, and any such mode of violation is closed in future against every public officer. However high he may stand in the opinion of his superiors, in the public eye he must often be content to be reckoned a fool—and something worse.

But the rule is calculated to inflict a still more severe injury on the interests of Government. The proceedings of all Governments are liable to be misinterpreted, and their motives to be misrepresented. Beyond the sphere of its own official circle, a Government, owing to the insipidification of false humanity, had more opponents than friends, and when the press is free, it is often made the echo of aspersions, rather of praise. The centers is too frequently misapprehended, but it is not the less implicitly believed, as the more eagerly repeated; and when it repeats unexamined, it gradually settles down into the minds of men, and influences their opinions of the administration. Thus by the Bombay Times of mis-statements, a Government, with the purest intentions, is liable to be considered a monster of oppression. Repeat the importance of multiplying, rather than compiling, the means of disseminating the public mind on questions of interest connected with the public administration. Hence even in the Star Chamber days of Queen Elizabeth, Burleigh never allowed a dangerous pamphlet against his mistress to remain unforwarded, wisely remarking that although they were but straw, they showed which way the wind blew. The House administration, Whig or Tory, is always exposed to the marvellous misrepresentation of the Opposition and its hirelings; but it possesses many opportunities of vindicating its measures, and in this enabled, in spite of party mis-statements, to maintain its public reputation. There are the debates of the House of Commons, which afford every occasion for explanation. There are pamphlets published under official influence which furnish an antidote to the poison which opponents endeavor to distill into the public ear; and there are always two or more newspapers, supposed to be in the interest of the Ministry, which are engaged in setting the public right.

From all these means of vindicating the Government of India is cut off. Still it has not been left entirely the victim of slander. Deceit of late, some of its servants have contrived, in an insinuating mode, to furnish one or another Journal, with authentic data for showing how greatly the public mind has been abused by misrepresentation. We have repeatedly observed articles in our daily correspondence, which we traced up to a direct official origin, and which have not only entirely misled the public opinion, but moreover have done harm, when they were exposed.

before they had time to take root in the public mind, and the sense of truth, and good Government has been preserved without the smallest compromise of official confidence. While the want of explicit explanations, or negotiations of peace, have been necessarily and wisely withheld from view, this useful communication of information has served to convince the public, both here and in Europe, that the Government was laboring for the public good, and had nothing to conceal. These communications will now cease—but the public curiosity touching the measures of Government, the prime actor in the drama, will not cease; on the contrary, it is likely to be the more excited from the effort now made to hush it; and the only effect of the present notification will be to give an unchecked currency to misrepresentation and falsehood; for even those who may become possessed of the truth in the free intercourse of social life, will be careful how they disclose it, lest they should commit their friends. The notification therefore will do much mischief to the interests of Government, and none to those of the press. It will neither diminish the circulation, nor the reputation of the journals; but it will have this effect,—by closing up so far as possible every avenue to the truth, it will diminish the culpability of mis-statements, and render it impossible to repeat, with any degree of decency, the charge of dishonesty which some have brought against the press. We will venture to predict that three years after this notification shall have been in operation, the character of the Government of India will stand very different in the opinion of Christendom than it now does,—unless the notification should experience the same fate which has attended every other attempt to cut off the supply of the public to valuable information, and become a dead letter within a month after its promulgation.

FRANCHISE OF JAVA.—The notice we published last week regarding the Export trade of Java has been favorably noticed by our contemporaries, and more particularly by the Standard. He remarks: "that there is little apprehension of the consequence of the competition with Bengal in the cultivation of Indigo." We believe the best price in Java to be really much below the sum stated by him, namely, 220 Java Rupees per mound, but if it can be produced there at about the same rate as it costs here, we do not think the rivalry will be disadvantageous. It may be injurious to those who have given extravagant prices for factories, and may tend to force out of Indigo cultivation places wholly unsuitable to the plant; but by stimulating competition, and forcing economy, it will in the end give the Bengal planter a certainty in his operations, which he never could have, when tempted by extraordinary fluctuations or impetuous undertakings and extravagant expenditures." Since our last article was written, we have received a further notice on the subject, drawn up by a gentleman on the island, possessed not only of great experience in the cultivation of this article, but of very accurate information on all subjects connected with its commercial interests. From his representation we are inclined to argue that the Indigo of Java is likely soon to become a more formidable rival of the Bengal Presidency than we had at first supposed. The price of the Indigo given by us at 220 Java Rupees, was only the current market value of the article at that time, and not its real value. We now have the opportunity of giving you the real value of Indigo in the native market of the island.

quantities on Government plantations, and may be considered as the property of Government, who ship it to Holland, where it is sold on its account. We are told that private planters can deliver their Indigo at Batavia or any other port of the island for one Java Rupee and a half to two Rupees the pound, every expense included. At 2 Rupees the pound, the mound of Indigo would be equal to Java Rupees 168. The Java Rupee, or Guilder, is intrinsically of less value by 15 per cent than the Company's Rupee. 120 pice are equivalent to a Java Guilder, but gold and silver coins are become so scarce that none are procurable under 185 pice at the present time. The Java Bank paper, the currency of the day, acknowledged by Government, and received by it in all payments, which was formerly equivalent in value to Silver, has been so much depreciated in value, that a Java Bank note for 100 Guilders cannot command more than 77 silver Guilders. Hence the Java Rupee is reckoned forty per cent less in value than the Bengal Rupee. A mound of Java Indigo may therefore be delivered at the port of exportation, for a sum which appears to vary from 110 to 120 Bengal Rupees; and this brings the prime cost of the article to a considerable approximation to the price at which it is, or can be, raised in this country. Considering therefore that from two and a half to three, and from three and a half to four Rupees a pound have been obtained in Europe for this Indigo according to its quality, it is not surprising that the cultivation of it should have been pushed both by Government and by private individuals; and it is not altogether unlikely that in two or three years, or in 1868, the produce of the island will reach Three millions of Pounds, or 40,000 mounds.

The season of 1861 was very unfavorable to the Planters from grain drought, and that of 1864, from heavy rains; but the present year, from all accounts, promises to be very propitious, and should the price in Europe be equal to 8 or 4 Rupees the Pound, according to quality, the profit of the season will be great. It is proper however to mention that the high price which Indigo has lately borne, has arisen in some measure from the high rate of Bills of Exchange on Europe. Some have of late been sold at six months sight, at a premium of more than 20 per cent. A Bill for 70 Rupees payable in Holland has sold for 100 Rupees in Java. When the exchange falls, the price of Indigo is likely to experience a decline.

Hitherto very little attention has been paid by the Planters to the sowing and packing of Indigo, three or four qualities of which were formerly mixed in one chest, through inadvertence or carelessness. This has rendered the delivery of Indigo very unpleasant, and considerably injured the sale of it. The Planters are now said to be alive to the necessity of giving more time and attention to this department; and, adds our authority, "we have not the least doubt that Java Indigo will very soon be worth as much in Europe and America as the best Bengal." Here is a signal indeed.

THE OVERLAND ROUTE.—Bombay is again at issue with Calcutta about their communication with Europe. At this Presidency we have, at length, obtained our wishes, and enjoy the benefits of a direct communication by steam, from our own shores with Europe. We have now the same privilege of which the port of Bombay has so long enjoyed, the monopoly; and when our line has been completed by the establishment of three vessels, there will remain only this difference between us and Bombay—that the communication between us and Suva, will cost the state fifteen lakhs a year, while the same advantage is secured to us at the moderate outlay of only two lakhs of Rupees from the public Treasury. The Bombay Times regards our present advantages without a particle of envy. He would rejoice indeed to see the Peninsular and Oriental Company's vessels darkening the Bay of Bengal; only he would indignantly withdraw the bonus of two lakhs which Government gives the Company, and without which they would probably find it difficult to keep up the enterprise. He considers it extremely improper that the ryots of the Gangetic valley should be taxed two lakhs of Rupees, to provide the luxury of large steamers for the Que En, that is for the community of the Bengal Presidency; but somehow or other, he has nothing to say against taxing the Bengal ryots, fifteen lakhs, for the convenience of the Bombay docks, to enable them to go by steam to Suva instead of doubling the Cape—for the expense of the Steam establishment is drawn from the revenues of the Bengal Presidency. But, says our friend, the passengers from Bombay find accommodation in the Red Sea packets merely because their vessels are kept up at any rate, for mail purposes. Granted; but are the two lakhs of Rupees given to the Peninsular Company to enable them to send their steamers direct to Calcutta, intended only to afford us the luxury of large vessels? Is it not intended that these vessels shall also bring the mails for Ceylon, Madras, Calcutta and the southern to the north? Is it simply because these mails have not been sent by these steamers, that the Bombay Times is enabled to assert that the bonus is intended for the passengers, and not for the mails? Let our Mails be sent on direct, as we currently do, by our own steamers, instead of being postponed by way of Bombay, and the despatch of two lakhs to the Peninsular Company's vessels will secure the same magnificent character, which the expenditure of fifteen lakhs for the Bombay Steamers is supposed to possess.

The Bombay Times says that it is the duty of Government to carry the mails in the best and cheapest way that can be effected. By the best way, he evidently means that way which will be best for the community; by the cheapest, that which will be cheapest to Government. If the mails for Ceylon, Madras, Calcutta and the Eastward were separated from those for Bombay and the stations which lie nearest to it than to either of the other places, and were sent by the Peninsular Company's steamers, those steamers would be entrusted with the conveyance of more than half the mails. Allowing however that only half the letters and papers are sent by them, still the conveyance of this material will be effected at a much cheaper rate than that of the other half. The Mails for the two eastern ports and Galle, cannot be conveyed for a cheaper rate by any other arrangement. It would likewise be beneficial to the public, as to Government. Our letters would reach us at a charge of only two annas, instead of being added with a heavy postage of fourteen annas. Therefore, it is the duty of Government to encourage the Hindoostan and her sister vessels, by a bonus of two lakhs, on effecting the best and cheapest way in which the mails can be carried.

But it is an "irresistable" supply of our resources to maintain more steam routes than are indispensable. Quite true; then maintain that which is least expensive, and curtail that which falls heaviest on the public resources. Let the Peninsular Company's vessels bring all the Mails on from Suva, and reduce the establishment of the Bombay Steamers, which are the most expensive; and let a launch steamer from that port be in waiting at Aden to convey the mails for Bombay and for the stations with which it most readily communicates. Let the grand trunk road be laid down from one end of the route to the other, from Suva to Calcutta, by way of Aden, Galle and Madras; and let it be occupied by the great vessels of the Peninsular Company, and let there be one launch road from Aden to Bombay, and another from Galle to the eastward to be occupied by smaller vessels. This would in our apprehension be the most rational, and certainly the cheapest mode of operation; because the conveyance on the trunk road may be kept up, as at present, for two lakhs, and the branch communication with Bombay, &c., we suppose, half the present expenditure, or seven lakhs and a half of Rupees a year.

That some change in steam arrangements is contemplated by Government, in consequence of the successful voyage of the Hindostan, is evident. We have the presumption to think that the plan we have laid down will be the most feasible. But if it should not be adopted, perhaps the next best arrangement would be to send the large Steamers from Galle to Aden, and vice versa by way of Bombay, though to this plan there are many and serious objections. But the plan proposed by the Bombay Times will never answer. Our contemporary proposes, that the large steamers shall ply only between Suva and Aden; that all the mails and passengers shall be transhipped at this latter place, and sent on to Bombay; that the light mails shall be dispatched by express, and the heavy mails and passengers put on board a third vessel at Bombay and sent on to Galle, Madras and Calcutta. But if the Hindostan is but just able to accommodate the passengers from Calcutta, Madras and Ceylon, how can these passengers be crammed into a vessel with only half its accommodation? Any arrangement which should subject the great bulk of the passengers to the inconvenience of two transshipments in thirty days, must inevitably fail. If the plan laid down by the Bombay Times, which provides that the hundred passengers from the eastern ports shall embark three times in three separate vessels, while the twenty or twenty-five Bombay passengers shall be put to the inconvenience of only two embarkations, be adopted, the advantages of steam communication, between Calcutta and Suva, so far as passengers are concerned, will be entirely neutralized. There are few who would not prefer the circuitous route round the Cape to the inconvenience of visits by Bombay. The Steamers sent on from Bombay would never have so other duty than to convey the mails, and in that case Government would find it quite as cheap, if not cheaper, to send on those sent from Bombay by land, free of cost, to all parties, than to keep up an establishment for their conveyance by sea.

WEEKLY EPIPHONY OF NEWS.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21.

The Epiphony gives an account, on the report of the meeting of the Civil community to do honour to Lord Milnesborough. The original report ran thus: "Mr. W. Robinson then proposed and Mr. O'Dowda seconded the motion, that all members of the community be invited to join in this mark of attention to his Lordship." The corrected version of the motion is, that all members of Society be invited to join. There is a distinction in the City of Palaces between the meaning of the words Community and Society not to be found in Johnson, which a stranger to our local institutions might not at once comprehend. All members of Society are members of the community, but all members of the community are not members of Society. A line of demarcation is drawn between those who are said to be in Society and those who are not. Perhaps the best definition which can be given of the two classes, is that all who are on the Government Home List are in Society, and all not found there, are beyond the pale.

A meeting of the Committee of the Church Building Fund at Midnapore was held on the 28th of last month, when it was resolved to solicit the Bishop to consecrate the ground, and lay the first stone of the Church, previous to his departure for the Upper Provinces.

The Herberts states, that owing to the severe examples made by the Chief Magistrate, and the energy he has infused into the officers employed in the river police, there has been of late a great decrease in the number of thefts committed on the water. Formerly, scarcely a day passed without some complaint; but some time however there have not been more than one or two in a fortnight. A year or two ago the quantity of property stolen on the river, chiefly in the transport of goods to and from the ships, was estimated at five lakhs of Rupees a year. We are happy to learn that there has been such a diminution of crime, and are very willing to attribute it to the increased vigilance of the police; but a share of the praise is due to the new arrangements for the conveyance of goods, and to the construction of Cargo boats, in which the goods are carried under cover and by day. We consider that there is a Cargo Boat Association, and that it holds half yearly meetings, but we do not remember to have seen any report of its organization, or its success. We wish some of our readers could furnish us with information as to the capital of the Association, the number of boats employed, the expense of their construction, and the charge made for lighters as compared with that of the old riskiness, under the old.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 1.

There is a Ray correspondence in the papers of this morning between two houses of business in Calcutta, the one charging the other with having withdrawn the valuable connection of a large Glasgow firm by representing that some of its goods had been pressed to the Union Bank, which charge has been satisfactorily refuted. The other firm asserts that no such advice was ever sent by it to Glasgow, but admits that a gentleman, recently admitted as a partner, did send some advice to a friend before he was a partner, not very favourable to the character of the injured House. The matter, as we learn, has been sent into the hands of Solicitors, and will afford employment to the gentlemen of the bar; and we shall not therefore allow farther to it.

We stated last week, that a Mr. James George, of the Paramal Academy, had added 300 volumes to the Jail Library founded by the Sheriff in the year of the long talked Comet. Mr. James George has written to the Epiphony to denounce the notice as a hoax, and to state that having an income which may be represented by two figures only, it was out of his power to have made such a gift; in other words, had he voted so propitiously, he must soon have filled the books himself.

The Bombay Times has received a letter direct from the Sandwich Islands, dated the 6th of April last, which will be found among our selections. It gives a very full account of the prisoners for which Lord George Paulet was sent there to obtain redress. The writer, after saying that his Lordship was sent to seek an adjustment of affairs, says, the rest you know. Unfortunately by we do not know the rest; for there is a history in the correspondence, just at the most interesting period of the negotiation.

— There have been some story slanders about the Roman Catholic of Bombay. The Vice Apostolic has, it seems, received from the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, during the last few years, a sum little short of a lakh of Rupees, of which he has given no satisfactory account. A full account of the matter will be found in another column.

— The Rev. Mr. Anderson and his Colleagues in the management of the General Assembly, its extension and Branch Schools at Madras have followed the example of their brethren in Calcutta, and joined the Free Protestant Church of Scotland. Their salaries were drawn from the Missionary funds of the General Assembly in Scotland, and they have ceased to receive them since the first of July, trusting to obtain support, though on a diminished scale, from the funds raised for Missionary objects by the Southern. It appears, however, that they will continue to conduct the affairs of the Assembly's Institution for the present, and to apply the local funds raised for education at Madras. The violent course which the "rump" of the Assembly, as the Ministers who remain have been termed, could do, would be to make over the Educational Institutions at the three Presidencies to the Free Protestant Church; for it was through the seal, and perseverance of those who are its leaders that these admirable seminaries were established.

— The salary of the Private Secretary of the Governor of Madras, is to be raised, we learn, to Rs. 1800, in the hope of securing the services of some Civilian of excellent standing and experience.

— The Joint Stock Bank of Western India has declared a dividend for the first ten months of its existence at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 2.

— The Nawab Ghasee Odiah Mahomed, Ghosab of Deew, is dead. By this fatality an allowance of about 50,000 Rupees a year reverts to Government.

— The Jur on board the Hindostan steamer was seen, or dead. This alarming fact was discovered before the vessel had got fifty miles down the river, and a reconnaissance was drawn up by Capt. Mansley with forty-nine soldiers. We can fancy the expectation which must have pervaded a vessel, with more than a hundred gun ho, on board when it was found that the Jur was lost, and that there was little prospect of obtaining better before they got to Deew. We rather wonder they did not insist on the Captain's putting back instantly to Calcutta. The fault does not appear to lie with the Commander, who is not the purveyor, and who did all in his power to remedy the evil by purchasing 200 dead mules. Calcutta's opinion must look sharply into this matter. All his officers, and all his rapidity of travel, may, even the excellence of his Hams and Turkey, will be a poor compensation for such loss.

— The Argonaut of this morning gives us a long and very flattering account of all the great things which Lord Ellenborough is about to do for India. There is however an amusing simplicity in the following remarks of our contemporary: "If we are really to have no more wars, it is to be hoped that these plans of improvement will not be confined to Western India, but that Government will endeavor to lay out the surplus revenues in places of permanent utility for the improvement of every part of the empire under British rule." Why, we have been hoping the same thing for the last twenty years, but in vain. When Governments have no money, if plenty poverty when it is rich, it has no will. "Till within the last twenty years have we had a full century, and on one occasion it was emptied by a Balaclava, and on the second by an Afghan war. Had experience confirmed the truth that Governments have never been found less willing to improve India than when it has had the most ample means of doing so.

— The Harbinger states, that Government is about to make a move in the appointment of Deputy Magistrates, and that they are to be appointed to train of the most turbulent districts, namely, to those in which there are the greatest number of Indigo Plantations. There are to be two grades; the lowest will receive 300; the upper 500 Rs. a month. The Indigo districts deserve the earliest attention of Government. We hope the new appointments will be followed up by discharging the belligerent persons, the Planters and the Zemindars, and that all private war for the redress of grievances will be rapidly extinguished.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 4.

— A correspondent, adopting the signature of O. J. has come forward in the defence of Mr. Maun against the freedom attack made by the Rev. Mr. Loveday on his character. We are writing, on the principle the Reverend gentleman advocates, to hear the other party, that is the Sanctity Times, before we take up the subject.

— The Albion, from Calcutta, brings the latest figures that the commercial treaty with the Chinese had been signed, and was forwarded to England by Col. Malcolm, in the Alber, which vessel sailed from Singapore on the 10th of August.

— The papers notice the death of Lieut. Col. Grant, of the 30th N. L. at Newburg, in Bundelkand, on the 21st ult. He appears to have been greatly beloved by his officers and men. As a tribute of respect to their deceased Colonel, the non-commissioned officers of the Regiment here his remains to their last resting place.

— We have copied from the letter of a Correspondent of the Harbinger, a list of the munificent donations made by the European community of Assam to the erection of a Church at Gohatty.

The foundation stone was laid on the 9th of November, 1861, and the Church, it is said, will be completed in the coming cold weather.

— The Friend of China of the 16th of June, which we happen not to have received, but which has reached the office, says that the vast empire of China, through its length and breadth resounds with preparations for the possible, and it is hinted the probable, and not remote contingency of a new conflict with the English. We have copied the whole article. We suppose however that the subsequent signing of the commercial treaty, in which we have just heard, may be considered as some indication of peace for sometime to come. That we shall have another brush with the Chinese before many years have passed, is however highly probable.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5.

— No addition has been received to the information communicated yesterday that the ratification of the China treaty was on its way to England on board the Alber, nor have we received a single paper from China by this opportunity.

— The Calcutta Christian Intelligencer of this month, contains the following liberal and enlightened sentiments: "It gives us sincere satisfaction to learn that the Bengalee Patra in Calcutta," an Institution established by the Natives to diffuse the blessing of knowledge through the vernacular tongue—"is in a declining state; the native people have considered better for their own interests than the office of Europeans who expanded the school with the design of giving the boys a complete education through the medium of the vernacular! So may every volume perish which is based on narrow minded and partial views." No man who is answerable to God for the use of his time would be justified in wasting a moment of it in replying to such reflections as these. But as the absence of the cause of education appears to have terminated, and the Harbinger seems to think that there is no chance that the subject may excite attention, we shall leave no occasion in publishing some valuable paper on the subject. We have hitherto refrained from giving these publications for fear eliciting the subject, under the idea that the Educational Board, or Committee, or by whatever name the Educational Directory be designated was in a state of permanent vacillation.

— The Free Nation states that an "idea" is abroad that the Imperial of the Sudder Board and Sudder Court to Agri is not recommended with the possible migration of the Quarter General and his Council to that station. The present Lieutenant Governor goes there this year, and Bengal being now a firmly constituted and consolidated dependency, under Mr. D'Almeida, this transfer of the Governor General and his official suite might be a saving of some four or five lakhs of Rupees to the State. Our contemporary gives it as a rumour. We have no idea that the Council will ever move, however frequently the Governor General may. Calcutta is inconveniently situated for the seat of Government, now that our empire has stretched beyond Bengal, but so in London, and as so many other capitals in Europe and America.

— The Harbinger conveys to us the gratifying intelligence that the first of the ice ships, the Arctic, reached Madras on the 10th instant, and may be daily expected at Calcutta. They would the Governor General by Military, Civil, and Military, under circulating obligation, were he to send one of the steamers now lying idle in Calcutta, down to the lower floating light, to tow up this prodigious cargo.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6.

— An article appeared some two or three weeks ago in the columns of one of our contemporaries, stating that some of the new Police had behaved ill, in the state of Jhansi. This information we copied; but we have since learned that it is without foundation. There was not a spot of the new police within a hundred miles of the scene at the time mentioned; though there might have been some police men belonging to the Jhansi Rajah. We believe our police and Officers had nothing to do with the matter of the rebellion, even in the case of a petty little gang of the remnants of Dhalakpo's party, headed by his nephew, whom he had brought up to his own trade. This nephew appeared when the trials were tried by Jhansi, and the police of the Jhansi state have been in search of him ever since.

— From the delight which the Madras Athlete expresses at the arrival of the American Athlete, with a cargo of tea, we fear that some of it is destined for Calcutta. The Madras stock of tea had been exhausted a week when this fresh supply arrived; the whole of which will in all probability be detained there. We think the Calcutta community has just reason to complain of the shameful treatment it has received in the matter of tea, and that a meeting of the Committee which ordered the tea house, ought to be convened in order to make some arrangement for transferring the tea to the proper place.

— Sir Jasper Nicolson, having heard of the arrival of Sir Hugh Gough in Calcutta, and his assumption of the office of Commander-in-Chief, has in a very manly and appropriate notification, taken his farewell of the Army with which he has been connected for forty years.

— We regret to notice in the Agre Tribune, the sudden death, by an attack of Cholera, of Lieut. Col. Urquhart, of H. M. 50th Regiment.

— The Harbinger Times recorded this morning, has some very commendable remarks on the Court-martial of Major Eaton, and the finding of the Court. On reading the documents, we formed the same opinion with our Western contemporary on the subject, being quite unable to reconcile the verdict of the Court with the evidence before it. Though Col. Hedges may not have acted in these trying circumstances with perfect and absolute propriety, yet it is noticed that Major Eaton's conduct was in the highest degree reprehensible. We are entire strangers to the parties and to the circumstances; and speak without partiality when we say that there appears from these proceedings, to admit in more quarters than one, a strong prejudice against Col. Hedges.

To Correspondents.
The letter of a Ghost-hunter appears.
A Friend to Reformation, will appear next week.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

ILLGAL TAX FOR THE SUPPORT OF HINDOO IDOLATRY.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.
DEAR SIR,—Since my last letter to you on this subject, one in reply to it, has appeared in the Medley Record, endeavoring to prove that the Tax to which I referred was nothing more or less than "a charity contribution" for the support of the Hindoo Religion. I shall not commence this letter by charging my opponent with "setting forth false and malicious statements to the public," without even the shadow of proof (as he has done in reference to my letter) but I shall lay before your readers some substance here which will be sufficient to prove to every honest and candid mind that this tax which is styled by the writer of the letter, a charity contribution, is nothing more or less than an illegal impost, set on foot for the purpose of supporting Hindoo idolatry in this place.

I must inform you, in the first place, Mr. Editor, that since my former letter on the subject, a considerable stir has been excited among the natives of this town on the subject, and a petition has been sent up to the Circuit Judge praying that measures may be taken by them in authority to exempt them from the payment of this illegal impost. This Petition was sent up by the Kucherry caste people, and was signed by fifteen natives. They state in it, that they have been taxed by the native authorities in the following proportion for the various articles they have brought into the market. For one bullock load of Tamarind two dabs; (or one bullock load of Bullock Horns, five dabs; (or one bullock load of Sugar, six dabs; (or one bullock load of Tamarind, three dabs, or one anna. For every sort of something taken in kind not in dabs. It is to be noted that the public should be informed that the petitioners who were called to pay this tax were persons of too low a caste in the opinion of the holy Brahmins to enter the shrines of the Hindoo gods and goddesses. But they were not too low to contribute towards the building of temples, which they were never allowed to enter.

2. Another proof of its not being given voluntarily is, that persons are placed outside the town to hold of any person who have not a certificate that they have paid the tax. If the bullock men do not give what is demanded of them, the police immediately take away the sacks from the bullocks, or the clothes from the men, and keep them until the money is forthcoming. Hence, Mr. Editor, you may see the propriety of calling this a charitable contribution.

3. Another proof of this tax not being a "charity contribution," is that a respectable cloth merchant of this place obtained a quantity of Rice in the neighbouring villages and got his men to bring it in at night and thus avoid the tax. A respectable merchant, also resident in this town, a short time ago wanted some ryots in the neighbouring villages to supply him with grain at the usual rate; they replied that they would not bring it into the town at that price on account of the new tax which had been imposed upon them. So that you see this tax affects the purchaser as well as the seller of any article, and in this way Christians and Mohammedans are made to pay for that which they utterly abhor. Thus the poor petitioners of this station are called to suffer, in as much as the price of provisions is hereby increased. The writer of the letter referred to makes a grand mistake when he says that the tax is paid with the free consent of the real owners. Alas! that proof can be obtained to the contrary by those who are able to converse with the natives in their own language, and who are the only suitable persons to judge of the rights of the same. If this tax was given by free consent, why did the Kucherry caste people complain against it?

The writer also states in his letter that a small establishment is of course kept up by the donors to secure this fund from being devoted to other purposes. Now instead of this being the case, this establishment is kept up merely for the purpose of compelling the poor people to give to the Fund. Let this illegal establishment be abolished, and this benevolent contribution will fall to the ground.

The people who bring in rice, gunny bags, and other articles for sale, are now taxed higher than before, merely to defray the expense of some idle and useless ceremony that is going forward in the town. The authority of the native authorities seems to be beyond all bounds. They even offend the poor Kucherry caste people a handsome bribe to withdraw the petition which had been sent up to Government; but I am thankful to say that in this instance they did not succeed. Men who are guilty of such conduct, are surely unfit to hold such responsible situations. The amount collected during the past month by this tax has been upwards of 900 Rupees, thus making in the course of the year 11,000 Rupees, which must in some way or another cause a deficiency in the public Revenue.

There is a report in the town that a considerable number of native merchants, who are closely connected with the Brahmins in this affair, and who derive more or less profit from it, have signed a petition to the Collector praying that the tax may be continued, as it is a voluntary contribution on the part of the natives. Their object in doing this, was to contradict the petition which had been sent up by the Kucherry caste people. How absurd it would appear, Mr. Editor, if the inhabitants of Calcutta were to send up a petition to his Honor the Governor in Council to be permitted to pay a voluntary contribution to some charitable institution. I am happy to state in conclusion that the petition of the Kucherry people has been listened to, and that the Collector of the District has given strict orders that the taxes should not be exacted from them. So far good; but why not have put down this tax altogether? It is unjust in reference to one class of people, it is unjust in reference to others; and the continuance of it is a gross act of injustice to the other classes of the community.

I do sincerely trust that the representation of this iniquitous proceeding will induce the Governor in Council of the Madras Presidency, to adopt measures for the speedy and total abolition of this illegal impost.

I remain, your's sincerely,

AN OVERSEER.

Tringapattin, Aug. 18th, 1848.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON.—We are happy to be enabled to announce the restoration of tranquility to the diocese of London;—at least, so far as that tranquility has been disturbed by certain proceedings, which are chiefly attributed to Archbishop Hale. The letter of the Bishop of London, when on Thursday last, we estimated to be in preparation, has been issued in the form of a Circular, to the clergy of his diocese; and with this piece giving document, the question seems to terminate. In order that the whole matter may be understood, we shall, as rapidly as possible, shortly review the progress.
In his Charge in the last autumn, the Bishop, while he condemned the doctrines of the Trinitarian in five or six leading particulars, seemed to concede something to their demands in ritual and ceremonial points. He recommended strict compliance with the rubric, suggested the partial use of the surplice in the pulpit, and in one or two smaller matters seemed to decide in their favour. The consequence was, that all who had any disposition towards Trinitarianism at once took the opportunity of showing it, and a variety of changes took place in the modes of conducting Divine service which had hitherto prevailed. A large proportion, however, of the clergy refused to introduce any novelties, and continued in their accustomed course.

This was brought under the Bishop's notice; and at the end of last month, in his circuit for Confirmation, he took occasion to draw out before the clergy on the subject, and to strengthen his previous suggestions; making them, in some points, mandates or injunctions.

This was done on three or four days, producing considerable alarm among the clergy, but no one ventured to contest the Bishop's right to lay such injunctions, or demands upon them, or to adduce the clergy in return, however, that the Bishop reached the parish of Islington, the question had been considerably discussed, and the clergy of that district were not taken so entirely by surprise as had been the case on the former days.

They met the Bishop, seventeen in number, with the most entire respect; but with an earnest and unanimous remonstrance. He listened to them with the greatest courtesy and kindness; and the discussion ended by his granting them some kind of latitude and discretion which he had not previously intended to any other parish.

The desired uniformity, then, was already at hand. Nor was it possible that the conversation could have been without effect, and obtained, the liberty and freedom; and Clerkenwell, which had at first submitted, now claimed the same immunity as Islington. Meanwhile, among the former parishes, wherein the original injunctive edicts were given, the peace was not with all its weight, the greatest popularity prevailed. In this hourly increasing confusion some of the laity began to stir themselves, in order to relieve that anxiety of the case of standing out, from their own responsibility, against an Episcopalian injunction. Preparations were on foot for a Meeting, which would have been of a most important character. (Mr. Jones of both Houses being eager to take part in it.) For the purpose of memorializing the Bishop to entreat him to reconsider his mandate.

Hearing of these intended proceedings, and loudly anxious to prevent any public manifestation, some gentlemen ventured to acquaint the Bishop with what they saw to be the prevailing feeling among the laity in general. His Lordship, who needed their representations with the greatest patience and courtesy, seemed surprised at the excitement caused by what appeared to him a very natural and reasonable proceeding on his part, and endeavoured to take the matter into his consideration, and to endeavour to issue such a notice as should tranquillize the public mind.

That notice was issued on Monday, Mr. May, secretary, in a Circular Letter to the clergy. It is chiefly taken up with an endeavour to remove the alarm created by Archbishop Hale's Charge, in which a revival of the Weekly Prayer Book was spoken of as the ultimate object. The Bishop distinctly disavows such an intention; only expressing a hope that the laity may be brought to accede to the practice of making such collections as may be desirable, from time to time, during the reading of the Office services—

Then follows the most important passage in the letter—the passage, in fact, which gives the letter all its value. It is this,—"I extended the expression of that hope to 'some other points of ritual observance,' which I spoke of as drawing their introduction, but as I HAVE THE TIME OF INTRODUCE 'SOME OTHER POINTS OF RITUAL OBSERVANCE.'"

These "other points" were—the use of the Prayer for the Church Militant and the Offertory in verse;—and, the giving out the hymns by the minister instead of the clerk. These were the "other points," and the only other points referred to; and by this Circular the clergy of the whole diocese are placed,—they ought to be—on a level with Islington clergy; and are allowed to exercise their own judgment as to the best time of making these alterations in the Church's Service; which time with hearty approval, till the present excitement fanned by the insults of Trinitarianism shall have almost entirely cooled.—Record.

DEATH OF THE REV. DR. FLITCHER.—We have this moment received the melancholy intelligence of the death of the Rev. Dr. Flitcher, a learned and pious Minister, which had latterly prevailed all hope of his being spared for further usefulness to the Church of Christ, which he had so long faithfully served by his many and varied labours, and by his singular arduousness, and irreproachable consistency. The event has not taken his friends by surprise, but the loss sustained by his family and Church, and in the denomination of which he was an ornament, will not be the less deeply and permanently felt. Few men have succeeded in rendering themselves so generally beloved by all ranks of society as he was known to be. Of his eminent talents and his equipments, his Letters upon Poetry, as well as many valuable single discourses, remain an honourable memorial.—Pat.

THE FREE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—The Pastoral Address by the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland has just been published. It contains a statement of the reasons why they could no longer remain in connection with the State, and points out the duties of those who are separated. The following concluding paragraph gives a view of the position in which the "Free" Church of Scotland considers itself placed:—"Finally, dearly beloved in the Lord, suffer us to remind you that the Lord Jesus is the Head of every man,—of every true believer,—and that those only can faithfully and truly maintain his leadership over the Church who are themselves united to him as their own Head. Let us, as we earnestly treat you to commune with your own hearts and be built,—to ponder the ways of God,—to mark the leadings of his Providence,—and to pray commonly and incessantly for present light and grace to enable you to see and understand present truth, to guide and support you in present duty, and to prepare and strengthen you for present trial. This is manifestly a time when God is making a great work, and probably a short work, in the earth. The powers of good and evil seem warring for a final struggle. The deadly wound of the Antichristian beast seems to be healed, and, closely veiled with infidelity, he advances to the conflict. We speak not now of contests between parties in the Church, or between the Church and the Civil Courts, but of the last great contest between the powers of light and darkness. We believe that the chief effect of our contest has been of a preliminary nature,—that they have been rather forward opponents of principles will grow more intimate than they themselves, and to commence a struggle by which all Europe will yet be convulsed. We would not rashly interpret the will and purpose of God." But it would seem as if the Christian Church, who has been in the light, in the early ages of the Gospel, was on behalf of the prophetic office of Christ, which the Jews refused to admit, and the Gentile Church refused to receive, and the age thereafter, on behalf of his priestly office, which the Antichristian apostasy disowned and denied,—were now called to bear witness, more especially, for the third great office of Christ, that of King of Zion, and Prince of the kings of the earth. Hitherto, the Church of Scotland has been the only Church that has openly and avowedly, in the midst of suffering, stood forward to bear testimony in defence of this Royal office. Well nigh three centuries are past since she first became witness for it. She has often suffered in its defence; and she is called to suffer for it now again. Surely the last day will have surely it is our duty and our wisdom to follow where he leads,—to take our position where he directs,—and to stand still there, waiting to see what the Lord will do. Let us bear our great testimony, as we may be appointed; and, in the meanwhile, let us labour valiantly in rebuilding the walls of our profane Zion, though in trouble and in sorrow, and let us bring forth our witness with shouting,—Grace, grace, unto him, and everlasting glory to Him who is King of Zion, 'King of kings, and Lord of lords.'

We have heard that, in consequence of Lord Aberdeen's Bill, the Rev. Dr. Brown, of Langton, the Rev. Mr. Moncrieff, of Kilmorie, and some others of the middle-men, have either left, or are about immediately to leave, the Establishment. Every variety of Evangelical religion will soon be beyond the pale of the "Restiary."—Witness.

APOTHELOGICAL SCOTCHMEN THE MOST GENERALLY RECEIVED, AND ONE OF THE WORST OF THE TRACTARIAN DOCTRINES.—Perhaps the particular point in their theory, which is received with the most extensive favour, is, that of the "apothecological scotchism" of the clergy who have been banished from the Establishment, something especially gratifying to the innate feelings of the human heart in the idea of possessing a peculiar privilege, a privilege which is (compared with the millions) as scarce; a privilege which is not to be lost; and which is to be defended at all costs.

Dismissing altogether all totally different objects, and readers it impossible that there should in future be any sort of competition or rivalry between the two. Hence it is not at all surprising that the many clerical brethren designated Evangelical, and who would cling to the doctrine of justification by faith, have adopted the views promulgated by the Oxford school on this point, and have been very earnest in their advocacy on the necessity of a regular communion, derived by the line of apostolic succession, to take a man out of the ranks of the lay, and confer on him the ministerial character, at any time, in any place, and under any circumstances.

We believe,—in fact we are certain,—that this line, once embraced with faith, has, innumerable cases, led the recipients into Tractarianism, and in some, less honest than last in Popery.

There is nothing at all difficult to understand in this. The tract, in the Tractarian system, occupies a very important place, and is the centre of many other doctrines indissolubly connected with it. It is the fountain-head and source of all, as some of the Evangelical clergy have attempted to assert; it leaves the mind of the inquirer ending on a high and holy ground.

To one who has a firm hold of the doctrine of justification by faith, the whole theory of apostolic succession is a mere possessing little interest. But in the Tractarian system it is essential, always operative, and the source of all grace and virtue.

That system broadly declares that salvation comes, not by preaching, not by doing, but by the sacraments. It then goes on to say, that the sacraments must be valid to be of the least utility; that to be valid and effectual, they must be administered by one duly empowered to administer them; and that none can be so empowered but by receiving his commission from those who can trace their succession up to the apostles of our Lord, and so to our Lord himself. Fully believing, and fully convinced, that the system is false, the inquirer straight into the bosom of the Romish Church, the only one which can fully and satisfactorily satisfy such a man's necessities.

What would we do, then, with this modern fairy? Moderns, we style it, for we apprehend that until within the last ten years, its very name has scarcely been heard for something more than a century past, at least in the English Church. We would deal with it as I do at Scott and Newton and Simon deal with it; that is, we would not worth a serious discussion. We would deal with it as the apostle Paul dealt with it; for it must have been of some kindred matter that he spoke, when he was carefully warned both his successors; Timothy, not to give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which cause much strife, and which cause much contention, and to avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and vain."

What would we do, then, with this modern fairy? Moderns, we style it, for we apprehend that until within the last ten years, its very name has scarcely been heard for something more than a century past, at least in the English Church. We would deal with it as I do at Scott and Newton and Simon deal with it; that is, we would not worth a serious discussion. We would deal with it as the apostle Paul dealt with it; for it must have been of some kindred matter that he spoke, when he was carefully warned both his successors; Timothy, not to give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which cause much strife, and which cause much contention, and to avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and vain."

The Bishop of Lincoln commenced his triennial visitation on Wednesday last, giving the first day of his Charge in the Cathedral at Lincoln. The Standard Mercury says, "The sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Daley, Perpetual Curate of St. Andrew's, and was one of the most excellent and triumphant refutations of the Tractarianism which has been delivered. The Bishop's Charge was not less so; there was no shirking the question. In the calmest and clearest possible manner, his Lordship reviewed the whole ground of the dispute, taking his stand upon the principles of the Reformation, and pointing to the martyrs as examples. From the Bishops, the decrees of councils, the creeds, &c., all the disputed doctrinal points were very lucidly stated and argued, to the disproof of the old heresy in modern shape." "His Bishop's Charge was not less so; there was no shirking the question. In the calmest and clearest possible manner, his Lordship reviewed the whole ground of the dispute, taking his stand upon the principles of the Reformation, and pointing to the martyrs as examples. From the Bishops, the decrees of councils, the creeds, &c., all the disputed doctrinal points were very lucidly stated and argued, to the disproof of the old heresy in modern shape."

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—The following communication appears in the Ayr Advertiser:—
(To James M'Ilwraith, Esq. of Ayr, Scotland.)
Kilmarnock, May 34, 1848.

My dear Sir,—In reference to our convention respecting the Non-Introsuists, you are aware that I have been opposed to their claims, because I believed, and still believe, that the constitution of such clubs would be injurious to the cause of Christianity, and the tendency of all State religions, unless under the control law,—and the greater cause which can befall the inhabitants of any country; but now that these reverend gentlemen have been assembled in Glasgow, and rely upon the support of their several congregations, they are, of course, in the same position as other Dissenters who are forced of yoke of a State religion to be borne, and who benefit mankind by teaching the Christian religion. They are, therefore, exceedingly welcome to the use of my chapel at Barhill; and if they feel confident that their doctrine are approved by a sufficient congregation, I will, with pleasure, give them land whereon to build a chapel of their own, and a house for their minister.

There is probably no chapel in the kingdom conducted on similar principles. It is my property, and I give the use of it to the Established Church, and to the Seceders from that Establishment,—and to the Congregationalists, who preach doctrine upon alternate Sundays. The practice works well, and many persons regularly attend all the ministers.

When it is remembered that this chapel is situated upon the same form where the Scottish Covenanters were murdered for opinion, it is delightful to see their descendants bearing witness by their practice to the principle,—that the differential doctrines of each sect of every truth, and that the system is false, the inquirer straight into the bosom of the Romish Church, the only one which can fully and satisfactorily satisfy such a man's necessities.

I remain, dear Sir, very faithfully,
Your obedient servant,
RICHARD WARD.

DR. CHALMERS has resigned the Professorship of Divinity in the University of Edinburgh, a step which will give rise to the opening of the vacant events in the church. The annual meeting of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, in which the patronage of the chair is vested.—Ibid.

DR. DAVENANT COLLINGS and MR. HALLAM.—A new college has been established by Doctor Divenant and Mr. Hallam, Messrs. Sewell, Mr. Lord Adair, and other individuals in the diocese of Meath. The Warden and Fellows were addressed at the opening of the college last week, by the Rev. Mr. Sewell. His address is given in the Ecclesiastical Observer of this month. The college is called St. Columba, after an Irish saint of much celebrity; and, at the close of his address, Mr. Sewell ventured the suggestion, that it was owing to blessings bestowed by St. Columba, that, under a lapse of 1,500 years, this college has been, under the Divine blessing, re-established. This college is wholly dependent on voluntary contributions.—See last Chronicle.

NEW BETHNAL-GREEN CHURCH.—Every body has heard of the appeals which were made a year or two ago in favour of the erection of churches at Bethnal-green, and the satisfactory result of the appeals, which would be conferred on the inhabitants, if the good natured friends of Church-extension would only be kind enough to erect in that neighbourhood twelve churches, answering to the twelve apostles, and put under their special guardianship; and last dedicated to them. Well, the appeal for the erection of twelve churches, and the satisfaction of the friends of Church-extension, who are in course of erection; some of them, lately dedicated at St. Paul's, have been for some time open, and the following statement will show the degree of estimation in which they are held by the amount of benefit they are likely to confer.—On the morning of November 17, 1848, at St. Peter's Church, which is one of the twelve churches, there were 194 adults, 146 children, and 4 teachers. At St. James's, the same, which also provides 1,500 sitting, there were 97 adults, 128 children, and 6 teachers. Both churches were crowded, and the services were very interesting. The other six of the intended churches to the Victoria-Park, and the population is not of that poor or depressed character which is so difficult to work upon by any church. In St. Paul's Church, on the morning of November 20, 1848, there were present 265 adults, 194 children, with 5 teachers; and in St. Andrew's there were 40 adults, 138 children, and 5 teachers. Each of these churches has about twelve months, and the attendance was larger than usual. One Sabbath morning in September there were only seven adults present. These are facts. And from these facts it is obvious that the real of extension is ill-directed when employed for the purpose of getting the material fabric of the church, and that it should be employed for the more important and more necessary work of domiciliary visitation, with a view to create a disposition for church-going.—Messenger.

BATHURST WEST RIDING ASSOCIATION. HELD AT BATHURST.—The meeting of this body closed last night, after two days of very full attendance on very interesting services. Messrs. Askwith, Pottenger and Dore presided at the meetings, and the prayers were held each morning at half-past six o'clock, and well attended. Many of the letters from the churches, which were read on Tuesday afternoon, were very encouraging accounts of conversions. The number of converts was 734. There were added by baptism during the year, and, deducting deaths, removals, &c., the net increase in the association amounted to 500. Many churches were visited by the members, and their communications from their Sunday-schools, thereby exhibiting the wisdom and intelligence of Sir A. Graham's Bill. Petitions against the Bill, and a call on all the correct members of the Association, were presented before Parliament, also against the Corn-law as anti-christian and unchristian, were signed by the members on Tuesday morning, from the text: "I Peter ii, 16." As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God." The oldest we have ever heard from the pulpit, as Christian, is to maintain that we are freedom of every kind, to seek that of others, and to do both in the spirit of Christianity. Several very decided resolutions were passed, and many persons were present. We know not what our Episcopal friends will think of one resolution, which recommends for congregational ministers the use of the title "Bishop," in order to

BILLS OF EXCHANGE

BILLS OF EXCHANGE
ON London, with the guarantee of Messrs.
 Gleditsies, Kerr and Co. attached in sums of £50, £100, £200, £300, £400, £500, and £1000, at any sight
 or date, drawn by
ALLAN, PATON AND CO.

NOTICE TO THE NATIVE NOBILITY AND OTHERS.

FOR SALE.
THE small pleasure Steam Boat Lotus. The boat and Engines were built to particular order in London by the celebrated House of William Fairbairn and Co.
For further particulars apply to KELSAI AND GHONE

THOMAS KENNEDY,
OF KILMABNOCK,
Rifle Maker to H. R. H. Prince Albert

AN assortment of Double and Single Barrelled RIFLES, and FOWLING PIECES, of all Bore, and Weights, for sale at the Godowns of the undersigned. Parties interested are requested to apply through their Agents
EGLINTON, McCURE AND CO
Colonists, 17th December, 1842.

REGISTER OFFICE
FOR THE SALE AND PURCHASE OF
COMPANY'S PAPER—BANK SHARES—AND
SHARES IN OTHER JOINT STOCK SOCI-ETIES.—BILLS OF EXCHANGE—BANK OF ENG-LAND NOTES—SOVEREIGNS, AND DOLLARS.
MONEY INVESTED AND LOANS NEGOTIATED.
No. 14, White's Buildings, J. W. MOBERT

THE best INDIGO SEED, in the original seal bags, always on Sale on Commission, by CLARK and SONS, Baguapoola, at the lowest rates.

BARTIGARE AND CO.

BATHGATE AND CO.
INVITE ATTENTION TO THE UNDER
MENTIONED ARTICLES PREPARED
AT THEIR DISPENSARY, 4 AND 5,
AND CORNER FLOREY STREET,

OLD COURT HOUSE STREET.
CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION OF JAMAICA SASSAPARILLA.
CONCENTRATED COMPOUND SYRUP
OF JAMAICA SASSAPARILLA

CONCENTRATED SYRUP OF SENNA.
FLUID MAGNESIA AND LEMON SYRUP.

LAVENDER, HONEY, AND HUNGAR
WATERS.
COLORLESS EFFERVESCING LEMONADE.
TASTELESS CASTOR OIL.

FOR SALE,
AT THE SERAPPORE PRESS,
STORES ON THE DOCK OF NATHAN.

NOTES ON THE BOOK OF NATURE with references to the Power, Wisdom and Goodness of God. Eight Annos.
A brief Account of the Jews. Four Annos.
A brief Sketch of the History of India, pp. 38. Two Annos.

THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT GAZETTE.

THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT GAZETTE is published under the authority of Govt. every Tuesday morning, and contains, in the English and Bengali languages, the Drafts of Acts; the Acts when passed; the Constitutions of the Sudder Durrums and Munsifs; and and the Circular Orders of the Sadler Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, of the Sadler Board, of the Special Commissioners, and of the Superintendent of Police; the Civil appointments made by the Governor or Deputy Governor.

The subscription is EIGHT Rupees a year, payable advance. Subscriptions commence on the 1st of January.

It is circulated in Calcutta, and its neighbourhood, Chanderungore, Chinnurah and Henghly by Prome, without charge; and to other stations by Post, bearing postage, an expense of two annas a cover, or Six Rupees Eight annas a year.

Applications should be addressed to the Editor at Rampore.

Just published from the Serampore Press.
IN TWO VOLUMES,
THE BENGALIEE VERSION

THE GUIDE TO THE CIVIL LAW OF THE PRESIDENCY OF FORT WILLIAM, containing all the unrevoked Regulations, Acts, Constructions, and Circular Orders: to which is prefixed, an Estimate of the Enactment and Rule. Compiled by JOHN CLARK MARSHMAN, and corrected to the 1st March 1843. The Bengali version is added a Glossary of nearly a thousand of the legal Terms used in the Translation of the Regulations. Price 2s. Bound.

Applications may be made to Mr. John Cushman, at Barnes's Press, or to any of the Booksellers of Calcutta.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 454 Vol. IX.]

SERAPPORE: THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14th. 1868.

[Price 5 Cts. weekly, or 10 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.]

OVERLAND MAIL.

THE next steamer with the Mail for Suva is expected to leave Suva on the 21st of October. It is accordingly to be hoped that the latest sale for the dispatch of Letters from Suva, which may be intended for Suva by this steamer, will be sent by the 21st of October.

L. J. H. GREY.

For William, Genl. Post Office, Serap. Post Office Serap.

NEW LAW AGAINST DACCIN.—The British Government, on taking possession of the administration of Bengal in 1773, found the country infested with dacoits, or gang robbers. These Dacoits were represented by the President in Council, as "not being like the robbers in England, individuals driven to such desperate courses by sudden want; they are robbers by profession and even by birth; they are formed into regular communities, and their families subsist by the spoils which they bring home; by they are all therefore alike criminal wretches who have placed themselves in a state of declared war with Government and are therefore wholly excluded from the benefit of its laws." Hence it was deemed necessary to attempt the "suppression and extirpation of Dacoity by regulations dictated by a spirit of rigor and violence, very different from the caution and lenity of other proceedings, and which in some respects involved the innocent with the guilty." It was resolved that the criminal should be executed; that the village of which he was an inhabitant should be fined, and that his family should be sold into slavery, "for the general benefit and convenience of the people."

This rigorous and violent punishment was subsequently commuted to death, transportation and imprisonment, according to the degree of the offence, and a reward of 10 Rupees was ordered to be paid to the Darogah for the apprehension of every Dacoit. But the crime does not appear to have been suppressed, much less extirpated; for we are told in the Preamble to Reg. IX. of 1808, that the "continued prevalence of the crime of Dacoity in some districts, and the importance of suppressing a crime so injurious to the peace and happiness of the community, rendered it necessary that further provisions should be adopted to facilitate the apprehension of Sirdar Dacoits." The reward for apprehending offenders was raised to 500 Rs., and it was enacted that any person accused of the crime should be proclaimed, and required to make his appearance in Court within two months; that if the proclaimed individual was apprehended or surrendered himself after the period stated in the proclamation, the judge, on being satisfied of his identity, and of the fact of his contumacy, should adjudge him to be imprisoned and transported for life. This stringent law has not apparently succeeded in eradicating the crime. In the draft of a law published last week the public are informed that it has been "considered necessary to adopt more stringent measures for the conviction of professional dacoits, who belong to certain tribes, systematically employed in carrying on their lawless pursuits in different parts of the country." It would appear therefore that in the twenty-first year of our administration, the crime of Dacoity, or gang robbery, is still rife, and that our institutions have signally failed to extirpate a crime, which we might naturally suppose would have been among the first which a settled and vigorous Government would succeed in suppressing. Our failure in this respect, which has been so complete, does not appear to have arisen from the want of suitable rewards for the apprehension of dacoits, or of severity in the punishment of them. It is now hoped to mitigate the crime by sentencing to transportation for life any person proved to have belonged to a gang of dacoits; and by enacting that any person accused of the offence of Dacoity, or of having belonged to a gang of dacoits, or of having unlawfully or knowingly received or bought property stolen or plundered by Dacoits, may be committed for trial by any Magistrate, and tried by any Session Judge.

We venture to think that even these more stringent measures, will not be found effectual. If the execution of the offender has been insufficient to deter from the commission of the crime, we cannot see how a less severe punishment will produce a more salutary effect on the minds of these hardened offenders. The crime has continued to flourish, not because it was not denounced by the law, or because the restricted jurisdiction of the courts afforded the guilty chance of escape, but for want of an efficient administrative Police, to track the steps of the dacoits, and pursue them from haunt to haunt till they found the country too hot for them and their profession. Neither has the existence of these professional robbers, now announced in the new law, been brought to light by the exertions of Magistrates or Darogahs. From the depositions which have been submitted to Government and presented to public notice, it appears that dacoities the most atrocious, have been perpetrated for a long series of years, with perfect impunity, by large gangs of hereditary and professional dacoits, under the very nose of the Courts. It was when the establishment which had been so effectually employed in the suppression of Thuggee, was let loose on them, that the fact of their existence in the very heart of the country became clearly established. It is now proposed to extend the Acts which have been passed for the suppression of Thuggee to persons concerned in the perpetration of Dacoity. This is highly proper; but we want also the Machinery which has been used for the extirpation of that crime employed against the crime of Dacoity. If the Dacoits still continue to evade the vigilance of our Police, and while the Police remains on its present inefficient footing, they will continue to do so;—it will be vain to affix the punishment of transportation to the crime, or to make it cognizable by any Magistrate and any Session Judge. It is highly judicious to make all proper arrangements for committing, trying, and punishing the criminals after they are caught, but they will only laugh at this apparatus of justice while we neglect to adopt the most effectual measures for catching them.

THE HUKAMU W THUGGEH.—Our employment has got into more trouble than ever before experienced from defending that good Samaritan son, Akbar Khan. Last Saturday week he published a brief notice regarding the new appointment of Deputy Magistrates, and mentioned the first ten or twelve districts to which they were to be posted, as well as the salaries they were likely to obtain. No one we believe thought much of the intelligence at the time, or even dreamt that the Standard was likely to be brought into difficulties for being the first to announce this bit of news to the world. No one doubted that the new Deputy Magistrates would be appointed to the districts where they were likely to be most needed, and few were ignorant that they were most wanted where there was most opposition between the powerful Indigiplantists and the war loving Zemindars. As to their salaries, there was almost as little novelty in telling us that they were to receive from 500 to 500 Rs. as in announcing that it had been ascertained on the very best authority, that their salaries were to stand somewhere between One Hundred and One Thousand a month. It was apparent that to give them less than 500 Rs. a month, when they were entrusted with Magisterial power, would in fact be to condemn at their making up the deficiency by turning power into money; and so one ever supposed that, being unaccounted, they would receive more than 500 Rs. a month.

The Intelligence has however its secret thrown the Secretariat into a violent perturbation. It was evidently obtained from some person in the vicinity of Government House; and the fact that any public office should be so leaky as to allow political intelligence of such importance to come out, seems to have given as much alarm as the leaking of the silver from China, gave the Son of Heaven. To those who know how little interest is attached to the matter, it will appear surprising that the Official circle should have lost the balance of its mind from such a cause. If the secret thus revealed had referred to the object of this new Army of Exercise, with a train of forty-eight guns; or to the steps which Lord Ellenborough intended to pursue towards the Khazee wallah, and the Gwalior state, or had it even enlightened us as to what his Lordship intended to do with, or without, the Military Board, there might have been some justification of this air in the Office; but to "pick up such a shindy," as the pilots term it, about so paltry a matter as, the names of the districts which were to be first blessed with the presence of a Deputy Magistrate, and the amount of their monthly pay bill, is very ludicrous.

It seems however to have created a far greater commotion than that which arose from the discovery that Tharavady had bribed the Foreign Office, and obtained copies of all the correspondence between Government and the Residents at Ava. We are told that the most searching enquiry has been instituted in the Home office, to discover the delinquent; and that the search having proved ineffectual, it is determined to make a clean sweep of all the clerks, rather than to allow the transgression to remain in it. Of this new practice we say nothing; it will not last long. When the heats of the moment have subsided, the old maxim of English law and common justice, that it is better that ten guilty should essays, than that one innocent person should suffer, will again come into vogue; and the new rule of reading this maxim backward, and considering it better that ten innocent should suffer than that one guilty should escape, will not survive three years. Indeed we do not know but that we are doing very great injustice to the honorable man who preside over that office, let-admitting the suspicion, that they could for a moment have entertained so preposterous an idea.

But if the delinquent be found, we do not see how he can be punished with strict justice. The information was published in the Hurkara of Saturday morning. The Notification forbidding all persons in office to communicate to others—that is, to the Press—any information they had officially obtained, was not promulgated till twelve hours after. That Notification first made it an official offence to give such information as the Hurkara has received. At the time our contemporary obtained it, the communication was, so to speak, innocent,—if not innocent, it was at the farthest a misapprehension, a kind of sin of ignorance, which could not justly be visited with the same punishment as a sin of wilfulness. We put it to the serious consideration of the Home Office whether this would not virtually be to punish men by an ex-post-facto law. If our voice could be heard in that vicinity we would advise the Secretary to let bygones be bygones; to summon the whole office, from the Registrar to the youngest Sectioner, and cause the Notification to be read to them aloud, and then to inform them that if ever they were caught in future infringing it; if they dared to communicate even to their dearest wives, any thing of which they could only have become cognizant officially, were it even the case of the Under Secretary's coat, they would be summarily expelled the office, without benefit of their clergy.

The Hurkara, it appears, has been asked to exculpate particular individuals, and thus reveal their situations. But he very wisely suspects that if this process is repeated, the real culprit will eventually be detected, and he hesitates to adopt it. This is certainly a very philosophical mode of discovering the truth, and is evidently borrowed from the Hindoo Shastras. It is the mode which one of the six Schools of Philosophy recommends for ascertaining who or what is God. The enquirer is required to go from one created object to another saying Tan-no, Tan-no, "this is not He," "This is not He," and thus, succeeds in ascertaining what is not God. But as the unconvicted suspects in the Home Office, consist of a definite number, the result of such a process would speedily be to discover who was the revealer of this state secret. Our contemporary has acted discreetly in rejecting this plan of warning the fact out of him.

THE CALCUTTA CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

We publish a letter from Anglo Vernacular relative to the quotation we made last week from the last number of the Calcutta Christian Intelligencer. The writer seems to think that a subsequent sentence which we did not quote, gives an entirely different turn to the sentences which we copied. We cannot say that it affords any excuse for the sentiment which we felt it our duty to reprobate. It appears indeed to do little more than exhibit the very inconsistent views of the writer. The whole passage reads thus: "It gives us sincere satisfaction to learn that the Bhagwad Panchak in Calcutta is fast losing its declining state; the native students have consulted better for their own interests, than the clique of Europeans who organized the School of the design of giving the boys a complete education through the medium of the vernacular. So may every scheme which is based on narrow minded and partial views. We are warm friends to the diffusion of an elementary education through this vernacular, but no liberal education can be afforded without the study of English. The Watch word of all the true friends of education ought to be Anglo-Vernacularism."

The failure of any attempt to diffuse knowledge through the medium of the vernacular tongue must always be a subject of regret, and cannot upon any reasonable or Christian ground be considered a matter of exultation. What the writer means by "Anglo-Vernacularism," we are unable to comprehend. Does he mean that every English ordinary must also teach the vernacular; or that every indigenous School must have its English teacher; or does he mean that there are to be two distinct classes of schools; the one, vernacular, for the poor; the other, English, for the rich? It is very certain that we cannot give more than one in ten thousand of the Natives of the country the benefit of an English master. At the end of fifteen years, the students of English do not exceed seven thousand, among seventy millions of people. There are no means even of doubling this number; we have reached the limit of our resources. The great bulk of the people, 9999 out of every 10,000, must therefore receive instruction in their own vernacular tongue and in that tongue alone, or remain the victims of ignorance, vice and superstition. That vernacular education should consequently be rendered as complete as possible. To rejoice therefore over the failure of any endeavour to lay the foundation of the complete education which the great body of the people are capable of receiving, through their own tongue, is to express a sentiment which nothing can justify. To say moreover that a plan based upon this principle is narrow minded and partial, appears to us to betray no ordinary degree of narrow mindedness; while to express a hope that every attempt to give a complete education to the people through their own language may fail—but we will not attempt to characterize it.

The education we are able to give the people in their own tongue may not be so liberal, or so complete as that which we aim to give to the students of our English Schools; but completeness is a relative term, and admits of many degrees. The instruction which the great majority of the students in the English Seminaries in Calcutta, are likely to receive, is itself anything but complete; it is much more incomplete when compared with the education of our Universities, than the instruction which may be communicated through the vernacular is, when compared with it. In neither instance is there any cause for contempt, nor would it be justifiable to wish that either of these inferior efforts to communicate knowledge should perish, because there are other institutions in which superior knowledge was communicated. The true philanthropist will take a comprehensive survey of the circumstances of the country, and adapt his measures to the position of the people, and to the extent of his means, giving to those who have talent and opportunity for the acquisition of English, the complete education which has been given through the English language; and to those who can receive a declining state; the native students have most complete education of which it can be made the instrument.

We should be happy were we able to see richer fruits than are now apparent of this liberal and complete English education which has been given to the natives during the last fifteen years, at an expense of not less than 30 lakhs of Rs., or 300,000 £. The great advantage of instruction in English is said to be, that it furnishes the student with the desire as well as the means of indefinite improvement, and enables him, after he has left the College, to complete his education by subsequent study. The efforts of the last fifteen years, have doubtless placed fifty hundred Natives in this elevated and advantageous position; if they have not done so, they must have signally failed. If they have not imparted to fifty hundred Natives a desire to keep themselves abreast of the age; and enabled them to understand and to appreciate a newspaper, they have done little or nothing. A newspaper is the first intellectual want of civilized man. Every body reads it with more or less avidity, except statesmen and Cabinet Ministers. Yet we find that the entire number of copies of the Hurkara, the Herald, the Calcutta Star, the Eastern Star, the Englishman, and the Friend of India, subscribed for by the natives, does not exceed 50 hundred and thirty. Thus the whole sum devoted to the purchase of English newspapers, by the enlightened Natives of Bengal, in imparting our language to whom we have spent thirty lakhs of Rupees, does not exceed 6000 Rs. a year, or 500 Rs. a month. We cannot account for this singular phenomenon on the ground of their poverty; for the youths who have crowded to our seminaries belong to the wealthy and patrician classes of society; and we will venture to affirm that twenty, yes, thirty times the sum they devote to Newspapers is annually expended by them in marriage ceremonies, in funeral rites, and in idle and superstitious ceremonies.

THE DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF BENGAL.—The Englishman on Friday last adverted to Lord Ellenborough's recent order forbidding the officers of Government to make public documents or information which had come officially into their possession, without the previous consent of Government—which in its present mood will never be given. He stated that numerous conjectures were afloat as to the origin of the prohibition, and drew the conclusion that some particular circumstance had been made public which was intended to remain in the strictest of official secrecy. Then follows the following remarkable passage:

"We have indeed heard of plans of finance being damaged by the transactions of individuals, and as information on such subjects is a marketable commodity, it is more likely to be sought for than what relates to other public business. But there are methods of dividing the information of the authorities which do not involve a breach of confidence on the part of those to whom official papers are entrusted. The things which pass as an expedition will not march till they hear the call of a certain bird. The Bengalee brokers, though perhaps not equally superstitious, are equally watchful of the signs of the times, and the insinuations of a rise or fall in the public revenue. What the exact means are which in their opinion point the way to fortune is unknown to us, but we are told that they neither watch the flight of eagles like the Romans, nor that of partridges like the Tingis, nor is it either the flight, or the cackling of the Swirl to which they attend, but there is a certain bird whose movements they closely follow when engaged in following their own nest, and by attending to what he picks up, and what he rejects, they draw conclusions which, as they assert, are invariably found correct. The superintendent is probably an idle one, but it is impossible to remove persons out of it who have made money by attending to it."

The plain meaning of this paragraph is, that the Honourable Mr. Bird, the Deputy Governor of Bengal, and when the last financial measures were adopted, the President of the Council of India, took advantage of the knowledge which his situation gave him, to "father his nest," by speculating in the public securities of the Government of which he was in Calcutta the Head; and that the Native brokers, by carefully watching "what he rejected and what he picked up," and by "closely following his movements, were enabled to make money." In what light the Englishmen may view such conduct we know not, but we think there can be no diversity of opinion as to its baseness. An individual who is capable of thus turning his official knowledge to his own private advantage, must be ipse facto, incapacitated for any official trust, and totally unfit to direct the movements of the state. The higher the agent, the higher and purer must be the objects he sets before him, and the motives by which he is guided. To suppose that the Head of Government is capable of making his public measures, which ought to be dictated solely by a view to the public interests, subservient to his own private profit, is to suppose a total disorganisation of the administration. We will not condescend to assert that the charge is utterly without foundation; it has only to be mentioned to be scouted; but we cannot suppress our astonishment that any public journal should venture, without the clearest evidence, to bring so heinous a charge against a gentleman of the most honourable feeling, much less against one who sustains so high a position in the Government of the country. If the Englishman believes he has any solid grounds for such an imputation, let him bring them forward openly; and let the charge be fairly and honestly sifted; if not, let him at once withdraw it, and make the only amends in his power, by acknowledging, with contrition, that he has been misled, by some base and unprincipled traducer. Surely a long life of integrity in the public service, an unstained reputation of forty years, ought to have exempted Mr. Bird from the possibility of so degrading and unfounded an insinuation.

THE LATE LIEUT. LOVEDAY.—The Rev. Mr. Loveday, a Chaplain on this establishment, has recently published a letter in the Dakhi Gazette to the Editor of the Bombay Times in defence of his deceased brother, the late Lieut. Loveday, the Political Officer in charge of Kheilat when it was surrendered to the insurgent Beloches. The Bombay Editor, in the history of the Afghan campaign which he is publishing in his own journal, had written in disparaging terms of Lieut. Loveday, chiefly on the authority of Mr. Mason, the author of Travels in the countries to the West of the Indus, who was a companion of the deceased officer at the time of the siege, and in his subsequent captivity. The object of the communication we now notice is to vindicate his character as a man and as an officer from the aspersions of Mr. Mason. We have carefully read through Mr. Mason's work, and noted down the passages in which he alludes to Lieut. Loveday's conduct, in order to compare the statements with the charge. The statements required for the perusal of the volume must be excused for this protracted notice of the subject.

Mr. Charles Mason, was formerly in the Company's Artillery, but was selected for his talents for staff employ, in which he appears to have acquitted himself with such satisfaction, that a promise of his discharge was held out to him. The fulfilment of it however was so long delayed that he steeled the liberty of taking his own dismissal, without leave asked or given. We gather from his works that he is a man of considerable ability, and of cultivated mind; and a keen observer of men and things; that he is moreover a man of eccentric habits of mind and body, which his long residence among rude and barbarous tribes has not served to correct; that he has a difficult and somewhat impatient temper, and is not without a very considerable share of vanity. He considers his services to have been underrated by Government, when the expedition was sent across the Indus into a country with which he was familiar; and he seems to have deeply felt the refusal of one of those confidential posts, which in our administration is never conferred except upon a proven servant. He has therefore a strong bias against all the officers, without exception, who were employed in political duty in Afghanistan, and he has treated their character and their memory with little consideration. He has also positive grievances to complain of, which contributed to embitter his feelings in reference to Belochistan. He was made a prisoner at Quetta by Capt. Bean, the Political Agent, on suspicion of being a Russian spy; a measure which it is impossible to defend. It is true that Mr. Mason was travelling unaccompanied through Belochistan; that he was on terms of intimacy with the chiefs of the land both hostile and friendly, and that he appeared at Kheilat a short time before the outbreak. But he had previously been employed in the British service; he was well known to the Officers of our Government; he had nobly assisted Lieut. Loveday in the defence of Kheilat; he had shared the rigours of his captivity; he was the bearer of letters from Lieut. Loveday and from the Chiefs who were then in the ascendant, and had engaged faithfully to return to them. He was most anxious to do so, though at the peril of his life. In these circumstances, his arrest as a spy, upon vague suspicion, will admit of no justification, and his subsequent expulsion from every charge, after a minute and searching enquiry, leaves us no option but to attribute his detention to a wanton exercise of power.

The spirit and tone of the Rev. Mr. Loveday's vindication of his deceased brother are, in the highest degree objectionable. He scarcely ever alludes to Mr. Mason, but as a criminal. We seldom remember to have seen a paper in which one human being was treated by another with such bitter scorn. The Rev. Gentleman seems altogether to have overlooked how incompatible it was with his own sacred profession, to indulge in terms of abuse, under any provocation. He has entirely forgotten how fatal the interposition of the advocate, is to the cause he espouses. If we did not know from other sources that Mr. Mason's charges against Lieut. Loveday were unfounded or exaggerated, we should be strongly led to believe that truth from the vindictive spirit of the present letter; for a cause which stands in need of such weapons of defence, must be indeed desperate. In his letter, Mr. Loveday day upon every endeavour to force on the reader's attention the fact that Mr. Mason's description from the army stamps his character with infamy, and renders all his testimony, in reference to the Political Officers employed beyond the Indus, utterly unworthy of credit. We fully admit that the well being and even the existence of an army depends upon the prevention of desertion; which is on that account justly considered the first of military crimes. But there may be circumstances in individual cases which would go far to soften down its moral turpitude. We are not going to palliate the crime of desertion, but we protest against its being considered, as a proof that the deserter is incapable of ever after speaking the truth. Though Mr. Mason did use unwarrantable means for relieving himself from a position which, to a man of his cultivated mind must have been intolerable, he may, after all, be a man of generous and honourable feelings, and of the strictest veracity. There are many other dispositions of mind besides that in which desertion originates, which would render a man's testimony extremely suspicious. A feeling of blind rancour, and inveterate hostility is likely to cast greater doubt on the character of assertions than the mere fact of their being made a deserter. So far therefore as the Rev. Mr. Loveday has stated the defence of his brother on the moral degradation to which he considers Mr. Mason's military guilt to have reduced him, he has done it much harm.

The charges brought by Mr. Mason against Lieut. Loveday may be classed under three heads; his oppressive conduct towards the people; his inactivity during the siege of Kheilat, and the measures pursued by him towards the disinherited princes, Nussur Khan. And here it should be remarked at the outset, that Mr. Mason's opinion of Lieut. Loveday has evidently been influenced by the evil impression made on his mind by the very unnatural position in which he stood at Kheilat. They were the only two Englishmen at that place at the time. Mr. Mason arrived there in the afternoon, but did not wait on the Political Agent till the next day. He was informed that Lieut. Loveday had remarked this omission and said he was a "low fellow." The remembrance of this remark was never obliterated. The next day, he called on Lieut. Loveday and was asked to dinner. He had no watch, or he was unpunctual. When he arrived, he found that Lieut. Loveday had died, but that some thing had been left for him. He was sent home on a Camel, and asked to breakfast the next morning. He refused to go, and the parties continued to reside in the same town without seeing each other, till the siege commenced. Meanwhile the most unfavourable reports were given to Mr. Mason of the observations made on him by Lieut. Loveday, which he formerly unfortunately received with implicit credit. The estrangement was thus rendered bitter, and Mr. Mason's mind became so deeply tainted with prejudice against the young officer, as to throw a degree of suspicion on all his representations regarding him.

He states that immediately on his arrival he found that actions so singular were imputed to him, and of a nature so different from what are usually looked for from British officers, that he was disinclined to credit them. Immediately after, he calls them anæmies. He states that during the siege Lieut. Loveday dared not move from his house from the feelings with which he knew he was regarded; and that he did not takes personal charge of the siege because of his unpopularity. But the only instance adduced of misconduct is his having let loose his dogs on the people, who hold this animal in abhorrence. We are told that he had two ferocious animals of the bull dog species; that a labourer who had been forced to work at his house and had incurred his displeasure, was worried to death by the dog which was let loose on him; and that "the dread of vengeance limited the expression of public feeling to low and sullen murmurs, but rumour spread the catastrophe with rapidity over the country, and their indignation was loudly avowed and vengeance determined." We are further informed on this subject that the Daroga, Gool Mahomed, who is supposed to have ordered him to be murdered, said that his blood boiled at the sight of him, as he had "fed his dogs on human flesh." To disprove the general charge of tyrannical conduct, the Rev. Mr. Loveday adduces his brother's own letters, which certainly exhibit a very amiable disposition, and a regard for the Natives perfectly incompatible with the character which Mr. Masson has drawn of him. Mr. Loveday also gives satisfactory evidence that he had but one dog, and that it was a pet bull terrier. This evidence is much more satisfactory than that of Mr. Masson, and we are strongly inclined to believe that the charge of unpopularity, arising from personal misconduct, has been effectually refuted. "That charge is rendered still more improbable by the conduct of the people, whom these enormities are said to have enervated to madness. After the capture of the town, when Lieut. Loveday was without protection and entirely at their mercy, he was actually allowed to remain for some time with little molestation, in his own house, which he could not have defended. Had he rendered himself so obnoxious to the town and country, the infuriated rebels would have torn him to pieces in the first moment of victory.

Of his conduct during the siege, we have two versions, his own and that of Mr. Masson, and they differ diametrically from each other. Mr. Masson says that he did not personally take charge of the siege, though urged to do so, on account of his unpopularity; that he took no interest in the defence of the town; that from the commencement of the revolt he was overpowered by a language which, except at momentary intervals, apparently incapacitated him for any efforts of mind or body, and to such an extent that his Hindoo servant Sampat in vain endeavored to rouse him; in fact, that the siege of Khelat was marked by precisely the same inactivity and submission to the current of circumstances which subsequently proved so fatal to the army at Cabul. He states moreover that after a treaty had been made with the insurgents, Shah Nusse, endeavored to break it off and to maintain his post, and in this was opposed by Lieut. Loveday, who maintained constant intercourse with the rebels, making arrangements with them for the deposition of Shah Nusse, at the same time that he manifested the warmest friendship for him, and indulged in personal familiarities; and that the Shah asked if all Europeans were equally unmanly. Mr. Masson also affirms that the Shah did not desert Lieut. Loveday, but that Lieut. Loveday deserted him.

A letter of that officer quoted by his brother in which he details the progress and result of the siege, gives however a very different view of the case. Lieut. Loveday says:

"Shah Nusse, soon to have obtained accurate intelligence regarding the attack on Quetta, but falling in their atttempt, the whole retreated to Mastung, from whence they returned to Khelat and arrived here on the morning of the 24th ultimo. Shah Nusse Khan had previously been apprised of the intention of marching against Mastung, but when he heard of the advance, he broke up his camp and took post in the town, instead of one thousand men and five hundred guns, he brought only three hundred men, and three-fourths were British. I had lost thirty men, and took charge of the Western wall, and Mastung was, while the other garrisons were placed in charge of his brother, who had been absent, an entire day. As soon as a rebel arrived (stated to be three thousand), they commenced the attack by a few musketry and musketeers from across the river and on the plain, and the British wall was not contained all day, and in a few hours at night, they withdrew with a loss of eighteen killed and wounded, whilst ours amounted to none within the walls.

"The day of the 25th passed over quietly, only a few straggling shots. I went twice to the walls, issued ammunition, and gave rewards and promises in abundance. As soon as it grew dark, the enemy commenced the attack with vivacity, their efforts being again directed against the Eastern gate and the tower to the South. When a report was brought to me that they had occupied the Western wall in charge of the Frenchmen, Nishan, and Jukh Ibrahim, I sent of a Hindustani party to their assistance, who, when they reached the wall, found the rebels were back with less, for I saw a mass of dead at the foot of the ladder. Some thirty of the enemy had, however, not fallen, but falling they expectant of, were soon made prisoners. From their condition it appeared, that they were very much exhausted, and beyond doubt, that the loss in charge of the wall, whom they had attacked their extreme, had terrified them to plant their ladders there, and helped them to climb. The following morning, Shah Nusse, who came to me in the evening of the 26th and said he had no hope of holding the place, that the detachment sent through all, with exception of the thirty or forty men with his brother-in-law. I proposed that he should retire with the British, but he refused to do so, and he proposed making terms whilst yet in his power. The negotiations lasted two days, the result of which was that he should retire with his property to Baghlan, whilst I was expressly stipulated that I should have free permission to remain here, or return to Khelat with due protection for escort and baggage, and Shah Nusse, agreed not to accompany him, but if I should see good, he might, but he had signed a formal declaration renouncing all claim to the Mastung, or connection with us.

Shah Nusse Khan retired on the 21st, whilst the son of Mehar Khan was placed on the Mchmal, under the same title of Nusse Khan. He has expressed no interest in the place, all he wants is here. I have recommended him to send a Valiant to Khelat, and shall remain in the north in the hope of being able to assist him and good-if war, I must of course return, and, though I anticipate no danger to myself or men, yet I dare not say I will surrender my property.

Shah Nusse Khan has behaved manly; all he asked for was to be allowed to remain here, and to be allowed to see the result of the war, and the satisfaction of us, would have been a great boon. I have thought that in danger here, yet to do so was my duty, it was adopted it.

W. M. LOVEDAY.

It is impossible to reconcile these conflicting statements. It is a question of veracity between two authorities which can be decided only by other evidence obtained after the reconquest of the place by our own officers. Mr. Masson's vanity which is very egregiously displayed in his book, may have led him to estimate his own services in the siege too highly; and his prejudices may have led him to underestimate those of Lieut. Loveday. On the other hand, Lieut. Loveday does appear to have despaired of holding out, with his handful of sepoy, and a few treacherous allies, against a whole country in arms; and there is every reason to believe that, under no circumstances could he have maintained his post against such fearful odds. There is however sufficient evidence from Lieut. Loveday's own correspondence to show that, however estimable he may have been in private life, and however skilled in the Native language, and anxious for the improvement of the people, he was not exactly the man for the crisis which had arisen.

As it respects his conduct towards the son of Mehar Khan, then in arms, and his adherents, there can be no doubt that he pursued the most stringent measures to put down the insurrection, and to restore tranquillity. Mr. Masson says on this subject that after Nusse Khan, whom he pursued in person, had escaped him, the tribes who afforded him shelter, were subject to general plunder, and that some were executed so infamous that those present spoke of them with horror. This information is derived from Native reports, from those who were opposed to the British authorities, and who probably falsified that the most ready way of pleasing Mr. Masson was to decry Lieut. Loveday. We are also told that he said he would have blown Gool Mahomed from a gun if he had caught him, and that he took credit for having cleared the Afghans off by executing the chief in this mode. Of these latter statements we can say nothing; but there is evidence that he pursued the severest measures towards the fugitive Khan and his followers, and reduced them to the greatest straits. To the officers appointed to negotiate with them, they complained that Lieut. Loveday had set a price on the head of Nusse Khan. He doubtless thought it his duty to adopt the sharpest measures to extinguish the rebellion; and the hatred he incurred among the insurgents may be only an additional evidence of his zeal, however misplaced, as a public servant. But his fatal error consisted in the appointment of a Native as the farmer of the Moostung district, who goaded the people to rebellion by his oppressions, and brought the deepest odium on the British name. The people of that district at length rose in arms, and Lieut. Loveday's favourite moonshoe was the first victim of their rage. This gleam of success augmented their hopes and their confidence, and within a few days the country, which might apparently have been kept in subjection by a thousand troops and a few guns, passed away from our rule.

We have thus endeavored to exhibit as impartial a view of the case as possible. The absence of all independent evidence to corroborate the assertions of Mr. Masson and the Rev. Mr. Loveday is a calamity. Mr. Masson's statements regarding Lieut. Loveday, are not weakened in the smallest degree by the fact that he deserted from the ranks of the army; but they are seriously affected by the strong prejudice which he had imbibed against that officer, and must therefore be received with considerable allowances. On the other hand the defence is lamentably weakened by the unhappy spirit of destruction which pervades it, and which is almost enough to ruin the best of causes. Still we are disposed to think from a careful perusal of all that has been written on both sides of the question, that the charge of personal violence towards the natives is disproved by satisfactory testimony; that the imputation of indecision and inactivity during the siege, rests upon firmer ground, and that Lieut. Loveday was placed in circumstances to which his mind was not equal; and that the severe measures which he pursued against the youthful son of Mehar Khan, though adopted from a sense of public duty, were injudicious in themselves, and insuspicious in their result.

CHINA.—Intelligence has been received from China to the beginning of August. The treaty duly ratified by the Chinese authorities has been dispatched to England. The Regulations for the future management of the trade in China, as well as the Tariff of duties to be paid to the Chinese Government have been definitely arranged and made public. They have the singular merit of giving general satisfaction. This is more remarkable, as they have been drawn up by Mr. Henry Pottinger, without any aid from the mercantile community, who appear throughout the negotiations to have stood aloof from his Excellency, and left him to the resources of his own mind and experience. The Tariff is justly described as a noble specimen of Commercial legislation. It is based upon soundest principles.

entire principles. The duties are fixed upon a moderate scale, and are calculated to afford every encouragement to the trade. While they benefit the foreign merchant, they will be found eventually not less favourable to the interests of the Chinese Exchequer, which is likely to draw a much larger revenue from the augmented traffic which they will promote, than was obtained under the old system of high and arbitrary duties. The port charges which formerly fell so heavily upon smaller vessels, have also been fixed at a reasonable rate; and all those extraneous charges to which the trade was subject, when the Chinese were treated as outside barbarians, will entirely cease. The readiness with which the Chinese Government has agreed to so radical a change in its commercial system, and to the reduction of duties, which is cannot but regard as detrimental to its interests, is not the least marvellous feature in this transaction.

The arrangement now made has effected an entire revolution in the system of dealings with a people who cling more than Conservative tenacity to whatever has the sanction of established custom. The trade which was limited to one port is now extended to five. The whole of the eastern Coast, embracing the provinces most distinguished for population, enterprise and wealth, is thrown open to intercourse with foreigners. Instead of being limited in their dealings to a close corporation of Hong merchants, foreigners have now free access to all merchants. These changes in the external relations of China cannot fail to produce great changes in the interior of the country among the people themselves; to create new wants and new interests in the empire; and to associate the preservation of those interests with the continuation of this trade. The improvements now effected will diffuse new life among the industrious classes in China, impart fresh animation to the spirit of enterprise, and thus render the disruption of intercourse at any future time, difficult, if not dangerous to the Government. Neither is it possible to estimate the political effect which may result from the establishment of a new and extensive intercourse between the civilized world, and this vast empire, teeming with energy and ingenuity.

The Regulations established for the management of the trade at the various ports, are simple, intelligible and just; and appear to be well calculated, by the spirit of equity which pervades them, to prevent any collision between the Chinese and foreigners, and to render their mutual intercourse, harmonious. Much will depend upon the temper of the Consuls, who will be placed in a delicate and invidious position between the haughty but subdued Chinese, and the haughty and triumphant English; and it will require much tact to reconcile the minds of the Chinese authorities to the principle of equality on which our intercourse is now based. The Consuls are likely to have no difficulty. The labours thrown on them by the Regulations are more than it is possible for a single individual to manage; and the Consular establishments will soon require to be strengthened.

The Regulations and the Tariff make no allusion to the Opium trade, and this was the immediate cause of the last war. But it appears that Sir Henry Pottinger is resolved to discourage this contraband traffic to the utmost of his power. He has forbidden Opium to be stored at Hong Kong. This has given umbrage to the Opium merchants, who have consequently expressed their unwillingness to rely on the Leland. He has also determined that the Consuls shall afford no countenance whatever to the British vessels employed in smuggling, or evading the payment of the just dues of the Chinese Government, and he has directed them to take immediate steps for intimating the fact to the Chinese authorities. If the traffic in opium be included in the term smuggling—of which there can be little doubt—the British officers now for the first time established in Chinese ports are not only forbidden to give any support to it, but are enjoined to use every effort to eradicate it. Thus the British authorities in China are devoting all their energies to the suppression of a trade which the British Parliament has authorized, and which the British authorities in India are employed in nourishing. This anomaly cannot long be suffered to continue. The necessity of discouraging the contraband trade in China must speedily lead to the relinquishment of the Opium monopoly by the Government of India, and the substitution of an export duty in its stead.

It is suspected that the harmony of our intercourse with the Chinese will not be of long continuance, and that we must prepare for a second and more sanguinary conflict at no distant period. The Chinese, it is said, though humbled to the dust, have still unshaken confidence in their own strength, and attribute their late discomfiture to circumstances which they are able to remove. Some month or two ago it was stated that the whole empire resounded with warlike preparations, and we now learn that the Bogue Forts have been rebuilt and made stronger than ever; and that every effort is made to turn the experience of the last war to account by introducing improvements into the manufacture of arms. The Emperor has yielded to circumstances with an apparent grace, but with internal anguish; and this is no matter of surprise. It must have been with feelings of more than ordinary bitterness that the haughty monarch of one third of the human race, who had been accustomed to treat foreign nations with the most sovereign contempt, submitted to ransom his empire by a heavy tribute, and affixed his signature to a treaty dictated by the outside barbarians under the walls of the ancient capital, after a series of unchequed triumphs. The proud soul of the Tartar sovereign must have boiled with indignation as he traced his name with his vermilion pencil on that humiliating document. That he should make preparations to try the issue of a second war with us, is not to be wondered at. Nothing however is more likely to postpone this conflict to an indefinite period, than the establishment of a large and beneficial commerce, which shall diffuse wealth and content among his subjects, and render them unwilling to lose these advantages. Nothing so likely to hasten it as the continued prosecution of a contraband traffic in the drug which the Cabinet of Peking considers so fatal to the welfare of the people. If we have a second war, it will probably originate in the outrages committed along the coast by the opium smugglers.

WEEKLY REPTOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7.

An advertisement, which appeared in the last Chinese Gazette, states the quantity of salt to be stored at the various public depots at 511 lakhs of tan. Supposing Government to resolve on the purchase of two tan and a half upon each tan, bought at a little more of a million and a half tan, then, upon a single article.

— The Madrid papers give us reason to hope that about 180 tons of the loss of the Argyle, is destined for Salamanca. It is long however in arriving.

— There is news from China to the end of July. Hong Kong has been erected into a Colony of the Crown, by Letters Patent, and a Capital is to be designated Victoria. The whole of the debts of the Hong merchants have been liquidated, not however without subjecting the chief of them to large sacrifices. The General Regulations for the conduct of the trade and the Tariff have been published, the former we have placed among our selections; and it was expected that the four cession ports, which are to be the resort of British merchants under the treaty, would be open in the beginning of September after an Imperial Edict had been received from Peking. In the Proclamation issued on the publication of the commercial treaty, Sir Henry Pottinger gives the following very judicious assurances to those trading to China of his determination rather to exceed the powers vested in him, than to allow the spirit of the arrangement to be violated. "At the same time, it is the duty of the Governor, in the most possible and unobscured situation in which he has been placed by the course of events, to distinctly intimate, that he is determined, by every means at his disposal, to see the provisions of the Commercial Treaty fulfilled by all who choose to engage, in future, in Commerce with China, and that, in any case, where he may receive well-grounded representations from Her Majesty's Consuls, or from the Chinese Authorities, that such provisions of the Commercial Treaty have been evaded (or have been attempted to be so), he will adopt the most stringent and decided measures against the offending parties; and, where his present powers may not fully authorize and sanction such measures as may seem to him fitting, he will respectfully trust, that the Legislature of Great Britain will hold him indemnified for adopting them, in an emergency directly compromising the National Honour, Dignity, and Good Faith in the execution of the government of China, and in the eyes of all other Governments."

— The last letters from Berchemper state that Ensign Kent, a fine young officer, has just died of a "zine day's" Berchemper fever. This is the fifth officer who has fallen a victim within a few months to the insububity of that station. Government has very wisely determined that no young officer shall be allowed, except under the guarantee of relatives, to do duty at Berchemper, and this for the health of his pure. For the health of his body, no youth ought to be sent to do duty at Berchemper.

— Sir Jasper Nicolls has, we find, taken his passage on the January Steamer from Bombay.

— The last arrival from China has brought us the first numbers of a new journal called the Shen-chow, which has just been started there. This makes the fourth English paper published in China.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 8.

— The interesting ceremony of presenting new Colours to Her Majesty's 10th Regiment now in the Fort, took place in the Fort yesterday afternoon. The very appropriate and impressive address made by His Excellency Sir Hugh Gough on the occasion, will be found in another column. In the evening, the Regiment entertained Sir Hugh and Lady Gough and a large party at a ball and supper.

— The Daily Gazette gives a very dismal account of the health of the troops at Sokli. The number in hospital was 618, besides those in the lines who are absent from duty on account of debility. One Surgeon, two Assistant Surgeons, and thirteen officers are suffering from fever and dysentery. The Artillery are able to man two guns only, and the three Regiments could not muster more than 800 men fit to bear arms. H. M. 13th Light Infantry is treated in a new way, or two to this station, where the Regiment is likely to suffer more from the effects of the climate than is suffered from the hostility of the Afghans.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9.

— The Relief of the Army in the approaching cold weather has not been officially published, but it has transpired; and we learn with surprise that three Regiments now at half battle stations are to be removed to other half battle stations, and thus be subjected for two or three years more to diminished allowances. It is to be hoped that this act of injustice, will be remedied before the programme of the Relief is promulgated. While this most unjust, most arbitrary, most preposterous Order continues to disgrace our Military Code, it should be made as little oppressive as possible. Lord Ellenborough as the danger just given to him in Calcutta, states that he is coming out, he informed the Directors that he intended to take special care of the interests of the army. As it is to be hoped therefore, that he will not fail to send home his own protest against the continuance of this heavy grievance.

— Some years ago the Court of Directors in its wisdom decided that a man was unwelcome to all the debt contracted for his wife, while a spinster. It therefore became necessary for every man wishing to become a benedict to enquire whether the young lady's school bills had been paid. The principle has just been handed from the Court. A gentleman has been sent for a debt contracted by his wife during her spinsterhood, and the plaintiff has been awarded.

— The Queen Steamer has arrived at Bombay with General Simpson on board, but without the Hon. Mr. Maddock. All conjectures regarding the object of his visit are therefore at an end. He did not leave Calcutta to restore the Amers of Seide.

— The Victoria Steamer left Bombay on the morning of the 7th of August for Goa. The Calcutta regular Dawit of the 10th and the Express of the 14th arrived before her departure.

The number of letters and newspapers sent by this opportunity is as follows:—Papers, 9784; Letters, 55,655. Total covers, 45,397.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 11.

— The Calcutta Gazette of Saturday evening publishes an order for the assembling of an army on the banks of the Jumna near Agra, under the personal command of the Commander-in-Chief, to be called the Army of Exercise. It is to consist of 4 troops of Horse Artillery and 11 Companies of Foot Artillery, 8 Companies of Sappers, 3 Regiments of Dragoons, 9 Regiments Regular and 1 of Irregular Cavalry, and the Body Guard, 3 Regiments of European and 3 of Native Infantry; in all 17,000 men. The assembling of so large a force at a large expense for the mere purpose of exercises is so unusual, and the state of the public finances renders the establishment of so expensive a precedent so improbable, that the object is likely to partake more of a political than a military character. It is probably intended rather to produce an impression on the disaffected, than to afford our own Officers a lesson in the art of manoeuvring huge bodies of men.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that Mr. Clerk, the present Lieut. Governor of the North West Provinces, positively goes home at the beginning of next year, presently in company with the Jasper Nicolls, and that the Governor General names charge of the North West Provinces.

— The Bombay World is dead. The babe seems to have been smothered to death in the fourth month of its brief existence. A week or two ago, it complained of being "deluged with water," which it could not make up its mind how to dispose of. From the effects of this deluge it appears never to have recovered, and the next morning we have it, in the bills of mortality. It was chiefly remarkable for its warm eulogies of Lord Ellenborough.

— The only intelligence from Lahore is that General Arlidge has leave of absence for twenty days to visit Peshawar and Ludlow; and that General Court has been permitted to resign the Sahib service, and intended to embark with his family on the Sutlege for Bombay. The reconciliation between the powerful minister and the noble occupant of the Lahore throne, is said to be complete.

— The latest letters from Sukkur are of the 26th instant. The number of the sick and the dying was increasing daily. Of the 53th, not fewer than 630 were in hospital. The whole number sent for duty exceeded a thousand.

— The Northampton Advertiser states, that Dr. Lane does not vacate his situation at the Eye Infirmary in consequence of the increase which has been made to his salary as Private Secretary to the Governor. The salary of this latter office has been raised to 1600 Rs. inclusive of all emoluments.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12.

— The Star publishes letters from the Benares and the Tirhoot districts, which give rather an unfavorable account of the probable out-turn of the present Indigo season. But partial failures in particular localities, will not alter the general character of the season, which is one of extraordinary abundance.

— Not a newspaper from any quarter has reached us this morning, a most unusual occurrence, to be accounted for only by a very extensive fall of the river. It is to be feared that the post will be so much cut up thereby as to interfere with our hopes of receiving the Express by the 18th. In our own neighborhood we have had a rich abundance of rain since the full moon, and the prospects of the husbandman have been brightened.

— Further particulars are given in the papers of the robbery committed at the office of Messrs. Turner, Stopford and Co. A police officer and two persons were going their round about four in the morning, and on passing the door of that office, perceived a suspicious looking man there. He went up to the gate and saw a bag lying there, and took it up, which the robber endeavored to snatch from, but he was himself secured by the men in attendance, and a large number of bank notes were found about his person. The bag was full of money. Another bag of money was also found in the stable; the whole sum being about 6500 Rs. It seems that the robbery, who was a burkunda, had got a false key made, and with it had opened the iron safe in which the money was lodged. The case has been made over to the Magistrate, and will doubtless be handed up to the Supreme Court.

— A case of Forgery has also been brought before the Chief Magistrate. Mr. J. C. Sotherland had accepted a draft for two thousand Rupees, and when it was presented for payment was found to have been altered to Seven thousand.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13.

— The Bombay papers expect the August Mail before the 15th and the 16th of this month. We ought therefore to receive it on the 17th, at the earliest on the 18th. The roads have however, evidently been much injured by the late rains, as the Bombay Mail which arrived yesterday, has been thirteen days on the road.

— The Madras Spectator late received, states that the sum of 1500 Rs. a month to which the Court of Directors have just raised the salary of the Private Secretary of the Governor of Madras, is to include the whole amount which that office may draw from the Treasury, whatever other situation he may hold. Dr. Lane, will therefore continue his services at the Eye Infirmary, without receiving any additional allowance for it.

— His Excellency Sir Hugh Gough, the Commander-in-Chief, embarked on the Steamer at Calcutta yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock, and proceeded to the Upper Provinces. He is accompanied by the members of his own family and Staff, and by Major General Smith, the Adjutant General of the Queen's troops, and his Lady, Major-General Sir John Erskine, the Deputy Adjutant General of the army.

— A correspondent of the Star in the Express of this day, has simply advised the Governor General to dismiss Col. Glenham from his post of Commissioner of the Sagar and Nerbudda Territories, and Bundelkhand, and to appoint Major Leach to the office. The summary removal of all the officers employed in those territories, which is attributed, we believe, without the smallest foundation, to Col. Glenham, has brought a master's horse about his ears.

— We are happy to learn from the Agre Utkal, that Cholera has entirely disappeared from the station. Only a very few cases have appeared in the dry, and none in the cantonment.

— From the same authority we learn that the car which brought the Sonmuth Gate to Agre, is now employed as the Station Hearse. Will the Editor remark, "To what has purpose may we return, Heretic?"

— The wife of Col. Baptiste, one of the officers expelled from Gwalior, has arrived at Agra, and reports that the troops of Col. Jacob's brigade had taken the Usamper prisoner. We know that he dared not move out of his house for fear of the revolutionary soldiers; if he has been captured, all government will soon be at an end, and the country will fall a prey to military license; unless the Army of Exercise should take a little exercise across the Jumna.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following sums for the Friend of India:—

A. F. Donnelly, Esq.	to Aug. 1844,	40 0
R. McClelland,	to March, 1844,	20 0
Daboo Haruchander Labh-	to June, 1844,	20 0
re	to Dec. 1843,	15 0
J. G. Beaman, Esq.	to Aug. 1844,	20 0
F. B. Pearson, Esq.	to Aug. 1844,	6 0
H. W. Weston, Esq.	to Jan. 1844,	20 0
Col. Stacy	to July, 1844,	20 0
Capt. C. Brown	to June, 1844,	20 0

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

The Rev. W. W. Evans begs to acknowledge the following sums for the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta:—

James Montesth, Esq.	to	10
John Montesth, Esq.	to	5
A. Paul, Esq.	to	10
James Newman, Esq.	to	10
Mrs. Morton	to	5
J. Young, Esq.	to	5
Mr. DeMille	to	3

W. W. Evans, Secretary.

September 1, 1845.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

AS MUCH CONCERN ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT THE CONGRESS TO THE 10th REGIMENT.

Sir Hugh Gough then said, "Major Strickland, Officers, and men of the 10th; it was when I gave last leave in the character of your Commander in Chief, but of a private individual, that my excellent and gallant friend, your Colonel, asked me to perform the duty of presenting to you your colours. It is a duty I would have always been proud to perform, but it is more grateful to me, when I come among you to fulfil it as your Commander in Chief."

You see how often those colours, now blest and consecrated on the rallying point to which your soldiers' hearts must cling, the one emblem of the glory of your native country, the other, representative of the life of a private individual, that my excellent and gallant friend, your Colonel, asked me to perform the duty of presenting to you your colours. It is a duty I would have always been proud to perform, but it is more grateful to me, when I come among you to fulfil it as your Commander in Chief.

Recent practice has introduced into the British Army a habit whereby circumstances are not permitted the 10th Regiment to profit; I mean

V. TONNAGE DUTY.—Every English merchant-ship, on entering any one of the five mentioned Five Ports, shall pay Tonnage Duty, on the rate of five pence per Register Ton, in full of all charges. The first tonnage shall be paid on the day of arrival, and the second, on the day of departure.

VI. IMPORT AND EXPORT DUTIES.—Goods, whether imported into, or exported from, any one of the above mentioned Five Ports, shall be liable to be taxed, according to the Tariff as now in force, and agreed upon, and no further taxes are to be levied beyond those which are specified in the Tariff. All duties, interest, and charges on such merchant vessel, whether on goods imported or exported, or in the shape of Tonnage Duty, shall be paid up in full within days, the Superintendent of Customs will grant Passes, and the vessel, on being shown to the British Consul, he will thereupon return the ships papers and permit the vessel to depart.

VII. EXAMINATION OF GOODS.—Every English merchant-ship, having cargo to load or discharge, must give the intimation thereof, and furnish particulars of the cargo, to the Consul, who will immediately despatch a certified copy of his own establishment to communicate the particulars to the Superintendent of Customs, that the goods may be duly examined and neither party subjected to loss. The British Consul must also have a properly qualified person on the spot, to attend to his interest when his goods are being examined for duty; otherwise, should there be complaints, these may be made to the Consul, who, in such cases, shall be bound to attend to the goods, and the Superintendent of Customs, shall call over three merchants to look at the goods, and the highest price at which any of these merchants would be willing to purchase shall be deemed to be the value of the goods. To fix the Tariff on any such basis as the Consul of the English merchant cannot agree with the Consul-house officer, then such party shall be bound to carry the goods, and the Consul shall be bound to weigh in gross, shall afterwards be taxed, and the average rate upon those cases shall be deemed as the rate upon the whole, and upon this principle shall the rate of duty be fixed. While such parties are still open, the Superintendent of Customs will delay to insert the same in his books, thus affording opportunity that the merits of the case may be fully considered.

VIII. MANNER OF PAYING THE DUTY.—It is herein before provided that every English vessel, that enters any one of the five Ports, shall pay all duties and tonnage there before shall be permitted to depart. The Superintendent of Customs will select certain docks, or landing establishments, of known stability, to whom he will give licenses authorizing them to receive duties from the English merchants on behalf of Government, and the receipts of these receipts for any money paid shall be received as a government receipt. In the paying of these duties, different kinds of foreign money may be made use of, as far as foreign money is not of equal parity with the local currency, and the Superintendent of Customs will, according to the place, and circumstances, arrange with the Superintendent of Customs of each port, what value may be taken for payment, and what sum may be necessary to make them equal to standard or pure silver.

IX. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.—Sets of Balance Scales for the weighing of goods, of every weight, and of all measures, prepared in conformity to these intentions, in which the Custom-house of Canton, and the Superintendent of Customs, shall be kept in possession of the Superintendent of Customs, and also at the British Consulate, at each of the five ports, and these shall be the standard by which all goods are charged, and all sums paid to government. In case of any dispute arising between the merchants and the Chinese officers of Customs regarding the weights and measures, the Superintendent shall be made to these standards, and disputes decided accordingly.

X. LICENSES ON CARGO BOATS.—Whenever an English merchant-ship has to load or discharge cargo, he may hire a boat, or a kind of lighted cargo boat, he pleases, and the sum to be paid for such boat can be settled between the parties themselves without the intervention of the Consul. The number of these boats shall not be limited, nor shall a monopoly of them be granted to any parties. If any smuggling takes place in them, the offenders will of course be punished according to law. Should any of these boats be used for carrying in conveying goods for English merchants, the British authorities will do their best to apprehend them, but at the same time the Chinese merchants must take every due precaution for the safety of their goods.

XI. PASSPORTS AND LICENSES.—No English merchant ship, may transitively pass through the Five Ports, without a passport, and should any urgent case happen where transshipment is necessary, the Superintendent of Customs will, on application, will give a certificate to that effect, and the Superintendent of Customs will then send a special officer to be present at the transshipment. If any one pretends to transship without such permission being asked, the Superintendent of Customs will immediately transship with the goods, and the goods will be considered as lost.

XII. SUPERINTENDENT OF CUSTOMS.—At any place selected for the anchorage of the English merchant ships, there may be appointed an Assistant General Officer of approval good conduct, and of the first class, and the Consul will thereupon inquire into the merits of the case, and do his utmost to arrange it amicably. In like manner, if a Chinese vessel, to the Consul of a British subject, he shall not less than his complaint and endeavor to settle it in a friendly manner. If an English merchant has occasion to enter the Chinese authorities, he shall send such address through the Consul who will see that the language is becoming and if otherwise will direct it to be changed or will return to convey the address. If unfortunately any dispute takes place of such a nature that the Consul cannot arrange them amicably, then he shall request the assistance of a Chinese officer that they may together amicably settle the merits of the case. Regarding the punishment of English Criminals, the English Government will cause the laws necessary to attain the end, and the Consul will be empowered to put them in force and regarding the punishment of Chinese criminals, these will be tried and punished by their own laws, in the way provided for by the correspondence which took place at Nanking after the concluding of the peace.

XIII. DISPATCH BETWEEN BRITISH SUBJECTS AND CHINESE.—Whenever a British subject is prepared to complain of a Chinese he must first proceed to the Consul and state his grievance. The Consul will thereupon inquire into the merits of the case, and do his utmost to arrange it amicably. In like manner, if a Chinese vessel, to the Consul of a British subject, he shall not less than his complaint and endeavor to settle it in a friendly manner. If an English merchant has occasion to enter the Chinese authorities, he shall send such address through the Consul who will see that the language is becoming and if otherwise will direct it to be changed or will return to convey the address. If unfortunately any dispute takes place of such a nature that the Consul cannot arrange them amicably, then he shall request the assistance of a Chinese officer that they may together amicably settle the merits of the case. Regarding the punishment of English Criminals, the English Government will cause the laws necessary to attain the end, and the Consul will be empowered to put them in force and regarding the punishment of Chinese criminals, these will be tried and punished by their own laws, in the way provided for by the correspondence which took place at Nanking after the concluding of the peace.

XIV. BRITISH GOVERNMENT CRUISERS ANCHORING WITHIN THE PORT.—An English government cruiser will anchor within each of the five ports, that the Consul may have the means of better restraining sailors and others and preventing disturbances. But these government cruisers are not to be put upon the same footing as merchant vessels, for as they bring no merchandise and do not come to trade, they will of course pay neither duties nor charges. The resident Consul will send the Superintendent of Customs duly informed of the arrival and departure of such government cruisers, that he may take his measures accordingly.

XV. ON THE SECURITY TO BE GIVEN FOR BRITISH MERCHANT VESSELS.—It has hitherto been the custom when an English vessel entered the port of Canton, that a Chinese Merchant-ship stood security for her, and all duties and charges were paid through such security merchant. But these security merchants being now done away with, it is understood that the British Consul will henceforth be security for all British merchant ships entering any of the above-named Chinese ports. —Chinese Press.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

REMARKS ON HINDOO WIDOWS.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—Having observed, some time since, in the Madras News Paper, a long and learned Article extracted from your meritorious Journal, expressing the opinion which prevents the marriage of Hindu Widows—a system so manifestly prejudicial, that I am gratified with the conduct of the good man who made an attempt to break down the barrier of public opinion, which hedges about this most contemptible and detestable of human projects. The Article in question resulted from the painstaking conduct of a learned and worthy Statesman of Calcutta, who professed to bestow the sum of 10 thousand Rupees upon any man of his own caste who would marry his widowed daughter. It was also affirmed that a young Brahmin—a student at the College which indicates the effect of a reputable education—had made proposals to marry the widow, but I am not aware if the marriage is celebrated. I sincerely and ardently hope it has been effected, or is being in progress of being so, as it will be the leading step towards the expansion from Hindoo policy, of one of the most unfeeling and unjust statutes that was ever embodied in a code of laws. This discussion from confirmed principle, having emanated from among the most learned and influential class of Hindoos at Calcutta, I feel thoroughly convinced that if it were supported by opinions and pecuniary assistance, such an obviously important measure, as it aims to establish, would readily command the attention and respect of every honest and liberal thinking person. I feel certain that every well intentioned Brahmin would not and could not withhold his consent to a measure so just, so evidently fraught with all that is beneficent and meritorious, all that is generous and liberal—a measure so thoroughly calculated to repress the mind of the now migrating female, ever her pilgrimages through this world, and direct her to those alarming and discouraging consequences of becoming a widow, which unhappy state would entail upon her a life of prolonged misery and extreme wretchedness. Oh! Dear Sir, I would say through the medium of your valuable Journal to every honored Statesman and to every respected Brahmin, and indeed to every honest and liberal thinking Hindoo, let his see be what it may, some forward with heart and pocket, and do your endeavours to expunge so liberal and dreadful a Regulation from our Civil Constitution. To who have daughters, sisters or any relation, let them direct under your protection—would you not feel a pang at the institution of the distress of the widow? Do ye not tacitly wish that such an unfeeling law was entirely deleted from the leaves of the Statute? I know ye do, then like men of sense and refinement step forward with firmness and decision, and unceasingly the condition of our deeply injured females, not allow not your nobler nature to sink into apathy and indifference, because ye are exempt from their pitiful condition; but be bold, and set your face the first against the tenets and associations of the unfeeling and ungenerous (be he assured if this ungenerous system be thrust out of our Statute, it must be you, Brahmins, that must do it) and you will confer on thousands yet unborn a just retribution which they have a right to demand at your hands. You will deprive the common calamity of its poignancy and render the deprivation of Providence at least bearable, and avert it to a great degree the irreparable condition of the widow, which is now above all others the most dreadful of calamities.

This highly important and deserving question having been once mooted, I sincerely hope and pray that it will not be permitted to fall into oblivion; but that the good and worthy people of Calcutta—the great Metropolis of this Empire—will exert themselves in this perfunctory contempt; and I would further hope that the British Government would tender its benign and fostering influence towards the establishment of so just and laudable a measure. We should then hear of no more Suttees or other tragical deeds, submitted to by our families to avoid an extinction of slavery and wretchedness. The projector and leader of this charitable work will have the happy reflection of having done as those men ought that will be done—his name to future ages will hold his memory, endorsed by generations yet unborn. And MONUMENT TO HAMPDEN.—Two centuries ago have elapsed since John Hampden fell upon Chalgrove field, and at length a memorial marks the spot. It consists of a large block of Portland stone, sixteen feet high, surmounted by a statue of Hampden on a pedestal. Upon the sides of the monument figure Warrington, placed the medal on the breast of the statue, carved in marble by Bonini; on the opposite side are the names of the subscribers to the monument, and the fourth side bears the following inscription, written by Lord Nugent:—“Here, in this field of Chalgrove, John Hampden, after his trial and death, was buried, but unsuccessful resistance in Parliament, and before the judges of the land, to the measures of an arbitrary court, first took arms, and afterwards the brave and the associated counties of Buckingham and Oxford in 1641. And here, within a few paces of this spot, he received the wound which he died, fighting in defence of the free and ancient liberties of England, June 18th, 1642. In the two hundredth year from that day, this stone was raised in reverence to his memory.”—Pat.

ALDERMAN T. WOOD AND THE TALCARE MINES.—On Saturday the Court of Aldermen was held after the election of the sheriffs for the ensuing year, when Alderman Brown brought up the report of the committee to which the Talcare Mines were referred, relating to the concession of Alderman T. Wood with the Talcare Mining Company was referred. The report stated that the committee found from the documentary matter that Alderman Wood was connected with the Talcare Mines, which appeared to have been got up as a speculation presenting no probability of profit, and calculated to benefit no person excepting the shareholders. It was recommended, that coal which was the produce of another mine had been exhibited as the produce of the Talcare mine, and that the designation and action of Alderman Thomas Wood, as an Alderman of London, had been used in the printed papers relating to the concession as recommendatory of experiments in its valuable resources. The committee abstained from expressing any opinion upon the conduct of Alderman Wood.—Alderman Brown then moved “that the report should be entered in the journals of the Court, so that any member might, if he thought proper, give notice that he should be taken into consideration of the corporation.”—Alderman Brown yielded his report.—The motion was then agreed to.—Id.

APPROPRIATIONS BY THE GOVERNMENT.—The Government have authorized the purchase of moving stores, arms, and ammunition, through the Court thus giving a practical proof that they do not really entertain any apprehensions of an insurrectionary outbreak. A single policeman is now considered to be a sufficient count for several cart-loads of powder through the Court of Tipperary, which remains with thousands of Rebels. The following evidence of the “alarming state of the country” appears in the Tipperary Free Press:—“Thirteen casks of powder, one cask of flint, and a large quantity of percussion caps, arrived in town on Tuesday evening from Cork. In consequence of the disturbed state of the country, there was a guard of the police escorting this large quantity of ammunition.” These facts are calculated to strengthen the prevalent belief, that the formidable armaments involved are really intended as a preparation for any sudden emergency in Spain.—Id.

BAR OF COLORED.—A correspondent of the Times states, as a “fact of the weather,” that a young man of colour, almost of pure negro race, is keeping his terms in the Middle Temple for the bar, and that he is treated by his companions, including some of the most talented and ablest of young barristers, with as much respect as any. In a few years the youth will probably be remembered as strange, because parallel instances of this kind are rare. We are glad to see a race that has already many of its members occupying posts of distinction in the West India phony for Metropolitan honours; it will arrive in every way.

Messrs. ACKERMAN AND CO.—At a meeting of creditors, held at the London Coffee-house, Monday, June 26, Thomas Brown, Esq. (Longman and Co.), in the chair, a statement of their affairs having been read by Mr. Charles (Quiller and Bell) and the committee, showing liabilities amounting to 30,664*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*, and assets amounting to 39,144*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, the proposition was made in behalf of Messrs. Ackerman and Co., to pay the creditors in full, and the creditors, in six instalments of 1*l.* 6*s.* each, at intervals of six months’ date from the 1st of August next. The first instalment to be paid on the 1st of August next. There were upwards of one hundred creditors present, and they unanimously agreed to accept Messrs. Ackerman’s proposition, and agreed the resolution to the effect before leaving the meeting.—Id.

BENEFIT OF CLERGY.—Criminals, able to read, claimed the benefit of clergy, and then a passage was taken to read from the Scriptures. The passage actually read on such occasions is a subject of some identity, or perhaps the contrary, and various laws have been passed, and the clergy, “misericordia,” &c., was often selected, and from that consequence acquired the name of “the weak virus.”—Id.

CHORAL MEETING AT KENTON-HALL.—The second choral meeting of the upper singing schools, assembled at Keston-hall, under the sanction of the Committee of Council, and instructed by Mr. Hullah and his assistants, on the method of Wilhem, was held on Wednesday night. The chorists consisted of the first upper school, the workmen’s upper school, the upper school of the vicar, and the South London and Barbican upper schools. The first part was composed of vocal music, which closed with a beautiful hymn for the Prince of Wales, the words by Haydn, the words by Cowley. The second part consisted of a secular music. Lord Walsingham, at the conclusion, addressed the vast assembly of pupils, and his example had been so extensively followed, that there were no less than 300,000 pupils under this system throughout the country. The Government had done little or nothing; all the pleasure of the system is derived from the children, and owing to their own exertions. We are happy to hear they proposed soon to have a hall of their own; and to attain that desirable end he should be ready to afford them all the assistance and encouragement he could. (Cheers.) The attendance during the evening was most crowded, and among the company present were Prince Albert (who arrived about nine, and stayed until about the Bishop of Norwich, Lady Walsingham, Mr. Wyse, M. P., &c.)—Id.

WRITEN GOLF DELIVERY.—The Lord Chancellor has determined to establish a winter golf delivery, to relieve the inconvenience of golfing in winter which has long been complained of by delinquents confined during the long interval between the summer and spring delivery. It is generally supposed that the duty of going the golf at the proposed new season will be assigned to the Judges of the Common Pleas, who from the paucity of business in their courts, have more leisure at their disposal than the other learned judges.—Id.

EMIGRATION OF FROTHY WOOD.—This High Priest of Johanna Southcoteism, whose doings at Ashton and Lyne caused so much trouble, and who, as a member of the House of Commons, has recently left his residence, near Wakefield, where he lived in considerable style, and emigrated to New South Wales. His wife and family still reside near Wakefield, and his wife having left this country was sworn to by his wife before the magistrates, Wakefield, on a question of disputed wages, on Monday last.—Id.

LEAMING AND DOWN RAILWAY.—An additional distance of fifteen miles of this railway, being a total of eighty-two miles from the metropolis, and of only seven from Dover, was opened to the public.—Id.

SCHOOL FOR THE INDIGENT BLIND.—Thursday, a special general court of the governors of this charity, instituted in 1799, for the religious and secular education of the indigent blind, and for their instruction in different species of handicraft, was held at the London Coffee-house, Ludgate-hill; Ralph Prior, Esq., in the chair; when a resolution, on the proposal of the committee to raise a sum of 2,000*l.* by the sale of a portion of the funded property of the corporation, for the purpose of providing extra accommodation for the indigent blind, was carried by a large majority. The number of the pupils has increased since 1830, from then 18 to 70 males and 72 females. Mr. St. Bonaventura was chosen treasurer to the institution, in the place of his father, recently deceased.—Id.

SPRINKLING MEDICAL AND ASSOCIATION.—The anniversary meeting of this association, for the education was held on Tuesday morning at the Metropolitan Store-street, Bedford-square, Lord Ashley, M.P., in the chair, supported by Baron de Bode, the Hon. Mr. St. John, M.P., Mr. George Rose, M.P., Sir J. Clarke, N.D., Sir George Robinson, M.P., Sir D. Paul, the Ven. Archbishop Robinson, and several Syrian gentlemen in the course of their address. The report stated that Dr. Kenna had granted him a free passage, and he had by his exertions received upwards of 1,400 persons. It was proposed to establish a hospital at Beyrout, for which purpose from 200*l.* to 300*l.* per annum were to be required, and it was hoped that a hospital, which was much needed at Damascus, would also be established in that city. The receipts of the year had amounted to 9,945*l.*, and the expenditure in 1847, 19*l.*, leaving a balance in hand of 257*l.* 1*s.*—Id.

MISALLOCATION AS TO THE EXISTING MEANS OF EDUCATION.—In three ways the deficiency of the existing means of Education may be grossly exaggerated; first, by under-rating and concealing the number of schools already established; secondly, by mis-estimating the number of children, in proportion to the population, who ought to be under instruction; and thirdly, by over-rating the number of the ignorant who require education which exists notwithstanding all the efforts to supply the means of Education. In each respect, Lord Ashley’s portentous Speech was chargeable with serious errors, and the following are the misstatements. The statistics obtained by Mr. Edward Bates, jun., have demonstrated, that the total statements made as to the absence of any provision whatever for the extension of Education, by institutions corresponding to the increase of population, are utterly at variance with fact. But the adequacy of the provision may much more, of course, upon the proportion of children who could be so benefited by instruction. Lord Ashley, speaking of the number of children in Day-schools, assumes that one-fifth of the population is the number capable of being capable of instruction, and expresses an opinion, that this is an understatement, and expresses the ordinary calculation. But Mr. Bates has shown this to be a gross misstatement. The children between the ages of five and fifteen are found to constitute, it is true, one-fourth of the entire population. But, in the first place, a considerable deduction must be made for those who are either at home, or detained at home through sickness and other causes, as well as for the children of paupers and mendicants, &c. In the second place, the assumption of one-fourth, Mr. Bates correctly says, “is gross upon the gross figure.” But of the children between five and fifteen years of age could be, or ought to be, receiving instruction at the same time; that is, the children of the entire population, school for ten long years, namely, from the age of five to that of fifteen. Why, it is notorious, that not even the children of the middle classes usually go to school for ten years; and the working classes never keep their children at a day-school till they are fifteen years of age. I do not think it at all reasonable to calculate on the working classes keeping their children at a day-school more than five years; and it is certain, that the average duration of schooling, even among those of the working class who are in tolerable circumstances, both in manufacturing and rural districts, is shorter. If we assume, therefore, that the average period of education in day-schools, then it is evident, that only half of the children between five and fifteen years of age could be, or ought to be, receiving instruction at the same time; which would make one-eighth of the entire population, between five and fifteen years of age, the maximum number. But even this makes no allowance for the classes of children mentioned above, namely, the children of the poor, and the extremely poor, &c. I should, therefore, think that one-sixth of the entire population would be as many as we could reasonably expect to send to day-schools in the best time. As to Sunday-schools, we might expect a larger proportion, because attendance there costs nothing, and does not interfere with work and domestic avocations; persons resident there to a more advanced age than fifteen years. Remember, however, still the sick and the very poor, and also remembering that the children of the upper and middle classes do not generally attend Sunday-schools, I should not have expected those who attend such institutions to amount to more than one-fifth of the population.

Now we have seen, in Lancashire and Yorkshire, the Sunday-schoolers are, to the population, as one to every five and a half, while one in ten are found in Day-schools. Most of the factory children, Mr. Bates says, attend at the National, the British, or other public schools. It will not be provided, therefore, to establish the allegation, that the instruction given in Day-schools is useless. But the statistics of the children who attend round upon us, and may be “If there are so many schools, and so large a proportion of the working classes attend them, how do you account for so fearful an amount of ignorance, depravity, and crime? Of what character can the instruction be, which affords such results? These questions demand a full and explicit answer, and there are several considerations which require to be taken into account to estimate the efficiency of the existing machinery of instruction.

In the first place, the vice and ignorance concentrated in our large towns, are but characteristic of the working population, and, but, for the most part, the distinguishing features of a race the most degraded and the most averse from all labor. The cause, for instance, Lord Ashley’s report of the state of Leeds, in which he reduced the number of the ignorant as indicating the general character of towns; citing as one of his authorities, a gentleman who was Mayor of Leeds in 1838, but who, in a Letter to Mr. Bates, declares that the inferior schools are really drawn from his language, in the following terms:—“That, in a considerable community like Leeds, there should be a large number of young delinquents, must be of some admittance. Most of them are the children of idle and profligate parents, who are attracted to a large town by the various resources which

NOTICE AND CAUTION

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 453. Vol. IX.]

SERAPMORE: THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21st. 1843.

[Price 5 Cts. Rs. monthly, or 10 Rs. yearly if paid in advance.]

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The Editor of the Friend of India begs to acknowledge the following donation:—
From Lieut. Brooke, Co's. Rs. 5, to the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta.

THE AUGUST MAIL.—Early yesterday morning we received the London Mail of the 5th of August; and have endeavored to make as much room as possible for extracts. We have therefore been obliged to omit several articles which were in type. By this opportunity, we have the melancholy intelligence that the Manasseh Steamer, which conveyed the July Mails, was totally lost on the 1st of August, about 450 miles from Aden. The crew and passengers were saved, but the whole of the Mails have perished.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH'S SPEECHES.—There has been considerable discussion in the papers regarding the speeches delivered by the Governor General at the various entertainments given to his Lordship by the Military community in and around the Presidency, on which we propose to offer a brief remark or two. But before we enter on the subject, some observations of Standard, a correspondent of the Hurkaru, who has taken part in these discussions, and who impugns the truth of facts relative to the last Affghan campaign which are not usually controverted, seems to demand some notice. He attributes the destruction of the force at Cabul, in some measure, to the inactivity and indecision of Lord Auckland. A mere reference to dates will show that this remark is unfounded. Our late Governor General did not receive the first indirect intelligence of the outbreak before the 28th of November. Had he sent orders by return of post to push on reinforcements with the utmost energy and speed, they could not have reached Peshawar or Loodianah so as to have secured the arrival of troops at Jellalabad in time to be of any service to the Cabul force. There was a fatal lethargy and indecision manifested on the occasion, by those who should have "moved heaven and earth," so to speak, to urge on reinforcements, under an able and energetic commander; but the blame of that error does not rest with Lord Auckland, and he was too far from the scene of action to correct it.

Standard's representations of subsequent measures do not accord with published records. The Blue Book shows us incontrovertibly that Lord Ellenborough, on the 15th of March, while with his Council, resolved to adopt the most vigorous measures to retrieve our national honour in Afghanistan; that, on the 19th of April, after having heard of the repulse of General England, and the fall of Ghuzni, he determined to give up the contest and to withdraw our troops from the country as speedily as possible. These orders remained in force for ten weeks; and whatever supplies of cattle were forwarded during this period were intended to assist the retreat, and cannot be placed to the credit of the subsequent advance. At length his Lordship discovered the mistake into which he had fallen, and set himself to retrieve it with a degree of vigor and zeal, worthy of the Duke himself. After the order for the advance had been issued, at the beginning of July, there was no longer any hesitation, or slackness; on the contrary, the energy which was displayed in every department: ought to be regarded as an atonement for the three times the number of our subjects, with only half the military strength we keep up.

But this view of our Indian empire is any thing but sound. That we acquired it by the sword is of course self evident, because we did not acquire it by gift or inheritance;—always excepting the Island on which the Bombay Times is printed.—But to assert that we govern it by the sword, or that the allegiance of our native subjects is secured only by brute force, and not by a rational acquiescence in the principles and practice of our Government, is to pronounce a greater libel on our administration than the licentious press in its most licentious paroxysms has yet ventured to utter. We believe his Lordship never uttered such a sentiment. His Lordship most probably said, what others have said before him, not that the country must be governed by the sword, but that the Empire could not be maintained without it. Last year he travelled five hundred miles by dark without meeting a soldier. It was certainly not the presence of the military that the Head of the Government, accompanied by only one or two attendants, was indebted for his safety. Bengal and Behar, with forty millions of subjects, do not require ten thousand troops to keep the peace, and to secure a perfect obedience to the orders of Government. The impetuosity of Benares, and the commercial metropolis of Miranpore, and the Mahomedan metropolis of Delhi, may require the presence of troops; but so do the manufacturing towns and districts of England. If our possessions were not surrounded with powerful and ambitious neighbors; if we had not in the heart of our dominions, a large number of princes, with little armies at their command, we might disband half our present army without risking in the smallest degree the stability of our Empire. But in a country so recently the scene of anarchy, a considerable force must be necessary to prevent its revival, till those habits of lawlessness become extinct, by the lapse of time. The force we require, is not for the purpose of guarding our own frontiers, from the fury of the people, but of protecting the peaceable and industrious from those who would break up the order of society that they might revel in the confusion.

In Afghanistan our authority never extended beyond the limit of our encampment; every man was a natural and a religious enemy. We could never have governed that country but by the sword. We could collect no revenue but at the point of the bayonet. But this description will not apply to India. Here the spirit of acquiescence is stronger than the spirit of resistance. The people have become habituated to our institutions, and though they are very far from perfect, yet the Natives have confidence in the protection they afford; and in the substantive justice which they give. They do not fail to perceive that by far the largest portion of their misery is inflicted by their own countrymen, who are invested with the power of office or wealth. They trace no part of their distress to the sword, and consequently as an instrument of the personal character of the conquerors, or Government; if therefore we can only govern India by the sword, that object has not been attained. We are behind even the Government of China, which maintains good order among three times the number of our subjects, with only half the military strength we keep up.

But this view of our Indian empire is any thing but sound. That we acquired it by the sword is of course self evident, because we did not acquire it by gift or inheritance;—always excepting the Island on which the Bombay Times is printed.—But to assert that we govern it by the sword, or that the allegiance of our native subjects is secured only by brute force, and not by a rational acquiescence in the principles and practice of our Government, is to pronounce a greater libel on our administration than the licentious press in its most licentious paroxysms has yet ventured to utter. We believe his Lordship never uttered such a sentiment. His Lordship most probably said, what others have said before him, not that the country must be governed by the sword, but that the Empire could not be maintained without it. Last year he travelled five hundred miles by dark without meeting a soldier. It was certainly not the presence of the military that the Head of the Government, accompanied by only one or two attendants, was indebted for his safety. Bengal and Behar, with forty millions of subjects, do not require ten thousand troops to keep the peace, and to secure a perfect obedience to the orders of Government. The impetuosity of Benares, and the commercial metropolis of Miranpore, and the Mahomedan metropolis of Delhi, may require the presence of troops; but so do the manufacturing towns and districts of England. If our possessions were not surrounded with powerful and ambitious neighbors; if we had not in the heart of our dominions, a large number of princes, with little armies at their command, we might disband half our present army without risking in the smallest degree the stability of our Empire. But in a country so recently the scene of anarchy, a considerable force must be necessary to prevent its revival, till those habits of lawlessness become extinct, by the lapse of time. The force we require, is not for the purpose of guarding our own frontiers, from the fury of the people, but of protecting the peaceable and industrious from those who would break up the order of society that they might revel in the confusion.

In Afghanistan our authority never extended beyond the limit of our encampment; every man was a natural and a religious enemy. We could never have governed that country but by the sword. We could collect no revenue but at the point of the bayonet. But this description will not apply to India. Here the spirit of acquiescence is stronger than the spirit of resistance. The people have become habituated to our institutions, and though they are very far from perfect, yet the Natives have confidence in the protection they afford; and in the substantive justice which they give. They do not fail to perceive that by far the largest portion of their misery is inflicted by their own countrymen, who are invested with the power of office or wealth. They trace no part of their distress to the sword, and consequently as an instrument of the personal character of the conquerors, or the oppressive character of a foreign rule. Hence and increasing commerce without an outlay of there is a general feeling of submission through public money which would be altogether injurious to the country, which is the result of contentedness. Government has nobly led the way, and not of sullenness. Still a military and demonstrated the feasibility of the underservice is necessary to repress sudden outbreaks, taking; to carry it out to the full extent of the to overawe the unruly, and to give confidence public exigency, must be left to a private association to the community in general. But there is no association, working with commercial capital. From, thing in the circumstances of our own provinces, the failure of almost all our joint stock enterprises in the disposition and feelings of the people in Calcutta, and the general disfavour into which would render it necessary for the Government which have fallen, owing to the mismanagement General to consider his proper place to be ment which has marked their career, it is hoped by the side of the Commander-in-Chief, in the less to expect that any such association can be amidst of the army. On the contrary, there is formed in this country. But England is over-every thing in the sober and orderly habits, in flowing with capital, and only wants the assurance the activity and submission of the people, to ance of a return to apply it to the use of India. make the Governor General desirous of being in This assurance can be acquired only by the employment of an agency which shall be independent of local influence. Not that there is no jobbing in England, as well as in Calcutta; but, there seems to be this essential difference between the two kinds of jobbing; that they job and succeed, at least often; we job and fail, invariably. The supply of Steam boats for our rivers adequate to our wants, must therefore be undertaken by English capitalists, and managed by agents in this country, responsible to parties at home.

But we want improvement in the form and construction of our vessels, which shall give an accession of speed and a diminution of cost; and for those improvements we must go to America, the great scene of Inland Steam navigation. We must learn our lessons at New Orleans and on the Mississippi. North America excels England as much in the excellent adaptation of steamers to long river navigation, as England outstrips her in the construction of sea going Steamers. Yet when the Court of Directors had determined to construct new vessels for the rivers of India, they adopted the clumsy old build of the vessels already in use, instead of sending an intelligent Engineer to America, to study the art of building which had been brought to such perfection on its magnificent rivers. We are likely at length to enjoy the benefit of this experience. The Star announces that an association of Capitalists in London has undertaken to supply our rivers with a superior class of vessels; and that the Engineer they propose to employ has a familiar acquaintance with the mode in which the Americans navigate the Mississippi. The Association proposes to construct vessels adapted to the most intricate navigation, in which the locomotive power shall be placed. In the same vessel with the cargo and the passengers. The very first improvement we require, is that of dispensing with two vessels, where we are now obliged to employ two. Without this, all inferior-improvement will do, than in being heavier and more clumsy. We little or nothing to lessen the cost of transport still continue to use two vessels, a steam tug, or to accelerate progress. It must be manifest, and a cargo boat or accommodation vessel. We that whenever this shall be effected, the same have made little improvement in the speed of vessel, making the trip in a shorter period, will the Steamers, and the charges have risen with it to do 50 per cent more work during the lapse of time. Meanwhile the demand the year without any additional expense for freight seems to have increased in spite of fuel or the crew. The vessels we are now proposed, the augmentation of the charge. The number of vessels employed on the Ganges has been multiplied, but this has not succeeded in lowering the rate of freight, because the supply is still below the demand. From these facts we gather that double the present number of vessels would find ample encouragement, and that if the price of transport could be reduced to a reasonable rate, the despatch of merchandise by steam would become the rule and not the exception.

It is quite manifest that Government cannot supply boats adequate to the wants of a large should not be as thickly crowded with river steamers as that of New Orleans;—but also, the spirit of improvement, which is so vigorous in the West, is dormant in the East.

THE LAST CALCUTTA GAZETTE, AND RECENT CHANGES.—The last number of the Calcutta Gazette contains a string of appointments and removals, each of which affords matter for reflection. Soon after the province of Scinde had been annexed to our empire, three young gentlemen of the Civil Service, Mr. Riddell, Mr. Cocks and Mr. Wingfield were selected by the Governor General, and sent thither, with the view, we suppose, of conducting the duties of the Civil administration. The last Calcutta Gazette announces that they have been ignominiously expelled the province, on the representation of his Excellency the Governor. What may have been their offence we have not heard, and indeed, with the last Notification before us, we will not venture to enquire. But we are not perhaps very wide of the mark in supposing, that their removal has been occasioned by a deficiency in the virtue of implicit obedience, which Sir C. Napier is of all men most likely to exert. Perhaps some remonstrance may have been construed into contumacy, which we all know to be very heavily allied to rebellion, which is as 'the sin of witchcraft.' Two of the young gentlemen are therefore reduced to a mere subsistence salary, a kind of bread and water allowance, till the 1st of March next, and the third till he shall reach Delhi. Their appointment to Scinde appeared from the first to have been premature. A country, but recently conquered, which with a population of scarcely a million, requires an army of occupation, to the number of more than ten thousand men, is not exactly a scene for the Majors of Civilian. For some time to come that country must be governed by the sword, and entrusted to Military Magistrates and Military Collectors, who shall implicitly obey the orders of the Governor, and temper justice and mercy with might, as well as the circumstances of the country will allow.

Major Lawrence has been appointed to succeed, perhaps to supersede, Mr. Hodgson as Resident at Nepal. He is directed to take charge of the appointment on the 1st of December. It is not usual thus to fix a day for the transfer of an office, except in cases in which the transfer is more agreeable to the controlling authority than to the retiring officer. There is a peremptory tone in the announcement which seems to indicate that the removal from office is not altogether voluntary; and that the disinherited Resident would still linger about Katmandoo, if he were not assured that his allowances would cease on the 1st of December. It is well known however that Mr. Hodgson has been desirous for some time of retiring from Nepal, on account of his health. Whenever he retires, he will carry with him the affectionate regrets of the Court and people among whom he has so long represented the British character. He has done good service to the state during the last five years. The Chiefs of Nepal have long been known to mediate a renewal of hostilities with us in the hope of dismembering the empire; and they have been intriguing for years in every Native Court to which they could obtain access. Repeatedly have they been on the eve of declaring war with us; but the tact of the Resident has succeeded in maintaining peace, and restraining the Cabinet from plunging into a war with us, more particularly at that juncture when our own disasters presented so tempting an opportunity to Ne-moralizing efforts, have been traced up to the prisoners during their captivity, as well as of peace ambition. If Governments had reached taste of the projector. But it seems that even the Afghan character. This stage of civilization, at which the merits of Government lotteries cannot always be true! The Memoir notices with a kind of timid regret preventing a war was considered as great as that ed, without the strict guardianship of the justice, regarding his allowances during of bringing it to a successful issue. Mr. Hodgson Pres. Without its constant vigilance, it would the period in which he remained a hostage in would not leave Katmandou without his medal appear that State Lotteries may be sources of the hands of the enemy, of which that officer of merit. Be that as it may; he is to be no-mischief. But the Press in Calcutta, we are has been the victim. Our Military Regulations created by one of the most able and energetic of happy to my, has nobly vindicated its cha- provide for the case of officers who may hap- our public officers, who has been long trained racter, not by watching over the organization pen to become prisoners of war, but they do not to diplomacy in the school of the Panjab. The and movements of the State Lotteries, but by contemplate the possibility of a British Army selection of Major Lawrence for Mr. Hodgson's, denouncing them altogether and by urging Gov- ever being reduced to the humiliating necessity office affords another proof of Lord Ellenborough's vernment, from a view of the evils which attend of delivering hostages to an enemy. It rested disreputable.

The appointment of Major Rawlings to an important Political post, exactly adapted to his talents and acquisitions, which the Calcutta Gazette announces, is an act of justice on the part of the Governor General, the value of which will be fully appreciated by the public. It was a matter of general regret that a man of his ability and energy, and who had rendered such eminent services to the state in so difficult a post as that of Candahar, should have been laid on the shelf, in common with the rest of Lord Auckland's clique, as those who rose to distinction during the last administration have been designated. That injustice has now been redressed. He has been appointed to a station where although there may not be the same scope for his diplomatic talents as in Afghanistan, a boundless field will be opened for those antiquarian researches to which he has devoted his leisure moments. The non employment of Major Rawlings, a trump card of our Government, if we may be allowed to quote the opinion of one of the highest and shrewdest of the public servants, not now in India—was a grievous discouragement to all those who were building their hopes of promotion on their own meritorious exertions. They will now learn that, "ignorance or lack, merit will meet with its due reward, and that the public administration is as anxious as ever to avail itself of all the talent which the ranks of the Service possess. We can no longer despair of seeing those whose abilities were so eminently displayed in the field of Afghan politics, Col. Outram, Major Macgregor and Matheson, and Captain Lawrence again placed in situations of public trust.

LOTTERIES.—The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette, in a brief article we give below, represents lotteries as a very gentlemanly and "agreeable pastime," blame-worthy only in their abuse. It is, of opinion that in an extensive country like India, a Government Lottery, conducted on fair principles, may even be an advantage; but he is not explained to us how the encouragement which the fairest lottery gives to the spirit of gambling, can be an advantage to any country, large or small. He tells us, that the taste of many persons leads them to employ their talents in concocting various lottery schemes but that nothing can be equal to that which is managed under the superintendence of Government, when strictly guarded by the Press. We have been accustomed hitherto to consider the various lotteries set on foot by private speculators as growing out of their cupidity; and we believe that it was entirely so a matter of revenue, not as a matter of taste, that Government established its lotteries both in England and in India. It is easy to comprehend how Government may be reconciled to the receipt of an income, though it should grow out of the corruption of public morals; but this is the first interesting anecdote illustrative of the state of 'instance in which lotteries, with all their de-

"There was, some time ago, a long discussion in the Calcutta Journals, respecting the propriety of abolishing Lotteries; they appear in general to have pronounced judgment as to the immorality of such modes of raising and existing the Indian Public; yet we presume that no legislative enactment is likely to be sanctioned on the subject. This opinion is formed on the fact of the scheme of the first Government Lottery having received the sanction of the Most Noble the Governor in Council of the Madras Presidency, and which we see this dry public."

"We must here calmly express our opinion, that it is the abuse of Lotteries, which is to be considered blame-able. In no honest and well conducted Lottery, as a means of affording an agreeable pastime to the Public, there is anything criminal; and in an extensive country such as India, one carried on by the Government, and on the fairest principles, would sweep of advantage. It would appoint talents in securing various schemes; but these cannot be any equal to that which is managed under the superintendence of the Government Agent, and when strictly guarded by the Public Press."

CAPT. LAWRENCE AND THE CAMPAIGN IN AFGHANISTAN.

—The number of the India Review for May 1848, which has just made its appearance, contains a brief Memoir of the services of Capt. Lawrence, Military Secretary to the late Sir William Macnaghten. A portrait of that officer, in the dress he wore while a prisoner among the Afghans is prefixed to the number, and appears to us to be a very faithful likeness. The Memoir consists chiefly of extracts from Dr. Atkinson's Work on Afghanistan; but it contains also notes of the Editor's conversation with Capt. Lawrence, which present us with some interesting anecdotes illustrative of the state of higher sum than 170 Rs. a month—less by 150 only as Madras. The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette tells us with delight that the "scheme country. This was the only reward he obtained of the 73d Government Lottery has received the sanction of the most Noble the Governor in Council of the Madras Presidency" and is published in that journal. "We read this announcement with other feelings than those of our countrymen. We think it would have been far better for the Governor to have applied to the Governor General for permission to abolish the Madras Lotteries. Doubtless it would have been cheerfully and speedily given. We hope, the assent of the Council of Directors to the prohibition of all Lotteries, public and private, throughout all the Presidencies, will be speedily received in India. The subject will have been before them nearly three months when the August Mail left England. There can be no ground for doubt or hesitation. The immoral and mischievous tendency of the Lotteries has been indisputably established. They cannot be re-established in the face of the public of Calcutta. When once suspended, every one felt that their doom was sealed. No Government ventures to revive a nuisance. But this delay in the arrival of the Court's reply, postpones the legal extinction of all lotteries, and enables the small fry of Lottery projectors to draw the money and the disburse within their tolls.

We are happy to find it stated in the India Review that Capt. Lawrence intends, during his furlough, to publish a narrative of events at Cabul. We will venture to predict that it will be found in the highest degree interesting. The narratives we have from the pen of Lady Sale, Lieut. Eyre, and Lieut. Melville were composed by those who were not in a position to perceive the secret springs of action during the siege of the cantonment. Captain Lawrence was the confidential Assistant of the Envoy; he lived in his family; he was acquainted with his daily thoughts and projects, and participated in his hopes and anxieties. He will be able to describe the view which the Envoy took from time to time of the position of affairs; the arrangements which he so repeatedly proposed for the relief of the garrison, and the listlessness or poverty by which those arrangements were thwarted. Without his narrative we should but imperfectly understand the cause of that melancholy catastrophe.

We embrace this opportunity of stating that the papers belonging to the late Envoy, which Lady Macnaghten succeeded in preserving during her captivity, and bringing in safety into the provinces, have been sent home, to be placed in the hands of his family with a view to the publication of a full narrative of the transaction, and the vindication of his memory from the obloquy which has been so unjustly heaped upon it.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

—Last Friday, the 16th of September, was the Eighth anniversary of the freedom granted the Press by Sir Charles Metcalfe by law. Its practical freedom however dates from an earlier period, and was coeval with the commencement of Lord William Bentinck's administration. During this period of virtual and legal freedom, extending through fifteen years, more grievances have been redressed, more salutary reforms introduced, and greater improvements effected in the spirit and management of our institutions, than at any preceding time. To this period belongs the abolition of the Transit and Town duties, of Lotteries, of Judicial Oaths, and of Slavery. During this period, Island Steam Navigation has been established, a Settlement of the land revenue believed to be equitable and advantageous to the people, has been made in the Western Provinces for a period sufficiently long to encourage agriculture; the unwholesome connection of Government with the abuses of idolatry has been abolished; the office of Deputy Magistrate has been established; the use of the vernacular language has been restored to the country, and the Natives have been reconciled to our administration by being admitted largely to assist in conducting it. It would be idle to attribute these beneficial innovations to the sole agency of the Press; but it is undeniable that it has greatly contributed to their adoption, by the discussions of which it has been the channel, and by its uniform efforts to introduce a liberal tone of thought among those entrusted with the Government. In reference to those improvements the adoption of which was opposed by the inveteracy of prejudice, the Press has been pre-eminently useful in facilitating them by the removal of prejudices. The freedom of the Press has encouraged a general freedom of thought and a spirit of manly enquiry through the community, which has led to the exposure and correction of abuses which would otherwise have continued to fester in the body politic. It has inspired both Natives and Europeans with a degree of confidence in the intentions of Government, and created an attachment to the institutions of the country to which they were before in a great measure strangers. This assertion is not affected by the obnoxious of disaffection recently exhibited in the Fatahah Balakhah, by a few young patriots, and which have died out with the circumstances which gave them birth. Though the Press, in the exercise of its freedom, may sometimes have occasioned mischief, yet the evil has been far outweighed by the good of which it has been the instrument; and it is only by a comparison of good and evil that the value of any human institution can be ascertained.

Yet the Press has been pronounced Heretic by those in England who have not only the power, but we fear also the disposition, to impose fetters on it; and we must not too sanguinely touching the continuance of the freedom we now enjoy. It may be quite true that the Press since it was made free, has not affected the stability of the British authority in India, but neither served to strengthen it. During this period of freedom, our empire has, it is true, passed through an ordeal which has tested its strength beyond every preceding trial, and in its steadiness more consolidated and firm, as far as the attachment of the people is concerned, than before the ordeal.—But, within the last several years, India has been united to the civilized world by the establishment of a monthly steam communication. A new interest has been excited in our local proceedings; and the character of the administration, and the conduct of our rulers has become a subject of discussion in the European commonwealth. A hundred thousand newspapers are annually despatched to Europe; seven years ago there were not a thousand. It would be vain to deny that public opinion in England and on the Continent is influenced by the representations thus sent home month by month. If ever the freedom of the Press should be suspended—and our apprehensions arise from the unfavourable light in which it is regarded by some of the most influential members of the present Ministry—it will be with the view of controlling public opinion in Europe, and not in India. Here the Press has little or no influence upon the natives in the interior; its power is limited in a great measure to the metropolis, which is isolated from the country. During the period in which the circulation of our newspapers in Europe has increased fifty, perhaps a hundred fold, the increase of Native subscribers to indigenous or English newspapers has not even doubled. Neither can public opinion among Europeans of India ever affect the stability of the empire. They are but a handful, and their sentiments, if we may judge from recent events, are of no very obstinate character. Half a dozen well cooked dinners are quite sufficient at any time to command public opinion within the Ditch. It is not therefore from any influence which the Press exercises in the European or Native community that it is so violently derided.

It is the nine thousand papers conveyed by every monthly Mail from the shores of India, and diffused through the various nations of Christendom, which render its comments an object of complaint, and which may sooner or later affect its freedom. But unless this monthly communication can be abolished, and the union of India and Europe can be repealed; unless the interest which has been excited in Indian affairs can be extinguished, the abolition of the freedom of the Press, will not meet the case. Information will inevitably find a circulation through channels which no Government can control; and the result will be much the same as in the case of spirits or tobacco, or any other produce for which the public craves a partiality. The prohibition will only increase the contraband article. If the Press be shackled, the monthly overland summaries may yet be published in London. If the printing of the single copy intended for the printers in London be interdicted, still human ingenuity will not be exhausted. The whole paper may be sent home as a letter; or those parts which Government may consider harmless may be set up in type and despatched, while the articles which would be deemed obnoxious may be sent in manuscript. If any attempt should be made by the ministry at home to muzzle the Press, we are confident that it will create odium without effecting its object, and that it will inflict far more injury on Government than the most unrestrained freedom of the Press could do. It is in the nature of things, that men should form a high opinion of a Government which fearlessly exposes its measures to public criticism, and entertains the darkest suspicions of any Government which finds it necessary to restrain public discussion, and to allow nothing to appear without its sanction. In this suspicious frame of mind reports will generally find credit in proportion to their extravagance, and the information which is obtained clandestinely will be swallowed with the greatest avidity.

THE LATE MR. HANSON.—We announce with feelings of deep regret the death, at Tranquebar, on the 21st of August, of Mr. Hanson, the beloved wife of the Honourable Mr. Hanson, the Governor of that settlement. He was formerly the Chief of Serampore, and during the four years in which his Lady occupied the first place in its society, she endeared herself to all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance by the simplicity of her character, and the extreme amiability of her disposition. She has left a husband and eight children to deplore her loss; which will be deeply felt, not only by the members of her own family, but in a large circle of friends.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14.

—A correspondent of the Englishman states, that the rent received for goods lodged in bonded "Warehouses amounted in the last half year to 20,162 Rs. and that the general charges, including the establishment, during that period, amounted to 982 Rs. or 24 per cent. on the rent. "No wonder the dividends are so small, and the shares at a discount." The establishment and charges amount to a little more than 200 Rs. a month. Some reduction may possibly be made in this charge, but when property of vast amount is concerned, some person of respectability must be appointed to take charge of it, and 500 Rupees a month, is not beyond the average value of such an appointment. For augmented dividends, the shareholders must look to augmented rents.

—The tea has at length arrived. The supply is small, within two hundred tons; but the second vessel has now been four months on her voyage, and may be hourly expected. It is to be hoped that the Americans will not again leave us destitute of an article which has become to be a luxury, and is now reckoned among the necessities of life.

—The Hindostan arrived at Galle late on Saturday evening the 19th of August; and was expected to sail on the 21st. It would thus appear that in Ceylon she was two whole days employed in coaling.

—A notification has just appeared in the papers stating that Government had decided to Garrison the whole of the Province of Scinde from the Bengal Army.

—A brief account of the last meeting of the Agricultural Society appears among our selections extracted from the Harker. The final report of the Finance Committee relative to the Carey Memorial was read, from which it appears that the sum of 1426 Rs. has been collected towards this object, which has been remitted to Dr. Hoyle in England with instructions to procure a marble bust of the late venerable founder of the Society.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 15.

—The Debt Gazette states, that such is the ill feeling between the Maharajah at Lahore and his Minister Hajah Dhyau Singh, notwithstanding their apparent reconciliation, that serious apprehensions are entertained of a serious breach between them. The King has assembled an immense body of troops at Lahore, ostensibly for the celebration of the Dussehra which comes off only next month, but it is far from improbable that two parties, who are so nearly matched in point of military strength, may bring their disputes to an issue by an appeal to the sword.

—The latest account from Sukker received through Delhi extends to the 28th ultimo, when sickness was on the decline. The casualties had not been so great as those of those attacked might have led us to suppose. Sixteen Europeans, one woman and one child had, up to that day, died of the prevailing fever.

—Yesterday's newspapers announced the arrival of the Edinburgh from London, after a very short passage. Mr. Theodore Dickens, formerly of the Calcutta bar, then Ecclesiastical Registrar, and lately a member of the extinct firm of Ferguson, Brothers and Co. is, we perceive, a passenger on board. It is generally supposed that he will remain in his place at the bar.

—The Star furnishes us with a return of the number of Coolies shipped to the Mauritius during the month of August last in eleven vessels. The number of men was 2106, of women 290, and of children 79; in all, 2475.

—The Deli Gazette has received intelligence from Calcutta to the effect, that Dost Mahomed has been gradually losing ground among the chiefs, and that his pecuniary necessities have compelled him to resort to measures of great severity to subvert the poor classes. He had even ordered those who were possessed of any English coin to bring it in. These proceedings exasperated both the chiefs and the people and they appeared in open arms against him. He met and defeated them; but though the victory was won on a small scale yet it served for a time to confirm his authority.

—The post of Commandant of the King of Delhi's guards having become vacant, it is said to have been conferred on Wylkatt Aloo Khan, on his paying down the sum of 10,000 Rs. which has been devoted to the expense of the Mission to England.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16.

—The general Relief of the season has been published in General Orders. It is an exceedingly small one, and extends only to ten Regiments, of which four are unfortunately to be transferred from one half battle station to another. It is supposed however that when the Army of Egypt breaks up, there will be a more extensive relief.

—The Bombay Times states, on the authority of letters from Hyderabad of the 6th of August that the weather remained cool and agreeable, and that the health of the troops, both European and Native, continued to improve. The ladies was supposed to have reached its height, the canals, tanks, and ditches were every where full of water. After all, the casualties in India have been far fewer in number than we had been led to anticipate from the dampness of the climate.

—The Ceylon Observer, of the 24th of August, has some forcible observations on Slavery in the Kandian Provinces, for which we hope to make room next week, together with our own comment. After the abolition of Slavery throughout the Company's dominions, the Queen's Government at Ceylon cannot plead the want of a good example, for not extending it is in this island.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 18.

—The Englishman publishes a letter written at Bombay at half past six p. m. the 8th of September, which announces the arrival of a steamer; but instead of being the steamer with the August Mail, it turns out to be the Victoria, which left Bombay on the 27th August, with the Mail for Suez. She was five days running 500 miles. She experienced bad weather, and finding that her coals must run short before she could reach Aden, thought it prudent to return. This disappointment is owing to some improvements which were made in the vessel at Bombay, and which reduced her speed so much, that instead of being the fastest vessel from that Port, she is become the slowest. Happy are those who took the precaution of sending their letters by the Hindostan from Calcutta.

—The Deli Gazette states, that at a recent Durbar held at Lahore, it was mentioned that many of the Sirdars of Moulthan were anxious to afford assistance to the ex-Emperor Sher Mahomed, but the Dewan having intercepted the correspondence, had placed them under arrest, and threatened to treat with the utmost severity any one who should be found corresponding with them.

—The Bombay Times in reference to Scheldt says, that letters come in from Bucher and Hyndman as punctually as from the most trusted parts of the world; that the tidings brought are state and fact; that there is no flogging, no sickness, no adventure, no stir of any kind, and that even rumours of danger have died away; and that the chiefs were coming in daily and that the country was becoming pacified with most unexpected alacrity.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19.

—The Bombay Correspondent of the Englishman, in a letter of the 7th instant, states that the Cleopatra steamer was ordered to be in readiness to start with the returned mails and passengers of the Victoria. She was ordered to leave the port at daylight; but the Government dispatches were not ready before 3 p. m., and she did not get to sea before 4 p. m. It is scarcely possible for her to reach Egypt in time for the Peninsular Company's vessel.

—The Reverend Dr. Duff will this evening deliver, in the Town Hall, the first of a series of lectures, expository of the principles, the maintenance of which has led to the recent disruption of the Established Church. We are happy to find from a list sent us by Mr. Stewart, that the subscription to the Free Protestant Church amounts to nearly 13,000 Rupees.

—The Ice from Boston, via Madras, has now arrived and is again for sale at the Ice House at the low rate of two annas a ton.

—Papers were received yesterday from the Straits and from China, but their contents have been anticipated by a recent arrival with later intelligence. Numerous have been the conjectures regarding the appointment of Col. Butterworth to the Government of the Straits. One has it that he met Lord Ellenborough at the Cape, and got into the Lordship's favour; another that he married the daughter of Mr. John Bird, Member of Council at Madras, and niece of the Deputy Governor of Bengal; and now we find a third reason for the appointment in the Singapore paper; namely, that he is the nephew of Mr. Butterworth Bayley, the Director. It seems as though the writers supposed that these separate or united claims were so strong that they need not be supported by any reference to personal merit. We have no doubt that Col. Butterworth will make a good Governor, and that he owes his own appointment to his own conduct in other departments of duty, and not to nepotism. But the removal of Mr. Blundell must continue to be a blot on the character of this Government. He will soon be up here, and embark for England to lay his case before the Court of Directors, and if report speaks true, he will make some very singular and rather awkward disclosures.

—We are sorry to learn that Col. Alexander, the able and indefatigable Adjutant General at Madras, is constrained to quit his office for a time and seek the renovation of his health and strength, at the Cape. His close application of eight and ten hours a day to the duties of his post, will sufficiently account for the necessity of this relaxation.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20.

—The August Mail arrived yesterday afternoon, and a preview of the intelligence will be found in subsequent columns.

The undersigned begs thankfully to acknowledge the following sums in aid of the Kishanghar Relief Fund.

His Honour the Deputy Governor of Bengal, 40	50
The Honourable C. H. Cameron,	50
The Bishop of Calcutta,	30
Captain Buckle,	10
J. C. Palmer, Esq.,	25
J. B. Thornhill, Esq.,	10
K. Wilkinson, Esq.,	10

C. W. BRINTLEY, Secretary.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following sums for the Relief of India:

Lieut. D. McNeill, to July, 1844, 20	0
F. B. Gabbion, to Sept. 1844, 20	0
Jas. Ogilvie, Esq., to Oct. 1843, 20	0
Capt. Gellie, to April, 1844, 10	0
Lieut. J. C. Brooks, to April, 1844, 20	0
F. Shipwith, Esq., to Feb. 1844, 20	0
Capt. C. Brown, to May, 1844, 25	0
K. Stirling, Esq., to June, 1844, 20	0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.
The monthly meeting of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society was held yesterday morning in the Town Hall, at 10 o'clock. It was the absence of the President, Sir John Peter (nephew of the Vice President, Dr. Griffiths, took the Chair).

The Honorary Secretary read the minutes of the last month's meeting, which were confirmed. The final report of the Finance Committee was read relative to the Carey Testament. It appeared that the sum of Rs. 1444 has been collected towards this object, and the Committee recommended, that this sum, with a small exception, should be remitted to Dr. Hoyle in London, with instructions to him to procure a marble bust of the late venerated Founder of the Society. The recommendation of the Finance Committee was approved by the meeting, and the money ordered to be remitted by the next mail.

A report was also brought forward from the Fruit and Kitchen Garden Committee. It was resolved upon, sometimes ago, to appropriate a certain portion of the Society's funds towards granting premiums to native males and others, with a view to encourage the early growth of only such vegetables and fruits, and also prolonging their production to a longer period than hitherto. In accordance with this intention, the Committee put in a schedule of the prizes which it would be most beneficial to offer, and recommended the 28th October to be fixed for a public exhibition. The Committee's proposal was approved of and passed.

A report was read from Dr. Moore on a black dye, procured in the Salazur country, of which a sample had been presented to the Society. Dr. Moore found the dye to be a black dye, and would be most beneficial to offer, and recommended the 28th October to be fixed for a public exhibition. The Committee's proposal was approved of and passed.

A report was read from Dr. Moore on a black dye, procured in the Salazur country, of which a sample had been presented to the Society. Dr. Moore found the dye to be a black dye, and would be most beneficial to offer, and recommended the 28th October to be fixed for a public exhibition. The Committee's proposal was approved of and passed.

The gentlemen present at the last meeting were all duly elected members of the Society; and several other names were proposed for election as next month's members.

There were a great number of specimens and presentations of different kinds laid upon the table. Of these the following appeared to be the most important:

There was a quantity of the famous Guanine measure, of which so much has been said, presented by Mr. Henry and brought by him from Mauritius, where it has been found to be of great value, in the cultivation of sugar canes. Mr. Henry also announced a few observations on the ingredients which enter into the composition of this measure, the price at which it is procurable, and the peculiar benefits with which its use is connected in sugar plantations, as well as the mode of its use.

There were on the table several specimens of the Acacia, also presented by Mr. Henry, and brought by him from Mauritius. One of these specimens was said to be the last of the variety, and capable of producing a beautiful dye. Its marketable price in England was stated to be about 4250 per ton.

The Society has been presented with an extensive assortment of seeds collected in Afghanistan. This presentation was made by Major Anderson, of the Artillery, to whose thanks the Society were ordered to be returned.

Before the meeting broke up, a resolution was brought forward and generally approved of, to the effect, that the Society should subscribe for about half a dozen copies of a work, in the course of publication by Mr. Bayle, to be entitled the "Sugar Planter's Companion." Lord Ellenborough has consented to the work having been dedicated to him, and the meeting thought, that the Society was indebted to Mr. Bayle for his having allowed the Committee of Papers to publish the first portions of his forthcoming work, in the Society's journal. In acknowledgement of this obligation, it was the sense of the meeting, that the Society should subscribe for a few copies of Mr. Bayle's proposed work. Resolved, Sept. 16.

LA MARTINIQUE.

Yesterday having been the anniversary of the death of the Founder of the Society, the customary annual sermon, in honour of the occasion, was preached by the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop. Besides the children belonging to the Institution, the school was quite full, and with a numerous company of ladies and gentlemen. The Honourable the Deputy Governor and suite honoured the school with their presence, and there were likewise present French, English, and Daniel Elliot, and F. Halliday, Esquires, and Beattie is also fitted with the patent Paddle-box life boats, which, with other boats, afford ample means of carrying the whole of the crew and passengers, with provisions, in case of accident to the vessel. She is fitted with Mr. Williams's patent compass, which considerably diminishes, or altogether prevents, the leaning of the vessel from the funnel. With respect to the interior arrangements of the Beattie, she has no accommodation for 103 cabin passengers, consisting of 20 single, 32 double, and 12 family and general cabins, which are so arranged that in case of objections which were made to the accommodations on board the Hindostan. They are all fitted with every article, and the ventilation and air are abundantly provided. Each has its marble-covered basin-stand, mirror, drawers, writing apparatus, &c. Venetian blinds are inserted in the upper part of the doors, and, wherever possible, in the sides of the cabins also; and plates of perforated zinc and all manner of contrivances are introduced to ensure a constant circulation of wholesome and refreshing drafts. The spar deck forms a magnificent walk, the full length of the ship, with convenient seats aloft.

The main deck, below, is also comparatively open and airy, and forms, with the houses on each side, a spacious and well-lighted stowage, which may be resorted to in showery or business weather. The principal cabin or saloon, under the main deck, is a large square apartment, well lighted from the deck, and from the stern and side windows. It affords room for 100 persons, and is fitted commodiously at the tables, and the different rooms what from those usually constructed, being nearly square, and free from the inconvenience of the several barlike partitions which divide it up, as it occupies the whole width of the vessel in the stern, and is upwards of thirty feet each way, having, besides large stern windows, spacious ports on each side, thus giving abundance of light and air, and a full view of the sea, in nearly every direction. The ladies' saloon or boudoir is entered by the side of the staircase, and presents a quiet, pleasing contrast to the more brilliant decorations of the grand saloon. This room, and the range of cabins adjoining to it, are appropriated to the use of ladies exclusively. The fore part of the grand saloon contains several highly-improved views of Cadiz, Gloucester, &c., painted, or rather etched, on slate. A wide passage communicates with the fore part of the vessel, and a good flight of stairs, ascending each way at the top of the upper deck. Among the other contrivances for ministering to the health, comfort, or luxury of Oriental and European passengers, are shower baths. A well-selected library is also placed in the saloon. This truly splendid vessel will proceed from Southampton on the 24th inst., for Calcutta, via the Cape of Good Hope, touching at Gibraltar, Cape de Verd Islands, the Cape, Mauritius, Ceylon, and Madras, and will start from Calcutta on her first stop for Madras, Ceylon, and Suez, on the 15th December next, and will thenceforward continue to ply on the line between India and Suez, in conjunction with the Hindostan.

ARRIVAL 8.—A telegraphic despatch, with news from Bombay to 19th June, reached London by express from Paris early on the 31st July. Details of the intelligence were published in the Times of the 1st, and letters and papers to Marcellus, were delivered on the morning of the 2nd August. The news received by this mail is not so much highly satisfactory.

Some most important matches are understood to have gone out by the present Mail.

It is said that the Steamer "Frederick" has returned from Huelva; so we presume she has not been disposed of.

The despatches received last month from India were, by permission of the Board of Control, submitted to a full Court of Directors.

The Court of Directors of the East India Company have, at the request of Her Majesty's Government, expressed to the appointment of M. Jellison, as Vice Consul from the King of the French at Bombay.

Commodore Brucka, Indian Navy, has presented a memorial to the Court of Directors, praying for increased honours and emoluments to this branch of the service.

Mr. Dyce Newton, late member for Sudbury, has been declared a lunatic. We give a full report.

We are sorry to find that Mr. Arthur Gallaway, son of Major-General Gallaway, was with a frightful accident on his return from the summering at Cromer-house, Chesham, where, crossing the road near the "World's-end," he was knocked down by a horse attached to a cab, and so injured that when raised from the ground he was in a state of insensibility, and the blood was gushing in profusion from his nose and ears. A stretcher was procured, and the unfortunate gentleman was conveyed without loss of time to St. George's Hospital, where it was discovered that he had sustained a violent contusion of the brain, besides other severe injuries. Mr. Gallaway had recently obtained an appointment in the Civil Service, and would have served in India or two, for Bengal. He is better, but still in a very dangerous state.

Sir Augustus D'Este has, it is said, presented a petition to the Queen, claiming to be entitled to the title of his father, the late Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Saalfeld.

The meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, at Cork, will surpass, in magnitude and magnificence, any former assemblage of that learned and scientific body. Preparations are being made for the most ample and comfortable accommodation of the multitude of visitors who will attend on the occasion; and arrangements have been entered into for the conveyance of passengers, in steamers, from London, Liverpool, Bristol, Plymouth, Glasgow, and Dublin.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, AUG. 24.—OVRN.—The House having concluded its Committee of Supply, Sir G. Clerk moved a vote of 1,200,000 for compensation to the owners of the opium delivered up at Canton. On the conclusion of hostilities, a treaty of commerce was made, under which 6,000,000 dollars were agreed to be paid by the Emperor of China to the British Government as compensation to the owners of such opium. By a clause in the treaty, the difference of value between the 6,000,000 dollars, after amaying and deducting charges, amounted to 1,215,150*l.*, and it was the intention of the Government to pay over to the owners of the opium 1,268,211*l.* The difference between this sum and the sum received was to be accounted for (as we understood) by the circumstance that the Government had given up the whole of the money which had been received as compensation; and this, on an average, would amount to 64*l.* a chest. The committee would perceive that this was a fair compensation, and that a considerably larger sum than the owners of the opium would have received if the average price of the opium in 1840 had been taken as the basis of calculation. Still, as the Government had received 6,000,000 dollars, they proposed to pay over the whole amount. He contended by majority before our readers, that the Government was the owners of opium, under the 4th article of the treaty of peace with China.—Mr. Maugham contended that this sum would fall short of the true value of the opium. The Indian Government has guaranteed this sum materially depend upon the opinion entertained by the Eastern people of its justice and good faith; and those people, that the measure of the compensation should be the intrinsic cost. Two-thirds of this opinion belonged to native merchants, who had connections and transactions throughout the whole Eastern world; and at all events he trusted that the Government would not shut the door against inquiry into the principle on which this compensation was fixed.

Mr. Lindsay expounded, though reluctantly, the decision at which the Government had arrived.—Mr. Goulburn held as highly as any man the importance of preserving the public faith; but he contended, in a new line of argument, that since that no larger sum than public faith really demanded should be charged upon the people of England. The Chinese Government having refused to accept of any sum not warranted by the law of nations, Captain Elliot took upon him the heavy arrangement he could for the interests of the merchants themselves; and on obtaining the refusal of the persons from the Chinese Government, he gave them receipts for the opium which they delivered to him to be surrendered to the Government. He was not to receive any remuneration for payments at invoice prices to the other descriptions of goods which they were compelled to abandon, leaving the amount which was to be paid for the remainder of the opium article to the discretion of the Government at home. The Government had taken the greatest pains to ascertain the true value. The article was one upon which more far from immediate profit was realized, at other times a heavy loss sustained; the traffic was subject to all the fluctuations of a gambling trade; and the invoice price, therefore, was no true value. It was the gentleman's opinion that this seizure the market was in a state of stagnation from glut; and if the opium should have been added to that market, it would not have been sold. He wished to realize any thing like the price at which Captain Elliot's receipt receipts was a tolerably fair test of the value of the opium which they represented; but that price was only about 34*l.* per chest; whereas the compensation now proposed was 64*l.* Sir H. Pottenger thought the 6,000,000 dollars to be a very low compensation, and this was also the opinion expressed by the Chinese, who were good judges of the value in their own market. There were three items for which this estimate had been taken. India, China—the Hong debts, the opium compensation, and the costs of the war. All these were covered by the appropriate sum agreed for under the treaty with China. It was a very small deduction in proportion of that aggregate sum now were to be paid to the owners of the opium, it could be derived only by a tax on the British people. This was no argument, indeed, against withholding payment more than justice really required.

Two or three explanations were asked from and given by Mr. Goulburn, and then a discussion arose between him and Lord Palmerston respecting the terms of the vote. Upon this a division took place, and the vote was finally polled in the shape proposed by Mr. Goulburn.—London Mail.

REMARKS.

POPEAGRAM.—The Court has been occupied with various Government projects. The Deputies had passed the Bill imposing a tax on fresh fish and increasing the duty duty. An Address to the Pope, paying him to be a donation of income in consideration of the seasons state of the country, was sent by the Ministers declaring that his Majesty had again given up fifty cents this year and the King's Consent was met. An Address of thanks to both the Queen and King Consort on the occasion of this concession was carried by 73 against 12. The Court was to remain in Lisbon till after the great annual procession of Corpus Christi, when it would proceed to Oporto. Dr. R. B. was proposed to be elected and seated much surrounded by the High Catholic party, and great efforts were made to induce the Government to remove him from the island, but it was not considered as appropriate to the either inoffensive or probable. Dr. Kaley's "conversion" were considered to be due, in a great measure, to his benevolence and personal influence.—Re-

FUNERAL OF TELLERAY REV. JOSEPH FLETCHER, D. D.—In a former Number we announced the decease of this distinguished and highly respected servant of Christ. It is now our duty to give a brief account of the circumstances connected with the funeral of the departed, which took place on Friday last at Abney Park Cemetery. Every religious man will be pained to the memory of one so devoted by his surviving relatives and friends. At eleven o'clock the remains were conveyed, by the relatives and connections, accompanied by eleven thirty ministers from the metropolis, from the residence in Court-grove, Mills-end-road, to Spenny Meeting-house—for more than twenty years the scene of his pastoral labours. The body was conveyed to the dissection-pier, directly under the pulpit, where it lay during the whole of the solemn service. The Rev. J. A. Jarrow, of Birmingham, commenced by reading the Scriptures and prayer. The Rev. H. F. Burden, of Hackney, delivered the funeral oration. The Rev. G. Smith, of Poplar, completed the service by prayer. The service, throughout, one of the most solemn and appropriate of our times, a splendid chapel was thronged, and hundreds were unable to obtain admission.

At the conclusion of these services the procession, accompanied by the relatives and connections, proceeded to the cemetery, and on foot, moved on to Abney Park. The number of ministers exceeded sixty, and the whole line of road from Spenny Meeting-house to the cemetery was crowded with attendants on foot, anxious to pay this last mark of respect to the remains of the departed, and to witness the interment. Amongst them the police force of the district, and many who their regard for one who had taken a deep interest in their spiritual welfare, were conspicuous; at their own request they formed part of the procession.

On arriving at the cemetery, the remains were found to be lying in the central vault, and were interred in a different part of the metropolis; and, as the day was remarkably fine, the whole scene was one of the greatest interest. The result in which the remains were deposited was a large free tree, facing Abney House, where Dr. Watts, one of the brightest ornaments of the denomination to which the departed was so many years beloved, raised for a considerable part of the sum of some £1000, the Rev. S. Walford delivered an address over the grave, and the Rev. J. F. Smith, D.D., concluded with prayer.

On the following Sabbath, the Rev. Ralph Wadsworth, D. D., of Glasgow, delivered an appropriate, elo-

gent, and eloquent discourse on the occasion of this service lost to the Church on which Dr. Estlin had so long labored. We understand that it is to be published, together with Dr. Burder's oration.

"The memory of the just is blessed." May the benevolent and pious spirit of our departed friend enjoy much of the consolation of that Gospel, which he was so long permitted to proclaim, and the sanctifying influence of which he was enabled to evince so constantly in his life.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON.—No Bishop (says a Clerical correspondent of the Times) has any the slightest right to interfere (and the courts will not bid him so) in any manner, or by any means, in the laying, or the disposal of the produce afterwards, except in the case prescribed by the Rubric:—"After the Divine service ended, the money given at the offertory shall be disposed of to such charitable uses as the ministers and churchwardens shall think fit; whereas, if they disagree, it shall be disposed of as the Ordinary shall appoint." I would beg to observe further, that the jurisdiction of bishops over the parochial district, and more particularly over parochial incumbents, their co-parishians, is more exclusively of an appellate character than the Bishop of London is aware of. All such language as "this is authoritative," "this is my join," &c., in a matter of internal church law, is in the highest degree unbecomingly offensive, and illegal; and would not be tolerated by any other than the clergy of the diocese of London, were become salient to result.

"Some have been beaten till they know What wood a cudgel's of by his blow; Others been kicked till they know where a shoe's of horse or man's leather."—Alfred.

THE REV. MR. BADGER.—To the Editor of the Record.—Sir, I write in order to direct your attention to a subject which for the honour of the Church, requires an immediate investigation. It is known that the Rev. Mr. Badger has been sent out by the Bishop of London, as the representative of the Church to a body of Dissenters inhabiting the mountains of Kurdistan. Various reports are in circulation respecting the conduct of that gentleman in Mosul, which are highly derogatory to his character as a delegate of the Church of England, and which, if true, must only require to be known to secure his immediate recall. If these reports are false, they should be publicly contradicted forthwith by those who are acquainted with the circumstances of the case, in the first place, it is said that Mr. Badger is a thorough Episcopite in doctrine and practice. It is reported of him that both in Malta and Constantinople he preached to perfection the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, and of transubstantiation, or something so nearly like it, that no Papist could perceive the difference. Report says that at Mosul he used the Eucharist, gave and laid, as his every day drink, and that he is on the best terms with the Papists, both native and foreign. At the same time he has had a quarrel with the Jacobite Bishops, Athanasius, about the Apocryphal books of the Old Testament, Mr. B. contending that they belong to the sacred canon, expressly against the thirty-six deutero which he has subscribed.

But this is not the most objectionable thing reported against him. The Americans have had a prosperous mission among the Nestorians for many years. They have pursued their work apparently with great prudence and discretion, scrupulously observing conservative principles, and not interfering in any degree with the ecclesiastical organizations of the people. On this point we have the testimony of the Rev. Mr. Southey, an American Episcopite, who has been engaged in their mission in Oromoos, and who will not be suspected of any undue partiality for Dissenting missionaries. Any one who wishes to know his testimony on the subject can have access to the Apocryphal books of the Tetrach in Persia, by Mr. Southey, published a few years since.

The Americans, who confined their labours at first to the plain of Oromoos, some time since, it seems, commenced operations in the mountains of Kurdistan, where the patriarch resides, and by his warm approbation, and apparently high co-operation, they commenced opening schools, and making arrangements for the prosecution of other branches of missionary labour. Taking advantage of the temporary absence of the American missionaries from the mountains, they have been able to go far beyond the limits of the further arrangements for their work. It is reported that Mr. Badger, Jesuit like, has gone into the mountains with many presents to the Patriarch to endeavour to compel the American mission to leave the field of his own. It is certainly to be hoped that he will not succeed, but it is impossible to say what effect a large show of presents, and corresponding promises, may have upon the Patriarch. At any rate, if this story be true, and it is told on good authority, Mr. Badger has disgraced himself and those who sent him out, and nothing short of his immediate recall can wipe out the foul blot which he has cast upon the Church. The world is wide enough if we wish to prosecute missionary labours, so unable to choose our field without encroaching upon the labours of others; and for a missionary of our Church to encroach upon the field already occupied, and well occupied by other Protestant missionaries, and to endeavour to establish himself by supplanting them; is treating the missionaries of other denominations, &c., in order to obtain the prejudice of an ignorant people against them, as it is, said, Mr. Badger has done, cannot be tolerated for a moment. Such conduct is unworthy of the best days of our Church, and the missionaries often referred to from the falsehoods and voluminous of Papal emissaries, who are said to abound in those countries, and now, it seems, they have a new enemy to contend with, in the shape of a Protestant missionary, or, at least, of a missionary of a Protestant Church.

I feel fully confident that his Lordship, the Bishop of London, needs only to be informed that such stories are in circulation concerning Mr. Badger, to send him at once to order an investigation of the case, and I would venture to suggest that a very proper witness on the subject may be the Rev. Dr. Bennett, our Chaplain at Constantinople.

I mention his name merely because it seems probable that, from his position, he may be in possession of facts on the subject.

DEATH OF THOMAS WILSON, Esq.—Our good friend Thomas Wilson, Esq., the venerable Treasurer of Highgate College; an institution with which he has been connected for more than half a century, and to which he gave his constant attention and princely support. But, while this was the institution in which he took a more peculiar interest, the London Missionary and Medical Society and its institutions were largely in his affections, and protected by his benefactions. To him is due the high prize of having been lately elected to the growing religious wants of the Metropolis, and he may be regarded as one of the great Church-extensionists of his day. The sermon preached on the Roman evening, "For he loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue," applied in a timely and twentyfold degree to Mr. Wilson, whose zeal and unselfishness led to the foundation of numerous new chapels in populous neighbourhoods, which he himself, with his wife, attended to with the most diligent care in the Metropolis only, but Mr. Wilson was instrumental in the erection of additional places of worship. In almost every part of the country, he aided in supplying the spiritual provision of the people in the neighbourhood. The well-built and well-placed structures of which he was the actual founder, will be permanent monuments of the beloved one who has been the subject of our eulogium. "And here the coming Master found The golden talent well employed."

In short, he may truly be said to have been at work in England, what the Hibernians were in Scotland; winning to the millennium of the Countess of Huntingdon a large measure of the loyalty of organization which she has so long and so ably sustained. Some years past, Mr. Wilson's health had given way under the infirmities of age; but, to the last, he was actively useful, taking the warmest interest in all public religious affairs; and in reference to the recent threatened attack upon the rights and institutions of Dissenters in the shape of the Factory Education Bill, he showed that age had not impaired his attachment to the great principles of Religious Nonconformity. One of the last occasions on which he took a part in any public proceeding, was in presiding at a meeting, held in Union Chapel, Islington, in petition against that atrocious measure. Mr. Wilson expired on Saturday, in his seventy-sixth year. The heavy loss to his denomination is mitigated by the reflection, that he is succeeded by an excellent son, John Wilson, the founder of the Congregational Library, who not only inherits his ample fortune, but also his devoted attachment to Congregational principles. Long may the benevolent mind of Wilson be associated with the institutions of Congregational Dissent!—F. W.

A TEST PROOF OF YOUNG FEMALES.—A number of gentlemen connected with the different societies in the metropolis for the protection of women, have had their attention particularly called to the delinquencies of the law, which require the sale of microscopos upon the face of the earth to pursue as a trade the destruction of young, giddy, and helpless women and children; and having expressed, in the form of resolutions, their views upon the subject, they held on Wednesday last a conference with Lord Brougham at his own house, with a view to some steps being taken to bring the subject before Parliament this session. Lord Brougham will move for a committee of inquiry. Preliminary, however, to this, he proposed to ascertain whether the question would be better taken up by the Government, or whether a mode of proceeding could be adopted by which the society proposed might be better accomplished. The Society for the Protection of Young Females had on Thursday their annual dinner, at which Lord Ashley in the chair; a long list of subscribers was read.—Thid.

PRIMITIVE METHODISTS.—The twenty-fourth Annual Conference of the Primitive Methodist Society closed on the 16th instant. Their numbers are as follows:—35,565 members; 439,565 converts; 7,438 local preachers; 1,278 stations; 74,540 members; their Sunday schools; deaths, 934; increase for the year, 6,045; increase of Sunday scholars, 4,396.—F. W.

THE COST TO THE SKELLERHOOD.—The cost to the SKELLERHOOD of the execution of our slave trade treaties, for the year 1843, is no less than 573,445.—Record.

DEPARTURE OF THE "THREE SCAZORS."—The following appears in the York Reporter:—"The Malabar sails to-morrow (Sunday), replete with passengers. The Type was towed up this morning, at sundown, until the arrival of the locomotive. The Race, Type, &c., were under orders to sail this morning, but are countermanded. The Type had moved down the harbour, but has now resumed her former position." The Cork paper says:—"We regret to state that the Irish squadron, which was to stay at Cork diffused so much pleasure—and profit—on the part of the good people there, and caused so many of our townsfolk to take advantage of the accommodation afforded by the ship, that the vessel, on the 17th of May, is departing and dispersing, going nobody knows whither, as nobody can tell what they came."

THE GREEK LECTURES.—The number of persons attending, in the scribbled Roman style of architecture, with a theatre capable of containing 800 persons, has just been completed at the corner of Basmallah-street, at a cost of 7,000*l.*, for the delivery of the Grecian Lectures.—Thid.

HIS MAJESTY'S PIPER.—The Queen has just appointed August Mackay, brother of the piper of the late Duke of Devonshire, to be Her Majesty's piper at the Palace. Highland dress will be worn, and he is provided for the new functionary, and our townsman, Mr. Mackenzie, has been authorized by Lord Jersey and the Hon. Mr. Murray to furnish him, for one of the morning, another for mid-day, and a third for after-dinner, and state occasions.—Lat. & Cosmopol.

THAMES TURNED.—The number of persons who paid toll last week, was 54,542.—Record.

STRAIT ON LOOK CATRINE.—On Saturday last, a small iron steam-belt arrived in our town on its passage from the Cape of Good Hope, on which it is intended to ply during the summer months. It is only about six tons in weight, and small, all has no deck, nor any part of it covered in except the engine, which is of iron. The vessel is a small one, but great improvement to the enjoyment of visitors to this romantic lake.—Striding Observer.

EXTRAORDINARY POWER OF THE PEN.—"We do not deny the power of the pen, but we do deny the power of the pen to do what it is not intended to do. Soundness, nor our power without limit!"—Country Paper.

SPAIN.—THE ROYALTY'S MANIFESTO TO THE SPANISH PEOPLE.—The Spanish Regent has issued the following manifesto to the nation:—

"Spaniards! at a time when my conduct and my intentions are so sedulously blackened, when the country is menaced with such misfortunes through the falsehoods of its foes, I can no longer keep silence. I must raise my voice and oppose facts to the treacherous attacks of calumny. It is a painful task, grateful to me only to address my fellow-citizens. I need not recapitulate the events which have raised me to my present lofty post. The debates of both Chambers preceding my election are still fresh. Spain and Europe are witnesses to the purity of my motives, proclaimed my name, and the oath which I took to govern by and for the Constitution still sounds in my ears. I swore to devote myself to the upholding of the laws and the country. This oath, which I took with emotion, in presence of all Spain, has continued to guide my steps. Never did I break this oath, nor did I, the idea of violating it enter my head. I am surrounded in my life with constitutional and responsible Ministry; and this Ministry acted no force but that of the law against those who provoked even the military law in intervention. Any calumny, any different personal attacks, I used no other arm than silence. On the two occasions on which I marched in person against the rebellious, could I have forgotten the Regent of the Fatherland? I had to go often led the troops to honour and to danger. If my presence had caused disorder and terrified the anarchy, now not the enemies of the country could complain. Experience has shown that the law is the only recourse. But the history of all States, ancient and modern, testifies that the state of liberty must be sometimes violated in order to preserve the state of liberty. These few words are not intended to fall more than to show that your greatness, if conspirators, working under the protecting mantle of the law, could go on with impunity, provided the law is the father of the law. I judge whether these exceptional laws were the result of necessity or caprice. The Cortes approved of the first of these instances of exceptional measures. They shall discuss the second, when passions are less inflamed. On the third day the religious and political of a Ministry censured by the Cortes. On two others I dissolved the Cortes and appealed to the people, the Constitution in my hand. The Pontifical Law gave me this right. Why? Least the Cortes should not be in harmony with the nation, or one Chamber not so with the other; yet lest passion, error, or other causes might endanger the interests of the country. The right to dissolve the Cortes is sacred. The Parliamentary forms are invoked against me. Do Parliamentary forms agree with the formation of a Cabinet of which one Minister is a foreigner? Do Parliamentary forms demand what reason and justice require? The Regent of the land was intrusted to form a Ministry, after the factions of the Lower House had shown themselves exhausted and powerless. Spaniards! I know the Constitution better than those who thus invoke it. If it is a Regent; in it are my rights and titles; with it before me, I have sworn to maintain my country's liberties. Beyond the constitution there is not an atom for me, and ruin for a great monarch, whose independence was purchased with so much blood. Shall I reply to the interminable abuse of which I am the object? Shall I condemn to refute the accusation of my seeking to prolong my Regency beyond its legal time? I reply that the Regency is a necessary evil to enlighten my day. The maintenance of my Ministry did not offend to discredit such assertions, nor my own assertions before the first bodies of the nation. Because nothing can remove the line which separates the Regent from the King. How should I defend that day which closes my political career? I prefer the example of those who laid down their lives, to those who have violated the laws to preserve their lives. I have not the ambition of Napoleon. He expelled his occupations on a rock in the reef. Let others then not envy the glory that their country too dearly pay. Balcones Espartaco, ruined by the same ambition, satisfied with having fulfilled his duties, and merited the sympathy of the good. Spaniards! I speak from the heart, and more sincerely than those who seek to plunge you in convulsions. They are necessary to raise the standard of rebellion, covering thus their own private ambition. They preach union, but are dissension; they preach amnesty, but practice vengeance; and proclaim the rights of the people, while in rendering all government impossible. Reason and justice are on my side. I feel nothing I rely on the Constitution, and in the present state of the nation, confidence, as on former occasions, in the loyal, the good, the lovers of liberty, the army, the navy, the national guard, and in Spaniards worthy of the name. They will aid me in this, and I have the right to say they will step down into the electoral arena, and return a Congress in harmony with the country's interests. To the Cortes, which ought to decide the great questions moved, I have already entrusted the sacred deposits of the Queen's and my own authority. I will not give these up to anarchy or to the license of passions. The fate of him who has no other office of his life to his country, is of little consequence. But the Queen, the Constitution, the monarchy, impose duties which I will fulfil, as first magistrate of the nation, and which I will defend as a soldier.

—Madrid, June 18. —DEER OF VICTORIA.
—Record.

UNITED STATES.—The Meetings of the Anti-Slavery Societies have this year attracted very little notice; this is to be ascribed to the unhappy divisions which have taken place among the friends of emancipation, and to the fact that the meetings of the friends of the slave have not been in time, or in place, and only from the changing of the place of the meetings the north has undergone, but also from certain misstatements in the south. The following extracts from a recent article in the Gazette contain evidence that the southern mind is, to my dear, beginning to move upon this subject. The editor asks: "Is there any difference of opinion at the south upon this subject?" Judging from the very language of politicians, we should say, No! They seem to be united upon it—they declare it to be a blessing—they tolerate no discussion of it. Now we know that these sentiments are repugnant to a very large class there. True, they say yet my little slave, but they take with each other, they are quietly but surely extending their views; they think rightly, and reason well, and when assured of their strength, they begin to speak more boldly. In Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, this result is becoming more and more palpable. No subject is becoming more earnestly talked about than that of slavery. It is no longer in the street, and says—in churches, in religious halls, in the shops, the farm-houses. Judge Gaston (of North Carolina) did not tremble to recommend the colleagues of Charles Hill (the Virginian) to turn their eyes and thoughts to it as an evil which required to be mastered. Mr. C. M. Clay did not hesitate, in discussing this matter in Kentucky, to denounce the tyranny of politicians, the time-serving of Churchmen, and the paltry shuffling of all classes, which did not dare to look the dire evil in the face. Virginia even do not allow a speech of it as an emblem, which can be traced off by emancipation alone; while at Knoxville, in Tennessee, a Northern editor invoked the aid of all honest men against these political hacks, and was always endeavoring to make political capital out of it; and he boldly proclaimed the law of the state a brutal law; which puts up human beings for sale; and he calls upon the friends of the state to be strong and to stand ever from their statute-book. These statements are made by one whose vicinity to the slaveholding men, and whose connection with them, give him no reason to know something of the sentiment which is beginning to manifest itself there. Of the dreadfully demoralizing influence of slavery in the south, no one, who has not actually seen it, can form any just conception; the non-slaveholding states are rapidly outstripping the slaveholding states in wealth and population; and while this last fact excites the envy of the Cottons and the McTiffers, who, with one breath, praise their democracy, with the next pronounce slavery a blessing, it, at the same time, cannot fail to excite the serious and anxious attention of reflecting men at the north. There can be no doubt, however, that the politicians of the south are aiming to bolster up their declining domination by the abrogation of the Constitution, the present state of the south, and that it is warmly approved by President Tyler, is asserted by Mr. Adams, who is not apt to make assertions which he is not able to prove. That the free states will not countenance such a course, cannot be a moment's belief; and even if they did, Great Britain surely would interfere to prevent the consummation of the villainy.

The General Assembly of the American Presbyterian Church is now in session. The question of the lawfulness of marrying a deceased wife's sister, is again to come before the Assembly; it is a question which has been discussed by the Assembly for the past year, and the general opinion seems to be, that the present Assembly will abandon the ground taken by the Assembly of 1842.

We find that the draft of the charter of incorporation for the borough of Sheffield was prepared at the last Meeting of the Privy Council, held on Saturday last, June 10th, and that it is to be immediately transmitted to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, to receive the Queen's warrant; after which a short time will be necessary to complete the charter, and then the charter will be forwarded with regard to a municipal corporation for this borough are now received.—Sheffield Paper.

SENATOR REPORTED FROM DEVON TO FRANCE.—The noble lord, Mr. St. John, who was reported to have, in Exeter market, a short time since, fifty-five soldiers to a French gentleman. He took them to France, returned immediately, found the same person, and brought of him all the soldiers he had for sale, fifty in number.—Western Times.

It is said, that notwithstanding the care of postmasters, and the extraordinary consequences of that, the letters missing, containing coin, are one in fifty; whilst of letters in general, the missing are one in 1,000.—Accord.

A correspondent of the Times states, as a "hint for brother Jonathan," that a young man of color, almost of pure negro race, is keeping his term in the Middle Temple for the bar; and that he is treated by his companions, including some of the most talented and noblest & young Englishmen, with as much respect as any. In a few years the least probably be remembered as a stance, because parallel instances will then be common; but we are sure that the slave will always be remembered as a member occupying posts of distinction in the West Indies pushing for metropolitan honors; it will save it in every way and everywhere.—Westman.

IRISH REFORM.—It is an extraordinary proof of the zeal of the Irish people for the repeal movement, and of their anxiety to attend Mr. O'Connell's Meetings, that scarcely any of their leaders could over this year be laymen. Our streets and roads were lately strewn with them at the meetings, but there are actually not a few to be seen this summer. We suspect that those poor fellows will find, before the year is out, that agitation is not half as much a trade (for them, at least) as laymaking.—Liverpool Times.

FEMALE HEALTH OF GLASGOW.—We regret to state that the city has been a very unhealthy state for some time past. The female ward of the Fever Hospital has occasionally been so full that patients have been refused, and those belonging to the hospital have been being treated in large numbers at their own homes, by the district surgeons attached to the Town's Hospital. The prevailing troubles are, however, influenza, and cold, caused, no doubt, by the winter weather. A thorough ventilation of the hospital, fortunately, is a very trifling, and the ailments generally give way in a day or two to medical treatment and judicious abstinence, which, in the case of the latter disease, is readily supplied by the Town's Hospital.—Scotts Paper.

THE HEARS OF ST. LOUIS AND OF RICHARD CORSE.—Mr. L. L. Lorraine, a Deputy of the department of the Eure, addressed a long letter to the Moniteur, in reply to the opinion expressed by M. Lorraine, Keeper of the Archives, who had been recently sent to St. Louis, which was believed to have been lately found in the Holy Chapel at Paris. M. Lorraine had contended that the head of that Monarch had not been recovered to France, and that if it had been, it would certainly have been enclosed in a box made of a more precious metal than the tin. M. Lorraine considers the French assertion as extremely hazardous, and resting on no well-established fact. "As regards the evidence drawn from the paltry value of the box," says he, "an argument which has gained many partisans we will begin by observing that the box in question was neither made of tin, nor lead, but of tinued copper, and we will oppose to it a single fact, which appears to us conclusive. The heart of a prince rarely comes with the French Monarch, who was seriously as great a King as Louis—I mean Richard Cœur de Lion—was also enclosed in a metal box, which box, so fortunately discovered by my Learned Friend, M. Deville, and so shamefully abandoned ever since, is now in the cathedral of Reims; it is not made of gold, silver, or even of tinued copper; it is made of the vilest metal—lead. "We say," writes our Correspondent, "did you not demand the direct sale in return for the remains of Napoleon? It is not too late. Make the demand. France cannot have the face to refuse it."—Paris.

CORRUPT REVENUE.—The revenue of the Customs-house at Liverpool continues to improve. The receipts for the month of May, 1843, exceeded by 50,000*l.* those of the corresponding month in last year.—Id.

COFFRAGERS, MAY 27.—The financial statement for 1841 is published. It announces that the revenue for that year amounted to 16,199,171 rs. dollars; and the expenditures to 15,900,741 rs. dollars; so that there was a surplus of 808,430 rs. dollars.—Hamburg Paper, June 2.

LANCASHIRE.—Our fair is over. Before it commenced there were fears that it would be unprosperous. These fears have been realized as far as regards the purchases of North Germany. There were sufficient numbers of purchasers from France, Germany and from Switzerland, for which country much cloth was bought. From Poland there came many hundreds of purchasers of Warsaw and Lublin. There was a demand for the goods of the twelfth impeding. There were many Moldavians and few Wallachians. Of 150,000 pieces of cloth brought to the fair but not sold, English wools had the greatest sale. Silks were not so well sold. Linens much sought after. Great sale of printed cottons; those of England diminishing—those of France increasing. Of 150,000 pieces of cloth brought to the fair but not sold, English wools had the greatest sale. Silks were not so well sold. Linens much sought after. Great sale of printed cottons; those of England diminishing—those of France increasing. Of 150,000 pieces of cloth brought to the fair but not sold, English wools had the greatest sale. Silks were not so well sold. Linens much sought after. Great sale of printed cottons; those of England diminishing—those of France increasing.

BARON DE BUCHAN.—We are authorized to state that Sir Colin Mackenzie, of Nacey, whose claim to this ancient peerage, as being the representative of Lady Margaret Fraser, of Inverleith, the eldest daughter of James, seventh Earl of Seaforth, was supported by a train of apparently a most conclusive historical, documentary, and oral evidence, and confirmed by the opinions of the most eminent lawyers and genealogists, both in England and Scotland, and recently and accidentally discovered of a document from which it would appear that Lady Margaret Gray, and was Sir Colin Mackenzie's great-grandmother. Hence the existence of this Lady Margaret was never once mentioned by any of the peerage writers, or, which is still more strange, so much as alluded to in the extensive family collection of the time. On the contrary, it was uniformly stated by several branches of the family who have assumed the title, and by all the writers whose names have weight as peerage authorities in Scotland, that Lady Margaret Fraser, the Inverleith, was the eldest daughter of the seventh Earl. As her representative, Sir Colin Mackenzie was, consequently, the person who was entitled to the honors. Through the unlooked-for discovery alluded to was known only to Sir Colin, he yet, in accordance with the feelings which actuated him throughout, having been informed by Mr. Douglas, of Brighton in Yorkshire, where he learned that the direct lineal descendant of Lady Margaret Gray, the true gentleman, and to his family, the connection proved a matter of no consequence as regards the honors, and in their neighborhood had ever heard even a surmise of such a right.—Globe.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER.—Sir Charles Napier is one of the most chivalrous and experienced soldiers of the day. He has been twice wounded, and is 50th Regiment throughout the campaign which terminated with the battle of Corunna, where he received five wounds—namely, the fracture of his leg by a musket Head Quarters, Calcutta, 4th September, 1913.

The Commander-in-Chief is pleased to make the following appointment on his personal staff.
Lieutenant A. Bayot, of the 10th regiment of native infantry, to be Aide-de-camp.

Assistant Surgeon W. Craddock is appointed to the medical charge of the above detachment, and directed to join.

The regimental order by Major F. Howcroft, under date the 24th ultimo, appointing Lieutenant G. A. Fisher to act as Adjutant to the 1st regiment of native infantry vice Lieutenant and Brevet Captain C. Wright promulgated is confirmed as a temporary arrangement.

GENERAL ORDERS—QUEEN'S TROOP

DOMESTIC OCCURRENCES

Sells-paw Press, or to any of the Booksellers of Chicago.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 456. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29th. 1849.

[Price 5 Cts. Rs. monthly, or 10 Rs. yearly if paid in advance.]

THE AUGUST MAIL arrived on Wednesday morning last, too late however to allow of our offering any remarks on the intelligence which it brought. There is not indeed any striking event announced, but it is impossible to peruse the papers, Whig or Tory, Conservative or Liberal, without perceiving that we are on the eve of great changes, which may probably affect the stability of our institutions. The general aspect of affairs is gloomy, and the gloom is unrelieved by a single ray of cheerfulness from any quarter. The Tories have now been two years in office, with a strong Government, and an overwhelming Parliamentary Majority; they have had the benefit of an income tax, and of the money refunded by the House of Commons in a more deplorable condition than when the Whigs; our foreign trade is still falling off; and our home consumption of taxable articles, is becoming more restricted. In addition to every other calamity, we have now the ruin of the iron trade; the Masters have been obliged to blow out their furnaces, and it was expected that a hundred thousand workmen would be thrown out of employment, in a very short time, and thus augment the general distress and disaffection. The palmer worn is evidently at the root of our national prosperity, and its blowers are withering. The extremes of wealth and poverty, plenty and want, are becoming daily more palpable and galling, and the time draws near when these extremes will meet, and fearful indeed will be the shock.

It is manifest to all parties, that some radical changes must be effected in the state of society, highly disastrous to the upper and wealthier classes, and which no Minister, Whig or Conservative, can venture to propose without the certainty of being driven from his post, but which no circumstances can apparently avert. The working classes of society perceive that every alteration, every change, and almost every improvement serves only to increase their distress. The corn law enhances the price of the poor man's bread, for the benefit of the landlords; the tithe commutation Act has in many instances made the tithe pressure more insupportable; turnpike roads which afford such admirable convenience for the conveyance of goods, are charged with so many tolls that the labouring community cannot take advantage of them; and even the Poor Law, designed for the relief of the country, has in many instances inflicted an additional burden on the industrious, and in all cases, exasperated their feelings. The general depression of almost every interest is so great, that even the income tax, drawn chiefly from the pockets of the rich, has afforded no compensation for the loss of revenue. The drain on the Treasury from foreign war has ceased. Except in Ireland, we have no army in the field; yet the prospects of England are not improved. The revenue continues to sink.

Even the peaceable, the forbearing, the phlegmatic Welsh have been roused into resistance, and three Regiments cannot prevent toll gates from being levelled with the ground. The Welsh began with a war upon the tolls, and have now extended their opposition to tithes, and the Poor Law. We may almost adopt the language of Burke, and say on this occasion, "Since the invasion of King Edward, and the massacre of the barons, there never was such a tumult, and clamour, and uproar, through the region of Presbyterians. The fury of litigious war blew her horn on the mountains; the rocks poured down their gauds, and the deep caverns vomited out their miners. Every thing above ground and every thing under ground was in arms." The determined and organised resistance of so large and hardy a population, serves still more to embroil the machine of Government. At the same time the condition of Ireland is enough to appal the most stout hearted Minister. That country is at present under the control of one man, and that man is not the Queen's representative. Some of our contemporaries appear to consider the agitation as dying out. We cannot see on what ground their opinion is formed. The rent has not decreased; the gatherings of the people are as large as ever; their feelings towards the Saxon become daily more bitter and exasperated. The accession of the gentry to the cause of Royal continuance without abatement. O'Connell will not of course stand still. He proposes to organise a Government and to draw to it the functions of the administration. He has directed the appointment of arbitrators, to act in lieu of the Justices of the Peace who have been dismissed. He has allotted 3000*l.* to the building of a Parliament House in Dublin. He will soon assemble representatives in the Capital, without however committing himself by any violation of the law; and then, the first collision with the Queen's troops will bring on a civil conflict, and cover the land with blood. The Minister, Sir Robert Peel, evidently quails before the demon of revolution which O'Connell has conjured up; and his "do nothing" policy has alienated many of his adherents and some of his colleagues. Bowed on all sides with difficulties, perhaps greater than those which ever assailed a Premier, it seems as though the Cabinet would soon be deprived of his assistance. Indeed nothing but mistrust and hatred of the Whigs on the part of the Tories, seems to keep Sir Robert Peel in his place. Should he throw up office he must be succeeded either by some more uncompromising Tory Premier, who will bring matters to a point, or by a Whig Ministry pledged to make great concessions. In either case, a radical change in the state of things will be hastened.

In the Church, there appear to be the same elements of danger at work, as in the State. If the Irish Church should survive the present crisis, it must be by the special interposition of God, 'who alone doth great marvels.' Six years ago the idea of touching the revenues of the established Church in the sister island, had been scouted in the House of Commons. Now, the proposal of making a fresh distribution of ecclesiastical revenues in Ireland with the view of endowing the Catholic Church, is made a matter of discussion; and though it has met with much opposition, yet the more fact that such a proposal has been brought forward and supported, is a circumstance which bodes no good. It is thus that all mighty changes in our constitution, civil and ecclesiastical, have gradually crept upon us. At first they have been spurned with scorn; then they have gained admission, and have been discussed in the House under the pressure of circumstances; and have been eventually carried. We must not be too sanguine that even a Conservative Ministry would not, under the terror of a Civil war in Ireland, give up part of the Protestant endowments as a bribe to the Catholics; and nothing could be more fatal to the stability of the Established Church than this sacrifice of the principles on which it is based. Meanwhile, the Bishop of Down has been preaching doctrines which have served to alienate the 800,000 Presbyterians in the north of Ireland, who form the strength of the Protestant interest, and the Judges in the House of Lords have declared the mixed marriages, hitherto celebrated between Presbyterians and Episcopalian, illegal, and thus bastarded thousands, and disturbed the security of property. Thus the two bodies of Protestants are thrown into a state of mutual alienation, at a time when there is no safety for either but in active co-operation.

In England, Tractarianism continues to tear the Church of England to pieces; and the Presbyterians continue to appropriate never and nearer to Popery. The salvation of the Church, to all appearances, depends upon the firm stand the Laity 'take' make against these innovations; and it is gratifying to find that some of the most influential gentlemen and laymen in the Church have sent up a protest to the Chancellor of Oxford against the propagation of doctrines so subversive of the principles of the Reformation. At the head of these are Lord Ashley and Lord Sandon. The Methodists, disgusted with the insolence of the Pursepicks, are identifying themselves more closely with dissent; and the compact body of Dissenters have constrained her Majesty's Ministers to withdraw the Factory Bill, though supported, without exception, by the adherents of the Established Church. Some of the Tory papers uphold Sir James Graham for having yielded to the dictation of the Secularists. He has yielded to the wishes of two millions of petitioners, whose voice no Minister could afford to despise. All these events evidently portend the approach of great and radical changes, not only in the measures but in the principles of government; changes not only radical, but organic. So rapid indeed has been the succession of new influences, arising out of the repeal agitation in Ireland; the discontent of the starving manufacturers, the progress of opposition to the corn law, and the triumph of the Dissenting interest over the advocates of the Education clauses of the Factory bill in England; and the secession of half the Ministers and their adherents from the Church of Scotland, that it is impossible to foresee what may be the complexion of the next Parliament. That Assembly will be elected under the pressure of circumstances more momentous than any which have arisen since the convocation of the Long Parliament.

COL. STEERMAN AND HIS ANTAGONISTS.—We perceive that Col. Steerman's persevering for continuance to attack him through the columns of the Bombay Times. In the number for the 9th of September, the charge is renewed, and an attempt is made to weaken the value of the plain, straightforward and satisfactory refutation which he has put forth in his own name—a satisfactory, we mean, to those who have no personal interest in Bundelkand affairs. The letter is anonymous; this speaks for itself. After Col. Stesman had ridiculed this 'displeasure of his own official masters, by affixing his signature to his defence, his antagonist ought to have shown that he had the spirit of a man, by coming forward in his real name. With such an example before him, there can be but one reason for continuing to assail the character of another under the protection of a mask.

And what, we may ask, is the real cause of that unexampled virulence with which Col. Stesman has been attacked? Other officers, placed in circumstances of equal responsibility, are allowed to work out their plans of reform or pacification without molestation. In every other instance, it has been usual to await the result of a course of operation, instead of attacking it step by step, and contesting every inch of ground, with a public officer through the medium of the public papers. Col. Stesman was selected by the Governor General for the management of a province in which disaffection was gradually assuming the character of revolt. Granting, for the sake of argument, that the steps he has taken have not been judicious; that Parsooth is held in high estimation by the chiefs, instead of being regarded with contempt; and that the two insurgents who have been reinstated, were on the point of being captured by Capt. Boland, when they surrendered on conditions to a native officer, is this a sufficient cause for that unexampled acerbity of feeling which marks the numerous papers published against Col. Stesman in the public journals? Why should a course of action be pursued towards him, which is never pursued towards any other officer? Why is it deemed necessary to hold him up to public contempt by charging him with imbecility, with cowardice, and with a degree of dissoluteness which amounts almost to bad faith? Why are letters addressed to the Governor General in the public papers calling on his Lordship to depose the Commissioner? Is it public virtue, or is it private interest which has raised this storm against him? Is it not because he is suspected of having advised the summary dismissal of all the Bagor and Nerbudda officials? On no other principle can we account for that extraordinary invective with which every measure is decised, and every motive traduced. This course however, is not without precedent. We find that even the good Lord Teignmouth, then Mr. Stesman, on his arrival in India, finding that Clive had curtailed the emoluments of the Civilian by abolishing the system of districts; that is, by abrogating a system of fraud and injustice which has few parallels in Christian history, designated him "Clive of infamous memory." Thus we find that the great bulk of the army, having been led to believe that Lord William Bentinck had agreed to curtail the half beta order as the condition of relieving the Governor Generalship, have continued to regard him as the basest of human beings, and to consider the strongest epithets too mild for his conduct. To a similar case and to no other can we attribute these repeated and inveterate attacks on Col. Stesman's personal character and policy; and his opponents must not be surprised if the public should judge of the merits of the controversy, from the motives which stimulate the assailants.

It is said that Col. Stesman has compromised the British character by his pacific policy. But naturally there is nothing impolitic, nothing cowardly in the attempt to restore order in so large a province by a conciliatory system. It can do no harm to try the effect of mildness during the first season. When that has failed, it will be time enough to let slip the dogs of war upon the territory, and deliver it up to fire and sword. No interest is injured by postponing to the last moment this resort to arms. On the contrary, should Government be under the necessity of punishing the refractory chiefs who are said to harbour the rebels, its previous forbearance will give a character of peculiar equity to the proceeding.

Our contemporaries will, we trust, feel the necessity of closing their columns to the calumnies of the new Commissioner. When he could no longer brook the attacks which were made on his character and policy by those whom Lord Ellenborough had unjustly, we think, ejected, he turned round on his pursuers and met them with a bold refutation, bearing his own name. This proceeding has given offence to the Governor General, whose fondness for generalisation has led him to issue a notification forbidding all public officers to communicate any document or information of which they may become officially cognizant. Whatever inconvenience this notification may occasion to Government, or to the public, lies at the door of those who have constrained Col. Stesman to take the field in his own defence. That officer is thus deprived of all means of defending himself from any aspersions which may be cast on him, while no such prohibition can reach his anonymous detractors. He is perfectly defenceless, and may at any time be assailed with impunity. To attack any man in such circumstances is repugnant to that generosity of character on which Englishmen are accustomed to pride themselves; and we hope our contemporaries will not fail to bear in mind how dastardly any future attacks must appear which they may admit into their journals.

SCINDE.—Government has resolved that the newly acquired province of Scinde shall be garrisoned with troops from the Bengal, and not from the Bombay Presidency. Ten Regiments of Infantry and Cavalry, with a suitable complement of artillery are to be detached from Bengal, and stationed in that country. The arrangement appears to be based on sound principles, and has received general approbation. It appears that the number of troops necessary to maintain our authority in that province, will not fall far short of 12,000. To mingle the corps from two Presidencies, in the same locality, would be productive of much inconvenience and confusion. Hence it is desirable that all the Regiments should be furnished from one Presidency, and be subordinate to the same establishments. But as the troops required for Scinde, are equal to one third the strength of the whole Bengal army, it is manifest that they could not be spared from that Presidency; and must come from Bengal, which alone is able to furnish them without inconvenience.

It has also been stated that the army of Scinde should not have a double base of operation, but be made dependent either on Bombay or on Bengal exclusively. The communication between Scinde and Bombay by sea, is greatly interrupted during two or three months of the year, while a steady intercourse may be kept up at all seasons with Perspore, by way of the Indus. Sukkur, we believe, may always be reached in less time from that station than from Kerachee, and it will be easier to improve the boats at Perspore, and to attain a greater degree of speed in moving down the stream, than to facilitate and shorten the communication up the river from the sea. In all respects, there will be more convenience and certainty in looking to the northern station for supplies and succour, than in depending on the southern port.

That intelligence will probably be received with some dissatisfaction at Bombay, where the public mind has become in a great measure reconciled to the occupation of Scinde, by the prospects of employment and distinction which is opened. But as the abstraction of so large a body of troops from the army of this Presidency will render it necessary to relinquish some of the stations which lie on the frontiers of the Bombay and Madras Presidencies, a new distribution of military duty will probably be made, by which the disappointment of the Bombay Officers will be in a great measure compensated. Some of our contemporaries have talked of an augmentation of the army to meet the drain occasioned by this new demand; but we are inclined to think the Court of Directors will not lend an ear to any such advice. They will probably judge that as there is peace in Asia and tranquillity in India, this period of repose should be improved for the husbanding of their resources. They will persuade themselves without much difficulty that the abandonment of Afghanistan by England, and of Khiva by Russia, has made central Asia neutral ground, and that no provision is necessary against any combination which its tribes may form against us. They will probably look at the sum total of the troops now borne on the roll, and compare it with the numerical strength of the army before we resolved to march into Afghanistan; and they may find that the augmentations which have been gradually made, have so far increased the size of the army, that notwithstanding recent reductions, it is still larger than the army of 1838, be the full extent of all the troops required for Scinde.

The unhealthiness of the country and the risk which the troops may run, have been largely dwelt on. It is evident that Sukkur and its neighbourhood have proved detrimental to the health of the troops, though the deaths have been comparatively few. But Hyderabad and Kerachee have been found more salubrious than was expected, and the country, altogether, has not proved so fatal to Europeans and Natives, unaccustomed to its novel climate, as we were led to apprehend. One thing at least is certain, that nothing will tend more to create salubrity, which must be the work of time, than the location of our troops in the province. The country has become unhealthy because it was neglected by the oppressive Amcers, who seem to have considered that there were but two objects of Government; that of screwing money out of the people, and that of creating hunting grounds for their own pastime. A scientific system of drainage will soon alter the face of the country and remove all cause of complaint on the score of unhealthiness. The first season will probably prove the most insalubrious; but, according to our usual experience, the next will be a complete amelioration. The miasms have been removed in Arizona within fifteen years, at little or no expense, is sufficient to encourage exertion in every other locality. Long after we obtained possession of that country, the annual victims of the climate exhibited a terrible list. Some distant allusion of the same kind in our Those whom death spared, talked for the rest of their lives of the Aracan fever, as having penetrated their bones. The compartment of the Regiment was a perfect charnel house; it is now a manutrium. Why should not Scinde present results equally gratifying with that superior article which is likely to be bestowed on it?

The allotment of Scinde to the troops of Bengal, gives to the army of this Presidency the high trust of guarding the entire frontier of the Empire by land, with the exception of the single and detached province of Yumassarim. The frontier of the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, either lie on the sea coast, or about, on protected states. The boundary line entrusted to the Bengal troops extends in the form of a magnificent arc, from Sandoway in Aracan to Kanchee in Scinde, through an extent of more than three thousand miles; to this vast size has the Empire grown in eighty-six years, since Chive, having recovered the Factory to which we had been confined, said, "you cannot stop here." At successive distances, the Army of the Frontiers, as that of Bengal may now be called, finds itself marshalled in front of the Beloches, the Affghans, the Sikhs, the Nepaleses, and the Burmese. Since the fall of the Roman empire, no army has ever been placed in so responsible a position, and never has an army engaged the post of danger by the higher devotion and valour. In these observations we trust we shall not be considered as casting any light on the merits of the armies at the sister Presidencies. They are equally a portion of that Army of India which has spread the renown of England through Asia. The one has recently had its day of triumph in China, the other in Scinde; and they have only to meet the foe again, on whatever soil, to acquire fresh laurels.

These remarks were penned last week, but we were obliged to omit them on the arrival of the Mail, which brings a rumour that Scinde will probably be restored to the Amerees. However defective may have been our right to dispossess the Amerees, it is allowed by all, even by those who most violently impugn Lord Ellenborough's policy, that we cannot relinquish the country without committing an act of unpardonable madness. To restore it to its former Rulers and thus establish a new and independent, perhaps a hostile, power on the frontiers of India, would bring in question our capacity for governing the rest of the country. If the Indus is to be regarded as the natural limit of our empire, we cannot spare a foot of land within that boundary; and the sooner the anomalous independence of the various chieftains, whom our forbearance has spared, ceases, and the whole country is brought under the same scheme of administration, the better for the interests of the people, and the better also for the consolidation of our empire. But when by any combination of circumstances, any portion of native independence has been absorbed in our power, to give it a new and distinct existence, would be an act of folly similar to that of building up a wall to knock one's head against.

HUMAN SACRIFICES AMONG THE KHOONDS.—We publish a letter on this subject from an Enemy to Prejudice, which enables us also to thank our Contemporaries at Madras and Bombay for the interest which they have been so kind as to take in the subject, on the strength of our representation. Our correspondent speaks of the sister Presidency as having an "apathetic," a "slumbering" Government. We made some distant allusion of the same kind in our article, and were taken severely to task by the Madras journals. We must therefore offer some apology for having admitted a letter into our columns, in which that Government is treated with so little respect. Still, however, it is a fact known throughout India, that Madras has hitherto been the strong hold of antiquated prejudices; and that the liberal views which have been gradually gaining an ascendancy in our administration since the days of Lord Hastings have no where encountered so protracted and inveterate a resistance as at the Presidency of Madras. Within the last four years it has required the reiterated commands, almost the threats, of the Court of Directors, to induce the Authorities at Madras to relinquish their official connection with idolatrous institutions. At the same time we acknowledge with pleasure that there has been of late a manifested improvement in this respect at the sister Presidency; and there can be little doubt that when a few more retiring pensions have been accepted, those liberal principles of government which first obtained a footing at Bengal and Bombay, will be equally triumphant in the Peninsula.

Our Madras contemporaries are inclined to think that the application for the rescued children never came officially before the Madras Government. In this more satisfactory view of the case, we are anxious to coincide. It is more agreeable to believe that the generous offer of the Missionaries was unknown at head quarters, than that it was neglected. It was delivered to the Khoond Agent to be forwarded to his superiors. It is for him to explain whether it was ever transmitted to Madras or not, and whether the subsequent distribution of the victims among the Hindoos or Mahomedans, was his own individual act, or that of the Government to which he is subordinate. We have done our duty in bringing the subject forward, and exciting public attention. It remains for the Government of Madras to give the Agent in the Khoond territory such positive instructions on this subject, as shall obviate the necessity of any future reference to the seat of Government.

Our correspondent seems to think that the Madras Government was not bound "to have made Christians of the hundred victims," because it was not bound to Christianise any other hundred children. The comparison does not however hold good. To take a hundred children from their Hindoo or Mahomedan parents, and deliver them to Christian Missionaries, to be trained up in the doctrines of Christianity, would be a violation of liberty of conscience and of public faith. But when those victims of superstition had thus been cast upon the protection of a benevolent Government, it was morally bound to place them in that position in which their prospects in life would be most effectually benefited. And no man will venture to affirm that they were likely to receive the same advantages of example and instruction, or that their social, intellectual and spiritual improvement would have been equally promoted in the society of Hindoos or Mahomedans, as in the seminaries of Christian Missionaries. He imagines that the Missionaries wanted a Government allowance for the children; and that this may have led to the rejection of their request. But this is not possible, for the application, though it signed that the most allowable board and tuition of these orphans would be acceptable, yet offering to take charge of and educate them without any allowance whatever.

As to the entire suppression of the rite, it can be accomplished only by the entire occupation of the country by British Officers, or the universal prevalence of civilisation, rather we should say of Christianity, among them. We question whether Government is prepared to extend its power throughout the insularities Khoond mountains, and place these tribes in a state of complete subjection to our laws; and many years must elapse before this revolting but national propensity is extinguished by the light of knowledge and divine truth; but it will be the duty of Government to bring all its influence to bear on the extinction of the practice; to abolish it altogether in the Tributary Mahals in Cuttack; and to omit no means of rescuing the victims of this superstition elsewhere, and when they are rescued, to place them in situations in which they are likely to obtain the best moral and intellectual training.

COOLY EMIGRATION.—At the time when the system of Cooly Emigration was revived and legalised last year, great fears were entertained by those who had watched the progress of what was not unaptly called the "Cooly trade," that many abuses would gradually creep into the new system. It was feared that as public vigilance became slack, the checks on abuse would dwindle into a mere matter of form, and become altogether inefficient. We are happy to observe that these fears have not hitherto been realized, though the changes which have been made in the system laid down by Her Majesty's Ministers, seem to create facilities for the revival of the old abuses. It was generally understood that the Government of the Mauritius would appoint an agent of its own at each port, who should receive the applications of natives, and provide them a passage to the island; and that on their arrival they would be free to form an engagement with any planter. No such agent has been appointed at all. On the contrary, precisely the same system appears to be pursued at present which was in vogue during the days of abuse. Private merchants are engaged in shipping Coolies, and they employ Duftians, or Crimps, to scour the country and collect labourers, and then pass them through the Emigration office and ship them to the Mauritius. For whom do these Agency Houses act, and who pays them their charges and their commission? Are they employed and paid solely by the Government of the Mauritius, and are the Coolies on their arrival transferred to a Government Agent, and left at liberty to choose their own master? If not, the Calcutta Agents are acting for private individuals at the Mauritius, and the expenses incurred in procuring, feeding and conveying Coolies to the island are borne by them. In that case, how are they repaid, if the Cooly on his arrival in the island is a perfectly free agent? And if the planter has no prospect of engagement by being able to look forward with a degree of certainty to the services of the Coolies imported at his expense, upon what principle does he thus lay out his capital? There hangs a degree of mystery over the transaction, which has never been explained, but which it is important the public should understand.

The Duftians, or Crimps, employed here, have of late been detected in resorting to their old practices to make up a supply of labourers. Some of these villains inveigled some men from the Hooghly district to Calcutta, under the pretence of procuring them employment under Government, and then endeavoured to force them on board a vessel bound to the Mauritius; but their resistance and outcry brought the Police to their aid, and led to their release. Other instances have also occurred lately of poor men being driven by fraud to Calcutta and detained by force till an opportunity offered of sending them on board. In every case in which the crime has been brought home to the offenders, they have been punished with severity. It is but a matter of justice also to acknowledge, that the vigilance of the Protector of Coolies and his Assistant is so unremitting as effectually to prevent the clandestine shipment of Coolies. The machinery for the prevention of abuses at the port of embarkation, appears to be complete and efficient, and we think it scarcely possible for any man to leave the port who has not been personally examined at the office, and has not declared his willingness to embark.

It was therefore with no little surprise we read the following statements in the Star: "The occasion offers to mention a circumstance connected with the management of the emigration that we think deserving of public notice. We allude to the issue to the Duffadars of printed documents signed by the Emigration Agent, addressed to the Police Authorities and others in the interior, and requesting that no interference or hindrance be offered to the bearers who are stated to be in search of parties desirous of emigrating to Mauritius." To the issue of such printed documents, signed by the Emigration agent, there is the greatest possible objection. It is precisely the same as though the Crispis had received a public parwanah, or writ, authorising them to proceed through the country and bring down to Calcutta every man, woman and child they could lay their hands on. To say that such a document, and the power which it gives to the holder among the illiterate and timid population, is liable to be abused, is to talk folly. It is impossible that it should not be turned into an instrument of oppression. Any paper with an official signature in the hands of men employed on such errands, would be highly dangerous; but a writ, such as the Star describes, forbidding any officer, European or Native, to interfere with their labours, must be a fortune to any man who is so happy as to possess it. He has only to enter a village at a sufficient distance from the Magistrate's station, and, upon the strength of this order, to seize every man who is able to pay for his liberation; and he may retire from business in a twelve month. It is not for the men whom the Duffadars may intrude or seize, and bring down to Calcutta, and endeavour clandestinely to ship off, that we are indignant. The Emigration agent will effectually see that none are deported against their will. But we tremble for the poor creatures whom the Duffadar may succeed in seizing and confining in Calcutta and then let off on the payment of a heavy dole. Who can calculate the extortion he will thus be enabled to practice on the inhabitants of any village on which he may fix his eyes? The Emigration Agent is paid for the prevention of abuses; and it seems inconceivable that he should issue proclamations which are sure to become the most fertile source of abuse.

Besides, what necessity is there for the Emigration Agent to interfere at all in the matter of procuring Coolies? The number of Coolies already shipped to the Mauritius from the three Provinces since the Act passed, amounts to; if it does not exceed, 15,000, and we do not more than 3,000 of the 30,000 emigrants formerly sent, have returned, that Island will soon enjoy the benefit of a spry population, almost equal in number to the slaves who were emancipated by the British Parliament. We are fully aware of the extreme anxiety of the Government of Bengal to free the system of emigration from all possibility of abuse; and we therefore entertain a confident hope that as soon as the issue of these Proclamations, under the official signature of a Government officer, is brought to notice, an order will be immediately given to recall those which have been already granted, and to prevent their further issue.

THE JUDICIARY OF THE 24-PERGANA.—The Legislative Council has just published the draft of an Act which will remove an anomaly of fifty years standing, and give a character of uniformity and equity to our jurisprudence. It may be in the reader's recollection, that there was some discussion a few weeks ago in the papers, relative to the difficulty of suing for a personal debt in the Court of the suburbs of Calcutta. The law of 1783 very absurdly ordained that if a defendant became a resident in Calcutta, after a suit had been instituted against him in that Court, the action must forthwith cease and determine. This was in fact to afford the most ample opportunity of evading the payment of debts, and defeating the ends of justice. A defendant, on receiving a summons to answer a complaint, had only to cross the boundary and take up his abode in Calcutta, and he was enabled effectually to set his creditors at defiance. It is needless to remark that the facility which the law thus afforded for evading the payment of claims, has been eagerly improved. The matter was repeatedly brought to the notice of the public authorities, and the great inconveniences which the state of the law occasioned, was forcibly pointed out by the press; and we have now the pleasure of seeing the draft of an Act which takes away this privilege of sanctuary from the defendant, and repeals the enactment which forbade the Court of the 24-Pergannas to entertain the suit when the bird had flown out of its jurisdiction. The defendant will no longer be permitted to evade his creditors by moving into Calcutta, and the Court will be enabled to grant the same redress to suitors, which is given by all other Courts in Bengal.

SLAVERY IN CEYLON.—The Columbo Observer of the 24th of August has an article on Slavery in Ceylon, which is deserving of much attention. It appears that the old Ceylon laws allowed of personal slavery. All slaves in the Ceylon Provinces are personal property, and are liable to perform any service their owner may think proper to require of them. They are attached to the soil, but may be disposed of in any way the proprietor may think proper. It is true, that a slave may acquire and possess landed and moveable property, independently of his master, and dispose of it by will or otherwise; but if he dies intestate, his owner becomes his heir at law. But as if to counterpoise this privilege of acquiring independent property, the master has the power of punishing his slave in any way short of the deprivation of life and limb, and he may even subject him to torture by a red hot iron. These barbarous laws, of a barbarous age, were confirmed by our Government in a Proclamation, dated the 31st of May 1816, which announced that the ancient laws of Ceylon should be administered till His Majesty's pleasure as to their general or partial adoption or their supersession was known. But it seems that neither George the III. nor George the IV. nor William the IV. nor even our present gracious Queen, has found leisure to signify any pleasure whatsoever upon the subject, and as these laws continue to be in force, and we suppose to be administered to this day. Our contemporary calls upon the Legislative Council of the Island to remove so deep a stain from British rule in Ceylon. If we thought there would be any benefit from our suffrage, we would very cordially second the proposal; and that for the following considerations.

Because the Legislative Council of India abolished all Slavery, personal as well as predial, absolutely and for ever, six months ago, namely on the 7th day of April, in the year of Redemption, One thousand Eight hundred and Forty-three, and it will by no means redound to the credit of the Legislative Council of Ceylon to place themselves in a disadvantageous contrast with their fellow labourers in Calcutta, by hesitating forthwith to manumit all the slaves in the island.

Secondly, because it is the duty of the Ceylon Legislative to abrogate all those local laws which are repugnant to the principles of humanity, not only for the sakes of its own character, but for the general amelioration of Native society. In this country, the Legislative Council, in abolishing Slavery, was obliged at once to overturn the venerable Hindoo Legislation of two thousand years, and the positive injunctions of Mahomedan law. With the same readiness ought the Ceylon Council to abrogate all the slave laws of the Ceylon Code under whatever sanction they may exist.

Lastly, because until Slavery is abolished in Ceylon, it cannot be said, that a slave is not to be found in the British dominions in Europe, Asia, Africa or America, neither can we lay claim to the proud distinction, that wherever the British flag waves, it waves over freemen. We owe it to our own national character to perfect the glorious work of emancipation which we have been musing for half a century. We owe it to our children in the United States of America, to leave them absolutely without excuse for holding three millions of their fellow creatures in Slavery. They must not be permitted to point to a single nook or corner of our wide spread empire, and say "there tills a British slave."

While on this subject, we may as well notice the remarkable ignorance of events in the East, exhibited by Lord Brougham, in the House of Lords, on the 21st of July, when he expressed a hope, that the time was not far hence, when, as Lord Ellenborough had abolished Slavery in Scinde, so it would be abolished throughout our East Indian possessions. His Lordship seemed to think, that his noble friend, the Governor General, had set the example of emancipation in Scinde, instead of which, he has only followed the example set by the Supreme Council. Lord Auckland on this rose and said that an Act had already been passed by which Slavery was abolished throughout the British dominions in India. Lord Brougham asked when it was abolished. Our late Governor General replied, eight or ten months ago, on which the Ex-Chancellor, replied: "No one had the least idea until the number had been made the statement that any Act of a final nature had passed for the abolition of Slavery in India." It is a fact that every member of the House of Lords, the hereditary Legislators of Great Britain, was totally ignorant of so important an event as the abolition of Slavery throughout the territories administered by the Company, three months after it had been passed? The abolition was noticed in all the leading journals in London; it was lauded in the Tory papers, with which Lord Brougham is now most familiar; it was mentioned with satisfaction at the meeting of the Anti-Slavery Society, in which Lord Brougham once took an interest. Can it be possible that his Lordship has been so entirely absorbed in the party politics of the hour; that his mind has been so exclusively engaged in discovering the means of spitting his former colleagues, that he has entirely overlooked the emancipation of slaves through an eighth of the family of man? If such a fact has failed to attract his notice; if it has been overlooked generally by the House of Lords, what is the value of the opinion which his Lordship, when any of their Lordships, may pass on Indian affairs?

THE DUTY OF PUBLIC SERVANTS.—There are few bodies of men to whom Society is more indebted than to the various officers of the Company's service, who have given to the public the benefit of that knowledge of the various countries in Asia, and more particularly of our own provinces in India, which they had accumulated during their official career. The acquaintance of the civilised world with India may indeed be considered to have been drawn almost entirely from this source. The two latest works which have appeared on the geography, history and statistics of Eastern countries, are Capt. Abbott's account of Khiva, and Capt. Postans' Personal Observations on Seinde. But we are sorry to remark that this source of information will now be dried up; the Governor General's late Notification effectually bars the communication not only of official documents but of all information acquired in the course of professional duty; and the value of the two works we have mentioned consists in the information, derived from the official position of the writers, which they furnish. No public officer, however novel or interesting the scenes in which he may be placed, will hereafter be at liberty to use his own discretion in communicating to the public the result of his researches, till after he has resigned the public service, and placed himself beyond the reach of official displeasure. It is on no far fetched construction of the notice that we draw this conclusion. Any officer who may publish a work, without the imprimatur of Government, which would destroy all confidence in its completeness, and therefore the accuracy of its details,—would justly render himself liable to punishment by the terms of the Notification. The inconsistency of founding a general enactment on a solitary transgression, was never more palpably exhibited than in this instance. Because Col. Stiemann attempted to beat off his hornets which were endeavouring to sting him, with an official weapon, the publication of valuable statistical information gathered in the course of official duty is to be withheld from the public, and the stream of knowledge is to be dried up at its source. The sooner this notification becomes a dead letter the better, for the reputation of Government as well as for the cause of truth and improvement.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21.

—The Steamer which brought the last Mail to Bombay announced the total loss, with all the Mail, of the Messan steamer, one of the finest vessels in our steam flotilla. Misfortunes are said seldom to come single, and here are a couple of the sharpest disappointments at once. The mail sent from Bombay in July went to the bottom; those of August were brought back; and thus two months there will be no communication between Bombay and London. Fortunately the bulk of our August Mails were sent on by the Hindostan, and will probably reach England in good time. The success of the loss of the Messan was happily relieved by remittance by her to send duplicates by the Express which leaves Calcutta this morning.

—Man Singh, the raja of Jendhpore, the last of the Rajpoot princes, who belonged to the days of independence and miracle, has just paid the debt of nature. His death will probably make the government of his principality more easy.

—Sir John Norton, the prime Judge of Madras, has been obliged from ill health to proceed on a voyage to the Straits.

—The Government of India has made a requisition on the Madras Government for a Regiment of Cavalry, two Regiments of Infantry, and a battery of guns to be moved into the Nagar district. This may give rise to a new disposition of military duty, by which the station of Nagar will be made over to the Madras army, or it may be connected with some arrangement for an attack on the independent chief in Bundelkund, who we are told, have harboured the fugitive insurgents. The assembling of a large army in the neighbourhood of Agra seems to point to something more than mere parade, to some political changes in Gwalior or Bundelkund, which the presence or the advance of that army will serve to facilitate.

—The latest accounts regarding Lahore given in the Herkers, represent the jealousy between the Minister and his King as not healed, and the country itself as in a very unsettled state. With two independent interests in the same state, backed by powerful armies, and mutually jealous of each other, it is impossible that there should be tranquillity. Matters must come to a speedy and a bloody issue.

—The Herkers give a list of every Indian factory at the Presidency, with the quantity of indigo which each one is likely to supply this season. The sum total is 140,000 mounds; and we believe it is generally supposed that this crop will not fall short of that amount, and may possibly reach 150,000.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 22.

—The Delhi Gazette of the 13th gives news from Sukkur to the 3d of September, which state that the sickness had not diminished. On the 1st of September, the 53d N. I. had upwards of 500 hundred miles from Calcutta to Allahabad by this in hospital. There were three officers at master, and 200 rank and file. Dr. Menzies of the 53th had to perform the entire Medical duties of the Brigade, and, to make matters worse, scarcely a day was approachable in a lorry. The Correspondent of the Gazette throws little light on the dismissal of the three young Civilians. It is merely said that Sir Charles Napier had written to the Lord Ellenborough to say he did not want them. The Lord Ellenborough says, the young gentlemen who applied to request three good working soldiers in their place. It would appear therefore that the severe and degrading punishment to which they have been subjected has been brought on by illness and not contumacy. If we mistake not, this is the first instance in which indolence has been considered a personal offence in the Coornamented service.

—The Herkers have heard a whisper that the reason why there has been so little agreement agreed with short despatch solicitors, and disquieted down in the last relief of the army, by legions, and the little actors acquiesced themselves well. The worthy Baboo, the founder of this "no one half hatta station to another, is that Lord Elphinstone's expert to obtain the repeal of that obnoxious order. We have heard indeed that the Friend of the Army has made it a personal question which the Court of Directors; which is all very right and proper. Should the Directors grant it, they will afford the example of a triumph over the their own prejudices, deserving of immortal record; for the tenacity with which they have clung to the order has been exceeded only by its injustice.

—The London Correspondent of the Herkers states that the London Bookellers have held a meeting with the view of concocting a plan for supplying India with cheap books. They think of printing cheap editions expressly for our benefit. We certainly ought to be exceedingly obliged to them for so great an act of generosity; and we hope they will not fail to carry their views into effect. It is not a trifle that the cheaper books can be made, the wider will be their circulation, and the larger will be the appetite created for reading.

—The Delhi Gazette states that the Press recently established by Ran Raja of Alore is now in full operation. Two Hundred Copies of the Goolistan have been already struck off, and other works are in progress.

—Our contemporaries have all received parts of the Seinde Blue Book and are publishing one document after another. Our limited space does not allow us to reprint these papers, but so soon as we can obtain a copy of the work we intend to present an analysis of its contents to our readers similar to the analysis of the Afghanistan Blue Book.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23.

—General Aitchison, with a numerous retinue of Sikhs, crossed the Seinde on the 5th of August, at Faroozpur. His arrival being announced, to Col. Tulloch, commanding the station, who had partaken of his splendid hospitality at Peshawar, that officer immediately proposed to give him an entertainment on a grand scale; but the General declined it, pleading the shortness of his leave of absence, a single month, and that on such a condition, which is of course moonshine, for he cannot have more than ten days at the Seinde, which would be too short for the recovery of his health, but long enough for negotiation, with the Lieut. Governor. He left Faroozpur on the 2d and reached Ludhiana on the 7th, the Apru Utthar says "to arrange some political matter connected with the Punjab."

—General Aitchison travels en prince, his establishment consists of "numerous beautiful hares, elephants and mules, besides his travelling carriage," and, as it appears a regiment commanded by Col. Le Yant. —The Assam Steamer which has been fitted up for towing in the same manner as the public steamers, advertises for freight at the very moderate rate of two Rupies a cubic foot or 10c. the ton of 50 cubic feet. Now, a case of merchandise may be brought from Liverpool to Calcutta for one-fifth the price of its conveyance, eight hundred miles from Calcutta to Allahabad by this steamer. It is true the Government freight went up to auction sometimes sells for double this sum; but the regular charge of the cargo boats is only one-half that charged by the Assam Company.

—There was a rather numerous assembly of ladies and gentlemen yesterday to witness the examination of the boys in Seinde's College. The Lord Ellenborough says, the young gentlemen who opened the business of the day was one Master Munce. It would appear therefore that the severe and degrading punishment to which they have been subjected has been brought on by illness and not contumacy. If we mistake not, this is the first instance in which indolence has been considered a personal offence in the Coornamented service.

—The examination was and was further told was interesting with short despatch solicitors, and disquieted down in the last relief of the army, by legions, and the little actors acquiesced themselves well. The worthy Baboo, the founder of this "no one half hatta station to another, is that Lord Elphinstone's expert to obtain the repeal of that obnoxious order. We have heard indeed that the Friend of the Army has made it a personal question which the Court of Directors; which is all very right and proper. Should the Directors grant it, they will afford the example of a triumph over the cal Service, and who accompanied the Bombay land was sighted, as the head land of Cape Good Hope was known to be near. The land was seen after plainly visible. The officers ordered the Captain without waiting him, and then continued to steer for an hour and a half right in upon the shore. The Captain was not valued till the unfortunate vessel was among the breakers.

—The Herkers states, that Dr. R. H. Kenneddy, who recently retired from the Bombay Medi-

— A Correspondent of the Harbours states, that on the morning of the 23d of September, a daring dacoity was committed at Munnarsapore, near Barakpore. An old man who obstructed the passage was cut down, and property to the extent of 1000 Rupees taken. On the return of the thieves there was a dispute about the division of the booty, which led to the discovery of the villain, among whom it is said, there were nine accomplices of the 60th. But we have reason to believe that this latter part of the story is altogether fabulous. There has been no evidence as yet to connect any man of the 60th with the robbery.

— A pamphlet has just been published in London, by Capt. Grover, entitled, An Appeal to the British Nation on behalf of Col. Stoddard and Capt. Conolly, whom the writer affirms to be still in confinement at Bokhara. We feel almost a very little hope of their existence; the account of their death came from more than one quarter, and was given with so many circumstantial details, that there is too much reason to believe in its correctness.

— The Bombay papers of the 13th, received yesterday in Calcutta, announced the departure of the Queen Steamer on the previous day. She arrived yesterday in Calcutta, having thus made the passage by sea round the Peninsula in nearly the same time which has been occupied by the Post in coming across the country.

— WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27.
The Star states, that the Civil Bill to be given to Lord Ellenborough, is to take place on the 13th, and that a fancy Ball on a grand scale is to be given at Government House on the 20th.

— A proposal has recently been submitted to the army, to the effect that no widow who, previous to her marriage with an officer has lived as his mistress or has led an immodest life, shall be permitted to come upon the Military Fund for a Pension. 783 have voted against the proposition and 658 in favor of it. The proposal is therefore lost. It may be hard to exclude from the benefits of a pension, a female who has returned to the path of virtue by a lawful marriage with her paramour, but the effect of this resolution, will be to admit a host of native women to the benefit of the fund, who may go through the ceremony of a marriage with the officer under whose protection they have lived.

— The Star speaks of some probable changes in office in the Western Provinces. Col. Speirs to succeed Col. Sutherland, Mr. R. N. C. Hamilton to succeed Col. Speirs, at Gwalior, Mr. H. M. Elliott to succeed Mr. Hamilton as Secretary to Government, and Mr. Edmonstone to take Mr. Elliott's place at the Snider Board of Revenue at Agra.

— Intelligence has just arrived that Sirre Singh, the ruler of the Punjab, and all his family were murdered on the 15th instant.

— We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following sums for the Friend of India—

Rev. J. Wedderburn, ... to Dec. 1843, 20

G. W. White, ... to June, 1844, 20

G. Lewis, Esq., ... to July, 1844, 20

Miss. Col. Sir C. M. Wade, to Dec. 1843, 10

J. H. Cooper, Esq., ... to April, 1844, 20

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

The Rev. W. W. Evans begs to acknowledge the following sums for the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta—

Mr. D. Shaw, 10

Mr. C. Pallas, 10

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

Baboo Ram Choudhury, 10
Baboo Ramesh Choudhury, 10
J. Dumbur, Esq., 10
J. M., 10
W., 10
W. Ryland, Esq., 5
R. Stewart Palmer, Esq., 10

W. W. Evans, Secretary.

Calcutta, Sept. 21st, 1843.

The undersigned begs thankfully to acknowledge the following sums in aid of the Kishinagar Relief Fund—

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

Calcutta, Sept. 21st, 1843.
The undersigned begs thankfully to acknowledge the following sums in aid of the Kishinagar Relief Fund—
C/o R. & A.
H. H. R. Forbes, 16 0
F. Millett, Esq., 16 0
J. Thomson, Esq., 16 0
W. Blunt, Esq., 16 0
Mrs. Blunt, 16 0
F. S. Mount, Esq., 16 0
J. Alexander, Esq., through the Rev. A. Alexander, 80 0
The Barakpore Benevolent Fund, through Rev. E. Maddock, 100 0
C. W. BARNES, Secretary.

25th Sept. 1843.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

SLAVERY IN THE KANDIAN PROVINCES.

We lately pointed out, and we trust satisfactorily, how little the local Government had done to secure the abolition of Slavery within the Maritime Provinces of the Island; we will now show, in a very few words not only that it has done nothing towards effecting that object within the Kandian Provinces, but, the laws revolting to humanity are still allowed to remain in force in the island. Although the Kandian Provinces came into our possession in 1815 yet no legislative enactment in respect to Slavery was made till 1837 (nearly a quarter of a century) when the Ordinance (No. 7 of 1837) was passed, requiring all persons in charge of Slaves to register them; but the actual condition as regards slaves, were left untouched. What those slaves have since suffered by the following extract from the Notes of Sir John D'Oyly and Mr. Savers on Kandian laws, with the period of which we have been conversed.

"All slaves in the Kandian Provinces are personal property, and liable to perform any service the owner may think proper to require of them."
"Slaves are personal property,—some are attached to the soil, but can be disposed of in any way the proprietor may think proper."

"The title to a Slave is established by its being proved that he or she was the issue of a woman known and acknowledged to be a slave of the claimant, or that he or she had been presented by the King from his stock of slaves or captives of a low condition (in other periods were made slaves) taken in war, or by a person selling her or himself to slavery, or by parents selling their children for slaves."

"It was the practice for a Creditor, when of superior rank, to seize and retain as his slave, his debtor or a child or children of his debtor, according to the amount of the debt; and the debt was not discharged, or the person seized released by superior authority, the person so seized became absolutely a slave."

"A creditor of inferior caste or rank to his debtor cannot seize such debtor as a slave, nor was he allowed for persons of an inferior caste to possess slaves of superior caste; but with the above qualification no caste was exempted from being much slave, excepting those persons whom violence would render them useless as slaves."

"It is true, Mr. Savers says that slaves 'are competent to acquire and possess landed and moveable property independent of their masters, and dispose of it by will or otherwise;' but with this qualification, that 'a slave dying intestate, his owner becomes his heir at law, and inherits all his lands and goods.'

But we are surprised that he should say 'in no part of the world is slavery in a milder form than here,' when in a few pages afterwards he tells us that 'a master may drive out his slave, and sell the slave in his absolute destination to any customer, and that it is not creditable to him to do so.'

...

...

...

...

...

...

OF KILMARNOCK,
Rifle Maker to H. B. H. Prince Albert.

	DUY.	(FELL.
Transfer 5 per Cent. Paper,	Prm. 12	8 11 1
Stock (Transfer Loan of 1936-36)	"	do. 5 4 4
Interest (interest payable in Eng.)	"	do. 5 4 4
Dividend 8 per cent.	"	do. 5 4 4
Old share Rs. 4 per cent.	"	do. 5 4 4
New	"	do. 5 4 4
New Company's 5 per cent.	Prm.	8 0 7 6
BANK SHARES.
Bengal Bank (Co.'s Rs. 4,000)	Prm.	3200 5 318 1
Union Bank (Co.'s Rs. 1,000)	Dis.	10 10 1
Asiatic Bank (Co.'s Rs. 500)	Prm.	200 5 17 1

charge, save postage.

TABLE 1

charge, save postage.

A brief Sketch of the History of India, pp. 39. The same.

ST. ANDREW'S LIBRARY.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 457. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5TH, 1845.

[Price 5 Cts. No. weekly, or 10
No. yearly if paid in advance.]

OVERLAND MAIL.

NOTICE.—The next Steamer, with the Overland Mail via Sum, is expected to leave Bombay, on the 1st of the coming month of November. The latest date for the transmission of letters from Calcutta, which may be intended for conveyance by this opportunity, will be Tuesday, the 17th instant.

L. I. B. GREY.

For William, Civil Post Office, Calcutta, and for the Mail Steamer Company, The 2nd October, 1845.

THE HOLIDAYS.—Our friends, who are for the most part themselves luxuriating in idleness for the week, will excuse our freedom in taking a small snatch at the same enjoyment. If we send them little of our own incubations, our paper is yet full of facts and thoughts of the deepest import, which leisure may be well employed in digesting.

NATIVE EDUCATION.—The discussion of this important subject having been opened again, we republish this week, a letter from Mr. Hodgson of Nipal, which appeared in the Report of the Church Missionary Society. It is addressed to the Rev. W. Smith of Benares, and, with brevity and force, explains the ideas which the benevolent writer wishes to see realized; in the normal College he has proposed for advancing education in the country.

REFORMS.—We have the pleasure to lay before our readers, a Memorandum on the improvements in our administration, which experience has suggested as desirable to an intelligent and able member of the public service; and the practical nature of his observations cannot but recommend them to the attention of the younger officers of Government in particular; whilst the correct sense of our responsibilities, and the benevolent recognition of the claims of our Native population, pervading the proposals of the writer, will command the regard of all who care for the interests of humanity.

THE TRAGEDIES OF THE PUNJAB.—Our Holiday is made serious enough by the intelligence from Lahore. It is fearful to think of the scenes enacted there within the last month. They recall the conviction, in general so willingly laid asleep, that the moral world, like the physical, has its elements of violence universally diffused, and ready to burst out both in old and new localities, we know not when. Let the war of strife and passion cease to be roused, and difference of civilization appears to be of little account. The barriers against revolutionary excesses may be very different in Europe and in Asia. There they may be many and strong, and here the reverse. But when they have been swept away, the deluge rages every where, with similar horrors and results. We cannot help feeling, therefore, that the tragedies of Lahore throw a deeper gloom on the troubled prospects of Europe, as presented by our late intelligence. We trust however, that, in the mercy of God, the darkness gathering there may yet be dispelled, without the mingling of heaven and earth in storm and convulsion.

We are indebted to the Delhi Gazette for nearly all the information yet received from Lahore; and the value of our Contemporary's position, and the ability and diligence with which he is improving its advantages, are in the present instance singularly exemplified. Amongst our selections will be found the most important statements which have yet appeared; and to make them the more intelligible we have borrowed from the Harbinger, his gleanings from Captain Osborne's Court and Camp of Ranjett Singh, respecting the chief actors in the late tragedy—if indeed it is yet played out. Another description of the same parties, by one who appears to have had good opportunities of observation, has been given by the Star; but that we must reserve for the selections of next week. It is a very valuable and interesting paper.

Previous accounts had made it plain, that the reconciliation between Dhyyan Singh and his master the Maharaja Shere Singh was altogether hollow. Whether the debauched and worthless monarch, or his ambitious and indignant minister was the first to renew their feud it is impossible to say. Drunken threats of resorting to violence are spoken of, on the part of the former; and provision for treason had certainly been made by the latter, by keeping in his own hands at Jumboo the rival prince Dhuless Singh. By the end of August his schemes were so matured, that he brought this youth to Lahore, to take his part in the Drama. And, as if he courted an opportunity of provocation and violence, he openly announced the prince's arrival to the Maharaja, and demanded for him the honours due to his rank. Rapid progress was then made in conspiracy by Dhyyan Singh, Soochet Singh, Lane Singh and Ajeet Singh; and on the 8th of September Goolab Singh arrived from Jumboo to help on the plot. In the meantime Shere Singh and his son Pertab Singh were sufficiently informed of what was going on, to suspect the whole of these Chiefs, and to know, what appears to have been the truth, that Ajeet Singh was the most violent of them all; and probably their vain threats against him individually whetted his hostility, and made the execution of the plot so much the more quick and bloody.

On the 10th September, both Dhyyan Singh and Goolab Singh are said to have taken the most solemn oaths of fidelity to the King, placing their hands upon his head as they swore to maintain their loyalty. Yet, on the 14th, Dhyyan Singh laid the trap for his master's destruction, by persuading him to review Ajeet Singh's troops, and seeking their good will by bestowing honours and rewards on the officers. On the following day he fell into the snare. As soon as he approached the troops, provocation was offered him. On the expression of his displeasure, Ajeet Singh insulted him by the taunt, that he was no son of Ranjett Singh, but a purchased slave. It is said he sought to revenge the insult by discharging an arrow at the Prince, who immediately shot him with his pistol, and cut off his head. General Ventura was on the ground, and drew out his troops against those of Ajeet Singh; but they were so out-numbered as to be obliged immediately to flee. Ventura hastened then to Pertab Singh to inform him of what had occurred; and the Prince called out his own two regiments, and issued from the gate. He was soon met by Ajeet Singh, and himself murdered and beheaded by the same hand as his father. The murders proceeded on to the palace, and drew between thirty and forty of the Baneres, and the infant Prince, who had been born on the previous evening. Dhuless Singh was then sent far and placed upon the throne, and the other conspirators appeared to acknowledge their allegiance.

Next day the new sovereign was formally proclaimed; and on this attainment of its immediate object the conspiracy split. Ajeet Singh had done so much of its foul work, as either to have been unwilling to bear a division, much less a supercession, in the power which had been grasped, or to have become alarmed, lest, on any revulsion of feeling, he should be made the first sacrifice, if one remained sufficiently powerful to lay hands on him. He proceeded from the Durbar to the Camp; and having announced Dhyyan Singh to accompany him, they went in the same carriage to consult the other chiefs on what was further to be done. On the way, Ajeet Singh suddenly stabbed his companion with his dagger. Heers Singh, being informed of his father's death, with Soochet Singh collected a large body of troops, surrounded Ajeet Singh and his partisan Lane Singh, and slew them both. The latest victims then presented themselves before the Maharaja, and assumed the office of his Prime Ministers.

There is a likelihood however of their retaining the power they have acquired. Though Ajeet Singh be dead, the powerful party to which he belonged will soon collect their strength anew, and make common cause with all the dissatisfied against the party now in the ascendant. And Heers Singh has not his father's ability and influence, either to controul his own adherents, or to subdue his opponents: whilst Goolab Singh, the military chief of the family, notwithstanding his wealth and fastnesses, has been too arbitrary in his government to be now a tower of strength. On the contrary, the personal ill-will he has excited will most probably be extended to those whom he supports. The Punjab, therefore, has before it a fearful prospect of anarchy and violence. Confusion is to be anticipated not less from the nature of its population, than the strife of its politicians.

The interference of the Government of India cannot long be avoided. Either the internal commotion of the Sikhs will boil over upon our dominions, so as to require our taking the field in our own defence; or the more legitimate may become the weaker party, and seek a support from us, which it would be difficult to resist the temptation of affording. Or, in some way or other, the door will soon be opened for our Armies into that wretched country. No one could regret such an event—nor even the entire subjection of the country to British dominion. The people would suffer in nothing; and in such they would be guided.

Had England been faithful in what has been already committed to her, we might have taken pleasure in the thought of her power being extended, without the commission of any political wrong. But, it is far otherwise. Politically much has been done to benefit the nations

Mouvie Shekawut Ali and Waz Lutf Ullah, Unvacanted Deputy Collectors, are vested with full powers under Regulation VII. of 1822, in the District of Shikha-bad.

19th September, 1843.

Pundit Ojender Chander Bhatnagarjee, Bachel. Awar.

Ray Lamb transferred to the Invalid Establishment.
The Undermanned Officers of the Cavalry and Infan-

... at Tientsin, obtained from the Government of General, under date the 10th July last, leave of absence to pro-

MILITARY

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 458. Vol. IX.]

SEMPORE: THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12TH. 1848.

Printed by C. W. B. monthly, or to the order of the printer at discretion.

OVERLAND MAIL.

NOTICE.—The last steamer, with the Overland Mail via Persia, is appointed to leave Bombay on the 1st of the coming month of November. The latest date for the transmission of letters from Calcutta, which may be intended for conveyance by this opportunity, will be Thursday, the 17th inst.

L. L. H. GREY.

Post-Office, Calcutta. Off. Post Master General. The 2nd October, 1848.

THE PUNJAB.—The past week has brought us very little addition to our knowledge of the late intrigues at Lahore, and their horrible issue. Various corrections, (the chief of which will be found amongst our selections), have been given of the story as told by the Lahore news-writer of the D-Iti Gazette; but, though he appears to have committed not a few chronological errors, upon the whole, we believe his tale to be essentially true. His most singular misstatement is the introduction of Goolab Singh at Lahore, and his participation in the plot and its treachery, when we know that now, up to the date of our latest communications, he had not yet arrived there. Still even that inaccuracy seriously affects the state of parties either before or after the convulsion. It cannot be doubted, that he was in the confidence of his brother Dhyani Singh in the outset, or that he will now adhere to the interests of his nephew Hoora Singh.

After the most diligent comparison of all our intelligence, public and private, we believe the history of the case to be this. As the Dewan festival drew near, Rajah Dhyani Singh wrote, that his Master-mediated emancipation from the thralldom of his nominal service but virtual rule. The Maharajah was collecting troops around the Capital, taking the muster of them himself, and distributing amongst them rewards and donations—things quite unusual when his Minister was in the height of his power. Dhyani Singh therefore determined to anticipate his intentions, and strike a blow. Looking round him for a fit instrument, he fixed upon Ajeet Singh Sindhanwala, one of a brotherhood, whose property lies in the neighbourhood of Umrinair. This man, and his relatives Uttar Singh and Lema Singh, had all stood high in the favour of old Ranjess; who, in reward for certain services in his Afghan wars, had given Ajeet one of his own Rances in marriage. But these Sindhanwalas took the part of Masee Olanndroo, when, on the death of Kurruck Singh, and Now Nihal Singh, she acted the goddess to the exclusion of Shere Singh. When, therefore, another revolution brought him to the throne, these men were banished to their jagheer beyond the Sutlege, near Thaneswar, and otherwise disgraced. They had been afterwards permitted, through the interposition of Dhyani Singh to return to court, but had never been received into favour, and were at this time thirsting for revenge. Of them, therefore, the avarice Minister determined to avail himself as tools. General Ventura is understood to have had full information of the plot, and to have warned Shere Singh of his approaching fate; but he was incredulous. On the fatal morning of the 15th September, he was entrapped beyond the city walls, to be present at the review of part of the Sindhanwala Levies. He placed himself on a raised platform to see the troops defile. A small body of them was brought near to him and his attendants; and one of Ajeet Singh's Sirdars attracted his attention, by pretending to show him a curious double barrelled musquet. Then creeping up to him, he discharged both barrels through his body. He then fell on his face; and the chosen company of assassins fired a volley into the crowd on the platform. Pertab Singh, son of Shere Singh, and two favourites Sirdars, fell with many others under this fire. On his return towards the city, after this exploit of butchery, Ajeet met the Minister Dhyani Singh. They agreed on their measures; and Dhuleep Singh, the son of a stable keeper by one of Ranjess's Rances, was proclaimed Mahamahaj, and Dhyani Singh Minister. All seemed to be going on smoothly, when, by the perfidious counsel of Bhasee Georoomookh, the spiritual guide of old Ranjess Singh, Ajeet determined to destroy Dhyani Singh, and stabbed him with his own hand. Hoora Singh and the Rajpoot family, enraged at this, collected the troops; who, under the command of Ventura and Court, breached and stormed the fort, and massacred the Sindhanwalas; and so Dhuleep Singh continues on the throne, and Hoora Singh is Prime Minister.

What our Government will do in the case is still a perfect secret. It cannot however long remain so; and we must be content to wait a week or two for its disclosure.

THE UNCONQUERED SERVICE FAMILY PENSION FUND.—We have perused the Sixth Report of this Institution with very great satisfaction. As an Apostle tells us, that he who provides not for his own is worse than an infidel, and domestic improvidence is therefore a sure evidence of prevailing irreligion; so we may take the contrary, or the growth of providence in the community, or if any portion of it, as a proof of the growth not only of pure domestic affections, but of the sense of religious obligation. There are forms of provision for a family, on which suspicion may justly rest, as when the provision is invested in lands or funds, which may serve as much to gratify the pride and self-indulgence of him who acquires them, as to secure the comfort of his wife and children when he is dead. The most indeed are laying up treasures for themselves upon earth, when they talk only of providing against the destitution of their families. But no such danger is involved in a Fund of this sort. Here a man, prompted by affection and duty, calculates from expending a portion of his income, voluntarily deprives himself of some of his means of show or indulgence, and stores it up in such a way for the use of those he loves, that he can never himself enjoy a farthing of it. At least he will never share in its expensiture. Enjoyment from it he will have doubtless. He will live in the midst of his little circle at home, in the peaceful assurance, that their comfort, which is now the reward of his toil, and the joy of his heart, will continue even if his hand be laid in the grave. All through his life, the assurance will throw a light of gladness over his humble board; and it will smooth his pillow in death, and make it so much the easier to leave his wife and children in the care of the God of their lives. It will not be, that he has taken the provision for them out of God's hand, and accomplished it himself; but that he has done what he could, to fulfil the obligations to them which God imposed upon him, and therefore he has courage to trust to God for all the rest.

With these views, we cannot but rejoice in the confirmed security, which the property of the Family Pension Fund gives, to the expectations of those who are contributors to it. But thence, likewise, we regret whatever limits the extent to which the Fund becomes available. We must join therefore with the Englishman, and the Star, in regretting, that whilst, during the past year, which has been gained in the consolidation of the Fund, so small an addition has been made to the number of subscribers; and we would, with them, recommend the resending of Rule Twenty, which, from the 1st of May 1848, exacts a bonus of three months' subscription, in addition to the usual entrance subscription and fee, from every new subscriber who was married and in the service of Government prior to that date. Such a bonus can be of no value for the strength of the fund, which is secured without reference to such a source of profit. It must, however, very sensibly interfere with the increase of subscriptions. A chief benefit of the Fund is, that it enables those whose incomes allow of moderate savings, to make provision for their families by small deductions, which may be borne but cannot be exceeded. Now to make a large payment necessary at the beginning, is to make subscription a great difficulty to many, and an absolute impossibility to some; whilst, to all it affords a dangerous plea for procrastination, and procrastination in the many instances will be fatal to subscription altogether. Besides, the Rule has a scandalous appearance. It seems to say, that the first subscribers are determined to have some pecuniary advantage from their priority, or to take a little revenge upon those who have been slow in joining their ranks. And nothing about the Fund should wear an appearance of the kind. Though there is nothing gratuitous in the Fund, it is most truly an affair of charity altogether. And it should be remembered, that in every case in which the Rule defers or prevents a subscription, widows and orphans are the only sufferers; and the combination of the existing subscribers for the purposes of their Fund, is proof sufficient that they are men who cannot trifle with the interests of such sufferers.

The Directors have received a set of Tables computed by a London Actuary, who, from their results, feels himself warranted to recommend a reduction in the rates of subscription. In their report, however, the Directors have not supported the recommendation, partly that a reserve capital may be formed to provide against any extraordinary causes of mortality; and partly, because the Actuary, in calculating his Tables, has assumed the rate of mortality among the Civil Servants in Bengal, as the nearest find x to be found to the mortality among those who composed the Unconquered body; and it is assumed as indubitable, that his conclusions are therefore too favourable to be confirmed by experience. The decision of the Directors was also adopted at the General Meeting of the Subscribers, on the 18th August last. And we cannot but approve of the decision; also, if it be an error, it is one on the safe side: for in matters of Assurance what can be of more moment than safety?

Yet we are very much disposed to question whether the rate of mortality in the Civil Service is too favourable, to allow of accurate calculations for the Unconventured Fund. We shall hold the contrary, until we see a sufficient accumulation of facts to overthrow our opinion. Our conviction is, that in comparing Europeans and East Indians generally, whilst stronger constitution will give to the former a larger number of instances of longevity, better adaptation to the climate will give to the latter a longer average life; that, in comparing Europeans in the Civil, with Europeans in the Unconventured Service, you take, if the former class, a body formed without any knowledge of the adaptation of their constitution to life in India, and a portion of whom will arrive only to die, or be sent back to Europe, whilst in the latter you have a collection of individuals, of all of whom it has been ascertained, that they have a reasonable prospect of being able to bear the climate: and consequently, we believe, that the lives of both branches of the Unconventured Service are naturally better than the lives of the Civilians.

It may be said, that the Unconventured Service having far lower salaries than the Civilians, have their lives deteriorated by the want of the accommodations and generous living which the others can command: and moreover that inferiority in station also exposes to inferiority in moral habits, and the endangering of life by more destructive dissoluteness. But we believe the truth to be, that the Unconventured Service have generally the means of wholesome living; and that their high incomes do the Civilians as much harm, as the means of indulgence in fashionable dissipation, as the Unconventured suffer from any privations to which they are subjected. Should the danger from morals be as the objection supposes, the Pension Fund will be guarded from its influence by the principle of selection, both according to health and character, on which admission to its benefits is allowed.

These views we have not taken up on conjecture. They are the result of long and close observation in an analogous case—the comparative value of the lives of Missionaries direct from Europe, and of those admitted in this Country whether Europeans or East Indians. We know the advantage to be greatly on the side of the latter. We anticipate, therefore, that the Actuary's Tables will eventually be found perfectly within bounds. At the same time, we heartily approve of the caution which prevents their being immediately adopted.

THE CALCUTTA POPULARITY OF LORD ELLENBOROUGH.—The Bombay Times is full of virtuous indignation at the sympathy of Calcutta Society, in the welcome they have given to Lord Ellenborough. First, let him bless his stars, that his Lordship did not take it into his head, to profess himself as Foreperson, to run down the Indians and have a peep at Bombay. The sympathy to do a spite to the Ditcher, by honouring the object; and his not had it yet; and who knows, whether his dislike, would have been so great, that we question whether any virtue in the West could have resisted it. Our worthy Brother, we fear, would have been driven into his own cell, overwhelmed with shame for the derision of his fellow citizens; and Calcutta would have had the opportunity of swelling and strutting in the consciousness of her moral superiority. But alas! it is otherwise. Ours is the shame, and his the boast. Patience! however; the term will go round, so sure as we are all sons of mother Eve. Indeed the Heriber has shown, that Bombay has been before us, and we are only but following her in the dance of folly. They have befuddled themselves with Sir James Cairnes, if we have with his Lordship; and there is a little more excuse for people having their heads turned with a Lord, than with a mere Knight, or even a Baronet.

Nevertheless Calcutta deserves a flogging; and let her have it. We have not looked without some disgust at the turning tide of popularity—although it has hitherto been so plentifully feeble and uncertain to create a laugh likewise. How does the case stand? Lord Ellenborough had in all his progress over India been soft-awarding the Army—he had stuffed them with mounds of goor and lollipops of every sort—and he had done more; he had been liberal and just in dispensing his Military patronage, with the single drawback of his black looks; for on all who could be considered nominees of Lord Auckland: and the army were happy and grateful. It became the rule therefore for him to be fested and toasted, and saluted, as we in Afghanistan—and so he was too much not what out of John Company's gunpowder, at every Military Station he came to. Of course, it was not to be expected that Berkeley should be an exception to the rule. Our neighbours here kindled the fire of ball-room hospitality, and a pretty blaze they made of it. All the world went jigging; and it seemed as if they could not have enough of it. The scruff appeared to be, who could do most in inviting occasions for a ball and supper; and as to whether it was connected with the Governor General, Sir Hugh Gough, Lady Gough, or any one else, that seemed no concern to any one. Dum-dum, always on hospitable thoughts intent, followed the lead of the Head Quarters of the Presidency Division—but not before like honour had been shown to Pottinger, Macgregor and others of similar fame—though possibly in disfavour with his Lordship. Then the Military Staff of Fort William agreed to think it would look strange, if they did not do as others of their cloth did. So they concerted a ball and supper too. But apparently they felt that his Lordship's claims were confined to their own order. They did not seem to have known on what ground to ask civilians to join them; and when taken by surprise by an application to admit of such a partnership, they shied their share of the unreasonableness by a short refusal. It seemed to us to the applicants—Why?—they have no reason to do what we are doing. However, a movement having been made amongst the neighbours-like, the movers appear to have thought they should look very sheepish if the movement came to nothing. So they agreed to their courage up to proposing a Civilians' entertainment for his Lordship—all the while as his Lordship did not take it into his head, to profess civility in disdain. But he did not do that. Only he would not have the honour than; he has not had it yet; and who knows, whether he will ever have it at all? Now what is there in all this to be so very angry about! The officers of the Army have danced and drunk wine before his Lordship, for as good reasons as people ordinarily have to engage in these vice and dignified performances; and the Civilians can plead in excuse for their proceedings, that they have followed the rule which governs more than nine-tenths of the race—they have done as others did. Poor souls, pity in them the weakness of human nature; but, oh most virtuous Times, be merciful in your condemnation.

Perhaps the offenders might even take heart to say, Good Sir, the fact is, much of the dislike we formerly expressed towards his Lordship, was occasioned by personal offence. We thought him rude and insolent. We had opportunities of seeing something of the kind in his behaviour; and we heard of a great deal more. But we are incited at last to think, that Lord Ellenborough, as well as others, should have the benefit of the maxim, that we ought to believe only half of what we see, and not a fourth of what we hear. We verily believe we heard very much that never occurred, or for which there was no better foundation, than for that we saw the three black crows. And for what did occur, and was bad enough, we think some considerable palliation may be found in the fact, that when his Lordship first arrived in Calcutta, he was thrown into something of a conglomeration—was a little demoralised, so to speak, by the crisis of affairs in Afghanistan—and so he was too much flustered to appear the very pink of politeness. Then it is a fact, that after he had shown us his rough side, and, seeing things in a train for adjustment, he began to settle into some degree of quietness—if his nature is capable of any thing of that sort—he did actually turn a kind side, in a manner, to the folks up the country: and we have thought if he did not let him have an opportunity now, of putting on his best face here too. You talk indeed of the faults of his administration, his baldheaded proclamations, and so forth; but, be assured we have nothing to do with these matters. Not a soul in Calcutta will have any Address to his Lordship, for the purpose of lauding his Government, or those special Acts of any thing but grace, by which he has gained a reputation, such as it is, through the known world. Though if he will now be neighbourly with decent people, would it not be desirable they should be neighbourly with him?

Who knows how much common sense might thus find a way to his ear, so as imperceptibly to restrain the vagaries to which his own nature is prone. It would be something gained, could we by a civil, not a cringing or fawning deportment, convey to his mind the impression, that he has no natural opponents to his authority and measures in any of the Euro-pean community—that there exists no such cause of irritation to provoke him to partialities or caprices; but that, on the contrary, submitting to him as our lawful Ruler, we are ready to let the evil that can't be mended be the Civilians, on the simple principle of being forgotten; and, as much as may be, look with neighbour-like, the movers appear to have thought they should look very sheepish if the movement came to nothing. So they agreed to their courage up to proposing a Civilians' entertainment for his Lordship—all the while as his Lordship did not take it into his head, to profess civility in disdain. But he did not do that. Only he would not have the honour than; he has not had it yet; and who knows, whether he will ever have it at all? Now what is there in all this to be so very

SIXTH REPORT OF THE DUM-DUM TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.—We are happy to observe that this very useful Society is prosperously making its ground. The number of its Members in April last, to which period the Report extends, was One Hundred and Twenty-seven which shows an increase of nineteen above the Bombay. When first heard, it excited some number of the previous year at the same season, dissatisfaction; so easy is it for much excellence in addition to all that have gone up the country to be overlooked, because of a few blemishes in the various drafts of the year. The funds. It was thought his Lordship's reference to the too, are maintained in a healthy condition; Plymouth Brethren was recalled for, and might chiefly through the patronage of a portion of it be considered an effusion of spleen against the Officers, who take pleasure in the comfort of Lady, whom all Christians must esteem and adore good conduct of their men. It speaks in little; and the orthodox, who were stumbled by the praises bestowed on them, were little better. By one thing the Tractarians were certainly gratified, and the opposite party as certainly mortified. This was his Lordship's authoritative imposition of silence; which remains in the charge, in terms sufficiently strong to justify the effects attributed to it.

The Report notices very gratefully, the obligations of the Society to Dr. Duff, whose visit and address brought an accession of forty members to its ranks at once. At the same time it urgently solicits similar favours from other friends of the cause of Temperance in Calcutta; and we hope it will not solicit in vain. The plan has been adopted of having ten meetings there or four times a year, in order to bind together in greater intimacy the members of the Society; and we should think that on these occasions a sufficient number of speakers from Calcutta might easily be induced to attend, to render them exceedingly interesting and profitable. Personal attention however must be made to those whose company would be acceptable; for no one would think of obtruding himself unasked. Dr. Duff has doubtless felt himself well rewarded for his visit, and would consider it a happy addition to his usefulness, to be the means of bringing forty individuals on the list of temperate men every year of his life; and his example is well calculated to encourage others.

We rejoice to see, by the daily papers, that Brigadier Frith has just closed the Dum Dum Canteen as a retail drinking shop, and confined its operations to the mere issuing of the regulated allowance of spirits or beer which every man is permitted to draw. If we recollect right, it is quite optional with every man to have this allowance, or a pecuniary compensation instead; so that the only purpose of the Canteen now is, that those who will take their customary quantity of liquor may have it of the best—that is the least serious—quality that can be procured for their money. Previously each man, in addition to the regulated allowance, was permitted to drink at his own expense to a certain extent daily; and that became was enough to ruin many a man, while it was not very difficult to get beyond it, either by collusion with other applicants who did not wish to drink themselves, or by intemperance or unfaithfulness on the part of the Canteen Berjeant. This however is now ended at Dum-Dum; and a most dangerous temptation is taken out of the way of the man.

METROPOLITAN CHARGE OF THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA.—This Charge was delivered in Calcutta in August last year, and afterwards, in the course of his Lordship's Metropolitan Visitation, at Madras, Colombo, Palamcottah, and —the truth is, her fallen condition cannot be hid by any commands that may be given. The principles of spiritual bondage, of human degradation and oppression, are eating into her very heart, and indicating themselves in fearful and innumerable symptoms of future mischief. The only course now left to those who love her, and yet also love the truth, is to seek the full exposure, that they may gain the full eradication, of the fatal evil. It is no longer a question of honour or dishonour, but one of life or death.

His Lordship seems to be rather misled by the advantages of his own position. Delivering his argument ex cathedra, with scarce a possibility of reply from those against whom he contends, he is liable to be deceived by the silence with which he is heard. It appears as if his point had been gained—"enough has been said and written." This power of arguing without reply is translated into the power of arguing effectively and irresistibly; and from appearing as the ally of a single Bishop, it is generalised into an endorsement of the whole Episcopal order. Hence his Lordship comes to talk in such a style as this: "Our episcopal form of Church Government affords us the best means, under God, of preserving the faith. Had Protestant Germany retained her Episcopacy, the Neology of the last hundred years might have been averted. Had Reformed France kept her Episcopacy, the Arianism of the eighteenth century might never have prevailed. Had Geneva preserved the primitive order of Church Government, she never might have apostatised from the principles of her great founder. If the Church of England is to be saved peacefully and in an orderly manner now, it is her Bishops who under God must save her. Should deliverance come in from other quarters, we know not what consequences may follow."

This is a piece of clapping unworthy of his Lordship's knowledge and piety. The substantial substance of his own charge before us, is that Arianism, Socinianism, Neology, and every other departure from the fundamental doctrines of the Gospel may be avoided, had orthodoxy on every essential point be maintained, and yet Puseyism be as fatal and destructive as error can be. Its poison is virulent enough to nullify all truths it may acknowledge, and do the mischief of all errors it may repudiate. Moreover Puseyism, His Lordship maintains, is but Popery under another name. And what is Popery, but Diocesan Episcopacy unrestrained by Scripture authority and truth—or Episcopacy run mad! But still it is Episcopacy; and the Churches of Rome, of Greece and Russia, of Armenia, Syria and Abyssinia have all the benefits of Episcopacy; and yet they might as well be Neologians of Germany as what they are. And could his Lordship look on the Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Congregational and Baptist communities of England, Scotland, Ireland and America, and say, that, if it were of Episcopacy, they are Christian men and ministers more deficient in pure, evangelical truth, than any Episcopal Churches in existence! And what may be, can only be suggested from what is, or has been.

As to the Church of England, Puseyism has brought her to such a pass, that, if deliverance comes to her from any quarter, her friends should be satisfied to think it is deliverance, and be too grateful for the substantial good to scruple about the source or mode from which it is derived. As a matter of fact, the Church is the least, possibly indebted to her Bishops for any measure of deliverance, or any prospect of it, yet obtained. If, without being of his flock at all, we might speak of him so, we should say, perhaps with a feeling of pride, that our own Bishop, as a defender of the truth in the present danger, is worth the whole Bench at home. Not one of them has protested against the errors of the day with his religious conscience, and maintained the protest with such an array of sound, protestant, scriptural argument. Only three or four have expressed themselves with similar straightforward decision; the majority, and the highest in rank and place, have shown hot and cold, and done more harm perhaps by their interference than if they had left the matter alone; whilst a number have said nothing, or worse, and are counted on as favourers of their cause by the advocates of the truth. With the clergy have been wanting—though it seems they are owing to his Lordship, that one of the first and most influential stands against the introduction of Puseyite fustian was made in the old period of latitudes, and by its clergy, with his worthy aid at their head. The stand was not without good immediately because a president. The other parishes, which vindicated their liberty from its example. But stronger than either the Bishop or clergy, in checking the tide of infatuation and superstition, have been the Laity; that massive body of living Christianity, whose testimony is too apt to get out of sight as a prominent part of the Church at all. The best hope of the Church of England, under God, is, that the Christian people in her communion will not suffer themselves to be hoodwinked, like the thousands of old, by the artifices of priestcraft. Puseyism does not fatter them. If they will be silly, it will let them have gogwags: if they are worldly and immoral, they shall have easy penances, confessions, and absolutions; and if religiously superstitious, they shall have wonderfully efficacious cures, a demi-god potentiated alternately to serve and rule them, and finally avowed of every sort and measure they put with. But if they will be men, Puseyism insults and degrades them. It requires not their souls to trample on, but their minds. Add there is infidelity of manhood in England, to refuse the subjection, if the danger be clearly exposed now in its first approaches.

It was not wisdom, then, in his Lordship to say Silence! Let him revive it. Let every clergyman rather be urged, fully to possess himself of the truth on the great question of the day, and of all its bearings and tendencies, and to be diligent and faithful in exhibiting and maintaining the truth. It will be no less of time—no trusting aside from people duty. The truth, in this case, is the eternal truth of God's holy Gospel—and its infatuation is the urgent delivery of God's message of grace to sinners. This controversy, wisely conducted, is but the ministry of salvation. It ought to be as productive of conversion and spiritual life, as were the struggles of the great Reformation.

In the progress of his Lordship's visitation such sentiments and opinions appear to have grown upon him. Hence the charge is introduced by a Dedication to the Bishops of Madras and Bombay, the truth, elegance and force of which must strike every reader. Though first in order it is of course last in composition. It is the final out-pouring of a devout mind, that has been long pondering over the crisis of the time, and at least less sight of every inferior consideration, in holy anxiety for the great introduction of salvation and godliness, and its influence upon the word and Spirit of God for their defence and support. It is a noble confession of genuine Protestantism. And Protestantism is human liberty. It restores to man the word which makes him free indeed.

The first part of the Charge itself is devoted to some statistics and incidental matters, and a few general but wise and scriptural suggestions to the clergy, respecting the ordinary discharge of their ministry. From this division, and a paragraph of the Dedication, we gather the following facts concerning the present state of the Episcopal Church in India: The number of the Clergy allowed by the Honourable Company, on the Bengal Establishment and the Straits, is 53. Of these, in August 1862, there were 34 in active duty, 11 absent on sick leave, 2 announced, and 4 to be immediately appointed. The Missionaries, and other Clergy not on the Company's Establishment, were 27, with 3 absent on account of health, and 2 occasionally labouring though not yet licensed: in all 32, or 19 more than in 1856, and chiefly through the zeal of the Church Missionary Society in supplying the demand for Agni and Krishnagur. The Bengal Clergy amount therefore to 65, instead of 53 in 1856; and 15 in the episcopate of Bishop Middleton. On the Madras Establishment, there were 20 Chaplains of the Company, and (including Ojilut, we suppose) 63 Missionaries and others: in all 82. On the Bombay Establishment, there were 23 Company's Chaplains, and 7 Missionaries: in all 32. Thus the number of Clergy in all the three dioceses is 218. Other interesting facts on this subject, we trust refer to the charge itself.

The second, and, by far, the larger and more important division of the charge, is devoted to the Trinitarian system. His Lordship considers the advantages that they hold all the fundamental facts of Reformation, and are free from heresies, as the word has hitherto been applied; if they are not Arians, Socinians, Pelagians or Nestorians. And, although the value of the concession is reduced to a mere nothing afterwards, it would, perhaps, have been better to have expressed it more guardedly at first. The Trinitarian, we know, are exceedingly apt at unfair questions; and it would be an easy thing for them to say to those they wished to mislead, that even the Bishop of Columbia allowed them to be perfectly orthodox on all the fundamental points of the gospel, and therefore, even if on other points they were wrong it could be of no great consequence; whilst the probability was, that if they were right in their foundations, they were so also in their superstructure. They should not be allowed the opportunity of taking such an advantage. They have no such occasion as to argue what follows the foundation of his Lordship. "I earnestly desire union of a system to say the Gospel of Christ." The first is the chief part of their orthodoxy; it is not verbal; it is essential; hencey after all. No one can honestly read his Lordship's visitation without being impressed with this. The main steel of their system is the substantiality of supernatural revelation; and this, with its verifiability, can be in fundamental agreement with the system of Him, who pronounced as his fundamental principle, "GOD IS A SPIRIT."

His Lordship suggests his assignment by showing first, how the Trinitarian system, in its general features, differs from the Gospel of the New Testament; secondly, how it not only differs from the Gospel, but is contradictory, by implication, of its own doctrine; and, finally, the certain event to which it is leading; from its assimilation to the principles and proceedings of Popery.—The error to which it tends is thus described.—"The question, then, is, what will be the character of our clergy twenty or thirty years hence? What the remaining vitality and efficiency of our Church, when the system is fully developed? The more insidious it is at present, the more fatal will be the poison infused into the very soul and substance of the divinity of the next age; till our English Council of 'Trust' is convened, our Liturgy 'orthodox,' our Thirty-nine Articles altered, our Homilies 'unprotestantized,' our exegesis and Rabbinism filled with the practices and customs of the fourth and fifth centuries, and the faithful members of our Protestant Church excluded by the imposition of sinful terms of communion from the Anglican Church, as they were at the Reformation from the corrupt and idolatrous Church of Rome." True, his Lordship does not anticipate this apostasy; but it is none the less the issue to which Trinitarianism tends.

We should be glad to lead our Readers, step by step, through the whole course of his Lordship's argument; but our limits forbid. We beg they will travel through it by themselves. They will find it no weary journey. The reasoning is lucid with life and vigour. It is most consistently based on undeniable premises. It has every beauty of sound and honourable argumentation, and is full of what faces interests intellectual and immortal man.

We cannot say, that, appended to the charge, are independent. Dissertations of great value, on Tradition and Testimony, and various articles of information, of interest to every one who is concerned about Christianity in India.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8.

—The Harbinger is surprised at our delay in taking up the question of Education again. It cannot be helped. He must hide our time; and may be assured, that the subject is one we shall neglect only when we cease to be.

—Colonel Hughes, against whom, from the proceedings on the late Court Martial, there seemed to be some plagues in high quarters at Bombay, has been appointed to the Command at Deesa, and so replaced in honour and confidence.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9.

—In noticing the remarks of the Bombay Times on the sympathy of our Calcutta Society to Lord Ellenborough, the Harbinger justly maintains that whatever it may have been, the Press has had no concern in it. Nor is it likely to have. His Lordship is so much its friend as affectionally to take care he shall not spell it, by any of the means by which independence is usually corrupted. It has therefore reason to be grateful. The preservation of its integrity is worth infinitely more than the smiles and patronage it may miss.

—The Star informs us that the Agnetis Society has determined to address the Government upon the expediency of immediately deputing a properly qualified person to examine and report upon the sub-marine volcano which lately broke out & emerged the island near Choolah, on the coast of Arracan. We hope the application will be successful.

—The Deli Gazette of the 27th ult. gives two letters, signed Y. on the relations between the British Government and the Royal House of Delhi, which may be taken, we suppose, as the opening of Mr. Thompson's war on behalf of the Shah. The same paper contains further statements on the Lahore Treaty, which we have placed at length in our columns. The rights of Indians are still spoken of as the rights of the British in the Upper Provinces.

—Our Dellid Contemporary has an interesting story from a Correspondent, describing the adventures likely to arise from the navigation of the Nerbudda, and a plan of accomplishing it by wrought iron pontoons to be run out on the shore by wheels, attached for the time, at every insuperable obstruction in the river: proposing the formation of a Joint Stock Company to carry the project into effect, under the sanction of Government.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7.

—Another cargo of ice, said to extend to five hundred tons, is off Calcutta, in the Dorchester.

—The Assam Steamer and her cargo-boat got on swimmingly. They were at Berhampore at half past nine A. M. on the 2d, having left Calcutta at 7 A. M. of the 29th ult.

—It is explained, in to-day's Harkers, that the Governor General has had nothing to do with the leave given to ten men in each company of the Barrackpore Regiments to go on pilgrimages to Juggannath.

—It seems the speedy removal of many of the Regiments from the neighbourhood of Orissa, by the approaching Belah, had occasioned an unusual number of applications for leave to visit Pooree; and the extraordinary indulgence was granted by the General Commanding the station, at the request of the Commanding Officers of the Regiments. This is a very different story from the original version of the Belah.

—The Bermies, which was to leave Bombay with the Mail, on the 3d inst. had about sixteen passengers, besides children, engaged.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 9.

—It is reported from Gwalior that a second expedition was to be despatched to Dholapoor, to endeavour to prevail on Col. Spier to return to the Capital—of course to no purpose.

—Messieurs papers have been received by the 20th September—in which we saw nothing worthy of note, except a report that the Governor General had directed Sir William Henry Ross, of Poona to proceed to Madras, to investigate the charges that have been brought against the late local authorities. We think the report very likely to be true: and we trust the investigation will tend to bring all the parties concerned to a right mind, and to heal the disorders or discontent that have prevailed through the Provinces generally. In the mean time, we regret to see a disposition to snuff at serious plots, and to make those who make conscience of fearing God the subjects of silly riddles.

—Last Friday, the Bishop of Calcutta preached in the Cathedral and ordained three Deacons and one Priest. According to the report in to-day's Harkers, His Lordship's sermon was in great part a reiteration of some of the points of his late charge; but we are sorry to see the following statement: "The Bishop adverted to three instances in which false or exaggerated charges had been brought against his Clergy, in the newspapers of England and India:—the first of which was sufficiently falsified by a sub-committee of the S. F. G. Report;—the second was refuted by the facts of the day, since of the four candidates before him for holy orders, three had been entirely educated in Bishop's College, and one had resided there a few months;—the third was unanswerably refuted by a letter addressed to himself and those given to the public." Of the sub-committee we shall have to speak hereafter, and the case of the Rev. Krishna Mahan Banerjee we do not mean to touch: but if his Lordship is so satisfied with the state and character of Bishop's College, as a seat of theological education, what, in the name of wonder, has been inspiring his Charges and Sermons for these five years past with their earnest protestation against the pernicious errors of the Trinitarians? Has his Lordship been triflingly himself and the community with an imaginary danger—or a merely possible contingency? We believe not—and deeply grieve that the kindness of his disposition—his unwillingness to acknowledge the existence of a spot upon his flock—should lead him to such inconsistencies with himself and with plain fact.

—The Gentleman's Gazette says, that the Parsons of Bombay are going to appeal to the Privy Council against the late decision, which has brought their marriages under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10.

—The Assam Steamer named Bejmal on the 5th instant at 9 A. M., continuing to do admirably.

—The Englishman says, that the Arab Ship Atia Rissan from Muscat, was boarded by the Cattle Eden on the 24th September, which reported the death of Sir John Norton, of the Madras Bench, on that day.

—The meeting of the Shareholders to the Medical Reliefing Fund, yesterday afternoon, was, we understand, rather stormy. At least the reception of the Report was repugnant; and at least the Annotate were passed only on condition that a Committee of Investigation should be appointed, on the continuance of the maximum rate of subscription, and the Reserve Fund. The Committee was appointed, and will proceed to its task immediately.

—From the Harkers we learn, that Mr. Frederick Carter, of the Sadler Court of the H. W. Provisions, is to succeed Mr. Thompson as Secretary to Government, on his proceeding to assume the Minist. Governmentship at Agre; and that the Secretaryship being given to a much younger officer than the present incumbent, Mr. Hamilton, a saving will be made in the salaries of both Governor and Secretary.

—From the Sumner's Free Press, we learn, that H. M. Ship Sumner has been got up again, after six days' hard work, and was found to be but little injured in her hull.

—Lieut. Col. Battersworth arrived at Singapore, on the 17th August, and was immediately sworn in Governor of the Straits Settlements, and a Judge of the Court of Judicature, under the temporary title.

—In the Friend of China of the 2d August, there is a Proclamation from his Excellency the Governor, which states, that he has been brought to his notice, that such a step had been contemplated as sending vessels with Opium to the Chinese Ports opened by treaty to Foreign trade, and demanding that it be submitted in virtue of the concluding clause of the New Tariff, which provides for all articles not actually enumerated in that Tariff, passing at an ad valorem duty of five per cent. But his Excellency makes known to all concerned, that, as Opium is an article the traffic in which is declared to be illegal and contraband by the Laws and Imperial Edicts, they will take such a step, at their own risk, and if British vessels, will meet with no success or protection from Her Majesty's Comand, or other Officers.

—The Authority at Yunnan connected with the massacre of the crews of the Nerbudda and Assam, have been found guilty of desecrating the Emperor by Hay and been handed over to the Board of Punishments. The Imperial Order speaks with this remarkable language:—"In punishing Chinese and Foreigners, we look upon each with the same equal benevolence. And, the General and Intendant concerned, having become amenable by their crime to punishment, we will not allow, that because the representations come from some outside Strangers, it should be carelessly set aside without investigation. Our own subjects and Foreigners, ministers and people, should all alike understand, that it is our high desire to act with even handed and perfect justice.—Respectfully."

—A letter in the Harkers, from Channabragga, mentions a malicious accident by which some lives appear to have been lost. Four boys full of young and old pushed off, to throw a large image of Durga into the water, and one of them pitched on one side, filled with water. The people jumped, helped, and then the other boats, which all went down too; and before others could reach the spot all had disappeared.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11.

The Harkers of yesterday gave a startling report of an investigation at the Police Office, which shows how fast the defenders are making the Coast by Expiration scheme work out the worst evils that were overestimated from it. And his columns today contain a letter from Mr. J. H. Miller, explaining how the case came to be discovered. That gentleman, being at the Botanical Gardens holiday keeping, last Saturday week, observed a human being floating down the river, and made off to save him, after first learning that it was a coolie who had jumped overboard from a ship anchored close by, to escape from emigration to the Mauritius. The man was picked up by a fishing boat, before Mr. Miller could reach him; but though greatly exhausted he crawled into his boat, clung to his leg, and brought his presence—which was really given him. When he was claimed by the people of the Ship, (what was his name?) Mr. Miller very properly refused to deliver him up, but the crew immediately dispatched a note to Mr. Paton, the Chief Magistrate, by a boat, informing him of the circumstances. With great promptitude, that gentleman sent two Police constables to the spot, with instructions to hasten inquiries, and liberate such of the Coolies as were unwilling to proceed with the ship on her voyage.

About forty or fifty walked themselves off the opportunity; and the poor creatures generally were found to be in a wretched condition. One was an insane woman; who, at the Police office, said, the defenders had prevailed on her to go on board, in the pretence that she was to go to Alahabad for her health. The dispositions of all show, that they were lured on the falsest representations, kept in vigorous confinement, and cruelly treated. We trust the investigation will be followed up as it ought to be.

Answers to Correspondents.

We have received the Reply to the Report of the Sub-Committee of S. F. G. and shall give it as soon as convenient.

The Calcutta Christian Observer has not yet reached us. We are obliged to R. for his communication, but it does not suit us.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following notice for the Friend of India—

Q's. & A's.

Rev. H. M. ...	to Dec. 1848,	10 0
C. Turner, Esq. ...	ditto,	20 0
E. Macdonald, Esq. ...	to Sept. 1848,	20 0
J. A. Dunbar, Esq. ...	to Jan. 1848,	20 0
N. Darrell, Esq. ...	to Sept. 1848,	48 0
Capt. T. G. Allenby, ...	to Aug. 1848,	20 0
W. Dampier, Esq. ...	to Sept. 1848,	100 0
Capt. Amos, ...	to Sept. 1848,	20 0
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Calcutta ...	to Dec. 1848,	30 0
Charles Grosvenor, Esq. ...	to Sept. 1848,	20 0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

ARA.

There is a very extraordinary story going about the station, which, under the circumstances, we consider it proper to refrain from giving, till we hear from one of our Correspondents. The whole communication we have been anxiously looking out, regarding the death of Dr. Hesse of the 11th N. I. If the story is true, we envy not the feelings of those who, by their indignation, caused the death of an innocent man. By our next issue we hope to be in possession of the facts of the case.

Our Lieutenant Governor is said to be in considerable anxiety regarding the late event in the Punjab, and to have expressed a wish that the Governor, Sir John Lawrence, should go to Agre, where he could have joined him by dawn, in consultation with him on the subject.

"The Army of Khawaja," it is said, will assemble at the Fort of Shah Jahan, and the Governor affords little to be "argued," it will march towards men, but has not been since heard of. Several travellers were murdered in a thick dark jungle in between the villages of Puckwarran and Jallindar. The first named village was situated about 10 miles from the latter place. It was killed, and every article of value carried off. It is said that Hoera Singh has put to death Bhano Lams Singh and his family. There is no doubt that there exists a deadly enmity existing between them; also Mir Dilek Ram, treasurer, on pretence of his having delivered the key of the public treasure to Ajit Singh, was shot dead by him at the village of Jallindar. Another and also a very considerable body of troops. Since the 20th, numerous detachments which have been sent to various parts of the country to suppress the Sattages. The head of Sirind Lens Singh has been exposed on the Kashmirie gate, and that of Ajit Singh on the Lahore gate; other gates are also decorated with their heads. These men of inferior note. Their bodies were exposed on the plain until some of the Sirindas or Laggaris Singh were ordered to remove them. The man who was done particularly, Thomas G. of Maharajah Shree Singh, of Furzab Singh; and of Rajah Dhyan Singh were ordered to be carried to the city on the 19th September—Dakr.

No. 71

The many accounts we have received of the details of the Lahore tragedy, and which it would be needless repetition to lay before our readers, though as we have before observed differing particulars, prove to us that our view of the principal events in the last Delhi Gang were events as given in the last LAGOS GAZETTE, were quite correct. Our intelligence on the morning of Friday extends to the 17th inst., on the returned to his post. The General is now preparing, in conjunction with the General Order, to move upon Indra, (we have been obliged to defer some observations on the choice of Indra for this service) our next, the special Cavalry guard stationed at the Indra had been withdrawn, and Mr. Grimes, who reached Foropore on the 22d, was about to remove the Treasure from the fort to the Indra just completed in the Indra suspended. It was known that the Prince Rimor Shah, the eldest son of the late Shah Soobah, would accompany us with his suite.

[illegible]

The following is an extract from a letter written by a native correspondent at Lahore :

Lahore, 22d Sept. 1945.—Munir Singh and Soobhai Singh have settled the state of the country far and near. When Golsah Singh heard of the intelligence of his brother's death, he immediately commenced his march from Jammu with 10,000 of the bravest fighting men in the Khalse. When he got two stages away from his home, he turned back, as he did not want to hurry him to Lahore, as he had got every thing as he wished ; but, before leaving that part of the country to put every thing in a correct safe state, as well as Jammu and the States of Patna, Coimbatore, Ludhaka, &c. &c.

Heera Singh also despatched perwaris and orders to Sawan Mall at Mooltan, to Sirdar Tej Singh Nazim of Feshawar and to the Killadar of Govindpur to keep every thing right and quiet; to cajole the soldiery in every way by sweet words, promises, &c., that each foot soldier should have Rs. 12, and mounted ones Rs. 30 per mensem as Heera Singh has been pretty successful in getting a large sum of money, jewels, property, and so on from the late treasurer Mir Bailee, and keeper of the toshuk-khana Bhare Goomruk Singh; but whether these people are dead yet or not is a secret, as their zenanas are strictly guarded by soldiers who have helped themselves, to many washes out of the toshuk-khana. All the Saikhs are soldiers and all love plunder; as present near Lahore things look tolerably quiet.—Englishman

PRINCE ALAM KUBER.—Prince Mahomed Alam Kuber, son of Shah Kamran, lately arrived from Agra, having addressed a letter to the Governor-General of India, soliciting permission to proceed to Hindostan and pay his respects to his Lordship, and also some assistance, has received a reply from his Lordship to the effect that he will not receive him, and will not afford assistance of any kind whatsoever.—Dakka Gazette, Sept. 27.

CANAL.—Sirdar Dost Mahomed Khan has succeeded in organizing a Regiment of Infantry, composed of Hazarels; they are made to resemble the European soldiers in dress and accoutrements as far as possible. They are men of fair complexion and light eyes. He has established grades of Commanders and Koomandans, and appointed men of the Regiment to fill them, but placed the entire Regiment under command of a member of his family.—Ibid.

THE LAHORE CHIEF.

and tell that infernal Englishman what I have done. One fact remains to complete this picture of degradation. The vice and culture both excluded the fact, the latter acknowledged that a woman had come out of the house, crying out and bleeding at the mouth. He afterwards confessed the unmanly act to one individual, but still he was jealously inquiring, "Did not our Lord drive with a scourge of small cords those who bought and sold in the Temple?"

About the same time an officer in the Portuguese service expressed to the Consul his belief that the fact, that the measures taken by Government against Dr. Kaley were illegal; whereas the Consul struck him, and taking him at unawares, knocked him down. But no sooner did the Consul hear the Consul's protest on the ground, than, terrified at his own audacity, he took to his heels, and luckily saved himself in the bishop's palace from the hot pursuit of the disgraced officer. The next time that Dr. Kaley, the Consul visited the spirited character, being knocked down and kicked like a foot-ball in the public Place.

My account of priestly rascals is not yet complete. The Curate of St. — and the Vicar of St. — have each disgraced their holy office by severely punishing the sign of a man who attended Dr. Kaley's sermons. The Vicar of St. — also refused for some time to bury a man who had occasionally been one of Dr. Kaley's hearers, and told his family, that they might "put the body up the chimney and make smoke as usual of it!"

Such are the men to whom pastoral care the share of Christ's flock in Madeira are about to be committed. The facts are so strong that they require no comment. The only hope of Dr. Kaley's being permitted to remain in the island, rests upon the interference of the English Government, and on the strong moral influence exerted by a Catholic expression of opinion of the English nation; and my firm conviction that it is so, is my reason for desiring to give publicity to the foregoing narration.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant.
H. A.

Extract of a letter from Madeira, dated May 11, and just received:—
"Dr. Kaley is very unwell just now. Yesterday his man of business told him that he might expect to be put in jail immediately, and from other quarters he had had intimations of the same kind; so he has taken daily exposition of himself. The worst part of it is, that there is no judge here just now, so they cannot bring him possibly confined for six months. Even should he be permitted to remain in his house on Sunday; but in the meantime he has daily expostulations of Scripture at his elbow to his patients, and all who choose to go. Yesterday he was attended by a hundred hearing him. He feels that his time may be spent among these poor people who are thirsting for instruction; therefore he desires to be confined to his house with all exertions. He truly the hand of God is with him in this exertion, is proved by two more persons, in the midst of this season of anxiety and peril, expressing a wish to join the Church communion."
—Record.

A letter from Freiburg, of July 7, states that the Emperor of Austria, in his quality of King of Hungary, has just decided the long disputed question of the religious of children sprung from mixed marriages. In answer to a petition from the last Diet, praying that parents of different religions might be freed from the obligation of bringing up their children exclusively in the Catholic religion, his Majesty has ordered that children may be brought up as Protestants or Catholics, as may seem fit to the parents, and in case they cannot agree, the children are to be of the religion of the father. This Resolution, the letter states, caused great satisfaction in the city, and in the evening of the intelligence the houses were illuminated.
—Id.

THE HAVES, JULY 23.—A general assembly of the Netherlands Missionary Society was lately held at Rotterdam. It appears from the Report read on this occasion, that the Society have suffered a death of three missionaries. The mission in Cutch was in a flourishing condition, as was likewise the Normal School for native teachers in Amboyna. The whole of the missions had 18,900 pupils. In the next country the Society continues to prosecute its Evangelical labours with the greatest zeal and advantage, and daily receive more and more proofs of the estimation in which it is held by the public.—Id.

MISCELLANEOUS.

His Majesty the Queen—whose health, by the late of Frederick, was in a very precarious state, had the great cause to break through the solid form of Court precedent, and set an example to nobles, by viewing the Royal Infant when he was twenty weeks the second week of his existence. This is only another proof of these domestic candidities and sympathies which pervade the Royal house. The regency of the step cannot be questioned. It is the opinion of all practical and sensible men, that the crown which, some declare is that which is still beneficial to the parent and the child. Many weekly constitutions among the titled and wealthy are, probably, due to the opposite line of conduct; and many, we are assured, are the examples of the future health of parent and infant having been sacrificed to the artificial climate of fashion, or to the frigid laws of etiquette.—Cont.

WITLEY COURT.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager is expected to arrive at this seat at the close of the evening week, from Busby Park, for the autumn. Her Majesty has when the season on the lawn, and has her establishment, chiefly by underpeople from Worcester, as is a state of great forwardness. Earl Howe and his family will remain at Uxbridge Hall, with occasional visits to Witley Court; Mr. Major's enjoyment in Worcester.—Record.

ADVANCE IN THE PRICE OF WHEAT.—It will be seen from our Wakefield corn letter, that at the market held yesterday wheat advanced no less than 4s. a quarter on the price of the week preceding. On the two weeks just previous to this, there was an advance of 1s. 6s. a quarter, so that the price at this great corn market has risen no less than 6s. in three weeks. This fact shows that the season before held the entire stock of wheat in the country to be very small.
Leeds Mercury.

THE DUKES OF SURREY'S LIBRARY.—There are doubt whether the valuable collection of Bibles, and collection of rare manuscripts and books, constituting the library of the late Duke of Sussex, will be submitted to the Duke of Devonshire or not, the King of Naples having entered into negotiations for the purchase of the entire collection.—Id.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to confer a Royal warrant of incorporation on the school of medicine and surgery at Birmingham, with the privileges, immunities, rank, and title of the "Queen's College, Birmingham."—Record.
The gross revenue of the Duchy of Cornwall for the year ending December 31, 1843, was 25,332, 13s. 4d., salaries and expenses 12,332, 13s. 4d., leaving 13,000, for the Prince of Wales.—Id.
The gross revenue of the Duchy of Cornwall for the year ending December 31, 1843, was 25,332, 13s. 4d., salaries and expenses 12,332, 13s. 4d., leaving 13,000, for the Prince of Wales.—Id.

QUEEN'S CIVIL LIST.

Privy purses	£100,000
Salaries to the household	£1,331,000
Tyndal's bills	173,500
Bounty, sine, &c.	15,000
Unappropriated	8,000
	288,000
Duke of Cumberland	£31,000
Duke of Devonshire	27,000
Duke of Cambridge	27,000
Duchess of Gloucester	16,000
Princess Sophia	15,000
Princess Sophia of Gloucester	7,000
Queen Adelaide	100,000
Duchess of Kent	30,000
Prince Albert	30,000
King Leopold, part of which is returned	50,000
	310,000
	270,000

N. B. The expense for Wind-or, and other royal palaces and parks, was to be added to this sum.—Id.

STANLEY AND PERE.—It is evident to any one who has watched their conduct towards each other in the House of Commons for the last three or four nights, that Sir Robert Peel and Lord Stanley are on the verge of an open rupture. They hardly look at each other; and when, with Sir James Graham, they are, as is the case many times during a session, obliged to hold their contemporary Cabinet to settle who shall yield to any attack made on them by the other side, they do not, like honest men, look in each other's face; and at all other times, when they chance to be left by the temporary absence of their colleagues next to each other, they usually sit at a respectful distance, much to the loss of a pair of pointed and prying glances. The cause of course is respect, or great judgment to take on Ireland. Sir Robert has succeeded in convincing the rampant advice of the very Tybalt to stand hardly with the Irish rebel movement, or Lord Stanley is, in turn and soul, impregnated with a moralized hatred of everything bearing the name of or connected with O'Connell.—Hants Independent.

Real Grey continues complacent, and takes due notice of the Roman Catholic press, and it is a fact, it is hoped, he will be sufficiently recovered to the halcyon of a journey to Warwick.—Record.

"Where there's a smoke there is a fire," is the motto of a well-known joke just published in "H. B. I." It represents Mr. Peel and the members of the Cabinet assembled and anxiously watching a bomb-shell, which lies apparently at the point of instant explosion, blazing at their feet, and about to smother destruction upon all around it. The Premier suggests that "it lies in the hands of the Government, while the Duke, with uplifted finger, warns his grace-loving colleagues that "it may burn out into us." Lord Stanley, with characteristic impudence, is rushing forward, just in time, but called to by Sir J. Graham, who hints that he "will only burn his fingers" while Lord Biot, drawing the materials from an ominously small room, through an insignificant interstice, is endeavouring to smother the explosion by preparing to extinguish it. The Lord Chancellor for Ireland, who occupies the foreground of the print, seems endeavouring to smother the explosion with a writ of superpetit; while in the background are two figures, one representing Lord de Grey, severely pained to find out which piece of the Constitution relates to Royal Meetings, and the other the worthy agitator, with his pockets well filled with "riot," slinking through in hand, from the consequences of his own perpetit—Record.

THE WHIG PARACHUTE FOR IRELAND.—Why should not the Roman Catholic priests officiate at religious functions of the majority of the Irish nation, to be paid by the State? Because they are Papists? This reason will never satisfy any but the bigots. Here they are not so strong as the Protestants of Ulster to be made expeditious of the State? Are they not so much entitled to repeat such liberality at the hands of a Protestant Government, as the Protestant Clergy of Ulster? Why should they not be included in the budget of a Catholic State? Upon the principle of all Ecclesiastical Establishments, they are to be paid by the State, and the principle of equity, have they not a claim to a share in the ecclesiastical revenues and endowments which have been alienated from their Church? Upon the ground of policy, do they not deserve to be considered as having done over to good behaviour by State pay and State patronage? To suppose the Whig Earl Ebrington, so planned the Holy Lord Almoner in a pamphlet which appeared a year or two ago? Lord Brougham avers the same opinion; it has been advanced by statements of different parties; Lord John Russell holds it to be a tempting temptation to be looked for when sent the Whigs succeed in their efforts, and Lord Brougham provided the revenues of the Irish Protestant bishops and clergy are not touched, whilst the proposal not touching of ecclesiastical revenues. It would be a stroke of policy, seems admitted on almost every hand. The opinion is gaining ground, that it is becoming a matter of more than expediency, of State economy.

The cry of the people is, that the Whigs are not to be trusted, and that the Protestants of Ulster to be made expeditious of the State? Are they not so much entitled to repeat such liberality at the hands of a Protestant Government, as the Protestant Clergy of Ulster? Why should they not be included in the budget of a Catholic State? Upon the principle of all Ecclesiastical Establishments, they are to be paid by the State, and the principle of equity, have they not a claim to a share in the ecclesiastical revenues and endowments which have been alienated from their Church? Upon the ground of policy, do they not deserve to be considered as having done over to good behaviour by State pay and State patronage? To suppose the Whig Earl Ebrington, so planned the Holy Lord Almoner in a pamphlet which appeared a year or two ago? Lord Brougham avers the same opinion; it has been advanced by statements of different parties; Lord John Russell holds it to be a tempting temptation to be looked for when sent the Whigs succeed in their efforts, and Lord Brougham provided the revenues of the Irish Protestant bishops and clergy are not touched, whilst the proposal not touching of ecclesiastical revenues. It would be a stroke of policy, seems admitted on almost every hand. The opinion is gaining ground, that it is becoming a matter of more than expediency, of State economy. The cry of the people is, that the Whigs are not to be trusted, and that the Protestants of Ulster to be made expeditious of the State? Are they not so much entitled to repeat such liberality at the hands of a Protestant Government, as the Protestant Clergy of Ulster? Why should they not be included in the budget of a Catholic State? Upon the principle of all Ecclesiastical Establishments, they are to be paid by the State, and the principle of equity, have they not a claim to a share in the ecclesiastical revenues and endowments which have been alienated from their Church? Upon the ground of policy, do they not deserve to be considered as having done over to good behaviour by State pay and State patronage? To suppose the Whig Earl Ebrington, so planned the Holy Lord Almoner in a pamphlet which appeared a year or two ago? Lord Brougham avers the same opinion; it has been advanced by statements of different parties; Lord John Russell holds it to be a tempting temptation to be looked for when sent the Whigs succeed in their efforts, and Lord Brougham provided the revenues of the Irish Protestant bishops and clergy are not touched, whilst the proposal not touching of ecclesiastical revenues. It would be a stroke of policy, seems admitted on almost every hand. The opinion is gaining ground, that it is becoming a matter of more than expediency, of State economy.

The cry of the people is, that the Whigs are not to be trusted, and that the Protestants of Ulster to be made expeditious of the State? Are they not so much entitled to repeat such liberality at the hands of a Protestant Government, as the Protestant Clergy of Ulster? Why should they not be included in the budget of a Catholic State? Upon the principle of all Ecclesiastical Establishments, they are to be paid by the State, and the principle of equity, have they not a claim to a share in the ecclesiastical revenues and endowments which have been alienated from their Church? Upon the ground of policy, do they not deserve to be considered as having done over to good behaviour by State pay and State patronage? To suppose the Whig Earl Ebrington, so planned the Holy Lord Almoner in a pamphlet which appeared a year or two ago? Lord Brougham avers the same opinion; it has been advanced by statements of different parties; Lord John Russell holds it to be a tempting temptation to be looked for when sent the Whigs succeed in their efforts, and Lord Brougham provided the revenues of the Irish Protestant bishops and clergy are not touched, whilst the proposal not touching of ecclesiastical revenues. It would be a stroke of policy, seems admitted on almost every hand. The opinion is gaining ground, that it is becoming a matter of more than expediency, of State economy. The cry of the people is, that the Whigs are not to be trusted, and that the Protestants of Ulster to be made expeditious of the State? Are they not so much entitled to repeat such liberality at the hands of a Protestant Government, as the Protestant Clergy of Ulster? Why should they not be included in the budget of a Catholic State? Upon the principle of all Ecclesiastical Establishments, they are to be paid by the State, and the principle of equity, have they not a claim to a share in the ecclesiastical revenues and endowments which have been alienated from their Church? Upon the ground of policy, do they not deserve to be considered as having done over to good behaviour by State pay and State patronage? To suppose the Whig Earl Ebrington, so planned the Holy Lord Almoner in a pamphlet which appeared a year or two ago? Lord Brougham avers the same opinion; it has been advanced by statements of different parties; Lord John Russell holds it to be a tempting temptation to be looked for when sent the Whigs succeed in their efforts, and Lord Brougham provided the revenues of the Irish Protestant bishops and clergy are not touched, whilst the proposal not touching of ecclesiastical revenues. It would be a stroke of policy, seems admitted on almost every hand. The opinion is gaining ground, that it is becoming a matter of more than expediency, of State economy.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 459. Vol. IX.]

SERAPPORE: THURSDAY, OCTOBER 19TH, 1848.

[Price 2 Cts. Per month, or 10 Rs. yearly if paid in advance.]

GENERAL POST OFFICE NOTICE.

THE Public are hereby informed, that the Government Overland Express, will be despatched from Serapoor, on Saturday, the 1st instant, on which day, letters will be received at this Office, under the rules published on the 4th of September, 1847.

L. I. H. GALT.

Chief Post Master General.
Fort William, Genl. Post Office, Oct. 11, 1848.

THE HINDOOSTAN has arrived with intelligence to the 6th of September. We have been peculiarly unfortunate as it regards the receipt of letters and papers. Though the vessel arrived at Calcutta at 11 A. M. on Tuesday, we did not receive a copy of the London Mail, and the Monthly Times, till twenty-four hours after the arrival; we have therefore been able to make but scanty extracts from them. It is however some consolation for our disappointment that the Mail is more barren than any of the eight which have preceded it this year. The Queen had purposed Parliament, taken the three royal children to Brighton, and visited the Coast of France with her royal spouse, where she was received with every demonstration of respect. The agitation in Ireland continues with little abatement, and O'Connell has published the outline of his Parliament, which is to consist of Three Hundred members and to meet in Dublin. Of course, the assembly of these representatives would be an overt act of treason, and bring the matter to a point. The disturbances created by Rebecca and her daughters in Wales have increased in violence, and it has been necessary to send two additional regiments into the country; but manufactures are in a more flourishing state than they have been in any previous month. This is in fact the sum of the intelligence brought by this mail.

We are happy to be able to submit full particulars of the progress of the Oriental Steamer from Southampton to Alexandria, and of the Hindostan from Suva to Calcutta, with which we have been kindly favoured by a friend who has arrived in her. The Hindostan has made a splendid passage of twenty-five days. We can scarcely expect the Bombay Express for some days to come.

The Oriental left Southampton at 11 A. M. on the 1st ultimo, with the following passengers:

For Malta.—Major Beekwith; Lieut. Crawford; and Esquire the Honourable Gilbert Elliot, of the 11th Brigade stationed at Corfu; Assistant Commissioner General Eyles; Pay Master Tatters; Messrs. Woodhouse (3), Barrow and Briggs, and Miss Norvell.

For Aden.—Mrs. Thomas (wife of the Superintendent of the Peninsular Company at this station) and infant.

For Bombay.—Lieut. Griffiths Jenkins, I. N.; Mr. Jenkins, two Misses Jenkins; Monsieur le Baron Lee; Monsieur Gruber, Prussian Consul to China; Mr. Ackland, Honourable Company's Secretary; Lieut. H. N. Robertson; Cadets Middleton, R. P. Berthow, A. Ayrton, Outram, Jackson, and Campbell.

For Ceylon.—Esquire Greville, H. M. 80th; J. G. Frith, Esq.; Mr. Holderness (late of the Ship Eton); Mrs. Holderness; Dr. Unwin and Mr. Dixon.

For Madras.—W. Glover, Esq.; Lieut. H. B. Symonds, H. M. 63d; Lieut. W. J. Cooke, 8th Native Infantry; Lieut. J. M. Beck, 1st European Light Infantry; Lieut. F. Tower, 45th Native Infantry; and Mrs. Tower.

For Calcutta.—Major General, Mrs. and Miss Biggs; Mrs. H. T. Balkes and child; Madame de Gaspar; Mrs. Robinson; Miss Jenkins; K. Deodas, Esq. C. S.; C. St. Quintin, Esq. C. S.; Capt. Larkins; Esquire Walcott, H. M. 6th; Messrs. C. G. Millman; H. M. Shand; A. Sym; D. T. Pryce; J. L. Benbow; W. Greenaway; A. Middleton; S. Guppy; G. Newman, G. F. Lockington, Brown, Bevers, Hamill, Frederick, Anderson, Bolton, P. Pitts, John Jenkins, John Stern and Geo. Farbury, Merchants; H. Bevan and F. Tucker, Esqrs. Writers; Cadets, Boyd, Colburn, Robinson, Siddabottom and Eckford, and Messrs. Hodges, Vining and Martin.

The Oriental arrived at Falmouth at 5 A. M. on the 2nd, took in the Mails (the last time she will have to call at that station) and left at 4 P. M. reaching Gibraltar on the 7th at 3 P. M., whence she took her departure at 7 P. M. with the unmentioned passengers:

For Malta.—Captain Tallock, H. M. 42nd Regiment and

For Bombay.—The Hon Mr. Cushing, Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States to China

Mr. Cushing had arrived at Gibraltar en route to Alexandria in the U. S. Steam Frigate Missouri, but that vessel unfortunately took fire on the evening of the 26th August, and was utterly destroyed. Her bulwarks and one paddle box were alone above water. The Missouri was the largest steam vessel in the U. S. Navy, measuring 2,800 tons, engines of above 500 horse power, and with a crew of 360 men, not one of whom was lost though so many as 70 were swimming in the Bay at one time. Mr. Cushing expects to meet at Bombay a Squadron of the U. S. Navy, with which he proceeds to China.

The Oriental arrived at Malta on the 12th at 5 P. M. and left the next day at 7 P. M., with the following additional passengers:

For Bombay.—Capt. S. Parr; Cadet Parr and A. Anderson, Esq.

For Ceylon.—W. Ackland, Esq. and Miss Ackland.

For Calcutta.—Mr. and Mrs. Coleman; Esquire Curry, H. M. 20th; Messrs. Fendley; Ashin; Michael; Merrill and Cadet Perich.

(Col. Carmichael, O. B. and his Lady had arrived in Malta by the Mail packet, where they proposed remaining until the departure of the next month's vessel, thence going to Bombay en route to join the Colonel's Regiment, the 4th Light Cavalry, now stationed at Numeraud.)

The Oriental reached Alexandria at 3 P. M. on the 17th, immediately disembarking her passengers who proceeded on to Cairo the same evening, arriving there early on the 19th, whence they started in detachments for Suva, arriving there on the 20th, 21st and 22d. The Mail packet from Bombay, not having arrived up to the afternoon of the 22nd, it was deemed advisable to put the whole of the English Mails (111 boxes) on board the Hindostan, and she left Suva at 5 P. M. of that day carrying all the Oriental's passengers (except Messrs. Cushing, Grubel, A. Anderson, Ackland, Ayrton, Parr, Capt. Parr, and the Baron Lee, who preferred waiting there) in lieu of going to Aden, in the Hindostan as did the others) besides the following:

For Madras.—Esquire John Balma, Esquire Griffiths, Luigi Gallo, Italian Missionaries, with five Assistants, &c.

For Calcutta.—H. Swetenham, Esq. C. S.; Mrs. Swetenham; F. H. Robinson, Esq. C. S.; Cadet Prior and Messrs. Patten and Clark.

The Hindostan passed close to Coowar twenty-four hours after leaving Suva, and anchored at Aden at 4 A. M. of the 28th. The whole of the Bombay mails were left there, as well as all those (some 20 boxes) which had come through France, such being unfortunately only marked, "India mail outward" without the actual destination, whereas those made up in London for the dispatch of the 31st August, and marked outside Calcutta, Madras and Ceylon, were allowed to be taken on in the Hindostan and so will reach those places several days earlier than the letters of the 8th ultimo.

The Hindostan left Aden at 9 P. M. of the 29th and at 10 A. M. of the 30th, spoke the H. C. Steamer Victoria from Bombay to Aden to convey from the latter place the crew of the Memnon, and on which vessel would be put the mails which had been left there. The Cleopatra with the August India mail only left Aden on the 23d, and so would not arrive at Suva until long after the Oriental had left Alexandria, thus leaving England for two months in succession without mails, and in the case of Madras for three, unless the opportunity afforded by the Hindostan had been generally taken advantage of.

She anchored at Point de Galle on the 10th October at 2 A. M. and left at 3 P. M. of the 10th, with the following passengers:

For Madras.—Mr. Jackson, Vet. Surg. 8th Madras Light Cavalry.

For Calcutta.—Sir Lawrence Peel; Sir J. P. Grant; W. P. Grant, Esq. and Mrs. W. P. Grant; Lieut. F. C. Kew, Bombay Army; M. Shaw, Esq. C. S.; J. S. Popoff, Esq.; J. F. D. Cameron, Esq.; H. Ball, Esq.; A. B. Scott, Esq.

She reached Madras at 7 A. M. on the 19th instant, and left again at 2 P. M. with three passengers, viz. Dr. W. C. Macleane, H. M. 40th Regiment; Lieut. H. F. Cus, H. M. 26th and Mr. J. Brinley, Esq.

She reached the Lower Platting Light at 10 A. M. on the 10th, anchoring at Diamond Harbour at 6 in the afternoon; leaving 9 A. M. on the 17th and finally arriving at Garden Reach at 11 o'clock.

The H. C. Steamer Admiral, having on board Col. Malcolm, with dispatches from China, arrived at Suva on the 16th September, and was to remain there for the Colonel's return, or farther orders from the Home Government. The P. and O. R. N. Co.'s new Steamer Lord William Bessborough, which left Southampton for Calcutta via the Cape, on the 24th August, arrived at Gibraltar on the 1st September, but being disappointed in obtaining coal there, went back to Cadix on the following day.

COOLY EMIGRATION.—Every week seems to turn up some fresh abuse in the system of Cooly emigration. Within the last five or six weeks, cases have been brought to light of coolies hawtreated under false pretences from the interior; of their illegal detention in Calcutta, and even of an attempt to force them on the public wharf to embark against their will for the Mauritius. Last week the Herbert published a letter, which we now republish at length, signed by Mr. Miller, who was witness to the jumping overboard of two coolies from a vessel lying off the Boanic Carenas, one of whom he succeeded in rescuing, while the other was picked up by a boat from the ship and carried back. Mr. Miller immediately addressed the Magistrate on the subject, and within four hours afterwards, two consables arrived with orders to make full enquiries on the subject. They proceeded on board to liberate all who were unwilling to proceed to the Mauritius, and between thirty and forty immediately left the ship. Of those who remained behind, and resolved to continue their voyage, several, if not all, complained grievously of the harsh treatment they had met with for twenty-five days on board the vessel. Many were diseased, some helpless and even delirious from fever.

It is not improbable that some of the representations made by the Coolies of the fraud and violence practised towards them are exaggerated, and that their reluctance to proceed to the Mauritius may arise from a desire to escape from those obligations which the acceptance of bounty money has imposed on them. But it is impossible to attribute all the complaints which are now so common, to misrepresentation, or to arrive at any other conclusion than that they betoken the rapid growth of abuses in the system of emigration. The opposition which was so strenuously and so effectively made to the Cooly trade, about five years ago, and which one of our contemporary has erroneously attributed to a pseudo-philanthropy, was countered by the constant exhibition of these scenes before the public eye. Every attempt to prevent them, and to introduce a degree of honesty and fair dealing into the system having signally failed, and the laws passed by Government having become a dead letter, the public voice called for the absolute prohibition of what was in every sense of the word a traffic in human beings. And the objections which were raised to the re-opening of the ports for emigration, were founded on a dread lest the revival of the system should be accompanied by a renewal of abuses. The experience of the last three months demonstrates that these apprehensions were by no means groundless. If the representations which have been made are correct, there is little difference between the system now in operation, and that which was suppressed as being incapable of cure. To all present appearance, the same scenes are re-enacted which roused public indignation both here and at home. We have the same infamous crimps let loose on Native society, the same nefarious exactions to inveigle men from the interior of the country, under false pretences; the same confinement of the Coolies in and about Calcutta, the same scenes of violence to procure their embarkation. Such is the present scene of things. It appears as if these abuses were altogether inseparable from the system of emigration. Indeed, when we were told that the crimps who had been sent through the country possibility of abuse. We know that no party will more deeply regret the inefficiency of the tremendous power of a penman, or writ, to prevent the abuses which are now forbidding all official men to interfere with the growing up, than those who originally framed the exercise of their vocation, we found no difficulty in giving credit to the report of those scenes of fraud and violence which have been so repeatedly exposed to view, and our only surprise is that they are not more frequent.

We think these gross abuses arise chiefly from the great change which has been made in the system originally proposed by Lord Stanley, and on the faith of which all objections to emigration were withdrawn. The public was clearly given to understand that the exportation of Coolies would be strictly a Government measure; that the Authorities at the Mauritius would appoint an Agent at the various ports in India, who should receive applications from all who were desirous of emigrating, and provide them with the means of proceeding to the Mauritius, where they would be at liberty to choose their own master. This plan has never been acted upon. On the contrary, from the time when the restrictions on emigration were removed, the whole business of providing Coolies has become quite as much a matter of private speculation, as it was formerly. It is Calcutta Agents who engage to supply Mauritius planters with a certain number of Coolies,—for a consideration. It is Duffadars, or Crimps, who contract with the Agents for Coolies, at so much a head, and proceed through the country beating up for volunteers, whom they bring down to Calcutta and lock up in receiving houses, till they can go through certain formalities, at a public office, and be shipped on board. There appears to be no difference between the two systems except that an officer has been appointed in Calcutta, with a Deputy, to act as the protector of the emigrants, and to prevent their becoming the victims of fraud and violence. The public has a right to demand that the plan proposed by Lord Stanley shall be forthwith acted upon; that the provision of Emigrants shall be entrusted to responsible officers of the state, instead of being left to private cupidity, and that an embargo be laid upon the exit of all further Coolies till the Government of the Mauritius have deputed an agent to Calcutta. Even then, there will, we fear, be but a slender check on abuse; the Cooly Agents will still endeavour to evade the law and wedge in their services, for the lucre which they may bring; but whatever degree of fair dealing and integrity may be secured by the appointment of an official Agent, the public has a right to demand.

We are confident the Government of Bengal will not sleep over the startling disclosures which have been made. We will not on such an occasion make any allusion to those in our native land who have succeeded in abolishing slavery through the British dominions and whose voice whenever it is heard, is heard in thunder which no public functionary can be deaf to. Their principles may be stigmatised by whatever term best suits the taste of their opponents,—as, cant, or hypocrisy, or false philanthropy,—but their power cannot be despised. They are watching with a jealous eye the progress of this experiment, prepared to extinguish it the moment it appears to take the form of a slave trade. We are perfectly confident that no such appeal to the moral power of England will be necessary. We know that the protestations for emigration were framed with the most honest and anxious desire to prevent the possibility of abuse. We know that no party will more deeply regret the inefficiency of the tremendous power of a penman, or writ, to prevent the abuses which are now forbidding all official men to interfere with the growing up, than those who originally framed the exercise of their vocation, we found no difficulty in giving credit to the report of those scenes of fraud and violence which have been so repeatedly exposed to view, and our only surprise is that they are not more frequent.

The present emigration also Government will not be wanting in the performance of the duty which it owes to its own character, to our national honour, and to the interests of the poor Coolies, but will institute the most searching enquiry and adopt the most stringent measures of reform. We are sure the matter may be left in the hands of the local Government with perfect confidence.

After the foregoing remarks were made in type, we received information that on the 20th of September, Mr. Fraser, the Assistant to the Protector of Coolies, went on board the Fair Robing, the vessel from which the Coolies were released, and mustering all the men, identified them with the registers, so that it was impossible for any individual to have been on board who had not been duly examined and passed at the office. At the same time he distinctly informed them that if they chose, they might return on shore immediately; he also requested that any among them who were unwilling to proceed to the Mauritius, should hold up their hands; but not a sign was made by any one of them. This fact, for which we have good authority, appears to exonerate the Protective Officers from blame in this matter. The vessel was afterwards detained in the river for nearly three weeks from the want of a Bannerman, and the men again doubtless subjected to very great, and, to them, intolerable inconvenience on board. There can be little doubt that if Mr. Fraser had visited the ship on the day in which the two men jumped overboard, and offered the Coolies their liberty, a very large number would instantly have availed themselves of the offer. We think that in all cases, in which a vessel is detained, three weeks after the Coolies had been shipped, within four miles of Calcutta, the Protector of Coolies, or his Deputy, should be required to visit it, once if not often, to look to the convenience of the Coolies, and particularly to see that an additional supply of provisions and of water has been sent on board to make up for that which had been consumed in the river.

THE PUNJAB.—After our last number had been sent to Press we received the Delhi Gazette, with the translation of the Purwana, sent nominally by the minor Rajah, Dhrupe Singh, to his agent at Ludhiana, to be communicated to the British Agent on the frontier of the Punjab. It contains an official account of the murder of the Rajah Sher Singh and his Minister Dhyana Singh, which will, we believe, be found generally correct. It is of course dictated by Heera Singh, the son of Dhyana Singh, in whom all power at Lahore was then concentrated; and it very naturally withholds all notice of the share which the latter took in the assassination of his sovereign. The amusing part of this state paper lies in the cart load of titles heaped on the deceased Dhyana Singh, which are we believe the longest on record in any oriental document. We were accustomed to consider two lines of titles rather redundant even for the Royal family of Delhi; but the style of Dhyana Singh actually extends to four lines, and comprises no fewer than thirty-four vocables. Also that such magnificent titles should have been insufficient to ward off the assassin's blow. But the document is not without instruction; it teaches us that the predominant party in the Punjab despises the interference of the British Government in its affairs. It directs the Agent to represent to our Resident that the state remained exactly in the same position in regard to the British Government as before the death of the late Rajah.

This fact is much to be grieved. The administration of Sher Singh was an established Government capable of maintaining its public relations with surrounding states. However distracted by internal jealousies, it presented no cause of immediate apprehension to its neighbours. But his assassination virtually breaks up the strong Government established by Runjeet Singh, and opens a wide field for the ambition of the various chiefs. It is likely therefore to be followed by a degree of anarchy which must end in subverting the independence of the Punjab. The tie which bound together the discordant assemblage of which the modern kingdom was composed, and which has become feebler and feebler since the master spirit departed, has now been completely broken. When the murder of Sher Singh and the triumph of Dhyana Singh was announced, it was hoped that a vigorous Government would be established in the Punjab, equal in strength and stability to that of Runjeet Singh. That hope lasted only twenty-four hours. It was laid in the grave of Dhyana Singh, who fell a victim to the wretch whom he had instigated to murder his sovereign. Then came the brief rule of Ajmer Singh and Lena Singh, the assassins, but they were soon out of, and Heera Singh, the pampered child of Dhyana Singh, became Mayor of the palace. Between him and his uncle Soochet Singh, the seeds of strife had long since been sown, and it was foreseen that one or the other must fall. But before their discord had come to a head, Heera Singh, as a Dilli Gazette extra informs us—has himself been murdered in an informal squabble with another Lena Singh about the disposal of Jergons and pens. The last accounts from Lahore represent that this Lena Singh had been joined by General Ventura, and that Golab Singh, the second brother of Dhyana Singh, the fighting brother to whom the management of the highland possessions of the family had been committed, was within a few miles of the Capital with an army of 25,000 men. He may possibly overcome all opposition, and sit down Lord of the Punjab; but treachery and assassination are the order of the day, and no man's head is secure. The authority of a fixed and respected Government is gone, and its place will be ill supplied by the wild rule of transient factions.

As long as the effects of this discord are confined to the Punjab, our Government can have little right to interfere. Faction may supplant faction without affecting us, and a plausible pretext for intermeddling in the affairs of the kingdom; but as soon as the security of our own provinces, or of those of our allies is disturbed by actual aggression, self preservation will render it imperative on us to put an end to a state of things incompatible with our own peace, and to convert a country which has ceased to be a peaceable neighbour. In the anarchy which now prevails in the Punjab, such a contingency is rare, sooner, it is later, to arise; and Lord Ellenborough is not the man to allow this golden opportunity to slip from him, though it may oblige him to enlarge those limits which nature had assigned to our empire on the 1st of Oct. 1848; and what he undertakes, he will carry through dauntlessly. If it were allowable to anticipate events, we would venture to predict that the extinction of the empire to the south of the Indus, in the hands of a man as well as the north, is reserved for his administration. Whether he will go further, and occupy Peshawar, and the north of the the north of the Khyber, is another question. In a physical sense, the natural limit of India proper is not the Indus, but the termination of the plain beyond it, where it is met by a range of mountains and by a new climate; and it may be questioned whether at a military point of view this river which runs through a plain is the most appropriate boundary of such an empire. Be that as it may, the Afghans, unless aided by a power superior to that which now rules at Lahore, will lose no time in recovering Peshawar, and extending their conquests to the Indus, and possibly a little to the east of it. Stirring scenes are yet before us in the north west and on the Indus, and our connection with Afghanistan, though wisely dissolved after our disasters, may yet be renewed under a different and more auspicious aspect of circumstances.

It is said, and we believe with much truth, that an Army of Observation to the extent of twenty or thirty thousand men is to be assembled immediately on the North West frontier; a precautionary measure which will meet with universal approbation. This assemblage of troops will of course diminish the Army of Exercise which was directed to concentrate in the neighbourhood of Agra, that is of Gwalior. It is manifest that the formation of these two armies has reference to the distracted state of the two Governments of Scindia and the Punjab. While that distraction continues, the armies cannot well be withdrawn. A state of things which requires the presence of so large a proportion of our force cannot however be allowed to remain; and Government will be obliged in its own defence to take military possession of those states if they are not speedily reduced to such a state of tranquillity as to render the continued assemblage of such a force independent.

INTERNAL CONDITION OF BENGAL.—We have been favoured with a printed copy of the depositions made before Mr. Dampier, the Superintendent of Police, and Capt. Marsh, the Assistant to the General Superintendent for the suppression of Thuggee, by sixteen professional robbers, who have been engaged in the various dacoities which have been perpetrated in this province during the last ten years. Greatly as the efficiency of our Police establishment has been questioned by those who have observed the course of circumstances, there are few, if any, prepared for the astounding disclosures made in these documents. The indistinguishable officers to whom we are indebted for these, appear to have gone the right way to work. Having obtained a clue to some cases of dacoity, and succeeded in snatching out the offenders, they pursued their researches with unrelaxed vigilance, till the whole system of dacoity, by which the peace and security of these Lower Provinces have been so long disturbed, was unfolded to them. They have obtained details of the most heinous robberies which have been committed, of the mode in which the gang was assembled, of the preliminary arrangements which were made, as well as the names, caste, age, and mode of the dacoits. Every department has been called upon to engage, as well as the names of his accomplices, and the public officers have thus obtained a knowledge of crimes which may rival the descriptions of the Robbers of the Highway. The plan of operation, assigns his post to each in every season to believe that the system they describe is at the present moment actually in operation in Bengal. The robberies they allude to are in many cases on record in the Magistrate's Courts; and the amount of property said by them to have been taken, corresponds substantially with that which was reported to the authorities. In one instance, moreover, two of the robbers who had been arrested at Decca, were ignorant of the fact that their accomplices had been seized and examined in Purneah; the independent depositions of the two parties agree so essentially with each other as to leave no doubt of their fidelity.

These robbers are nearly all of the Kachuck caste, and their profession is Dacoity, into the craft and mystery of which they are duly initiated. Some of them declare that the profession has been hereditary in their families for several generations, and that their fathers and grandfathers followed the trade before them; but it appears that the caste does not reject proselytes. Thus Antoo states that he was originally a Bhera by caste, but was converted into a Kachuck by one Joutens. Another man states that Ansum Mundul, or the head of a village, took him to his house, provided him with maintenance, and having converted him into a Kachuck, taught him dacoity—and to some purpose, for this convert was of the forty engaged in the well known dacoity at Guriah near Calcutta. It would seem therefore that the heads of the tribe are at all times ready to admit into the fraternity any likely youth who may fall in their way, and any vagabond who may be willing to take up the profession. But though it appears that the Kachucks, when not engaged in any enterprise, may occasionally turn their hands to the plough, for a temporary subsistence, yet they never give up the trade. Dhurroop was asked whether he had ever known a person who, from disgust or the fear of God, had ever abandoned dacoity, and he replied, "I have never seen such a person; whoever once enters the profession can never abandon it. If an able bodied man were to forsake his profession, he would be turned out of his caste, and none of them would eat, drink or smoke with him, or give him his daughter in marriage. One man Jhoomrak, a Harne, stated that not a single able bodied youth of his caste was to be found who did not commit robbery; that it was the profession of their ancestors, and was designed to be that of their children; and that every orphan in the tribe was cherished by his chiefs and taught dacoity. "In my caste," says he, "if there were honest persons; that is, men not robbers, they would be turned out; indeed they would leave us of their own accord, for fear of their lives." "Are all the Chowkedars of your tribe?"—there are enough of them—"thieves?" "All the Chowkedars of the Harne cast are robbers and dacoits."

This Kachuck tribe seems to be widely distributed over the country. Apparently not a district is free from its presence. It is perhaps owing to this cause that the robbers pass with such facility from one district to another. In the depositions we find many of them who, after a little repose, had "turned their thoughts on dacoity," engaged in the course of the same year in several atrocious robberies, in different and distant districts. Their organization seems to be very complete. They serve not but under the directions of their chief or Jemadar, who on hearing of a favourable opportunity, collects his gang, lays down the plan of operation, assigns his post to each man, provides the weapons and leads his hand to the attack. They have a secret language of their own, by which they are enabled to recognize each other, and mutually to communicate their thoughts even in a crowd, without any fear of detection. Every boy who is initiated into the mysteries of the profession is taught this language, and, if naturally sharp, acquires it by the age of 10 or 12; if dull, not before 20.

The mode in which they obtain intelligence is thus described by one of the number: "Two or three of us taking some Gold Mohurs, go to the villages and ask if there is any person who wants to purchase Gold Mohurs, and who will give them change for such, and of course the wealthy men are pointed out to the spies. They go to their houses, produce the Gold Mohurs, and a price is asked. We find out who has cash and where it is by that, but the Mohurs are never disposed of, as our men always demand a higher price than the others are willing to give." At other times intelligence is received from some of their own tribes or from others who hope to share in the plunder; as it is a general rule that the informer is entitled to half the booty. After an expedition has been determined on, the first duty is to render the Gods propitious by acts of worship. "Generally speaking only Deotics worship Kales for their own purposes, and for the benefit of their trade." After the Gods have been propitiated, the deotics proceed to the house they intend to rob, not in strength, but amidst the glare of torches, and the shouts of Joy Joy Kales, Victory to Kales, and overcoming all resistance, carry off whatever they can discover.

Each Sirdar has his own banker, with whom the stolen property is deposited, and who turns the jewels and ornaments into money. The property is subsequently distributed, with a distinct reservation for the families and children of the tribe, whom it appears to be a matter of honour as well as policy to support from the general funds derived from depredations. But we must not omit to mention that it is customary to give the Zemindar on whose lands the deotics reside, a share of the booty, because he is aware of their secrets. Thus Deola states: "When we go on our expeditions, we have to pay the Zemindar on whose lands we reside, the Gomat, Mundul and Chowkedar, to keep them quiet." Kooniah deposes that in a dacoity in which he was concerned, not more than eighteen months ago, 240 Rupees were given to Juroo Sirdar, their landlord. He states further, that 2400 Rs. were given to Sumbroo Roy, the Zemindar of Hurungto, and 500 Rs. to Haniff, the Chowkedar, "because the Zemindar, on whose lands we resided was aware of our profession and always received intimation of our movements, and desired this Chowkedar to take care of our children during our absence." He also alludes to another sum of 1000 Rs. paid by the Deotics to their landlord. These statements strengthen the suspicions which have been for some time gaining ground that many Zemindars have a more distinct and guilty knowledge of these transactions than is generally supposed.

It is well known that the villains who committed so daring a robbery in the Durrumbah in Calcutta about eighteen months ago, started from the house of a rich and highly respectable native across the water. And whenever our Police shall have been brought up to the requisite state of efficiency, we believe that disclosures will be made of the participation in these villainous practices by many a man who now sustains a fair character before his superiors.

Such is the system of robbery which has long been practised in Bengal, and is now we believe for the first time dragged to light. The periodical journals have occasionally lifted up the veil, and made known the occurrence of robberies, but seldom without the dread of a prosecution. Our own experience teaches us that it is safer to accuse a Governor General of incapacity than to affirm of any district that it is not in a state of perfect order. But while every thing has appeared smooth and tranquil on the surface of society, and in official reports, a large and well-organized confederacy has been preying on the vitals of the country. Every district has been occupied by a well-disciplined fraternity of deotics, whose depredations have never for a moment been checked by any dread of our police. The Chiefs have been continually on the watch for opportunities of plunder; and the subordinates ready to join them in their professional labours on the first call. So admirably have their plans been laid, and so completely do they appear to have over-awed the honest portion of the community, that they have been able always to reckon on half a dozen instances of success for one of failure. Seldom have they fallen into the hands of the Magistrates; and when they have been captured and brought to trial, and sentenced to imprisonment, no effort has been made to turn their conviction to account by eliciting a knowledge of their system or associates. Indeed, we question whether the disclosures made in the documents we refer to, will not be quite as new to the Magisterial authorities, as to the public. In one instance a captured deotic distinctly gave up the names of his associates to the Session Judge and to the Magistrate, but not the slightest attention was paid to the information. In another instance, we find the most important intelligence of the plans of the deotics disclosed by a man who had been two years in jail, and whom Capt. Marsh caused to be brought out and interrogated before him. We find one of the Kechuks declaring that his tribe has committed from 150 to 200 highway robberies in Bengal. It has long been suspected that nothing could be more fallacious than to consider the Magisterial reports as affording any real knowledge of the statistics of crime; and the confession of these men fully confirms this fact. The reason is plain; no man in his senses will reveal the fact of a robbery. The papers before us state that in one case a Native was robbed of 20,000 Rs. and yet never made his name known, because, said the deotic, having suffered so severely from us, he was not willing to suffer a second loss from the Darogah.

It is no imputation on the official character of the Magistrates that this ramified system of robbery should have been so long in full operation without their having obtained the smallest knowledge of it. The fault rests with our system. The Magisterial reports not only overworked, but are for the most part stationary, except at a particular season of the year, when they travel about surrounded by their Amlas, and collect little or no information but what those Amlas think it safe for them to hear. They have no intercourse with the people; and it is the great object of their Native officers to prevent the acquisition of any knowledge which shall interfere with their ease or their profits. What the country has long required is a body of officers whose whole business should consist in ferreting out crime, and making themselves acquainted with the actual condition of the various classes of society, their hopes and fears; their position and their prospects. The papers now under review show to our shame how lamentably ignorant we are of the real state of the country seventy years after we have had absolute possession of it. The officers of the Thuggee department, have in fact given Government more accurate information of the true condition of the people, in a single year or two, than has been acquired during half a century from its legal officers. We have already trespassed on the patience of the reader to an extent which nothing but the importance of the subject will palliate; and have therefore only room to add that Government cannot have too wisely than by strengthening this department of the public service, and establishing an efficient Police, the business of which shall be to trace out crime, and to prevent it by vigilance. This is by far the most difficult of all the functions of administration. To try the culprit, and determine his guilt by the laws of evidence, and his punishment by the statute book, is an easy task. Yet to this matter has the attention of Government hitherto been chiefly directed, while the duty of discovering crimes and tracing the culprits through every disguise and handing him up to the Courts, has been left to ill paid, inefficient and venal Darogahs.

THE REPLY OF THE MISSIONARIES OF THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—We have been favoured with a copy of the "Reply of the Calcutta District Committee of the London Missionary Society to the Report of the Sub-Committee of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel's Diocesan Committee, on the subject of Bishop Corrie's Pledge of non-interference as given in 1893," with a very pressing request that we would republish its contents in this journal. The request appeared to us rather hard upon a weekly journal which is obliged to suit so great a variety of tastes in the British selections; it has room to give; but we resolved notwithstanding to make an effort to meet the wishes of our friends. We set one-third of it in type, but found that if given in a single number, it would demand five entire pages. This quantity of space we found it impossible to devote to a single paper. At the same time we felt that the interest of its publication entirely defeated, if it was given in three successive weekly issues. We have resolved therefore, next week, to give a faithful and condensed statement of all the facts and arguments which it contains, placing them in juxtaposition with the statements they are intended to meet, and reprinting the documents which are necessary to illustrate the subject. We are confident that a greater number will be disposed to read our abstract than could be induced to wade through fifteen columns of closely printed matter, and that of a controversial character.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12.

—The Epistemon of this morning has given a statement of the dates of the dispatch of the overland Mail every month from London, and of its arrival in Calcutta, during the past and present year. The memorandum will be found useful, and we have therefore transmitted it. The next of the 9th of September last year did not reach Calcutta before the 23d of October; but we had not then the Hindustan to bring it.

—Mr. C. B. Greenleaf, who has just received the office of Comptroller, we are told by the Epistemon.

ness, has presented a cup as "a well merited tribute" to Mr. Van Lint for the ability and integrity with which he performed the duty of interpreter to the Governor's Court for twenty years, and as a testimony of affectionate regard and esteem for his private character.

—The Harbours states on the authority of a letter from Ferropore of the 30th ultimo, that Dhalp Singh, who had been placed upon the throne by Dhyas Singh, had taken himself off together with the celebrated diamond, and that it was supposed he had sought refuge in our provinces.—Sawm Mull, the ruler of Mooltan, has been murdered, doubtless for aspiring to independence.—Tej Singh, the nephew of Khosli Singh, has left the province of Peshawar to take care of itself, and retired to Lahore, for which Dost Mahomed will not be ungrateful to him.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13.

—The Delhi Gazette states, that a serious disturbance had broken out at Khosroo, about 25 miles to the west of Bhekramattee, where an old Rana Bhantannat, had collected a body of 3000 matchlock men and taken possession of a strong hill fort, ejecting the young Rana, who is the brother and the guardian of the young prince. Major Fenton, with a detachment of his brigade, was going to bring the insurgents to reason, and there can be little doubt that he will easily ally this tempest in a trice.

—The Delhi Gazette has taken up the proposal made by the Rev. Dr. Wolf to proceed to Bokhara in person, and attempt the rescue of Col. Stoddard and Captain Conolly, which is warmly supported by a correspondent of that Journal, who assumes the name of Fidèle. The first question is, whether the prisoners are alive or not. A detailed account of their capture was sent by Col. Shell to our Government; but certain Jews of Bokhara have since declared that they were not put to death, and this has created a hope of their existence; but it is after all very faint. Supposing however that they are happily yet alive, it is much to be doubted whether Dr. Wolf would be successful in his attempts to procure their liberation. The King of Bokhara is now one of the greatest potentates in Central Asia. He has made acquisitions on the right hand and the left within the last three or four years, which have doubled the extent of his kingdom. There has not been so powerful a monarch in those regions since the establishment of the Doornase empire. His pride and haughtiness will of course increase with his power; and it is much to be questioned whether he would listen to any proposal for the release of his victims. Still the attempt ought to be made, if there be any one willing to undertake it; and we are certain that if Dr. Wolf were to come out here at once, instead of wasting his time in proposals at home, the whole sum required for his journey to Bokhara would be raised in a fortnight, and if necessary, double the sum.

—The Harbours states, that all the troops which were under orders for Soinde, have been directed to stand fast at Ferropore till further orders.

—Another daring robbery has been committed in Calcutta in the shop of a native jeweller in Waterloo street, who was robbed a day or two ago of property to the amount of two thousand Rupees. The Tunnel which runs to the east of Old Court House Street, affords great convenience for the commission of these robberies, which too are now frequent. The vigilance of the Chowkedars is not at fault on this occasion. Could we not get the agency of the Thug Department into play in Calcutta for a month?—Nothing seems to escape its vigilance.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14.

—The Star of this morning states that the only Regiment ordered for Soinde, which is to proceed, had immediately to that province, is the 11th M. 13th Light Infantry, which will go down by water, preparatory to embarking for England. We have however heard from more than one quarter that the Regiment does not return home before 1845.

—The military residents at Simlah have testified their gratitude to General Avistable for his hospitable hospitality to the officers going to and returning from Afghanistan, and in respect at which General Churchill presided, and proposed at the General's banquets, in a long and eloquent speech. Sir Jasper Nicolls was not present.

—The Harbours states that Government has resolved on putting a strong force on the banks of the Suez. The number is stated by our contemporary at 30,000, but the Star brings it within smaller limits. The assemblage of so large a force cannot of course fail to create a heavy drain on the Egyptian War. We should not indeed be surprised to find that the unsettled state of things in the North West, produced a manifest effect on the public funds, more especially on the few per cents, which have risen to a premium of not less than eight per cent, since we evacuated Afghanistan. We question whether this description of Securities has ever stood so high.

—The Governor General paid a visit yesterday afternoon to the Ellenborough and the Seringapatam; the former vessel are told by the Harbours was by his Lordship called his golden; we have extracted from our contemporary a brief notice of this interesting event.

—The report that the Half batta order is to be entirely done away and for ever abolished, gains ground. It is affirmed in the most positive manner that the Court of Directors have actually agreed to the measure, and that the good news will be made public on the arrival of the next mail.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 16.

—Another scene in the Punjab Tragedy has just been unfolded. A Delhi Gazette received this morning announces that Lena Singh Majettoo, was sitting with Hera Singh, making arrangements about the disposal of jagheers and offices, when a dispute arose between them which ended in the murder of Hera Singh. Lena Singh is said to have been joined by General Ventura, and Golab Singh, the fighting hero, is reported to be within forty miles of Lahore with an army of 25,000 men.

—The Scamphor announces the arrival of a whole batch of favourite vessels from England, the Rama, the Scamphor, the Owens Glenmore, and the Northumberland. It is also reported that fourteen vessels were outside waiting for Pilots. The Hindostan steamer was expected this day. It would be no common misfortune if she were detained a day or two at the Sand Heads for a Pilot.

—Great fears were entertained that the September Mail for Bombay would be delayed at Sum or Aden for want of a Steamer, in consequence of the loss of the Monsoon. We are happy therefore to learn from the Bombay Courier of the 3d, that a native boat from Aden had brought intelligence of the arrival of the Albion Steamer from China, at that port on the 7th. She proceeded immediately to Suat, which she was likely to reach about the 14th, quite in time for the Mail. The Hindostan was at Aden on the 2d of September; and we may now have a race between her and that first rate Steamer, the Albion. It will be decided, possibly, before our paper goes to press whether the Mail, by the Hindostan direct, will reach Calcutta, in less time than the express reaches it from Bombay when brought to that port by the fastest of the Steamers.

—We are happy to find in the Englishman of this morning, a confirmation of the statement, which has been some time current, that the lamentable loss of life in the two European Regiments which proceeded up the river last year, through the spreading of the crazy country boats, had induced the Court of Directors to order the construction of iron vessels, for the transportation of troops. This measure is as much one of economy as of humanity, for the cost of the new vessels will not long remain uncovered by the pecuniary saving which will be effected by the safe conveyance of European troops.

—The papers announce the death of Major Craigie, Deputy Adjutant General of the Army, at Dispers, at the age of 44, deeply and sincerely regretted. It will be no easy matter to supply his place in the office.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 17.

—The Bishop of Calcutta embarked on one of the River Steamers this morning on his visitation to the various stations at this Presidency, in company with the Rev. J. H. Pratt, Domestic Chaplain, Dr. Bell, Surgeon, and Lieut. Philpotts, assistant officer.

—Bombay papers to the 4th reached Calcutta yesterday; they were consequently twelve days on the road. The number of papers and covers despatched by the Electric on the 3d of October was 64,973; namely, letters 51,490, and covers 10,483. The Calcutta regular post of the 21st arrived in time for the steamer. The September Mail was expected to arrive early at Bombay if sent on by the Albion Steamer figure; and late, if sent by the slow coach of the Chopatra. The Hindostan had not arrived yesterday evening.

—The Bombay Standard's Gazette states, that the latest article of severity which has arrived there is a valuable breakfast article sent by her Majesty Queen Victoria to Shere Singh. The cups and snuffers must remain in deposit till the last scene of the tragedy has closed, and it is determined to whom the Punjab belongs.

—A number of the Bunder gang, who, according to the Gentleman's Gazette, had embarked in the most extensive conspiracy ever known in India, have been brought to condign punishment. Eight individuals have been sentenced to transportation as receivers of stolen property. This result is calculated to dissuade those who have been expecting the most astonishing discoveries and the most extensive retribution; but the Gentleman's Gazette, which has been sounding the alarm in the ears of the Bombay public, official, and non-official of these crimes against the public interests of society, takes great credit to himself for the conviction. Yet strange to say, the prosecution of this great offence has not been taken up by Government, but left to private individuals. The expense, it is said, has been actually defrayed from private subscriptions.

—The Star, just arrived from the Mauritius, brings up Mr. Anderson, the Protector of Coolies, on a special Mission to the Right Honourable the Governor General, as well as the Secretary of the Governor of that Island. What have they come for? We can suppose no more appropriate errand than that of making arrangements to carry the provisions of the original plan into effect, by establishing a Government Agent here.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 18.

—The Hindostan anchored off Calcutta yesterday at 10 A.M. She has thus delivered her letters and papers in forty days and eighteen hours.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following sums for the Friend of India:

	Rs.	Sh.	P.
Rev. C. J. Quarterly,	to Sept. 1844,	20	0
Lieut. General Sir J. Nicolls,	to Dec. 1843,	24	0
R. P. O'Hanlon, Esq.,	to March, 1844,	20	0
H. L. Ingalls,	to Sept. 1844,	13	4
Rev. B. N. Hildell, Esq.,	to Oct. 1844,	40	0
Rev. W. Porter,	to Sept. 1844,	10	0
J. P. Maresca, Esq.,	do.	20	0
Capt. W. Kennedy,	do.	20	0
W. Driver, Esq.,	do.	20	0
J. W. Jacob, Esq.,	to April, 1844,	20	0

LATEST EUROPEAN INTELLIGENCE.

[FROM THE MONTHLY TIMES, SEPTEMBER 6.]

GENERAL SUMMARY.

Her Majesty prorogued Parliament in person on the 4th of August. The royal speech will be found included in our Parliamentary Intelligence. It contains on the most important subjects of Discouraging the past secessions; presiding, as each document almost invariably does, on the continuance of a "friendly disposition" on the part of foreign powers; dwells finally on the recent religious schisms in the church of Scotland; expresses deep concern for the moral and political progress of the nation; states that the royal authority is in the relative union; and announces a "firm determination" to maintain it inviolate. It also speaks resolutely with regard to the disturbances in Wales, judiciously observing, as a rider to that amais ymawig, that inquiry has been directed to be made into the causes of the late disturbances, and the maintenance of public property. "Whosoever, we say, no reference whatever is made in this royal address to any affairs connected with the Mint.

The Murders of Chamberlain and Mr. Nichol having deferred, until the next season, their contemplated investigation of the affairs of Seinde, that topic will re-appear in Parliament; but on this subject, as in our last number, we maintain that Seinde will be made a tributary province, although the title of public opinion is already given to the present condition. It must be stated, however, that according to Lord Brougham, it is Mr. Nichol's intention to advocate the compulsion of Seinde "on account of its necessity," and the ex-lord chancellor argues, from the information disclosed to him by the honorable member for Seinde, that this country, if well managed, would furnish a large source of wheat export.

In our last issue we gave the results of the debate on the Optum Calculation Question. For the information of those who still cherish the expectation of its revival, we have collected the following questions and answers with the permission of the option upon the subject, we have made several extracts from journals advocating various political tenets, commenting upon the principle of the option. It will be seen that the question has been discussed by some of the ablest writers of the day, and that some sanguine officers still entertain a distant hope that by agitation and parliamentary action, a more liberal grant may be secured; but in our humble opinion, all the successful rhetoric that will be put forth, will be of no avail. The will of the Government. These (he it said) who, in the interval, prefer the proverbial bird in the hand to the two in the bush, will find in another column the precise terms, and a very large power of amendment, which will be a very large power, as limited by the Government will.

We regret to say that there has been an absence in the spirit of the Welsh non-resistance. The Hobbess and her rebel band still continue their midnight depredations, and although emissaries from London have paid official visits to the distressed country, to investigate the causes of these riotous proceedings, and to remedy the evils complained of, discontent and violence are still rampant in the land, and it will require no ordinary measures and prompt healing of indispensible grievances to restore tranquillity.

[illegible]

LATEST INTELLIGENCE

France—On advice from France up to the instant, state that the Queen's visit will attract public attention. "The meeting will be the Journal des Debats" of the two most powerful Sovereigns in the world ought not to be regarded as a vain ceremony. It is more, it is great not, it is a benefit, because it is a new step given to the security of the world." A very general opinion prevailed at Paris that Mr. Magasin would pay a visit to the British empire, and give a personal message to the king, and that the queen would visit France. It is even asserted that arrangements are making for a significant exchange in Grand Gallery at Versailles which will exceed in magnificence anything of the kind yet seen.

WALLEN.—The Welsh people for the destruction of the toll-gates rocks unnumbered, and the poet— "Rabboni" has addressed a letter to a paper in Wales, breathing defiance of the civil and military authorities, and alleging that the population of Carmarthen, Cardigan, and Pembrokeshire are with him "to a man."

IRELAND.—The Royal Association continue their frantic agitation, and "the riot" still flows in petty abundance; but it is manifest that some of the hands of the hydra have been crushed by the unflinching course pursued by the Govern-

—Father Mathew has taken leave of the Metropolitan, and meditates a visit to Norwich, Birmingham, and Liverpool previous to his return to Ireland. The Countess of Glara took the pledge before he left London.

—We regret to announce the total loss of the Quers steamer, off Shokham Island, on the 1st instant. She was one of the Bristol Steam Navigation Company's boats, and allied between that port and Dublin. Only one life was lost.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Her Majesty proceeded in state, on the 34th whirled, along the Royal line of route, from Buckingham Palace to the House of Parliament, for the purpose of closing the session in person. The occasion was one of the most brilliant and ceremonious ever celebrated up to now, and the most important and distinguished upon Her Majesty and the members of her royal and ducal subjects who thronged the Park and streets leading to the entrance of the House of Commons. The Royal carriage, drawn by six horses, was preceded by the Lord Chamberlain in his sedan chair, and followed by the Lord Steward in his sedan chair. New and expensive arrangements had been made for the ceremony; the principal change being, that instead of the usual throne, a spacious and magnificent canopy, supported by four pillars, covered the entire breadth of the carriage, and advancing considerably into the body of the House; covered with a beautiful Axminster carpet. Three massive chairs, splendidly inlaid with gold and precious stones, were placed on the raised platform; the middle chair being reserved for the monarch, on a pedestal about half a foot high, the right hand one surmounted at the back with a crown, and the Prince of Wales's throne; the third surmounting the left side of the canopy, and the third surmounting each side of the canopy being the throne for

[illegible]

Her Majesty having rebed, entered the House of Lords, and having taken her seat on the throne, directed the House of Commons to be summoned to the bar.

Shortly after the Members of the Lower House, headed by the Speaker, appeared at the bar. The Right Honourable Gentleman addressed her Majesty on the labours of the session, after which the Royal assent was given to the remaining bills.

Her Majesty then, having received the copy of the speech from the Lord Chancellor, read that document as follows:—

"The state of public business enables me to close."

"I thank you for the measures you have adopted."

for enabling me to give full effect to the several notions which I have concluded with Foreign powers.

I have given my cordial assent to the Bill which you presented to me for increasing the means of Spiritual Instruction in populous parishes, by making a portion of the revenues of the Church available for the endowment of additional Minis-

“I confidently trust that the wise and benevolent intentions of the Legislature will be aided by the zeal and liberality of my subjects—and that this provision will thus be made for public worship and for Pastoral superintendence in many districts of the country.

"A view with satisfaction the passing of the Act removing doubts respecting the jurisdiction of the Church of Scotland in the admission of ministers, and for securing to the people and to the courts of the Church the full exercise of their respective rights.

"It is my earnest hope that this measure will tend to restore religious peace in Scotland, and avert the dangers which have threatened a Sacred Constitution of the utmost importance to the happiness and welfare of that part of my dominions."

"I continue to receive from all Foreign Powers assurances of their friendly disposition, and of their earnest desire for the maintenance of Peace."

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons."

" My Lords and Gentlemen,
 " In some districts of Wales the public peace has been interrupted by lawless combinations and disturbances, unconnected with political causes. I have adopted the measures which I deemed best calculated for the repression of outrage, and for the detection and punishment of the offenders."

"I have at the same time directed an inquiry to be made into the circumstances which have led to the insubordination and violence in a part of the country usually distinguished for good order and willing obedience to the law.

"I have observed with the deepest concern the persevering efforts which are made to stir up discontent and disaffection among my subjects in Ireland, and to excite them to demand a Repeal of the Legislative Union.

"It has been, and ever will be, my earnest desire to administer the government of that country in a spirit of strict justice and impartiality, and to co-operate with parliament in effecting such amendments in the existing laws as may tend to improve the social condition and to develop the natural resources of Ireland."

"From a deep conviction that the Legislative Union is not less essential to the attainment of these objects than to the strength and stability of the Empire, it is my firm determination, with your support, and under the blessing of Divine Providence, to maintain inviolate that great bond of connexion between the two countries.

"I have to come from requiring any additional powers for the counteraction of designs hostile to the peace and welfare of my dominions, as well as from my unwillingness to distrust the efficacy of the ordinary laws, as from my reliance on the good sense and patriotism of my people, and on the solemn declarations of Parliament in support of the same."

"I feel assured that those of my faithful subjects who have influence and authority in Ireland will discourage, to the utmost of their power, a system of pernicious agitation, which disturbs the industry and retards the improvement of that country, and excites feelings of mutual distrust and animosity between different classes of my people."

COL. HODDART AND CAPT. CONOLLY.

A correspondent from Constantinople, in a letter dated the 7th of August, observes:—"We have hitherto refrained from repeating any re-parts of the probable existence of Colonel Stoddard and Captain Conolly in Bokhara. We have now, however, received from several sources particulars of so authentic a nature, that we feel ourselves authorised in calling upon the government to take some steps to ascertain whether they are still alive; and should such appear to be the case, to endeavour to liberate them from their present most unhappy position. The first reports, contrary to the opinion of the Government, were forwarded by Colonel Shail of their execution, were received simultaneously through Persia and India, from some unchants of Muehbi and from a Jew trader in Afghanistan. Since these reports reached us, we were told that the situation of Indians, now in their way to the Head, or pilgrimage of Mecca, have confirmed them; and a person upon whose veracity we place the most implicit reliance, has stated that he received a declaration to this effect, a short time ago, from a well informed native of Bokhara, at Dushanoo. It must be remembered that both the officers in question are government servants, and that their diffidence and dangers arise in the discharge of their duty. We can, therefore, scarcely doubt but that every exertion will be made to procure the release. Should government, however, decline the necessary steps, we trust, from the British army, and more particularly the Indian army, of which Captain Arthur Conolly was one of the most able and enlightened officers, will not be slow to avail itself of subscription, and in tendering, if required, a multi-tum sum for their ransom."

THE DOWAGER LADY ELLENBOROUGH.

We have to record the demise of the above venerable lady, who expired at her mansion in Stratford-place, on the evening of the 16th August, after a protracted illness, her ladyship having never entirely recovered from her serious attack last autumn. The deceased was widow of the late Lord Ellenborough, the learned Lord chief justice of the King's Bench, and daughter of the late Mr. George Robinson, of the Temple, who married Lord Ellenborough, 17th October, 1780, who died in December, 1818, at which time she had survived her husband nearly 30 years. By her marriage with Lord Ellenborough, she had thirteen children, nine of whom are living, namely, Lord Ellenborough, governor-general of India; the Right Hon. Charles E. Law, M. P. recorder of the City of London; the Hon. Henry married to Lieutenant Colonel Dymally, &c.; the Hon. Elizabeth, Lady Colchester; the Hon. Anne, Lady Colville; the Hon. Henry Law; the Hon. Frederick, married to Mr. Henry James Hamden; the Hon. and Mr. Tenny Law, chancellor of the diocese of Wells; and the Hon. Frances, Lady Dallas. The Hon. and Lady Colville, Lord and Lady Colchester, Lord and Lady Colville, Sir Robert and Lady Dallas, and several other families of rank are placed in mourning by the death of her ladyship.

A donation of 5000*l.* from A. Horton, Esq., M. P. has been received at the India Office to the funds of the Free Church of Scotland.

Letters and papers from Bombay 10th of June, received, viz. Salmon, were delivered in London on the 7th of Aug. and Salmon having been received on the 2nd of Aug.

The steamer Oriental left Falmouth on the 2nd of Sept. with mails for Malacca and Alexandria.

The Postmaster General's Steam Navigation Company's vessel Bentley, left Southampton for India on the 24th of August; she takes out between sixty and seventy passengers. Previous to leaving the river Thames a distinguished party was entertained on board the Bentley.

The steamer Express has left Liverpool for Singapore.

As we stated in our last the Proseur has returned from Russia. Her performance during the voyage was most satisfactory.

The station for all packets is to be immediately removed from Falmouth to Southampton.

The very Rev. Dr. Olliv, V. G. of Calcutta, has arrived in Cork.

Capt. Douglas, of the 49th Madras M. I., has been admitted to bail. Mr. Wigram Money is one of the securities.

Six young Jewish missionaries from Stonyhurst, have sailed in the Princess for Calcutta.

At a meeting of the Privy Council, held on the 23d Aug. a seal for the island of Hong Kong executed by Mr. B. Wyon, Chief Engraver of Her Majesty's Seal, was approved of.

Capt. Harris, late ambassador to the Court of Russia, Stanzas Abyssinia, had lately an audience of her Majesty. The captain brought with him a maul from the Royal stud, and various other presents for her Britannic Majesty. The maul has been conveyed to the Royal Mews.

A Limerick paragraph, "By the death of Col. Justin Smith, his sister, Mrs. Peter O'Brien, of Perry-square, in this city, derives a large accession of property."

Dr. O'Connell, of the Bengal Medical Service, is to have the first vacancy which may occur in the office of Deputy Asst.-surgeon to the East India Company.

Asst. Col. C. Comberford Smith, C. B., has been nominated the Court of Directors, by giving their favourable consideration to his recent claim of the 4th Regt. Lord's 10th Regt. of the 10th recommendation of which under his command, volunteered their services for Afghanistan.

The Press announces that M. Legrande, the ambassador to China will leave for that destination on the 18th of October next, accompanied by M. de Fiericci, his first secretary, M. d'Harcourt, and six other attendants, a physician, and several commercial detachments.

M. J. S. Boncompagni has published a proposition and plan of "The British and Foreign Institute," for facilitating personal intercourse between the student classes of all countries, and rendering the literary circles of the metropolis more easily accessible to visitors from the continent, the colonies, and the provinces.

At the meeting of the present month's steamer to Mysore, and the present month's steamer to Mysore, in Mr. Farbury, author of the "Hand-book for India and Egypt," the second edition of his work, we understand, it is soon likely to be exhausted. In addition to the fact of the commercial enterprise, an object of Mr. Farbury in again visiting India is, we hear, the collection of materials for a more elaborate work on India, which he has long had in preparation.

Dr. Stook, Judge of the Admiralty Court in Ireland, has awarded 5,000*l.* to the sailors of the Princess Castle Indragum. In this case, a number of pilots and their assistants from the Princess Castle on the 10th of March last, three miles N. W. of Long Head, off the coast of Clare. On board the ship also was a complete derrick, being totally abandoned. The pilots succeeded in bringing the ship into the Shannon, and anchored her off Killbake, about three miles from the Head; the crew of the vessel, however, were taken to the very rocks, where they slowly moored her. The owners of the ship and cargo appeared and claimed their property, and admitted the value of the ship and cargo to be 5,000*l.* The sum of 1000*l.* for the service of the pilots, which, being refused by them, the case came on for hearing.

The bark Scorcher, Capt. Arthur, from Bombay, which on the 22d of August, took ground on the hard seaward of the Lifford, nearly opposite to the Regent's Canal Basin, whilst proceeding up the river in tow of a steamer for the London Docks, having been lighted during the day, floated off, after being twelve hours in her dangerous position. She was immediately towed to the small basin. The Scorcher has sustained a very great damage; her back is apparently broken.

The inhabitants of Denbigh, St. Mary, Wiltshire, have notified their deep regret for the death of the gallant son of their late noble ancestor, who was recently killed in battle in Seinde, after displaying the most determined courage, by placing in the church of St. Oswald, of Salisbury, on which is inscribed the family arms, with the following inscription:

"To the memory of Major Wm. Henry Jackson, of the 13th Regt. Bombay N. I., son of the late Regt. Gilbert Jackson, D.D. Rector of this parish, and Seinde, his wife, who was the daughter of Messrs. near Hyderabad, in Seinde, after exhibiting the most consummate bravery, fell covered with glory, on the 17th of February, 1843. Aged 30."

This tablet was erected by the voluntary contributions of the parishioners of his native village, in admiration of his heroic courage as a British Officer, as a mark of respect to his brave family, and to perpetuate to posterity his many and rare virtues.

Two hundred and thirty non-resident members of the University Convention are despatched a memorial to the Vice-Chancellor, deprecating the treatment of Dr. Pusey, in censuring his views without setting forth his reasons fully. The first signers are those of Lord Dunsingh, the Right Hon. Courtenay, M. P. W. E. Gladstone (President of the Board of Trade), and Mr. Justice Colclough. Dr. Wylie refuses to receive the memorial, partly rebuking the memorialists for an attempt to overawe the Governor of the University.

The Oxford Chronicle says:—"We are informed that the Government have been despatching 1,000 of the clergy, to a prison against Traitorism, has been withdrawn from circulation, in consequence of the earnest remonstrances of the clergy."

No account of the Indian Mail at the time of going to press.

Notice has been given that the Mail for India will be faster by being despatched on the first day of each month, unless it shall be Sunday, in which case the Mail will be despatched the day preceding.

His Majesty's ships Endeavour and Terror have just arrived from a voyage of discovery.

Though the Paris papers seem to think that the Queen of England will visit the Continent, the Emperor in this country is that her Majesty will embark at Treport for Brighton early to-morrow morning. It is believed the Queen has received from the King of the French and his reputed Consort a promise to visit London next year. We give below some further account of the festivities at Chateau d'Eu.

The Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, have just arrived in England.

The King of Hanover has left England for the Continent.

It is said an action for Crim. Con. has been commenced by Lord W. Paget against the Earl of Carlisle.

The Chairman and some of the Directors of the East India Company are about to proceed to India, to inspect a steamer which has been especially built for the navigation of the Lake; she draws only 18 and 22 inches of water.

A public meeting is to be held to-morrow at the Crown and Anchor Tavern for the purpose of taking measures for the immediate dispatch of the Rev. Mr. Woolf to Bokhara.—London Mail.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S VISIT TO THE "MILNER."

Yesterday afternoon the Governor General, desiring as he said, to "see his Godson," paid a visit to the Milner, (Capt. Arthur's ship), which was put off by the tide, and was on board to meet him. His Lordship arrived a little after four o'clock, and was received with a salute from the guns of the vessel, which was then in the water, being manned with six men a crew as we could ever wish to see on board a merchantman. After inspecting the accommodations of this noble vessel, which was almost every part of a ship—the great tank was conducted to the cabin, where a collation was laid out for the benefit of the assembled guests. The Lordship was graciously pleased with everything he saw, and about six o'clock, left the Milner to visit the Stratford. Everything was in excellent condition; and the only thing we desired was the interior of the vessel, which was in the hands of the Governor General's Godson.—Harkers, October 14.

RELATIVE IMPORTANCE OF ENLIGHTENMENT.

To the Editor of the Bangal Harpur.

DEAR SIR,—There being some inaccuracies, arising in some from want of more correct information, in the report of the 11th shipment of Enlightenment, in the Mauritius, in the prevention of which, having taken an active part on the occasion referred to, I herewith submit a correct statement of the transaction.

On Saturday, the 30th ultimo, at about 10 P. M., whilst at the Botanical Gardens, where I had been engaged in the study of the plants, I was drawn to a human body, rapidly floating down with the stream, in the middle of the river, and observing an attempt made to take the person from an apparent water grave, I questioned the boatman of some dingy engaged at the spot, as to why they did not proceed to rescue, and was told, that there would be no good in doing so, as the body was that of a sooty, who had voluntarily jumped overboard from a ship, which was pointed out to me, as one of the Enlightenment, to rescue the handiwork of an emigration to the Mauritius. On hearing this, I immediately, after a little time unavailingly lost, got into my own dingy, and proceeded to his rescue. This, I was informed, was the first time, by the crew of a sailing smack, before I could gain admittance, by this time, floated down to nearly opposite the Superintendent's house. The man, or rather the body, was almost dead, and on my arrival at the spot crawled into my boat, and fell plugging to my feet, stating, that he had been in the water, and had been for protection, of which he was in great want. The conduct of the man of the ship appeared heartless in the extreme; besides natives, some Europeans on board were looking on quite unconcernedly, and it is a fact, that it was only when I had nearly the body, that the ship's boat was seen proceeding for the purpose of picking it up, or claiming the body from me, which was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing himself overboard; but was on this occasion speedily rescued by the boatman. The ship's dingy. The man, however, was taken up reluctantly and evidently against his inclination, for he drew down three successive times, when the boat was reported to him by the boatman. On offering him my protection, and on I had time to step into my pinnace, another crew was seen throwing by Mr. Lantieri, that the thanks of the Meeting be voted to Major Vaplar for his able conduct in the chair.—Carried, con.

The Meeting then broke up, having first expressed its sense of God, in providing funds for the erection of a Church at the station, and solicited His blessing on the proceedings of the morning.

(Signed) T. E. A. NARAYAN, Chairman.

(Copy of Purawan addressed by Maharajah Duleep Singh, to Yar Mahomed.)

On the 2nd of August, of the year 1,000, Sir, Duleep Singh and Ajeet Singh, Sindhuvalah, went to announce the muster of their troops to Maharajah Shere Singh of Lahore, who was in the garden of Shah Behal. The Sirs were accompanied by a number of Sikhs and other troops, that being the day of the Sunerat, (or the 1st day of the Hindu Solar month), and the same being kept as a holiday at the durbar, the Maharajah had gone to the garden to amuse himself on the river, and to enjoy the fresh air. As my elder brother (Akhar Sahab) was sitting in the Garden, the Sirs Ajeet Singh and Lena Singh presented themselves, and offered a case, containing a rifle, to the Maharajah. While engaged in examining the rifle Ajeet Singh fired a pistol, and was killed at him. My elder brother was wounded in the face by the pistol being discharged so close to him; and the fourteen men instantly struck off his head. Several Sirs were killed at the same time, amongst them Sindar Shood Singh, Gunga Singh of the Tohuk-khanah, &c. Afterward Sir Lena Singh, Sindhuvalah, went accidentally to the garden of Sam-sahib, and being there, Bahadur Sufjan Jung, situated near the garden of Shah Behal, and there killed the son of my elder brother, Purab Singh, who was celebrating the day there and his brother, and his brother, him. They then proceeded towards Lahore, and on the road met the Oojai-dee Jang Neerul-Mulde-Mukde-Rib-i-Bergal-Khan-ee-Khan-Wasser-i-Assam-Dahlan-Nah-i-Sultant-Uosuna-Kheib-Khaw-Dowit-i-Koehra-Mookhtear-Kul Rajah Kalan Bahadur Rajah Rajan Singh-dee, (the eldest, the prince, the high-prince, the descent to the throne, the great Sirs, the great Wazir, the deputy of the Kingdom, the chief well-wisher, the wealthy, Master of all, the ruler of the Kingdom, the Sirs) who was coming along in his buggy. The Sirs said to him that there was a new amongst the Sirs in the garden, that Maharajah Shere Singh had been killed, and that he was going to go alone to the garden, and that it would be better to go back and make arrangements about the succession. The Rajah, ignorant of the whole end of the Sirs, and not knowing the Sirs, said to the Sirs, they proceeded as far as the Kuressees gate, when the faithful Ajeet Singh took out a pistol and killed the Sirs Rajah Dilyan Singh. The Rajah called out, oh, Sindar what a fool deed, and laid his hand on his sword. By this time some followers of Ajeet Singh also fired pistols at Dilyan Singh who fell from his horse; his body was taken to the place where guns were aimed, and here one of his attendants, named Ahmed Khan, was also killed. The Sirs then proceeded towards the residence regarding the succession; on proceeding into the city they approached the house of Khaseed-Khan Rajah Soobet Singh, who was reviewing such of his troops as he had, and accompanied by the following Chiefs, viz. Oojai-dee Jang Neerul-Mulde-Assad-odd-Dowah Rajah Heerah Singh Bahadur, Sindhuvalah, &c. &c. &c. Mulde-Rao Kuressees Singh, Dewah Singh and Prithee Singh and others. These persons were discussing the subject of Maharajah Shere Singh's death, and having heard of the murder of Dilyan Singh, rose from their seats and proceeded to the Boodhoo Barradurres, and there communicated the facts to the troops of the Khakas. The troops were loud in their murmurs, and threatened they would not sit down to a meal until they had served the faithful Sirs in the same manner as had been done to the Maharajah and his son. The city was accordingly besieged towards the morning, and having opened a heavy fire, they destroyed the walls of the city. The city was taken, and the heads of the Sirs, the faithful Ajeet Singh, were taken to Providence (See Kal Poonkeehi) the Sirs have succeeded in establishing peace and quiet in the town. Proclamations have been issued to all Sirs and others of every description commanding them in their government and situations. (The Purawan then goes on to impress on the Valued the necessity of representing to the Sirs the political Agent, and we presume) that the State remained in exactly the same position in regard to the British Government as before the death of His Highness Maharajah Shere Singh).—Daily Gazette, Oct. 7.

ALL commercial intercourse between this State and Afghanistan having been prohibited by the Government, in consequence of his apprehensions that the tribes would be incited to go on to Kabul, he found that a great diminution in his revenue had accrued from the non-payment of custom of a duty. He therefore authorized the departure of a Khaka, which was an easily stored with goods, that the amount of duty paid on its arrival at Kabul was 10,000 Rupees. Dost Mahomed Khan has previously frequently written to the Maharajah, and the British Government, and the two of the chief merchants at Bokhara, and both very rich, enquiring why they had not brought their goods to the markets of Kabul as they formerly used to do; they could only replied, they were apprehensive that Dost Mahomed might seize their property, as his character was well known. —Daily Gazette, Oct. 7.

TWO Savars, of the Barrikayee tribe, reached Kabul lately, and brought information that Yar Mahomed Khan had sent to the King of Persia to send troops to occupy the town, and been answered in reply by the King's Minister, that no troops would be sent to occupy the town, and that an army would soon be before Herat. The Minister desired also, that the stores of grain might be laid in by Yar Mahomed for the use of the army. He intimated at the same time, that an army would shortly be directed to move on Kandahar, in conformity with the agreement subsisting between the King of Persia and the Sirs, and that the Sirs should still continue his trade in slaves, selling all the women and children he can seize, to the Uzbegs, taking horses for exchange.—Ibid.

THE Sirs have addressed letters to the Ruler of Kabul, informing him that the King of Persia had treated them with great consideration during the time they were banished from Kandahar, and had supported them with much kindness for some time, and had agreed with him that, whenever they should regain possession of the city of Kandahar, they would again permit an Exayr from Persia to reside there with an escort of one thousand Persians, who would do nothing but the English and the Sirs with a due degree of awe. They had also agreed to pay the expenses of the mission, but as their own income was limited, they were not able to do so. They were of the Khan's dominions were so near to Kandahar, and as he would profit by the presence of this force (which is represented as being near at hand) he ought to contribute towards the expenses from his revenues. "You, (the Khan,) formerly paid tribute to the English, how much better to contribute to the maintenance of the mission, and the Persian mission, instead of paying to the Kafirs." —Ibid.

THE French General Cavalier Court having taken leave of the Maharajah, has left Lahore for France; he reached Ferepore on the 27th Sept., and thence proceeds to Loodianah, where he is expected on the 31st instant. It is supposed he intends proceeding to Simla, to seek an interview with the Lieutenant Governor, in order to see the families of Maharajah Lena Singh and Ajeet Singh and put them to death at their place of residence, about 8 miles from Unnaur, executed by the British Government. They may, however, be a son of Lena Singh's aged about 9 years, and on his being taken before Maharajah Heerah Singh, he had pity on him, ordered that he should not be put to death, but allowed him 8 Rupees a day for his subsistence. An evident coolness, amounting to open enmity, has arisen between Maharajah Heerah Singh and Maharajah Soobet Singh, his uncle, and it is impossible to say how it may end. The troops of the Sirs Lena Singh and Ajeet Singh have appointed the kinsmen of these Chiefs to command them, and the villages of Ajeet Singh's dependents, who have been recently plundered, have taken refuge with these troops, and as their numbers are considerable, some 6 or 7000, it is thought probable they may excite some opposition; far to use the words of the Persian poet, "the man, who is careless of his life, can perform whatever he chooses to undertake." —Ibid.

LOODIANAH. Colonel Richmond, Agent to the Governor General, arrived here on the 24th Sept. from Simla, and Mr. Gressall proceeded to Simla. The Agent has issued stringent orders to prevent any armed parties from opposing the Sutlege either to or from the Lahore territories. The whole of his native subordinates are already placed with the conduct of Col. Richmond and of Lieut. Cunningham. Two of three news were sent to Lahore by the Agent to gather all the information they can get. Kishen Chund, Valued of the Maharajah Duleep Singh, arrived suddenly from Lahore by dusk; but the object of his visit is not known. He is supposed, however, to be the bearer of a letter from the Maharajah, communicating the latest events, and soliciting assistance from the British Government. Maharajah Sherevalah, who had placed himself under the safeguard of his Governor, Vikram Singh, having heard of the order to arrest him, escaped from his place of concealment, and retreated to reaching Khatri in the province of Pateelwalah. The savars sent to seize him having heard of his escape followed him to Khatri and secured his person. The numbers of the place, however, turned out to resist his capture and rescued him, saying, they would not permit him to be taken a prisoner without the permission of the Rajah of Pateelwalah.—Daily Gazette, Oct. 7.

LAHORE. We this morning received the following letter from our active news-writer at Loodianah, and lose no time in making the contents known, as we believe their authenticity may be relied on. Who can doubt the absolute necessity of interference in the affairs of a frontier nation in such a state of utter disorganization as that now presented in the Punjab?

LOODIANAH, 26th October.—A Hunkrah has this moment arrived from Lahore, in 24 hours, with information that Maharajah Heerah Singh and Sirs Lena Singh, were coming together and consulting about some appointing to jagirs and situations. Their conversation was, however, soon converted into a dispute and ended in a personal encounter, in which Hunkrah Heerah Singh fell before the Sirs. Maharajah Heerah Singh is 20 years from Lahore, with an army of 25,000 men. He will, it is supposed, immediately proceed to Lahore and attack Lena Singh. The latter and General Ventura have concluded, at least, such is the report of an attendant of General Court, who arrived here the day before yesterday.—Daily Gazette, Baroda, Oct. 8.

The following table showing the dates of arrival of the Overland Mail since January 1843, will be found useful to parties who may wish to make references to Europe intelligently.

LEFT.
1843—4th January,	25th February, 3 P. M.
4th February,	23rd March, India Star.
4th March,	17th April.
6th April,	20th May, 10 A. M.
6th May,	21st June.
6th June,	17th July, 1 P. M.
6th July,	10th August.
4th August,	18th Sept., night 17th.
6th September,	23rd October, 4 A. M.
4th October,	23rd Nov., past 11 A. M.
4th November,	21st Dec., 10 A. P. M.
6th December,	24th Jan., 1844, 3 A. M.
1843—6th January,	22nd Feb., 6 A. M.
6th February,	24th March, 11 A. M.
4th March,	22nd April, 7 A. M.
6th April,	22nd May, 6 A. M.
6th May,	14th June, 4 P. M.
6th June,	17th July, 1 past 6 P. M.
6th July,	20th Aug., 10 A. M.
4th August,	10th Sept., 1 past 4 P. M.

—Eng. Oct. 13.

EUROPE.

RELIGION.

THE BAPTIST UNION.—The annual report of the Baptist Union for 1842 contains very full and excellent statistics of the various Societies, as we are not aware whether any other denominations publish a view of its state and operations equally complete. It appears from this report that the number of Baptist churches in Ireland is 1,677, of which, 1,416 have reported their numbers to the Union, and they comprise 31,278 members; 1,141 report Sunday-school containing 148,077 children. The reported rise in members during the last year was 9,639, in 1,474 churches.—Fet.

WICKLIFFITON.

ROYAL COXINGDON OF FINE ARTS.—The Commissioners have issued a requisition to artists, to send in specimens of franco painting, for the decoration of the new Houses of Parliament. They have also issued similar invitations for arabesque paintings and heraldic decorations for the enrichment of panels, flowers, &c., in colour and gold, as well as for designs for ornamental metal work for servers, railings, gates, &c., and, lastly, for ornamental pavement.

THE LATE LORD STURDEHAM.—Mr. Poulett Sturdeham, in the memoirs of his brother, Lord Sturdeham, just published, tells an agreeable anecdote of his childhood, which is well worth recording. He was at Brighton in 1803, with his brothers and sisters, and attracted the notice of George III., always fond of pretty children. "The King became so partial to 'Master Lord S.' that he only came four years to the palace on a duty visit to him, often watched at the window for his arrival, ran down himself to open the door to let him in, and carried him about in his arms, to show all that could amuse the child in the very ordinary lodgings then occupied by the royal party, and so easily the Majesties laid out the children's tails, which their Majesties frequently gave for the amusement of their young courtiers. On one occasion, the King being on the pier-head, about to embark in the royal yacht upon one of his sailing trips, and having the child in his arms, he turned round to Mr. Pitt, who was in attendance at his elbow, having probably hurried down from London for an audience on important business, and enquired, "Is not this my boy, Pitt?" "Yes, your Majesty," said Mr. Pitt; "take him in your arms; I shaming child, but he?" "Then forming the action to the word, he made the stiff and solemn protest, 'wheugh down, as he seemed to be, with the child upon his back, and the pretty boy, and carry him some minutes in his arms, until strange and usual to some bunnies. The circumstance, though trivial, had so comical an effect, from the awkwardness and apparent reluctance with which the formal Minister performed his compelled part of nurse, as to make an impression on the writer, who stood by, though but seven years old himself, which time has never effaced."—Ibid.

THE ABSTRACTIST AND THEIR SERVANTS.—The Carl Gazette says: "The stewards and housekeepers of the assembly often make large fortunes at the expense of their masters. We have known one, and even 50 per cent. offered to them by their tradesmen, as a remuneration for getting the customs of their employers. How can this be except by guile?" We know of several such persons, and have seen some of the squires, now rarely (if not more select) than those given in the Illustration. The lady of a great number (sixteen) of servants, and she said that the whole of the satisfactory were the dearest of her servants. "I cannot offer you any remuneration," said she; "but I dare say you are not dissatisfied and changeable in the service, and I am sure you are not."—Ibid.

DEMOCRACY OF ADOLESCENCE.—Those of our readers who have any curiosity to see the house in which Dr. Watts passed a large part of his life, and the apartment which was studied and made his study, or the opportunity will be lost. Alms House is about to be broken up, and will be brought to the hammer preparatory to demolition on Wednesday next. In the mean time, however, by any person who chooses to jump into a Stoke Newington omnibus for that purpose. The building is to be removed in order to make way for another entrance into Almsy park. Cemetery. The new entrance will exactly meet the elegant little chapel of the cemetery, and will much enhance the beautiful appearance of these spacious grounds.—Ibid.

We are sorry to have to announce the death of Mr. John Bacon Harvey Moore, of Rother-park, Yorkshire, who died on the 12th inst., after a lingering illness, in the seventy-second year of his age. He was one of the earliest and most extensive Greek translators of the present generation, and his exertions in the interesting countries of the East, he returned with a mind replete with classical information, and a taste for every thing that was dignified and grand. His travels, and his long residence abroad, his literary and his beautiful theories on the arts of Troy. On his return with Chelvalier and others, he entered keenly into the Trojan controversy, and became one of the most successful supporters of Homer, and the most successful of the Troas. His two dissertations are familiar to every classical scholar, and went as far towards the settlement of that matter as any of the productions of the period. He published also translations from the minor Greek poets, and was the author of articles in the Quarterly Review, and of pamphlets called forth by the passing events of the day.—Record.

DR. PREYER, Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford, is the second son of the late Hon. Philip Bourne (who assumed the name of Preyer), by Lady Louisa Spencer, eldest daughter of Robert, Earl of Harborough, and widow of Sir Thomas Care, Bart. Dr. Preyer's eldest brother Philip Preyer, Esq. of Fussy, M. P. for Berkshire, died on the 10th inst. Dr. Preyer was born in June, 1800, and married Jan. 12, 1828, Maria Catherine, youngest daughter of the late John Howard Barker, Esq. M. P. Fussy died May 20, 1839, leaving no only daughter. Dr. Preyer is now at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1818, and took a first class degree in Hebraica, Hebrew Term, 1822; he was afterwards elected a Fellow of Oriel College. In 1828, Dr. Preyer was appointed Regius Professor of Hebrew in that University, of which office is attached a salary in the Cathedral Church of Christ, Oxford. In 1824, Dr. Preyer obtained the Professorship of Hebrew in that University, of which office is attached a salary in the Cathedral Church of Christ, Oxford. The family of Preyer, is of great antiquity, having been settled at Fussy, in the county of Oxford, prior to the Conquest, of which it is held by courtesy, under a grant by Canute, a fact mentioned both by Camden and Fuller. The house is that of an oak, of a dark brown colour, and by its production the mansion was discovered in the reign of James II.—Pat.

COMPLETE SUFFRAGE.—In the annual report of the National Complete Suffrage Union, recently published, we find it stated, that the postage correspondence during the year cost nearly 50*l.* At this rate, the Union must have circulated about 10,000 letters and papers, no doubt all bearing more or less on the subject of the proposed reform. What ever difference of opinion may prevail amongst reformers as to the justice or expediency of Complete Suffrage, it must be interesting to know that so much has been done by the Union in this department alone, to bring its principles and objects under public notice.—Ibid.

DELEGATION TO THE KING OF THE BELGIANS.—On Wednesday, July 5, a deputation, consisting of the following gentlemen, had the honour of an interview with King Leopold, to present the address adopted at the late Peace Convention, "to the Government of the civilized world." On the occasion of inserting a clause in international treaties, binding the parties to refer disputes to the arbitration of one or more friendly Powers.—Levi's Tupper, Esq. of New York; Thomas Erskine, Esq. of London; and Rev. John Woodcock, of Tordiff, a Chapel; and Rev. John Johnson, Secretary of the Peace Society. The deputation was introduced by Dr. Bowdler, and most graciously received by His Majesty. The King expressed in strong terms his approval of the principle of arbitration; and referred to the satisfaction which he had experienced in reading the memorial, and in some cases where the danger of war had appeared. He spoke of a continental war as above all things to be deprecated, and regarded it as all but impossible so long as Austria, France, and England were united in force of power. His Majesty also referred to the threatened war in the east of Europe, and to the dispute between France and the United States respecting the payment of a claim, and in instances in which the remembrance and friendly interference of other Powers had led to the most satisfactory results.—Ibid.

RECKONED ROYAL VISIT.—According to an unauthenticated report, Queen Victoria, with her Consort, will come to Berlin in the autumn, to return the King's visit. It is said that Berlin would be as animated in autumn as it is now still in summer.—Hamburg Paper, July 18.

ARRIVAL OF THE MISSIONARY SHIP CAMDEN.—Our readers will be gratified to hear of the arrival of this vessel from the South Sea Islands, having on board, as passengers, the Rev. Thomas Heath, with a native child, and a native teacher from the Sandwich; a son and daughter of the Rev. A. Bennett; one son and two daughters of the Rev. C. Burr; and one son and two daughters of the Rev. J. Kneass; and a son of the Rev. W. Day; also Miss Morgan (the wife of the respondent missionary), and her two children. The Camden came up the river last night, and is now lying at the London-dock.—Fal.

THE ST. REMIGIUS.—Lancashire is about, it is said, to become "the principal military depot of the kingdom." Government has just ordered a contract for the erection of barracks at Manchester, at a cost of 100,000*l.* for the accommodation of 2,000 men. The barracks are to be built on a large scale, and in progress of erection at Ashton, Bury, and other towns; and when the whole are completed, it is said there will be permanent accommodation in Lancashire for twenty thousand men. It is supposed that the Government is in contemplation to select barracks sufficient for the accommodation of a large army at Malton, in Yorkshire. Leeds is on the outskirts of the manufacturing and the troops stationed there are supposed to be too much out of the way to be of much use in the prompt suppression of any rebellion or insurrection, which might chance to break out in the country. Halifax is nearly in the heart of the manufacturing population of Yorkshire, and it will be there, most probably, where the barracks for the accommodation of the Yorkshire army will be erected.—Leeds Times.

CONSERVATIVE APPREHENSIONS.—The apparently endless debates in the House of Commons on the state of Ireland increase more and more. It has been impossible to believe that which is still proceeding, without an unexampled flow of some impending calamity. This feeling arises from a recollection of most mischievous speeches made by Protestant "Conservatives"; and from a consciousness of their probable influence on the minds of the Government. The Tractarians in the House of Commons, all alike in this debate with the strongest talk; and all take the side of Pusey. This will surprise no one who remembers the long time he has spent in the British Magazine as the chief Tractarian, a letter was published which seriously attacked the position of the Anglican and Protestant Churches in Ireland. In agreement with this, we find Mr. Monckton Milnes and Mr. Stansfeld, warmly asserting the necessity of opening diplomatic relations with the Pope, paying the priests, &c. With these things in Captain Hall's, director of the Conservative efforts of Westminster, who apparently having little difference between a Protestantism and a Romanism, and who divides the quarrel in a rule of three:—If 800,000 Protestants have a Church endowed with 200,000*l.* a year, what endowment could 800,000 of Catholics have? The chief object of interest, however, is not so much the failure of these (newly juvenile) legislators, as the tone of the leader of the Government, amidst this distracting and intestine dissension. The speech of Sir Robert Peel on Tuesday evening was far from being of a satisfactory character.

The *P*eer had to deal with two recommendations, which had been urged upon him in the course of the debate: the first, to share the revenues of the Irish Church between the Protestant clergy and the Roman priests; the second, to leave the Church as it is, but to make the Protestants pay a grant from the Consolidated Fund. With the first of these recommendations he dealt sagaciously and practically; but upon the second he maintained an ominous silence.

The shoring the revenues of the Established Church between the Protestant clergy and the Roman priests, was well shown by Sir Robert Peel to be a project fraught with insuperable difficulties. He said he would have a smaller, or even an equal share! That would be instantly complained of as grossly unjust, between the one part, and 8,000,000 on the other. Was the division to be governed by the numerical strength of the Churches?—That would give 80,000*l.* per annum to the Protestant Church; 80,000*l.* to the Roman Church; and 80,000*l.* to the Protestant Church. What, then, was to be done with the Churches, which in many cases would be deprived of their present incumbents? The Protestant bishops, too, had seats in the House of Peers; the Roman bishops had none; how were the same privileges? These and many other practical difficulties made the idea of a partition quite preposterous.

We would have been glad, however, if Sir R. Peel had not rested his opposition to this proposal so exclusively on "practical difficulties."

To the other plan, however, that of taking the priests into pay, Sir Robert Peel did not oppose the same objection. Nay, he avoided even giving a negative opinion;—protestants think that it would not be fitting for him to make any declaration on such a subject, "in the course of an incidental debate."

It is impossible to observe this faint resistance, without feeling a degree of apprehension that there is a lurking disposition in favour of the proposition. Yet it seems strange, that so sagacious a man in worldly matters, does not discern at least as many "difficulties" in this path as in the other.

Can any thing be better than the proposition of the Dissenters and Methodists, which recently proved so salutary to the Government, in the matter of the educational clause, would be less vigorously maintained against a proposition to pay the salaries of the 300,000*l.* a year for the payment of a set of priests, nominated, taxed, and governed by an Italian bishop? Or can any thing be more absurd than a proposal to be strengthened by the admission of all the Protestant part of the Church of England? In fact, would not the dissent which would be felt by the latter party, constituting, as it does, no small portion of the "Conservative" body, render the downfall of the Administration absolutely certain? Is it possible that so sagacious a politician as Sir R. Peel can overlook these stringent difficulties?

We fear, however, that on such questions as these, some hot and earnest Protestant can even discern the truth in the fact that the Government is of any just understanding of the immense difference between the religion of the Brevary and the faith of the Scriptures that leaves men, successful on all other points, to be into the most fearful errors on this.—Record, July 19.

IRELAND.—On Friday, a debate was brought on in the House of Lords by the Marquess of Clanricarde's motion relating to the recent dismissal of Mr. Stansfeld in Ireland. The Marquess of Clanricarde spoke at great length upon the general question of Irish affairs, and maintained that the existing agitation was attributable to their institution, as a Legislature, was the material and real wants and exigencies of the people.

"Supposing this important point gained, the people of this country, and the friends of free institutions throughout the world, would regard with feelings of the liveliest interest the tide of immigration of free settlers, which would then rapidly flow into Texas. Such a population, carrying with them the blessings of freedom, civilization, and religion—rapidly increasing in number, and as rapidly developing the resources of the country—would prove not only an immense commercial value to this country, but to the world at large; and in advancing his own property and greatness, Texas would thus essentially promote the freedom and happiness of millions now held in bondage, and add to the general progress and welfare of mankind.

It must, however, be confessed, that while the discussion of this question is going on in Texas, an influential portion of the slaveholders of the United States—many of whose names are in the columns of this paper—now of but nominal value—are making a renewed, vigorous, and desperate struggle, in union with that part of the people of Texas whose interests lie in the same direction, to have it annexed to the United States, either by legislative enactment, or by the more summary mode of treaty.

In reference to this point, the Committee feel to be their duty to apprise your readers how far have come to their knowledge which efforts should be for serious apprehension that unless the British Government speedily interpose with Texas, either directly or through Mexico, to relieve its people from the overwhelming pressure of the present difficulties, the event so much dreaded may occur. The Committee presume not to suggest to your readers how the influence of this country should be exerted; but they would fail in the duties imposed on them by the anti-slavery body of this country, as well as in the discharge of their official duties, if they failed to do the utmost of the oppressed, if they did not respectfully and strongly urge an immediate consideration of this weighty subject, in all its important bearings, on her Majesty's Government, believing that they have it in their power to aid Texas, in freeing itself from the curse of a system which has blighted its prosperity, and raised its prospects, and establishing a state of things which would secure its future strength and prosperity.

How do British philanthropists stand alone in these views. At last American writers are embracing the representatives of the sacred cause of human freedom from various parts of the world, the contemplated annexation of Texas to the United States was viewed as an evil, the greatest conceivable, which ought to be strenuously resisted by all the friends of justice and freedom throughout the world; and that the feeling now prevailing in this country in favour of free institutions, ought to be encouraged by the British Government and people as a great duty they owe to mankind. In accordance with these views, and the increasing feeling of the people of this country on the subject, the friends of your locality is earnestly invoked to its early consideration; and the Committee would cherish the expectation, that it may result in such efforts as may be deemed proper by the honour of her Majesty's Government, and the same nation has acquired by its past efforts for the suppression of slavery and the slave-trade.

"I have the honour to be, Sir, very respectfully,
"O. befall of the Committee, my lord,
"Your lordship's obedient humble servant,
(Signed) "T. R. CLARKE."
"27, New Broad-street, July 1843."
URACRY, JOHN S.—Yesterday evening, about eight o'clock, a meteoric stone fell in the commune of Blauepierre, about a league from this city. After a violent explosion, repeated three or four times, resembling a discharge of artillery, a whistling and howling noise was heard, which excited much anxiety and alarm among the villagers. It lasted seven points, is of a long irregular shape, and covered with black crust peculiar to these bodies, which is broken off only in one place, where the internal grey matter of the stone appears.—Record.

GOVERNMENT NOTIFICATIONS.

20th September, 1843.
Lieutenant G. Parker, 74th Regt. N. I., to be second in Command of the 74th Regiment Native Infantry Battalion.
Captain C. E. Mills, 68th Regt. N. I., to be second in Command of the 68th Regiment Native Infantry Battalion.
General's Agent North West Frontier, has obtained an extension of leave for six weeks, until the 6th October.
16th October, 1843.
The services of Lieutenant W. B. Berkeley, of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

16th October, 1843.
Lieutenant E. C. Wallington, Acting Adjutant of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, has obtained leave of absence from 16th October to 16th November, 1843.
T. THOMASON, Secy. to the Govt. of India.

ORDERS BY THE HONOURABLE THE DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF BENGAL.
24th September, 1843.
Mr. W. Vansittart to be a Member of the Municipal and Public Commissions at Madras.

To be Member of the Local Committee of Public Instruction at Madras.
Mr. A. Parker.
Mr. E. F. Harrison.
Mr. J. Pagan.

Public Officer General appointed to be Principal Soldier of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Lieut. (Honourable) 1st Grade Member of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. B. B. Inverness-Monro to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, 1st Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain C. G. Guthrie, Executive Engineer, 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, 1st Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

MILITARY.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.
24th September, 1843.
Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. W. J. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Captain H. Marsh, Assistant Superintendent for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Robert Culmhead-Monro, Officiating Soldier, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Byrd Keaner Ulter, Principal Soldier, and Captain, during the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. E. H. Macey, Collector of Morichahad, for the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

Mr. J. Kneet, Deputy Collector under Regulation IX, 1833, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, 1843, to be second in Command of the 37th Regiment Native Infantry, for employment in the High Commission of the Western of India.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 480. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 26TH. 1848.

[Price 3 Cts. Per month, or 30 Rs. quarterly if paid in advance.]

THE PUNJAB.—Last week the Delhi Gazette announced that the days of Hoon Singh had been cut short by Lala Singh, a chieftain who is not without power and influence in the Punjab. That paper announces this week the death of Golab Singh. How far these announcements may be supported by subsequent intelligence, cannot at present be known, but the spirit of violence which seems to have been let loose on that country gives them a strong appearance of probability. If Golab Singh has been cut off, the possessions held by his family in the Jumbla hills will probably be wrested from them, as their administration has been so oppressive, that nothing but the presence of a large and well-disciplined army, commanded by a man of such ability and courage as Golab Singh, has been able to prevent a general insurrection. The kingdom of Burejiet Singh appears to be on the eve of dissolution; the bonds of government are relaxed; the various provinces will soon be dismembered; and every chief who can muster a force will aspire to independence. This anomaly will smooth the way for the establishment of a strong and beneficent Government such as Britain is prepared to plant in that region, as soon as the time for this event is mature. These mutual conflicts will not only serve to weaken the parties who might otherwise have raised a formidable opposition to our entrance, but so harass the people as to make our interposition, and the tranquillity which must follow it, peculiarly welcome in their eyes.

The British Government will not of course interpose at this stage of the business. The chiefs of an independent country, like the Punjab, have an undeniable right to cut such other throats without our officious interference. Lord Ellenborough can have no pretence for sending a British Army across the Sutlege as long as no invasions are made into our own territories, and no combination is formed inimical to our interests. Though the course of circumstances is gradually and inevitably tending to this result, yet until an actual demonstration of hostilities has been made, we must and shall remain within our own limits. It is not improbable however that the confusion which is growing up in the province of Mooltan may render interference a duty. Some time back, a petition was presented at the Court of Shere Singh by Sawun Mull, the governor of that province, stating that a number of its turbulent chiefs were anxious to assist their Mahomed, the fugitive Ameer of Scinde in an attack on our newly established authority in that kingdom. The answer was such as might have been expected from one who knew that any encouragement of their views would be followed by an unpleasant visit on the part of our troops to Lahore. Sawun Mull has now been murdered. The Delhi Gazette says that Shere Mahomed himself is actually in the province of Mooltan. If he be not, he will of course proceed thither with all speed; and, as the public authority at the capital is paralyzed by repeated treachery and murders, and all control over the unruly spirits who were anxious to join him has been removed, it is very probable that a hostile force may be assembled in that province with a view to disturb Scinde. This would lead to remonstrances with the Durbar at Lahore, which would be of course unable to afford any satisfactory assurance; and it would become necessary to secure possession of Mooltan—not with a view to the ultimate conquest of the Punjab, but simply for the preservation of our new possessions in Scinde.

The Commissioner-in-Chief, was not expected to reach Calcutta much before the end of October. The Army of Exercise, has been ordered in the last Calcutta Gazette, and there is every reason to believe that its chief exercise will be upon other ground than our own. It is said that the new authorities at Gwalior are determined rather to stand to arms than yield to the demands of the Governor General; and that they have been taking steps for re-organizing the Pindaroes, whom it cost us so much labour to put down twenty-five years ago. In either case, the Army of Exercise will be turned into an Army of Occupation; and we sincerely hope that with the existing winter the independence of that state, which has ceased to be advantageous either to the rulers, or the people, will have ceased.

COOLY EMIGRATION.—It was said of Cromwell that he would allow no one to do injury to England but himself; and our contemporary of the Star seems resolved that the present system of Cooly emigration shall be censured by no paper but his. His Journal was the first to sound the alarm of incipient abuse, at a time when those Journals which had been loudest in crying down the old system were apparently unconscious of the danger. The denunciations of the Star were an appearance of peculiar impartiality from the warm advocacy of the system of Cooly emigration which had previously appeared in its columns. We have carefully gone over the successive animadversions of our contemporary, and find that there is little substantial difference between them, and the article published in our last number, which he censures somewhat severely. Indeed we question whether our representation of the abuses of the present system are not feebler in character and less likely to be effectual than those which have appeared in that Journal. While writing this article, our eye has fallen on the Anti-Slavery Reporter of the 9th August just received, in which we find the following editorial remark: "In another part of our paper will be found an extract from the Calcutta Star, brought by the last overland Mail from India, on Cooly Emigration, from which it will appear that already abuses have become so manifest as to obtain for this species of emigration, the designation of the Slave Trade." The Editor of that paper is misinformed as to the origin of this term; it was invented by one of the wholesale Cooly Agents, under the old regime, and its peculiar suitability soon led to its general adoption. On turning to the extract from the Star, to which he alludes, we find the Editor denying the whole system of Cooly Emigration. In speaking of the lowest agent, the Duflidar, the Star says, "he is little better than a rascal, and something worse than a Ghost Serang; all that gets into his pocket is a provision upon kidnapping." Again; "the serial cost of sending a Cooly to the Mauritius is not more than 70 Rupees, and at the very outside would not be more than 65, if there were no opposition among those who seek their livelihood by the trade, for so at present we must call it with reference to these parties." A little further on he says: "We have supposed a sum to be given to the emigrant as a bonus, which in point of fact does not go into his pocket, but is fished from him, (we mean not all but the greater part) under various pretences by the Duflidar, through whose hands he comes first and goes last." Lastly, "While the present system lasts, emigration may fairly be called the Cooly trade." These remarks were written by our contemporary in May or June last. Since that period, as the abuses of the system have been farther developed, his exposure of them has become more vehement and indignant. We have cordially rejoiced at the assistance thus afforded to the cause of humanity by one whose former bias gives a double value to his present opinions; but we think he is somewhat unreasonable in expecting to be allowed to monopolize this duty.

Under the old system, the native crimps, who were employed by the European merchants and agents, proceeded to the interior of the country, inveigling men away from their families, under various delusions, and bringing them down to the Capital. The same course is pursued at present to seek for an extent; and, till lately, it was rendered so fatal by the Periwannas or Welta going off occasionally to these crimps. Under the former system, the men thus entrapped, after having been brought down to Calcutta, were frequently detained in the lock-up houses of the Native Agents. The same practice exists at present. It was only on Friday last that some of the Crimps were fined 60 Rupees by the Magistrates for having thus illegally deprived their victims of their liberty. Under the former system the poor cooly was cheated out of the money which was advanced to him; the Star affirms that the same process is still in vogue. With the exception of the surreptitious shipment of Coolies, and the overworking and underfeeding of them on board, all the evils of the old system have been revived. The provision of a Protector and Deputy Protector of the Coolies has checked, we believe effectually—the forcible shipment of the coolies, and secured them comfortable room and food on board. But as the appointment of those officers has not prevented the system of Cooly emigration from degenerating into a Cooly trade, so there is nothing but their unswerving vigilance which prevents the Cooly trade from degenerating into a most extensive and detestable Slave trade. All the elements of such a Slave trade are already in existence. There is the Merchant who pays so much a head for every Cooly that he can procure and pass; there is the inferior and unscrupulous agency of the Crimps at hand. The smallest relaxation of official vigilance would fill the country with violence, and convert Calcutta into a slave mart. If with all the activity and diligence of Mr. Fraser, the Deputy Protector, the Native crimps have ventured to bring down droves of men under false pretences from a distance of three, four and five hundred miles, and to detain them by force in the heart of the city of Calcutta, what would be the state of the country, if this vigilance should be relaxed, and any of the present formalities dispensed with?

This was not the system which we were given to expect when the ports were once opened to emigration. Public suspicion was lulled by the assurance that a system had been anxiously and hesitantly devised by Her Majesty's Ministers at home, by which all the evils of the old system, — and even the Star in his paper of Sunday last calls them flagrant abuses — would be remedied. This was to be accomplished by making emigration a Government measure, by throwing on the Mauritius treasury the expense of transporting Coolies, and by the "nomination, from time to time, of such persons as the Government of the Mauritius should see fit, to act as emigration agents at any port or place in India, which the Indian Government might designate as a port or place for the embarkation of Emigrants." The Mauritius Government has paid the premium, but neglected to appoint an Emigration Agent. The business of procuring and shipping Coolies has thus been left to private speculation. Twenty thousand Coolies have been sent since the beginning of the year, and if the Star's calculation of 10 Rupees clear profit on each Coolie, be correct, a sum of 40,000£ or four lakhs of Rupees, has been realized by the private agents, to whose the furnishing of this supply has been abandoned; and it is from this violation of good faith on the part of the public authorities that all these scenes of violence and blood have arisen which led the Star to denounce the whole system, four months ago, as nothing less than "the Cooly trade."

It may perhaps be doubted whether Coolies can, under any arrangement, be sent to the Mauritius to the extent of the Planter's desire, without the use in some degree of objectionable means. After the public Agent shall have been appointed, it is quite possible that the applicants for embarkation may come in so abundantly, that it may be found necessary to give the system the stimulant of individual cupidity, and to enlist to a certain extent the mercenary agency of the crimps. But there will unquestionably be fewer abuses in a system directed by an Agent of the State, than in one carried on by irresponsible and private agents, who never appear on the scene, though the gold which animates the crimps to deeds of violence comes from their purses. The employment of a Government Agent to preside over the arrangements for emigration, would be an additional check on abuse. That check, the Ministry at home promised to the world; and we hope the Protector of Coolies, who is just come up from the Mauritius, will see the absolute necessity of keeping faith with the Ministry and with the public, by taking the business out of the hands of Agents and Crimps, and entrusting it to an Agent with a fixed salary, as provided for in the Minutes of Council.

FOURTH IN THE HINDOOSTAN. — In the two previous voyages of the Hindoostan Steamer from Suva to Calcutta, she was not permitted to bring on our Mails, though letters and newspapers had been freely sent home by her. On the present occasion, owing to the loss of the Memosa Steamer, the packets for this Presidency have for the first time been brought to our own doors by our own Steamer. It is probable also that arrangements will be made for allowing the Hindoostan and the Bestind to bring on our letters and newspapers in future, whenever they may happen to be at Suva, when the English packets arrive there. It is therefore of no little importance that the rate of postage which is to be charged in future, and for which no provision has yet been made, should be fixed, before the return of the Hindoostan on her next voyage from Suva. In consequence of the absence of any arrangement on this subject, the Officers of the Post Office have been obliged to levy the usual ship postage on the contents of the overland mail. The letters now brought by the Hindoostan have been charged 4 annas, and the newspapers, 3 annas; and novellization of this rule can be expected without the express authority of the Government of India, in whom alone is vested the power of making alterations in the Schedule of postage.

We trust our contemporaries will not withhold their powerful advocacy on this occasion, but urge the necessity of a public address to the Governor General, beseeching that an equitable arrangement may be made regarding the postage, which shall satisfy the public expectations. We advise a public address, because Government is under no necessity of attending to any suggestions of the fourth estate, whereas an application from definite individuals, soliciting any grant or concession, will necessarily meet with "every consideration." There is indeed a tradition that the Head of the Government did formerly send the public newspapers, at least through his Private Secretary, and that some reforms of moment were adopted on their suggestion; but it is an undecided question whether our present rules ever seen them at all, and we must not depend on the hope that he does.

As to the scale which should be fixed, it is not for us to dictate; but it must appear evident that to levy the same rate, or three annas, for conveying a letter from Garden Reach to the Post Office, a distance of four miles, which is now charged for bringing a newspaper a thousand miles from Bombay to Calcutta, is preposterous and unjust. At Bombay, the Steamers are maintained entirely at the public expense, and the annual cost does not fall short of, we think, 16 lakhs of Rupees. Yet our good friends there are permitted to transmit and receive letters and covers without paying a farthing for them. Towards the expense of the Peninsular and Oriental Navigation Company's Steamers, the East India Company contributes Two lakhs of Rupees a year. If in these circumstances, we were to ask to be placed on the footing of the most favoured Presidency, there would not we apprehend be any thing unreasonable in the request; but we will not presume to suggest that the same privilege of total exemption which has been so long enjoyed at Bombay should be extended to Calcutta. Satisfying we must pay, and we ought to pay if cheerfully. The outward mails have hitherto been sent by the Hindoostan, at a rate which no one felt to be burdensome. We have been charged one anna for every newspaper, and two annas for each letter. There is reason to believe that if the same scale was established for the inward mails, the public wishes would be satisfied, more especially if the rule laid down in Schedule B. of the Post Office Regulations, was adopted, and newspapers not exceeding six foils in weight were allowed to be sent for 3 annas. This would enable us to send our newspapers to England in paper as substantial as that on which the English papers we receive, are printed.

THE COLLIER OF FORT WILLIAM. — The last number of the Calcutta Gazette gives us the Report on the Examination of the students of Fort William College on the 1st of September, and the 3d of October of the present year. The students are twenty in number, not one of whom had been more than two months in the Institution at the latter period. The Report presents no feature worthy of peculiar notice except the extraordinary qualifications which three of the students appear to have acquired, and which relate to mind the palmy days of the College, when some of the most distinguished of the public servants laid the foundation of their subsequent reputation in the academical honours they acquired. Mr. Schulch who entered the College on the 13th of October 1842, passed in Persian on the 1st of the subsequent month; in Bengalee, on the 1st of February 1843, and on the 1st of May obtained a certificate of high proficiency in this language. He passed in Hindes, his third language, on the 1st of June, and has now received a certificate of high proficiency in it, and is entitled to a reward of 800 Rs. Mr. Seton Kar, who entered College on the 12th December 1842, has now passed in three languages, Persian, Hindes and Bengalee, in the last of which he has obtained a degree of honour and is entitled to a reward of 1600 Rupees. He has also gained a certificate of high proficiency in Sanskrit. Mr. Cus, who entered College on the 24th March 1845, was in the course of five months passed in two languages, and received a certificate of high proficiency in Bengalee and a reward of 800 Rupees.

The revival of Sanskrit studies in the College is naturally traced to the exertions of Dr. Wilson in England, who is reported to be anxious that the students at Haylebury should apply themselves, while there, to the study of Sanskrit and Arabic, the two classic languages which form the basis of all the languages and dialects which are current in Hindoostan. He does not appear however to have been particularly successful in his efforts, as we find but one student evincing any acquaintance with Sanskrit, and none possessed of any knowledge of Arabic. Indeed, the plan which is said to have been urged by that profound Orientalist, however excellent in theory, will not we think be found to be adapted to the nature and exigencies of the Civil Service. It is quite true that a knowledge of the two sources of Indian philology will eminently facilitate the acquisition of the derivative tongues; but they are so abstruse and complicated that few of the Haylebury students can be supposed to possess inclination or ability for the study. Not one man in twenty has any natural aptitude for the acquisition of these learned languages or is likely to make any progress in them. It will follow therefore that the nineteen will find to their cost that they have obtained no available knowledge of them, while they have neglected the acquisition of knowledge which would be invaluable to them as public servants, and for the attainment of which they will enjoy no subsequent leisure. To the opinion of the Law Commission we fully subscribe.

"We do not attach importance to the study of the Oriental languages in England beyond such an elementary acquaintance with them, as would accustom future proficiency in India." It is in the latter country that the greatest facilities for acquiring this description of knowledge exist, and we think the principal part of the time spent in England would be most profitably devoted to the pursuit of European literature and science.

There is terrible truth in these observations.

The most eminent Oriental Scholars in the public service have declared that they learned the use of the Native languages in a month in the country itself, than they had acquired in six months at home. At the same time little desirable that the student should not land in India as ignorant of the country tongues as of Chinese; he should bring the rudiments with him. But the cost of his studies should be accommodated to his circumstances. Once embarked on professional life in India, the Civilian must bid adieu to all hope of advancement in European literature and science. It is with difficulty that he will be able to keep himself abreast of the age by the perusal of its periodical literature. No man has leisure for mental improvement except an Opium or a Salt Agent. It is highly to be desired therefore that the studies of the Civilian should provide for the largest possible acquisition of European literature and science before he leaves England, and the door of hope is closed upon him. Then, the first twelve months of his Indian career should be devoted to those studies which shall fit him for the discharge of public duty—the acquisition of the native languages and of the fundamental principles of the institutions in connection with which his life is to be spent.

A thorough and familiar knowledge of the languages is to be acquired only by contact with the people, and is the discharge of public business, not in the formal routine of College studies. Generally speaking, the man who is reported qualified for the public service, can seldom understand the simplest petition presented to him, or pass any intelligible order upon it. Yet the people look on all other qualifications with comparative indifference. Without this indispensable vernacular knowledge, even the legal acumen and the justice by which a decision may be distinguished, less the best part of their value, because they are ascribed to the Native and mercenary Amil. The civilian who has been dismissed to the public service with only a College stock of Bengalee or Orija, should therefore undergo, a subsequent examination, after he has lived and acted among the people, to ascertain whether he has a sufficient knowledge of the language, to conduct public business with satisfaction, and no situation of 1000 Rs. a month in value should be given to one who has failed to master the people's language. Every dolt who has failed to acquire this qualification should be excluded from all but subordinate situations. Such we believe is the rule at Bombay, and such ought to be the rule here. The true secret of popularizing our administration, and conducting it in such a manner as to win the confidence of the people, is to commit it to men who are at home in their language.

COL. STODDART AND CAPT. CONLEY.—The public sympathy has been now awakened regarding the fate of these officers by an assertion that the account of their execution given by Colonel Shell is not correct, and by the chivalrous offer of Wolff and Captain Grove to proceed to Bokhara and attempt their rescue. The proposal is of course based on the supposition that they are yet in the land of the living. On this point it is impossible to come to any definite conclusion with the evidence before us. The report of Saleh Mahomed is clear; so is also that of the Jew who is said to have seen them after the date of their supposed murder. If it was allowable to form any conjecture from the character and temper of the Bokhara Court, we should almost conclude that they had not been put to death in the barbarous mode which has been indicated. The Khan of Bokhara could have no vindictive motive for executing them, as the British Government has never provoked his animosity. It would be more for his interest to hold them at a heavy ransom. We learn moreover from Wolff's journal, that in 1832 the King was saying that he placed with the suspicion thrown upon him of having been necessary to the death of Mr. Moorcroft. "We must give Wolff," said he to his Minister, "permission to travel through our country, in order that we may get rid of the bad name which is cast upon us by the death of Moorcroft." If this sensitive feeling still pervades the breast of the "Prince of Believers," it is not likely that he would wantonly incur the odium of having murdered two foreigners. That he has subjected them to the extremity of human suffering, will unhappily admit of no doubt.

Supposing the victims of his barbarity to be yet alive, by what means can he be induced to restore them to liberty? Wolff proposes to go as a Christian Minister. On the former occasion he entered Bokhara on horseback with his Hebrew Bible and his Greek Testament in his hand. He now proposes to enter it on foot, robed as a Doctor of Divinity with his gown and hood. We question whether the haughty King of Bokhara will open the prison doors of the captives at the request even of the wisest Doctor of Cambridge or Oxford. Asaright Mahomedan, he can have no respect for the sacred orders of the unbelievers. Neither can Wolff expect to obtain their release for money or without it. If he takes no money, he will be laughed at; if he carries the money in his portmanteau, it will probably be taken away and he himself sent to keep the prisoners company, with the hope that the ransom of three will be higher than that of two. To invest him with a public character, and depute him as an envoy from the Government, would be to compromise the character of that Government without any hope of effecting the object. The King of Bokhara would be infinitely more likely to cast the necessitous agent into a dungeon than to liberate the prisoners at his request. Every effort that could be made, short of the despatch of a public Mission, was made by Sir W. Macnaghten to effect the release of Col. Stoddart at a time when we were all powerful in Afghanistan and seemed to hold the destinies of Central Asia in our hands; but he failed. Since that time we have been ignominiously expelled from the country, and though we have revisited it in triumph and retrieved our national character upon every score of our disaster, yet our disgrace will be more remembered than our victories. It is clear that that we are no longer there, but that the man we expelled, is on his old throne. We have not a foot of land in Afghanistan. The influence we had established, and the terror we had inspired among all the tribes which lie between the Caspian and the Indus, has died away as fast as it arose, and we are nothing in the eyes of the Khan of Bokhara. But while we have been growing less in his esteem, he himself has been growing greater. His power is doubled and his haughty of course more than doubled. Any official request from us, unless supported by an army on the Oxus, would inevitably be treated with contempt.

Still the wild stage with madness to the most distant hope of restoring our two enterprisers.

ing fellow countrymen from bondage, if they be still in existence. And if Wolff will really undertake a journey to Bokhara on so hallowed a mission, we should think it a duty to further his object by all the means in our power. We think it likely that his object will be promoted far more by his appearing there in a private than in a public character. The same kind Providence which watched over him in his last journey of curiosity, may vouchsafe him equal protection in this new journey of benevolence; and unexpected contingencies may arise to facilitate his object. If Lady Georgiana can spare him, we would certainly, vote for the journey and for a subscription to defray the expense of it. He has enthusiasm enough to carry him through the enterprise.

GENERAL'S PULLOCK.—It will be in the recollection of many, that the letter written by General Pulloek on the receipt of the Governor General's Orders to withdraw with his army from Afghanistan, was not published in the Blue Book. The omission was at the time much censured; but the explanation which has now been given of the reason is perfectly satisfactory. We submit the letter, which has been received by the last Mail. The reader will perceive that the General used every argument in his power to prevent the retrograde movement which had been so inconsiderately ordered.

The following letters have just been presented to Parliament by command of Her Majesty:

"THE GOVERNOR GENERAL TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE." (RECEIVED.)

"Having observed the report of the debates in Parliament with respect to the Afghan war, that a letter from Major General Pulloek, dated the 13th of July, was presented as not having been received in England, I have directed the secret of it not having been transmitted, and moved the following explanation:—

"1. The original draft of the 15th of May never reached the office, and must have been lost in transit. The duplicate was received and acknowledged on the 11th of July.

"2. It is the practice of the Secretary's office to keep the unsanctioned papers on all important subjects for each month together, and to forward copies of them to the secret committee, by the monthly circular mail.

"3. The despatch in question was inadvertently put up in its proper place, in the May bundle of reported papers, instead of being left for a time, as it should have been, amongst the unsanctioned papers of July. Hence, when the July papers were copied for transmission to the secret committee this despatch was omitted.

"A copy of it is now forwarded."

No. 2.
COPY OF THE DESPATCH SENT BY MAJOR GENERAL PULLOCK TO THE GOVERNMENT WITH THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ORDER.

"Jalalabad, May 13, 1868.
"Sir,—I had the honour to forward with my letter, dated 13th instant, a copy of a letter from His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. &c."

"I have now the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated 28th ult., which adverts to the present aspect of affairs in Afghanistan, and the probability of my having advanced to Cabool; stating also, that in such an event the views of the Governor General, as to the withdrawal of the troops, will not be altered; and, further, that whatever measures I may adopt I must have special regard to the health of the troops.

"I trust that I am not wrong in considering this letter as leaving to me discretionary powers; and, coming as it does from the supreme power in India, I venture to delay many days, and call up to the instructions communicated in His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief's letter, dated 28th ultimo.

"I regret much that a want of carriage seats has detained me here; if I had not been so I should now be several marches in advance, and I am quite certain that such a move would have been highly beneficial to the troops. I am at the present moment in a very unsettled state, but a few days must decide in favour of one of the son. Mahomed Akber is at Chobul, writing all his influence to overpower the prison. He is without means; and if he, meant while a very short period elapses the opportunity, he must give up the contest, in which case I have no doubt I shall hear from him again. With regard to our withdrawal at the present moment, I fear that it would have the effect of rendering the cause contrived into defeat, and our character as a powerful nation would be entirely lost in the part of the world. It is true that the persons of the school has been saved, which would not have been had a force not been sent to its relief; but the relief of that Garrison's only aim object, there still remains others which we cannot disregard. I allude to the release of the prisoners.

"I expect about 10 Europeans from Boudeshah in a few days; the letters which have passed about the other prisoners have already been forwarded for the information of his lordship. If, while these communications were in progress, I were to retire, it would be supposed that a panic had seized us. I, therefore, think that our remaining in this vicinity (or perhaps a few marches in advance) is essential to uphold the character of the British nation, and, in the present, the real most frightful had, at all events, till a more favorable season.

"I have no reason yet to complain that the troops are more weary than they were at Agre. (I) am to march to Peshawar the climate is certainly not preferable; and when I see, in one or two marches, find a better climate, and I should be able to decide before more than 20 miles at Peshawar.

"I cannot imagine any three being sent from Cabul which I could not successfully oppose; but the advance on Cabul would require that General Nott should set in concert and advance also. I, therefore, cannot help regretting that he should be directed to retire, which would be a destruction of our power, he will find some difficulty in doing.

"I have less hesitation in thus expressing my opinion, because I could not, under any circumstances, more than 16 or 20 days; and my reply might reach me, by express, in about 25 days. The difference in points of time is not very material, but the instance is not sufficient to justify the delay of a few days. In the mean time, I shall endeavour to procure carriage mules as fast as I can, to move our army on as backward as I may, till we are no longer in a position, as I may think judicious.

"Under any circumstances I should not advocate the delay of the expedition till the middle of this side, beyond the month of November; and in this arrangement advantage must be had to the safety of the Khyber, which I consider the British would gladly lose if they were allowed to take possession of Jellalabad.—I have, &c., G. FULLAGE."

—Bharat, Oct. 19.

THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY AND THE GOSPEL PROPAGATION SOCIETY.—We now resume our pledge of giving an analysis of the documents which have been published relative to the clashing of these two Societies in their missionary operations to the south of Calcutta, which has occasioned so long a discussion during the last three months. It is not without regret that we devote our columns to a controversy which has led to no unsatisfactory a result, and which, so far from establishing the principle of mutual non-interference, has terminated in a declaration, that no engagement of any Episcopal Society in England to abstain from interfering with the labours of Dissenting Missionaries can be binding on any Church Missionaries in the east. After such a declaration has received the sanction of the highest Episcopal authority in India, it might appear idle to waste any time in examining whether any previous pledge of non-interference was ever given, and whether it has been kept or violated. But the Missionaries of the London Society consider that in the Report of the Sub-Committee of the Gospel Propagation Society, an attempt is made, not only to show that Bishop Corrie's pledge of non-interference has never been violated by the Missionaries of that Society, but that the agents of the London Missionary Society are open to the charge of having intruded themselves into a series of labours, which they received a large sum to assign exclusively to the Gospel Propagation Society. From this charge the Dissenting Ministers are naturally anxious to exonerate themselves, and they have therefore published for the information of their supporters in England and the public in India, the documents on which they rest the justification of their conduct. It is much to be regretted that the Report of their Sub-Committee should have been rendered so voluminous by the admission of extraneous considerations, as to deter rather than invite a perusal of it.

In the year 1833, the Rev. Messrs. Morton and Christian having come to India under the auspices of the Gospel Propagation Society, the question arose where Mr. Morton should be stationed. At a Meeting of the Local Committee, Bishop—then Archbishop—Corrie, stated that the London Missionary Society had a station at Tallypangue where they had erected a Mission House and established Schools, and which they would probably be willing to transfer to the Gospel Propagation Society. The negotiation was confided to him, and he succeeded in obtaining the station, on condition that the expenses incurred by the London Society should be refunded.

At the close of his letter to Mr. Hill, he used these memorable words: "I need scarcely add that the same principle of non-interference with the proceedings of your Society in respect of any Missionary stations already formed among the Heenahs, will be exercised by the Committee, on any opportunity they may have of extending their labours away from large cities."

The Missionaries of the London Society maintain that this pledge of non-interference has been violated by the missionaries of the Propagation Society, "first, by their entering villages previously occupied by the L. M. S. (and that whether by the residence of Christians or catechists in our connexion, the establishment of schools or chapels, or the visitation of our Missionaries). Next, by receiving into their communion inordinately to excluded members of our churches, not only in some instances without enquiry, but even against remonstrance and information given of their ill-desert. Thirdly, by giving employment with salaries, as Readers or Catechists, to persons who had gone over from us, whether by invitation from persons of their communion or disaffection with our discipline. The case of Jhangurs already cited, and others, are glaring instances of the aggressions referred to, which we will not however further particularize. Lastly, by the issue of a tract in Bangalore denying the right of the Dissenters to preach the gospel at all, supposing the inability of ecclesiastical authorities to do so, and enforcing the duty of the Native, on the great peril of their souls, to attach themselves only to episcopalian Missionaries."

The Sub-Committee of the Propagation Society on the contrary assert that the pledge has not been violated, because Archbishop Corrie does not speak of stations that shall be hereafter established, but of stations already formed; in other words, the pledge extended only to those stations which were in existence on the 27th of November, 1833; and any station which the London Society might form subsequently to that period, in any part of India, might be invaded by the Propagation Society without any breach of good faith. This Sub-Committee also considers the charge at variance with the manifest design of the letter, which was to remove the London Missionaries to a Station. The subsequent establishment of a station by them at Ramnath Choke, which is about 22 miles from Tallypangue was never contemplated by the Episcopal Society when the pledge was given; and they consider its establishment as a violation of the corresponding pledge given by the London Society, and which was recorded in these terms in the Minutes of the Gospel Propagation Society: "The said Trustees of the London Society, 'in disclaim, on the basis proposed in Archbishop Corrie's correspondence, all intention of establishing fresh Schools in the district of Tallypangue hereafter, while it remains the scene of the Society's operations.' They state that the charge is at variance also with the well known design of Bishop Middleton in establishing Schools in the Tallypangue district, and founding Bishop's College, in connection with which they were to be brought when the proposal was made to the London Missionaries. They argue that if the interpretation of the pledge given by that body be correct, it will follow that the Bishop, the Archbishop and the Principal of Bishop's College 'knowing full well the extensive and growing nature of the undertaking in which they were embarked, consented to shut themselves up in the district of Tallypangue and to forbear entering the wide Missionary field which lay in every direction around, if perchance the London Missionary Society's agents should see good to settle however near them, beyond the immediate precincts of the said district, and that too when the Gospel Propagation Society had already planned Schools preparatory to Missionary labours as far south as Serampore, twelve miles from Tallypangue. Such a conclusion is in the highest degree improbable and extravagant.' The Sub-Committee also consider the charge as at variance with the subsequent conduct of Archbishop Corrie, who continued, in connection with the Gospel Propagation Society for twelve years after the pledge was given, up to the time of his final departure in 1855, and witnessed the gradual extension of the Missions of that Society in every direction, without regard to geographical limits of any supposed pledge. It is not, say they, to be supposed that he had intended his pledge to bear the meaning now put on it by the London Society, he would have suffered these things to pass in silence. Finally, they remark that no remonstrance was made against the extending operations of the Propagation Society's Missionaries as long as Mr. Corrie continued in Calcutta, and that the first reference made to this letter was in December, 1856, when the Committee of that Society proposed to establish a mission at Serampore. The Report closes with the distinct and full revocation of whatever pledge of non-interference Archbishop Corrie may have given, and the assurance that no pledge hereafter made, can ever be binding on the Missionaries of the Society. "What we would insist on is, the incompetency of a Diocesan Committee, or even of a home Committee to pledge a Society of the Church of England to an engagement of the kind with Dissenting Missionaries of any denomination."

To this the Sub-Committee of the London Society have replied at great length. They divide their reply into three parts, and in the first place, enquire whether any pledge of non-interference was given by Archbishop Corrie. Secondly, what was included in the pledge of Tallypangue, and thirdly, whether the pledge has been violated, and by whom. On the first point they have the testimony of Mr. Morton who was stationed by the Propagation Society at Tallypangue, when it was first purchased, though he is now a Missionary of the London Society. He has given a succinct history of the circumstances which led to the purchase of Tallygunge, and he states that a pledge of future non-interference was a principal condition of the arrangement made, and was not only intended to be made, but actually was believed by ourselves (that is by the Missionaries of the Propagation Society) to have been made. But we need not unnecessarily lengthen this article by dwelling on this part of the subject. The fact that a pledge of non-interference was given by Archbishop Corrie, is proved by the attempt made in the Report of the Sub-Committee of the Propagation Society to limit it to stations existing in November 1893, and to deny its applicability to stations which might be subsequently formed—entirely a jesuitical construction of the word advanced—and by the declaration at the end of the Report that no such pledge can be binding on the Missionaries of the Society.

Mr. Minch Hill, who was the Missionary "bought out" of the Tallygunge station, then narrates the conversation which Archbishop Corrie had with him on the subject of the station. It is remarkable among other things for the declaration that Tallygunge was the extremity of the line of Schools, then designed by the Propagation Society, though it is a pity Mr. Hill did not remember whether it was said to be the southern or northern terminus. This fact would throw a flood of light on the subject. The Archbishop said:

"The school we have at Tallygunge is the extremity of our line; and you can conceive that with us it is an object to have our whole line complete and subject to no interference. Your station at Tallygunge obstructs our plan, and in what way satisfactorily to all parties we could remove this obstruction has been discussed in our Diocesan Committee. I am requested to let you, as the resident Missionary at Tallygunge, should be addressed, and that as a reason for your resigning the station to us we should propose a pledge of non-interference, and this is all that is necessary, whenever and wherever you may have first established a Mission, with that Mission the Church of England does not interfere. This Archbishop objected to my proposal saying that the Committee would only expose itself to an insult. I (Archbishop Corrie) observed, 'I know Mr. Hill; should our respectability fail, I am sure of a gentlemanly reply from him.' His Lordship (Bishop Heber) rejoined, 'Then Mr. Corrie, will you undertake to address Mr. Hill and offer him our pledge of non-interference?'"

And now (continued Mr. Corrie), I wait upon you, Mr. Hill, with the Bishop's personal thanks for having so kindly assented to our request, and to state that his Lordship, as the head of the English church in India, guarantees that this principle of non-interference with each other's Missions shall be strictly observed on his part."

To the second query, what was comprised in Tallygunge, the Sub-Committee of the London Society reply that it was distinctly understood to mean, only a station, and not, as the Episcopal Society affirms, a district. They support this idea by affirming that at the time of the creation of Tallygunge, they had Missionary Schools and preaching stations at Bhuvanipore two miles to the north of it, and Chida, one mile to the west, and Baysa, two miles south west of it. They argue, and we think with much force, that if the Propagation Society at the time purchased Tallygunge Mission House, as the centre of a proposed Mission field with a view to keep that field exclusively their own, free from all other agency, they would have made proposals for the removal of the London Society's other stations from its immediate vicinity. They argue also that if the continued occupation of Missionary stations within two miles of Tallygunge was not considered a violation of the contemplated pledge which that Society's agents are said to have given, the subsequent establishment of a station six miles off at Ramnakh Choke, cannot be considered in that light.

On this point, however, we are constrained to remark that the Episcopal Society do appear at the time of the purchase, to have supposed that they were purchasing the exclusive occupancy of a district, and not of a single village. In the extract we have already quoted from the Minutes of the 28th March, 1894, this idea is distinctly recorded in the words—"that the London Missionary Society's Agents disclaim all intention of establishing frank Schools in the district hereafter."

The question then rises what were the limits of this district. We believe we shall not be far from the truth in supposing that they have gradually expanded with the enlarging views of the Propagation Society. This district which was to be exclusively Episcopal, free from all Dissenting Agents, did not extend in 1893 to the distance of two miles south west, to Baysa, where the Dissenters were allowed to remain unmolested. Its present boundary is utterly indefinite, for the Propagation Society, in the Sub-Committee's Report speak of the London Society's Agents not only as having no right to settle in the district itself, but beyond the immediate precincts of it. It would appear then that the Propagation Society consider that they brought the London Missionaries not only out of the district, which is a sufficiently indefinite term, but out of its neighbourhood, which is still more indefinite. It is impossible to pursue this part of the subject any farther with any prospect of a satisfactory result. If the London Missionary Society's Agents sold only the station of Tallygunge to the Episcopal Society in 1893, they had right to settle in other places at some distance from it, and the Archbishop's pledge must be considered as having been violated by interfering with them at those missionary establishments. If, on the contrary, they surrendered a district to the Episcopal Society, and that district extended to Baysipore, they had no right to settle at Ramnakh Choke, a station midway between the two stations. It is evident that the London Missionaries thought at the time they were transferring a station, while the Gospel Propagation Society thought they had acquired the unenclosed occupancy of a district. It appears however from one circumstance that Archbishop Corrie did not assign those large dimensions to the district of Tallygunge which are now claimed for it. The London Society's Missionaries had established a station at Janghura, a mile from Ramnakh Choke, and Mr. Tweedale, one of the Propagation Society's Missionaries, soon after attempted to open a school there and had actually collected the materials for it, when the matter was represented to Archbishop Corrie, and he was directed to desist. This is a material fact in the controversy, because it goes far to show that the Archbishop did consider himself bound by a pledge of non-interference, even at a station, only seven miles from Tallygunge, which was not in existence when that place was sold.

The statements of which we have given an analysis, were laid before Mr. Hawking, of the Civil Service, a member of the Church of England, whose calm and impartial opinion on the facts of this controversy, we submit.

The Bishop having declined to appoint any individual to co-operate in review with Drs. Duff and Yates, the District Committee of the L. M. S. applied by their Secretary to several gentlemen of the Episcopal Church, soliciting such opinions; but these were compelled to decline, from a feeling of delicacy and (in their view) of impropriety in sitting in review, as laymen, upon the judgment of their ecclesiastical superiors; or supposing, at the same time expressing, however, their distinct conviction that, in regard to the simple facts of the case in dispute, without giving any opinion whatsoever upon, or touching, either matters of ecclesiastical discipline or of doctrinal infidelity, the three points discussed in this report had been most satisfactorily established in favour of our body. One gentleman, whose name, we are at liberty to give, and whose candour and candour add great weight to his opinion, thus writes,—

"As to the case itself. The Diocesan Report proceeds upon the assumption that the Mission Schools were purchased by the D. C. in 1893, Tallygunge was considered by the then Committee as a district, and not merely as a station; and that as the D. C. had a school at Baysipore, it was an unauthorized interference and a violation of the existing understanding, for the Missionaries of the L. S. to form a station at Ramnakh Choke, between the station of Tallygunge and Baysipore. With this view of the facts of the case, the Sub-Committee are of opinion that there was no violation of the pledge alleged to have been given by Archbishop Corrie to the agents of the L. S."

"Having now had an opportunity of seeing both the Report of the Sub-Committee of the L. P. G. Diocesan Council, and the reply of the Missionaries of the London Missionary Society, I am of opinion that your reply sets forth facts which quite alter the features of the case from what the Diocesan Report and the reply of the Missionaries of the L. M. S. present. At the time of the transfer of the school at Tallygunge, the London Missionary Society had schools and preaching stations at Baysipore, Clith and Bhuvanipore in the vicinity of the village, and were permitted to continue their occupation of these without any remonstrance or objection on the part of those to whom the school at Tallygunge had been transferred. This fact leads, in my opinion, decisively to the conclusion that the parties to the transfer looked upon Tallygunge as a station, not as a district. Here the case stands, as the Sub-Committee, I cannot but think that, on this point, they would have come to a different determination."

Looking also at Archbishop Corrie's letter of the 27th November 1893, in its general tenor and the circumstances under which it was written, it certainly does appear to my mind to convey a pledge of non-interference, by the terms employed by him, with any station then or afterwards (to be) previously occupied by the London Missionary Society."

"Taking the unfortunate matter in all its bearings, I arrive at the conclusion that the London Missionary Society, considering that it had transferred to the L. S. only the station of Tallygunge, felt itself at perfect liberty to establish a station at Ramnakh Choke; while the present successors of the party to whom the transfer was made, considering the subject of the transfer, and have been the district between Tallygunge and Bhuvanipore, view the establishment of the station at Ramnakh Choke as an unauthorized invasion of such district."

"Had this been all, a little mutual explanation might have elucidated every difficulty. Such explanation, however, is of course useless in the face of a declaration that a pledge of the kind alluded to is inadmissible, and that societies in connection with the Church of England cannot link themselves not to interfere with the labours of Dissenting Missionaries of any denomination."

"I beg that you will consider me as giving an opinion only on the leading facts of the case. I am not required to go into the details or discuss any of the principles of the Church of England; and therefore purposely refrain from so doing."

"I further beg that I may not be considered as in any way a party to the discussion upon the conduct and proceedings of individuals."

"J. A. F. HAWKING."

These documents were also submitted to the Revd. Drs. Duff and Yates and their judgments on the points of difference is thus given.

"The Calcutta District Committee of the London Missionary Society having laid before us certain duly substantiated statements and testimony, relative to the points of difference between them and the committee of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, resolved as follows:—

1st. That, as our opinion has been solicited, not in regard to any thing personal connected with the conduct or proceedings of the authorities concerned, but simply and solely in regard to the precise nature and actual reality of certain disputed matters of fact, to be determined by reliable documentary evidence—we know of no valid or sufficient reason for declining to respond to the solicitation of our Christian brethren.

"This we have above shown not to be fact."

2nd. That, after the most careful and attentive consideration of the whole of the materials submitted to us, it is our deliberate conviction that the evidence presented conclusively establishes the fact that, as a Christian return for a truly generous concession, a pledge is given by the Archdeacon, of the Bishop Corrie, to the Missionaries of the London Missionary Society, not to interfere, in any way, with any station which might be pre-occupied by them—and, with-out passing any opinion as to the propriety or impropriety of proffering such a pledge at all, that the Society on whose behalf and under whose direction the Venerable Archdeacon officially acted, was clearly bound, by every principle of rational and moral obligation, to preserve it inviolate, when once made.

3rd. That the whole weight of evidence, external and internal, is in favour of the statement that the original purchase and consequent cession extended only to the Mission premises and schools of the single village of Tallymore, and not to any imaginary and undistinct district or cluster of adjacent villages.

4th. That, among the places, obviously excepted by the aforesaid pledge from interference or intrusion on the part of the agents of the Diocese Committee of the P. G. R. or P. G. F. Society, must be fairly and justly included the place of Calcutta which was then or might then be found actually pre-occupied by the Missionaries of the London Missionary Society.

5th. That, in regard to several of these pre-occupied stations the pledge certainly has, in point of fact, been again and again violated by the Missionaries of the Propagation Society—while there is satisfactory evidence, on the other hand, to prove that it has not been so violated by the Missionaries of the London Missionary Society.

6th. That, in consequence of this violation of the pledge, on the part of the S. P. G. Missionaries (a violation, which we record simply as an established fact, without implying any sinister insinuation or desire of the least immorally encouraged), the most serious evils have arisen since the date of the pledge, to the injury of the cause of Christianity, to the honour of the Missionaries, and to the salvation of the Hindoos.

7th. That, in conclusion, we cannot but indulge the hope that when such Christian men as the present Bishop and Archdeacon of Calcutta and Mr. Pratt come to be fully cognizant of all the facts of the case, they will officially express their influence and authority to secure an honorable fulfilment of any engagements officially contracted by their venerated predecessors, and thus restore peace and harmony to our once tranquil, but now harassed and distracted, diocese.

(Signed) ALEXANDER DUFF, WILLIAM YARVIS.

From the time when this controversy was first opened, the appeal to Archdeacon Corrie's pledge has appeared to us only a fruitless waste of labour. First, from the indefinite language in which it was couched, and which afforded those who were not imbued with the spirit in which it was given, a plausible reason for disregarding it; Secondly, from the nature of those violations of it which were made the subject of complaint, and which, springing as they did from a feeling of strong hostility to dissent, would have been exhibited in the same degree if the limits of the district of Tallymore had been defined by a Revenue Surveyor; but, lastly, and chiefly, from the result to which this appeal appeared sure to lead. The pledge given by Archdeacon Corrie, with the full concurrence of the good Bishop Heber, of whom Dr. Marshman used to remark that he was the most formidable enemy to Dissent who had ever appeared in India, because of the extreme mildness and candour which marked his conduct, was a true index of their Christian character. The pledge was not in exact accordance with what are called Church Principles, and which are not always softened down by the presence of evangelist sentiments. It is repugnant to those Church Principles to give any quarter to Dissent, or to regard it in any other light than as an enemy to be annihilated. Nothing can be more foreign to those principles than to recognize the legitimate existence of Dissenters by entering into any kind of negotiation with them. Such is the feeling in England where the Episcopal Church is by law established, and Dissenters are as much considered spiritual rebels, as the revolted colonies of North America were considered political rebels—till they had established their own independence. The division of India into Episcopal sees, and the establishment of a Metropolitan Bishop, whose jurisdiction extends from the Himalaya to Point de Galle, and from Singapore to the Hills of Belochistan, appear to intend the subjection of this distant empire, to the same rules of ecclesiastical discipline which prevail in England; and to imply that all Dissenting teachers found within these limits are equally to be considered as unauthorized interlopers, and rebels against the legitimate spiritual authorities of the country. The rise of Tractarianism, the chief seat of which in India is Bishop's College, has given a peculiar acuteness to these Church principles, and led its advocates to put a more pointed and sectarian construction on the ordination Vows, which bind the Minister of the Church of England, 'to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrine.' The Missionaries of the Propagation Society in whose conduct the present dissension originated, of course fully participate in the views and feelings by which their Alma Mater is distinguished.

Of these circumstances, the London Society's Agents were fully aware, when they brought the question of the "pledge," given under happier auspices, into discussion. They might easily have foreseen, that to any charge of having violated a pledge of non-interference, the reply would be that the pledge itself was at variance with the ordination vows of the Missionary, from the obligation of which no ecclesiastical authority could liberate him. They might have foreseen that any appeal to an Episcopal Society to hold sacred a pledge of non-interference would, in the present temper of the times, be followed by its instant repudiation. They ought to have known that for the Church dignitaries in India, upon a solemn appeal, to have confirmed the assertion of Archdeacon Corrie that 'the field of Missionary labour was large enough for all the Missionaries of the various Societies in the country without interfering with each other,' would have been to acknowledge as Christian teachers those who had not been ordained by Bishops possessed of the Apostolical succession, and to recognize the ordinances administered by them as valid. If in those circumstances, the Dissenting Missionaries expected the same consideration which they experienced from the amiable Heber and the apostolic Corrie, their expectations were unreasonable. If they hoped to be thus recognized as Christian Ministers, at this time of day, by the Church authorities, their hopes were quite as preposterous as those entertained by the members of the Established Church, who expect the haughty Church of Rome to acknowledge that they have the Apostolical succession, that their orders are valid, or the ordinances they administer, are efficacious. Some of our readers may remember how justly rendered himself by the foolish protest he signed against the intrusion of a Roman Catholic Archbishop into his diocese. He considered it a most unkind, ungenerous, unchristian act that the Pope should erect Australia into a Roman Catholic see, when it was already the see of an Anglo Catholic Bishop. His Lordship's distress has only served to excite the laughter of every sound Protestant and every consistent Roman Catholic; and whenever the London Missionary Society's Agents shall manifest the slightest annoyance that the Puseyites do not acknowledge the validity of their orders, or attach any value to the ordinances they administer, they will render themselves equally an object of public ridicule. The contempt which the Puseyites pour on the Dissenters and their ministrations, is only the counterpart of the still more profound contempt which the Romanists pour on the spiritual pretensions of the Puseyites. To be affected by any such contumacious behaviour a degree of childish weakness, unworthy of Christian men. In the ranks of the Episcopal Church in India, notwithstanding the increasing leaven of Puseyism, there will still be found men of the same stamp as Corrie, and Marryat, and Thomson, who will rejoice that Christian truth is made known in this benighted land, though by other communities of Christians, and who will consider it a sin against Christian charity to disturb their labours. From them the Dissenting Missionaries will continue to receive generous sympathy—and whenever they come in contact with men of a different stamp, walking upon the heels of Puseyism, and denouncing all who have not episcopal ordination, they must treat their enemies with the same placid indifference with which Bishop Wilson and Archdeacon Daulton treat the contempt which the Roman Catholics cast on the 'heretical' Church of England.

WEEKLY EPIITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15.

— By the last arrival from the Persian Gulf, we learn that Seyid Ben Calfan has been appointed American Consul at Muscat and its dependencies. The appointment is said to have given general satisfaction as that gentleman speaks English fluently, and has always manifested the utmost kindness both to Americans and English.

— We believe that it escaped us at the time to state, that the Directors of the Bank of Bombay had received permission of the Supreme Government to establish a Branch in Calcutta with no other restriction save that of issuing their notes. From the Bombay Times we learn that no effort has been made to take advantage of the permission, though the Bank itself appears to be labouring under a plethora, and is in want of replenishment. We should have thought that at a time when the Union Bank was, as it respects real banking operations, in a state of suspended animation, and the Bengal Bank dividing 14 per cent per annum, such an opening would have been eagerly embraced.

— The Star's home correspondent tells him by the last Mail that there was some half idea of the Ministry's doing justice to themselves by recalling Lord Ellenborough, but the idea has died out, and his Lordship will not be recalled,—and he will not resign while his friends are in power. The Scotch affair will not come under discussion before the next Session, and not then—for by that time the internal state of the country will demand all the time Parliament can command. Mr. Roebuck, who comes to visit the part to Lord Auckland and Ellenborough which Mr. Peel sent to Lord Wellesley, has, according to the last accounts abandoned his opposition to the retention of Scinde and confines his censure to the mode of its acquisition. — The Bombay papers state, that an express had arrived at that Presidency from the Governor General, suspending the order for the withdrawal of the Bombay troops from Scinde to make room for the Bengal troops, by whom it was to have been guarded. All the Bombay troops are, it appears, to stand fast in the province, and the Bengal troops who had been ordered to relieve them will stand fast at the Forts. All matters are a little settled in the Punjab.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 20.

—The news regarding the detention of the Scinde bound troops at Ferozepore is confirmed. An express had been received by Col. Richmond from the Commander-in-Chief to that effect; but the express had been anticipated by the Colonel and Mr. Gresham, who would allow none of the troops to pass down until they were relieved.

—A paragraph in the London Mail alludes to the death of Col. Justin Stael, our Charge d'affaires at Tcherah; but we are happy to find in the Harbuz of this morning satisfactory evidence that the account is unfounded. Letters of the 17th of August have been received in Calcutta from Tcherah, at which date nothing of the Colonel's demise was known there. It is impossible the intelligence of his death could have reached Ireland from Persia, in a fortnight, except by the Aerial carriage.

—The festival of the Dussehra, which was expected to be marked by further commotions at Lahore, has passed off quietly; and the account published in the Deli Gazette Extra of the murder of Herra Sing, has not been confirmed. Neither is it certain that Dulip Singh has left the Capital with the diamond, and sought the protection of our Government. We have indeed no accounts on which any dependence can be placed subsequent to the great tragedy which closed with the death of Ajeet Sing.

—There is a very sparkling account of Durjelling in this day's Harbuz, but as we have a letter from our own correspondent there, we will borrow from our neighbour only the remarkable fact, that a robbery having recently been committed at the Rightful Spot to the extent of 1198 Rupees, the whole sum was recovered by the Magistrate and four of the robbers seized; a circumstance so unusual in Bengal as to demand particular record.

—Our Bombay friends are dumfounded by the non-arrival of the Mail, while we far ones are recalling in its contents, having received not letters and newspapers only, but the whole of every monthly Periodical, within fifty days after their publication in London. The overcharge costs but a trifle compared with the overwhelming expense which their transmission from Bombay would have entailed.

—General Aitaville, who is released from all previous obligations by the recent tragic events at Lahore, is said by the papers to have been actually invited back; and, if we are not much mistaken, he is actually about to return thither, in measure for which it is impossible to account, considering the safety of his fortune in English funds.

—The troops under orders to move, which are ordered to stand fast on the banks of the Sutlej, are the 4th Troop 1st Brigade Horse Artillery, 3d Company 5th Battalion Artillery with No. 6 Light Field Battery, the 3d and 7th Light Cavalry, and the 6th, the 10th, the 19th and the 61st native Infantry.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21.

—The 32d Regiment of Native Infantry now at Buzurkpoor has been somewhat suddenly ordered to Gurdaspore, to relieve the 41st, which is understood to have suffered much from sickness.

—The Harbuz states on the authority of a correspondent, that a rumour prevails of Golab Sing's having been assassinated on his way from Jumboo to Lahore. No confirmation of the murder of Herra Sing, reported in a Deli Gazette Extra, and it may turn out to be premature. The death of the wretched Golab Sing would produce a greater effect on the destitute of the Punjab, than the removal of the young and inexperienced Herra Sing. The ashes of Herra Sing and his son, Herra Sing, had arrived at Ludhiana, on their way to the family tomb at Harwar. They were received with every demonstration of military respect.

—The Harbuz observes, that at a grand fifth party given on-board the British Steamer in August last, the Chairman, Sir John Campbell, complained of the little support given to Steam Commemoration by the Indian community, and our contemporary considers this language to have a suspicious air, and to point to the proposed abatement of the Hindostanee steamers from our port, which was mooted some time ago. We have however been given distinctly to understand that at the time when the last Mail left England, not the most distant idea of any such arrangement was entertained by that Company.

—We have extracted from the Harbuz, a well digested summary of the progress made by the Free Protestant Church of Scotland, compiled by the Editor from the various publications received by the last mail.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 22.

—The last Calcutta Gazette gives the names of the Officers whom the Governor General has selected for the command of the Army of Exercise. The subordinate staff is to be filled up by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

—The amount of Bills drawn by the Home authorities on the Calcutta Treasury by the last Mail, amounts to ninety-one lakhs of Rupees. The greater part of this sum is designed to pay the Opium claims, which Parliament has fixed at the rate of about 600 Rupees a chest. This is a far higher sum than the Opium Agents had any reason to expect. The arrival of this large sum will ease, as they say, the money market.

—The Express came in from Bombay yesterday. The Mails by the Victoria reached that Port on the 11th of October, and the Express has been sent on the noon day train.

—We learn from the Star that the Commander-in-Chief landed at Allahabad on the 7th instant, and was received by the Buffs and the left Wing of the 18th Regiment. His Excellency presented new colours to the 37th N. I. in lieu of those which were lost in the disastrous retreat from Cabul. The Regiment was commanded by the brave Major Griffiths, to whom Sir Hugh Gough paid several handsome and well merited compliments on the gallantry he had displayed throughout the whole of the Afghan campaign, and especially on the retreat. Why should it be a rule of the British service, that an officer by falling into the hands of the enemy, though under the most honourable circumstances, should forfeit all claim to any reward for his previous services, however noble and exemplary they may have been?

—Mr. Polymaster South, of H. M. 18th Hussars, has been found by a Court Martial guilty of the embezzlement of large sums of money and sentenced to transportation for seven years.

—Great doubt hangs over the report of Herra Sing's death which the Deli Gazette appears to have published rather prematurely. The last number of the journal now received states, that a report prevailed in the city, that some bankers had written to their friends in the Punjab, to enquire whether Herra Sing was really dead or not, and that the answer was that he was alive. —The 18th half yearly meeting of the Docking Company was held at the office of the Secretary, Rameshjee Cowasjee, Esq. To all appearances, this is the most flourishing Company in Calcutta. It works with a capital of about six lakhs, pays its Shareholders, as it is said, 3000 Rupees a month, and is yet able to divide a profit of sixteen per cent. There were eight gentlemen present and it was unanimously resolved that the accounts were very satisfactory.

—Military stores are daily sent off from the Delhi Magazine to that at Ferozepore.

—General Sir Jasper Nicolls and his family leave Sibhal on the 26th October for Ferozepore on their way to Sind, Bombay and England.

—We republish from the Bombay Times a notice regarding the Panorama of Cabul, by the late Major Kemsaw, of H. M. 18th Foot, and which his widow is anxious, if possible, to exhibit at Tcherah. The Major was one of the most exquisite draftsmen in the relieving army, and we hope that his admirable designs for Major Haycock's "Campaigns," which reached Calcutta a public belief that that work, will not be lost to the world. He had, it appears, sketched a panorama of Cabul in eight sheets, and the last time he was seen by Capt. Souter, he had it along to his back to a table-top. It was the only possession he had saved during the fatal retreat. We fear it is irretrievably lost; but we recommend the appeal of his widow to our readers, in the distant hope that by some unforeseen circumstance it may possibly turn up.

—We also republish a letter which has appeared in the Deli Gazette, to which we invite particular attention. Our readers are aware that it is popularly believed that General Pollock asked General Not to send on a detachment of troops for the rescue of the prisoners at Bameen, and that General Not refused to do so, on which Sir Richard Shakespeare pushed on the Kandahar and Shibhal to the rescue of the prisoners at Bameen. The refusal has generally been attributed to pepse, arising from General Pollock's having installed General Not in the command of Calcutta. General Not's private attention completely upsets this assertion, and places the matter altogether in a new light.

—The sixth Criminal Sessions in the Supreme Court were opened for the present year on Monday last. The Clerk of the Crown appears to have ceased altogether to summon Civilians, who formerly constituted one third of every Grand Jury. On the present list there is not one Civilian; there are three Natives; the rest are Merchants and Agents. The Chief Justice charged the Jury. The number of cases on the Calendar, forty-four, is very considerable, considering that there are now seven sessions instead of four.

—A Deli Gazette Extra received last evening states, that a letter had been received from Locustima, dated the 15th inst., in which it was reported as being verified at that station on what was considered very good authority that Raja Golab Singh had been killed. If so, the only man capable of sustaining the fortune of the British in the petty combats which will end in complete anarchy.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 23.

—The Star has a long and interesting article in this morning's paper on the assembling of the Army of Exercise, which will consist of so many corps as were originally assigned to it before the disturbances in the Punjab broke out. Our contemporary appears to think that work has been set on foot for the Gwalior station, unless the demands of Government should be unconditionally complied with. Any arrangement which should leave a shadow of independence to this worn out despotism, would not be unadvisable. It is time that the whole country was brought under one administration. In every instance in which we have occasion to resort to arms, the occupation of the country should be complete and final.

—We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following sums for the Friend of India:—

G. F. Cookham, Esq. ...	to June, 1844,	44 0
The Drum-Dam Temperance Society, ...	to Sept. 1844,	20 0
J. Sainforth, Esq. ...	to March, 1845,	6 0
Lieut.-Col. T. M. Taylor, ...	to July, 1844,	20 0
Capt. Sir R. Shakespeare, ...	to April, 1844,	20 0
J. Thomson, Esq. ...	to June, 1843,	36 0
Capt. Dewar, ...	to May, 1844,	10 0
F. Taylor, Esq. ...	to Oct. 1844,	20 0
Raboo Gresham Sumad, ...	to March, 1844,	10 0
Capt. J. Mackenzie, ...	to June, 1844,	36 0

The following sums have been received at Madras, by Messrs. Arncliffe and Co., for the Friend of India, from July to Sept. 1845:—

P. Brown, Esq. ...	to May, 1845,	20 0
Capt. J. T. Smith, ...	to July, 1844,	20 0
Capt. J. J. Purvis, Esq. ...	to June, 1844,	20 0
Rev. W. Thompson, ...	to July, 1844,	20 0
D. Mayne, Esq. ...	to July, 1844,	20 0
The Total Abstinence Society of the 1st of M. Regt. Fusiliers, ...	to June, 1845,	34 0
Lieut. W. T. M. ...	to July, 1844,	8 0
Sir H. C. Montgomery, Bart. ...	to July, 1844,	20 0
Capt. R. S. Dobbs, ...	to Dec. 1845,	20 0
Lieut. Col. S. James, ...	to June, 1845,	4 0

direction of Bannan, and having reason to suppose that Mahomed Akbar, after his interview, had fled from the scene, placed himself between his prisoners and Kabal with what troops he could command, considered the force proposed to be sent too small to be of any use, on telling him that if after this opinion he still wished the Brigade to go, to send him the order and it should be so immediately; the only reply to this was that General P., I suppose, would himself and the Brigades with General N. the next morning, which he duly did; at this meeting General N. fully explained his sentiments on the subject and proposed to General P. that the Brigades should go with his whole force; but General P. did not seem to think the movement any longer necessary; however, on his road home, four General N.'s camp he received another note from Bhakpaz, which induced him to send a pencil note to General N. to relieve the force of the Sahibzade force then in the Bala Hills, and another order to his own camp for the Brigade under General Bala immediately to move; this is the true case, let those contradict it who can. General N. received a request from General Pollock (tantamount to an order not to enter Kabal before his Genl. P. could enter with him, but without this request General N., well knowing there was no necessity to expose us, we might as likely mean to harass his men and kill his cattle merely to be able to say he was there first; though, had he been aware of the fact, he would have been wiser to have General P.'s arrival he might have hurried to have his infirmities, as second in command, if possible to prevent it. I allude to the King's death, supported by two British Generals. There has been said about the old Kasse Genl. than it ever was worth; the only remark I have to make about it is, had General N. redoubled orders to bring it on, he would have done so; as he did not, he neither chaps to laugh his men or mortify his soldiers a rotten affair. You never ally Pollock's division left it, that is what galled me.

A LOVER OF TRUTH.

SAVIT HULL—BHOOTAN.

The death of Savit Singh, in connection with his proposed destruction of Shere Singh and his family, a point which the death of the latter has now been settled, will clear up any misunderstanding as to immediate results on our frontier. It may be remembered that he has with some difficulty, on more than one occasion, represented to the British Government on the part of many of those around him to take part in the affairs of Sikkim, and under the defunct Shere Mahomed. That ruler is strongly suspected to be at the head of the disturbances, and the chief released by the restraining power of the late Governor, will be too ready now to give that assistance which he withheld so strenuously, when alive though not disinclined to take a slice of the spoil for himself should an opportunity have occurred. The consequence will probably be the early appearance on the North Western frontier of Sikkim of a considerable force under the command of Shere Mahomed assisted by the Murres and Boogies tribes; and, perhaps, by others still, further to the west. All these points will no doubt attract the attention of our Government and excite the vigilance of their servants on the frontier. In the meantime we have every reason to believe that military preparations of every kind which are already in contemplation, that Lord Ellenborough has positively determined on proceeding as usual to these Provinces, and that so strong is the impression at the British Court that an armed interference will be resorted to, that strenuous efforts are being made by many Officers in that quarter to be able to take the field with an army of the Grand Army, or to speak in more homely language "to come in for a share of the (expected) spoil."—Daily Gazette, Oct. 11.

THE LATE MAJOR KERRAWAY AND THE PANDORA OF CANAL.

We give place to the following from one of those treasured by the daughter in the retreat from Calcutta—a wife made a widow by the death of a patient and enterprising man, and that the relic acquired after a little likely now to be found; but we are anxious to do all within our power to supply with the wishes of our wife—all in this it may be the case, but the attention to recover the memorial of the departed as much possible.

"13, Hatherly Place, Calcutta, July 27, 1845.
 "Sir,—I have your account my old friend, and you, Sir, I am bound to say, to your note, as being one of the authors by the Friend of India; and having a premonition that the possession of Calcutta which was with Major Kerraway, at the time of his death at Calcutta, might be recovered, if money were taken to give it publicity, I hope and trust you will do me the great kindness to have a paragraph inserted in your valuable paper, calling upon the readers of the Friend of India to raise the most interesting moments of Major Kerraway's talents to his sorrowing relatives; and it is only through the medium of the press, both in the European and our languages, that the likelihood of recovery is assisted by our friends. Captain Spots, of H. M. 44th mentions, that the last time he spoke of Major Kerraway, was one of the two last nights of the fatal struggle; he then saw the deceased slung across his shoulders, about the age and firm of a telescope. It was composed of eight sheets of paper, rolled on a piece of wood and covered with wax cloth; it was his only possession, and evidently the only thing he had the power of endeavouring to preserve during the fatal march. I feel assured, any one who possessed such a relic, would resign it in favour of his afflicted relatives; therefore a notice in the Gazettes of Persian and Hindustani languages, might attract the observation of some one who could give some information of the valuable relic. The Indian news of the last month has a paragraph upon the subject—a kindness of the Editor's press—on the subject of the deceased, which we feel most grateful for. Messrs. Smith and Elder taking an interest in our cause, immediately they were informed of the accidental death of Major Kerraway, have sent some favourable remarks from your country and kind expressions, I am, Sir, your obedient servant—

 —Bosley Times, October 11.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BRIGHT SPOT.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Really Mr. Editor this is a bright spot, as the word "Darjeeling" was first interpreted, notwithstanding a sick lady or gentleman may occasionally doubt the fact, when enveloped in a mist, which only the sensible and enterprising "Rancho" can enjoy; but, the climate/who can impugn its salubrity! How quickly the exhausted invalid from the plains, recovers life and energy; within its influence upon the temper, may be justly compared to the "salutary arts," which "emits more, see also some more." All here are gentle, from the dearest Superintendent, to the last "arrival" and none more so, than the Lepcha natives.

The view of Darjeeling, from and above the approach, by the Auckland road, on a snowy forenoon, is blithe and pictorial, extending along a knobby spur, and surrounded at a distance, by mountains, 9 or 10,000 feet high, with the glorious Snowy Range, rising upon a notion of the horizon, like a bright supernatural bulwark. Among the dwellings of our dear countrymen, pitched as various churches, stands conspicuous the imposing Hotel of Mr. Wilson; while at the upper extremity of the mountain, on a picturesque elevation, may be seen the admired ruin of a Buddhist monastery. The English Church, which is now in preliminary progress, will soon arrest the gratified view of the Christian exile, and will cost some 8,000 Rupees, furnishing twelve dozen sittings.

The roads adjoining the settlement already extend about 18 miles, and exhibit many a transverse view of cyprus beauty and magnificence, amidst the surrounding mountain scenery. The dense, undecorated towns with fruit and other useful products; and in this respect, Darjeeling probably stands pre-eminent among Himalayan Stations. The numerous gushing springs in the vicinity already attract fair votaries of the Hydropathic system, and a drooping Lily or Narcissus may be met, extending from the pure waters, with renewed life and grace. Another blessing, agency and incidents as there, it is not surprising that a warm son of Eden with his heart full of the graceful beauty of his native land, should become passionately enamoured of Darjeeling. Indeed in a moment of poetic enthusiasm, he was heard to murmur something about a rival Nile, to be entitled "Narcissus repined," which it is to be hoped, in respect to his signs of our immortal youth he will despise.

To lend dignity to this otherwise fugitive sketch, I must here introduce a statistical paragraph. The number of adult Europeans at Darjeeling this year, may be stated as 80—7 civilians, 15 military, 7 medical, 9 clerical, 30 domestic, and about 25 Indian, of whom 17 are present. These, a beautiful and flattering figure, has been to constitute a bouquet, consisting of the following flowers:—Hortensia, Sweet William, Hyacinth, Jonquille, Daffodil, Lupine, Magnolia, Lily of the Valley, Myrtle, Honeysuckle, Woodbine, Rhododendron, Lavender, Hawthorn, Orange-blossom, Heliotrope, and the Double (red) Dahlia. Amongst these pretty flowers all, I beg to prefer the first named!

Accommodation, and Provisions have been tolerably commensurate to the wants of the Public this year, and will probably be on a much improved scale, next; for which, efforts are now making; but, a hint to families may not be out of place here, viz. to bring up goods enough to supply milk for children, and kid flesh. Furnished Rooms are now to be had by the mile; and as this mode of accommodation is found to be popular, it is probable that more Houses will be built upon the same plan.

Touching the approach to Darjeeling from the Westward, by water, it may be recommended to enter the River Mahanadga, opposite to Rajmahal; and to ascend the Purnabab, eight miles below Malda to Dinapore (when the quantity of water in this river will permit) whence staging Dinapore offered to Wilem. The usual water-carrier recommended, is that by the Mahanadga to Daulganga, and thence to Titaley, by land; but, on this road, Dinapore are not yet crossed, though contemplated, and it is probable that in the course of next year, with this route and that from Calcutta Ghat on the Ganges opposite to Poor Point, via Purnabab and Titaley, will be facilitated to travellers.

In conclusion I must commend to future visitors, a Guide to Travellers by Mr. C. published by Messrs. S. Smith and Co., containing much useful and interesting information; though it may be observed, that two instead of four Rupees, will be considered by the Public, a sufficient price for it.

Darjeeling, October 12th, 1845.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

THE REMOVED ATROPHIED VIBRATOR FOR MALTA.—We quite approve of the observations of our contemporary the Portuguese on the removal of an "Apostolic View" for Malta, who is not to be a Maltese, and who, it is also added, is of the present Bishop of Malta. The demands of religious strife are already sufficiently abundant in Malta, and most directly irritating, without new importations. Indeed, it is difficult to conjecture where it will end, if not in some bad business, within the next twelve months, the very hot-bed, odour, and force, of religious and sectarian debate, division, and clamour. The causes of this disposition. Some of them have been frequently laid before the public in this journal, so we shall not repeat them. We are, therefore, most decidedly opposed to the introduction of an English or Irish Bishop into Malta, being perfectly persuaded that if such a measure were adopted it will be impossible to carry on the civil government of the island. Already, during the last year, if the truth is to be ascertained, the public peace has been threatened by ecclesiastical dissensions. We trust, then, to see the new Governor act himself most determinedly against the introduction of this new element of religious discord and dissension to the peace of the inhabitants—reminding him, above all other things, that the intellect of the people is not strong, or mature enough for such theological discussions. We trust that the appointment by the Court of Rome of such an embassy, or more properly, such a View as a permanent resident in Malta, and especially the character of the native Maltese clergy, clearly intimating that they are not capable of managing the affairs of their own Church, on imposition upon them, they have a right to sit down and refuse to do so, and to refuse with all their might. But besides this, the ecclesiastical are supposed to have submitted to other men, and are consequently subservient to the native clergy, despising in destroying all emulation in them, and, in fact, removing all the motives of an honorable competition for the great prize of the Bishops. Moreover, as English prelates can never be so well acquainted with the wants and feelings of the people as a native prelate, Rome would hardly send a Maltese bishop to Ireland, or to England; then why send a stranger here? . . . The case is not very dissimilar. But shall we let out the mouth of the bag, if we allow it? If you prefer the phrase: Rome knows that a native bishop is more submissive (shall we say respectful?) to Government, and still some months past, we shall, at least, to send out an ecclesiastic to Malta, who shall be a rival with the civil power, and who shall support the Government of the island with the military Commander-in-Chief. This is the best state of the case so far as Rome is concerned. With the Maltese, as a nation, there can be no sympathy between this Court and them. The Maltese, however, on the other hand, grateful for the bloodshed of a few Government, and proud of that flag which waves only over freedom, and comparing their own civil and paternal Government with the neighbouring countries of the Mediterranean, are convinced of the immense superiority of British rule, and are unwilling to disturb the amicable social relations between themselves and Englishmen, and still some months past, we shall have had almost the case, they have their religion and their rights protected and honored. We expect to see a Petition from the Maltese clergy, protesting against this projected invasion of the Court of Rome.—Malta Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

COMMERCIAL.—During the month of August the manufacturers in Lonsdale have been in the work, as compared with the same month of the year, generally speaking, throughout the country there has been more business done at any previous period during the present year.

East India and Colonial produce, however, has not made any corresponding advance, considering the very low prices to which all kinds had arrived. The stock of pepper in Government warehouses, and will probably reach £16,000,000, gold being a trifle dearer in London than in any other part of Europe. Money therefore, is still easy, at 3½ per cent. no terrible scarcity has been experienced, and the market shows an increasing trade, and this, aided by a bountiful harvest, makes us to anticipate that our future reports under this head will be more cheering than we so feebly feared. The weather has been a trifle past. We venture also to indulge a hope that the spirit of wild and reckless speculation abroad has been laid, and that the market will be conducted on with caution, remembering the large stocks on hand in this country, and that it must be so some time before any outlet can be depended on to considerably reduce them.

Failures in the Iron trade are of daily occurrence, but the price has advanced 10s. per ton; the prevailing opinion is that many more limited orders will be brought down.

Since the foregoing was in print we have an arrival from America, and the following paragraph, which appears in one of the New York papers, and is generally considered to be worthy of credit, has been read with much interest by the merchants in the city:—

"Gotton, low as its price has been in England, has yielded this year a better return relative to the cost of its production than in some former years, when the prices in England were 50 per cent. higher than now. The cheapness of supplies, and bagging and labor, and the increased interest of the planters in the United States in putting corn and other crops in connection with cotton, have produced this result. They have borne the depression of price incident upon a crop 50 per cent. greater than that of the previous year, and much less injury than could have been expected."

An American correspondent of the Times warns the public that the United States are not a democracy, which the people of the United States are unable to check, and for which they must provide employment, the area of plantations must be increased every year through the agency of the planters, and the section of the Union. To such a degree, he says, is the extent already progressing, that even bad weather will not suffice to occasion what is called a "short crop."—London Times.

LORD ABERDEEN.—We understand that the Earl of Aberdeen, on an application by the Rev. Mr. Manson and the adherents to the Free Church in Fyvie, for a site on which to build a church, has, in the most liberal manner, refused to grant the same, expressing his willingness to grant a site on any part of his property that may be most suitable for this purpose.—Colchester Mercury.

On Tuesday week a grand fire took place at Marlborough Hall, in the city of Salisbury, in W. W. Shalhouse, Esq., the proprietor, celebrating the 100th year of his age. The "Centenarian," we are happy to say, was in the best health and spirits on the occasion. The attendance consisted partly of the principal families of Selford, and the numbers assembled on the domain were variously estimated at from 8,000 to 10,000 persons. A dinner was given to the Gentlemen of the Household, and the poor were also feasted upon the occasion. In the course of the day sports were taken place on Marlborough Common, and the day's proceedings went off in the greatest order, and the day was a most successful one in the afternoon was unexceptional.—Salisbury Post.

LIBRARY OF THE LATE DUKE OF SOMERSET.—Among the various editions of the Bible in the library of the late Duke of Somerset, there are many Bibles collected by means of their country; but the most valuable is the same collection of the Bible of the Bishop's quire modern date, especially interesting in point of provenance, and much more than its intrinsic value. It is a copy of a Bible printed a few years ago by Messrs. Taylor, of Fleet-street, with translations of some by Gualterius. There are only three known copies in existence; one of which is the copy in question, and another is in the possession of Colonel Tynte, at Haverhill. The notes are copious, learned, and explanatory. The circumstances of there being no less than 100 copies to be in existence of a Bible which happened at the printers soon after the copies had been struck off, whereby all were destroyed but three, which had been removed accidentally in the early part of the day, the Duke's copy was presented to him by Colonel Tynte, who was fortunate in obtaining one of the others for his own library. The Italian edition, from which the notes have been taken, is said to be also very recent. It is believed that Colonel Tynte intends to publish the notes by themselves, with references to the passages to which they apply; and thus the country will have a benefit of which it is deprived only by an accidental casualty.—Times.

LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER RAILWAY COMPANY.—The Twenty-third Half-yearly Meeting of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway Company was held last week at the Exchange Buildings, Liverpool, for the purpose of declaring a dividend out of the profits of the undertaking. The Half-yearly Report set out by saying that the Directors would have been happy if they could have presented a more favorable report of the traffic for the last six months. In the merchandise department the receipts did not differ materially from those of the corresponding six months of last year, but in the coal department there was a falling off of nearly 50,000 tons. The accounts showed the receipts to be as follows:—In the coal department, £1,240,000, 10s. 6d.; coal duty, £1,052, 6s. 11d.; total, £2,292, 6s. 11d. The total expenses were £1,977, 10s. 6d., leaving a net profit for the year of £7,000, 11s. 7d. By the statement it appeared that the net profit for the half-year amounted to £7,022, 11s. 6d., to which must be added the surplus for the last half-year (after paying the income tax), £2,081, 14s. 3d.; a dividend to which the Directors recommended the appropriation of £1,247, 13s. 2d. from the reserved fund for that purpose, making a disposable sum of £6,042, 10s. 6d. out of a sum of £18,000 shares entitled to a dividend. The Directors accordingly recommended that amount of dividend to the proprietors.—Record.

MANCHESTER AND BOLTON RAILWAY.—The Half-yearly Report of the Directors shows that the total receipts for the half-year have been £17,181, leaving after the payment of expenses, a disposable sum of £10,192, equal to a dividend of 17s. 6d. per share on the £100,000 of the half-year. An account of the profit is likely to accrue from the opening of the Bolton and Preston Railway, which took place in June last, but retrospective of sources of trade, there had been a considerable improvement in the last compared with the results of preceding half-years.—Ibid.

GEORGE THE THIRD.—The King being on the pier-head at Weymouth, about to embark in the Royal George, on his sailing trip, turned round to Mr. Pitt, who was in attendance at his elbow, having probably hurried down from London for assecuration an important business, and exclaimed, "I am not this day forty, but I feel like a man of 100. I am like you in your arms, Pitt—like him in your arms. Charming child, isn't he? Then writing the action to the word, he made the stiff and solemn Prince of Wales, who was seated there, to look at him with a smile and his pretty boy and carry him some merriment in his arms, albeit strange and unusual to such a burden. The circumstance, though trivial, had no small effect on the old monarch's mind, and it was a circumstance with which the formal Minister performed his compelled part of duty, as to make an impression on the King's mind, by the thought that even years old himself, which time has never effaced. Pitt, although not doubt flattered by his master's childish remarks, which expressed him to the up-approver of the old monarch's mind, and it was a circumstance of great importance to the Royal Society, to whom the same of old great grandsons, put the heart's continuance he would on the matter; but, little thought, no doubt, that the infirm he was required to move would be so very distant time had the effect of the same high official post which he then occupied—the Chancellorship of the Exchequer.—Life of Lord Sydney.

BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY.—The tip and down passenger, said to be the longest and the longest in the world, is to be constructed on the Birmingham and Stratford Railway, and the whole distance being accomplished in four hours and a-half. For this increased speed, and for the fact that the train will consist of 100 trains (to be composed wholly of first-rate carriages) will offer, it is intended to charge an additional 2d. per passenger. To this there can be no objection, seeing that the Birmingham Railway will be conveyed by this train. It has been thus arranged at the urgent request of many of the nobility and the higher classes of society, and merchants and others, who are willing to pay an extra price for extra speed and comfort.—Railway Times.

MRS. MAJESTY'S STATE BALL.—We understand that 1,200 cards of invitation for Mrs. Majesty's last state ball for the season of the year have been sent to number attended. The Board of General Commissioners, who have granted six penny tickets to every churchman and servant in attendance on the company, which were exchanged at the Royal Palace, have the honor of presenting and refreshments to the amount at the taverns and public houses in the neighbourhood of the Palace.—Times.

EXPERIMENT TO THE PRINCE OF WALES.—On Thursday evening last, Her Majesty was pleased to command the attendance of two celebrated Welsh harpists (Mr. Jones, of Llanerch, harper to Sir Benjamin Hall, and Mr. Griffiths, the harper of Tredegar), at Buckingham Palace, where the harp of the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the Rev. Mr. Price, Vicar of Cardigan, one of the four learned quater of the Principality, was appointed with the splendid Welsh harp, made by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff, the chief harp-maker of Wales, expressly for the Royal Highness Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales, before Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their illustrious visitors. At the same time, the

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 461, Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2nd. 1849.

[Price 3 C's. Rs. monthly, or 30 Rs. yearly if paid in advance.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL has resolved again to proceed to the Western Provinces after a residence of less than four months among us, without having accepted the invitation of the Civilian to a public entertainment. They will thus learn the value of being earlier in the field when his Lordship again returns to the Presidency, and is prepared to receive the congratulations of the public service.

Lord Ellenborough's departure appears to be sudden, without being unexpected. After his declaration at one of the public dinners that his proper place was by the side of the Commander-in-Chief, more especially when any work had been carried out for our military friends, it was naturally to be expected that the departure of his Excellency for the Army of Exercise would be followed by that of his Lordship. The recent journey of the Governor General's Military Secretary, to the same destination, was regarded by the discrediting as an index of his Master's intentions which could not be mistaken; and so it has turned up.

Lord Ellenborough returns to the North Western Provinces divested of all the circumstances of their internal administration. During his previous residence there, he combined in his own person the office of Governor General of India and of Lieut. Governor of the Agra Presidency; but he has entirely altered the character of the administration by separating the duties of Deputy Governor of Bengal and Lieut. Governor of the North West, from the post of Governor General, and by reserving himself exclusively for the Political and Military responsibilities of the Empire. Through the arrangement has been made the subject of animadversion, and will in all probability come under the revision of Parliament during the next Session,—that is if O'Connell and Reboon, should leave that assembly any leisure—yet in our humble apprehension, it appears to be reasonable and beneficial. Any inconveniences it may entail appear to be outweighed by its substantial advantages. It is perfectly absurd to crowd on the Governor General all those details of business to which he can give no adequate attention without injury to the general interests of the Empire. It is the dictate of common sense to place the internal economy of the country under the direction of men who have a thorough and comprehensive knowledge of it. This overloading of the Governor General with the minutiae of business is the last relic of the Commercial system of the Company, under which the Chief of the Factory was mixed up with the details of all its transactions. In this country the Head of the Government ought to occupy the same position in the administration, which the Premier does in the administration of Great Britain, and should be burdened with no duties which it would be considered preposterous to cast upon that functionary.

On the present occasion, when large political questions have arisen out of the revolution at Gwalior, and yet larger questions may grow out of that in the Punjab, it seems eminently proper that the Governor General should be on the spot, to direct every diplomatic and military movement, and to provide for every emergency as it may arise. As it regards Gwalior, it is to be hoped that the vigour and decision which have marked his Lordship's career, may be displayed in putting that state out of a condition to give us any future annoyance or disquietude. It would be a matter much to be deplored if any half measure should be pursued in reference to it, or if the present opportunity of giving to its oppressed inhabitants the benefit of a British administration, be neglected. It is time that the independence of those principalities should cease, and their chiefs be consigned to the indolent repose of a pension, for which alone they are fit.

THE PUNJAB.—There is nothing new from the Punjab. The only intelligence received from thence since our last issue is, that our previous news was unfounded. Duleep Sing has not abandoned the throne, and taken refuge in our territories, with the celebrated Diamond. Lena Sing has not murdered Hoera Sing; both are alive, and hearty; conducting the administration in union, perhaps in harmony, and General Ventura is apparently Commander in Chief. Golsing has not been murdered, except in the papers; neither is he within three days march of the Capital, with 30,000 men; but is said to have returned to his family domains in Jumboo, if indeed he ever left them. The announcement that he had quitted that country to march on Lahore, always looked doubtful, for his hold on it is so entirely dependent on his own presence, that after he had accompanied our troops through the Khyber, he was obliged to leave the army on the well founded plea that he dared not continue long absent from Jumboo, lest his refractory mountaineers should subvert his authority. He is more likely to allow matters at Lahore to take their course, than to risk the loss of his rich and unmanageable principality, by absconding himself from it. He is too wise to exchange his real sovereignty in the Hills for any divided rule at the Capital. He will not drop the substance to grasp at the shadow.

The Government at Lahore is for the present strong; the troops, whose importance and arrogance is always doubled on the occurrence of a revolution, are said to be clamorous for higher pay and gratuities, and may upset the present administration; but as yet it is sufficiently vigorous, to maintain its external relations of amity, which is all we have to look at. There is no opening for the wedge of our ambition. It is quite possible that Peshawar may again pass under the dominion of the Afghans; but our own frontier has not been violated, nor have our allies been insulted. All that we can do therefore is to station a strong force to watch the fords of the Sutledge. Meanwhile the Governor General and the Commander in Chief will possibly find sufficient occupation, on the banks of the Jumna, in reviewing the Army of Exercise, and preparing it to assist, we hope, at the obsequies of the House of Scindia.

THE COOLY TRAMM AGAIN.—Since the issue of our last number, the draft of an Act has been published which originates that after the 1st of March next, Coolies shall be shipped only from the Port of Calcutta, and that an Emigration Agent shall be appointed there on the part of the Government of the Mauritius. The Governor General is so anxious to carry the Act through, that he has suspended the rule which requires the publication of the Draft two months before the Act is passed. Yet, strange to say, the Act itself is not to come into operation for nearly four months. We can divine no other cause for this extreme haste and subsequent delay, than the desire to allow those who have made arrangements for the collection and shipment of Coolies at Madras and Bombay sufficient time for winding up their affairs. If the Ports had been originally opened on the system which was guaranteed by the Privy Council, no such concession of time to the Cooly Merchants, would have been requisite. Their vocation has grown out of a breach of public faith, which cannot be palliated. It will of course be their business to make the most of the three months and twenty days which the new Act allows them—and it will be the duty of Capt. Rogers and Mr. Fraser, to exercise more than ordinary vigilance to prevent abuses.

The Act grows, of course, out of the suggestion of Mr. Anderson, the Cooly Protector, who has been sent up from the Mauritius, after ten months of inaction, on a special Mission to Bengal; and we regret much to see the selfishness which appears to characterize the proposed law. The only reason given for now carrying into effect that part of the original design which provided for the appointment of an emigration Agent at the port of embarkation, and which was held out as a remedy for the abuses which had rendered the older trade intolerable, is, that a sufficient number of women had not been sent with the men! The abuses which have grown out of the neglect of this appointment do not seem to have occurred, since the smallest disquietude, and are not so much as hinted at. It would appear as though the Mauritius Government, suspecting that if the emigration had been at once placed under the charge of a responsible agent, the wants of the island would not be supplied as rapidly as the planters desired, have been quite content to leave the provision of Coolies to individual cupidity, however revolting might be the abuses which it engendered. The Mauritius Authorities appear to have waited till the island was sufficiently stocked with labourers collected under a system of private agency, before any check was placed on these proceedings. And its present interference has no respect to the interests of the Coolies; it is publicly declared to arise from an exclusive attention to those of the island. It was found that the supply of twenty thousand coolies had cost the colony fourteen lakhs of Rupees, and that as the men had in general come without their families, and would claim their privilege of return at the end of five years, an annual expenditure of 30, or 40,000*l.* would be necessary to keep up the complement. It is on this ground that the Mauritius Government appears to have sent round an Agent to make arrangements for stopping all further emigration, unless the men would be induced to take their families with them, and thus hold out a hope of their settling in the island. We will not affirm that such is the reasoning on which the Colonial Government has been induced to appoint an Agent in Calcutta, and to call for an act restricting emigration to those who should obtain a passport from him. But such is the plain and obvious reading of the new law. It would have been far more discreet to have kept these selfish considerations out of view altogether, and simply to have stated that, whereas the original plan of the Ministry made provision for the appointment of an Emigration Agent, and whereas the neglect of this provision had revived the old abuses, he it enacted that no port shall be open to the export of Coolies but that of Calcutta, and that no labourer shall be exported from thence but under a certificate from the Emigration Agent to be appointed by the Mauritius Government. That Agent might then have quietly rejected the application of all those who were not willing to expatriate themselves for ever with their wives and children. As the Act now stands, the Legislative Council, which ought to have had the interests of this country primarily in view, appears to have closed its eyes upon the injury which has been inflicted on the island, and to have based its legislative enactment only on the interests of the Crown Colony, by proposing to pass an act, the chief object of which is to part for ever with those who may embark for the Mauritius.

DARJELING.—In the letter which we published last week from Darjeling, there was one sentence with regard to the journey thither to which we think the public authorities of the place should direct their attention. We allude to the idea thrown out that those who were desirous of visiting might hasten for by the Steamer to Calcutta might opposite to Port Pointe, and then proceed by land through Purneah to the Hills.

The greatest obstacle to the free resort of visitors, whether from the Western or the Southern provinces to the Sanatorium is presented by the difficulty of approaching it. We are told that a bullock cart will carry one as far as there is water carriage from Calcutta in twenty or twenty-five days; but nothing can be more wearisome and disheartening than a trip by water, in a bullock cart, to the foot of the Hills. It may also be reached by land in five days; but an invalid cannot bear a hundred and twenty hours' unceasing jolting in an uneasy palanquin, with the certainty of being waked out of sleep every two hours by the boaters demanding their bacshis, which in many cases we fear the only reward they receive for months from the Dark Moon—besides for their labour. It was suggested at the first establishment of the Sanatorium that facilities should be created for a conveyance by land from the nearest point which the Steamers could reach, and which we now find is Cargahat Ghaut, just a hundred miles from the foot of the Hills. But this consideration has been entirely overlooked, and we are only now told that provisions will shortly be made for the convenience of visitors, from that point to the Sanatorium. We are convinced that no time should be lost in giving effect to this design in as much as it will furnish an inducement to resort to Darjeling as the place has never yet enjoyed, and thereby increase the popularity of the bright spot. Without such an arrangement, indeed, we think it must soon yield to its great rival in Ceylon, Nuwara Eelia or Nuwara—We wish our brethren in the island could be induced to adopt this more euphonious and classical designation.

Darjeling and Nuwara are equally described as enjoying a climate altogether heavenly. At both places the visitor finds himself again among the breezy breezes and in the lovely scenery of his native land. A pilgrim to Nuwara embarks on a Steamer in Calcutta, with a hundred of his fellow countrymen and women, and enjoys a delightful sea voyage to Galle, where he meets with a comfortable inn, and a stage coach, which drives him at once to the new paradise. It is difficult to fancy anything, not merely more free from inconvenience but more positively delightful, than the journey from Calcutta to the Sanatorium in Ceylon. Contrast with this the tedious, the insupportable voyage by water in a bullock cart to Dinapore, and then the transfer; or the palanquin, in order to reach Darjeling; or the still more intolerable dark journey for an invalid from Calcutta to that spot. To place the journey to the two settlements on something like an equality, it is necessary that arrangements should be made for the visitor to enjoy the convenience of a steam trip to Cargahat Ghaut, and an easy land journey from thence to the Bright Spot. We throw out these remarks for the consideration of those who take an interest in the Sanatorium. The Hindustan has brought back some of the visitors from Nuwara, who are extravagant, if that be possible, in their praise of that residence, and whose descriptions are likely to do injury to Darjeling, unless the inconveniences now experienced in the transit can be removed.

THE CALCUTTA POST OFFICE.—The Bombay Times has been making himself merry at the expense of the Directors. In an article headed "Slow Coaches of the Calcutta Press" which will be found in another column, he has copied the Post Office Notification by which the public is guided, as it respects the postage of letters sent by the Steamers, and apostrophizes Mr. Oldfield, heretofore Post Master, in this strain: "Now good Mr. Oldfield, you must be a very old, a very forgetful fellow indeed, if the date of your knowledge of Post office matters extends no farther than the 27th of May 1840," which is the date of the last notification regarding steam postage. Every body, except the Post Master General, knows that it was promulgated on the 6th of July last, that the French Government had reduced the postage of a letter from 2s. 8d. to 1s. 8d. We say that the Post Master General is ignorant of the charge, because it is not to be supposed, if he had seen cognizant of it, that he would have lost a single day in giving the public official information of so gratifying a reduction. We allude to the change at the time, and expressed a hope that the Notification, weekly published in the Calcutta Gazette, would be modified; but the suggestion produced no result.

If the Bombay Times had paid due attention to the state of circumstances here he would have ceased to wonder that the most distinguished man of letters, as he facetiously designates the Post Master General, should continue to publish an obsolete rate of postage. Does he really require to be informed that the pay and the duties of that office have long since been divorced; the duties being conducted by the Deputy, and the pay drawn by the Chief? Every one in the city of Palaces knows that the office of Post Master General is almost the only remaining vestige in the service. If, opposition of our Government that, notwithstanding any other, the efficient management of standing all its best of superior light and which requires a long and arduous experience, it must be the Post Office; yet we have had five Post Masters General, within the last five years, of whom one had been a Commissioner of Revenue, two Chief and Session Judges, and one a Magistrate. It is therefore to be self evident that the office is filled up on the principle of its being more adapted for the man, than the man for it. In England, the situation of Post Master General is usually considered an honorary office; and it would have been pleasing if we could have regarded it in that light in this country; but Government has deprived us of that satisfaction, by turning it on two occasions into a penal appointment, and thrusting into it, much against their inclination, two public servants who had incurred its displeasure. We trust this explanation will sufficiently account to our Western Contemporary for the notification of 1840, which has afforded him so much amusement.

We must however remind him that he is altogether wrong in laying any portion of the blame of this egregious omission on Mr. Oldfield, who has long ceased to have any connection with the Post Office, and is now Opiam Agent in Behar. Since the date of that notification, there have been two Post Masters, upon the heads of whom rest the censure of having allowed his predecessor's Notice to stand so long after the arrangement it announces had been superseded.

NEW CRIMINAL CODE.—One of the London Papers of August last states that the Law Commission in Calcutta was about to present Government with a new Criminal Code. It is difficult to account for the origin of this rumour, unless we trace it to the pleasantry of some mischievous wag, anxious to cast ridicule on that body. It is quite true that the only complete work of the Law Commission was a Criminal Code, drawn up under the superintendence of Mr. Macaulay; but though it was finished more than six years ago, and transmitted to the Home Government, nothing has since been heard of it. The labour of three years, the result of an expenditure exceeding 70,000*l.* has been treated with the most disgraceful neglect; and now that the office of the Commissioners is about—as they say—to be included in the bills of mortality, we are informed that they are about to give birth to a second Code!

If however the Commission should be dissolved without completing a Code of Criminal Jurisprudence for this country, there will be just reason to complain that public money to an extent of not less than 200,000*l.* has been very ill bestowed. We fully admit the value of its labours in the collection and digest of evidence relative to the state of Slavery in the East, though even in this important matter, we have got rid of the evil, not by following its advice and making it the object of legislation, but by averting it from the face of the land. But if there was any one subject to which the exertions of such a Commission ought to have been primarily and uninterruptedly directed, and which it should not be allowed to separate without completing, it was assuredly the formation of a Code of Criminal Jurisprudence, which should give to India the benefit of European research and improvement in this department of legislation, and relieve it from the incubus of that barbarous and antiquated system of Mohammedan law, under which it groans. It was long the only remaining vestige in the service. If, opposition of our Government that, notwithstanding any other, the efficient management of standing all its best of superior light and knowledge, it continued to administer a system of criminal law, so far behind the civilised institutions of the age; and we naturally looked to the labours of the Law Commission to relieve our administration from this obloquy. But to all present appearances, the Commission will be abolished without having effected this necessary improvement. With the extinction of this body, all hope of obtaining a Criminal Code worthy of the age and of the Government, must, we fear, be altogether relinquished. It is scarcely probable that another body, with the same knowledge, leisure and aptitude for this great national undertaking, can be again assembled. We have therefore no other prospect before us, but that of continued subjection to a system of Criminal Jurisprudence, which has no other recommendation, than that it may be retained without exertion.

We cannot better indicate the bitterness of disappointment which arises from this prospect, than by referring to the two most recent anomalies which have been exposed to view. Not long since, a young East Indian was brought up before the Magistrate in a district not far from Allahabad, on a charge of having destroyed the domestic peace of another parish. If the public report be true, the fault lay quite as much with the husband as with the transgressor; but to that circumstance we have nothing to say. The East Indian was by religion a Christian. In his infancy he had, to our certain knowledge, received Christian baptism, after the most approved form, from the hands of an Episcopally ordained Clergyman. Of his creed there could therefore be no doubt. Yet he has been tried by the Mahomedan law, and by that Code sentenced to two years' imprisonment, which, we hear, is now undergoing. The sentence has excited much astonishment and some indignation in the neighbourhood; but we question whether the Law is not more in fault than the Judge.

The second instance is recorded in the Report of the State of the Police for the first six months of 1841, just published. "The prisoner was found in the act of murdering an infirm old man on the borders of a tank for the sake of the plunder. The law Officer of the Session, — the Mahomedan Maulavee, — was of opinion that the stick with which the crime was committed, was below the standard weight for murderous weapons, as prescribed in the Koran." A reference was made to the Nizamut Court, and the prisoner was sentenced to imprisonment for life. Well does the Superintendent of Police exclaim: "I really do not comprehend why these absurdities of the Mahomedan Law are at the present time attended to or allowed to interfere with the punishment of a murderer. Here is a man caught in the act of murder red handed, and because the bamboo with which he killed an infirm old man is not of a certain weight, the crime is declared by the Maulavee tantamount to culpable homicide punishable at the discretion of the Court, and a sentence of perpetual imprisonment, instead of death, is passed in compliance with the grave absurdity of the Mahomedan Law Officer."

It was to remedy these glaring and unjust anomalies in our Criminal Jurisprudence that the Law Commission was undoubtedly established. It was to prevent the trial of Christians, in cases of abduction, by Mahomedan Law; to prevent the determination of the crime of murder by the weight of the instrument, and other such like absurdities that an expression of establishment of Law Commissioners was put up by the Whig Government. If after nine years of labour, that Commission should be suppressed without having accomplished this part of its vocation, leaving us still under the rule of a barbarous legislation, and that through the mismanagement of the Home Authorities, by whom the appointments are made and to whom alone the Commission is amenable for its labours, — they will have no right to censure the local authorities, for permitting the same waste of time and money in any department confided to their responsibility.

THE KHOOND CHILDREN. — We have received a letter from the northern Division of the Madras Presidency relative to the disposal of the children rescued from the Khoonds, which, it appears safer for us to give in substance in our own words. Our correspondent exonerates the Madras Government from all censure in this matter; and states that it is understood as a fact, that the petition written some months ago to the Governor of Madras is still in the Agent's office at Ganjam. He expresses a hope that as that officer is about to proceed shortly to England, his successor may be more alive to the cause of humanity. He says it is customary to talk of the rescued victim as children, but that many of them have grown up under the charge of the Tahsildar of Goomoor to be men and women, and that the manner in which many of the latter have been allowed to run wild, is revolting. It was currently known at the station that one of the young women threatened to hang herself if she was not given away in marriage, and so convinced was the officer in charge, of the sincerity of her intentions, that there was a general search among the many boys for a volunteer husband. A boy was recently made over to a man who called himself a Christian, but who immediately discredited him and made him a Mahomedan. He adds that although the victims may be freely distributed among the officers as servants, or made over to the sepoy who convert them into Hindoos or Mahomedans, yet as soon as the subject of making them over to Christian Missionaries is mooted, the pledge of non-interference with the faith of the natives, that standing bug-bear of our Government, is immediately raised.

We give these statements as we have received them, in the hope that public attention will be drawn to the subject, and that the disposal of the victims will no longer be left to individual discretion, but that the Madras Government will imperiously provide for their intellectual and spiritual improvement, and thus consummate the good work of humanity which it has begun. Our correspondent suggests that it might be an advantage to that cause, if the Court of Directors were to require of the Agent, who is about to return to England, an account of the temporal and spiritual condition of the children who have been rescued, and of the measures which have been adopted to promote their welfare. We believe no such enquiry will be necessary. The matter may be left with perfect confidence to the benevolent sympathies of the Marquis of Tweeddale. The fact that an application to the Madras Government has been detained by the local Agent for many months, will at once open the Lordship's eyes to the state of the case, and point out the necessity of some stringent provisions on the subject. What benefit might not have been conferred on these poor children, if the local officers had been imbued with the same generous feelings which dictated the plans for their rescue?

The Madras Spectator, writing on the subject of the Khoond sacrifices, censures us for having overlooked the facts which "he brought especially to our notice" in an article which appeared on the 18th of September last. We have many apologies to offer him for this neglect, which arose entirely from inadvertence. In the crowd of papers which came in simultaneously with that number, it was accidentally overlooked. We have now much pleasure in reprinting it.

However anxious we may be to keep within the limits of the law of libel, not merely as it may be legally construed, but in its moral acceptation, we are equally anxious to discharge our duty as public journalists, without fear or hesitation. We will therefore venture to say that there does not appear to exist among the local authorities on the Khoond borders, the same sense of the responsibility which begins with the rescue of the victims of that horrid superstition, which pervades the minds of the Christian community in our own land, whose influence is as unquestionable as it is beneficial. From all we can learn, they do not appear to be alive to the duty of training up these victims in a manner becoming men who enjoy the privileges of Britons and Christians. There is large room for the interposition of the public authorities at Madras; perhaps we should speak more correctly were we to say that there is large necessity for it. An indifference to the intellectual improvement and spiritual welfare of the Natives may be perfectly compatible with the most praiseworthy discharge of official duties. The man who first brought the Madras Government into that unhalloved connection with the shrines of idolatry, which has covered it with such obloquy, was doubtless an efficient public servant, and, if one had doubted his Christianity, would probably have sent him a challenge.

As it regards the reduction, and, if possible, the extermination, of these diabolical sacrifices, there are two plans which offer a prospect of success; the one is that of establishing a paramount authority throughout the hills; but this is all but impracticable, on account of their extreme unhealthiness, which is so fatal to the European constitution. The other is that of stopping the supplies of victims, which are drawn chiefly from the plains, where our authority is omnipotent. But the claims of humanity have hitherto been defeated by an over-scrupulous attention to what are considered the claims of justice. Owing to the forms of the Courts, and the difficulty of obtaining legal evidence, the offenders or crimps of the Khoonds, have generally managed to escape punishment. It is necessary to arm the local officers in the Collectories of Ganjam and Vingannam with summary powers to punish on the spot, all persons detected in kidnapping and selling children for the Moris service. If this power is used in the spirit in which it was given, it would effectually dry up the source of the evil.

The Spectator states that the draft of an Act for conferring suitable powers on the public officers in those districts, was prepared three or four months ago and transmitted to Calcutta, and he advises us to look sero ante, and ascertain why this proposed Act has been allowed to slumber. In his editorial remarks of the 11th of October he also affirms that more than two months have elapsed "since a strong remonstrance was sent from Madras for a complete suppression, according to the Court's orders — from all idolatrous institutions, and from all affairs connected with the temple, and that the papers, instead of receiving the prompt attention which their nature demanded, have been left slumbering in the archives of the Government of India. We have already," says he, "borne the burden of this reproach long enough; if there is farther delay, the Friend will acknowledge the justice of placing it on a different shoulder."

Of course, as we do, implicit confidence in the statements of our contemporary, we have no hesitation in saying that he has effectually taken the blame off the shoulders of the Madras Government, and placed it upon those of the Government of India. Why the arrangement for the entire separation of the British official authorities at Madras from idiosyncratic connections has been delayed in Calcutta for two months, or why the Act for the more effectual suppression of human sacrifices has remained unnoticed for four months, it is not for us to divine. Lord Ellenborough is upon the spot, and legislation need not slumber, more especially as there is a Legislative Member, encumbered with no other duty but that of drawing up Acts for the Council. They say that the question of perpetrating this Whig appointment is to come formally before Parliament in the next Session. Perhaps the present sluggish movement of the Council in the matter of Legislation, may not be without an object. It may be designed to prove the futility of the appointment. But, whenever his Lordship is in earnest, the forces of the Legislative Council are unopposed, and law-making moves at a railway pace. Mr. Anderson, the Protector of Emigrants at the Mauritius, has been sent up to put a stop to the farther emigration of men without their wives, and the Council has resolved to hurry through an Act, which shall send away female as well as male labourers—in the hope that neither will return. Could not the Government of Madras spare one of its Members of Council—we manage to govern seventy millions without them—on deputation to Calcutta? He might get the Maria Safford Repeal Act, and the Government Patronage Suppression Act through in a fortnight, and carry them back in his pocket in the Hindostan or the Bentuck. There is nothing like a little Dharna at the door of the Council Chamber.

Ceylon.—In the palmy days of Hindostan, when the throne of India was filled by the greatest warrior of the heroic age, the island of Ceylon became an object of the deepest interest to the whole Continent. Every chief, from the banks of the Indus to those of the Amazon, was marshalled under the banners of Rameschander to assist in the recovery of Shere, the whole country was agitated by that mighty expedition of which Ceylon was the object. The interest which it excited at that distant period, affords room for a strong contrast with the indifference to which it has been for a long period consigned by the European community this Presidency. Had it not been for an occasional extract from the papers of the island, the very existence of this noble possession might have been forgotten. No higher interest was felt in its condition or progress, than in that of the province of Newfoundland. This indifference to an island not two hundred miles from Madras, was owing partly to the narrowness of our commercial dealings with it, partly to the absence of all personal intercourse, and in part to its stationary, and therefore uninteresting, condition. Our mercantile connections with it has not, it is true, been enlarged, for in the past year the whole amount of our exports to and imports from it, did not exceed five lakhs, but our personal intercourse has been multiplied by means of the Steamer which calls at Galle on its way to and from Suez, and in consequence of the opening of a Semanarium at Naurua, which is becoming a great resort for legal invalids. Its agricultural improvement has taken India by surprise. These circumstances have created a new interest in the prospects of the island among the community at this Presidency, and there is every hope of its being fostered and increased.

The attraction of capital is attributed by the Madras Spectator, in an article which we have copied, and recommended to the special attention of the reader, to the establishment of a Legislative Council. Of this we are not altogether certain, although there can be little doubt that it has served to give confidence to colonists, not so much perhaps from its present results, as from its inevitable tendency to the system of representative Government, which prevails in other Crown colonies. The Legislative Council of Ceylon does not consist, like that of India, of four or five members, but of seventeen. Of these, ten are members of Government, while only seven are appointed from among the colonists. This preponderance of official influence in the Council, of course enables the Government to carry any measures it may propose; but in such a colony as Ceylon, or in such a country as India, the construction of the first Legislative Council seems to be the dictate of prudence. It would scarcely be wise to form it on the principle of so proportioning the votes that Government should, on every question, be liable to defeat. A great change must be effected in the general condition of society before any such system of administration can be safe. The object of such a Legislative institution, when first bestowed on an eastern possession, should be to dissolve the mystery in which the administration is shrouded, to create public confidence by unfolding to public view the springs of action, and gradually to prepare the community for taking a larger share in the Government. It is enough perhaps for the first step of improvement that the estimates are discussed and voted in an Assembly, the doors of which are open to the public, and the debates of which are published in the journals. This is an amazing advance upon the theory and practice of a simple—we do not mean unjust—despotism. And in Ceylon it has been found to work well. Though from its numerical majority, Government is omnipotent in the Council, yet it is obliged to explain the reasons of the measures it adopts; their utility as well as their details are openly canvassed, and public opinion is brought to bear on them. Since the establishment of the Council in that island, there has been, on the one hand, more attention to economy; on the other, an increasing effort to accelerate public improvement by the construction of roads, by digging canals, and by giving all legitimate encouragement to the spirit of enterprise.

The sudden start of improvement which this colony seems to have taken, has no parallel, we believe, in any Indian settlement. The idleness which characterized its residents, appears to have been at once exchanged for habits of energy and enterprise, which have done more to develop its resources in four years than had been done in the previous forty. The influx of colonists, and the influx of European capital, both from England and India, appear from all accounts to have been steadily progressing for some time. This has been attributed, as we have said, partly to the existence of the Legislative Council, and in part to the nature of the land tenure of the island. We are inclined to attribute it almost entirely to the latter cause. We question whether here in India the establishment of the most popular Legislature would induce the investment of Capital, from Europe, in the purchase of land. When Government went with so half hearted a spirit into the plan of admitting Europeans to hold land, Lord William Bentinck said his fear was, not that too many, but that too few Europeans would be induced to lay out their money in estates. His fears have been fully realized. Some planters, well versed in the mysteries of landed property, have, it is true, bought estates, that their indigo ryots might owe no allegiance to unaccommodating Zemindars; but while two millions sterling and more have been laid out in the purchase of land in Canada, in Australia, and in New Zealand, not one hundred part of such a sum has been transferred to India. If report be true, one of our highest public functionaries, on a late visit to the island of Ceylon, became the purchaser of a large coffee plantation. We question whether any thing, but insanity, could have induced him to lay out the same amount in a semidwara. Every thing here has been characterized as fugitive, but the tenure of an estate held by a European is of all things most fugitive. Suppose a man to have "deposited the hopes of his family in the soil of India," and devoted a lakh of Rupees to the purchase of an estate, and half a lakh more to the improvement of it, he has still but a secondary right in it. It is for ever hypothecated to Government for the rent, which must be paid quarterly, to the minute, or the estate goes to the hammer. If he proceed to sue for the benefit of his health, or if he visit England to revive his associations, and, by any one of the thousand accidents of life, the rent should be unpaid by sunset on a particular day, four times in the year, his estate is sold, and he returns to beggary. We are not complaining of a hardship; we are merely stating a fact. For this there appears no remedy except by allowing landlords to redeem the land rent, by one large payment. But this is altogether inadmissible, because it would湮没 the existing Government to anticipate and cut up the resources of posterity. In Ceylon, however, the land is purchased out and out, free from all claim on the part of the state, and may thus become a perpetual heirloom in a family; and this is, we think, the great attraction to capitalists.

But there are other subjects of interest, more particularly to the Service here, connected with the administration of Ceylon, which ought not to be overlooked. This island is essentially part and parcel of Hindostan, and is separated from the main land only by a narrow strait. Its population consists of Natives in the same stage of civilization, possessed of the same domestic habits, and governed by the same feelings, as those who reside on the Continent. Notwithstanding the difference of religion, there is not more difference between the ryots of Ceylon and the ryots of Madras, than between the latter and the ryots of Bengal. It is a dependency of the Crown, and the Ministers of the Crown have been for some time past carrying forward, unobtrusively, the experiment of governing an Indian possession, upon principles entirely distinct from those adopted in the countries entrusted to the Company. The two systems are diametrically different both as to legislative and admin-administrative arrangements, or the construction and the allowances of the public service. The fundamental principle of the Civil Service in that Island is not the retention of patronage as a remuneration for the labour of governing it. There, in a country which little exceeds one of our largest Zillahs in population and revenue, and for which the Company would consider five or six Civilian an ample allowance, the Civil Service embraces thirty-seven individuals, with a host of other functionaries, not included in that list. That service is not formed into a distinct class, which it is deemed necessary to qualify by a specific system of education for public employment. All the civil, criminal and fiscal business of Ceylon is conducted by men trained at no College similar to that of Haileybury. Nor is there a greater difference between the training of Judges and Collectors for Ceylon, and that of Judges and Collectors for Bengal than exists also in the matter of their allowances. The whole body of Civilian, thirty-seven in number, the Secretaries, the Government Agents, the Judges, the Magistrates, the fiscal officers, receive no more than £7,000, sterling a year, a sum less than that enjoyed by two of our Secretaries, two Members of the Board of Customs and two of the Board of Revenue. Then, the Crown has also contrived to obtain the services of a Chief Justice, equal in legal attainments to any of those who have adorned the bench in Calcutta, and for less than one-third of their pay. The salary of Sir A. Ophtham is less only by 800£ than the most retiring pension of Sir Edward Ryan.

It is scarcely to be supposed that the administration of India will be maintained upon its present footing after the expiration of the present Charter. There is every reason to believe that whatever party may be in power at the time, the Ministry will endeavour to dispense altogether with the Court of Directors, as an instrument of Government, and place India in the same direct subordination to the Crown, as its other colonial possessions. The design so palpably manifested by the present Ministry of reducing the Court of Directors to a cypher, and of concentrating all real power at the Board of Control, seems to prefigure the turn which circumstances are likely to take, when the construction of the future Government of India, comes under discussion in 1853. Should the Administration of that day be prepared to take the Government into its own hands, there is every reason to suppose that the system will be modified in some respects after the model of that which has been introduced at Ceylon; that the selections for the Civil Service will be made upon a broader basis, and from a larger circle; that the exclusive education of Haileybury will be at once repudiated, and the establishments which now furnish our Members of Parliament and Statesmen, our Barristers and Judges, our Clergy and Bishops will be deemed sufficient for the education of Civilian; that the number of Government servants will be augmented, and their allowances reduced; and that the whole Indian service, instead of continuing to represent the peculiar and anomalous circumstances in which the Empire of the East arose, will be recast in the mould of that modern colonial system which England has been gradually maturing in her foreign possessions.

We have received and very carefully analysed the Report of the State of the Police in 1841, but our notice of it extends to more than four columns, and we are therefore constrained to postpone the insertion of it, as well as a notice of the Economist, to the next week.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28.

—By some inadvertence, the Report of the last Meeting of the Agricultural Society was omitted in our last number. We have given it in our present issue.

—The Assam Steamer reached Allahabad on the 19th, having made the trip in twenty days; no very great feat for so powerful a vessel, encumbered with no light a cargo of cotton.

—The report of Hears Singh's murder is now distinctly contradicted. He is conducting affairs at Lahore conjointly with Lema Singh.

—Capt. Somerset, Military Secretary to the Governor General, proceeds to the Western Provinces immediately by dawn. This movement is thought by many the precursor of his Lordship's departure.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 27.

—The Star has obtained a copy of the Gibraltar Chronicle of the 29th of August which details the loss by fire of the Missouri U. S. Steam Frigate. It appears that every possible assistance was rendered by the English Steamers present, and by the Commandant at Gibraltar. The present year seems peculiarly inauspicious to Steamers, both English and American. The loss of the Missouri is an irreparable loss, as it constituted one-half the United States Sea going Steam Navy. John Quincy Adams, some time since, ridiculed the idea of America's going to war with us, with only two Steamers against our two hundred. If our memory does not fail us, he said that one of them was laid up, with a large hole in her side. Whether the Missouri was the disabled or the sound steamer, however, we cannot say.

—The Englishman says, that the Grand Jury, stricken by a letter signed Cypriote, which appeared in that paper, went on a visit to the Grand Jail to examine into the infirmities complained of.

—The Deputy Governor has, it is said, given one of the twelve appointments of Deputy Magistrate to a relative or connection of Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee, the gentleman who accompanied him in his visit to England last year.

—The Englishman gives a letter from Maulana, of the 12th of October, which contains little news. The writer states that the timber-dust will continue a source of vexation to the settlement; that there is a report that the Commissioner is to remove his present residence; and that he is living with a hireling, and to draw the town to Tavoy-Zoo, a mile to the southward, which the writer, and others think will be an improvement. The letter ends with, "Altogether, Mouleina is improving." On the other hand there is a letter in the Standard of this date which says,

"It is farthest from my thoughts to detect one who shews the merits of the present excellent Commissioner Major Broadbent, but his policy has been to throw suspicion if not blame on his predecessor to show that all has been wrong." If this be true, the Commissioner has been following the example set him by a high authority, which example as it has no foundation in past usage, will we hope have no influence on future functionaries, except by pointing out to them the course which ought by all means to be avoided. It is the part of greatness to correct evil, of littleness to conceal them. A correspondent of the Standard states, that the worship of Durga has been more diffused this year in Calcutta, the centre of illumination, than in any former year. He affirms that three thousand images have been made, and that the highest sum spent in any poojah was 15,000 Rs. He has hundred Bajees he did lowest average of the expense of each poojah, the sum laid out will have been two lakhs.

—Mr. George Clerk, the Lieut. Governor of the North West Provinces, has received serious injury by a fall from his horse, and was, according to the last accounts, lying dangerously ill at Simla.

—We were wrong in stating that General Aitchison was residing in the English. We learn from the Dell Gazette that he had passed through that town on his way to Calcutta. We learn also with much regret that he, who allowed the British officers "to drink his cellars dry," who kept an open table for 30, 40 or 50 officers daily, was not received with honour or hospitality at Delhi, a blot on the escutcheon of Delhi, which will not be soon obliterated.

—Government is said to be about to construct a fort at Ferozepore, which is to be capable of holding the treasury and the magazine, and of resisting any marauding attack that can be made.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26.

—The Harbinger of this morning has an article on American republicanism, "the transatlantic turn for the non-payment of debts—and alludes to a petition from General Sir John Wilson who invested 7000£ in American State securities, of which the dividends have ceased to be paid. He writes to an American General Scott, with whom he fought nearly thirty years ago at the battle of Chippewa, and to whom he says, "I have a wife and six children, and two of your snarling balls are lodged in my body. Will you then, my dear General, pardon my writing to you, and inform me whether or not in your opinion, the Legislature of the above states are wanting in those feelings of honour and honesty for which I gave them credit, or whether their present embarrassment has arisen out of unexpected difficulties and that they have not had sufficient time to meet their engagements?" Our contemporary speaks rather disparagingly of the previous letter of Sydney Smith, and says that with all its force and good sense, "his petition produced no great commiseration for him personally." We do not think he cared a straw about the money he had lost. None of the great Smiths, neither Percy, nor Sydney, nor Courtenay, were ever remarkable for a love of money. Had Sydney cared about money, he might have been worth 300,000£, as our Irish Bishop is now; but his object was to pay off the Americans for their dishonesty; and deeply his brother Jonathan felt his terrible curse. He will not soon forget that sentence, that "the Americans prefer any amount of infamy, however heavy, to any amount of taxation, however light."

—Our Bombay friends are again unfortunate in spite of their "advantageous position." Their July Mail were lost in the Memois; there we suffered in company, for ours were lost likewise. Their August Mail sailed last week, ours did not, as they went in the Albatross. And now all their Magazines and Periodicals of September have been left behind, just as the time when we have for the first time received ours early and cheap. But the magnanimity with which the ever cheerful Courier bears these disappointments is truly exemplary, and eminently edifying.

—The Englishman gives the names of a number of gentlemen, ladies and families, who go home next month in the Albatross; twenty-seven in number; but we have heard that she will go all again—and no wonder, after the splendid run of the last voyage. The sailing vessels will deeply feel the competition of the two Steamers.

—The Englishman says that Mr. Thomson leaves Calcutta immediately to assume charge of the Government of the North West Provinces, in consequence of the severe accident which Mr. George Clerk has experienced. The last accounts from Simla gave strong hopes of his recovery; but this accident will probably unfit him in his weak state for public business, and make him anxious for the arrival of his successor. Mr. Thomson's successor Mr. F. Currie, has arrived in Calcutta.

— The Commander-in-Chief announces in General Orders that it has appeared to Government necessary to strengthen the North West Frontier and to maintain a powerful force in Unbala. For this the troops in the General division are to be chiefly employed. Major General Will there retain a subordinate command and Major General Sir R. H. Dick, commanding the Merut division, will take the command of both the Sind and the Merut divisions, and the charge of all Military movements.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 26.

— The papers announce the death of the Rev. Mr. More the Rector of St. Xavier's College, at Calcutta, and of General Churchill, the Quarter Master General of the Queen's troops at Simla.

— The Englishman stated on Thursday last that in consequence of the representation of one of his correspondents, the Grand Jury had gone to visit the Grand Jail, which was said to be in a filthy state. The correspondent is disappointed. They found the Jail in the best order, and in the most cleanly state. The nuisance complained of arose from an invasion of the apartments in the third story, appropriated to the better class of detainees, by a whole army of rats. This nuisance was duly presented to the judges, but though the members of the Grand Jury informed their Lordships "that measures were already in progress for ridding the evil in a manner which they felt confident would prove efficient," yet they did not deprecate to particularize nor inform the Court for the benefit of the country at large what those means were. We hope the next Grand Jury will follow up the matter and visit the third story of the Jail in person to see whether the warm anticipations of success entertained by their predecessors have been realized. There are other things besides the Grand Jail overrun with rats, and the discovery of a sovereign and effected remedy will be a national blessing.

— The Municipal chest is empty; the lighting and watering of the city of Palaces is almost at a stand, and the Magistrates are at their wit's end to discover the means of replenishing the chest. At the last meeting various plans for raising a revenue were discussed. That of raising vehicles was discussed and rejected because of the difficulty of collecting it. As length two of the Magistrates proposed to increase the assessment by 11 per cent. Mr. Blaquerie opposed the innovation, and while the lighting and watering were deemed as to come within the present means of the Magistrate, which advice, however agreeable to the venerable sages of cutting the coat according to the cloth, is not exactly the most effectual mode of improving the town. Mr. Montrose, who was absent was called in, but did not feel himself competent to give an opinion. The matter is postponed.

— We are happy to learn that the last accounts from Simla represent Mr. George Clark better. Dr. Robertson had been called in to assist as a consultation. It appears that he has received a concussion of the brain by a fall from his horse.

— Major Patrick Grant has been appointed to succeed the late Major Ormiston as Deputy Assistant General of the Army with the official rank of Major and Capt. J. R. Lomley steps into the post of 1st Assistant.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27.

— The report of General Churchill's death, though given in all the papers of the Presidency, is now said to be incorrect. Subsequent letters from Simla make no mention of it, which is fatal to its authenticity. The latest letter from thence, one of the 20th October, states that Mr. George Clark was going on extremely well.

— A Calcutta Gazette Extra announces the approaching departure of the Government of India for the North West Provinces. The draft of the usual Act for conferring all powers, except those of the Legislative Council, on his Lordship is, also published; and Mr. Thomson is gazetted as the successor of Mr. George Clark in the Government of the North West Provinces.

— The Star of this morning gives a somewhat different version of the remarks which fell from the Lawrence Peel last week, regarding a proposed alteration in the law of debtor and creditor. He says, "Government has requested the Judges of the Supreme Court to prepare the draft of a new law, the Government Act, the present existing in a year or two, and that such Act will be passed by the House of Lords if approved of. Sir L. Peel said he trusted that at no remote day the power of a creditor to arrest his debtor and detain him in prison would be much abridged." Sir L. Peel's Lordship also stated that any relaxation, however, of the present law ought to be accompanied by more efficient, speedy and cheap means of realizing the property of debtors where any existed; and we may add, in the case of India, by a more stringent law of Registration, to prevent such fictitious alienation of property which always takes place when a man wants to cheat his creditors.

— Intelligence from China to the 20th of August has reached Bombay. It is not of any stirring interest. The enquiry which the Emperor initiated into the conduct of the Forenoon authorities, regarding the murder of the Dowry and the Dowry, has terminated in a conviction of their guilt. They have been made over to the Board of Panchabants; but it is thought they will come off without suffering much injury. The opium trade continues to flourish under other flags; though as soon as the treaty came into operation, all the British opium smuggling vessels and an American receiving ship left the river. Hong Kong had proved very unwholesome, and it had been found necessary to appoint a Board of Health to investigate the cause.

— In consequence of the great services rendered to the Roman Catholic cause in Colombia, by Mons. John Leckertson and Co. the Pope has conferred the title of Count on Mr. John Leckertson, and made him a Chevalier of the Golden Spur. The honour is to be hereditary as long as the oldest son continues a Catholic. Mr. O. R. Leckertson and William Leckertson, are also made Chevaliers of the Russian order of St. Gregory. The mother of the family has at the same time been created a Countess. We learn from the Catholic Herald that Captain Fitzmaurice of the 25th B. N. I. has purchased an old bell for Rs. 24 Rs. which had long been lying in the Government House compound at Serampore, and presented it to the Catholic Establishments in this town.

— The Catholic Herald of Saturday states, that the Sovereign Pontiff has raised Dr. O'Hilly, to the Episcopal dignity and appointed him co-adjutor of the Catholic Archbishop of Calcutta.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 1.

— Cape papers have been received to the 25th of August. They announce the death of Lady D'Urban; also the "glorious extinction of the entire pacification of Natal." At a meeting of the emigrant farmers at Pietermaritzburg, the terms of the Governor's proclamation for the settlement of Natal affairs was accepted.

— The Star states that Lord Ellenborough's departure is fixed for the 21st instant. Most probably it will take place much earlier. His Lordship we learn goes up by deck, and returns before the last winds set in next year.

— The Madras Advertiser of the 10th instant announces the death of Sir John Norton four days after the departure of the vessel in which he embarked from Madras roads. This intelligence was however known here more than a fortnight ago.

— H. M. M. B. H. are under orders to leave Alibababad, and march to Calcutta and there await further orders. The Star says that the corps will probably join the Army of Reserve, but this must of course depend on the progress of affairs at Gwalior, and the resolution of the Emperor.

— The papers have been laid in their course of Government for appointing Sir Robert Dick, a Queen's officer, over the head of General Peel, a Company's officer, to command the army assembling on the banks of the Ganges, the latter being senior it is said to the former. After two goodly columns of correspondence, it is found that the former is actually senior to the latter!

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following names of the friends of India:—

Ct. R. R. A.
The Secretary to the Book Club,
2nd Regt. N. I. Co. ...	In Sept. 1844, 20 0
Meers, Grindley, Christian and Matthews, to Jan. 1844, 10 0
The Calcutta Church Missionary Society, to Dec. 1843, 10 0
D. Lines, Esq. to Oct. 1843, 20 0
B. Walker, Esq. to Sept. 1844, 20 0
G. Lyall, Esq. to March, 1844, 20 0
J. Lyall, Esq. to Aug. 1844, 20 0
M. P. Edgeworth, Esq. to Sept. 1844, 20 0
Col. W. H. L. Frith, to July, 1844, 20 0
W. Leslie, Esq. to Sept. 1844, 20 0
W. T. Watson, Esq. to March, 1844, 10 0
Major J. Connelley, to June, 1844, 20 0
T. E. Thomson, Esq. to June, 1844, 20 0
Meers, Apsar and Co. to July, 1844, 20 0
W. Deane, Esq. to Sept. 1844, 20 0
Dr. T. W. Wilson, ditto, 20 0
Thos. Lyon, Esq. to Oct. 1844, 20 0
Rev. E. Lewis, ditto, 20 0
Rev. J. M. Brown, ditto, 20 0

to Correspondents.

Some has been received. A Speaker next week.

To G. M. R. Bangalore. We believe the names of the successful candidates for the office of Member will be duly published in the Gazette next January after their examination.

M. D. is unavoidably postponed.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

AGRICULTURE AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

A General Meeting of the Society was held at the Town-Hall, on Wednesday, the 18th October, 1844. William Griffith, Esq., Vice President, in the Chair.

The gentleman proposed at the last meeting were duly elected members of the Society, viz. — As an Honorary Member.

Dr. Justin Lebig.

As Ordinary Members.

Lieut. Edward Close, Rajah Oryahure Mallik, Capt. Henry Cotton, Baboo Kienushahur Roy, Messrs. C. O. Jackson, T. H. Lakin, J. O. Price and Richard Duff.

The names of the following gentlemen were submitted as candidates for election:—

E. Jenkins, Esq. Civil Secretary, proposed by Mr. W. Quinlan, seconded by the Secretary.

B. F. Sage, Esq. of Kalkara Factory, Bangalore, proposed by Mr. A. Savers, seconded by the Secretary.

T. C. L. Esq. Civil Secretary, proposed by Mr. B. B. Garret, seconded by Mr. H. G. French.

A. Wallace, Esq. merchant, Calcutta, proposed by Dr. Meena, seconded by the Secretary.

C. B. Jennings Esq. of Guntur Factory, Guntur, proposed by Mr. G. H. French.

Lieut. H. Ripley, Engineers, proposed by Mr. De Bido, seconded by the Secretary.

E. Boyle, Esq. merchant, Calcutta, proposed by Mr. C. B. Stowell, seconded by the Secretary.

Presentations to the LIBRARY.

1. The Calcutta Journal of Natural History No. 1 to 16. Presented by Dr. McClelland.

2. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for 1842. Presented by the Society.

3. Report on the settlement of the District of Gwalior. Presented by the Genl. N. W. P. Government.

4. Transactions of the Agri. Horticultural Society of Western India, No. 11, quarterly issue. Presented by the Government of Bengal.

5. The Indian Review and Journal of Foreign Science and the Arts. Presented by the Proprietor.

6. The Indian Record's and Planter's Journal No. 63 to 65. Presented by the Proprietor.

7. The Indian Review and Journal of Foreign Science, No. IX, of vol. I. Presented by the Proprietor.

without effect; the necessary terms of our Judicial Courts have always stood in the way of and direct evidence being required to convict the offender, so the kindness of the Government was necessary to establish the complete chain, cannot be prevailed upon to quit their native villages and present themselves at the Courts on this occasion. In consequence of this miserable state of correspondence took place several months ago between the Government of India and that of Madras with a view to the proposed Bill of the new Enactment which should invest the local officers in the Khoond country—that is, the collectors of Gujanjam and Vingapoota in their separate capacity of Agents of the Governor of Madras, and their assistants also—with summary powers to punish on the spot all persons detected in kidnapping and selling children for the Arabian slave trade. This would prove, it is fully anticipated, the most effectual way of striking a blow at the root of the atrocious system. At present these child-slaves are doubly encouraged by the prospect of pecuniary reward, and the apparent impunity with which the offence may be committed, but, when they once find that conviction and punishment follow with an immediate step upon detection, (and that the latter is, by a watchful eye, rendered easy,) the sordid instrument which has hitherto led them on will fade before the greater dread of the penalty which will then be sensibly felt; and with the consequent abandonment of their occupation, will be stayed the amount of human suffering of which it has already been so lamentably productive.

We understand that a Draft Act for the above important object was framed by the proprietors of the Friend of India in the month of May; and we would suggest to our respected contemporary that he would do well to send it to the Editor of the Friend of India, in the interest he has always evinced on the subject, to make some enquiries en route, to ascertain what, and for what cause, this necessary measure has been permitted to remain in a state of such long duration. Madras Spectator, Sept. 13.

LOW COURTES OF THE CALCUTTA PRESS.

We are in the habit of seeing editions proffered by our respected Madras Spectator in dish to the possession of intelligence so early and accurate in its character, that it was vain for any other journals on the face of the earth to attempt to contend with him; and for some time the documents which from time to time make their appearance in the shape of Blue Books, we have sometimes amused ourselves by reverting to the old file of our correspondence, and finding that they were so far ahead that they knew the detestations of Government before Government had determined on anything. We were acquainted with re-announcing certain papers, and were surprised to have made, which the said parties never alluded to, we have still been disappointed to maintain our own position, and to which upon it that we could see as far into a million as in any of our neighbours. We have now got an illustration of this which does not seem overestimated or gossamer. If we were to name the Star, the Harbinger, the Herald, or the Expositor, as being behind the world, we should immediately have their cry raised by the others—oh! you are not to take that paper as an indication of our intelligence! Nothing can be more unjustifiable than to stigmatize the Friend of India as a plagiarist, or to slight him because one fat-headed fellow follows in the wrong. Well, our brethren shall have in their own way—the position of the paper we are about to single out for notice—in a Fort William Government Gazette. Neither can the literary force of the individual party be called in question—if the most distinguished name of letters in Calcutta is not the Fort Master General, who we should like to know who disputes with him the palm. The following notification appears in the Gazette of the 4th instant, the latest which has reached us:—

"Third—Letters for the United Kingdom of Great Britain, weighing less than a quarter of an ounce, and payable through name, and single postage, which by that route amounts to 2s. 8d. By the Palmerston route, Letters of half an ounce in weight are subject to single postage only, which by that route has now been reduced to 1s.

"Nevertheless, if sent via Palmerston, are free of postage; but if transmitted by the way of Madras, they are charged 2d. each.

"II. S. OLDFIELD, Off. Post Master General."

May 1840."

Now, good Mr. Oldfield, you must be a very old—a very forgetful fellow indeed, if the date of your knowledge of post office matters extends no further than May 8, 1840. Since then, if our amule have been written right, we have had at least two changes—the last promulgated on the 6th July, and a very strict one it is: in the effect these letters sent by Palmerston are to be charged 1s., and may weigh half an ounce; those sent through Palmerston being charged 1s. 8d., and weighing a quarter of an ounce. Yet, doubtless, the Madras Spectator, misled by his own views as to this home dressing that by sending letters by Palmerston they are saving not 8d. (as is really the case) but 1s. 8d. He never knew an Calcutta Spectator speak of the freshness of his information when that of the Post Master General is three and a half years behind. Weekly Times, Oct. 16.

CEYLON.

The progress of Ceylon can never be a matter of indifference to us at Madras. It is not merely the marvellous sympathy with a near neighbour, or a selfish interest in the course of agricultural improvement where soil and climate so closely resemble many of our own provinces, but the distant mode of Government pursued in the neighbour Island that must give a keen zest to the attention which watches its efforts, and draws a sympathetic interest in their fate, whatever it may be. Before however hurrying into conclusions such as that Mr. Wolff proposes, let us consider two points. In the gentleman's last paper to January 1 1848, Mr. Wolff did not allude to the Anglo-Indian Government under the attainment of our object more probable?

First as to Mr. Wolff. He is warm, enthusiastic and persevering, and not generally popular among the Mahomedans of Central Asia. (I speak from what I have myself heard from them). He is looked upon and treated rather as one of the afflicted than any thing else, an idea which his extreme enthusiasm and total want of caution probably gave rise. Few orientals would dream of an entirely unpopulated country, and Mr. Wolff is no exception of the Anglo-Indian Government to attack Mahomedanism. Mr. Wolff was therefore and probably for the main reason would again be said; though if his Office corresponded with the Anglo-Indian Government of the Khan of Bekhar, but neither the influence of Mr. Wolff or any other Christian is likely to be beneficial in the present instance, more particularly if it be true, as I have heard it said, that Col. Stoddard's first imprisonment was occasioned by an intemperate personal discussion with the Mohammedan.

Secondly, as to means. The Government through the reported communication with Dost Mahomed Khan, commands the means of ascertaining positively and speedily the fact of the life or death of our gallant comrades. Or by the Agency of the Lahore merchants, it might obtain their release. If the state of the finances were not so ruinous, we go to any expense—the first proposed by Frederick will be forthcoming.

But is it not the bolder duty of the Government to meet the Anglo-Indian Government as it is, and (humanly speaking) to revenge them if dead? The straits will, no doubt, ever find ambitious and ambitious individuals ready to risk life and liberty in Calcutta lands to advance the interests of their country. But it is just to these—is it holding out fair reward or due encouragement? Let them see the Government especially indifferent to the suffering and unkindly of the fate of such men as the gallant Stoddard, the Cheltenham, the good and sanguine Arthur Connolly? Can we then expect to see any ability of their employers' taking no interest in their fall, or any steps towards their freedom, if Stoddard will again risk liberty and life with the same indifference that Stoddard will die? The suffering power in difficulties and dangers among savage and barbarous tribes has ever been (next to Faith and Love) in every where present.) the certain that the Anglo-Indian Government will not see a subject—far less an Agent to be injured, with impunity. Let the Government then exert itself. The Lahore merchants in Calcutta and in Ly September next we may, by their agency, our released friends, or at least have the melancholy satisfaction of ascertaining over their recovery.

of keeping attention fixed on the construction of roads and those other facilities to traffic, which are so indispensable to the prosperity of the agricultural and mercantile classes in the Anglo-Indian Government on the sea coast. Under the influence of these advantages Ceylon is beginning to go ahead rapidly, and the following comparative statement of the Revenue and Expenditure for the first seven months of the present and past years, will show how very favourable is the existing position of her financial affairs, particularly when we remember that a deficit has hitherto been almost their inevitable result.

	1848	1848
Revenue.....	£188,543	£21,267
Expenditure.....	390,353	291,387
Deficit in 1848.....	24,994
Net surplus of 1848.....		£19,983

—Madras Spectator.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE REV. DR. WOLFF.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir,—I have just seen, in the Daily Gazette of the 4th October, a letter signed Fidelis containing an appeal to the Army for a subscription to defray the expenses of the Rev. J. Wolff and a companion (the name of the latter is not given) in their journey to the Anglo-Indian Government to ascertain the fate, or promote the release, of Colonel Stoddard and Arthur Connolly.

I am not one of those who believe, though I sincerely hope, they are alive; but I am most willing to aid in their rescue, in their fate, whatever it may be. Before however hurrying into conclusions such as that Mr. Wolff proposes, let us consider two points. In the gentleman's last paper to January 1 1848, Mr. Wolff did not allude to the Anglo-Indian Government under the attainment of our object more probable?

First as to Mr. Wolff. He is warm, enthusiastic and persevering, and not generally popular among the Mahomedans of Central Asia. (I speak from what I have myself heard from them). He is looked upon and treated rather as one of the afflicted than any thing else, an idea which his extreme enthusiasm and total want of caution probably gave rise. Few orientals would dream of an entirely unpopulated country, and Mr. Wolff is no exception of the Anglo-Indian Government to attack Mahomedanism. Mr. Wolff was therefore and probably for the main reason would again be said; though if his Office corresponded with the Anglo-Indian Government of the Khan of Bekhar, but neither the influence of Mr. Wolff or any other Christian is likely to be beneficial in the present instance, more particularly if it be true, as I have heard it said, that Col. Stoddard's first imprisonment was occasioned by an intemperate personal discussion with the Mohammedan.

Secondly, as to means. The Government through the reported communication with Dost Mahomed Khan, commands the means of ascertaining positively and speedily the fact of the life or death of our gallant comrades. Or by the Agency of the Lahore merchants, it might obtain their release. If the state of the finances were not so ruinous, we go to any expense—the first proposed by Frederick will be forthcoming.

But is it not the bolder duty of the Government to meet the Anglo-Indian Government as it is, and (humanly speaking) to revenge them if dead? The straits will, no doubt, ever find ambitious and ambitious individuals ready to risk life and liberty in Calcutta lands to advance the interests of their country. But it is just to these—is it holding out fair reward or due encouragement? Let them see the Government especially indifferent to the suffering and unkindly of the fate of such men as the gallant Stoddard, the Cheltenham, the good and sanguine Arthur Connolly? Can we then expect to see any ability of their employers' taking no interest in their fall, or any steps towards their freedom, if Stoddard will again risk liberty and life with the same indifference that Stoddard will die? The suffering power in difficulties and dangers among savage and barbarous tribes has ever been (next to Faith and Love) in every where present.) the certain that the Anglo-Indian Government will not see a subject—far less an Agent to be injured, with impunity. Let the Government then exert itself. The Lahore merchants in Calcutta and in Ly September next we may, by their agency, our released friends, or at least have the melancholy satisfaction of ascertaining over their recovery.

Fauna Street, London, July 1, 1843.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 463. Vol. IX.]

SERAPPORE: THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 9TH. 1843.

[Price 6 Cts. Rs. monthly, or 3 Rs. yearly if paid in advance.]

OVERLAND MAIL.

THE next Steamer with the Mail for Sumatra is expected to leave Bombay on the 1st of December. It is, accordingly, in hourly expectation, that the latest news for the transmission of letters from Calcutta, which may be intended for this opportunity, will be Friday, the 17th inst.

L. J. H. GREY,
Off. Post Master General.

Gen. Post Office,
7th 1st November, 1843.

GWALIOR AND THE PUNJAB.—The papers of the week are filled with notions of the march of Regiments, European and Native, to the banks of the Jumna and the Sutlege, to watch the progress of events in the territories of Sindia, and in the Punjab. It appears to be altogether uncertain whether either army will be called into action, though it is difficult to imagine how the present disorganization in these frontier states can be extinguished, and such a degree of tranquillity restored, as shall give security to our own provinces, without the active intervention of the paramount Power in Hindoostan. In the prospect of hostilities, it is confidently said that all forays will be suspended, and that those who had quitted their corps in the hope of visiting England, will be required to rejoin them.

The Star informs us that terms have been offered to the Regent at Gwalior, and that if they are not complied with, hostilities will immediately commence. The terms are thus given by our contemporary: That the Khawasee who has usurped the office and power of Prime Minister be dismissed, and Mappa Singh be restored to that post; that certain tracts of territory, which inconveniently protrude themselves into Bundelkand and other of our provinces, be exchanged for tracts more convenient to the Durbar and to ourselves; that the present refractory army be dismissed, and a large contingent force under British officers, be substituted in its stead; and that the Gwalior treasury pay the expenses incurred by the present assemblage of troops. These terms are extremely moderate, and refute the assertion that the present movement of our troops arises from an itch for territorial aggrandizement. The restoration of the Mamma Saib, the Prime Minister whose appointment our Government had sanctioned, is due to the dignity of position it sustains in India. To plead the principle of non interference in the face of danger, after we had interfered with our suzerains in the appointment of a Premier, would be worse than affectation; it would be to subscribe to our own disavowal. The exchange of territories is rendered necessary by the state of things in Bundelkand; the disaffected and lawless of which province find effectual shelter in districts, nominally under the sway of Gwalior, which we cannot enter; while the substitution of a suppliantary force, under our own Officers, for the present army, though it effectually extinguishes the independence of the state, appears indispensable from a regard to the security of our provinces. The demand for the expenses of the war, is in fact nothing more than the time-honoured rule that those who have provoked hostilities, should pay for the red which corrects them; and every treaty imposed by the strong on the weak should wind up with a similar item.

But while the Governor General is negotiating, the refractory troops are acting, and to all appearance making rapid advances to the supreme power. If a letter from a correspondent of the Star, which we have copied, can be depended on, they have already rebelled against the legitimate authority in the state, and are now paramount at the capital. There may soon be no Government left to trust with, or rather the Regent may be constrained, by a regard for her own safety to accede to our terms and accept with joy the intervention of our troops. It is evident that the insurgent troops cannot be disbanded by the mere order of the ruling authorities at Gwalior, which they have already learned to despise; to all appearance, they can be dispersed only by our own soldiers.

From the Punjab we have nothing but reports, but they become daily more interesting as they indicate the approach of the crisis, which will demand our interference. Gholab Singh, it is said, warily keeps himself to the Hills, curbing his mountain subjects. Heera Singh and Lassa Singh rule at Lahore, with the permission of their soldiers, who are mutinous for increase of pay, and are said to be gradually quitting their ranks. The authority of the Sikh Government over the army is described as likely to last till the treasury is empty, after which—but we must not anticipate events. How far these accounts are to be depended on, we cannot say, but a reference to the past history of Hindoostan, renders it highly probable that they are authentic; for it is thus that one Asiatic monarchy after another has crumbled to dust.

As soon as there ceases to be any Government at Lahore capable of maintaining its peaceful relations with us, the duty of providing for the security of our own provinces, will supersede every other consideration, and all existing treaties, and we shall be constrained to take possession of the administration in self defence. Meanwhile, we are informed, that the Sikh troops who had been left to guard Peshawar, have deserted their post, and fled to the Indus, plundering the inhabitants of the route. If they have not done so already, it must be evident that in the confusion which prevails in the Punjab, they will do so ere long. It is more than probable therefore that the province of Peshawar has by this time been dismembered from the Punjab, of which it was an integral part, at the time when we guaranteed to Ranjeet and his family the integrity of his dominions, by a treaty offensive and defensive. Most probably Heera Singh, distracted by the demands of an insubordinate soldiery, will be unable to dispatch troops for the recovery of that province. Most probably, he will claim that assistance from the British Government which it solemnly engaged to afford. We do not see how our Government can honourably back out of its engagements, or refuse to march an army across the Indus to oppose the Afghans in the field. We have not been able to lay our hands on the treaty of 20th June 1838, but the Sikh Proclamation of the 1st of October of that year states that by that tripartite treaty, His Highness Ranjeet Singh is guaranteed in his present possessions—including Peshawar—and that the friends and enemies of one of the contracting parties have been declared to be the friends and enemies of all. On the strength of this treaty we called upon Ranjeet Singh's successor, Shere Singh, to assist us with a contingent, in facing the Khyber Pass, and fighting the Affghans. If his successor should call upon us to afford the same assistance in repelling the assaults of the same foes in the same locality, how can our Government resist the requisition?—And then will be fulfilled the prediction of one of the chiefs of Cabul, who, on the retirement of our troops said to an eminent officer, "We shall meet again before three years have passed."

THE LEUTENANT GOVERNORSHIP OF THE NORTH WEST PROVINCES has been conferred by Lord Ellenborough on Mr. James Thomason, and the appointment has given general satisfaction. The office has been divested of all political responsibility, and all military duties, and its functions are confined to the superintendence of the Civil, Criminal and Fiscal administration of the North West Provinces, and the promotion of internal improvements. It requires therefore the services of one who is thoroughly versed in the details of these departments, and is at the same time gifted with the faculty of taking a comprehensive view of the public interests associated with it. We think it would have been difficult to have selected from the ranks of the service, any individual better qualified by natural endowments and enlarged experience to undertake the internal administration of these provinces, or more disposed by his own benevolence of disposition, to render his administration beneficial to the country, than the individual on whom Lord Ellenborough's choice has fallen. Instead of exasperating Mr. Thomason on having, comparatively at so early an age, risen to a post of such great distinction, we ought rather therefore to congratulate those provinces on having been placed under the direction of one so eminently qualified to promote their well being.

If we were to particularise any one object to which Mr. Thomason's attention will be ardently devoted, and which will probably be among the most lasting monuments of his administration, we should point to that great undertaking, the Doobah Canal, projected by Capt. Cantley, and patronized by Lord Auckland. In this important enterprise, Mr. Thomason took the deepest interest, when in a less influential situation; and we rejoice that he will now be enabled to bring all the power and influence of the local Government to bear upon its completion. If ever high office may legitimately become an object of envy, it is in a view of the facilities it affords the possessor for carrying out objects of such extensive and permanent utility in execution, and thus of associating his name with the benedictions of future ages.

The independent character which has been given to the two Governments of Agra and Bengal, whether the head of the Government resides at either of them, or not, creates a new era in our administration. For the first time the Governor General has divested himself entirely of that most important appendage of his office, the patronage of all Civil, Criminal and Revenue appointments, throughout the Presidency, both in the Civil Service and out of it.

East India Company; I mean that no service is ever lower or heard of, except as a large proportion of individuals able and willing to discharge their duty."

To look on this picture, and then to turn to that, which might now be drawn of Ceylon, would present a remarkable contrast. It would be found, that industry and enterprise now characterize the people, that the country is being colonized under most favorable circumstances, that its revenue is advancing and yields a surplus, and that its improvement is going on at a most rapid and yet at an increasing rate.—Mercury.

The contrast which the present appearance of activity affords to the death-like lethargy, which prevailed when the late Bishop visited it, is a subject of no small congratulation. But to develop the resources of the island to the utmost, and to give full scope to the spirit of improvement by which its colonists are animated, it is necessary to assist it with labourers from the Continent. The great want of the island is in the article of agricultural labour. The indigenous inhabitants are either not sufficient in number for the new demand which has arisen, or they are wanting in those habits of industry which the planters require; and there is reason to fear that unless the deficiency can be supplied from the teeming population of Hindoostan, the labours of the Colonists will be cramped to a lamentable extent. Hitherto, the wants of the Island have been partially supplied by transitory emigrants from the Malabar Coast; in fact, nine parts of the labourers employed in the new plantations are Malabars, who cross over to the island, as the Irish peasants come over to England, and having made up a little purse, take their departure at their own convenience, without any reference to the interests of their masters,—and unfortunately just at the time when their assistance in the Coffee plantations is most required. This inconvenience can be remedied only by the introduction of labourers, upon fixed engagements, on a plan similar to that which has now stocked the Mauritius with Twenty thousand Coolies in a twelvemonth. It is strange indeed that India should send her labourers so distant and altogether foreign a colony, while one, which lies at her very doors, which forms, so to speak, part and parcel of Hindoostan, which was annexed to its empire before the Druids had begun to sacrifice children in England, and the names of which still live in the memory of every Native of India, should be neglected. Ceylon has originally the first claim on India for a portion of its superabundant population, and the claim will not be disallowed, if proper measures are taken to urge it.

We are not certain whether the non-emigration of labourers from Dungal has arisen from the inactivity of the new Colonists, or from the state of the law. If from their inactivity, the recent purchase of land by capitalists in Calcutta, will soon remove that obstacle. As to the state of the law, it is certain that the Malabars emigrate by hundreds every year from the Madras Provinces to this Crown Colony, without let or hindrance. It is possible, however, that a specific Act may be necessary to authorize the despatch of labourers from Calcutta by ship to this Island. The Act of 1838 prohibited the exportation of all labourers by sea. The Mauritius Emigration Act, passed at the close of last year, opened the ports only in favour of that Island. But if there be any legal obstacle to the emigration of our coolies for four or five years to Ceylon, we think it would be at once removed by an application to the Legislative Council. Nor are we to despair of the emigration of whole families,—if the common people can be disabused of the idea that it is still peopled with the monster their parents have sent to combat. The island may be reached in the cold season in ten days. It is always within reach of Government, who, if complaints of abuse are raised, might depute a public servant to proceed thither in a steamer and examine into their truth. Every consideration appears favourable to the measure of transferring a part of our agricultural labourers to the Island.—And the present is the time for it. Those who are interested in the matter should not lose a day in requesting Government to discuss and settle the question before the Governor General quies in Calcutta; otherwise, the present monsoon will be lost for emigration. There are said to be several thousand Coolies in Calcutta, awaiting to be sent to the Mauritius. These will probably be taken off before the new Act comes into operation, after which, the despatch will become a struggle, and an opening will be afforded for the Ceylon Colonists to come into the market of labour, and furnish their plantations with labourers.

POLICE REPORT FOR THE YEAR 1841.—We have been favoured with a copy of two printed Reports of the state of the Police for the year 1841, drawn up by the Superintendent, and now proceed to notice the more important matters contained in them. In addition to the statistics of crime, they contain a review of the labours and success of the different Magistrates and Joint Magistrates, in the thirty-five districts of the Dungal Government, and are designed to answer the double purpose of keeping Government informed of the state of the Police, and the Magistrates of the estimate which is unconsciously formed of their official conduct. The delay in the appearance of the Reports is therefore much to be regretted, for the salutary reproof administered in them to the indolent and the careless, loses much of their effect, by coming nearly two years after the transgression. The Superintendent has an arduous task. His charge extends over a larger domain, and a more numerous population, than that in which the talents of Fouchee were so eminently displayed; yet he is without a single competent assistant. If the office is worth keeping up, it is worth making efficient. Two able assistants, from the Junior ranks of the service, similar to those recently bestowed on the Government of Bengal, would scarcely be too many for its important duties. At the same time, the Superintendent's office would probably be found to furnish them with the best training for the subsequent performance of Magisterial functions.

Much of the interest also attached to these Reports is lost by their protracted appearance. A report of 1841 must appear comparatively stale and flat at the end of 1843. We shall therefore call the reader's attention chiefly to the particular facts which they furnish relative to the actual condition of the country, and the measures by which it may be improved. As it regards the general statistics of crime, it may be quite sufficient to state, in the gross, that the total number of offences ascertained by the Police to have been committed in the Lower Provinces, in the first half year of 1840 was 21,577; in the last half, 24,350; that the number of persons supposed to be concerned in these crimes, was, in the first period, 46,493; in the last, 50,197; that in both periods the number of persons arrested, was a little less than half the number of the supposed; that of those arrested, two thirds were convicted, and the rest acquitted.

If there was any probability that these numbers gave a correct idea of the actual amount of crimes committed in the country, we would enter on a comparison of the number given for 1841 with that of any preceding year. But in every case, the reported number must be regarded as altogether suppositions. The Superintendent has repeatedly asserted that no confidence could be placed in it. Probably it is no nearer the truth than the various and conflicting estimates we receive of the population of China which has been calculated by some at two, by others at three hundred millions, and by one writer at three hundred and fifty millions. Whether therefore we are informed that in one district crimes have been doubled in six months; or that in an other they have been reduced from three hundred to two hundred; or that decisions are very numerous in one district, and entirely unknown in the adjoining district in which the professional robbers are known to abound, we receive every report with a feeling of deep mistrust. When decisions are reported to have diminished in any district, instead of infusing the superior vigilance of the Police, we conclude that they have been negligent; and the Police becomes the object of credit whenever the number of decisions, burglaries, and other crimes, is reported to be greatly on the increase!

This is a very singular and anomalous state of things; but it is not the less true; and the reason is self evident. The people who suffer from decisions and robberies will not complain, will know that the remedy will be worse than the disease. After having been robbed by decisions, they consider it a matter of prudence to retain what is left rather than to risk the loss of it by revealing their grief to the Darogah. In 1839, Lord William passed a law forbidding any enquiry into cases of dacoity or burglary, except at the particular request of the sufferers, or at the discretionary orders of the Magistrates. In the report before us we find that the Magistrates have in almost all instances refrained from the exercise of the discretion vested in them. In three cases, however, they have considered it their duty to cause every case which came to their knowledge to be investigated; and the result is, that, in one district, 18 cases were examined at the request of the people, and 58 by orders of the Magistrate; in the second, there were 24 cases in which the people made known their complaints, and 100 in which they did not; in the third, the proportion was 77 of the former, to 234 of the latter. It is natural therefore to conclude that if every crime had been reported and investigated, the number would appear to be three times that which appears on the record.

The indisposition of the people to complain, and thus subject themselves to all the inconveniences of an official investigation of crime, is excused by the assertion that it is not confined to Hindoostan. The same feeling prevails in our own land; it is manifested even in this country by Europeans whom the Police officers cannot oppress. All this is fully admitted. Men naturally shrink from the duty of prosecuting offences to conviction, at the sacrifice of their own comfort, when it is only the cause of public justice which is likely to be benefited thereby. It is part of the selfishness of our nature, which requires much public spirit to overcome; but it is a disposition detrimental to the interests of society, and one which ought to be repressed rather than encouraged. In this country however, it is not merely the dread of private inconvenience, which deters the sufferers from becoming prosecutors. Crime is systematically and studiously concealed, chiefly because the enquiries of the Police entail a positive injury upon those who have already suffered severely from the dacoity. "Any protective measures," says the first Report, "would bring the people into contact with our Police and our Courts, which they dread equally with, if not more than these occasional robberies, as being known and certain evils, and until our Police system is now modified, they will prefer to take their chances of being plundered by dacoits rather than to incur the certainty of imprisonment if treatment, and feeling—being plundered by Police officers." In more than one case, dacoits, to save themselves trouble, and to "little temporary credit for vigilance, have the forced confessions of innocent men." For instance, the Police officer not only induces to extort confessions, but fabricated a list of the articles stolen to secure the punishment of the parties whom he committed. In these cases, says the Report, "that we owe the hostility of the people to our Police, and the dread inspired by them, which leads to a general concealment of crime." In another case, the Darogah was dismissed for being concerned in the brutal and indecent seizure of a female to extort confessions. "Owing to the weakness of our Police Agents," says Mr. Stansfield, the ablest Magistrate under the Government of Bengal, "the villagers, generally speaking, look upon a visit from the Police as a certain source of loss and trouble." Thus the inherent infirmity of men to make any sacrifice of their personal ease for the public benefit, is indefinitely increased in this country by the positive loss to which they would be subjected by the unprincipled rapacity of our Police Agents. The former can be cured only by the infusion of nobler principles; the latter it is the duty of our Government to remedy to the utmost of the power.

It is certain that nothing is so easy as to reprobate an evil, which has so long been known to exist; and that the great difficulty is to show how it may be remedied. To do this with an hope of success, it is necessary to examine wherein our present institutions for the detection of crime are defective; and this has we think been sufficiently indicated in all the Police reports which have been published since the office of Superintendent was revived. To cope effectually with crime, we require a separation of the two departments of the Magistracy, the Police, and its judicial duties. The one requires that the officer should be moving about in the district; and following up the scent, when any crime is discovered to have been committed; the other, that he should remain stationary at his Cutchery, to dispose of the numerous cases brought before him, and to shorten as much as possible the detention of the accused, and the witnesses. These two duties, both of which are equally important, are utterly incompatible, when confided to the same individual, and ought therefore to be separated. The judicial functions of the Magistrate are of themselves enough to occupy his whole time; indeed in many districts it is difficult for him to prevent causes from running into arrears. In some districts, as the Reports indicate, one or two hundred individuals are thus detained from their homes at the highest inconvenience, and thus the dread of having any thing to do with our Courts, though they are established solely for the protection of the people, becomes more confirmed and more general.

While the Magistrate is thus confined to the bench, it is impossible he should know anything that passes in the interior of his district, among a population of a million, except as it may be reported by the Native Officers of Police, the Darogahs, the fidelity of whose reports he has no means of testing. These men have been entrusted with large power in a country where the smallest power is always abused, and who have hitherto received the meagre pittance for their pay, in a country where bribery and extortion are the rule, almost without exception. They have thus been exposed to the constant temptation of coming that power into money,—a process no where so well understood as in India. It is to such venal and uncontrolled officers that the charge of the Police, of searching after crime, has been committed. We saw the word committed, —because not one act of extortion committed by them out of a hundred is ever known to the Magistrate, and because, the occasional, or even the frequent dismissal of the Darogahs has no effect in checking the system of oppression. It either furnishes the Darogah with an additional stimulus for extortion; and teaches him the necessity of making the most of his brief and uncertain tenure of office. Government has resolved to raise the salaries of a certain number of the Darogahs; and this system of excessive pay, will of course contribute to justify the Police; but something more is necessary to detect and to repress crime, and to restore the confidence of the people in our judicial institutions, than this mere increase of pay. A Darogah may always make 500 Rs. a month without any remarkable oppression. Indeed we question whether, upon the old oriental adage that "those who live in the water, must keep on good terms with the alligator," a stimulus to this may not be voluntarily offered to him, by those who are under his immediate authority, or who live within the reach of his official influence. In many cases, the Darogah's place is worth 500 Rs. a month; and this will not be wondered at when it is considered that there are Police jurisdictions, in which more money circulates in a day, than circulated throughout the whole of England, in the reign of Edward the Fourth. The most effect of higher pay will not be immediately visible in men who have been accustomed to live by plunder; and Government must not be surprised if some of the men who have been raised to 100 Rs. a month, should still consider a dacoity in a wealthy village as a god-send, and contrive to add a hundred or two of Rupees to their allowances by extortion.

It has been said that the Police is not worse than it was thirty years ago, and that there is, after all, not much to complain of. It is just possible that the Police may have been in the same state of inefficiency, in the year 1813; but there can be no doubt that the condition of the people has greatly deteriorated. It is impossible to suppose such a Police as that which the Report describes to have existed for thirty years without having produced the most pernicious effect on public happiness. Every year during that period, the people have become more and more alienated from the Police, more determined to keep away from our Courts, more resolved to put up with any inconvenience and distress from dacoits and plunderers rather than to bring down the terrors of a Darogah's inquest upon them. This resignation has necessarily emboldened the dacoits and rogues, and led to the establishment of active and systematic plans for plundering the country. To suppose that the public misery has not increased under the operation of our present system, or to doubt that it must continue to increase until the system is reformed, would be to forget altogether the connection between cause and effect. The nature of the disease suggests the nature of the remedy. To the systematic deprivations of robbers, whom the indolence or connivance of our police has encouraged, we must oppose a systematic and honest crusade against rogues. We require a Police establishment whose chief business shall be to ferret out thieves and dacoits, quite as much as we require a Judicial Magistrate to try them when they are caught. In addition to the higher pay of the Darogahs, we require officers who shall have their eye continually on them to spur them to activity, and to check the abuse of their power. Mr. Dampier, after a careful review of the acts of the Police during the year 1851,

"I am of opinion that the Police force as it now is, might be rendered much more useful and efficient to the community, and many of the evils now attending the system done away if the duty of superintending the District Divisions was placed in other hands than those of the Magistrate, who are too much occupied with their judicial duties to pay that attention which is necessary for the improvement of this important branch of the executive authority. It is to this total want of adequate local control that the indolence, corruption, and use of torture by, the Police may be traced, and until this department is completely taken out of the hands of functionaries overburdened with other duties these evils will remain."

It was suggested some time since, that an establishment similar to that which had succeeded in breaking up the organization of the Thugs, would be the most appropriate for breaking up the organization of dacoits. Within the last year or two, some of the Thug Officers have been directed to extend their enquiries to the staff of dacoities in Bengal; and the result has fully answered expectation. One of the first services of Capt. Marsh, the Thug officer, was to discover the men who had actually been concerned in the robbery and murder at Mr. Smylie's house at Suddannah. Nine persons had been arrested for the offence; of these four were convicted on the evidence adduced, and sentenced to imprisonment, one for life, two for fourteen years and one for seven. As soon as Capt. Marsh's establishment began to work, it was discovered that the murder and robbery had been committed by a gang of Kachuks, one of whom was then in jail for another crime, and that there was every reason to believe that all those who had been sentenced to imprisonment were entirely innocent of the crime, and that the confession and evidence which was credited by the Courts, had been extorted by the Darogah! Many other instances of successful enquiry by the Thug establishment, have lately been brought forward, and there can be little doubt that the same system which has almost eradicated Thuggery, would do up Dacoity in a few years, and that no other plan which has yet been proposed is likely to succeed. It is quite possible that there may be some exaggeration in the confessions made by the Kachuk robbers of Bengal to Capt. Marsh, but after every deduction has been made, there is abundant evidence of the existence of a daring and organized body of men, living by plunder alone, and distributed all over the country, who are in some instances encouraged by our police office, but who in every case despise them and set them at defiance. Such a state of things indeed would naturally be the result of the present system, which fills the Magistrate's hand with work he can scarcely accomplish, and leaves the detection of crime entirely in the hands of corrupt and ill paid Darogahs. It is worth while therefore to try the experiment, for a year or two, of committing three or four of the districts in which crime has been most rife to Officers trained in the Slesman School, and who shall be made for public offenders. An Act will shortly be passed for extending to Dacoity the same stringent laws which have been enacted regarding Thuggee; but unless the same kind of machinery which has been found so effectual in eradicating the crime of Thuggee be organised for the detection of dacoity, the law will in all probability prove ineffectual. This consideration cannot have escaped the attention of Government, and we may expect therefore to find that the enactment of the law will be followed up by the appointment of a corresponding establishment to operate against dacoity. This may be effected without any violent change of system, or any expelling measure of expense; and it may eventually result in a gradual and entire separation of the Police from the Judicial duties of the Magistracy, than which a greater blessing could scarcely be conferred on the country.

In order to strengthen our argument, we annex an extract from the very able minute written by Mr. Halliday, five years ago, in which the anomaly of uniting the duties of the Police, and of the Bench; of chief catcher and thief taker, in the same person is described in strong language. The experience of the five years which have since elapsed, has irresistibly confirmed this representation of the evil; while the partial experiment of committing the functions of the Police to a separate agency, that of the Thug officers, has shown how greatly the peace, security, and welfare of the country would be promoted by adopting the suggestions which have been so repeatedly made.

"The union of Magistracy with Collector has been dignified as incompatible, but the junction of chief-catcher with Judge is surely more anomalous in theory, and more mischievous in practice. So long as it lasts, the public confidence in our Criminal tribunals must always be liable to injury and the authority of justice itself must often be abused and misapplied. For this evil, which arises from a constant and unavoidable bias against all supposed offenders, the power of appeal is not a sufficient remedy—the danger to justice, under such circumstances, is not in a few cases nor in any proportion of cases, but in every case. In all the Magistrats is Constable, Prosecutor, and Judge. If the appeal be necessary to secure justice in any case, it must be so in all; and if it will follow—all sentences by a Magistrate should properly be revised by another authority, it would manifestly be for the public benefit that the appellate tribunal should decide all cases in the first instance.

"It is well known, on the other hand, that the judicial labours of a Magistrate occupy nearly all his time; that which is devoted to matters strictly Executive, being only the short space he employs in hearing Thannah Reports. But the actual management of even a small Police force, and the duties of a public prosecutor, ought to occupy the whole of one man's time, and the management of the Police of a large District, must necessarily be inefficient, which from press of other duties, is allowed over in two busy hours of each day.

"I consider it then an indispensable preliminary to the improvement of our system, that the duties of preventing crime and of apprehending and prosecuting offenders, should without delay be separated from the judicial function; and in this essential improvement, the amendments of the Reports do not provide."

FREIGHT BY THE PENINSULAR COMPANY'S STEAMERS.—The original Schedule of freight by the Oriental Company's Steamers, fixes the lowest charge at fourteen shillings or seven Repees for a cubic foot. But as the Periodical publications which may be imported in any month by private individuals, or by book clubs, are seldom equal in their contents, to any thing like a quarter of a cubic foot, a considerable effort was made to induce Capt. Englewood to allow parcels to be charged according to their weight. We believe he did not feel himself authorized to make any alteration in the scale of charges without a reference to England. The parties who had applied to him, accordingly addressed the Company at home, and the following answer has been received by the last Mail. "In reply to your letter we have the satisfaction to inform you, that we have reduced our freights to Calcutta, to 2 Rs. per pound for periodicals. We shall be glad to make a still greater reduction in our freights when a more regular communication between Suez and India is established."

This intelligence is to a certain extent gratifying. Those who import half a dozen Magazines, will not be constrained to pay the same freight as if they imported fifty. But, the public will long for that more regular communication between India and Suez, which will enable the Company to make a still greater reduction; for a pound of periodical literature will give only three or four times as much space as a cubic foot of Monthly Magazines, whereas a cubic foot of Magazines weighs twenty-six pounds. The relative difference therefore between the freight of small parcels, of less than a cubic foot, and of large ones equal to those dimensions, is more than 80 Per Cent. Still, we would not stint our acknowledgments to the Company for the new privilege they have given, but offer to them that large measure of gratitude which arises out of the hope of future favours.

COL. STODDARD AND CAPT. CONOLLY.—The interest which has been created regarding the unfortunate prisoners of Bokhara, by the offer of Dr. Wolff to proceed to that capital and attempt to obtain their liberation, has been kept up by the receipt of additional information regarding them during the last week. One account is that of a Jew from Bokhara, who stated to the writer of the letter that he was an eye witness to the execution of four Europeans, viz. Col. Stoddard, Capt. Conolly, a young German officer, and a baptised Jew. He affirms that there is only one European left at Bokhara, viz. an Italian of the name of Giovanni, who manufactures clay images. But the testimony of another witness, who could have had no communication with the Jew, has just been obtained at Loodiana, and affords strong reason to believe that Col. Stoddard still survives. The man states, that after the Bokhara forces had been defeated by the Khan of Khiva, the king ordered Captain Conolly to be put to death, because he was supposed to be a great favourite of the Khan at whose court he had been most favourably received. This witness also states that four individuals, supposed to be Europeans, were actually executed, but that Col. Stoddard and Capt. Conolly were not among the number. Lastly, he affirms that the Tophsee band had been sent to recover, and that Col. Stoddard was a leaf out of that officer's journal and gave it to the creditor who despatched it to Col. Shell, in Persia. We have yet to learn that the Colonel has received it. If it contained an acknowledgment of the receipt of this sum, there can be no doubt that it was extracted from the book by a European, and we may reasonably suppose that the European was Col. Stoddard. In this case, however, there is every reason to suppose that he would have signed some writing or notification to it, in some shape or other, to inform his friends of his own condition, and of the fate of his companion.

These conflicting statements seem to strengthen the obligation of the community, and we think, in a higher sense, the obligation of Government to make an immediate attempt to rescue the unfortunate officers, if they be still alive; and, at least to ascertain their fate. It may be true that at the period of their captivity, they were not accorded to the Court of Bokhara, and so far as this plea exonerates Government from the necessity of going to war with the Prince of Believers, and the most barbarous of monarchs, it may be valid. But if British officers, that they were travelling in a region in which it was important of the time, establish British influence, and with this general communication they had assuredly been entrusted. They were sufficiently British officers, labouring for the promotion of British interests, to lay on their official Masters the imperative necessity of using every effort,—short of a distant and ruinous war, which would probably be the signal for their execution if they are alive—to secure their release; and at the least to devote the sum of 10,000, or 15,000 Rupees to that object.

Of the proposals which have been made in England and in this country, we incline to that of employing a native agent whose full reward shall depend upon the success of his mission. It is much to be doubted whether Dr. Wolff will ever be permitted to reach Bokhara. He will find the feelings of the people in Central Asia not a little changed during the last ten years. The irruption of a European army; its discomfiture; its return and triumph; and its final departure will have given a new turn to the minds of men; and they may not be disposed again to grant him the privileges of a traveller. Should he be permitted to reach Bokhara, it is more probable that he will be sent to the same dungeon in which the unfortunate officers were confined, than be permitted to carry them off. On the other hand, a Native of Central Asia, if faithful to his promises, will find no difficulty in entering Bokhara, and discovering the fate of the captives, and bringing a note from them, if alive. It is even possible that in this case he might be enabled to negotiate for their release. If the individual mentioned by the Editor of the Star, as willing to undertake the perilous undertaking, should be found trustworthy, we would vote for his being despatched to Bokhara without delay. The duty of providing for his expenses, derives in the first instance on the Government, in whose service the Officers put their lives in jeopardy. If Government should refuse assistance, we hope an application will be made to the community, and with immediate success.

THE ECONOMIST.—We have been favoured with two numbers of a Newspaper, the Economist, recently started in England, on liberal commercial principles. The numbers appear to be got up with much diligence, and to be edited with considerable talent. It bids fair, therefore, to maintain its position among the periodical publications of England, though as a weekly paper, it has a most formidable competition to cope with, in other papers of established reputation. If the subsequent numbers should bear the same marks of diligence and ability, we should feel no hesitation in recommending it to the patronage of the community in India.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2.

— We accidentally omitted to state last week that Major Mackenzie, C. B., who had been employed in high political trusts during the Afghan war, in which he had earned no ordinary reputation, and who was subsequently recommended to his own Regiment, where he was employed on the Staff, has again been placed by Lord Ellenborough in a political situation, in which there will be scope for his talents. Thus the present administration has been relieved from another appointment which no one could fail to suppose that the best of one who had earned a Brevet and a Companionship of the Bath by his services to a Regimental Quarter Master, and who had been subsequently promoted, through the recommendation of Lord Ellenborough, to the rank of Colonel, and Major Mackenzie and Pottinger, of whom the two former are in England, and the latter in Ceylon.

— The Court of Directors, says the Star, have refused to Mr. Fox, the author of the letters signed Quarter General, in which the opinion was given by Government towards their own European troops and non-commissioned officers was expressed in the most masterly style, the pension of £600 a year to which he is entitled by 25 years service in India and 17 in the department from which he was removed—thereby beseeching testimony themselves to the truth of Mr. Fox's statements of grievances.

— The Registration Act, which has been long on the tapis, has at length passed. It is of course only a temporary measure, for all Registration to be beneficial must be compulsory; the validity of a deed must be made to date from its registration not from its execution. There must be no exceptions; and it is the business of Government to establish such machinery as shall be sufficient for the registration of all deeds without exception, even to the people. The fees of Registration will always pay for its establishment.

— We are sorry to learn from the Calcutta Christian Intelligence that the Archbishop was unable to return to Calcutta on the Elindoon from India. We are not a little surprised that this information should not have been transmitted until more than a fortnight after the arrival of the Elindoon.

— The Lecture on Education, which was to have been delivered by Mr. Montague, of the Parental Academy, on Tuesday evening at the Mechanics' Institute, was postponed, and very properly, for want of an audience, for there must be two parties to a lecture, the lecturer and the lectured. On this occasion there was not a dozen present.

— A correspondent of the Star states that, by the extinction of Ranjitsingh's family, the British states on the left bank of the Sutlege river, to us by virtue of a treaty which exists between the two Governments. He calls this rumour; but the estates were never in our possession.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 3.

Mr. Vining, who came out in the Elindoon, and has assumed the direction of the Theatre in Calcutta, into which he is said to have introduced diverse reforms, among the most remarkable and unexpected of which is said to be that of genderity, made his debut last night at Shylock. The amusement of the evening was suddenly interrupted by Mrs. Leach's dress catching fire on the stage, through some carelessness in placing the lamps. Her whole figure was soon in a blaze, but it was speedily extinguished. Fortunately some of the nearest intimacy were in the Theatre and audience was very promptly given to the refugee. Some twenty-two years ago when the Marquis of Hastings was rudely attacked in Chagah wall in St. James, he was not so fortunate, for his medical assistance was to be found within its walls, and it was some days before assistance could be procured for his Lordship.

— The Duff Gazette states, that the Buller

Board, and we suppose also the Buller Court, must to commence their march from Allahabad to Agra on the 1st of the present month. There does not seem to be any particular object in this movement, unless it is intended to continue to Agra the gift of a separate Government with a Lieutenant Governor to superintend the Civil, Criminal and fiscal details of the administration, for Agra is not so central than Allahabad was. Yet we are told that the question of perpetuating a separate Government at Agra is to be brought under discussion in Parliament in the coming Session.

— The Star states, that H. M. S. 31st Foot have received orders to march to Ferozepore, that the 1st European Light Infantry proceeds Ludlow, while H. M. S. 9th Foot stands fast at Umballa. The Star adds, that the 3d European Regiment and H. M. S. 40th Foot will proceed to Umballa. The assembly of so large a European force on the borders of the Punjab has an evident aspect to the Sikhish state of affairs in that country.

— The Governor General's establishment, says the Register, presents to the Upper Provinces on the 1st, and the detachment of the Body Guard left Barmespoore yesterday. His Lordship does not proceed till after the arrival of the Mail, and then by dawn. But there is some hope that the Gwalior negotiations may be brought to a successful issue, without the necessity of the Governor General's proceeding to Agra in person; in which case his Lordship, it is said, will remain here. Possibly a French translation of Act 30 of 1843, which assumes the approaching departure of Lord Ellenborough may frighten the Khawas into a compliance with the ultimatum of our Government.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4.

— The Agra Ubbur states, that a Brahmin at Gwalior having died there on the 19th, leaving a young widow, aged 17, and no children, she declared her intention to sacrifice herself on his funeral pile. When every thing had been prepared, she ascended it, but no sooner did the flames reach her, than unable to endure the torments, she leaped from the burning pile, and brought the spectators to save her from so horrid a death; but the brahmin insisted on her remounting the pile. She refused to do so, and was immediately cut down and thrown into the flames. The principal of Gwalior will shortly either become entirely our own, in which case we hope the British law will be extended to it, or it will be placed under our influence, so that the wish of the Governor General will be law.

We hope the opportunity will not be lost to eradicate this diabolical practice. The Romans acquired immortal honour by stipulating in one of their treaties that no more children should be sacrificed. Lord Ellenborough has already taken advantage of the acquisition of Soonda to declare slavery at an end. It will be equally easy for him to provide for the extinction of Suttee in Soonda's territories, when settling his claims on the British.

— The Bombay papers of the 29th mention the arrival of the Bombay American sixty gun ship in the port. She is destined to convey his Excellency the Envoy from the President of the United States to his Colonial Majesty. If his Majesty should decline the honour of a visit from the Envoy at Poona, will brother Jonathan put up with the insult, or issue a declaration of war against him?

— The Commander-in-Chief visited Agra on the 1st of October, and the various officers of the general Staff came in either with him or soon after. His Excellency was expected to march towards Agra at the beginning of next month.

— Two great maulanas of Sindiah in the suburbs of Calcutta, Faz-ul-Karim and Buz-ul-Bukhari, who have hitherto continued to keep themselves clear of the Govt., though they have seen many things, whom they had indicated to acts of violence, have at length been caught. Mr. Dyson, was sent to serve a writ of habeas corpus, and was immediately made prisoner. The Magistrate released him with a large fine and in his turn captured the maulanas, who have been duly fined and imprisoned for sedition of process, and then lay their much prized Assam, which is general means no more to exempt them from that legal process to which all other classes of the community are subject.

— The Star says, that the Assam Steam Company's vessel, the Joseph, has just returned from her trip to Allahabad. She has been absent a month and three days, of which three days and a half were lost by detention. She has therefore performed the voyage there and back in twenty-nine days. The Government Steamers have sometimes done the same at this season of the year. But we rejoice to find that there is a competitor in the market; and as this competitor has begun with charging Two Rupees a cubic foot for freight, we hope Mr. Robertson who went up in her, will soon be able to establish another rival Association, and thus reduce freight within reasonable limits.

— The Star has a letter from Sakkar of a date as the 18th October which confirms the intelligence received from Delhi of the extreme unhealthiness of the station. We have extracted the first part of it, which will be found interesting.

— The Legislative Council of Ceylon has just resolved that Clergymen shall be compelled to sit on the Jury. This unusual step has excited much indignation both on the Island and at Madras. The writers however seem to forget that every argument they use against the appointment of Clergymen to the Jury applies with ten fold force to the appointment of Clerical Magistrates at home, which is strenuously defended by a large portion of the Press and of Society.

— The papers have noticed, not without cause, that as soon as the Assam Steamer advertised to receive freight, Government put on a Steamer, and fixed to receive freight at the same hour. This is said to be ungenerous. If the Assam Steamer had lowered her freight below that of the Government, she would have had nothing to fear from this competition, but as the Proprietors have chosen to fix their rates at 30 Per Cent. higher than that of Government, we think the public is likely to benefit by the competition. If Government has tonnage to spare, it is better that the public should have it at a Rupee eight annas the foot, than be obliged to pay the exorbitant price of two Rupees to this new Company.

— The Duff Gazette states that the little state of Bhikarwote is a lawless state. There is an insurrection, and 8000 armed men have set out authority at defiance and are in possession of two forts. Major Forster has gone against them, and Major Thorpe has sent some heavy guns from Mysore.

— Col. Spiers has been appointed Resident at Nagpore, vice Major Wilkinson. Can any of our readers say why the Major has been superseded? His appointment belongs to the Foreign Department, with which department it was that Lord Ellenborough issued the order prohibiting the communication of papers and news; but some official person may surely be able to gratify public curiosity in this respect.

— His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has presented new colours to the 54th Native Infantry. The regiment was annihilated in Afghanistan; and the only surviving officer of that catastrophe, Capt. Mallory, received the highest compliments from Sir Hugh.

— An attempt at Suttee has been made at Bombay. A Marwaris had died, and his widow declared her determination to burn with his body. One European and two Native Magistrates endeavoured to dissuade her from her purpose, but she did not relinquish her hold on the corpse without a hard struggle with the Police officers.

— We carry from the Star an account of the death of the lamented James Prinsep by the great Chantry, one of his last works, which has arrived in Calcutta, and now adorns the rooms of the Asiatic Society.

— The Bombay papers announce that the prison captured in Soonda had arrived there in the Assam, 5000 boxes, valued at twenty lakhs of Rupees.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 7.

— The Madras papers mention the death of Mr. Cornhill, the oldest attorney of the Court at the age of 82. We are told that he had previously realized two fortunes, and returned to England, where they were lost—double in the vain hope of adding to them,—and that he was constrained to come out a third time to India.

— It has been rumored for some time that rumours would be immediately suspended in reference to the uncertain state of our relations with Gwalior and Lahore. This will be a very great disappointment, and a source of no little expense to officers who have come down to the Presidency to go home on the urgency of private affairs, of business or relaxation. It will also seriously affect the prospects of the noble sailing vessels now in harbour, or shortly expected. What between the suspension of farleigh and the competition of the Steamers, they stand utterly considerably.

— The Harkness relations, on the strength of letters from the North-west, that the Sikh troops at Peshawar had deserted the city and fort in great alarm, and were flying to the Indus, plunging the country in their route. This was fully anticipated. There is no longer any Arviths there to verify the miscreants by his terrific examples of severity.

— The same paper gives us an extract of a letter from Gwalior, which will be found among our selections, from which we should infer that there will soon be no government to treat with at all, but that the whole country will fall into a state of anarchy and be subjected to general plunder.

— The Sheriff of Madras has convened a meeting of the inhabitants "to consider the expediency of adopting some means for improving the communication between the shore and the shipping." The Madras Spectator has been unmerciful in his efforts to rouse the inhabitants to action on this important matter.

— The Star states that Mr. Caird, Deputy Collector at Allahabad, is to be appointed Agent for Emigration on the part of the Mauritius Government.

— Preparations have been for some time making in front of the steps of Government House in Calcutta for some building of which nothing could be seen, but some large edifice of marble. The Star tells us that there is to be a Dragon to sit upon the stone pedestal, and a gun on the back of the Dragon, to commemorate, we suppose, the victories we achieved over the Dragon throne.

— From the same paper we learn that Government has declined entering upon any expense on account of a geological survey of the fertile recent volcanic area, near the island of Chabot, though ready to have the spot examined by a competent Marine Surveyor.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 8.

— The intelligence given in the papers of this morning is most interesting, if true. At Gwalior the Khawas has been seized by the troops without bloodshed, and his reign is at an end. It is supposed that this event will render the advance of the Army unnecessary. The Star says that Lord Ellenborough has already abandoned the idea of leaving Calcutta.

— Dost Mahomed has been shot dead at Cabul by order of the Prince of Beloochee, the Khan of Bokhara. It is said that the Khan sent several persons with his own seal to Cabul stating "that whoever should kill the Dost would go to heaven." This event will probably lead to a suspension of any effort on the part of the Afghans to occupy Peshawar; but the upshot will probably be that Cabul itself will fall a prey to Bokhara, an event which those acquainted with the state of affairs in that region, have contemplated as not improvable.

— The accounts from Sukker are most distressing then ever. It appears that of the troops there only 1,271 are in hospital, and only 128 well. Every officer but one in each corps is inefficient from illness.

— We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following sums for the Friend of India:—

Chs. Es. As.
Lieut. J. H. Ferguson, ... to Dec. 1844, 30 0
Bahadur Jadochunder Ganges, ...
G. F. McClintock, Esq., ... to April, 1844, 10 0
... to July, 1844, 20 0

Bahadur Hemmatt Esq., ... to March, 1844, 10 0
S. Bickins Esq., ... to Dec. 1844, 10 0
Bahadur Sikkander Bhow., ... to March, 1844, 10 0
P. Johnson, Esq., ... to Sept. 1844, 20 0
G. Magintosh, Esq., ... to Dec. 1844, 30 0
J. M. Val Esq., ... to Sept. 1844, 20 0
Lieut. Col. G. Kingston, to Sept. 1844, 20 0
J. Dumas, Esq., ... to April, 1844, 10 0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

DEATH OF JAMES PRINCE.

A bust, one of the last executed by Chantrey, of our distinguished and lamented townsman James Prince, has arrived we understand in Calcutta, and is now placed in the rooms of the Asiatic Society. To the likeness we are unable from personal experience to speak, but the resemblance is said to be peculiarly striking, and certainly the execution of the bust as a work of art places it among the happiest of the efforts of the great artist by whom it was produced. Mr. James Prince left India in a deplorably weak state of health that the very nature and character of the ordinary exertions of his engaging conversation are said to have undergone considerable change. The bust, however, although modelled after his arrival in England exhibits no traces of any ailment, and we cannot but be struck by the personal appearance of it's eminent original while in all the vigour of health, and intellect. The subject by Chantrey is said to have been aided in it's completion by recourse to pictures of the subject, and our informants who knew James Prince well, pronounce the success of the attempt to give his exact likeness as indisputable. The finishing of the marble was hurriedly completed after the death of the great designer of the model from which it was worked, and it reflects the greatest credit upon them by whom it was completed. The look of life and intelligence is perfect, and it gives, as it were, a double expression, common as we are told to the original, of commingled thoughtfulness, and energy.

The bust has been presented by the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and we congratulate that body upon having had occasion to add to their collection of similar monuments of their illustrious members, so valuable a possession. We are no less delighted at seeing another eminent work of art deposited in the public rooms of a Local Society, convinced that the more numerous such institutions into this country of works eloquent of intelligence, civilization, and advancement in the arts, the more rapid will be the spread of that taste which alone can appreciate them, and which is itself the result of increased knowledge, and the cultivation of the finer faculties. —Calcutta Star, Nov. 6.

LABOER.

"The following is our latest letter from Lahore, dated the 12th of October. It conveys nothing of positive intelligence of any important kind, but confirms our previous view of the state of the army in Lahore. Iffers Singh is loath to part with his treasure, the men are discontented at his not fulfilling his promises to them, and consequently resorting to desertion in large numbers. These deserters will probably form themselves into bands of plunderers, who will prey for a while on the population of the country, and, when tired of this work, join the standard of the man who was able to pay them better and more abundantly of securing power and influence.

"Many of the Natives of this country are doing their best to abandon it and carry off their property to Hissar. Many of the officers of the Government have taken their leave, and proceeded to their homes. Many of those who plundered the inhabitants of Lahore at the time of the outbreak have concealed in hoarding and carrying away their spoil. Some days since Raja Harn Singh sent to invite Nohal Singh, of Kappahel, to Hissar. The Sirindar says his life might be in danger if he should comply with this request, pleaded sickness as an excuse, and has to this day declined pre-empting himself at the Durbar. On the 11th inst. a detachment of 5000 men, consisting of the troops, promising to those who should attend, one month's pay, and threatening those who might absent themselves with half a month's deduction, were sent to Hissar. They intended to absent themselves, and the murmurs of the Army generally are loud against Harn Singh. Maharajah Duleep Singh has been some time free of the effects of fever, and all the medicine which he has taken has been of no avail in removing the sickness. His mother is in some doubt as to whether he will, apprehensive that some one might attempt to seize him together with his medicines. He has now been attacked with diarrhoea, and Raja Harn Singh, Nohal Singh, Tugheer Nohal-ood, Dewan Dams-math, and other Sikhs, waited upon his mother at Anandpur, to persuade her to allow them to take him to the city, and to allow them to order for him to which she gave a decided negative. At last the Raja sent for the medicine and administered it himself to the patient. Nohal Singh has repeatedly written to his Uncle, Goolab Singh to join him at Lahore, which, however, the Lord of Jambou is unable to do on account of the pressure of the Government, his own possessions, and it is currently believed that no Government can be permanently established in Lahore until he makes his appearance. The Sikh soldiers are dissatisfied for the want of pay, and those who are strictly Hindoostanes are anxious to get away far from what will come. Every one who can do so is removing his property towards the frontier. Dewan Dostmah has secured his family and all his possessions on the side of the river. Yesterday a Loediana (Udian) presented annual to the Maharajah, and on the 10th inst. the hearing of the Court, it was that the Governor General had ordered an assembly at Agra, but that some days past, order had been suspended and the division of the army changed from Agra towards Loediana with the view of invading the Punjab. This intelligence created considerable alarm amongst the courtiers and especially in Harn Singh, who became very thoughtful on the subject. This morning the Maharajah was taken in a Soggy by Raja Harn Singh to inspect the Troops. The Maharajah is said to be the latest of Dost Mahomed to take immediate advantage of the troubles in the Punjab, and Mahomed Uthar Khan has already proceeded to Jallandhar to secure collection of the arrears of revenue there. Dukka, and little doubt is entertained that he will be able to take possession of Peshawar." —Dell's Gazette, Oct. 23.

GWALIOR.

"The whole Lunkah, since the 25th, has been in a general state of confusion. The Mahal's Cause having again revolved, and the troops composing the grand Jinnah having joined them. They have mounted heavy guns on an eminence adjoining the palace, and are firing upon positions commanding both banks. On the night of the 25th, the Khawas ordered Amrit Khan, whom he lately appointed to Begpur's Battalion, to attack the Mahal's Cause with the Amrit Khan's Light Cavalry, mounted Regiment, and twelve guns, moved out, took up a position, and made his batteries; he has then the night of the 26th, the troops of the Camp made a sally and captured the guns, muzzles, and drums; the commandant's horse, and all the paraphernalia of his entourage; they then burnt the Mahal's Cause, and set "jadoo-marting" them, carried them off captive, and compelled the spy to drag the guns, which they had captured, after them, calling them at the same time "Gwalior and traitors. Amrit Khan fled, at the first onset, and concealed himself in a Buzurg's shop,—he was followed by a number of the rebels, who threatened to pull down the different houses of the Mahal's Cause, and his hiding place. While this was going on, Amrit Khan disguised himself in woman's apparel, but, before he could escape, the spy's trail led into the house with muzzles, and after some search, found him in a privy. The spy's dragged him out and beat him till he was senseless; not satisfied with this, they took him to his father's house, and to a gun, and then dragged him to their Camp. On the morning of the 27th, their commanding Sesooleen endeavored to attack them, but they were too late, and he was obliged to retire. The faithful servants of the gwalder, and that they were determined to punish the Khawasgwalla and his followers for creating disorder and anarchy in the country, during the time of the residence, and bringing the British troops in to settle the country,—they continued, by solemnly protesting, that they would not rest till Beloochee was destroyed, and punished him for his crimes." —Hurber's, Nov. 7. For subsequent events see our summary.

SHIKAR.

"All is now tranquil both in Upper and Lower Seinde, save depredations are however committed by small parties of Scoldons. The other day a party of twelve men, armed with muskets, set out mid-day, at a place a short distance from Shikarpore, and selecting five and twenty of the best camels of a batch that were feeding, belonging to the village near of the residence, they proceeded, and daily expected at Shikarpore from Candahar, and through the public proclamation of Lord E. talks of all "a series of depredations and robberies, and a paper called a circular was sent to officials, telling them know that that article of the treaty or proclamation was suspended till further orders." Now this "Kaffir" will be passed down upon some men also had been scarcely a week out of Hospital before they were re-admitted for a relapse brought on by a fresh act of intemperance.

The Quarterly average numerical strength of the Company was, 70. Total number of absences from the Hospital, 54 which \times by 4 will give 216 per annum. Ratio per cent of absences to strength, $\frac{216}{70} = 3.08$. The number admitted from Drunkenness, 37. Ratio per cent admitted from drunkenness to strength, $\frac{37}{70} = 0.52$.

The following return showing the number of admissions from the abuse of drinking ardent spirits is carefully compiled from the Orderly Sergeant's admission tickets.

Description of Patients.	Had been drinking.	Sober.	Total.
From Barracks,	9	30	39
From Off Duty,	1	3	4
Dry Room Prisoners,	1	5	6
Quarter Guard Prisoners,
Total,

This table is not confined to the private hospital, but the fact that five of the above drunken admissions were of Sergeants and Corporals.

As my present object is not to make a medical return, I will merely observe that inflammation of the Stomach, Bowels and Liver, were the most frequent results seen in these cases.

The conclusion to be drawn from the above statement will be, that in a Company of one hundred men, one-half of whom are supposed to be of good habits, the other half will individually have been three times a year admitted into Hospital for either actual drunkenness, or diseases immediately produced by it.

That in all European ports in this country, drunkenness prevails to an equally proportionate extent is not probable, nevertheless in the words of the concluding paragraph of the Honourable Court's letter, "we are well persuaded that when, as in the case of Her Majesty's 50th Regiment, good arrangements for the internal economy of the corps are adopted and maintained, will hit his amongst the men will be kept within comparatively narrow limits."

Yours truly,
M. D.

Note.—We think our Correspondent is perfectly correct in saying that though drunkenness prevails to a fearful extent in the European army in India, no station presents such a lamentable picture as that of Diapars. It is perhaps the very worst station in India for European Soldiers from the facility and cheapness with which Toddy—the intoxicating juice of the date tree may be obtained. Two pice worth of this delicious liquor is sufficient to turn a man into a beast.—Ed.

EUROPE.

FURNITURE.—We have reason to believe that the question as to whether or not the principles held by Dr. Pusey and his disciples will be presented in the rubric and canons of the Church will, in the course of a few months, be brought before the proper ecclesiastical tribunals.—Observer.

THE SCOTCH EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sir William Dunbar accepted the charge of St. Paul's Church in Aberdeen, on the 30th May 1843, which had been offered to him by the constituent members of that church, with whom lay the power of presentation.

Prior to this, the congregation of St. Paul's had formed a junction with the Scottish Episcopal Church in January 1841. Up to this period, through a course of 120 years, it had existed as an English Episcopal congregation, entirely independent of, and unconnected with, the Scottish Episcopal Church.

When Sir William entered upon his charge, he found this junction effected by a document, styled a "Ded of Union, &c." This deed, consisting of the conditions of union on the one side and on the other. When, therefore, he was called upon in July 1842 to sign the Canons of the Scottish Episcopal Church, it is manifest that his signature was not given; but justice has interpreted in such a manner as to involve an infringement of the conditions of union.

Use of these conditions were to the congregation of St. Paul's, all the rights and privileges which they enjoyed before the union, as English Episcopalians; and further declares that any infringement of them on the part of the Scottish Episcopal Church, shall be held to be null and void. During the few months, Sir William has found these conditions infringed in several particulars of vital moment.

I. The Bishop censured him, and threatened further proceedings, because Sir William refused to be present at, or to take any share in, the administration of the Lord's Supper according to the formula of the Scottish Episcopal Church.

II. The Bishop refused to administer the rite of confirmation in St. Paul's Chapel, but only in St. Andrew's, where at least one service totally and vitally distinct from the services of the Church of England is used.

III. Sir William was further threatened with ecclesiastical censure, unless a collection for the Scottish Episcopal Church was made in his congregation, which collection the managers of St. Paul's (who, by the constitution, as confirmed in the Ded of Union, had full powers in this respect) refused to make.

In consequence of these utterly unjustifiable encroachments upon the "rights and privileges" of the congregation and himself, Sir William found himself placed in a dilemma. He must either enter upon these encroachments, and so be the instrument of making the conditions of the Ded of Union a dead letter, or he must withdraw his signature from the Scottish Episcopal Church, because the Bishop, who had been proved to be utterly incompatible with such union.

Sir William could not, and did not, hesitate as to the alternative. He withdrew himself, on 13th May 1843, from the jurisdiction of a Bishop, who, by his pressing, unqualified submission in certain points, had placed the condition of his Union, binding equally upon himself and Sir William.

On the 21st of June 1843, the constituent members of St. Paul's Chapel met, and by a very large majority resolved, that the Ded of Union between this congregation and the Scottish Episcopal Church is, from this date, annulled and void; and that the thanks of the constituent members of St. Paul's Chapel are due to the Rev. Sir William Dunbar, for his conduct in defending their rights.

The whole case, therefore, lies in a nutshell. Sir William had his own free choice of the conditions of St. Paul's. It was "a duty elected" by them; and in terms of the constitution, "THEREBY was right to exercise his functions, and to receive the emoluments of his office." He immediately thereafter entered on his pastoral duties;—he preached, he administered the sacrament, and solemnized the rite of matrimony, as was unimpeached by the Bishop (which, according to Canon IX. of the Scottish Episcopal Church, he could not have done, had his ministerial authority been derived from, or dependent upon, that Church.) On discovering afterwards that the conditions of the Ded of Union, which he was bound conscientiously to maintain, were infringed, he did nothing more than, in consistency with his own principles, and in loyalty to the constituent members who gave him his call, withdraw himself from the jurisdiction of the Bishop, and returned to the position which he occupied before he was inducted; he preached, he administered the sacraments, and solemnized the rite of matrimony, as he had formerly done under the same legal authority, viz. the constitution of the chapel, and under the same ecclesiastical authority, viz. his letters of English orders; and for years, and years, more, with a character unimpaired, and with unquestioned devotion to his Master's cause, he is thus openly branded as an outcast from the mystical body of Christ, beyond the pale of the communion of saints, so that no one shall join in sacraments or prayers with him! Truly, this is the very height of spiritual depravity,—a very preposterous imputation of Popish intolerance,—a very unreasonable specimen of Episcopal inequality.

Had "we, William Skinner," &c. &c., merely declared that Sir William Dunbar was no longer a member of the Scottish Episcopal Church, and that we would not to have any authority or interest therein, no person would have thought twice of the document. But when he proceeds deliberately to stigmatize him as an outcast from the Catholic Church, and to brand him as faithful to avoid him as a moral pestilence, we ask in perfect amazement, who is this "we, William Skinner," that he should dare thus to point his spiritual artillery, as if he were armed with the power to sweep this world and of that which is to come. And let it be distinctly noted, that he does this by this mischievous piece of would-be Popish dogmatism, which would annihilate of a moment every principle of protestantism, and would lay him sure to any man,—not only prove his unbelief himself against Sir William Dunbar, but he likewise with sufficient clarity indicates his opinion of every other minister of God, who, in Aberdeen, does not submit to the absurd pretensions of "We, William Skinner."

But we have taken some pains to look into the reasons of the Church which rejoices in this "We, William Skinner," &c. &c. "Primum" is, that Sir William has broken the laws of his own communion in this matter of ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

I. Had he intended to proceed against Sir William Dunbar, he was bound to summon the culprit before himself, sitting in Synod, to let him know what he was doing, and to give him at least the opportunity of defending himself, or of availing himself of the right which Sir William retained; and the very first intimation which Sir William received of any procedure against him, was the handing in to him of the bill of censure, which was only a mere, though without force.

II. The Bishop has no power to proceed to excommunication on his own authority, or on that of any assembly, or of any Synod. He might have excommunicated Sir William, as he has "We, William Skinner," &c. &c. "Primum" is, that Sir William, he is usurping a power which the Bishop alone holds. Synod alone claims to proceed; and it is earnestly to be hoped that the "Primum" may receive a proper rebuke from his colleagues, for giving way so hastily to temper, and forgetting canon law.

Meanwhile, it is interesting to know that Sir William Dunbar is stoutly holding on his way, despite of bishops sitting in Synod with their clergy, and their diluvian influence of Romish thunder. The blow which his friends have given him, which was upon the infuriated men who originated it. Nothing which they could have devised, could possibly tell with greater effect in Sir William's favour than this absurd sentence. Since his election always been, this has made it stronger still. It was intended to frighten him, but, in truth, it has made him feel that the less that he says, the more he has been given, and very black cartridges it is. It has convinced him of the necessity, nay, the necessity of all that he has done, and has served him with renewed vigour to hold fast the important principle which he has so incidentally assigned to him. His people likewise, as they will always be when led on by sound scriptural and uncompromising faithfulness, are confirmed in their attachment to him, and will stand by him in his struggle their own. The number of his congregation has been nearly doubled since the beginning of the year, and the Bishop's toll has needed still farther to be increased. The more the Bishop's toll has increased, the more the people are raising for "pure and undiluted religion," against all the shapes and shades of the "apostasy of iniquity."

For the last few months, Scottish Episcopacy has been on its trial. It has been found miserably defective; its latent spirit has been suddenly and every day developed; and the manifestation is one which most cease every Christian mind to mourn, and every enemy to rejoice. It has evidenced too close an affinity to "the month speaking great things." It is, however, acceptable, the portion of work set down to its achievement—it is tempting to the wider operation every day of them who love the form letter than the power of goodness. It has begun its warfare, first with Mr. Drummond in Edinburgh, then with Sir William Dunbar in Aberdeen; and singularly enough, while thus engaged, symptoms of uneasiness manifested themselves in the west of Scotland. Mr. McCulloch of Glasgow thinks it better to give up Scottish Episcopacy, and retire to England, whence he came; and Mr. Bage of Edinburgh, having arrived at the same conclusion, has also retired to England, and is again, to his native land, the Emerald Isle.—Ed.

GOLD, PURPLE, SABLE, AND FINE LINES.—A SERMON.—It is important enough, that there are among the Clergy of this Kingdom many Old Fellows of various descriptions; but our readers may not be aware, that there is an Order of Old Fellows, which numbers amongst its members many of the most distinguished and the most valuable of the Clergy, and we know not what else, and resembling, apparently, in its establishment, the Masonic brotherhood; though we cannot tell but that Old Fellows may be a variety of Protestant fratres, whom it concerns with the Prophet ourselves to revive. We have had transmitted to us a Sermon on "Gold, Purple, Sable, and Fine Lines," by the Rev. Dr. Pusey, of Exeter, in which the Dedication, "to the Members of the Order of Old Fellows," states, that the Sermon is explanatory of the colours of the Order; and it is called "by their initials, and by the order of the Dedication, for his text, EXOD. XXX. 4, 5, 6, in which occur the words, "gold, and silver, and brass, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine lines," &c. the Reverend Old Fellow also alludes to the "purple, and scarlet, and blue, and silver, and gold," &c. &c. the Church, proceeds to explain the meaning and purpose of the various co-completely successful; the gun, the barrel of which is only fifteen inches long, having thrown balls twice hundred yards beyond the target.—Fat.

The Prussian Fleet, under the command of Admiral Godeffroy, has just published certain financial returns. According to them, 11,644 vessels entered Prussian ports in 1842, of which 6554 were foreign, and 5,190 Prussian. The Prussian tonnage of 400,000 tons, the foreign shipping but of 393,000. The population of the Prussian monarchy is declared to be 16,500,000 souls. It appears that Holland is about to yield on the great question of free navigation of the Scheldt.—Frankfort Journal.

TAMTAM AND FRANCE.—Queen Pomare's letter gives us the pile of letters of the French journals of Friday. As the poor Queen necessarily received her education from the English missionaries, it is not that her style and expressions should be somewhat tuballic. A few words of that kind in the letter are quite sufficient for these bustling men of Paris to conclude that the said letter must have been written by a missionary; and hereupon the National, that worshiper of reason and liberty of conscience, provides that all missionaries be sent away from Tahiti! The remarks of other liberal papers are much in the same vein.—Chronicle.

GOVERNMENT NOTIFICATIONS.

26th October, 1843.
The Governor General in Council has been pleased to appoint Messrs. H. C. Godeffroy, and J. H. C. Godeffroy, Quatin, of the Civil Service, to the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

and
Mr. F. H. Robinson to the North Western Province.

31st October, 1843.
The Right Honourable the Governor General of India in Council has been pleased to make the following Arrangements and Appointments in consequence of the death of the late Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

Mr. J. C. Godeffroy, who died on the 26th inst. was appointed to the office of Secretary to the Government of India in the Bengal Division of the Presidency.

ORDERS BY THE HONOURABLE THE DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF BENGAL.
26th October, 1843.
Bahadur Purnanand, Secy. Sub-Assistant Surgeon of Bhowanipore, in the North Western Province, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

27th October, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

28th October, 1843.
Sayed Ghouse, Secy. Sub-Assistant Surgeon of Bhowanipore, in the North Western Province, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

29th October, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

30th October, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

31st October, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

1st November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

2nd November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

3rd November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

4th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

5th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

6th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

7th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

8th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

9th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

10th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

11th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

12th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

13th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

14th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

15th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

16th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

17th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

18th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

19th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

20th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

21st November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

22nd November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

23rd November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

24th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

25th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

26th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

27th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

28th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

29th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

30th November, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

1st December, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

2nd December, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

3rd December, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

4th December, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

5th December, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

6th December, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

7th December, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

8th December, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

9th December, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

10th December, 1843.
Joshi Nanku, Principal Soldier Amara, East Bengal, for twenty days, is extended from the 18th instant, on private affairs.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ST. ANDREW'S LIBRARY.

NEW BOOKS, &c. &c.
FOR OVERLAND MAIL.

(Continued from last F. Friend of India.)

Dr. PRATT. The Holy Eucharist, a sermon to the people; Dr. Pratt's celebrated sermon before the University, which was the cause of his translation, from the office of Rector of St. Andrew's, to that of Rector of the University of Cambridge, &c. &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

ARMSTRONG. MARTIN. A charge, delivered at the solemn victory of the battle of Waterloo, on July 18, 1815, by H. E. Armstrong, Bishop of Calcutta, &c. 10s. 6d.

HISTORICAL RECORDS OF THE BRITISH ARMY.

Major. Thacker and Co. have to advertise the receipt by recent mail of further contributions of this very interesting series of works, viz. :
1. A Friend of India, 1800-1804.
2. A Friend of India, 1804-1808.
3. A Friend of India, 1808-1812.
4. A Friend of India, 1812-1816.
5. A Friend of India, 1816-1820.
6. A Friend of India, 1820-1824.
7. A Friend of India, 1824-1828.
8. A Friend of India, 1828-1832.
9. A Friend of India, 1832-1836.
10. A Friend of India, 1836-1840.
11. A Friend of India, 1840-1844.
12. A Friend of India, 1844-1848.
13. A Friend of India, 1848-1852.
14. A Friend of India, 1852-1856.
15. A Friend of India, 1856-1860.
16. A Friend of India, 1860-1864.
17. A Friend of India, 1864-1868.
18. A Friend of India, 1868-1872.
19. A Friend of India, 1872-1876.
20. A Friend of India, 1876-1880.
21. A Friend of India, 1880-1884.
22. A Friend of India, 1884-1888.
23. A Friend of India, 1888-1892.
24. A Friend of India, 1892-1896.
25. A Friend of India, 1896-1900.
26. A Friend of India, 1900-1904.
27. A Friend of India, 1904-1908.
28. A Friend of India, 1908-1912.
29. A Friend of India, 1912-1916.
30. A Friend of India, 1916-1920.
31. A Friend of India, 1920-1924.
32. A Friend of India, 1924-1928.
33. A Friend of India, 1928-1932.
34. A Friend of India, 1932-1936.
35. A Friend of India, 1936-1940.
36. A Friend of India, 1940-1944.
37. A Friend of India, 1944-1948.
38. A Friend of India, 1948-1952.
39. A Friend of India, 1952-1956.
40. A Friend of India, 1956-1960.
41. A Friend of India, 1960-1964.
42. A Friend of India, 1964-1968.
43. A Friend of India, 1968-1972.
44. A Friend of India, 1972-1976.
45. A Friend of India, 1976-1980.
46. A Friend of India, 1980-1984.
47. A Friend of India, 1984-1988.
48. A Friend of India, 1988-1992.
49. A Friend of India, 1992-1996.
50. A Friend of India, 1996-2000.
51. A Friend of India, 2000-2004.
52. A Friend of India, 2004-2008.
53. A Friend of India, 2008-2012.
54. A Friend of India, 2012-2016.
55. A Friend of India, 2016-2020.
56. A Friend of India, 2020-2024.
57. A Friend of India, 2024-2028.
58. A Friend of India, 2028-2032.
59. A Friend of India, 2032-2036.
60. A Friend of India, 2036-2040.
61. A Friend of India, 2040-2044.
62. A Friend of India, 2044-2048.
63. A Friend of India, 2048-2052.
64. A Friend of India, 2052-2056.
65. A Friend of India, 2056-2060.
66. A Friend of India, 2060-2064.
67. A Friend of India, 2064-2068.
68. A Friend of India, 2068-2072.
69. A Friend of India, 2072-2076.
70. A Friend of India, 2076-2080.
71. A Friend of India, 2080-2084.
72. A Friend of India, 2084-2088.
73. A Friend of India, 2088-2092.
74. A Friend of India, 2092-2096.
75. A Friend of India, 2096-2100.
76. A Friend of India, 2100-2104.
77. A Friend of India, 2104-2108.
78. A Friend of India, 2108-2112.
79. A Friend of India, 2112-2116.
80. A Friend of India, 2116-2120.
81. A Friend of India, 2120-2124.
82. A Friend of India, 2124-2128.
83. A Friend of India, 2128-2132.
84. A Friend of India, 2132-2136.
85. A Friend of India, 2136-2140.
86. A Friend of India, 2140-2144.
87. A Friend of India, 2144-2148.
88. A Friend of India, 2148-2152.
89. A Friend of India, 2152-2156.
90. A Friend of India, 2156-2160.
91. A Friend of India, 2160-2164.
92. A Friend of India, 2164-2168.
93. A Friend of India, 2168-2172.
94. A Friend of India, 2172-2176.
95. A Friend of India, 2176-2180.
96. A Friend of India, 2180-2184.
97. A Friend of India, 2184-2188.
98. A Friend of India, 2188-2192.
99. A Friend of India, 2192-2196.
100. A Friend of India, 2196-2200.

W. THACKER AND CO.

Calcutta, Nov. 1, 1843.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.

A LADY of high respectability and accomplished talents, residing in a healthy part of the Coast of Bengal, and desirous of procuring for her children the advantages of living in a private family. The Lady is a mother, and having been for many years in India, is well acquainted with the temper and general habits of the natives. If desired, she would have no objection to take charge of one or two little boys up to 7 or 8 years old, in any case where parents were unwilling to separate children and sisters. The terms will be moderate, varying according to the age of the pupil, but always for a specific sum monthly, including extra charges for every description.

Cards of address, and other particulars will be given by the undersigned, and parties wishing home may communicate with Messrs. J. Colman and Co., No. 11, New Broad-street, London.

Calcutta, October 16, 1843.

NICHOL, WILKIE AND CO.

NOTICE.

THE Undersigned begs to intimate that, having returned from Europe, he now resumes his Agency as Secretary to the LUDOVICK CARMICHAEL.

Calcutta, 1st November, 1843.

JEPHSON AND CO.

AGENT AND GENERAL IMPORTERS, A. HANCOCK ST.

Messrs. PARBURY, T. JACKER & CO.

are at Chambers, 41, Parkers Row, London.

SELECTED consignments of various kinds of Goods.

1. A Military Friend.

2. A Military Friend.

3. A Military Friend.

4. A Military Friend.

5. A Military Friend.

6. A Military Friend.

7. A Military Friend.

8. A Military Friend.

9. A Military Friend.

10. A Military Friend.

11. A Military Friend.

12. A Military Friend.

13. A Military Friend.

14. A Military Friend.

15. A Military Friend.

16. A Military Friend.

17. A Military Friend.

18. A Military Friend.

19. A Military Friend.

20. A Military Friend.

21. A Military Friend.

22. A Military Friend.

23. A Military Friend.

24. A Military Friend.

25. A Military Friend.

26. A Military Friend.

27. A Military Friend.

28. A Military Friend.

29. A Military Friend.

30. A Military Friend.

31. A Military Friend.

32. A Military Friend.

33. A Military Friend.

34. A Military Friend.

35. A Military Friend.

36. A Military Friend.

37. A Military Friend.

38. A Military Friend.

39. A Military Friend.

40. A Military Friend.

41. A Military Friend.

42. A Military Friend.

43. A Military Friend.

44. A Military Friend.

45. A Military Friend.

46. A Military Friend.

47. A Military Friend.

48. A Military Friend.

49. A Military Friend.

50. A Military Friend.

51. A Military Friend.

52. A Military Friend.

53. A Military Friend.

54. A Military Friend.

55. A Military Friend.

56. A Military Friend.

57. A Military Friend.

58. A Military Friend.

59. A Military Friend.

60. A Military Friend.

Mal. McCool, Esq. 300

John Collier, Esq. 300

John Mendenhall, Esq. 300

Rev. Thomas Smith 300

John Mendenhall, Esq. 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend (R. B.) 300

James Mendenhall, Esq. 300

John Allen, Esq. 300

J. Gifford, Esq. 300

John Lenth, Esq. 300

Esq. 300

John Mendenhall, Esq. 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

C. Tucker, Esq. 300

A Friend to the Good 300

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 463. Vol. IX.]

SERAPMORE: THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 16TH. 1843.

[Price 3 Cts. Per month, or 30 Cts. quarterly if paid in advance.]

GENERAL POST OFFICE NOTICE.

THE Public are hereby informed, that the Government Overland Express will be despatched hence to Bombay on Tuesday, the 21st instant, on which date letters will be received at this Office under the Indian publication on the 26th of September 1843.

To J. H. GREY,

Post Office, Great Post Master General.
The 10th November, 1843.

THE PUNJAB.—The present mail will take home a continuation of the reports of all the atrocities said to have been committed in the Punjab, since the murder of Raja Sher Singh, Pertab Singh, Dhyani Singh, and of their assassins, Lant Singh Sandhanwalla and Ajeet Singh. All subsequent murders with which the public are here being filled, from time to time, have been perpetrated only by the newspaper reporters. The P. M. Gazette candidly acknowledges the gross deceit which has been practised on the Editor in the intelligence department of the paper, which appears to have been characterized by more than the usual amount of Native infidelity. For the benefit of friends at home who may have been misled by these misrepresentations, it appears judicious to recapitulate the various items of information which they are now desired to dismiss from their minds, as being equally fabulous with the 'Arabian Nights' Entertainment.

It was stated that Sher Singh, the deceased ruler, in the summer excursion which he made into the hills before his death, had visited the mountain domains and the impregnable fortresses of his minister Dhyani Singh. It is now discovered that the account was altogether fabricated to blind the eyes of our contemporary and his readers. The King did not approach the territory of Jumboo.

It was said that after Ajeet Singh had put Sher Singh to death, he went into the Zennu, and murdered all his wives, and all the women in it, sparing not even the children. The tragic death of the youngest, only a few days old, was described in the most heart rending terms. It is now discovered that the whole story was pure fiction. The women and children are safe, and the former have not been dishonoured.

It was said that Sawan Mull, the viceroys of Mooltan, had been assassinated, as a kind of supplement, we suppose, to these murders, and various speculations were thereupon advanced as to the chiefs of the province assisting the fugitive Sher Mahomed to wrest Scinde from us, and thus involving our Government in a war with the Punjab. Sawan Mull is alive and well, and governs his province with much ability and discretion: and it is far from improbable that when the kingdom of Runjeet shall be resolved into the original elements of which it was constructed, this Sawan Mull will become the independent sovereign of Mooltan.

It was said that Lena Singh, Mahatech, one of the ablest chieftains in the Punjab, and who seems to divide the authority at Lahore with young Heera Singh, the Regent, had stabbed him to death, in a dispute which arose out of the distribution of Sefs and poets. Wrong again. Heera Singh, according to the last accounts was well and active, and presided at the last meeting of the Privy Council at the capital; Duleep Singh, the king, being in the nursery.

It was said that Raja Golab Singh, the brother of Dhyani Singh, had been murdered. He is alive.

It was said that Raja Golab Singh had left his hill territories at Jumboo, and was advancing to Lahore with 20,000 bold hardy mountaineers. He has never left his fastnesses, because he finds it enough to do to curb his refractory subjects; and as long as he can draw his rents from his vast estates in the plains, he will not descend from his own eyrie, to mingle in the strife at Lahore.

It was said that the young king, Duleep Singh, aged seven, had fled with the magnificent diamond, the Koh-i-noor, and that he had taken refuge in our own territories. It is now known that he has never quitted the Palace; that the inestimable jewel is yet at Lahore; that the boy has been ill, and in the hands of his nurses, and is now convalescent.

It was said that Dort Mahomed had been shot to death by order of the Prince of Believers, the Khan of Bokham, and that Cabul was in a state of anarchy. The last accounts from beyond the Indus, give information of his movements quite incompatible with any idea of his death; and before the express goes out on the 31st, we expect the report will be distinctly contradicted.

After such a monstrous collection of what we are much tempted to call lies, all in a single month, we can scarcely expect that any great dependence will be placed on the statement we are about to send to our English friends by the outgoing Mail. Perhaps however they may give some portion of their confidence when we assure them that in reference to all statements made in India, we think mistrust much safer than credulity, and measure our mistrust by the circumstantiality and positiveness with which assertions are made. The Punjab is in a very ticklish state, and Heera Singh, the youthful son of Dhyani Singh, is in any thing but an enviable situation. He is the Prime Minister in a Court in which Duleep Singh is the nominal monarch. He is very young and has little experience, and may be cut off when he least dreams of death. The Dogar family, of which he is now the most prominent and exposed member, is hated by the Sikhs, who would gladly extinguish them and their power. Sukhet Singh, his uncle, a brave soldier, seems to keep aloof from the Court. The chief friend and adviser of Heera Singh appears to be Lena Singh, of whose the "Adventure in the Punjab" gives us rather an exalted opinion. The troops in and about the Capital are numerous, suspicious, and disposed to mutiny; and there is no master spirit to curb their licentiousness. There seems to be no obstacle to their shortly upsetting the central Government at Lahore; upon which the kingdom would in all probability be broken up into a number of little principalities. Golab Singh would in that case retain Jumboo and add Cashmere to it, keeping possession, as far as possible, of his rich acres in the plains. He would set up in full under the Mahomedan sway. Sawan Mull would found a dynasty in Mooltan, and every petty chieftain would endeavour to establish his independence. Such a state of things would be of course last year in the presence of the paramount power in Asia. At present however, we have no pretext, for interfering with the affairs of the Punjab. If the security of our own territories was disturbed; if Lahore had become, like Cabul, the centre of intrigues hostile to our interests, we should have a solid reason for marching into the country and assisting our enemies. But there has been no attempt to do to curb his refractory subjects; and as long as he can draw his rents from his vast estates in the plains, he will not descend from his own eyrie, to mingle in the strife at Lahore. Government therefore limits itself to the establishment of a strong force on the frontier. There is every reason to suppose that the dissolution of the administration at Lahore—and it has a most precarious existence—would be the signal for great encroachments on our provinces. It is scarcely possible but that some occasion of strife should arise, to carry our banner across the Sutledge, and plant it on the Indus. This is a consummation much to be desired, not only for the welfare of these distracted and oppressed provinces, but also for our own advantage; since we could maintain the government of the Punjab with nearly the same number of troops as we are now required to keep up in order to guard the frontier against Sikh aggression. The expense of this would in that case fall on the Country of Vindra, instead of being drawn from our own provinces.

For our parts, we have no dread whatever of the bogey of territorial aggrandisement. The limits of our empire is the Indus, and the absorption of all the little independent principalities within that river is a question of time, not of principle. Our Government would be a real blessing to the people, and injurious only to the oppressive Chiefs, from whom we should take away the power of raising armies and putting people to death at their own pleasure. We could govern the whole of India cheaper, and better, than we now govern parts of it, while they are interested by independent states. The idea of charging our Government with ambition, whenever it is obliged, by the current of circumstances, to extinguish any of these little independent powers, is absolutely ludicrous. Every independent state within the Indus exists only by our assistance. An army of ten thousand foot and five thousand horse, with a due complement of artillery, could annihilate every independent sovereignty from Cape Coromoor to Cashmere. These states exist upon the right of travels, which we hold sacred; but the moment any treaty is violated by the ruler, his independence should cease for ever. It will be the happiest time for India, as the late Dr. Carey used frequently to observe, when no sword is drawn or spear lifted without our command, when all the little petty empires and tyrants are upheld as put on the pension list, and our own system of administration is established all over the country.

THE ARABIAN STEAMER, AND THE DUTCH IDEA OF COMPETITION.—The Steamship which the Assam Company ordered out from England to bring down the Tea which they intend to manufacture in Assam, has been found to be unavailing for the navigation of the Behram-poor, and they have resolved to run her with freight between Calcutta and Allahabad. An experimental trip was made last month, which is said to have succeeded; and she has now been advertised for a second voyage; the tonnage to be disposed of by public auction if the demand exceeded the supply. This is the first attempt which has been made to wrest the monopoly of the navigation from the hands of Government, and it has been hailed with joy by some of our contemporaries. It has happened, however, that the Controller of Government Steamers timed the despatch of one of his vessels to correspond with the departure of the Assam Steamer, and advertised the sale of freight at the same hour. A public auction to be held for her freight arrangement has been severely commented on by a portion of the Press, and Government is said to have acted ungenerally in thus attempting to put down competition, when it would be so advantageous to the public.

We must confess that we cannot see the force of this reasoning. Competition every where, except within the Dutch, means, the attempt to afford a superior article at the same price which an inferior article has borne, or to sell the same thing at a cheaper rate. Now the Government minimum rate for freight is, One Rupee eight annas the cubic foot; the lowest rate of the Assam, has been fixed at Two Rupees the foot. At these respective rates the freight of the vessels is to be put up to sale. If therefore the Assam Company is to be considered in the light of a competitor, it must be altogether on a new plan which no man ever dreamt of; since it proposes to compete with a rival, by offering precisely the same thing thirty-three per cent. higher. Allow this kind of competition to be beneficial to the public interest, we are at a loss to conceive. To our simple understanding, it seems evidently more advantageous to society to obtain freight at two Rupees and a half from Government, than at two Rupees from the rival; and the Controller of the public steamers appears to have consulted the interests of the community by preventing the necessity of their paying a higher price for the article. The competition of the Assam Steamers, must of course fail, because it is based upon an erroneous principle; and the competition of Government must and ought to succeed because it is founded upon the soundest principle. The remedy is not in the hands of the Assam Company. They have only to reduce their charge for freight from the exorbitant price at which they have thought fit to fix it, to a rate a little under that of the State steamers, and these vessels may then be started on the same day and hour with that of their new rival without doing him any injury. There would in that case be no necessity for the papers to raise an outcry about the want of generosity in Government. A feeling of self interest on the part of the public would cure the evil. The Government Steamer would get no freight till its cheaper competitor was full. If the Directors of the Company find that they can obtain no return for their capital under two Rupees a foot, as they had better retire from the field at once. The public would rather continue to pay the more moderate rate of freight to the Government establishment, even though it should bear the odious name of a monopoly. If the Company can afford freight at a cheaper rate, but wishes to take advantage of the present demand, and make the interests of the public subservient to their own, they have a right to do so, but they have no right to cry out against a competitor who proposes to cut them out of the market by the superior cheapness of his wares, except upon the principle that every man has a right to make himself as ridiculous as possible.

GWALIOR.—Information was received in the middle of last week that the regiments of Kachage at Gwalior, who had usurped the office of Prime Minister, and obtained possession of the Royal family, had been brought to a close. The insurgent troops defeated those which had been sent against them, and, following up the blow, seized the Usurper himself. This change in the state of affairs at that Capital, which it is said, under the advance of our troops, was unnecessary; and rumours were last week affixed that the Governor General had relinquished the idea of proceeding to Agra. On Saturday, however, this statement was contradicted, and it was given out that Lord Ellenborough, notwithstanding this change, had resolved to join the Commander-in-Chief, and superintend the new arrangements which were to be introduced into Scindia's territories. Ten days more will enable the public to determine which report is correct.

The most important of these arrangements, that which refers to the suppression of the rebellious soldiery, and to the substitution of a subsidiary force, offered from our own army, appears the most objectionable. It will, it is true, give us the complete military command of the country, and remove all anxiety regarding the safety of our frontier districts; but it will indefinitely increase the misery of the poor inhabitants, whom it will leave at the mercy of a Native administration, and deprive of all hope of relief. This contingent force will be employed equally in resisting any foreign aggression and in putting down any internal commotion. In all Native states, the only check on misgovernment is the dread of a reaction on the part of the sufferers. When the oppression becomes insupportable, they rise as seas, sacrifice their tormentors, and often subvert the Government. The possibility of such an occurrence produces that military feeling which induces some degree of moderation. But when the military power is lodged in our hands, all chance of a successful insurrection is taken away. At the same time, the inflexible support afforded by our troops, gives an additional stimulant to extortion and cruelty. No provinces in India are in a state of more utter and hopeless wretchedness than those in which we have the power of the sword, without the responsibilities of the administration. Of this Oude and Hyderabad are pregnant examples. We were to pension the King of Oude and the Nizam, and incorporate their territories with our own; a general outcry would be raised in England against the rapacity, injustice, and ambition of our Indian functionaries, and patriots would set themselves to draw up articles of impeachment. Yet the absorption of these two territories would be an act of superlative mercy. For all political purposes these principalities are as much under our own absolute control, as the Isle of Man is under that of the English Crown; but the poor inhabitants, the wretched cultivators of the soil, are denied those privileges of protection and justice which our own subjects enjoy; and are exposed to a greater degree of wretchedness than the subjects of those states, which are not cursed with our system of military interference and civil non-interference. We ought either to interfere in both respects or in neither. If we take away from the people the natural power of resistance, which we do by the presence of an "irresistible force"—we ought to take away from the rulers the power of oppression. It is to be feared that the same erroneous policy which we have adopted in reference to the two states just named, will be put in practice in the present instance in Gwalior, and that we shall extinguish the military power of Scindia's family, and thus purchase the security of our own frontier, at the expense of the deprivations of the inhabitants.

THE FERRY FERRIES.—Mr. Dampier's Report of the State of the Police which we reviewed last week, gives us some important notices regarding the public Ferries, which have been the subject of a recent arrangement. The reader need scarcely be reminded that the ferries were incorporated with the establishments of the state about twenty years ago, when it was stipulated that all the surplus funds should be expended in improving the means of communication by land and water. These surplus receipts, however, have been allowed to accumulate in the General Treasury, and they amounted at the close of 1841, to more than eight lakhs and a half of Rupees. About two years ago, Ferry Committees were organized in every district, to whom the management of the funds, both as it regarded the collection and the expenditure, was committed. A new interest has therefore been given to this trifling matter of income, in which the public has more of an individual concern than in the millions which are annually raised by the state, in as much as it is the only fund specifically devoted to local improvements. It is not without some feeling of humiliation we allude to the fact that of the land, salt and opium revenue of the Bengal Presidency, which seldom falls short of six millions sterling a year, nothing, or next to nothing, is devoted to the construction of commercial roads and canals and bridges and the general improvement of the means of internal intercourse. It is the opprobrium of our rule that no portion of the public revenue should be consecrated to this national object but the casule ends and these perquisites furnished by the surplus ferry funds. The great Benares road is scarcely an exception to this rule of parsimony; for it is much more a military than a commercial highway, and ought no more to be credited to the public spirit of Government than the Cannon foundry at Compoore. While such is the case, and the six crores of revenue lodged to Government, and the lakh and a half of the ferry funds to the public, it is natural that the public should look at the augmentation and judicious distribution of its own peculiar income, with feelings of peculiar interest.

The Police Report for 1838 gives us a statement of the funds obtained from the Ferries in that year, and we are thus enabled to compare it with that for 1841. And although the new arrangement of Ferry Committees had not come fully into play in this latter year, yet the improvement of the income is highly gratifying. In 1838 it amounted, only to the sum of 66,463 Rs.; in the latter, to 1,42,594 Rs. This increase is so unequally contributed by the various districts as to demonstrate the great extent to which abuses had grown up under the old system. We find that in the 24-Pergunnahs the increase has been trifling; 9222 Rs. in 1838 to 11,449 Rs. in 1841; while in the district of Burm the augmentation is almost incredible; the sum raised in 1838 having been only 1306 Rs. while in three years under more honest control it rose to 14,216 Rs. Chumpanan, Ferozepore and Chitangong did not yield a farthing in 1838; in the latter year, they gave respectively, 918, 1081, and 3081 Rs. Tribout and Hooghly have changed places; why, we cannot say, except that the management in the one is good; in the other defective. The revenue in Hooghly has fallen off from 23,000, to 16,000 Rs.; in Tribout it has risen from 14,589 to 23,312 Rs. But the most unaccountable discrepancy between our natural expectations and the actual result of the fund, is exhibited by the statement of the 24-Pargunahs, which district includes the ferriage of the extensive suburbs across the water. In the year 1841, as we have stated, it was only 11,449 Rs. not one-half the receipts from the district of Tribout! If we suppose that each passenger pays half a pie every time he crosses, it would appear that only 4000 persons use the ferry daily, that is, only 8000 cross and the same number recross it, in the twenty-four hours; which is utterly incredible. Five times that number would be much nearer the truth. We cannot therefore adopt any other conclusion than that the smallness of the return arises from the existence of great abuses.

The same abuses doubtless exist, though not to the same extent, in other districts. Indeed when we are told that there are only about 300 ferries belonging to the state, and 1800, of which the profits are usurped by private individuals throughout the country, there can be no doubt, that there is large room for vigilance, and that with due diligence, even the higher receipts of 1841, may be doubled. In this case, the ferry funds under the Government of Bengal, may be made to produce as much for the improvement of the roads, as the One Per Cent. of the Land revenue of the Western Provinces, which was appropriated to that object at the recent settlement, is found to yield. Our gross land tax may be estimated at a little more than three crores, and the ferries under efficient management, ought to yield more than three lakhs. But since Government has, at length, Committees in every district employed in securing the judicious outlay of these funds in the objects of public improvement, and there is no longer any dread of waste in the application of them, it would be highly advisable to augment the funds at their disposal, in every possible way. The profits of all Canals should be considered sacred to new improvements, and entrusted to the local Committees. Judicial fines ought to follow the same rule; so should all waifs, and all property belonging to those who die without heirs. A respectable fund of five or six lakhs of Rupees a year might thus be formed, which, judiciously applied, would produce wonders in a land in which, compared with our means and responsibility, we have done nothing. Nor should it be forgotten, that the wise application of the fund will tend to its annual increase. Nothing is more likely, to augment the receipts from the ferries, than the construction of good roads to them.

But what is to become of the 8,66,000 Rs. of surplus funds, which at the end of 1841, were lying unproductive in the public Treasury? Without meaning the slightest disrespect to the Sub-Treasurer, we venture to say that the Treasury is the most unsafe of all places for the precious deposit. A single draft from a Commissariat Officer on the banks of the Satledge, may any day sweep away this accumulation of twenty years. We really think it would be better in the Deputy Governor to recuse this fund from its present perilous position, and place it beyond all further risk, by devoting it to objects of public utility in the provinces under his charge. The Ferry Committees will of course see that no sums are hereafter put in the same jeopardy. They will consider it most judicious to anticipate, if necessary, the funds placed at their disposal, than allow them idly to accumulate till they become an object of political capidity. Our anxieties will not cease till we learn that the eight or nine lakhs have been drawn from the Treasury and dispersed over the country.

While we are upon the subject of the Ferry funds and Ferry Committees, we may as well hint that the utility of the Committees is occasionally cramped, and the public interest injured by a clashing of their functions with those of the Military Board. Our high roads, as we have said, Military roads, and, as such, are under the superintendence of the Board; the Ferry Committees are not allowed for us, to touch them. The consequence is that in the Midnapore and Durdwan, and possibly the Benarsh, districts, the metalling of the roads by means of the Kunkur which nature has so liberally provided in those Zillahs for their construction, is prevented. There lies the Kunkur in rich abundance; and there are the ferries ready to be employed in spreading it on the roads, but there is a hitch, through the want of a clear understanding between the Board and the local Committees, and the consequence is that nothing is done, and improvement is at a stand.

Something we were going to add to this rambling article about the Bridge across the creek at Duli, in which we in particular are greatly interested, as well as the country at large. The cost is estimated at about 30,000 Rupees. A large sum was raised by public subscription towards the erection of it some two or three years ago, and the Zemindars of the district offered to supply one-half the expense, if Government would furnish the other half. But Lord Auckland dismissed the matter so long that the Cabul disasters came before he had made up his mind, and the project miscarried altogether. We have heard incidentally that Mr. Bird has taken an interest in it, and ordered it to be forthwith constructed, and we will not be happy to quit India until it is fairly begun. We hope the intelligence is authentic; for it would be difficult to imagine a more judicious and laudable application of a portion of the Twenty-four thousand six hundred and sixty-two Rupees of surplus ferry funds belonging to this district, which has been entrusted to the keeping of the Sub-Treasurer. The responsibility now rests with the Military Board, and if they do not speed on the Engineer, they may look for a touch of the Editorial flapper.

THE DISTRICT OF DINAPORE appears to have been marked out as the scene of oppression from the first establishment of the British authority in Bengal. It was in this district that those charges of tyranny and torture were laid, which afforded Sheridan so appropriate an opportunity for the display of eloquence during the trial of Warren Hastings; and although it was discovered by the Commissioners appointed by the Government of Bengal to investigate them, that they were grossly exaggerated, and that the harrowing description of tortures inflicted upon the people, at the trial of which several ladies were fainting away in Westminster Hall, was altogether fabulous, yet the grating of the poor to the dust by the rich Native Agents of Government was fully substantiated. The district, from its unhealthiness, has always been in disrepute with Civilian; who seldom extend their visits much beyond the neighbourhood of the station. It contains few European residents except the public officers, and its internal condition is little known and rarely attracts public notice. Without in the last four years however it has become the object of a very unenviable notoriety, from the cases of oppression which have been discovered and brought home to some of the Native officials. These cases, as usual, have given birth to much party feeling, which has been carried to such an extent, as to lead to a denial even of their existence; and it is therefore with some feeling of satisfaction that we welcome testimony which appears to be impartial, and worthy of confidence. It was affirmed by the Officer who occupies the post of Magistrate in the first six months of 1841, the Police Report of which now lies before us, that, an extensive confederation existed among the Natives, who occupied some of the highest offices in the Civil and Criminal Courts, nearly all of whom were from the town of Coghmare, in the district of Myensing. Some of them, who came to the district without a coveture, had amassed wealth and purchased large estates. No Native, as every one knows, has ever bought an estate out of his official salary, since the time when Lord Cornwallis obliged the Europeans and Natives to change places in regard to their public allowances, by raising those of the former to the highest pitch, and depressing those of the latter to the lowest level. From that time onwards, the Natives have been indebted for their fortunes to the judicious exercise of their influence and power—just as the Europeans were before them, when placed in the same circumstances. The Coghmare League made money as other Sheristadars and Peshkars, and men in power are now doing in every district; but with this difference that in few if any districts, does there exist a combination of Native officers so inimical to the general interests of society; in no district have they so completely succeeded in filling up inferior situations with their own relatives and creatures. The opinion which the Magistrate had formed of the existence of this League, and of its pernicious effects, as well as of his own duty to resist it, brought on a discussion between him and the Judge, in which the Junior Officer was believed by the Sudder Court to have been wanting in that respect which was due to his official superior, and he was removed from the district and for a time placed in an inferior situation. The condition of the Police in any district, as we know from bitter experience, is always the most ticklish and dangerous subject an Editor can approach. We have been threatened with prosecutions just five times since we began our labours nine years ago, and in every instance the threat has arisen from remarks on the unsatisfactory state of the Police. Hence we have been sometimes driven to the conclusion that the Reform of the Police can come only from the special interposition of Divine Providence, in ways which man could not divine. On all occasions, we have replied that our remarks should be general and not particular. We refrain therefore from offering any remark on the subject of these dissensions between the Judge and the Magistrate of Dinapore, further than that they ended in the removal of the latter, and created some degree of mistrust regarding the existence of the formidable League, which in his opinion paralyzed the efforts of the European sent by Marcellus; at the beginning of this month the numbers were still 22,000 through the former, and 17,000 through the latter channel. It is scarcely credible that men should continue to send so large a share of their letters by the longer route of Calcutta, when they could send them by the more direct and rapid route of Marcellus, without subjecting their friends at home to more than an extra charge of right pence, if the alteration was sufficiently known.

FRUGHT BY THE HINDOOSTAN AND HER VESSEL.—In our notice last week of the arrangement made by the Peninsular Company regarding the transmission of Parcels, from England by their vessels we fell into a grievous error, which as it may possibly mislead some of our readers, we hasten to correct. We said that the charge would be Two Rupees a Pound, for Rupees read Shillings; the charge is Two shillings or One Rupee a Pound.

SLAVERY IN CEYLON.—About six weeks ago we offered a few remarks on the state of Slavery in the Island of Ceylon, founded upon the information furnished by the Columbo Observer. We are happy in being able to publish a contradiction of the statement from the Ceylon Herald, the Opposition paper. It is thus that the sparks of truth are elicited by editorial friction.

We regret that the Editor of this latter journal should have indited his article under the supposition that the community in India are so intimately acquainted with the measures of the local Legislature as he is. We are obliged to confess our entire ignorance of the Ordinances of the 7th of October 1842, to which he alludes, and in this respect we do not stand alone. It is only since the establishment of the Hindustan Steamer on the route from Calcutta to Suva which embraces a call at Point de Galle, and since our citizens have begun to visit the Island, that its affairs have excited an interest among us. The article which we have quoted would have been all the more valuable if the Editor, compassionate our ignorance, had given us in a few words, the leading provisions of that Act, to which we are now left to grope our way in the dark. We gather, however, that it directed the Registration of every slave before the 31st of December 1842, and ordained that any slave not thus registered, should be free on the 1st of January 1843. It is stated by the Herald that at the period of passing the Act, there were 23,500 slaves in the Maritime Provinces, not one of whom was registered according to the provisions of the ordinance, and that they were accordingly, ipso facto, emancipated at the close of the year, and that there is not at present a single slave in these Provinces from Dondra Head to Point Pelra.

We find some difficulty in reconciling the purport of the ordinance, as we have assumed it, with the assertions of the Editor regarding the state of slavery in other parts of the Island. He says that there were 1639 slaves registered in other parts of the Island, but that at the first triennial examination of the Records in December 1843, the numbers were reduced to 378. It would appear therefore that there were previous laws regarding registration, the neglect of which entailed the manumission of the slave. If the Editor will overlook the culpability of our ignorance, we would ask him for a few editorial remarks which shall present the progress and result of legislation in regard to slavery, in a clear point of view to our enlightened minds. The subject is one in which we have a national interest. It is the glory of England to have taken the lead; in redressing this, the most outrageous evil of this civilized age. We are naturally anxious that there should not be a single exception to the proud boast that wherever the flag of Britain waves, it waves over freemen. We are rejoiced to find that the number of slaves has been reduced from 25,000 to less than 400; and still show more happy that the community of this rising colony and the local Government are alive to the importance of reducing the number from 400 to a cipher.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 9.

—We record with deep regret the death, by cholera, of Major Dehuda of the Engineers, and Secretary to the Military Board, at the age of 44. He was well on Tuesday morning and buried on Thursday morning. In him the service has lost one of its most distinguished officers, and society one of its most amiable and esteemed members. The latest accounts from Simlah state that the Hon. Mr. Clerk is quite out of danger and is doing well; but the severity of the remedies it was found necessary to use, have reduced him to a state of the greatest debility, and rendered his return to Europe more than ever necessary.

—We stated a week or two ago that the number of labourers sent to the Mauritius since our reports were issued, to emigration, amounted to 20,000. As the statements given in the Star differed somewhat from our estimate, we were supposed to have overrated the number. The Census of the 30th September, a Mauritius paper, however, fully bears out our figures. It states that since the raising of the prohibition, 10,684 men, women and children had arrived at the Mauritius. The number likely to be sent before the 1st of January next, when the restriction recently imposed comes into effect, will probably be more than 2000; and it is quite possible that with the increased activity which the new Act will give to private enterprise, in the six weeks that remain for its exercise the number may possibly rise to 10,000.

—The Star of this morning states, that at the last meeting of the Asiatic Society, the President the Hon. W. W. Bird said that "an application, had been made to the Home Authorities for the services of a practical geologist and experienced miner for the sole purpose of exploring the reported mineral sites unworked in Bengal, and developing generally by the mineral resources of Bengal." This affords another corroboration of the assertion we made some months ago, by way of correcting an erroneous notion of Mr. George Thompson, that almost every effort at improving the condition of India and developing its resources had originated with the local Government. The most eminent geologists in England have long been striving to prevail on the Court of Directors and the Board of Control to adopt the wise plan of the Emperor of Russia and submit India to a scientific geological survey. The advice appears to be unheeded. It is now sent from India, and will doubtless be attended to.

—We stated last week that a disturbance had been raised in the Sikhawattie territory, and that body of insurgents amounting to 5000 had seized upon a fort. We now learn that the insurrection is at an end. Major Foster marched upon the fort with a detachment of his brigade, and the insurgents fled, leaving six pieces of cannon behind them.

—The ashes of Raghoo Singh, of his son, and of Rajah Dhyans Singh, which are their own, were taken to the sacred spot at Harwar, have been received with honour by the Rajah of Patala, who went out six miles to meet the procession, and presented 800 gold mohurs.

—The Governor General has given 500 Rs. to the Sailer's Home.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10.

—We publish among our extracts a most distressing account of an attempt to take the ship Harriet Scott, by the convicts who had been sent on her, from Penang to Bombay. The Captain was barbarously murdered, and several of the mariners fell, some in the scuffle, while others were shot, as we thought, by the convicts who had been sent on her, from Penang to Bombay. The Captain was barbarously murdered, and several of the mariners fell, some in the scuffle, while others were shot, as we thought, by the convicts who had been sent on her, from Penang to Bombay. The Captain was barbarously murdered, and several of the mariners fell, some in the scuffle, while others were shot, as we thought, by the convicts who had been sent on her, from Penang to Bombay.

—The Star states, that Mrs. Leach, the actress, who was so severely injured by her clothes catching fire on Wednesday week last, lies dangerously ill, and that some doubts are entertained of her recovery.

—The Harbinger hints that the men of the 2d European Regiment showed some signs of mutiny on the day of their marching from Nicot. They refused to carry their knapsacks, and destroyed or left on the ground nearly the whole of them. The regiment had been soiled.

—A meeting of the Magistrates was held as usual yesterday. That municipal body, like other municipal bodies in England has raised a loan—a loan of Twenty thousand Rupees—on their own responsibility. But they separated without doing any thing to lay the loan.

—A large additional subscription has been raised for the proposed Church at Darjeeling, of 80 names, 37 are from Calcutta which speaks well for the attachment of the Dithers to their Sanatarium, as it is very properly called. But, the report to Darjeeling will never be what it ought to be, until greater facilities are created for travellers to reach it. The road between Calcutta and the Sanatarium must be improved, that people may be enabled to embark in a Steamer, and land at the ghats, which is within a little more than a hundred miles of the place.

—The Englishman states that orders have been issued to countermand the progress of those who had been sent into the country to preside the Governor General; and that his Lordship has abandoned the idea of leaving the Presidency.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11.

—The Bombay Papers received yesterday, give a gloomy account of the state of the troops in Scinde. The Steamer Indus had brought intelligence from Karachi to the 25th of October. The thermometer in tents had risen to 105° F. M. 23th had 239 men in hospital. On the 22d there were 40 soldiers on the 23d.

—Hector Holtz, the descendant of which reigned in Indian history, died at Indore on the 24th. He ascended the throne in 1834 after fourteen years' imprisonment. His affairs soon became intricately involved; his expenditure exceeded his income by six or eight lakhs of Rupees. The year after his elevation, he married a woman of obscure birth and poor circumstances; a single child, the fruit of the union, has since died. The prince himself had long been sunk in sloth and dissipation, and was surrounded by low and dissipated companions. This is a faithful picture of half the chieftains who rule over the independent principalities in India. The greatest blessing their subjects could enjoy would be the annexation of the territories to the British dominions.

—The Officers belonging to the Indian Navy at Bombay have given a splendid entertainment to Commodore Foxwell of the United States Frigate Demofon, which has recently arrived in the harbour, and is waiting to convey the Honorable

... rism Ambassador, to ...
... proceeding by the ...
... Bombay to Suva, in the ...
... We hear the number ...
... Hindostani amounts to ...
... probably the month when ...
... way be expected to leave ...
... arrive in England ...
... the very worst of the year, in the depth of winter.

The Harbours of this morning contains a letter from Mr. W. T. Law, corroborating by the most substantial details the treatment inflicted on Taylor by the syces on Cook and Co's Establishment. There is every reason to think that his death was occasioned by their assault. They, and the grooms in the sick weekly body of men in Calcutta, and we hope much example will be made of them, as shall effectually check their violence in future.

The Penny papers last received, are very sanguine about the extensive production of Sugar in that Colony. A Mill, to be worked by a Steam Engine of fourteen horse power had been imported by one enterprising firm. This, and another machine previously received, were expected to produce in the ensuing year, a sufficient quantity of sugar to draw attention to the capabilities of the Island. Some of its sugar had already been sent to England and was said to be equal to the best West India and Mauritius sugar. We have placed the article among our extracts.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 13.

— Capt. Scott, while conducting the Iravaddy Steamer from Calcutta to Dacca, through the Sunderbans, fell in with the Nacoda and two men of the Arab Ship Silvery Shore, on the 8th instant. They were exhausted and confused, but said there were 20 more men and four women somewhere about, and that the vessel had been wrecked in the Romyunzel River. Capt. Scott immediately proceeded with the steamer in search of them and succeeded at length in falling in with them. They were sent on to Calcutta from Koolna, all but the Nacoda, who is gone with his two brothers, his wife and a servant to Dacca, where he says he has money to recover.

Saturday night's Gazette gives full notice to Cole, Graham and Oliver, thus disproving the report that all furloughs were to be suspended in the prospect of approaching hostilities.

It is now said that Lord Ellenborough positively goes up the country after the arrival of the October Mail.

The Star states, that the Commander-in-Chief was expected to arrive on the 18th instant, and Mr. Thomson the day before, when it would be determined whether the army was to move towards Gwalior or not. The Army of Exercise is to assemble on the 24th.

— Mr. J. S. Stopford is to be Sheriff of Calcutta for the ensuing year, and Mr. Fritz, Deputy.

— Some wag has been quizzing the Editor of the Enka, by sending him a letter from Abdul Ghias Khan, the cousin of Akbar Khan, in which was enclosed a denial on the part of the good Emirate, of his having ever slayed any man at any time. It is said that Sirdar Amir Khan has been induced to make this affidavit in consequence of the charge preferred against him to that effect in Lady Sale's Book. The hoax, though clumsily contrived, deserves record. The affidavit runs thus: "I, Mahomed Akbar, son of Amir Dost Mahomed, do hereby declare most solemnly on the Koran, that I never slayed or ordered to be slayed any man at any time whatever, either Mahomedan, Christian, Jew, or Pagan."

SWORN before me,
HARVEY JEN, Deputy Magistrate,
Son of SYDNEY ARMY, MENA WAIL.

— The following notice appears in this day's Harbours: "Two duffadars have just been convicted, and, and fined by the Magistrate, Mr. Blaquiere. In this case there were three duffadars charged with deceiving away thirty-six individuals from Gyalah, by the practice of the usual deceit upon them. These men recounted the story of having been brought down on false pretences, false imprisoned, and ill-treated. On the evidence produced, two of the three duffadars were convicted of the charge against them, and fined in the sum of fifty Rupees each."

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 14.

— Mr. George Thompson is coming down to Calcutta. He was to have left Delhi on the 7th instant.

— The narrative of the Jew Barons, who declared that he saw with his own eyes the execution of four Europeans at Bokhara, of whom two were Col. Steinhart and Captain Connolly, is declared by the Dak Gazette to be an entire fabrication. A friend of the Editor, on hearing of it, made enquiries regarding its probability at Lahore, and learned that the man was an impostor.

— We stated yesterday that Capt. Scott, proceeding in the Iravaddy Steamer to Dacca, picked up the Nacoda, or Commander of the Silvery Shore, and a number of the crew, at the mouth of the Romyunzel, one of the rivers that run through the Sunderbans into the sea. The Star of this morning has a long and interesting article, — too long however for our space — on the subject, in which he more than hints that this vessel of Six Hundred Tons could have had no business in such a locality, except for the purposes of contraband traffic, with the marts of Koolna and Dacca. He states that there is every reason to believe that such a contraband traffic is carried on. The matter will furnish an interesting subject of investigation. We may also add that nothing but the vigilance of the Protector of Coolies at the Mauritius prevents these vessels running up the unfrequented mouths of the Sunderbans and transporting a rich cargo of kidnapped Coolies to the Mauritius, or to Bourbon.

— Capt. G. T. Green, of the Corps of Engineers, has been appointed Secretary to the Military Board in the room of the late Major De Bude.

— The Harbours of this morning contains a statement of another brutal attack made on the two servants of a European Gentleman by the native grooms of Cook and Co, the Stable keepers. They appear to be the most unruly set of ruffians within the town. On the present occasion the Police of the two neighbouring thannas did nothing but depose whose business it was to go into the stables and remove the men.

The regular post from Calcutta of the 23d of October was in time for the Steamer which left Bombay on the 1st instant. The apparatus which was despatched on the 21st, was of course in time.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 15.

— A Native correspondent writes us to publish that a brahmin bull has gored a man to death, near the village of Agrapah. He thinks "a wise and enlightened Government ought to provide for the suppression of these evils." It is not quite so easy to take these bulls by the horns as our correspondent thinks; but the "wise and enlightened" Baboos who let them loose to prey on society, might easily cure the evil, by dropping the custom. This would render the interference of Government unnecessary.

— The accounts from Sukkur extend to the 25th ultimo, and are very deplorable. Upwards of 600 patients were in each of the Native Infirmary Hospitals. Of 114 European Artillery men, 32 had died since May, and the remainder are quite incapacitated from continued sickness.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following notes for the Friend of India: —

W. Griffith, Esq.,
to July, 1884, 30 0
Baboo Ramchander Mitter, to April, 1884, 10 0

Col. Garstin, ... to Sept. 1884, 20 0
G. Wiggins, Esq. for the services of the Bareilly Govt. School, ... to Dec. 1884, 30 0
Major Maclean, ... to Aug. 1884, 20 0
C. Blake, Esq., ... to April, 1884, 10 0
Mr. Jas. Rae, ... to Dec. 1884, 10 0

To Correspondents.

We had rather decline the publication of Truth, Observer, and one who maintains neutrality, as they may lead to discussions we wish to avoid.
Althor, next week.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

THE TREATMENT OF THE LATE MR. TAYLOR.

To the Editor of the Bengal Herald.

DEAR SIR,—My attention was called to the death of Mr. Francis Henry Taylor, by a letter in this morning's Harbours, dated 11th inst., stating that a murderous assault had been committed on Mr. Taylor in one of the Livery Stables, in Calcutta, and that, subsequently, an Officer of Her Majesty's 10th Cavalry, named Mr. Taylor, in the same manner, and was now lying at death's door. Of the latter case, I know little or nothing; of the former, I know the whole particulars, and give you them as I had them from Mr. Taylor, a few hours after the affair happened.

Mr. Taylor came into my Office about 12 o'clock, and told me, that the night before he had been out to a Champagne party, and went to Messrs. Cook and Co's, about 11 or 12 at night, to get a fresh horse to take him home.

The syce was a long while changing, and Mr. Taylor gave him one box on the ear saying, "juddi, you b—t," on this the syce called out to the others, and, a few minutes afterwards, Synd Hussain's son came on to Mr. Taylor, and struck a blow at his neck with a dagger. Mr. Taylor raised his arm to guard it off, and the dagger grazed across his arm, and then on the side of his neck. Thirty or forty syces then ran on with batas, knocked him down, and kept beating him for some minutes, — they then put horse-dung and other dirt in his mouth and face, and, after some time, left off. Mr. Taylor, who then rose up, and one of the syces recognized him, and called out "Taylor salih," on which they all ran away, he being an old customer of Messrs. Cook and Co's. Mr. Taylor, then went up to his friend, Captain Norrie, who had accompanied him in the buggy, and found him almost insensible with two of his ribs broken. Mr. Taylor then scrambled up into Mr. Cook's room, and stated the case, asking if they were proper treatment.

This is the fact of the case, as told me by Mr. Taylor, the day after it happened. Mr. Taylor showed me the marks of the dagger, and those of the batas; as also, to another gentleman in my Office, who can testify to the whole of the above. Mr. Taylor also stated, that he had passed blood all night, and felt very sore and ill from the treatment he had received.

Three days after this, the gentleman who was with me, when Mr. T. told me the particulars, called on him and found him ill in bed and quite insensible; some times calling him by one name, and then five minutes after, addressing him as another name. He then attacked him with batas, and the river to try a change of air, but it was of no avail, and he is now dead. It is my firm conviction, that the treatment was the primary cause of his death; and any one that knew him can judge what treatment he must have received, to have affected him as it did; for, he was, perhaps, one of the finest and strongest men in the country.

As people may ask, why the Magistrates were not informed of this before, I will tell them. Mr. Taylor would not put a lie—he had a little to much Champagne, and was afraid, that this circumstance, might bring him into disrepute. He desired me not to let the authorities know anything of it, and I kept it quiet for fear of injuring him; but now he is beyond the power of mortal to do him harm, I think it right to speak out; and trust, something will be done to the villians who have wronged him, for it is homicide without a doubt.

I call upon his Assistant to corroborate my story. I call upon the Gentlemen who heard it from his own lips; and I call upon the Governor to whom he went to come forward and state what they know of the case.

I think it was to Mr. Leith, that he went. If I am wrong that Government can state so. If I am right let him say what he knows. In conclusion, I give you the names of the parties, I call on for their testimony as to the truth of the above.
Mr. Adam George, at Messrs. J. A. Currie and the Capt. freuz. Mr. McEvee was a member of the crew until the ship was sunk. After a long and arduous search, he was eventually located and rescued. He was then taken to the hospital and treated for his injuries. He was then taken to the hospital and treated for his injuries. He was then taken to the hospital and treated for his injuries.

By We later pointed out, and we trust satisfactorily, how little the local Government had done towards the abolition of Slavery within the Maritime Provinces of this Island; we will now show, in a very few words, not only that it has done nothing towards effecting that object within the Kandian Provinces, but that laws revolting to the equity are still allowed to remain in force. The Kandian Government (Pettah) had no direct possession in 1812 yet no legislative enactment in respect to Slavery was made till 1857 (nearly a quarter of a century) when an Ordinance (No. 7, of 1857) was passed, requiring all persons in charge of Slaves to re-enregister them; but the ancient Kandian laws regarding slaves were left un-

We shall be very brief in answering this. we "trust satisfactorily," for we challenge our contemporary to produce a SINGLE INSTANCE OF SLAVERY in the MARITIME PROVINCES with the exception of himself, or some other slave of a delusion. We affirm that this little that has been done by the local government, has effectually and for ever, extinguished Slavery in the Maritime Provinces, from Dundas Head to Point Barlow.

In the whole Island there were about 23,000 slaves, but it was chiefly in the Northern Provinces that slavery prevailed. In that Province there were about 23,000 in 1842, every one of whom, by the little that has been done, is now in a state of perfect freedom, from the most remarkable fact that not one slave was registered, in terms of the Ordinances in any one district, of the North, and slavery ceased there in consequence, on the 31st December 1842.

We announced this fact as far back as the month of January last, and as we have no relief for the shadowy strife, we proceed at once to show that the local government has not only done something towards the extinction of Slavery in the KANDIAN PROVINCES, but also that "Laws revolting to humanity" are not in force there.

We have already seen the remarkable success of the Registration system in the Northern Province, as well as in the Southern portion of the Island. Let us see how it has operated in the Kaniara dominions. From inquiries we have made, there were 345 slaves registered in the towns of Kander, while at the first triennial examination of the Records in December 1811, there were only 176, an exact one-half.

In the rest of the Kamilian Provinces, viz. the Koror, Koror, Murelle, and Budulla there were 1,237, or if we include Saffragani in the South, there were 1,237, but at the first triennial examination of the Records, the numbers were reduced by 1034, leaving only 203!

Instead of between 25 and 2,000 slaves, there are only 572, in the whole Leeward by the simple operation of the "little" that has been done, and we look for the great rejoicings of the Leeward, merely as an agreeable change in the monotony of his notes and observations. Let it be remembered that this has been accomplished without entering the country or the Colony one footling, without inflicting injury, without exacting even a murmur of complaint.

We appeal to our contemporary's professional experience to say, whether Natural or Artificial remedies for disease are the best—we appeal to his common sense to say, whether it is not better to wait quietly a little longer, and see whether delivery will not do a natural death, rather than he prefers trying to impress it natives with the idea of getting Parliamentary compensation, some five years after this, in which case he ought to come, draw attention to the subject.

The next examination of the Records must show a considerable diminution, for strange as it will appear to those who give credence to the assertions of our contemporary, the natives do not seem to consider slaves worth the value of the age. BILLINGSLY requires to prove the Registration. A reason for this will be expected—we can only assign one, which lends us to the last point proposed in discussing the question, viz., that Laws interfering to humanity are not in force in the Kandian Provinces.

The only slave case we have heard of for a very long time, was in May last, and Mr. Staples the District Judge in Kauai declared "that there was no Law which empowered the Court to inflict any punishment," on a slave. So that slave property is of NO VALUE.

Such being the decision of as able a Judge as we have on the District Bench—such being the fact in the minor proposition, the right of Slave owners to punish their Slaves—can any absurdity be greater than the major proposition; that Europeans are exposed in Slavery and to torture by hot irons?

Finally, when we see the effect of Registration, when we see that Slave owners far from having the power of subjecting Europeans to the horrors replied by the Editor of the OBSERVER and aided by the Indian Press, have not even the power of punishing their Slaves at NORFOLK.

But we shall not be supposed to advocate the continuance of Slavery, (altho' we are occasionally routed of all sorts of infidelities) if we say, that those who want an instantaneous extinction of the evil speak upon the reputation of this Colony—those who want this banisher removed from the scene, should come forward and subscribe, and we warrant it that a much smaller sum will suffice, than that spoken of by the Editor of the Register who thinks that Parliament would revoke this law, if the Colonies were for such a purpose. We agree with him in thinking, that we would not grudge it, WERE IT NECESSARY.—Crispin Hagedorn.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE

DEATH OF THE HON. J. F. MORRISON.

[Communicated by a friend at Hong Kong.]

In the opening of this new settlement, which every distant eye seems to look upon as a sure and permanent location for family residence and mercantile pursuit, and to which all Western speculators are flocking as the open port to a New World of riches and wealth,—the Providence of all things presses upon us the lessons of our frailty and the uncertain tenure of all earthly possessions. "This is not your rest." Such we regard to be the prominent feature of instruction in the solemn scenes, that have this season so frequently passed before the eyes of our community.

By the death of the Honourable JOHN ROBERT MORRISON, Esq., the Foreign Community in China have been called to suffer intense grief and a mournful gloom has been cast abroad, on the face of our society.

When we look at the present crisis of our improved intercourse with China and see that, in Mr. Morrison, we have lost one, compared with whom we was well acquainted with the policy of the Chinese Government,—so familiar with the peculiar forms, etiquette, and intricacies of diplomatic correspondence with the Imperial cabinet,—so richly and so accurately versed in the geography of the language, and accordingly so well fitted to be the interpreter of our views, and used in official correspondence of the Government,—so sound in his views of all consequencies for the prudent management of this people, known to his esteem and confidence of the two Governments, now standing upon an equal footing, the Chinese and the British—we cannot for a moment question the justice of the view which H. M. consular has taken of the event, when he has said, "The loss of Mr. Morrison is a calamity which renders the death of Mr. Morrison a necessary irreparable national calamity, and a calamity but as such will be received and viewed by a sovereign and country."

While we deplore his loss as a national calamity, we feel it more deeply as affecting our community. Among us he was our oracle. We felt the worth of his counsel, the weight of his opinion, the goodness of his heart, and all appealed to him for advice and aid. The Reverend institutions that have risen up among us and which he was the mainpring will feel the trouble especially severe; and some will suffer so much by his death as "the Morning Education Society," unless his friends will rally round that promising institution and, by their hearty and full support off, make it the monument of their esteem for his merits and so raise the institution to a lasting memorial both of the Father and of his Son.

Our country has lost an active servant.—our her most useful. And every man who knew him has lost a friend, respected, esteemed, beloved—on whose charity he could lean, on whose judgment he could rely, on whose good advice he could depend, on whose religious principles he could calculate, in whose acquaintance he had pleasure, in whose friendship he had profit. And every man has mourned for him apart.

considerable time ago an article on this subject appeared in the Observer, which various circumstances prevented our noticing at the time. Our attention was again drawn to it by the Madras Editors, not merely copying the articles but adding commentaries of their own, in which the Editor of the Record shewed so much knowledge of the Island, that he says "in the maritime provinces of Ceylon, or as they are usually called the Kanlian provinces! Slavery of the worst description exists even at the present

A third time it now haunts us in the shape of commentary, threatened by the talented Editor of the Friend of India. Trusting that his geographical knowledge is more accurate than the above quotation, it is important that we supply him with facts, on which he may rely, otherwise he may commit himself, and take some trouble in vain. Now it would be easy to prove that if we can do this, the cause of speedy emancipation in this island will be materially advanced, if we say

It is easy to make people at home believe any thing—they will believe that "Slavery in its worst form" does exist in Ceylon, and that it is "something more than a name." This is sure to result from ignorance of the facts, on the part of the Editor of the Gleaner, combined with not less ignorance, but more excusable commentaries of strangers. The whole affair reminds us of the story current here the other day, of the total loss of the Savannah. A soldier's wife dreamt that a friend of her's was lost, who went home in that ship, and she went with commentaries and inquiries from anxious friends, during the course of a few hours the ship, the cargo, the passengers, and the crew were all safe, and the vessel on its voyage, who was round, led to tell the tale.

In like manner the Observer gives us his dreams about Slavery in Ceylon, which are read or passed upon without remark here, but a high aria on the coast, on what the Observer says is believed, viz., that "the ancient Kandian Laws are still in force, Kandian Provinces, who may be sold—by their not only on the Native, but on Europeans in the Kandian creditors, and male slaves or captured wealth." and female?"

By the time such a remnant reaches England it will not unlikely be said, and I believe, that we nourish coffee plants with costly manures, which is the reason of heavily loaded coffee skulls being found on the high road.

Such petitions as abundant, ought to have opened the eyes of sensible men to the likelihood of something being wrong, somewhere in the argument, and to prove this we submit our commentary on the article in the Observer, which will consist of facts, rather than arguments.

Very nearly twelve months since the Editor of the Freeman told us, that slavery could not be merely a question of expediency, but a question in fighting with sin, law, it might be supposed, that the excitement produced, and disturbed the reasoning faculties. If this is not the case, we seriously re-are him that nothing has occurred since the publication of the article, to alter the substantial, and to protract its duration, than the article on the subject published by him. The sure way to keep up the flickering existence of Slavery is to administer strong stimulants doses, and make the people believe that the only way to get rid of the plague is to keep it longer, and in case our commentary is not thought better authority than the original text, we wish some member of the Legislative Council should call for papers, and make a full and complete search into the archives, the exact date of "Slavery in the Colony," since the passing of the Ordinance No. 7, of 1812. Our contemporary does not once allude to this Ordinance, there by leaving people in ignorance that any thing was

The Editor of the Observer said on the 24th August.

It was on Sunday, the 20th of August when, on returning from divine service, he was seized with a severe chill. This was followed by a burning fever which with frequent intermissions hung about him for the following three days, until the 24th when a very sharp attack of it demanded the most prompt and decisive treatment and called for an immediate change of situation.

He was, accordingly, on the afternoon of that day, removed from the house of the Morrison Education Society on Morrison Hill, where he had been lying from the first hour of his sickness, and carried on Board the Steamer "Proserpine," which was under orders to proceed instantly to Macao. Attended by Dr. Wooman, Secretary to H. M.'s Plenipotentiary, and by Rev. S. J. Brown, Head of the Institution on Morrison Hill, our departed friend landed at Macao on the morning of the 25th and entered the residence of his bosom friend Dr. Anderson, where he enjoyed not only his Medical advice, but all the tenderness of a brother.

But the fever increased in aggravated form upon him, and, on the afternoon of the 28th, symptoms were of such a character as to preclude all hope of recovery. During the last night of his illness, he seemed to be aware of his approaching end and, with a calmness that indicated he knew in whom he had believed, committed his spirit into the hands of the Son of God; and, on the morning of the 29th—the Anniversary of the Signing the Treaty of Peace at Nanking—having with his own hands adjusted his pillows around him and raised himself upon his couch, he fell asleep and gently breathed out the breath of life.

That his friends at Hong Kong might have the opportunity of attending his remains to the grave, the interment was deferred to the evening of the 30th and H. M.'s Plenipotentiary, at that time on a visit to Macao, dispatched the Steamer "Proserpine" to Hong Kong to bear the melancholy tidings and to convey across to Macao any who should feel at liberty to leave their post for a day to mourn over the grave of their departed and valued friend.

On the evening of the 30th a large assembly of foreigners met at the Protestant burial ground and we recognized mingling with them several Chinese dependants of the deceased.

The order of the procession was as follows:

Rev. E. C. Bridgman, D. D.
Chief mourners.
M. C. Morrison, Esq.
Sir Hy. Pottinger, Bart.
Hon'ble J. A. Johnston, Capt. G. Walker, Major Gen.
Rev. S. R. Brown.
Rev. W. G. Milne.
Rev. Dr. Anderson.
J. R. Morrison, Esq.
A. Matheson, Esq.
French.
English.
Portuguese.
Chinese.
The Rev. Dr. Bridgman having performed the Services, the Sexton and his men began to fill up the grave. Not one seemed to think of moving. Every one was rivetted to the spot, and a long silence reigned, during which no sound was heard but that of the grave digger's spade and of the falling clouds of earth mingled with the sigh and sighs of a mourning multitude—a silence the depth of which, we doubt not, impressed every unconcerned spectator, if any such was present, with the full conviction—"Behold, how they loved him!"

It was at this time that the tomb of his honored Father and his beloved Mother, the first Mrs. Morrison, AMERICAN TREATMENT OF COLORED PREACHERS.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

MY DEAR SIR,—In your issue of the 25th of September, there is an account of a colored preacher who made a visit from America to Surrey Chapel at which time he made the following remarks: "In America, if I were disposed to do so, I could go either to the Roman Catholic, or Scottish places of worship and be kindly received; but I could not go either to the Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregational or Baptist Churches, without being reminded that I was the colored man, and therefore not permitted to enjoy the privilege of worshipping God with them as I have done with you."

It is further added that the "esteemed Pastor" of Surrey Chapel, anxious to show his American brethren, "a more excellent way" invited Dr. D. to his pulpit, and on the morning of the 21st Sabbath in June, we preached an admirable sermon to a large and attentive audience.

Allow me to send you, in answer to the declaration of the colored Preacher, a short account of a Farewell Missionary Meeting, and by noticing the date, we may also learn who was first to show "a more excellent way."

Farewell Missionary Prayer-Meeting.

"A Meeting for prayer will be held this evening (April 11th, 1843) at half past seven o'clock in the Canal-street Church, Rev. Dr. Dickinson's, in reference to the departure in a few days of the Rev. Messrs. Wilson and Priest, as Missionaries to Africa, under the care of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions."

I was pleased with the terms of this notice, and I must feel it a privilege to pray for Missionaries. I therefore concluded to be present at the Meeting and yet as I understood that it was announced only in the few Churches of our body in this city, and especially as most of those thus modestly invited would be aware that the service was to be held for colored Missionaries, I must confess to many misgivings on my way down to Church about the advisability of Judge those of our European brethren as of a different complexion from ourselves, but they belong to Christ's family, they are worthy and attached members of our Presbyterian fold, and they have had grace given them to go forth in the Master's name, and in his cause to occupy posts of danger and hardship. May the blessing of God abide with them, and their families, and not upon all their labors. We shall not probably see them again in the flesh, but we shall hope to meet them in a better world. It seemed like a fresh showing of the worship of the universal sanctuary, where the distinctions which are of the earth, earthly, shall no more exist, to see these colored servants of Christ, who are just entering on their ministerial course, and the honored men, who are among the leaders of our local, sitting together in the same pulpit, engaged in the same religious duties, with one heart, and one mind, worshipping God, and desiring to possess the glory of their common Redeemer.

So shall it be in heaven. So may it be everywhere on the earth.

A SPECTATOR.

Rev. Mr. Wilson is a member of one of the Presbyteries of New Geneva. Rev. Mr. Priest a member of one of the Presbyteries of Kentucky, America.

EUROPE.

MICHELLELAND.

THE LADY OF THE LAKE.—In June last some interesting pictures in Glasgow had conveyed a Lock Rotten a swim stream-bent, for the accommodation of tourists visiting that romantic quarter. Hitherto the only means by which visitors could be conveyed across the lake were by open boats. Additional boats were put upon the sailing ledge, to maintain a speed equal, if possible, to that of the steamer. The fares of these boats were also reduced to one-half of those previously charged. With one boat, and was secured at the end of the lake, where it was always placed for the night; but on the return of the crew early next morning it could nowhere be found

Rev. Mr. Priest followed, referring to his former visit to the African coast, the degraded condition of the natives, their worship of Greogreous things which he had himself seen, and concerning which he mentioned some interesting facts. He then expressed his thankfulness that he was connected with a Missionary Church (Presbyterian) and his confidence, that though the pecuniary pressure is severely felt, yet the cause of missions would not be suffered, to languish by the people of God, and concluded with requesting an interest in the prayers of Christians. Rev. Mr. Priest is quite an agreeable speaker, having a good voice, and a dignified and pleasing manner. The whole matter and manner of his address would certainly have done credit to many a white preacher of the Gospel.

Rev. Mr. Wilson then made a short speech, commencing with a very brief but handsome acknowledgment of the kindness he had received from the Churches, and then taking as his subject the claims of Africa on the American Church. He mentioned first the Scriptures promise made to Africa, which he applied with much point, as showing that God had foreseen all the discouragements which would attend the efforts of his Church, for the salvation of that people, and had up to special provision to counteract the despondency which would be felt. Second, that Africa has a claim for indemnity. She has been robbed of her children, "and though we, perhaps, should say ye, have been yourselves engaged in carrying her sons into cruel slavery in distant lands," yet our country in former days was more or less involved in that dreadful robbery. He illustrated the obligation of indemnity by a brief, but pertinent reference to the claims of our Government on France a few years ago, and especially by the encroachments of the Jewish law, that four-fold should be restored. "Now we do not ask," said he, "that you should send back four times as many to Africa as were taken away, but we entreat that as many sons may be sent," &c. Rev. Mr. Wilson's manner of speaking is animated, and accompanied with frequent though not always graceful gestures; his remarks evinced a vigorous intellect, and the impression made by them was decidedly good. I was certainly much pleased with this Missionary Meeting. Its various services, of which I have given a very imperfect outline, were interesting and impressive. And the general character, and object of the Meeting could not fail to awaken devout emotions in the hearts of all who were brethren are of a different complexion from ourselves, but they belong to Christ's family, they are worthy and attached members of our Presbyterian fold, and they have had grace given them to go forth in the Master's name, and in his cause to occupy posts of danger and hardship. May the blessing of God abide with them, and their families, and not upon all their labors. We shall not probably see them again in the flesh, but we shall hope to meet them in a better world. It seemed like a fresh showing of the worship of the universal sanctuary, where the distinctions which are of the earth, earthly, shall no more exist, to see these colored servants of Christ, who are just entering on their ministerial course, and the honored men, who are among the leaders of our local, sitting together in the same pulpit, engaged in the same religious duties, with one heart, and one mind, worshipping God, and desiring to possess the glory of their common Redeemer.

So shall it be in heaven. So may it be everywhere on the earth.

A SPECTATOR.

Rev. Mr. Wilson is a member of one of the Presbyteries of New Geneva. Rev. Mr. Priest a member of one of the Presbyteries of Kentucky, America.

EUROPE.

MICHELLELAND.

THE LADY OF THE LAKE.—In June last some interesting pictures in Glasgow had conveyed a Lock Rotten a swim stream-bent, for the accommodation of tourists visiting that romantic quarter. Hitherto the only means by which visitors could be conveyed across the lake were by open boats. Additional boats were put upon the sailing ledge, to maintain a speed equal, if possible, to that of the steamer. The fares of these boats were also reduced to one-half of those previously charged. With one boat, and was secured at the end of the lake, where it was always placed for the night; but on the return of the crew early next morning it could nowhere be found

So shall it be in heaven. So may it be everywhere on the earth.

A SPECTATOR.

Rev. Mr. Wilson is a member of one of the Presbyteries of New Geneva. Rev. Mr. Priest a member of one of the Presbyteries of Kentucky, America.

EUROPE.

MICHELLELAND.

THE LADY OF THE LAKE.—In June last some interesting pictures in Glasgow had conveyed a Lock Rotten a swim stream-bent, for the accommodation of tourists visiting that romantic quarter. Hitherto the only means by which visitors could be conveyed across the lake were by open boats. Additional boats were put upon the sailing ledge, to maintain a speed equal, if possible, to that of the steamer. The fares of these boats were also reduced to one-half of those previously charged. With one boat, and was secured at the end of the lake, where it was always placed for the night; but on the return of the crew early next morning it could nowhere be found lated the grievances of the department against the central Government, spoke of the attendance of the people to the degree of satisfaction, and of the revolution of July, of the advantages of constitution, of the necessity of the Orleans dynasty accepting with alacrity the representation of the nation, and upholding of France; and he concluded by renouncing the Prince of the cruel trials his family had undergone, and of the vicissitudes of royalty, and of the benefits of the revolution for the great people who have given proofs of their devotedness to the glory and prosperity of France. Although M. Basse, the deputy of the department, who waited upon the Prince at the hotel of the vicar of the population, made up in satisfaction for the harangue of the municipal treasury, he did not think proper to prolong his stay in the town beyond three hours; and we find by the Nouvelles that M. Truait Chavet, the Mayor of Marse, Messrs. Stein and Jadin, the adjoints, and the librarian of the town, had been dismissed by a royal order!

The French Government have determined that the Duc d'Angoulême shall be Governor of Constantine, independent of the Governor of Algiers; the Spanish Government, that Seville shall bear the cognomen of vicar.

The Gazette de France states that M. Adolphe Barrot, brother of M. Odilon Barrot, is about to proceed to Hayti, as Royal Commissioner, and his mission is supposed to relate to the execution of the treaty of indemnity, and the commercial conventions with that Republic.

The Constitutional states, that the Maritime Project of Brest had received orders to prepare the frigate Belle Poule as quickly as possible for sea. Her destination is said to be China, where an ambassador is to be sent from France; and she is thought that the command of the Belle Poule will be given to M. Harcourt, a captain in the navy, unless the Prince de Joinville wishes to retain the command of his frigate, in which case he will have the command of a squadron.

A French paper contains a letter from Gortis announcing that the health of the Duke d'Angoulême was seriously impaired. He has lived for the last few years on milk and rice, with the hope of allaying an irritation of the bowels from which he constantly suffered, but that regimen has so weakened him that it was found necessary to give it up. Since that time, the irritation has increased, and the Duke's Prince is now reduced to a state of complete inaction.—Records.

SPAIN.—It will be seen, from another part of our paper, that Espartero has fairly landed in England, and we are glad to hear the speech of Sir Robert Peel, that he is likely to get a very different reception here from what he got at Lisbon, and one more worthy of the man whose name the Queen's Governor was, the being a century in advance of the people he was called on to govern. There can be no doubt that the defeat of Espartero is a severe blow to liberty, and a victory to the extreme Spanish Catholicism. As an evidence of this, by the latest accounts from Madrid, on the 15th inst., high mass was celebrated in the Royal chapel, and Te Deum venerated, in honour of the victory of Terrence. The Queen assisted at the ceremony, seated on a throne, which had never been occupied since Isabel the Catholic. It will be seen, however, from our foreign news, that the necessary consequences of a revolution effected by a junta of so many mutually contending elements, are already showing themselves. Barcelona is again in a state of rebellion. The Government order has been expelled, and the insurgents are preparing to force themselves into another junta in opposition to the Government. Espartero had drawn up, on the 30th of July, on board the Belle Poule, a protest signed by him and those who accompanied him, against all that had been done, and might be done, contrary to the Constitution. This was a wise step. If the present commotions are for a short time to be confined to the Peninsula, it is some to know that they have treated with ingratitude the only man fit or desirous to protect their liberty and the Constitution. "The troops betrayed us," said a companion of Espartero to one of the writers, "but what you know's what they may do against those who bought them! Time is an excellent physician for evils like ours!"—Witness.

SPAIN.—The unfortunate differences between Prince Albert of Prussia and his consort, Princess Marianna of the Netherlands, sister of the reigning King of Holland, form the general topic of conversation. Deceitful to one of the most virtuous and virtuous nature rendered it expedient that there should be a separation, though not a formal divorce. With this view the Princes were promised to go to reside with his father, the ex-King of the Netherlands, who was then at the Hague, and it was determined that he should not return to Berlin until after Prince Albert's departure for his journey to the East, which was expected to occupy the next two years. The Princes did not return to Berlin until after the departure of the Prince, but his wife, whose travels in Italy and Palestine, and visit to the Court of the Sultan, had recently been reported in the journals. It would seem, however, that these travels and romances have not afforded the illustrious Prince as much gratification as might have been expected, for it is understood that he is preparing to return to Berlin. No sooner was the latest arrival of the Prince made known, than preparations for the departure of the Prince were immediately set on foot. It is the intention of her Royal Highness to proceed with her two children to Italy, and to reside at the Villa of the Quadrante. MEMBERS OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION, CORN.—FIRST DAY—THURSDAY.—SECTION A.—MATHEMATICS AND PHYSICS.—Professor McCulloch, on taking the chair, stated the objects of the Association, and those reasons which had induced the Association to combine the study of physics with that of mathematics. The matter which would be first submitted to the meeting was an astronomical report made by Mr. Bailey, which would be read by Dr. Robinson, who would preface it with a few remarks.

Dr. Robinson explained the nature of the catalogue of stars, and its scientific and practical utility.

Dr. William Hamilton remarked on the extreme service which had been rendered to science by this catalogue, and the anxiety with which its publication was looked forward to by all astronomers.

A communication from Professor Powell on the Elliptic Polarization of Light reflected from various substances, was read by Professor Lloyd.

Professor Kater's communication from Professor Draper, of New York, on a newly discovered property of the rays of light. The object of this communication was to show that the rays of light, when reflected from a certain metal which accompanies solar light, and exercises a chemical action on natural bodies, coloring gas, on exposure to light, becomes colored, and sometimes with hydrocyanic acid, which will not unite otherwise. The change produced is permanent, and results from the absorption of rays, whose reflection index corresponds to that of the index of the metal. This is shown by the fact that, when the beam of light has produced its effect when passing through a mixture, it is incapable of action producing it; the power must have therefore been in the transmission. The effect is positive from one end of the spectrum to the other, and differs only in intensity, the maximum being in the indigo towards the red.

Professor Robinson stated what seemed to him to afford some confirmation of Professor Draper's views, being the result of an attempt made by him to determine the effect of the moon by the spectroscopic process. A prepared plate placed in the place of the second mirror of a Conspicuous telescope had received scarcely any impression at the expiration of half an hour. Meanwhile must have there been some reflective agency than the direct or reflected rays of the sun, as if this chemical effect were absorbed at lower angles, as we have seen.

Professor Kane described some experiments which proved that power is lost by rays in passing through crystals.

SECTION B.—CHEMISTRY AND MINERALOGY.—A letter was read from Dr. Lyon Playfair, relative to the grant of money for collecting gases from furnaces.

Mr. Robert Hunt read a paper on Chromography—a new photographic process. He stated that, in making some researches on the influence of the solar rays on the salts of different metals, he discovered on many occasions of producing a positive photograph by the use of chromates. Several chromates may be used; but he prefers the chromate of mercury or copper, the latter producing much more certain results, and in a more rapid manner. The preparation is made in the following manner:—Good writing paper is washed with a solution of sulphate of copper, and partially dried, and then washed with a solution of bi-chromate of potash, and dried. When thus prepared, the paper may be kept for any length of time. Though not delicate enough for the minute camera, they answer very well for taking an engraving, and they are especially useful. When exposed to the sunshine from five to twenty minutes, according to the intensity of the light, a negative picture is produced, which, when put in water, will give a positive picture of silver, produces a beautiful deep orange picture, upon a crystal, or sometimes a white ground, which becomes fixed by washing with pure water. When concentrated alcohol is used, a negative picture was at once produced; but when diluted with water, the sun's action at first darkened the paper and then rapidly bleached it, producing a faint positive picture, which was brought out by pressing it on a white cloth. When a positive picture is placed in solution of common salt, the image fades, leaving a faint orange picture, which it is to be observed, is not a true negative of silver, and lead to dry in the dark, a strong negative picture is the result; but, what takes place from the solution of salt is it exposed to the sun, a faint positive picture of silver is produced, which is not a true negative of silver, and the strength of the picture and color will be determined by the length of time it is exposed to the sun. Mr. Hunt supposes these effects are produced by rays which he has called the most penetrating blue and violet rays. Each of the colors of the visible spectrum the spectrum, the spectrum during effect being produced by the action of the rays of the spectrum by the least refrangible red. He also stated that when an ordinary prepared photograph is washed with corrosive sublimate it becomes perfectly white, but when washed with hypo-sulphite of soda it again assumes its color in combination with the above facts. He also stated the following very curious observation:—If an amalgamated plate be placed about an eighth of an inch above some solution of silver, and the plate be placed in the solution of silver be mixed with it, the plate, in the space of about 24 hours, is blackened as if exposed to the light.

Mr. Hunt read a second paper on the influence of light on the growth of plants. He stated that he had contradicted all the considerations which he had already seen to be a previous report, namely, the injurious influence of luminous rays in preventing germination, and in destroying the length of the young plant, that plants grown under the influence of red rays bend away from the light, and that the blue or chemical rays quicken the growth of plants. But he found that blue light, though it increases the vigor of their growth, may exert too powerful a stimulus, by causing them to expend their whole energy in the production of a large foliage; and it was only by the interposition of red light, that he could bring plants grown under such influence to flower or seed. Under the influence of green rays plants are as much diminished as if grown in the dark.

SECTION C.—GEOLOGY AND PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.—President—Richard Griffith, F. R. S. E., &c.

The Chairman said he felt his inadequacy to fill such a situation, and he trusted that some of the gentlemen who had done so much for the science. One gentleman had just returned from America, another from Russia, and another from Poland. He had been chosen to fill the office of chairman, having been the author of a work on the geology of Ireland, to which he had devoted thirty years' labor and inquiry. The paper about to be discussed on the geology of the Apennines, the Chairman said, was written by Mr. Lyell to explain Professor Rogers's theory.

Mr. Lyell said that the brothers, Messrs. Henry and William Rogers, had been employed by the American Government in a survey, which occupied them a period of five years, and during which they had been in the Apennines hills bordering on Canada to Alabama, running along the Atlantic border. The paper was intended to illustrate the theory of the Apennines, but a paper structurally had been produced. There was a simple law which had been made out by the Messrs. Rogers, which held universal with regard to this mountain chain, and which was the result of a series of facts. In travelling from the Atlantic to the Alleghenies, or Apennines hills, for they are called by both names, some low hills are passed, of the Tertiary class, full of organic remains, sometimes rising a few feet, at other times up to 300 feet. This low chain is composed of parallel ridges of equal height, running north-west and south-west. Each ridge is composed of anticlinal axes. Near the oldest fossil strata appear, called Silurian by Mr. Murchison. Towards the Alleghenies are coal fields of vast extent, some as large as Great Britain. As the horizontal coal field approaches the mountains it begins to undulate, and the undulations increase in amount, till in the centre of the chain the strata become nearly vertical. This explains the structure. The coal in this chain is sometimes anathematic, and on the steep side of the undulations is eroded into scot, while that at the other side is in a perfect state. Strata and the other intrusive rocks, of various origin, occur in the central part of the chain, like the phenomena attending an earthquake. He was led to consider the nature of earthquake motion, and two remarkable earthquakes which occurred within the year. The first occurred in the central part of the chain, the supposed origin of the Apennines chain. All earthquakes depend of a remarkable motion, which is not simultaneous, but progressive, and which may be paralleled to itself from the source of disturbance. The author referred to the observations of Captain Fréy and Professor Mitchell, in explanation of his views, and drew on the subject of the earthquake at Goodenough and Antigua, and stated the facts at Lisbon. The ions of undulation extended in all directions, and at the same time seemed to be initiated by long and short undulations, and were propagated at the rate of five minutes only each other.

This theory would explain the carrying of boulders without recording to the sea theory.

The Secretary read a paper on the earthquake in Goodenough, and Antigua, and stated the facts at Lisbon. The ions of undulation extended in all directions, and at the same time seemed to be initiated by long and short undulations, and were propagated at the rate of five minutes only each other.

This theory would explain the carrying of boulders without recording to the sea theory.

The Secretary read a paper on the earthquake in Goodenough, and Antigua, and stated the facts at Lisbon. The ions of undulation extended in all directions, and at the same time seemed to be initiated by long and short undulations, and were propagated at the rate of five minutes only each other.

The Chairman then addressed the meeting, giving a account of the session and the progress of the Association.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 404. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 23rd, 1849.

[Price 3 Cts. Rs. monthly, or 30 Rs. yearly if paid in advance.]

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The Editor of the Friend of India begs to acknowledge the following donation:
From A. Smelt, Esq. Co's. Rs. 5, to the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta.

THE PUNJAB AND GWALIOR.—We present below in one view the various items of news, authentic or fabulous, which have been given to the public, during our last editorial week, relative to the state of things in the Punjab and Gwalior.

In the Punjab, we are told that the dimensions between Lena Sing Majetah, and Heera Sing at Lahore have ripened into open hostility; that the latter has shut himself up in the fortress, and that the former has a force of 10,000 men under his command, and is watching opportunities; according to another statement, he has besieged the fort to which Heera Sing has retired. Of Udab Sing's movements nothing is murmured; and we only hear that his nephew has importuned him to advance speedily to Lahore and support the authority of the government, as lodged in the hands of the Dogra family. There can be little doubt that this great, but powerful, family is regarded with jealousy by the other Sikh chiefs, and it is not improbable that if Lena Sing should be led to try conclusions with Heera Sing in the field, his army will be swelled by the accession of many from their number; and the struggle may soon assume the character of an attempt to overthrow the power which this family has so long usurped. Whether Golab Sing will quit his principality in the hills, and risk the loss of it, with the view of maintaining the family supremacy in the administration, is a question there is none to answer. He may find it for his own advantage to remain where he is, and erect a separate Government for himself in the strong position he now occupies. It is said that all the troops now at Ludiana and Ferozepore have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness for immediate service. But this can have reference only to the prospect of aggression on our own territories, which may follow the breaking up of the feeble Government at Lahore.

Dar Mahomed, as we stated last week, is not dead. It is doubtful whether he has been wounded, or even fired at. The Khan of Bohk is not in the vicinity of Cabul; but Akbar is said, and apparently with much truth to have strayed to the mouth of the Khyber on his way to Peshawar. His progress may be arrested by the mountaineers, with whom plunder is the first object. Once at Jannood, he would soon be master of Peshawar, for the Sikh troops are dispirited by the convulsions which distract their own country. Heera Sing has made great efforts to send on reinforcements, but the troops are refractory, and will not move without large payments, the receipt of which will only make them more reluctant to thrust themselves into danger. Were they however to march immediately, they would scarcely reach Peshawar under six weeks; and should the place have surrendered in the meanwhile, and its defenders be not on their retreat, the advancing troops would be more likely to return with them, than to push on for the recovery of the place.

Besides, it may reasonably be expected, in the present state of affairs, that some new revolution will recall them to the Capital, before they can reach the India.

Although Gwalior lies so much nearer to our yet we have but a very indistinct account of the actual state of parties, and the reports are often contradictory. Last week it was stated, and correctly, that the insurgent troops had revolted against the existing government, and seized the Khangas; and were prepared to submit to all by the demands of the British Government. We now learn that the Regent, the Base, has contrived to collect a large force around her, and resist them; and that there was every probability that the two parties would come to blows. The liks have been said to have declared that the signal of the battle will be the first of the liks to fall.

It is evident that we know little of the actual state of parties, their designs, their strength, or their resources; and to indulge in any conjectures as to the future course of events would be idle. From the orders issued by the Commander-in-Chief to the troops composing the Army of Exercise, to march immediately to their respective positions without delay, after he is said to have desired them to stand fast, we get the impression that there will be something for them to do. This idea is strengthened by the fact that an officer is employed in surveying the forde of the Chumbul, and that each soldier is furnished with a hundred rounds of ball ammunition. Sir Hugh Gough would in all probability reach Agra by the 15th, and Lord Ellenborough, who leaves Calcutta by the 25th. It is difficult to suppose that the Governor General and the Commander-in-Chief, should both be present with an army of more than 30,000 men, and yet nothing come of it.

After these remarks were in type, we received the Delti Gazette of the 15th instant, which furnishes us with this important addition to our stock of information, that a treaty has been presented by the British Government for acceptance to the Lahore Durbar, and that its provisions are such that they will most probably not be accepted, and that on the refusal to accept it, ulterior measures will be based. If the Editor of the Delti Gazette did not speak in such positive language of this treaty, we should be much disposed to question the authenticity of its information. Indeed we doubt whether any insinuation however strong of the vicinity of his informant is sufficient to give credibility to such a statement. The Sikhs have as yet given us no actual provocation; they have only been cutting one another's throats, and destroying the security of our own frontiers. As yet there does not appear to exist any political hostility for us to interfere and extinguish the fire in our neighbour's house. Lord Ellenborough is reported to have said in a speech made at one of the Mills, that he would do wonders with the Army. If his Lordship should annex Gwalior, and the Punjab, as well as return to England, he will indeed have done wonders; the work of a quarter of a century in a single instant.

CAPT. R. ENGLEDEUR has lost caste, and he can regain it, according to oriental usage, only by a good dinner. We advise him therefore to embrace the opportunity which may be afforded by the expected arrival of the Deutch, to give a magnificent repast on board her, not forgetting to invite the Conductors of the Calcutta Press. This is in the way in which a Hindoo and Mahomedan get back into his caste, and as the English have a national affection for the pleasures of the table, we think the experiment is not likely to fail.

Capt Engledeur has refused to furnish a complete list of the passengers who embarked on the Hiadostan on Thursday last. The refusal took us by surprise. We knew that a partial list had been furnished of those who had embarked on the Hiadostan ten days previously; that no general digest of society; we were therefore at a loss to account for it. We learned that Sir Agnew had not a second to spare, he was besieged by ten or fifteen persons, who, with the usual prudence of the Ditch, had given credit, unwarily, and who insisted upon having a list of the passengers that they might increase the confusion on board the vessel, by the addition of a few constables. Capt. Engledeur was vexed at the interruption; perhaps nettled also at the cause; and hesitated to give up the names of his passengers. The darning creditors then insisted upon it, and menaced him with the terrors of the press, if he persisted in his refusal. Whether he lost his temper or not on this trying occasion, we have not heard; judging from his usual humanity we should think not; but being thus menaced, there was but one course for a man of spirit to pursue. He absolutely and point blank refused to give up the names at all; not because he wished to green the debtors, or to manage the politics, but because he thought that if reason was as thick as blackberries, he ought not to give them on compulsion.

Whether the Agent of a ship is by law bound to give up the names of his passengers on the demand of any private individual, to enable him to capture any debtor of his who may be found in the number, is a question which as a lay Editor we shall not take upon ourselves to decide. The Star enjoys the benefit of an Editor insured in the law, and we must refer the subject to his judgment. But we are certain that Capt. Engledeur is the last person to peep into the kind and warm heart of cordiality with which he and the enterprise of which he is the Agent, have been welcomed here, by a rude and unfeeling report of what he must know will prove a great gratification to the community. We would advise him therefore fore to send all the Journals a list of the passengers—a day or two after the vessel has left town. Thus the public will be gratified, and the creditors taught the necessity of more caution. We are happy in being able to claim for these our remarks the credit of perfect disinterestedness, for all the subscribers to the Friend of India whom the Hindustan took away from us, paid up punctually to the end of the year, and ordered the paper to be sent after them via Marseilles, a good example, which we hope will not be lost on those who are likely to follow them.

CHINA.—Intelligence has been received from China by the Rob Roy to the 24th of October. Hong Kong continued very sickly, but the cause appears as much hidden from view, as the cause of mortality in Sicily. Trade is said to have been dull at this new settlement, and almost stagnant at Canton, which still continues to be the centre of commercial operations. This inactivity is ascribed to a demand made on the Hong merchants—whose mercantile vigour has survived the loss of their official character,—of independent of us, and who may at some future time be found useful, should a second resort to arms on our part be rendered necessary. But the Emperor has evidently no wish to receive the Embassadors of foreign powers at his Capital in the spirit of equality, still less to admit of their constant residence there. It is said to be owing to this determination that he has consented to them the same commercial privileges which the English have wrung from him. When therefore Mr. Cushing may request permission to present himself at the Imperial Durbar, he will probably be put off with the specious reply that the object of his mission has been already anticipated, and that the American Trade has been put on the footing of 'the most favoured nation.'

THE CASE OF THE NATIVE CHRISTIAN AND HIS WIFE.—An interesting and important case, involving the welfare of Native Christians, has recently been discussed in the columns of the Harkers; on which we now propose to offer a brief remark or two. We are told that a Native on embracing Christianity some three, four or five years ago, was deprived of his wife by her father, who took her out of Calcutta and refused him all access to her. At length, he heard through some friends that she wished to rejoin him, but that he must come prepared to resist force. He went accordingly and secured his wife, and, as it was alleged, committed an assault. A day or two after, while his wife was residing with him in Calcutta, an officer appeared from the Magistrate of the 24-Per-gumnah commanding him to deliver her up. He did so; and was summoned to attend the Magistrate's Court, where he was sentenced to two months' imprisonment for the assault. One of the parties in this discussion censures the disproportion of the punishment to the offence. That the Magistrate was bound to take official cognizance of the charge of assault, and to decide its turpitude according to his own judgement, is admitted on all sides; and however we may think two months' imprisonment rather a severe punishment, for a breach of the peace, which may have arisen from an attempt to recover so dear a treasure as a wife, yet without a full knowledge of the aggravating circumstances of the case, it would be unjust to pronounce an opinion. There may have been only a little gentle violence, or there may have been heads broken and blood shed. No principle is involved in the measure of punishment awarded in this instance, and we pass on to the more important features of the case. Was the Magistrate justified in taking the man's wife away from him and delivering her over to her father and friends? Resist Crime, the other party in the discussion, says: "Surely by all rules of common sense, the Magistrate is justified in replacing the wife in the position in which she was before, leaving the prisoner to the remedy which the law gives him."—"If when the Christian's wife was taken from him, he had applied to the Magistrate, he would have had the same justice meted out to him as has been given to his father-in-law in this case." In the last letter published he states, "The law is thus—If a Christian convert has been deprived of his wife, the Magistrate, provided the claim be preferred within a month of the abduction and the wife be nothing lost, will restore the wife to the husband and punish the party who took her away. If these provisions are wanting, the Magistrate will refer the husband to the Civil Court. In a suit in the Civil Court the case would turn upon this point, viz. whether the woman were a Christian or a Hindu? If the latter, she would be entitled to have the case tried by the Hindu law. The Byrnatch of the Pundits would declare her released from all obligation to her husband, and the marriage void."

We think Resist Crime will see cause, on a further examination of the case, to adopt a different conclusion. In the first place, the Magistrate does not appear to have any jurisdiction in the matter. It is quite true that Act IV. of 1840 "for Relief in cases of forcible dispossession," directs the Magistrate to call the parties complained against to appear before him and make defence, and if the complaint appears to be substantiated, to order the complaining party to be put again into possession of the subject of dispute, and maintained till the right to possession be determined by a competent Court. If this be the law on which Resist Crime founds his argument, it will be found, that the Magistrate has neglected one of its most important provisions;—that is, if the facts of the case be as stated,—in as much as he is said to have ordered the subject in dispute, the woman, to be taken away before he had caused the party complained against to appear and make defence. But the Act applies solely to Land, Premises, Water, Fisheries, Crops or other Produce of the land, and not to human beings who are free agents. The Sudder Nizamut has long since ruled, that a Magistrate cannot interfere in such cases, and that they are cognizable only by the Civil Court. If Resist Crime will turn to the 1st Volume of Constructions, he will find the following case at page 46.

"The Magistrate of Allahabad, on the complaint of A, ordered that B should give up to him his daughter, whom A alleged that he had married. The Benchers Court of Circuit, considering that the case was not cognizable in the forfeiture court, rescinded the magistrate's order, leaving the complainant the option of suing to prove his marriage in the regular suit in the civil court. On a reference by the Magistrate, the Court of Nizamut, on 31st March, 1814, concerning with the Court of Circuit, stated it as their opinion that all suits or complaints relative to marriage were to be heard in the civil courts."

Now if the Magistrate cannot interfere to constrain a father-in-law to deliver up his daughter to her husband, still less can he constrain a husband to give up his own wife to her father. Both cases come within the category of

have been heads broken and blood shed. No principle is involved in the measure of punishment awarded in this instance, and we pass on to the more important features of the case. Was the Magistrate justified in taking the man's wife away from him and delivering her over to her father and friends? Resist Crime, the other party in the discussion, says: "Surely by all rules of common sense, the Magistrate is justified in replacing the wife in the position in which she was before, leaving the prisoner to the remedy which the law gives him."—"If when the Christian's wife was taken from him, he had applied to the Magistrate, he would have had the same justice meted out to him as has been given to his father-in-law in this case." In the last letter published he states, "The law is thus—If a Christian convert has been deprived of his wife, the Magistrate, provided the claim be preferred within a month of the abduction and the wife be nothing lost, will restore the wife to the husband and punish the party who took her away. If these provisions are wanting, the Magistrate will refer the husband to the Civil Court. In a suit in the Civil Court the case would turn upon this point, viz. whether the woman were a Christian or a Hindu? If the latter, she would be entitled to have the case tried by the Hindu law. The Byrnatch of the Pundits would declare her released from all obligation to her husband, and the marriage void."

We think Resist Crime will see cause, on a further examination of the case, to adopt a different conclusion. In the first place, the Magistrate does not appear to have any jurisdiction in the matter. It is quite true that Act IV. of 1840 "for Relief in cases of forcible dispossession," directs the Magistrate to call the parties complained against to appear before him and make defence, and if the complaint appears to be substantiated, to order the complaining party to be put again into possession of the subject of dispute, and maintained till the right to possession be determined by a competent Court. If this be the law on which Resist Crime founds his argument, it will be found, that the Magistrate has neglected one of its most important provisions;—that is, if the facts of the case be as stated,—in as much as he is said to have ordered the subject in dispute, the woman, to be taken away before he had caused the party complained against to appear and make defence. But the Act applies solely to Land, Premises, Water, Fisheries, Crops or other Produce of the land, and not to human beings who are free agents. The Sudder Nizamut has long since ruled, that a Magistrate cannot interfere in such cases, and that they are cognizable only by the Civil Court. If Resist Crime will turn to the 1st Volume of Constructions, he will find the following case at page 46.

"The Magistrate of Allahabad, on the complaint of A, ordered that B should give up to him his daughter, whom A alleged that he had married. The Benchers Court of Circuit, considering that the case was not cognizable in the forfeiture court, rescinded the magistrate's order, leaving the complainant the option of suing to prove his marriage in the regular suit in the civil court. On a reference by the Magistrate, the Court of Nizamut, on 31st March, 1814, concerning with the Court of Circuit, stated it as their opinion that all suits or complaints relative to marriage were to be heard in the civil courts."

Now if the Magistrate cannot interfere to constrain a father-in-law to deliver up his daughter to her husband, still less can he constrain a husband to give up his own wife to her father. Both cases come within the category of

"suits or complaints relative to marriage" which the highest Court in the country has declared to be only within the province of the Civil Courts. If then the Magistrate directed the woman to be separated from her husband, and restored to her father, he took on himself to decide—a question of marriage—which is entirely beyond his jurisdiction.

And as the case is of the nature of a Civil suit, the complaining husband who has been deprived of his wife, is not deburred from all remedy, unless he institutes an action within a month after the abduction. He has twelve clear years before him, and, according to the law, may obtain redress even after the expiration of that period, if he can give "good and sufficient cause" that he had been precluded from previously obtaining it.

Supposing the case now brought before a Civil Court, must the husband be absolutely deprived of his wife from the mere circumstance of his having become a Christian? But Corbett seems to think that the decision would turn up on this point; viz. whether the woman were a Christian or a Hindoo. "If the latter, she would have the case tried by the Hindoo law. The Byasut of the Pandit would declare her released from all obligation to her husband and the marriage void." We sincerely think this view of the case will stand the test of the Regulations. No man can be deprived of his ancestral or self-acquired property by forsaking Hindooism and embracing Christianity. This equitable law we owe to Lord William Bentinck. The great leading object of the Hindoo Law of Inheritance, as delivered by Munoo and enforced by subsequent jurists, is to perpetuate Hindooism for ever in India by providing that property shall descend only to those who perform the rites and ceremonies enjoined by the Shastree. "The Mahomedans said the Hindoo law without ceremony on the shelf as soon as they had conquered the country, and for six hundred years, no Hindoo sat on the Bench, and no case was decided by Hindoo Law. In 1773, the British Government gave it a resurrection, without, we fully believe, being aware of its intolerance; and for sixty years, it continued to be a law of British India that any man who became a Christian was, ipso facto, deprived of his paternal inheritance." In 1838, Lord William Bentinck enacted that whenever in a civil suit, the parties to the suit should be of different persuasions, when one party should be of the Hindoo, and the other of another religion, the law of the Hindoo religion should be permitted to operate to deprive each party of any property to which, but for the operation of such laws, he would be entitled. Reasoning from analogy, it appears to us clear that if a Christian cannot be deprived of his property by the Hindoo law for embracing Christianity, neither would the same law be allowed to operate so as to deprive him of his wife. "In all such cases," says the Regulation, "the decision shall be governed by the principles of justice, equity and good conscience." And according to these principles, the Civil Court would neither compel the woman to follow her husband and smother Christianity, nor prevent her doing so by consigning her over to Hindoo relatives. They would recognize her as a free agent, and leave it entirely to her own option to join his new connections, religious and social, or to return to the bosom of her family. Such is our impression of the present state of the law. We give it however with great diffidence, and sincerely hope that, some legislative provision may be made, which shall set the question for ever at rest, and afford the Courts and the Missionaries, a clear and unerring guide for their conduct.

THE HARKER'S LOADED PISTOL.—The Harkur thus comments on a little political speculation of ours last week appended to an article on the state of the Punjab.

"Our contemporary resembles us of the gentleman alluded to, in one of Sir James Macintosh's letters. "It—follows or leads the man in Ukiah letters," and writes me that moderation is cockneyism. We have no doubt, that the Friend of India, thinks that we are guilty of "cockneyism;" but we really must say, that the above, in our opinion, is monstrous. "Every independent State within the India exists only by our suffrage." And this fact is considered sufficient warrant for our robbery of that State. Is justice nothing—is honesty nothing—is liberty nothing? Are the laws of nations nothing? Our worthy contemporary says, that the Punjab exists only by the suffrage of the British. Why, if it comes to that, he himself exists only by our suffrage. Any hour, that we were pleased to put a loaded pistol to his temple, we could blow out his brains. We conceive, that the act would be just as lawful, as the annihilation of the independence of the Punjab. The cool way, in which our contemporary talks of the British Empire being "obliged by the current of circumstances to extinguish any of these little independent States" is worthy of—we will not say whom—certainly, most unworthy of the Friend of India—most unworthy of any liberal journal. "These States" says our contemporary exist upon the right of treaties, which we hold sacred. Indeed! Why—did not they exist before we had any treaties with them to hold sacred? They do not exist by the right of treaties—they exist, by the law of God, which it will be infamy in us to violate. If they offend us, that is another matter—but we protest against our contemporary's reasoning. It is a great prodigy; nothing better; and may be used in defence of the deepest crimes.—Daguer's Harkur, Nov. 17, 1849.

Our contemporary tells us that what we have written is "monstrous;" that it is "arant prodigium," which "may be used in defence of the deepest crimes." What can we say to these charges except that they are somewhat severe? He says he has no doubt we shall think he is guilty of a "cockney cant" when he says "Is justice nothing—is honesty nothing—is liberty nothing? Are the laws of nations nothing? We are not thinking any thing of the kind, but have been thinking that the writer must just have risen from the person of that celebrated letter-writer which Junius addressed to Sir William Draper in which he says, "Is the ordinance no thing? Are the laws nothing? Is the command of the army with all the patronage annexed to it nothing? And as to the Harkur's having been guilty of cockney cant, if his own conscience does not accuse him of it, we shall not. We make it a rule to eschew the word cockney, because of its too great affinity to hypocrisy, with which we have no right to charge any man but on the most satisfactory proof of his being a villain. We had said "every independent State within the India exists only by our suffrage" and he says this fact is considered sufficient warrant for our robbery of that state. By whom is it so considered? Not surely by us, for we have said nothing of the kind. We have observed against the doctrine that the strong have a right to despoil the weak, because the weak have the power to do so. We have the same moral and patriotic abhorrence of it as the Harkur. He says that the annihilation of the independence of the Punjab—without provocation—would be as lawful as this, that is, the Edi-

"We are careful enough to confess, that we were not at the moment thinking of the Punjab, when we said that every state within the India existed only by our suffrage, upon the strength of treaties. For India read, India."

tor's, putting a loaded pistol to our temple and blowing out our brains. We have always thought the same thing, only we have never succeeded in putting it in so clear and striking a point of view.

But with the exception of the Punjab, and perhaps one or two minor states, with whom we have never tried issues in the field, all the other states in Hindoostan retain their independence by our suffrage, in whichever sense the term is used. As the paramount power in India, their independence is prolonged, not because we have not the power to absorb it, for as we have said, an army of fifteen thousand men could annihilate all independent authority in the country; but because of our own moderation. This assertion was used by way of contrast to the rapacity of our predecessors on the throne of India, who left no crown independent which they had the power of subverting. But these states exist in another sense by our suffrage. There is scarcely one of them we have not been at war with,—a war not provoked by us,—and which our triumphs in the field have not placed entirely at our mercy. By the laws of war, we might have snatched the conquered territories to our own, but in the majority of instances we have restored them, and entered into treaties with the Chiefs. "These treaties we hold sacred," and while they are faithfully observed by the Native ruler, we have no right to subvert the independence of the state. We believe that in all these cases experience shows that this compassion of ours to the fallen greatness of the Chiefs, has been cruel to their subjects; and that it would have been far "the grates good of the greatest number" if we had incorporated these territories with our own, and extended to the people the blessings of British institutions. For defective, highly defective as those institutions may be, and asceptive as they are of indefinite improvement, still they are vastly superior to any which exist among the Native states. Hence it is our most ardent wish and hope that whenever these treaties may be annulled by the transgression of the Native power, they may never be renewed; but that our administration, civil, criminal and fiscal may be extended over the country. "If they offend us, that is another matter," says the Harkur. Just so. We have no right to invade the country while they are perfectly inoffensive; but whenever by their offences they oblige us to draw the sword, then comes the time for relieving the people from their oppressions. We would begin the work of absorption just at the time fixed by the Harkur, and not a week sooner.

The Harkur says, "the cool way in which our contemporary talks of the British Government being 'obliged by the current of circumstances to absorb any of these little independent states,' is worthy of—we will not say who—certainly most unworthy of the Friend of India—most unworthy of any liberal journal." Now here the Harkur is utterly at fault in the offence he has taken, for we did never intend to absorb any of these little independent states; we could think of at the moment. But we will give him full satisfaction; we will write worthy of the most liberal journal in India—we will write worthy of ourselves. We ask the reader therefore to expunge the sentence, the coolness of which displeases our contemporary, and to substitute this glowing passage in its stead; "The idea of charging our Government with ambition, when it is obliged by the treacherous and venial aggression of such a little state as Kytial, or by the contumacy, the unheard of cruelties, the unparalleled perfidy of such a petty chief as the lord of Coorg, to extinguish the lamp of any of these little principalities, and to put it out of the power of the fools or villains that rule them, to annoy us, or oppress their subjects, is superlatively injurious."

Should the Herakles continue the discussion, we shall be happy to furnish him with our Puff-bellied Creed, about which he appears to labour under a mistake.

BOMBAY DHURMU SHUBHA.—From an extract we have made from the Oriental Christian Spectator, published at Bombay, it would appear that the Brahmins of that city, alarmed by the heftism of a Hindoo youth who attended the Seminary of the General Assembly, have agreed among themselves to withhold their own children from further attendance, and to prevent all those who are under their influence from sending their children thither. They have also established a Standing Committee, to watch over the interests of Hindoos, which may eventually take the form of a Dhurma Shubha. The Prasikhar, a native paper, which does not appear to be on the Christian side of the question, reasons justly on the subject, and predicts the mischievous of this attempt to prop up Hindoism by social and religious pains and penalties. It is quite natural that the Brahmins should combine for the preservation of those interests which they hold most dear to themselves; and so long as their opposition is confined within legitimate bounds, we have no right to complain, however much we may deplore the misapprehension of their zeal. But they are almost sure to overstep the boundary of lawful exertions, and to overstrain the authority till it is fit to be tyrannical, and prodigious a reaction.

The Bombay Brahmins can hardly establish a greater despotism than that which the Dhurma Shubhaist up in Calcutta, nor can they be expected to command the services of a more active and sagacious Secrecy, than Bhobhane Chare, the Editor of the Candrika, or one more fertile in resources; yet our Calcutta Society has split into two hostile parties, and has thus lost its strength and vigor. It has been successful in no one object for which it was established. It has not restored the rite of Suttee. It has not arrested the progress of Liberalism among the educated classes; it has not been able to stem the growing contempt for Hindoism, nor has it succeeded in preventing the voluntary attendance of the children of respectable parents at these Missionary Seminars where Christian truth is inculcated. Neither will the Bombay Association do more than thin the ranks of Christian schools for a time. Its first effort in this line of opposition will be its strongest; the children whom it may be the means of withholding, will gradually return, and every succeeding attempt to interrupt their attendance will be marked with increasing feebleness, till the drunk of such manifestation becomes as idle a fancy as the threat of an Interdict from the Vatican would appear at this time of day.

PUBLIC CARRIAGES OF THE PUNJAB.—Three years ago a series of letters appeared in the Deli Gazette, entitled "Pinnage in the life of an Adventurer in the Punjab." The writer has since published them in a separate volume, with a copy of which we were favored some little time ago, and which we have read with the greatest interest as the time appears to be approaching when our connection with the country he describes is likely to be more intimate. In order to give greater interest to the subject, he has thrown his observations together in the form of a little Romance, of which Col. Bellairs, a foreign adventurer, is the hero. He arrives at the Court of Ranjeet Sing, into whose service he is received with a cordial welcome. Soon after he is appointed to the command of a brigade, and entrusted with the Hill fortress of Kangra, with orders from Ranjeet to hold it "against all comers, be they who they may, my son, minister or servant; bear they my standard or not; no one gains admission, not even myself, until I have thrust my head in at the wicket, and thence thou hast examined my beard: then and then only, may the gate be opened." He proceeds to the fortress, puts it in a state of defence, disciplines his troops, and endeavours to promote the agriculture and commerce of the district. At no distance of time, Suchet Sing, the brother of the late Dhyun Sing, approaches Kangra, with an army of 15,000 men, and presents a perranna from the Maharaja, ordering the delivery of the fort and territory. Bellairs refuses to obey the royal perranna, pleading the express orders of Ranjeet Sing that it should be delivered only to him in person. Suchet Sing attacks the fortress and is beaten off; but the contumacy of the foreign officer in refusing a Royal order is applauded at Court. Meanwhile, the young and lovely daughter of the ruler of Kangra whom the Sikhs had disinherited, is introduced with her mother to Bellairs, as at first entertains towards the girl, no other feeling but that of sympathy for her forlorn condition; but finding that her mind was occupied with more tender feelings towards him, he determines to make her his wife. While the two lovers are thus enjoying the most endearing intercourse, a hostile body approaches the fort through the mountain defiles. Bellairs plants his troops in the most advantageous position, and pours a destructive fire on them from the heights. They are entirely discomfited, and flee; but on his return to Kangra, he finds that his betrothed wife and her mother have been carried off by some villain. Search is made for her in every direction, but in vain. At length, he discovers that they had been conveyed by an emissary of the Dugger family to their inaccessible Hill fortress at Raj-ko-kote. Thither he despatches a confidential servant, and this enables the writer to describe minutely the position, and the resources of Dhyun Sing and his brother. The girl is afterwards rescued to him, through the influence, it is believed, of the Durber; and they are married according to Christian rites by a clergyman from Ludlow, with the full consent of Ranjeet Sing. Bellairs is present at the meeting between Lord William Bentinck and the Maharajah at Roopur. He is subsequently appointed to inspect the Sikh possessions on the south bank of the Sutledge, and eventually to arrange the whole border from Meotia to Peshawar. While he was preparing to proceed on this latter commission, and was lying in his boats on the Sutledge, the boat containing his baggage is set on fire; he hastens to the spot; an armed body of two hundred men rush during his absence into his own vessel, and after a severe engagement with his servants, in which the villains were more roughly handled, escaped in their object by causing the death of the young bride, who is either thrown out of the window by them, or rushes out to avoid their violence. Bellairs who has been attacked and bound, contrives to extricate himself towards the morning, and, it thus is formed of the tragic end of his wife. The river is dragged, and his body recovered two days after. He soon after relinquishes the service of the Maharaja, and the curtain drops on the last scene.

The chief attraction of this work consists in the valuable information with which it furnishes us, relative to some of the men who are now taking an active share in the affairs of the Punjab, and the character of the troops disciplined by European officers, whom our own army may soon be called to meet in the field. The various opportunities for observation which the writer has enjoyed, combined with his intimate knowledge of the native character, give a peculiar value to his remarks, and enable us to receive them with much confidence. The description he gives of Ranjeet Sing, of his mode of conducting business, of his deep penetration, of his debauched habits, we have not room to refer to. They must be familiar to the reader, through the labours of previous writers, and Ranjeet Sing himself now belongs to the province of History, not of Politics.

The following is the account which the writer gives of the origin of the Dugger family:

The men in highest consideration were Rajah Dhyun Singh and Jemadar Khandyal Singh with the faquir Asudhin. The rise of the two first was not by the most respectable road. I believe there is little doubt that as ministers, and even victims of Ranjeet Singh's debaucheries, they both first obtained favour. Gulab Singh and Suchet Singh, brothers to Dhyun Singh, are likewise wealthy and powerful. Their fathers and uncles were brothers are not much inferior to those of the Dhyun Singh himself. Although the family is of good blood, it was in obscurity, and Gulab Singh was only a common soldier; it is said he killed a man, and being alone pressed by the friends of his victim, he took refuge in the Maharajah's tent; then, placed in the plain, as was his custom when receiving his men, he was seen by the Maharajah, and the refugee's appearance, pardoned, and took him into favour; he soon introduced his brother, who, in turn, brought his father to the Maharajah's notice, and being men of business and courage, they way into his permanent favour. All three became Rajas, acquired jagirs and countries that are entitled them beyond count, and the command of troops and territory that, with their own ability, make them dangerous subjects.

It was always a matter of attachment to the wall-wahers of Ranjeet Singh, this wise and wary as he is, he allowed this fraternity such formidable power. Dhyun Singh knew the public feeling, and was ever on the spot to prevent its reaching his master's ear; or in his brief absence, had twenty followers to watch every avenue. But, somehow, a little jealousy and discontent, and the Maharajah why he permitted such doing? "Why," said the king, "it is my fate—I threw myself on them—it is my destiny." And so it is. Dhyun Singh has the same feeling, and has firmly policed the offices of Prime Minister, Commander of the forces, and chief aide-de-camp to his Highness; he has shut out almost all access; and though, as I before said, he is generally friendly to make his way into the presence, and ruling the cry of "Jahat," obtains a hearing; yet he is so soon headed out, that, however graciously he may have been his reception from the sovereign, he has seldom courage or ability to try a second hearing. Suchet Singh and Gulab Singh are seldom at Court; they are in the provinces, commanding large bodies of troops, and administering the territory they hold in fief; the latter holding the salt contract, interferes directly with the bread of every man in the country.

Dhyun Singh, though slightly lame, is a fine looking man, of a noble presence, polite and affable, of winning manners and modest speech. He sits on the ground, and is seldom to be seen in the Maharajah, while others, his inferiors in every way, are seated on chairs. The Raja decidedly is next to his master, the ablest man in the Punjab; though like him, so illiterate as scarcely to be able to sign his name.

Of Suchet Singh, who is now said to keep himself aloof from Heera Singh, we are told:

To do him justice, Suchet Singh was a bold and gallant looking young man, a perfect soldier in appearance; he had many of the qualities necesney to a Commander, and with a handsome person and shrewd habits, much the man to guide the hearts of a rude soldiery, and in reality he was a very popular leader, the more so indeed that not being very particular in dress and in the use of arms, he looked little to the discipline of his men, regarding every thing as light, but devoted to himself, and obedience to his commands. Such a chief, having funds to pay his troops, has but to raise his banner in any corner of the Coast to be quickly followed by crowds.

In the following extract the writer describes the parental fondness with which Raja Dhyen Sing regarded his son Heera Sing, now raised to the influential eminence of Prime Minister, and de facto ruler of the Punjab.

Recently he emerged from the Zemank with his wife, Heera Singh, by his side; he was a lump of a lot, with nothing striking in his features, which were smooth, of ordinary cast, and, if any thing, had a disagreeable pumpled expression. He was, however, a son of him who ruled the Punjab, and the darling of his father, the wise and calculating Dhyen Singh, who was now indeed a Raja of Rajas; in that Kusthet had lately conferred the princely title on his boy, thus making him emerging from the andam with his wife, and addressing him with every endearing epithet, Dhyen Singh went up to one of the Haimis, or confederates, a store of his father's, and in the open area, were hard at work in the inner area of the palace, preparing sweetmeats for distribution to the thousands who would be assembled at the approaching nuptials of the Heera Raja. It was indeed for this purpose that the father had obtained leave of absence from Court; and it was in the hope of accomplishing the first wish of his heart, and securing an heir to his house, that he was now about to unite his first born dazling to a daughter of one of the oldest families in the hills.

Concerning the child as he walked along, the ambitious father murmured half aloud, "Is it not for thee, my darling, pidere, my son—yes, that I do all this that I tread the slippery paths of ambition, and watch the pillow of that drizzling detest! For thee I toil; with thou ever repay my labours, requite my love! Oh for one peep into the future!"

The gradual increase of the wealth, territory, and power of the brothers, is thus described:

Of late years such has been the audacity, ability and influence of the brotherhood, or rather of the two allies, that no year has passed without an extension of their territories, and the first example of their doings is the fact that the first installation Ranjeet Singh received of operations on the Ladakh frontier was the announcement of the conquest of Ladakh by his brother Singh, the General of Gulab Singh's troops.

Raj-ke-kote mentioned above, is the mountain fortress of the Dogur family, in which Gola Sing, we believe, resides. Lumsene says have been expended by Dhyen Sing in endeavouring to render it impregnable.

I saw but little of Raj-ke-kote, yet it was enough to show how impregnable its position, and that man has done for it almost as much as nature. The rock, isolated still more than that of Kangra, has more ample resources, is approached only by means of baskets or ropes, is over a tremendous precipice, and is surrounded by steep gorges, manned by European detectors, and is guarded by hill-men and the Raja's choicest troops. The Maharajah has never seen the place, and Dhyen Singh will take care he never does.

In a supposed conversation with his servant Chandu, at Raj-ke-kote, Dhyen Sing thus unfolds his visions of ambition, which have been extinguished by his tragic death, just at the moment when he had attained the object of his long cherished desires.

No, these walls are built for other purposes; the Maharajah is weak and worn out, he may die to-morrow, in he may die to-morrow, and then guides the States? Who is there, among the hotted, cowardly, drunken crew, to hold the government for one day! To keep friendship, or rather peace, with the Jergans, or the enemies, in respect of the province; and above all, to restrain and curb our own soldiery; that mass of ruffians that it has been his highness' pleasure to collect, and that he alone. They are now deeply in arrears, and many of the leaders very unpopular, some of the best, as well as some of the worst. Ranjeet Singh's death would be the signal, if not for total anarchy and a rank in the state, at least for much bloodshed and mayhem. And these who would be safe! Certainly not those who had neglected to prepare for their own safety. I am saying more than perhaps is true; but you have a mass and tongue, Chandu, you are prudent, and will not run the chance of losing them.

The writer, in the following sentences which he puts into the mouth of a Native, gives his own opinion of the value of that system of tactics which the foreign Generals had introduced into the army of the Punjab.

"Why Sahib, I think, as do most others, that it's all fudge, well enough to look at, and for display, but useless beyond this; the Sikhs have never used it yet, and never will; if ever they are induced to charge, it will be in a tumultuary manner, and the straight parallel-line system will be entirely forgotten or despised in the hour of action; they themselves say it will do for parade, but not for battle, you may therefore judge of what use all drilling has been. But it has had one good effect, it has called attention to the state of the army, their arms and their physical preparation; and as the troops of their neighbours have been so well drilled, and are so numerous, inferior, or the Sikh power has spread, but, in the front of the Jergans, they will find other, and the day that the two armies meet in the field, and will be the day that will seal the doom of the Sikhs, and their defeat will be the day that will seal their destiny."

"Yes, I hear, that the English are highly disapproving of the straight and efficient tactics. They are Lions, Sahib, each soldier is in himself a host, and their equipment and their guns are so well fitted to the task, that they will be the ruin of the Sikhs. It is a pleasure to go to Ludhiana to see them."

The conversation of the Mula Raja refers to the same subject.

One day I was summoned to a private interview with the Maharajah, the darbar alone being present; Ranjeet was evidently extremely annoyed as to the figure he and his troops should cut before the English, and he questioned me earnestly on my opinion. "Tell me," said he, "do you think those Arangis would force my men, if it came to a fight? You look discontented, but you ought to know enough of me to understand that I am not an opinion I want one; not a mere echo of my own words." I was, and could not help expressing a good deal taken aback. "I was aware to begin with that you would not be so easily touched by the Maharajah on the most tender point, I am sure to my principle, and replied sincerely that I did not think his army could successfully confront one with European discipline."

"But why, Hellas! I see my guns—look at my infantry—count my Cavalry—and then measure the numbers of these Jergans."

"Your Highness' servants wishes well to the Khalsa, and to the Government whose salt he eats, but he answers honestly, and says what he thinks."

"Then tell me, man, why you think so! Fear not, speak out."

"I may be wrong, but there are many reasons; the Europeans have superior discipline and better leaders, and their gradations of rank are more complete."

"But how could you bring four times their number into the field?"

"Which force you have no one to handle—it would therefore destroy itself."

"What! could not the Venture, or Corps, or Artillery! Could you not yourself? But perhaps you would not: is that your meaning?" and the old Chief's single eye glared fire. This was the point where I had framed the conversation would come; however I replied respectfully that I trusted there was no occasion for making the question, and that the friendship between him and the Company would rest undisturbed. But he went on to be answered, and said impatiently, "that is no reply to my question." "Pardon your highness, I am not a doctor, but I am a soldier, and I can ask you a question, that I could not ask against the English." "You should have told me so before," exclaimed the Maharajah, violently—"you have desired one—you have asked my aid, only to fail me when most wanted."

Of Lord William Bentinck, the writer gives us the following opinion.

He had then just withstood the half-battle storm; a campaign more trying perhaps to British interests than any they had yet undertaken, and which nothing but the right feeling of the majority of the officers, not, perhaps, of decided leaders, prevented ending in open and wide spread mutiny; he was right in not yielding to the loudly expressed cries of the military; but he was wrong in the manner in which he executed his invidious commission; and was wrong still, in not separating himself from the regiment as by putting himself on half-battle too. But enough, and peace to his ashes; he meant well, and may the edict rest on those who calmly and coldly, from across the ocean, sent out such orders, and again repeated them, as not one of themselves would have dared to enforce.

THE LATE MAJOR CHAIRMAN.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]
During the past month the service has lost one of its most efficient, and zealous officers by the untimely death of Major Patrick Craigie, Deputy Adjutant General of this Army.

In recording a tribute to the memory of departed worth, a friend is apt to exceed the bounds of moderation, a fault which the writer of these few lines is in little danger of committing, being conscious of his total inability to do justice to the lamented subject of his humble eulogium.

Distinguished as an early period of his service by laudable activities for professional advancement, Major Craigie obtained employment on the staff, where his ability soon made him conspicuous as an officer of the highest promise.

As Assistant Adjutant General of the Meerut Division, he gained the confidence, and unqualified approbation, of General Sir Charles Bagnall, and the late Commander-in-Chief, Sir Jasper Nicolls, and was one long called to a more extended sphere of usefulness by removal to the Department of the Adjutant General of the Army.

From his nomination, to this responsible and honourable position until the hour of his death he devoted himself entirely to official duties, gaining the confidence of all under whom he served. He was selected by Sir H. Fane as principal staff to the army of the Indus and Lord Kitchener highly appreciating his services, recommended him in the strongest terms on his return to India. His perfect knowledge of the multifarious details of the service, wonderful facility in transacting business, constant anxiety to improve the discipline of the Army, pleasing uravity, and irrepressible readiness to afford every information to those who sought it, peculiarly fitted him for this important situation.

The promptitude and activity displayed by him in the field, equalled his intelligence and assiduity in office, rendering his services invaluable in every capacity.

His energies were strained to the very last, and even when the hand of death was upon him he was with difficulty persuaded to quit his post, thus terminating a career of extensive usefulness; alas too suddenly; though fully as honourable as had he fallen on the field of battle, furnishing a noble example of untiring zeal for the welfare of the army of which he was so bright an ornament, and leaving a name which will ever be held dear by many who knew his value as an officer, and his worth as a friend. In his dying moments a manly, fortitude, and Christian resignation shone through the characteristics of a well spent life.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18.

The Hindustan steamer left Calcutta yesterday morning punctually at sunrise, with about seventy passengers. The Star says that it has been customary to apply a list of the passengers, but that for reasons not unfolded all information on the subject has been refused.

The state of affairs at Gwalior does not appear to be satisfactory, notwithstanding the capture of the usurper. Last week, says a letter from Curzon in the Star, the Commander in Chief directed all corps warned for future service, to stand fast with the exception of the detachments of Artillery. This order we may suppose was issued on the report of the revolution which must be the authority of Khagga. On the 18th instant, orders were issued to put the whole force in motion, and they were to commence their march on the 12th, 14th, and 15th. This counter order may have been occasioned by the first revolution, which divided the troops into two hostile parties. Whether we advance, or the difference are compromised, it is understood that the occupation of the or troops will cease. It is scarcely to be expected that they will down their arms and retire to beggary and starvation, without something like a struggle.

— The Madras papers notice the augmentation of the Corps of Engineers by two Captains and four Subalterns.

— The Delhi Gazette of the 28th states that Dost Mahomed was at the date of the last accounts from Cabul, in good health. He may have been fired at, but not either shot nor wounded. The Hill tribes demand the release of Amencolla, the "infamous Amencolla," but the Dost refuses to comply with their wish, well knowing that the man, if set at liberty, would breed an insurrection.

— We are happy to see among the Orders of the Lieut. Governor of the North West Provinces the appointment of Capt. Cantley, as Superintendent of Canada in the Doab, and Director of the works on the Ganges Canal.

— The following notice appears to be the latest intelligence from Gwalior. It is from the Harbours, and rather serves to neutralize the prospect of an early adjustment of differences.

No. 8. "I have not thought it worth while to write to you, since I gave you the result of the Maharajah's doings in the seizure of the Khagga. The Base and her party have, however, engaged some troops as continue on their side, and commenced entreaching themselves against the rebels.

"The latter day then and threaten that, on the first shot, to off the Khagga's head, and then war to the knife. How far they will carry their threat into execution depends on the resolution of the Dost, for if she gives in, there will be an end of all the trouble, with some determination is come to, with regard to the proposals made by the British Government—the ultimatum having, I am told, been received, and a short time allowed for reply."

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 17.

— The Star states that Lord Ellenborough starts for the North West Provinces on the 20th instant.

— From the same paper we learn that the Lord Bishop was expected to arrive at Patna, in the course of the day on the 10th instant, and that the Chief Justice of Bombay is so extremely ill, as to be under the necessity of quitting the Presidency immediately.

— It has been matter of no small surprise that the Court of Directors to whom the general question of Lotteries was submitted more than six months ago, when the state Lottery in Calcutta was extinguished, should not have hastened to express their entire concurrence in the measure and to desire that the reform might be completed by passing of an Act which should make lotteries illegal in India as they are in England. In consequence of their backwardness in the cause of public morals, various lotteries, to a very large amount,—indeed to an amount almost equal to that of the State lotteries—are advertised from day to day in the papers. One of them, belongs to Methford and Co., who state that the prize of a lakh of Rupees had fallen to the lot of Baboo some body, and that of 20,000 Rupees to the number held by General Fawcett. We are now informed in the Star that the General has commenced an action for the recovery of it; and there can be no doubt that the Baboo, if he should ever hear of his good fortune, would do well to imitate the example. Why does not the Court deliver us from these nuisances!

— The Bombay Gentlemen's Gazette states that Major Parker, of H. M. 28th, has put a period to his career in a delirium arising from a severe fever.

— The Pretoria Rajah, says the Harbours, after having been repeatedly summoned, has not set out for Lahore to present himself at the Durbar. Potehs is the largest of the Sikh states, on the left bank of the Sutledge which is under the protection of the British. We thought this protection accorded with its independence of Lahore; but the notice in the Harbours shows that we were mistaken.

— The Java Ulmer alludes to a very valuable collection of ancient silver and copper coins made by Capt. C. H. Bart, of the 84th Regiment, during the late campaign in Afghanistan which he has presented to Lord Ellenborough and which his Lordship has sent to the British Museum. This collection will be particularly valuable in consequence of the utter loss, in the disastrous retreat, of several noble collections which had been made by former officers. We believe Lady Sale's collection, which was of peculiar value, shared the fate of all the others.

— A letter from Sandaway in Aracan, dated the 31st October, informs us that a severe shock of an earthquake was felt there on the morning of the 30th; but no injury was done. The same letter states that Lieut. Hopkinson had been deputed to make a geological survey of the island which was thrown up out of the sea sometime ago near Chabab.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18.

— The Star informs us that the Church to be built by subscription at Darjeeling is on the point of being commenced. The subscription both at the station, and from individuals who take an interest in the Sanatorium, and from those who have already derived benefit from it, has been very liberal.

— The Englishman's Overland Steamers state that the entering firm of Aylwin and Co. have taken to shipping cargo from India to England, a branch of trade hitherto monopolized by the Italian States. No one, England is chiefly supplied with rags from Hamburg. The Italian rags for the most part find their way across the Atlantic; but as the Natives of India never quit their clothes till they are rotten, and even then make them up into quilts, the speculation is not likely to be profitable.

— The Agency Times states, that preliminary steps have been taken to establish a branch of the Bombay Bank in Calcutta, and that business will commence as soon as a sufficient number of shareholders have been found to form a Board of Directors.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 20.

— The dawn edition of the Harbours, on Saturday, gave an extract of a letter from Lahore, the purport of which was that Meer Singh, and Larn Singh Majetha had quarrelled; that the former was in the fort, and that the latter with the father of Meer Nohar, who was at Lahore, with a large force and upwards of a hundred guns. But after the specimens we have had of spurious information systematically despatched from the Punjab, we were constrained to receive all news from the secret, with some mistrust.

— The Agra Ulmer has revived the report that the Governor General intends to establish the Supreme Government, at Agra. The Supreme Government is cordially held at Bombay still at Agra, but the present Ruler has no idea of removing it, and we question whether its seat will be disturbed for a very long time to come.

— At the recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief, the Governor General has added a Corps to be styled the left wing, to the Army of Exercise, and this has rendered a new disposition of that army necessary, for which however we cannot find room. All appointments are to date from the 25th instant. It was said a day or two ago that some of the corps had been ordered to stand still, but it is now understood that they march without delay to their stations. Yet the question of peace and war seems undecided. At any rate, the Government Treasury is to pay the expense, all the expenses of this marching; and a feeling of it is to fall on the British Government, which is perhaps the reason why the 5 per cent. are looking so anxiously up to the new post premium.

— The Military Board has been reconstituted. The Chief Magistrate's services are disjoined with him, and it would be difficult to tell why he ever had a seat at it. The Commissary General is to be a member, and his office is incorporated with the Board. The following arrangements are made in consequence upon new model.

17th Nov. — The Governor General of India in Council is pleased to make the following Arrangements and Appointments:

Lieut. Col. Gurteen, Commissary General, to have a seat at the Military Board, which he will join under instructions from the Military Department.

From the date of the Commission having received his seat, the functions of his office will be transferred to the Board.

Under the foregoing arrangement the number of extraordinary members attached to the Military Board may be conveniently reduced to one, and the next vacancy that may occur, will not be filled up.

The Governor General in Council is also pleased to relieve the Chief Magistrate of Calcutta, for the future, from the duty attached to his appointment as ex-officio member of the Military Board.

To provide for the due superintendence of Commissariat arrangements on the transfer of the services of the Commissary General to the Military Board, His Lordship in Council has decided on augmenting the number of Deputy Commissaries General, and Lieut. Col. Francis Macaulay, of the 10th N. L., is nominated a Deputy Commissary General.

Capt. G. T. Greene, Garrison Engineer of Fort William and Civil Architect, is appointed Secretary to the Military Board, in the room of Major Henry McLane, of the Corps of Engineers, deceased.

— The Star continues to follow up the scent after the Belgian Steam, which he says belongs to a very stout Jew in Calcutta, who affirms she was consigned from Muscat with a cargo of salt, dates, and sundries, which renders her appearance at the ordinary of the High Court more suspicious. The Star states that there was long an intimate intercourse between the Imam and the Nabob of Decan, and that the Nabob of Decan, who had been in the hands of the British, had taken to arms, and munitions of war from the Imam to resist the English. "The correspondence was discovered, and the proceedings instituted against the Imam, and the Nabob, and the first of the correspondence, in which a feint had been arranged for had faith." The circumstance is quite new to us, and we should take it as a fact, that the Star would note the work in which it is to be found.

— The Great Gun has been mounted upon a stone base in front of Government House, but there is no Dragon. The mouth of the cannon points directly at the statue of Lord Hastings. The Star is pleased to be facetious on the occasion and makes the gun spent upon us as if he were an editor; but we really wish some of our brethren in the City of Palaces would tell the benighted inhabitants of the interior, where the gun came from, what it is intended to represent, and why it is put up in its present position.

— H. M.'s 13th Light Infantry reached Ludiana on the 6th instant. A letter from that station published in the Harbours, states that orders had arrived from Head Quarters requiring every man in the division, the 9th Foot excepted, and even including the 13th, to be in readiness for immediate active service. The sick to be left behind with a small force, and the rest to march. Is the 13th to be employed in gathering a few more laurels before it embarks for England!

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 21.

— The Star has intelligence from Fergussie to the 10th instant, which contains in a great measure the statements which had been previously received regarding the state of affairs in the Punjab. A deadly enemy has, it said, sprung up between Lord Singh and Herra Singh; the former is said to have assembled an army of 10,000 men, with which he is watching an opportunity for action. It is expected that Herra Singh will march down upon Lahore to settle matters; but while his back is turned, matters will probably be unsettled at Jambou, Dost Mahomed, it is now said, has been killed, not killed; and Akbar Khan is at the western mouth of the Khyber ready to march upon Peshawar. Meanwhile the Sikh reinforcements who have been ordered thither, refuse, they say, to march.

— The only arrival yesterday was the Hindoe from Liverpool. She reports having seen eight vessels at sea making for Calcutta eight days ago. Among these we hope are the Agamoth and the Goodenough, which have now been overdone a whole fortnight. The Hindoe, which left Madras a month ago, is still missing. We hope the feeble state of health, with an extremely attenuated frame, but with unimpaired intellectual vigour up to his last illness. His fortune is estimated variously, but it is believed he has large investments in the British and Foreign countries, and we know that a twelvemonth since, one of the most intimate of his foreign friends expressed his belief that Howqua was then worth at least twenty-five millions of dollars; except a small portion of which he had laid out in his own industry and enterprise. His attack on Canton during the last war in 1841, considerably injured his health, the value of his Park houses and other estates which were then destroyed; amounted alone to one million of dollars, and Howqua used to affirm, that he was had indicted on him a local of one millions of dollars. His proportion of the Canton Bazaar was £200,000. It was after this event that he prayed the Emperor, to be permitted to retire from his position as a Hong Merchant, respectfully tendering at the same time what he called all his wealth, viz. 2,500,000 taels which he said, all belonged to him, from the Emperor's bounty, and requested the Imperial will to accord him such position thereof, as its heavenly benevolence deemed fit to maintain him during the wretched remnant of his life. This petition was refused.

It must however be clear, that the Chinese Government had the greatest confidence in Howqua, who to the last, retained an inveterate aversion to new customs and modern sciences, and was always with the sincerest and most devoted loyalty to the old corrupt system, by which his vast wealth was mainly accumulated.

Howqua was the guardian and controller of the Hong-shan and the organ of communication between the Government and the Foreign Merchants. He possessed vast power and influence among his countrymen, was a large land proprietor, and had founded and endowed a temple to Buddha in the suburbs of Canton. It was supposed that the refusal of Howqua's prayer to retire into private life, and the refusal to accede to the claims which the Government might have on his services at such a crisis, we believe, did not, but that the undue influence Howqua possessed, yet his enormous wealth and power, was the cause of his detention. The local Mandarins, and perhaps also some at Peking, were well aware that Howqua was made of questionable materials and as long as he was useful, they would not allow him to leave his position. It seems almost incredible, but not less true, that to the last, he directed his vast and complicated trade which almost comprised the whole of the Chinese commerce, and even facilitated with mercantile details connected with the trade of Foreign ports was truly astonishing, sound judgment, true prudence, every circumstance, and every detail, were distinguishing traits of his mercantile character.

By our countrymen Howqua was not liked, his predilections were American, and justly so, we think, seeing that he was indebted in an early stage of his career to a citizen of that country, for information he sought in vain from the English; and moreover the monopoly of the East India Company rendered an American association preferable in a pecuniary sense to any English connection.

It is alleged by his friends that Howqua would never consent to evade the duties, or smuggle any kind of goods, we doubt this, as he had been houses at Soochow, Ningpo, Shanghai, and other eminent cities in China, and we could easily see that he could successfully carry on his business there, with competitors who did smuggle whenever they had the opportunity, and with the notorious venality of the Authorities rendered quite the rule, rather than the exception.

In conclusion we are glad to record a gratifying fact which will enable us to give a more complete account of his life. Since the difficulties about the Opium Trade, he has wholly abstained from touching the "unclean thing." Directly or indirectly, he has uniformly refused again to touch it, and by this abstention he might have added millions upon millions to his treasure. This is no mean testimony to his patriotism, and his respect for the laws and regulations of his country, and it is a great credit to him as a Chinese conservative of the "purest ray virtue" the death of Howqua will perhaps be deemed by his sovereign and country, as a positive national calamity. Friend of China, Sept. 14.

THE OFFICIAL RECEPTION OF THE FRENCH CONSUL.

We learn by letters from Canton, that the charming Country House of Poon-Ting-Gun, has moved lately, for the scene of the presentation, Mr. Mayne, the Consul de Bati-Menton, the French Consul in China, of his credentials, to His Excellency the Viceroy of Canton.

This ceremony, which was preceded by several visits, to the French Consul, and Captain Forster Duplan, from the Kwangchow-Foo and other delegations from the Imperial Commissioner, and to which the Chinese Authorities seemed willing to give an éclat, as marked as it was novel, may be considered another progressive step in the events which have lately taken place. Towards 8 o'clock, on the morning of the 18th inst., two boats from the French Corvette Alouette, with their crews in full dress and carrying the national flag flying, left Canton, for the place of meeting. They contained the French Consul, Captain Forster Duplan, the Chancellor of the Consulate, eight Officers of the Corvette, an interpreter chosen by Captain F. D. J. A. Darrau, a French Merchant, and several other distinguished persons who had expressed a desire to be present at the ceremony.

After an hour's pull, amidst numbers of boats, the inhabitants of which, saw for the first time with curiosity and astonishment, so many French uniforms, they reached the House of Hon-Ting-Kuo. The large hall, where at once placed at the disposal of the Captain and the Consul, where they received a visit from a delegate of the Imperial Commissioner, the Kwangchow-Foo and several other Mandarins. At near the hour fixed upon, a message came from the Commissioner, by an Officer, wearing a Chrysanthemum badge, that he was prepared to receive the French Consul, the Consul de Bati-Menton, and the Captain, accompanied by these persons, already referred to, and preceded by a Mandarin, descended to the hall, where they were met by the Chinese Officers and a number of other functionaries wearing blue and white buttons.

After a little cordial conversation on both sides, the French Consul, presented his credentials, from the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, to His Excellency the Viceroy, who handed them, to the Imperial Commissioner, who, took note of, and returned them, to him, when this ceremony was concluded, many questions were put, concerning His Majesty, the King of the French, of France generally, and its Ministers. M. Guizot particularly, became the subject of conversation. This continued for more than an hour, and did not interrupt a delicious collation, which was served up by the Chinese Authorities to their numerous Guests.

The many marks of attention of which Captain Forster Duplan, the Consul, was the objects, in the course of nearly two hours, and the questions which composed the sittings of the numerous Mandarins, would lead us to suppose that an important change, is beginning to operate, in their ideas with reference to Europeans. Such a disposition, managed with care, would appear to augur an approach to an entire friendly understanding between the Civil Empire and the various European Governments.—Commercialist—The Friend of China, Supplement, Sept. 14.

Drachon Thongki, A Magistrate of the North West Provinces, and I was, next week. We do not like to publish them without our own remarks.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CAPT. NICHOLSON.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir,—Under the Weekly Epitome of news of the 9th Inst. you state that the officers who served with honour under Lord Auckland were subsequently proscribed, there remain unwarded only Col. Outram and Major McGregor and Pottinger. May I therefore be permitted to ask is not Captain Peter Nicolson one of the officers who rendered eminent services during the Afghan campaign?

I am, Sir,

Yours obediently,

Joseph Nicolson.

The omission of Capt. Nicolson's name was quite accidental. We have good reason to believe that the present Government General will not be long in placing on the political staff, one who has committed no indiscretion but that of having served with zeal, fidelity and honour, the Government of the time. Capt. Nicolson will cease to regret our having omitted his name whilst he has been the means of informing him that his services live in the remembrance of a Native of great intelligence in the Ultime Thang of Dargah the Jungle Mahals.—Editor.

MEMBER, TULLOH AND CO.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir,—On Monday last the 19th inst. a gentleman was named in the Calcutta Court of Requests for a debt said to be due by him to Messrs. Tulloh and Co. The gentleman, it appeared, declined to discharge one of the Bills of Messrs. Tulloh and Co. when presented to him on the 24th October last, because it was not accompanied with the necessary Receipt or Receipt, as the other Hills were, for the article said to have been supplied to him a year ago, viz. in November 1845. The case came on before Ramsey Day. The defendant, together with an attorney at law, and other gentlemen present, strongly urged that it would have been altogether preposterous to pay a demand made against him after the lapse of such a length of time, without the satisfaction of seeing and taking back his receipt or voucher for the article for which the claim is made against him, but Ramsey Day J. ruled that it was not necessary that the Bill against the gentleman should have been accompanied with the requisite voucher or receipt, as it was not the practice with Messrs. Tulloh and Co. to send invariably such receipts or vouchers for articles supplied by them. After saying so Ramsey Day J. entered his Colleagues' room, Mr. Bristow, and on coming out soon again, said that his Colleagues Mr. Bristow fully approved of his judgment, and accordingly Ramsey Day J. decreed the case with costs against the defendant.

Should you, Sir, think as I do, that this is a palpable instance of an act of abuse in the administration of justice in the Calcutta Court of Requests, you will please to notice the case in the Friend of India for public information.

I remain, Yours faithfully,

AN INDEPENDENT OF CALCUTTA.

Calcutta, 18th Nov. 1848.

Our correspondent will excuse us for not exactly agreeing with him. It appears that the receipts or vouchers of a number of Bills were presented, one was not. It is not reasonable to suppose that it was lost, than that the charge was fictitious. If the object had been the receipt of the article, that he had denied the receipt of it, but it appears that he refused payment simply because there was no receipt. A receipt is valuable as conclusive evidence, but there may be other evidences not less valid. It is not reasonable to suppose that the party to have been aggrieved if he had stated his contentions belief that he had never received the goods. Tulloh and Co. must sell some two hundred thousand lots a year; and in a country where natives have been intolerably careless from the time beyond which the memory of man extendeth now, if one fourth the vouchers were lost, we should only be surprised at this extreme moderation of negligence. Indeed to us, who know something of the country, it appears almost as marvellous how Tulloh and Co. continue to get on from year to year, without breaking down altogether as—to compare small things with great—how Napoleon's Commissariat fed 400,000 on the banks of the Vistula.—Ed.

THE ANHARS.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir,—You may remember that about two years ago Government, having been convinced of the urgent necessity of improving the system of the revenue department under the Collectors of land revenue, appointed, by the suggestion of Mr. Parkes, then a member of the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium, a Commission of Enquiry, to inquire into the system was made experimental and Government resolved to itself the option of extending it to all the Eastern districts of the country, where a reasonable degree of success should be known to mark its progress. But, Sir, you will be glad to hear that by the exertions of such efficient officers as Messrs. Falcous, Dunsford, and others in the districts of 24 Pergunnahs, Purnea, Munger, Hooghly, Burdwan, Nadroah, Banchoor, Muzaffargarh, Jessore and Backergunge has been raised so double the sum realized by the Collectors of land revenue. This is owing to the efficiency of the system, for, every district, being under the supervision of four or more responsible Durghas, ending under the guidance of an Assistant and a Superintendent who receive the periodical instructions of the Commissioner, must yield a revenue proportionate to the increased local vigilance by which it is superintended. After much brilliant effects, when we see Government constantly depriving revenue, illicit sales of excisable articles prevented, oppression on the subjects discontinued, and a regular road pointed out for the transaction of business, you will not doubt the efficiency of the system and the wisdom of the opinion that I have expressed. I might not be able to delay the transfer to the Commissionaries of the other Zillahs, and Calcutta, in particular, which has suffered most from an inefficient system in spite of its peculiar convenience for the realisation of a large amount, and has always proved detrimental to the revenue and the subjects. I have, however, no objection to being allowed to address you on this subject by an article I read some time ago in turning over a number of the Bengal Spectator in which it is stated that Government intends the transfer proposed. It may be the case, as I have cause to believe it is, but I have no objection to my views being published in the year so very convenient for effecting the transfer, you may recollect that when the experimental system was introduced the new settlement was effected in November which all experienced persons acknowledge to be the most appropriate time.

Yours truly,

James Keith

Calcutta, Nov. 24, 1843.

P. S. Furthermore, Government ought to transfer other districts without delay because the officiating Commissioner from whom originated the report to Government on the subject may have an opportunity of carrying his views into execution.

THE ASIAN STEAMER

To the Editor of the Friend of India

DEAR Sir: With reference to an article in the last issue of your paper, permit me to correct a statement it contains that the Aspen Steamer has been found utterly unsuited for the navigation of the Berthaupoote, for which she was originally intended. The statement is incorrect, and it is a pity to be so. The Aspen has made two successful voyages up the Berthaupoote, to the extreme point the purposes of the Company required, and on the last occasion in September 1862, when commanded by Captain Smith, the Aspen proceeded some miles below Dikho Mook, being considered by the natives to be the best of all the boats ever before in the district. The passengers and crew warrant the assertion that the vessel is suited for the navigation of that river. The last trip made by the Aspen to Allahabad afforded another proof of her perfect efficiency for river navigation, the period of her absence from Calcutta being only 10 days, including a detention of a day and a half at Dikho Mook, and two days at Allahabad. The Government Steamer occupied ten days more in the trip.

With regard to your remarks upon the advantages afforded to the public by Government in receiving freight at the moderate rate of 1 R. 8a. per foot, whereas the Assam Company charge the exorbitant price of 2 Rupees, permit me to say it is very seldom the public have the opportunity of securing tonnage at that rate, the average of the Government sales being far above it, but I am aware that it has happened singularly enough on the two occasions of the Assam Company's Steamer being advertised for Allahabad, that the public have been able to obtain tonnage in the Government boats at the minimum rate of 1 R. 8a. per foot, although the demand did, I am told, on the first of these occasions exceed the means of supply.

I am, Dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,
B. H. BUCKLAND,
Secretary Assam Company.

Calcutta, 20th November, 1843.

WEAGUEPOOL CITIZEN

In addition to the sums published in the Friend of India of the 19th October last, the following contributions are gratefully acknowledged to have been received in aid of the fund raised for building a Church at Bhagulpore.

From Alabama		From Pennsylvania
F. Currie,	100	W. T. Taylor,	5
R. Lowther,	50	T. Sandy,	2
A. Baslin,	40	Mrs. G. Palmer,	2
W. H. Smith,	30	W. H. Smith,	2
I. Oakes,	5	G. W. Brown,	5
T. Perry Woodcock,	25	G. Cooper,	5
M. D. de. de.	5	J. J. Cove,	2
W. H. Smith,	5	W. H. Smith,	2
I. Bolland, Jr.,	5	S. E. B.	5
R. Burton Taylor,	5	I. Brandt,	5
Major Genl. Watson,	5	W. H. L.	2
W. H. L.	5	C. Cove,	5
G. F. Edmundson,	25	C. Slater,	5
W. Johnson,	5	F. B. Perry,	2
R. S. Threlk,	12	R. Barnes,	5
W. H. Smith,	5	W. H. Smith,	2
G. M. Ommassey,	10	W. M. Gray,	5
E. S. B.	5	A. A. Killebrew,	10
W. S. P.	5	Geo. Martin,	10
G. F. Sharp,	5	J. C. Smith,	5
G. F. Sharp,	10

From Mangley.		From Tirkel.
Through W. Van		E. V. Irwin,	50
Antler, Kas.		K. I. C. Richard,
Not a part of	15	son,	50
Not particular ed.
Add. from California.		From other friends.
Mrs. Ellerton,	20	G. Leek (Kish), ..	50
J. Leslie Russell, ...	50	A Friend (Din.), ..	10
G. P. Powis,	50	E. B. Garrett,
Orifliths,	50	(Beaulah),	50
W. J. Bampton, ...	10	Rev. W. Winchester, (Berh.) ..	50
	180

From the officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates of M. B. 68d Regiment not only in the view of promoting the accomplishment of their duty, but also as evidence of their own appreciation of their gratitude, however inadequately, for their kind and generous concern and hospitality experienced from the gentlemen at Bangalore, on the occasion of the memorable disaster, were presented the Hissed Quarters of the Regiment on the 6th September 1942.
Lieut. Col. The Honourable T. Ashburnham,	50 0 0
Major W. C. Bead,	22 0 0
Captain G. H. Clark,	10 0 0
T. D. Price,	10 0 0
S. W. Graves,	10 0 0
G. P. Gibson,	10 0 0
Lieut. Henry Wells,	10 0 0
A. M. Herbert,	10 0 0
W. J. McAlvan,	10 0 0
L. B. Tyler,	10 0 0
K. E. R. Flood,	10 0 0
S. H. Hillier,	10 0 0
Lieut. & Capt. J. A. L. Jones,	10 0 0
Lieut. & Qr. Master William Grey,	10 0 0
Asst. Surgeon S. McV. Lloyd,	10 0 0
General Hospital Secretary,	20 0 0
No. 1 Ditto,	10 0 0
No. 2 ditto,	18 14 0
No. 3 ditto,	20 0 0
No. 4 ditto,	10 0 0
S. ditto,	15 12 0
G. ditto,	9 12 0
H. ditto,	9 12 0
Light Company,	17 12 0

The first stone of the Church, for building which the foregoing sums have been contributed, was laid by the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Calcutta and Metropolitan of India, in the presence of a numerous assembly of the station, on the 4th Nov. 1843.

DEO SOLI GLORIA.

EUROPE

RELIGIOUS

THE CHURCH AND STATE: QUESTION ON THE CONTINENT.—We adverted, in our last Number, to the recent Manifesto of the Archbishop of Cologne upon the subject of the Episcopate of the Church and the State. Our readers must have in remembrance the long dispute carried on by that Prelate with the Prussian Government, which terminated in his deposition. The questions raised have, however, by no means been set at rest. So far from it that the ragous Archbishop, whom the Prussian Police dragged from his See, in 1837, has, from the place of his exile, raised them anew, and traced them to their first principles.

The States of the 9th inst. contains an analytical notice of that important publication, of which we shall avail ourselves, in order to put our readers in possession of the present state of the Church - State question, we between the Civil Government and British Hierarchy in the Continental kingdom.

The work is entitled, "Of Peace Between Church and State, followed by Remarks on the position of Jews published at Berlin." By CLEMENS AUGUSTUS DRAKE DE VINCINGHEM, Archbishop of Cologne. 8vo. (2nd edition.) Munster, 1843. Two editions were disposed of in a few weeks. It is not, however, to be regarded as a publication got up on the spur of occasion. The Rt. Rev. Writer affirms, that it is the fruit of the meditations of more than twenty years, during which he has applied his mind to the task of presenting ideas in the shape most likely to be comprehensible. It, remarks our Contemporary, this stamp is to be received as the intervention of His cousin, it gives an unexpected significance to the events which have recently taken place on the banks of the Rhine; and if, as is not improbable, his present publication has been conceived with a view to the publication of a new edition of the policy of the Holy See will hereafter be based, in its relations with Prussia and the other Protestant Governments, The Archbishop of Cologne has been punished by combining the secular and ecclesiastical authorities as a society within the State. The emperor of the State, the more palpable the absurdity, according to his view, of this representation of the Church. "What!" he exclaims, "the One Church, the Church of Christ, the Church of the Father, the Church of the Son, the Church of the Holy Spirit, the Church of the great eternal Father! That which is immovable contained within that which is essentially and incessantly moveable!" If the Church is not deus in se within the State, The learned Prelate points us to the Church disorganised. The Church is not deus in se within the State, the same, while tribes and nations flourish and disappear one after another. This is the Church ideal of the Papist and the Protestant. Its catholicity and its perpetuity are alike delusions; but the Church of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, the Church of the sublime reality.

The great problem which the Archbishop undertakes to solve is, how to maintain peace between the two conflicting parties, and to make it appear to both persons appears to him to be the natural successors of this present day, the Rationalists, who have no other basis in the grades of representation, the activity of the Church, and the representation of the Church, which the better to disseminate their principles, by which they labour to subvert all Government and all social order, and to make the Church itself the Church, an obstacle to their designs, aim at destroying its influence, particularly by gaining possession of the schools, which she sets up in the people.

Even where the rulers, or a large portion of the subjects, do not belong to the Catholic Church, Government is bound to maintain the rights of the Church, and to order to know what these are, we must ascertain what are the limits of those of the Church. These limits, however, are not the same in all cases. Thus, in the case of the Catholic Church, we cannot require the Church to maintain whatever laws may be passed to make, but only to those which result from the very nature of a State, and which are necessary to the maintenance of the laws of the land (legislation), which, emanating from the constituted authorities, have no connection with the Church, and which, therefore, when there is any conflict between the Church and

[illegible]

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 463. VOL. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 30th. 1843.

[Price 3 Cts. Rn. weekly, or 8s. Rn. yearly. U paid.]

GWALIOR AND THE PUJARI.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief reached Agra on the 16th. The troops composing the Army of Exercise, the scene of whose manoeuvres will lie beyond the Jumna, in the territories of Scindia, are rapidly marching to their respective rendezvous, and the whole army will probably be ready to take the field by the beginning of December. Nothing has transpired regarding the plan of the campaign, nor is it exactly known whether Sir Hugh Gough will take the command in person, or indeed whether there will after all be any necessity for a campaign at all. The forts of the Chambul will not be possible for another month, but the distance the troops will be required to traverse, is so inconsiderable, that no disadvantage would result from a delay of four weeks. Lord Ellenborough left Calcutta on the 23th, and though the vehicle which conveys him is calculated to travel at the rate of six miles an hour, yet the long period allowed for halting every day, will probably bring on the 10th of December before his Lordship is at the side of the Commander-in-Chief. We may perhaps not be wrong in our conjecture that nothing will be done before Lord Ellenborough's arrival at Agra.

Of the state of affairs at Gwalior, there seems to be no authentic account. We were told some days since that the capture of the Khaggar by the troops would obviate the necessity of an armed interference, because they were determined to submit to the demands of the British Government. We were next informed that the Regent had succeeded in drawing over a part of the troops to her party, and had a respectable army at her disposal, which was likely to try conclusions with the insurgents. The last accounts however state that the Hooe was ready to accede to the wishes of our Government, but that the troops were unwilling to be disbanded and dismantled, than which nothing can be more natural. It is certain however that the proposal of our Government, which if admitted, would extinguish the independence of the State, must be equally distasteful to all those likely to be affected by them; equally unpleasant to the Regent who will become a cypher, and to the troops who will be turned adrift, to beg or to steal. Those proposals have not been received at the Durbar in such a spirit as to encourage the hope of a peaceful negotiation of authority. It is just possible that, when it is seen that our terms are backed by the argument of three armies, and that the Governor General is so completely in earnest, as to have refused to Agra in person, they may be viewed in a different light. The Mahabats however may yet show fight, and resolve to make one stand for independence before they bend to the force of circumstances. Ten years ago, the army consisted of 14,000 Infantry, 10,000 cavalry and 250 pieces of Artillery independent of the garrisons in forts. The whole army of the state may possibly amount to 30,000 men, and the British troops about to be assembled with an eye to Gwalior, cannot fall very far short of this number.

At Lahore, a complete change has been effected by the arrival of Raja Gulab Singh with 20,000 mountaineers. It was not believed that he would venture to leave his domain in Jambou, and his departure from thence there great confidence in his own strength. On his arrival at the Capital, all power seems to have passed into his hands by a natural transition; and Herra Singh's authority at once ceased. He is therefore de facto the ruler of the Punjab, while Duleep Singh, the nominal sovereign, remains without power. He has peremptorily refused to yield to the insolent demands of the Sikh soldiery for more pay and gratuities; if they continue refractory, he has the means of coercing them. A strong Government appears therefore to have been at length established there, which will make itself feared at home and respected abroad, and which is fully capable of sustaining all the responsibilities of sovereignty. If our Government has made any proposals to the Sikhs inimical to their independence, or derogatory to their honour, they could not have been made at a more inauspicious juncture. Gulab Singh is known to be any thing but favourable to the British. He is now in fine fettle at the seat of authority, surrounded by a bold and brave army, and is little likely to brook a proposition which shall curtail the independence of the Punjab. To any such overture he would probably return a haughty reply, such as the British lion has not been in the habit of receiving without resentment. This may precipitate a war, which would admit of little or no defence, for the vigorous administration of Gulab Singh will check any attempt to make incursions into our own provinces—the only ground on which our interference can be based.

THE NOVEMBER MAIL, after having taught us a great moral lesson of patience for five days, at length made its appearance on Friday morning last. The intelligence it brings is insignificant. The Imperial Parliament was not sitting and the Irish Parliament had not been elected. Her Majesty returned to England after her visit to France, and immediately started in her new steam yacht for Belgium, to visit her Uncle, the King. She was received in all the towns she passed through with the utmost enthusiasm. These visits, independent of their beneficial effect on Her Majesty's health, will probably produce a good political effect, and contribute to soften down those national antipathies, which when left without any check, ripen into hatred, and lay the foundation of hostilities.

The royal agitation in Ireland does not appear to have abated. Some of the papers state that the meetings had been less numerously attended, but the truth of this assertion may well be questioned. O'Connell has not shamed a jot of his audacity or his self confidence. On the contrary he appears to be gradually preparing his arrangements, with consummate skill, for the assembly of his Parliament, and will be ready to call it together, though under any circumstances, a little before the time fixed for the assembling of the Parliament of Great Britain. He has gone too far to recede without risking, for ever the loss of his honour and consequence; and there appears no reason to doubt that he will make an effort to carry into effect the plan he has been so long hatching, and not confine his exertions to mere speeches. The honour of his followers does not appear to have been in the smallest degree diminished; and the expectation of Her Majesty's Ministers that it was too violent to last, and that itself, it would gradually die out, has been realised.

The disturbances in Wales have increased in violence. The animosity of the insurgents is no longer confined to the tolls, but embraces every tax, civil and ecclesiastical, against all of which they have declared open war. The country still continues to be occupied with troops, who are however altogether unable to extinguish the outrages which are daily committed. It has been proposed—so say the papers—to proclaim martial law through three counties. Martial law will only tend to inflame the minds of the affected, and to swell their numbers. Though the more peaceably disposed inhabitants are opposed to the lawless violence which has reigned for some time, there is evidently a general sympathy throughout the country with the people, and a universal impression that the institutions under which they live are oppressive, and require to be altered. Some measures of a healing nature must be adopted by Parliament before tranquillity can be restored.

Scotland, hitherto so peaceful, has become the scene of violence. In some parishes, the induction of Ministers in the room of those who have seceded, has been openly resisted, and the public authorities set at defiance. It has been necessary even to call in the aid of the military. These events have given far more distress to the Free Protestant Ministers than to those who remain in the Kirk. Dr. Chalmers and his friends have done every thing in their power to repress this burst of opposition, but the old spirit of the Covenanters appears to be up, and it will not be easily allayed.

But while the three kingdoms are thus agitated from causes altogether dissimilar, England appears to enjoy profound repose. Trade is on all hands admitted to be reviving; the manufactures are no longer idle, and the general aspect of things seems to denote the return of comfort, though not of plenty.

Abroad, there is little deserving of notice. There has been another revolution in Spain, the object of which it is not so easy to perceive, but it appears that the party which is anxious for the restoration of Espartero to power, gains strength. In Greece, there has been a bloodless revolution, and the people have compelled King Otto to dismiss the foreigner whom he had employed in the public service to an extent which excited national irritation, and to place Natives in their stead. There is positively nothing from America, beyond the discovery of a new animal, in shape like a Kangaroo, with horns on its head and which the Indians call ka-ko-ka-ki; and the commencement of the excitement which attends the election of a new President.

THE MAGISTRACY.—We publish, without some misgivings, a letter on the subject of the Magistracy from the North West Provinces. Our correspondent says that the Police in that division of the Presidency is as inefficient as in the Lower Provinces; but that the defect arises not from the anomalous and fatal union of the functions of the Police and of the Criminal Judge in the same individual, but from the want of adequate rewards for meritorious exertions. When he says that "interest, intrigue and personal acquaintance outweigh a thousand times the best services," he brings a charge against the administration which cannot be admitted without convincing and multiplied proofs.

But our administration in the East is only free from this charge of favouritism compared with the pure government of England, and the purer government of America, where one of the Presidents, not many years since turned out no fewer than three thousand of the functionaries who had been appointed by his predecessor, under the plea that he could not work so well with another man's tools as with his own. During the last two administrations and the present, there has certainly been a most anxious desire to improve the management of public affairs, by giving promotion only to men of acknowledged ability. The brightest page in Lord Ellenborough's Indian History is that which records the conscientious impartiality with which he has distributed his public patronage. We have occasion to know that he has in various instances turned a deaf ear on the recommendations of his own nearest relatives; and that they have ceased to importune so impracticable a Governor General. His appointments, with perhaps one or two exceptions, have also been as much distinguished by their judgment as their impartiality. We have no such scenes now as those connected under the good Lord Hastings, who on one occasion is said to have sent for his Military Secretary and directed him to fill up three vacancies with the names of three officers who had recently distinguished themselves in the Pindaree war. On the Secretary's leaving the room, he was sent for by Lady Hastings and informed that she had promised the berths to three Aryahiri cousins. He returned to his Lordship and mentioned his new instructions, and enquired whom he was to obey. Tradition goes on to say that Lord Hastings with his characteristic gallantry, replied, "The Lady to be sure; could you doubt it?" This latter part of the story is, we hope, fabulous; but the anecdote, even without it, will show the "Magistrate of the North West Provinces," that matters were infinitely worse in past times. Perhaps he may also find on further examination that we have in India an impartial and even meritorious distribution of office, as the infirmity of human nature will admit of.

We cannot bring ourselves to believe that under Lord Ellenborough's administration of the North West Provinces, there was cause for asserting that "interest, intrigue and personal acquaintance outweigh a thousand times the best services." Mr. Clerk's administration, which had existed little more than three months when he was disabled from public business, has been too short to allow of our forming any fixed opinion of it; but his established character ought to be regarded as an ample security against the abuse of his patronage. And while Mr. Thomson continues to administer the internal affairs of those Provinces, we are confident that his choice of men will be governed by the purest principles and the greatest discrimination. With this opinion of the recent administration of the North West Provinces, perhaps we may be censured for giving admission to a letter which brings so heavy and in our opinion so groundless a charge against it. But it is advantageous for our readers to know the opinion entertained of their managers by those who are employed under them. It may not be without its use to show them that, however anxious they have been to consult the public interests in the distribution of office, there may be men of ability whom they have overlooked, and men of showy but unsubstantial merit whom they have incautiously promoted.

We think, with our correspondent, that the Police of the North Western Provinces is very deficient; that is, that crimes of a very heinous nature are perpetrated, and that no whisper of them reaches the Magistrate on the bench. The confessions of the Buddack robbers, which were noticed about a twelve month ago, show that they have ranged without control through those provinces, almost from the time when they came into our possession, committing the most atrocious robberies, in large bands; and that the Magistrates have remained in comparative ignorance of this dangerous confederacy and of its doings. They inform us, that no sooner did Major Sleeman and his Thug establishment take the field against them than they found the country too hot for themselves, and sought refuge in the independent states around us. This inefficiency of our Magistacy has arisen from that vicious organisation which makes its leading object the trial and punishment of dacoits, and not their capture. Hence the chances of their escape exceed ten times the chance of detection, while the native officers connive at their outrages through fear or venality, and the people suffer in silent sulkiness. For one instance in which the Police is rendered inefficient because the Magistrate's services are not suitably rewarded, there are ten in which it is useless because the thief taker is one and the same with the thief catcher. Let merit be rewarded to its fullest extent, and the noblest spirit of emulation be thereby diffused through the service, still, while we continue to be without a separate Police under active European control, there will be little improvement. Of this our correspondent may find a clear example in the district conventionally attached to Bengal, but which is naturally part of the North West Provinces, where Thirath. It is under a merit fostering administration, with which "interest, intrigue and personal acquaintance" count for nothing. It has been intrusted to the best Magistrate in the Lower Provinces, whose merits have been acknowledged by Government to an extent which might make him the object of envy. Yet he acknowledges that he can do nothing for the improvement of the Police under the present system; and it is quite possible that there are many crimes which he has undetected in his district, as in that which lies immediately to the west of it, under a "merit despising" administration.

APPEALS TO THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—The last Mail informs us that the question of Appeals to the Privy Council has been brought before the Court of Proprietors in a motion by Mr. Lewis, which was withdrawn on the production of papers by the Chairman of the Court of Directors. They showed that the subject was then under negotiation with Her Majesty's Ministers.

The 3d and 4th William the IV. Chapter 41, enacted that, if the parties in appeals to the Privy Council took up steps to bring them to a termination within a given time, the Court of Directors should be compelled to conduct them at the public expense. It would be difficult to discover in the most barbarous legislation of the most barbarous age of England any act more palpably unwise and absurd in principle or more mischievous in practice. For what can be more absurd than to lay on the Government of the country the responsibility of carrying forward a private suit, when the appellants have ceased to feel any anxiety regarding it, or to charge the public revenue with the expense of an action which the litigants are no longer able to conduct? Yet a Whig Ministry, in the thirty-third year of the nineteenth century, did actually place this judicious enactment on the statute books. In order to enhance the absurdity of the measure, and to make the public purse chargeable to the fullest extent with the expense of private gain, they soon after reduced the amount for which an appeal might be lodged, from 2000£ to 1000£.

The consequence has been such as might have been expected. In the ten years which have elapsed since the passing of the Act, the Company have been compelled, under orders in Council, to bring to a hearing scarcely an appeal case, at an expense of 132,820£—more than fifteen lakhs of Rupees. Of this sum they have only recovered 24,191£, so that the revenues of India have been saddled during ten years with an expense of nearly thirteen lakhs of Rupees—enough to cover Bengal with Commercial Roads—to enable a few Baboos to enjoy the ineffable luxury of protracted litigation. When we thus see lakhs of Rupees squandered to pamper the vitiated appetite of litigants, and compare this profusion in a bad cause with the penurious mode in which these same revenues are doled out, pie by pie, for public improvements, it is difficult to restrain one's indignation.

It appears from the able memorandum of the Court of Directors which we have appended to this article, that of sixty-three cases, the decrees of the Sudder Court has been reversed only in twelve; in thirty-seven, it has been affirmed; and fourteen cases have been compromised. In fact, the Act is used in four instances out of five, only to prolong litigation, and to distress the successful party by obliging him either to forego the possession of the property decreed to him, or to give security to its full amount; and, through the wisdom of Parliament, this game has been played at the public expense. No legislative body has, we believe, ever succeeded in discovering a more effectual mode of defeating the ends of substantive justice, or offered a more tempting premium on litigation.

The information elicited by this discussion is not without instruction. Mr. Lewis stated, that the whole sum which had been recovered as legal costs from the parties to seventy suits, had not exceeded 24,191£. Yet, if the laws at Bombay and Madras correspond with those of Bengal, security to the extent of 70,000£ had been actually taken from the appellants. The security exacted by the Sudder Court, was 1000£, in each case; the sum realized was only 343£. How are we to account for the fact that the securities which the Mofussil Courts had verified, and declared to be good and sufficient, turned out eventually to be worth only one third of the value for which they had been taken? It is just possible that in the twelve cases, in which the decision of the Sudder Court was reversed, and the appellant was victorious, the costs may have been thrown on the respondent, or losing party; but if this was the case, then the security taken from the appellant is in fact no security at all, for every decision is liable to be thus reversed. But even in this supposition will not account satisfactorily for the inadequate outturn of the securities which had been taken with the express view of holding the Court of Directors free from all pecuniary loss.

But the Court of Directors are not the first in the field for the protection of the public interests committed to them. The security formerly required of appellants in India to cover costs, was 1000*Rs*. It appears, however, that the costs have on the average been 3183*Rs*. in each case, and the Court now seek to be relieved from the loss thus entailed on the Indian revenue.

But how does it happen that the Chairman of the Court of Directors in his reply to Mr. Lewis, omitted all mention of the efforts which had been made by the local authorities in India to remedy the evil? In the month of November 1842, the Sudder Dewany Court, with the sanction of the Government of Bengal, declared that no appeal should be received unless security was given for costs to the extent of 2,500*Rs*. sterling, or 317*Rs*. beyond the average charge incurred in each case. It is not to be supposed that the Chairman of the Court of Directors would have omitted all mention of so important a fact in the course of the debate, if he had been acquainted with it. It is evident therefore that he knew nothing of the matter whatever. That the Chairman should know nothing of the Circular Orders of the Sudder Court is neither new nor singular; indeed there is no evidence that those documents are ever read by the Directors. But has the Chairman not read the Indian Journals in which the new orders of the Sudder Court were alluded to? Has he not read the Friend of India of the 21st December last, in which this subject was fully discussed? We fear it will be found that Lord Ellenborough's contempt for the Indian Press is the only part of his Lordship's conduct which the Directors consider worthy of approval and imitation.

Joking apart, however, we are happy to see the subject taken up in earnest by the Directors, and we hope they will push Her Majesty's Ministers till they have saved us this iniquitous outlay. We believe Lord Glenelg to be a statesman of the highest principle and leniency; yet we cannot but suspect that those who put it into his head to make the revenues of India chargeable with the cost of all cases of appeal, and to reduce the value of appealable suits, from 5, to 1000*Rs*. and thus multiply them five fold, had another view rather to the advantage of the legal profession at home, than to the Natives of India. It certainly benefits the former to the extent of 15,000*Rs*. a year. It is very doubtful whether it confers any corresponding benefit on India; or indeed any benefit at all. It appears that of forty-nine cases brought to a hearing in the course of ten years, the Privy Council has decided that twelve were unjustly decided by the Courts in India, that is one in four. That body has therefore redressed a little more than one out of legal injustice committed among eighty millions of people in a twelvemonth, and for this remedy the revenues of India have paid "One lakh, twenty-seven thousand, three hundred and fifty Rupees!" Although it has been said that justice is no inestimable a jewel as to be cheap at any price, this must refer only to the individual who is so fortunate as to obtain it, not those who have to pay for it without enjoying it. And we really question, whether it would not have produced a greater national benefit to have laid out this sum in local improvements, than to have devoted it to the private advantage of a few litigious suitors. The following is the memorandum of the Court:

The memorandum respecting the system of appeals from the Courts of Sudder Adawts in India, to the Queen in Council, was next read, from which we give the following extract:—

"The operation of the system, therefore, has been, that in every case of appeal brought to a hearing, both the appellant and respondent have been represented by the Company; that for that purpose a very heavy charge has been imposed upon the revenues of India; and that these persons to apprehend that the right of appeal has been frequently used as a mere obstruction to the course of justice. It is not believed that in any other country the assistance of the Government is given to promote litigation, or that in any other system of judicature the interests of the opposing parties in a suit are maintained by one and the same representative."

"An appeal which the appellant takes on measures whatever to prosecute, can be viewed as involving more than the means of preventing the execution of the decree in the respondent's favour; and the natural and just consequences seem to be, that, without application by the respondent, or by the Company on his behalf, it should, as of course, after a certain lapse of time, and after due notice, be struck off the file for non-prosecution."

"It is true that in twelve cases the decree of the Sudder Court has been reversed; but in the 37 cases affirmed, the enforced prosecution of the appeals through the Company's agency has entailed nothing but expense, and therefore, injustice. In other respects, the results would have been the same, if three or six months they had all been dismissed for non-prosecution. Another species of injustice and oppression, may have been effected in the fourteen cases which were compromised, if the respondents were driven into a compromise from the apprehension of similar consequences."

"As, under the foregoing considerations, it appears that the present system of appeals from the Sudder Courts in India to her Majesty in Council rests on no sound principle, and is at variance, with the practice of all British colonies, and as its operation has been attended with heavy expense and with other injurious consequences, it is submitted, that so much of the act as provides for appeals being brought to a hearing by the Company should be repealed, and that appeals from India, as elsewhere, should be left to be carried on by the parties themselves, with a distinct notice to the appellant in every case, that if not prosecuted within a time to be fixed the appeal will be dismissed."

ISLAND STRAM NAVIGATION.—Mr. Buckland's letter reached us too late last week to admit of our offering any remarks upon it. Indeed, the necessity of any comment has been in a great measure removed by the reduction of the freight which the Assam Company has made, from 2 Rupees the Cubic foot to 1 Rupee 8 annas. We have not the vanity to attribute this judicious modification to any observation of the Directors of the Society; and we congratulate them on having adopted a rule which will recommend them to the patronage of what is usually called a "discerning public." Since this alteration has been made, it would be perfectly superfluous to dwell on the absurdity of offering the same article at an advance of thirty-three per cent. under the idea of competition, or to suppose that a minimum freight of two Rupees would be more beneficial to the public than one of a Rupee and a half. We are not in the habit of taking credit to ourselves in our humble labours for the public benefit, because the public would we apprehend be disposed, rather to abstract from than to increase our stock of credit, but on such an occasion as the present, we should not allow any feeling of modesty to interfere between us and our just reward. We therefore lay claim to the gratitude of the community of the Ditch for having clearly and scientifically explained the True Theory of Competition.

The Assam Company deserve the public thanks in a far higher degree than we do, and that for three things. First, for having reduced the freight to One Rupee Eight annas. Secondly, for having resolved not to put up the freight to auction, but to register applications in the order of their receipt. Thirdly, for having made no distinction between the freight of millinery and of literature. When the auction system was resorted to some four years ago by the Government of British India, it was said to be adopted simply as a temporary expedient, to prevent the imputation of injudicious demand for freight exceeded the support the Superintendent was unable to wish of all, or to make any select the charge of partiality, the freight to auction. Those who bid highest obtained, and thus two objects were accomplished; Government appeared perfectly impartial, and filled its pockets with the wages of impartiality. But it was distinctly given out at the time, though not under the solemnity of a pledge, that this expedient, which was as disagreeable to Government as it was profitable, should cease at no distant time; and that additional vessels should be laid on, without delay, to meet the public exigencies. But strange to say, although sufficient time has elapsed since the augmentation of the price, to have built twenty vessels, the increase of the number has not been to such an extent as to remove the distressing necessity of selling freight by public outcry. Appearances are at all times deceitful, perhaps never more so than on the present occasion, but it does appear as though Government had acted on the calculation that it would be more advantageous for the state—whatever it might be for the public—to obtain higher freight with fewer vessels, than reasonable freight by a larger outlay for additional vessels. It is apparently upon this principle that the expense of new steamers has been saved. We may however be wrong in our conjecture; and the continued deficiency in the supply of tonnage by Government, after the demand for it has been made apparent, may arise from the difficulty of diverting funds required for political purposes into this channel. But in this case the necessity of providing the means of commercial transport through other agency than that of the State, is only rendered more palpable.

As it regards the difference made in the public steamers between the charge for conveying Millinery and Literature, it was manifest, that certain articles, such as metals, must be charged by weight and not by their cubic contents; and it was necessary to draw some line of distinction between light and heavy goods. Unfortunately, this line was drawn just at the limit which excluded books from the more advantageous freight of articles taken by measurement; and have therefore been charged at a much higher rate than articles of less specific gravity. What ever tends to interrupt the circulation of books through the Presidency, we consider as most invidious; and we rejoice therefore that the Assam Company makes no distinction between binnets for the ladies and books for the gentlemen.

The Assam Company is now engaged in a truth a rival; and we rejoice at the competition. Government nobly took the lead in this enterprise and demonstrated the feasibility of conveying goods by steam from the port of Calcutta to the marts in the interior; but it is impossible for the state to supply all the tonnage required for commercial purposes; and the undertaking should be relinquished at the earliest practicable moment to private enterprise. It has been said that the Government Steamers would have yielded no return but for the treasure freight which they were loaded. The Assam Steamers will speedily show whether this idea was erroneous or not. But the transport of goods by steam vessels enterprise has so much talent and zeal been to be generally beneficial to mercantile interests, embarked as in that of the Native News must be reduced, if possible, to a Rupee the Cu-pany to decide, for the Directors of that Com-pany to it, upon an average of experi-ments voyages, whether this can be done or not. improvements which have been made sleep of ages, it must have the spirit stirring of vessels, we should think Gazette; yet the nation sleeps on as in the days of Vikramaditya. Let us fancy for a moment the night to this moderate mode, and a same stimulus to have been thrown among seek will scarcely be sufficient for the growing demands of the country.

THE BENGALIAN SECTATOR IS DEAD. The ly employed on the Hindoos, and how different would have been the result. We are sorry, very little more than a year, and though their object story that the Spectator is dead, both for its was not gain, they have felt it prudent to deat own sake, and for its influence on future efforts; on an undertaking which entailed a positive but we are not sorry it is dead before Mr. loss on them. George Thompson leaves the country. It will

The object of the Journal was to discuss sub-jects connected with the welfare and improve-ment of the country. It was conducted with whom his eloquence roused for a time into a considerable ability; the Bengalee style was kind of galvanic action, which has been succeed-erated, and as idiomatic as translations can be ed by as profound a dumber as that which rendered, and the English composition did not existed before his arrival. He will now be able little credit to the Native gentlemen who fur-nished it. Its policies were of a liberal cast; ment improvement among a body which shows with a considerable tendency to the senti-ment of the Cluckerbutty School. It looked for support therefore, both pecuniary and edi- torial, to the numerous youths who had received, a liberal English education and who were sup-posed to have been thereby raised above the le-vel of vulgar prejudices, and to have imbibed that European thirst for knowledge, which in-creases with the supply. In both respects, the conductors have been miserably disappointed. Although there are hundreds of Native youths who have received a liberal education, and are now employed in situations of trust, influ-ence and profit, both under Government and by private individuals, they have taken so little interest in this enterprise, and have so com-pletely failed to contribute to it, either by pen or purse, as to allow it to die a natural death. The only paper identified with the party who may be styled "young Bengal" has been placed in the bills of mortality within a year of its birth. Somehow or other, there seems to be the same "disinclination to progress" among those who have been made familiar with the finest models of European literature, which has characterized the disciples of the Vedas for twenty centuries, and kept the Hindoos in a state of constant inferiority. Those youths whose minds have been imbued with the thoughts of Socrates and Milton and Addison and Johnson, and enriched with the study of mental and natural philosophy, seem to have dismissed all desire for improvement the moment they had gained the prize, and obtained a situation. The Englishman seems to think that they are alone taking a journal published both in English and Bengalee, and subscribe only for English newspapers. Unhappily he is mistaken. After twenty years' labour in giving English instruction to Native youths, and planting hundreds of them in situations of ease and comparative affluence, there are not one Hundred and Fifty-five who subscribe to the English newspapers of the Presidency, including the Friend of India. The national and hereditary lethargy has overpowered their spirit, and improvement is at an end.

It is now twenty-five years since the first newspaper was published in India, and the number of subscribers to all the Native Jour-nals little exceeds fifteen hundred. It is no monthly, by vessels of such speed as to ensure, under ordinary circumstances, the arrival of the mails despatched from Bombay on the 1st of every month (the monsoon months excepted) at Surat on the 10th of every month. They will also facilitate the conveyance of that portion of the monthly mail which is transmitted through France &c. &c. by vessels of such speed as to ensure, under ordinary circumstances, the arrival of the mails within 144 hours, or six days, from their embarkation at Alexandria. The mails from the United King-dom at India, &c., to be transmitted within a similar time.

"The result of this proposed acceleration would be as follows:—
The mails despatched from Bombay on the 1st of the month would arrive at Suez on the 10th, or in . . . 15 days
They would be brought across Egypt, and embarked at Alexandria in . . . 8 "
They would consequently be embarked at Alexandria on the 10th of the month, and would arrive at Marseilles on the 25th, or in . . . 6 "

Total time from Bombay to Marseilles . . . 24 days Marseilles to London, say . . . 4 "
(N.B. The above is the time, if the mails arrived in London in 31 days from Marseilles.)
Total time from Bombay to London . . . 28 days

"It therefore follows that the mails, under all ordinary circumstances, arrive in London on the 25th of every month." And the com-pany have such confidence in their ability to effect this acceleration, that they will submit to a ex- penses of 1,000*l.* for every time that the mails despatched from Bombay on the 1st are not con-veyed by their vessels, so far as the respective ex- penses are concerned, say between Suez and Bombay, and between Alexandria and Marseilles, both ways inclusive, in 22 days, the monsoon months, as before mentioned, excepted, and also accidents at sea, which cannot be provided against.

"The time of transmitting the mails between London and Alexandria, the Marseilles, being reduced by the proposed plan to ten days, it would not be necessary to alter the date of the mails until the evening of the 10th of the month, which would enable the steamer from Marseilles to Alexandria, to save a month, and the day as the steamer from Southampton, via Gibraltar. Hence, an interval of six or seven days would be afforded for replying to letters and despatches by the Overland Steam Mail, via France, instead of corresponding having to wait for the Overland Mail of the following month, as is now the case, and giving ample time for that purpose, not only to London, but to Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Glasgow, and, in short, to all the great commercial and manufacturing towns of the king- dom."

"From the time required to transmit the mails under the proposed accelerated arrangements by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, viz. 29 days, the mails despatched ac- cording to that arrangement—say the 1st Jan- uary, 1844, (instead of the 1st, as at present,) would arrive at Bombay on the 24th February, and at Calcutta on the 18th February, thus affording, as will be seen by reference to the dates of de- parting the homeward mails from Calcutta, as exhibited in the preceding table, from five to eight days, for replying to letters by the homeward mails of the same month, the monsoon months not included."

"It therefore follows that Calcutta, and all places in India similarly situated, would gain, un- der the proposed plan, in the homeward communication to England, as well as a month on the outward communication from England; thus affording an aggregate acceleration of two months in the intercourse to and from the most important parts of India."

A meeting of Merchants and others con- vened with India was held in London on the 10th of September, in order to press the Home au- thorities to entertain the proposal of the Penin- sular Company. Similar meetings have been held in the chief commercial and manufacturing towns in the country. It will be seen that their plan restricts the communication to Bombay alone, but this was considered by the majority of the meeting as a matter of little consequence. With them, Bombay was India. The incon- venience which it might inflict on the rest of India, on the Bengal and Madras Presidencies, and on Ceylon, to be deprived of the advantage

"A plan and proposal for accelerating the trans- mission, and reducing the expense of conveyance by the Overland Steam Mail, of the mails and de- patches between the United Kingdom and India, &c., submitted by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company."

"The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Naviga- tion Company propose to undertake the trans- mission of the mails between Bombay and Suez the employment of an additional steamer from Aden to Bombay.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 22.
correspondent of the Epistémote, rather ed with capital which he is anxious to profitably use, adds whether rags imported at Serampore from Europe reply that they were; but that they are to be more expensive than the rags were obtainable in India. In Europe the only thing which they lack is their strength, as the dirtiest can be bleached with the driven snow by chlorine gas, but unfortunately the rags furnished by the hundred millions of British subjects in the East, are deficient above all things in that one quality of strength.

—Mr. George Thompson has left Delhi, having, as the Delhi Gazette says, settled every thing with his Majesty to his own satisfaction.

—Sir Richmond Shackleton received charge of the Greater Rectory from Col. Spence on the 20th ultimo. The latter took his departure immediately for Nagpore.

—It has been proposed to erect a Church at Nerralla, or Nerrera Edda, and a considerable subscription has been raised for the purpose. When Sir Lawrence Peel and the other Calcutta visitors were applied to for their aid, they considered that as it was likely there would not always be a Clergyman of the Church of England there, as with other denominations of Christians, particularly the Presbyterians, might contribute to it, the building ought not to be devoted exclusively to Episcopal worship. They determined therefore to subscribe provided that (giving Episcopalianism, as the most numerous of the subscribers the preference of using the place for nursing or sick) Presbyterian clergymen would be allowed, if present, to use it in the evening; and that when no Episcopalian nor Presbyterian minister was present, a minister of any other denomination should be allowed to officiate, if a few of the subscribers wished it. Sir Anthony Olinpath, who, as might have been expected, is favourable to this Catholic project, has been made the depository of these conditional subscriptions, and now holds a considerable sum which he is authorized to lay out for any other charitable purpose if he cannot accomplish the object of having the Church of Nerralla open to all denominations of Protestants. Ceylon lies in the diocese of Madras, and Sir Anthony is not in good odour with its Anglo-Catholic Bishop. We think he will not be allowed to remain long in doubt regarding the distribution of these funds among other charities.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 24.

—The Barrack steamer arrived yesterday off Garden Reach, without having been smothered. We think the Superintendent of Marine will find, on enquiry, that there is large room for improvement in the Semaphore department. On every occasion on which we have trusted to the intelligence it gives of the progress of ships up and down the river, we have been misled. An occasional comparison of the ship's log as she passed the four stations, with the semaphore reports would show the extent to which carelessness prevails.

—The Bentick has made a very splendid voyage. She was only stay-four days under steam from Southampton to the Sand Heads. She was detained on the route stay-four days, yet reached Calcutta in less than three months. The Venerable the Archbishop and his family have come up in her from Galle, in six days and five hours. The passengers speak in the highest terms of the attention they received from the Commander, and of the arrangement of the Cabin, which are far superior in accommodation to those of the Hindostan.

—Mr. George Clerk, late Lieut. Governor of the North West Frontier, has left Simla, and embarked for Calcutta, at Gurnookbazar Ghât. He returns to England by way of the Cape.

—Sir Joseph Thackwell has been appointed to command the Cavalry division of the army intended to operate against Gwalior.

—By the latest accounts from Moulinie we learn that the Commissioner has suspended Capt. and Col. Wilson, Capt. Davidson and Lieut. Ochterlony, the Master Attendant at Amherst, and established a land post between Mergul, Tavey, Amherst and Moulinie.

—The Rutanjee Corjeejee has brought round from China the remnant of the Company's Staff, Col. Wilson, Capt. Davidson and Lieut. Ochterlony. The Settlements there are now placed upon the usual colonial allowances given by the Crown, which fall far short of those given by our Honourable Masters.

—Sir Henry Pottinger has appointed Major Pottinger, an extra Aid-de-Camp, and it is said will send him home with the Supplementary Treaty. This treaty, it appears, provides that all foreign nations trading with China shall enjoy the same privileges which have been granted to the English, and that if any fresh privileges should be granted to foreigners, the British may claim to participate in them.

—The Bombay papers hint that an American fleet will congregate at Canton, and that the Navy will demand of the Chinese Government reparation for injuries committed in the seizure of some opium on American ships. We thought better Jonathan repudiated the opium traffic, quite as much as he does the repayment of the loans made to some of the states.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25.

—The Hindostan steamer arrived at Madras at day light on the 19th, having made the voyage from Garden Reach to that Port, in four days. Capt. Englehard has been very successful in expediting the passage of this vessel. On the former trip, she did not leave the Pilot, till the third day, after leaving town.

—The Hutchinson states that an extensive robbery of the value of 20,000 Rupees has recently been committed in Calcutta. We are happy to learn that the Police have succeeded in discovering a part of the stolen property; and that other property stolen by the same parties has come to light.

—An Act has been passed by the Marquis Government, which reduces the public allowances on Coolies imported after the 1st of January next from £2 to £4; but this reduction is to apply only to labourers introduced by private speculation. The last Act of the Indian Government altogether forbids the exportation of Coolies by private individuals. We have several letters on the subject and hope to take it up fully next week.

—The Hindostan, Capt. Redman, which left Madras on the 12th October, was only reported yesterday. She has made one of the slowest passages on record. The Bentick steamer came up in three days; this vessel has been forty-two days on the passage.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 27.

—Lord Ellenborough left Barrackpore in the State Boat by the Hooghly Steamer on Saturday a little after two in the afternoon. A fair wind on the Barrackpore side of the river obliged the vessels to take the deeper channel on that side of the water. His Lordship was on deck, and appeared to look with some degree of interest towards the office of the Friend of India as he passed in front of it. We stood on the bank of the river to return the compliment, making at the same time on the thrones the Governor General would probably overturn before he again returned to his country seat. At Hooghly he disembarked, and entered a new mode of conveyance, in which he is to be propelled by human labour to Agra. Strange that after having taken a long and weary journey, there should not be a decent carriage road for the Governor General of India to travel on.

—The Scutcheon is at length reported. The present passage has been three weeks longer than the last.

—The Pharwell, which has brought up Mr. Blundell, the Ex-Governor of Moulinie and of the Straits Settlements, grounded on her way up last Saturday on the "James and Mary" mud bank, so that all hands are precluded now. We believe it will now belong to the province of the Superintendent of Marine to urge on Government the necessity of allowing her up, in order to prevent the obstruction of a channel at all times narrow and dangerous, but which will be rendered ten times more so unless steps are taken to clear away the wreck. We are extremely sorry to find how great a loss Mr. Blundell has been by this calamity. All the property he brought round with him has perished. His English library may be replaced; but not the valuable Sanskrit library which he had been many years in collecting.

—The Delhi Gazette gives the important intelligence that Mahaj Goolab Singh has at length arrived at Lahore with a party of his well-disciplined mountain soldiers, and has assumed the Government of the Punjab. He has at once refused to accede to the pecuniary demands of the refractory troops of Lahore Singh, which have been urged with such insolent impetuosity, and will doubtless put them down by force. All the foreign officers (including General Ventura, are to quit the service.

—Mr. Kinsley, the Commander-in-Chief, reached Agra on the 18th where he found Col. Blundell and Sir Richmond Shackleton. Mr. Thompson, the newly appointed Lieut. Governor, had also arrived there, but intended shortly to leave it on revenue duties in the north. The arrival at the station of Baboo Dwarkanath Tagore is also announced. The Agra Utkar states, that Col. Spence had arrived at Agra, having made an unsuccessful attempt to enter the British States to Nagpore. The policy of removing this officer who is so intimately acquainted with Gwalior affairs and the military arrangements, whose knowledge of the Punjab is second only to that of Mr. Clerk, just at the time when we are about to enter upon negotiations with those states, which may and in fact, is very questionable. Their success cannot be supposed to have their local experience.

—Mr. Speed, late Editor of the Planter's Journal, now confined in the Great Jail, has just been brought up before the Magistrate for halting a poor wretchman with shoes, and fined five Rupees.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 29.

—The latest account from Simla is in a letter from Sukumar on the 19th inst., published in the Star, and gives a very lamentable account of the sickness still prevailing there. Though we have been obliged to omit every local extract to admit the interesting news from the Punjab, we have not omitted to insert a portion of this letter. It appears that there are more than 2,000 men in hospital at Sukkar. All the Regiments there could not furnish a soldier a single day's rest, and repel any attack which might be made on them by the wild Belouches, if they should descend in sufficient numbers from the mountains. One army in Upper Simla appears to be almost in an critical position as ever the garrison of Cabul was. The question of its entire annihilation has ceased to depend on its own progress, for the British cannot fight with a view to its ruin. The security of those regions depends on the moderation or the fears of the enemy, which may cease at any moment. Should we let the army station there, the present administration would be brought to a speedy close. The catastrophe would ring throughout England, and all those who were wavering about the justice of having occupied Simla, would immediately make up their minds as to its injudicious, and the Ministry would be obliged to divert the storm of public indignation from themselves by sending out another Governor General.

—The benefit at the Theatre last Wednesday night, for the late Mrs. Leuck's children, was a miserable failure. The house was comparatively empty, though with the exception of the philanthropists of men who had so long afforded amusement to the play goers of Calcutta. A subscription has therefore been opened which has seven names, and donations to the amount of 100 Rupees.

—The Madras papers state, that orders had been unexpectedly and presumptuously received from Lord Ellenborough by the Resident at Hyderabad to despatch next week a permanent of selected officers, even nearly 15 per cent; and suggests that it might be done for half that sum by a percentage.

—A correspondent of the Harkara states, that Government have thrown out the proposal of two out of four of the Magistrates of Calcutta to raise the House Tax from Five to Six and a half per cent. The same writer states, that the collection of the Tax, which is a permanent of selected officers, costs nearly 15 per cent; and suggests that it might be done for half that sum by a percentage.

—The officers of the American Frigate Ironclad, now at Bombay, have been invited to be hospitably entertained by the officers of the Indian Navy, by giving a splendid entertainment on board that vessel to Three Hundred Ladies and Gentlemen. Just as the entertainment was about to commence, the Suez Steamer with the Envoys, the Honorable Mr. Cushing, anchored a few miles, and his Excellency was enabled to join in the festivities of the day.

— The Governor General having taken his departure for the North West Provinces, the Hon. W. W. Hill, Esq. has been again sworn in as President of the Council of India and has appointed Capt. Spottiswoode, Military Secretary, and Lieut. Walker, Aid-de-Camp.

BRISBANE, 29th Nov. 23.

— The Banbury Times informs us that the September periodical publications which had been left behind at Suez, have been brought on now; and that the October Periodicals have been left behind at Aden because the Commander of the Steamer considering them as Merchandise fancied he was precluded by his orders from bringing them on. — The same paper states that of 8,604 troops at Hyderabad and Kerachee, 4648 are effective, and 3956 non-effective from sickness. The amount of mortality has not been so great as the amount of sickness would have led us to suppose. The sickness at Sankur, as will be seen by the extract we made yesterday, continues to be much more formidable.

— The papers of this morning publish the correspondence between the Peninsular Company and the Kapt India and China Association, which fully confirms the view we took of the matter before we had seen these letters, that the Company have distinctly offered to run between Suez and Hombay, the same vessels which they are already under an engagement to run between Suez and Calcutta. Mr. Allan's reply is haughty and evasive, and gives for to confirm the acquisition which have been entertained regarding the "delusion of duty." — In the midst of it.

— A correspondent of the Star states, that the sum which Mr. Cushing is going to demand from the Chinese is $200,000, not for opium sold, but for certain merchandise belonging to American citizens, which was destroyed in the late war with the English.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following news for the Friend of India :—

Lieut. Jas. Young, ... to Sept. 1843, 29
Baboo Manichurni Mitter, to March, 1844, 10
M. Innes, Esq., ... to Dec. 1843, 23
Baboo Chandernagar Bose, to April, 1844, 10
Rev. M. Bennett, ... to Nov. 1843, 10
Dr. Heathcote, ... to June, 1844, 20
J. Ruze, Esq., ... to June, 1843, 09
E. Battershaw, Esq., ... to Dec. 1843, 29
T. Hastings, Esq., ... to Sept. 1843, 29

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

The Secretary of the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta, gratefully begs to acknowledge the following sums :—

Cd. Rs. As.
R. T. S. 5 0
Mrs. King, 4 0
H. 16 0
H. M. D. 50 0
G. E. II. 10 0
J. C. 10 0
P. L. 3 0
Mr. J. L. Meen, 3 0
Capt. J. Woodley, 4 0
Major Sewall, 5 0
A Friend, per Rev. J. C. Thompson, 30 0

W. W. Evans, Secretary.

Nov. 1843, 1845.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

SICKNESS.

"Nothing of any great moment since my last. Sickness continues the same, excepting that it appears to go harder with those who have been attacked since the 1st of month. The Sudder Brigade turned out on the 20th N. 1. 73. 14 men, 10th N. 1. 50, and 56th N. 1. 73. The Artillery I do not think could have had half a dozen, and Chamberlayne's Horse about 12. The men on the sick list were 2000. Deaths are becoming more frequent. The Europeans of the Artillery have lost 43 men out of 164; and are as sickly as can be now. The 6th and 10th N. 1. have daily a death or two, and the 20th N. 1. 23 of this month to-day, the 10th have had 20 deaths, or two a day. Dr. W. Pollard lately arrived from Persepolis died here on the 14th en route. The Steamer Scotlan arrived from Hyderabad on the 7th with Dr. Thompson, a Hombay Medical for us, and left on the 12th yesterday with Drs. Maitland and Young, and two officers, one of the 9th and 10th on board, and Captain Gwankin of the Commissariat leaves to-day for Persepolis. He has been very ill. Capt. Lindsay 10th

N. 1. is acting Commissary General for Capit Gwankin, Dr. Maane will soon go away. Chamberlayne's Horse have lost one dudfard and eight sows since the 4th current. The Right Wing of the 8th N. 1. went out into Camp about 23 miles from the Station, encamped on the banks of the Mahikore Nullah. This has been done in the hope of the change benefiting the men. We have reports from the 10th and 12th N. 1. N. 1. are ordered down. It is to be a rally. I respect our Government will find that unless they relieve the Bengal Regiments here and send Hombay ones, all the former will be fit for nothing, either here or on their return to the provinces. Let their "offices men" calculate the average number of deaths here and at the unhealthiest Station in India, and they will see the difference. There are certain reports, Mr. Editor, that Selude is not so quiet as thought. Lower Selude is rising and Upper will also.—mark my words, Sir, about the end of this month, if not ere that, you will hear of few unruly deeds in the Selude which it was expected would not fire a shot in Genis again.—Cal. Star, November 23.

To Correspondents.

The letter respecting the Temperance Society at them-Dun has been received, but too late for notice this week.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

DETACHED THOUGHTS

Regarding the charges lately given by the "Friend of India," from the declarations of certain gang robbers.

Previously as have been the Superintendent's zeal and activity in disclosing the appalling growth of gang robbery under his highly extolled civil administration; I cannot think that the root of this evil has yet been fully exhausted; many think that the remedy for gang robbery consists merely in punishing the offenders; and a coarse and sweeping system of conviction and punishment has accordingly been resorted to; under which, and with the present state of evidence, the innocent must too frequently be involved with the guilty; and even if it be otherwise; even if, under the Superintendent's energy and judgment justice acts with greater precision as well as energy; still success must depend much on the acumen of the Superintendent's personal energy and judgment; and also on a continuance in the present disposition of the robbers to make confessions and disclosures.

It seems to me that one main root of the evil is indicated in the following words of a confession. The Headman of a village provided him (the robber) with maintenance; and taught him gang robbery."

Another main root of the evil seems to be indicated in the following passage. "In a Dacoity, 5,400 Rupees were given to the Zemindar of Hungroo."

The above tallies with an opinion I have often urged in the Friend of India to the effect that Heads of villages and Zemindars were the chief oppressors of the communities under them; and that the Heads of villages in particular never acted just against the communities under them—whether in aid of Zemindars, official extortioners, or robbers; and that, being entirely independent of the village community, the Headmen find it their interest to make separate covenants against them; and also that the village Headmen were in the pay of the Zemindars were equally disposed with the Headmen to act with the Zemindars against the communities and were often (as I said) the key for the Zemindars and other robbers, to the village they intended to rob.

It is evident that whatever in the above manner prostrates the people before those over them must be favorable to the growth and increase of the system of revenue; and not the smallest disposition to modify this strong prejudice on the people has been evinced; and indeed the only disposition since the old Tally disposition of adding to it a stronger military purchase on the protracted communities. But it is now evident that in thus prostrating the people beneath the official extortioners and the Zemindars through whom we do live revenue, we drag the same time prostrating the people beneath the gang robbers from whom we do not derive revenue; and who, on the contrary, are enhancing the sum of crime, and as the Friend of India emphatically says proying on the very vitals of the country. It is now evident that the people must be rendered "jeerily at the mercy of robbers; even" must, by the same operation, be rendered "jeerily at the mercy of Zemindars and through whom we realize the revenue.

But where and how are we to eman. work of raising the communities to some degree from their prostration under the official functionary, the Zemindar, and the gang robber?

I urge that we must commence the work from below; and at the point indicated in the first of the quotations at the commencement of this writing, so that the Head of a village may have a strong interest in the village adverse to that which now induces him to maintain gang robbers and to "instruct them in the profession," we must in short give him a practical and sustaining motive to act for and with the community instead of, as now, only on and against the community; and at the same time, we must give to the watcher a similar motive for acting for the community instead of being as now a key whereby the Zemindar who pays him and the robber who pays the Zemindar are to enter and rob whatever houses they please. In a word we must make the Headman responsible to the community over which he is placed and make the village constabulary force (be they watchers or peons) responsible to the responsible Headman; and thus by increasing his powers with his responsibilities, by binding up his interests with those of the community, we will convert the Headman into a nucleus of collective and defensive energy, while other faculties of local self-government might by the same operation be drawn forth from the community where we so acted as the grand principle of individual development, namely, increase of power with increase of responsibility.

But the prevailing idea is that, Arre, as in China, the only responsibility must be responsibility to the central authorities and their delegates; but unless we relax a little of this Chinese theory I believe that the people will continue to be as subject as stationary—as in China, and as helplessness beneath the power of Zemindars, robbers and their own Headmen as they now are; the only compensatory reflection for all this being that our power of moral coercion and of silent pressure on the people will continue as perfect as in China. Let me in conclusion add; that I, by no means, think we should meanwhile relax in the exertions carried on through the Superintendent. Let him proceed in his laudable exertions of rooting and keeping down the growth of the evil, without hindrance to our more general and constitutional means of eradicating the evil. Let him kill the brood while we clear the noxious recesses which generate them.

REMARKING INDEFINITE TAXATION.

To the Editor of the Friend of India. Sir—I should be glad to learn through your instructive columns whether the imposition of a tax on the people without defining the rate or the amount is legal and constitutional.

The Municipal Act authorizes the local Committees to impose such tax; and if this were to be a self-imposed tax, no defining of the tax would be necessary. But as the tax payers have no voice whatever in appointing the taxing Committee the tax will in practice be a self imposed tax; and the Committee is therefore a more instrument for additional and unlimited taxation, another force added to that great taxing and fighting machine called the Indian Government.

The object of the said Act should have been to reduce from the local communities those appetites of local self-Government which we have always repressed; but in imposing such a Committee we only add to the depressive tendencies of our Govement, and give a higher pressure to the screw.

I submit that one duty of the Law Committee is to see that the liabilities of the people are duly defined and limited; and that the Committee is paid for something more than merely paying the Government into Law English.

Yours, &c. P. B. PROBYNCE.

EXTRACT IN THE NORTH WEST.

Editor of the Friend of India.

Very true Friend to India must have read with interest your article on the Decrees of Bengal published in your paper of the 19th October. Every Magistrate in the country must agree in the justice of your remarks, and every active Magistrate must rejoice to see the main error of our criminal administration urged upon the Government. As you have done in your concluding lines—viz. that Police is utterly neglected and judicial proceedings alone attended to.

2. You are not altogether right in supposing that no Magistrate have true intercourse with the people. Those who do their duty properly have; and necessarily so, for how can a man know what is going on in the country if he does not mix with the people? And how many are those who do so, you will ask, and why are they not more numerous? I will tell you why—simply because the man who takes no trouble about his Police, receives just as much of the favour of Government as he who takes every pains. No man is praised for his good Police—no Magistrate expects preferment, honour, or emolument from maintaining a good Police;—and the consequence is, that most men neglect that most important branch of duty.

3. Nay more, he who is familiar with the people whom he governs, whose name is a Terror to Thieves and Robbers, whose trust cries with perseverance and labour, such an officer is constantly mortified at finding that his Police labours are wholly overlooked;—no acknowledgment made, no thanks given; while for a trifling error of procedure or irregularity he is subjected to censure—meanwhile his neighbour a man of ease and pleasure—ignorant of his district, unknown to his people, providing in a district where crime stalks unrepined—punishing only such crime as concerns itself—this officer is perhaps held up as a model of excellence, by the Chief Judicial Court, because his Judicial Statements are fair, and his procedure exhibits little irregularity.

4. I am now holding up irregularity or defending error—but mortification and pre-emption may be carried too far—and when more attention is paid (as is now the case) to trivial facts and rules than to the solid advantages attending the repression of crime, it is high time to reflect.

5. Under our present system of Government, a Magistrate is much more afraid of committing some irregularity in exercising out-duties than of leaving them unperformed. In the former case, his labours and successful exertions are sometimes followed by censure from the Sessions Judge and from the Nizamut Adalat. In the latter no one can say much, and if the Superintendent of Police [i. e. Commissioner] does raise his feeble voice, it is, whether in censure or in praise little attended to in higher quarters. In fact a Magistrate is fettered in every way—receives no encouragement—no support—no praise—and what result can you expect different from what it is viz. The Police is bad!

6. The Thuggee and Dacoitee officers have done much good, and will I hope do more; but they have had extremely little encouragement and assistance which Magistrates would might in vain have sought for. Several enactments specially passed to aid their efforts have brought the Dacoit—and Thug under very different Law from what was wielded by Magistrates. The efforts, the success, the necessities of the Police were brought directly before the Government by the head of the department, and received attention which it might in vain have sought through the slow and inefficient medium of the ordinary channels—Sessions

Judges learnt the necessity of attending less to matters of Law and more to the true merits of a case from the knowledge that their proceedings were watched and liable to be overlooked.

7. It is not to see the dignified indifference of these high functionaries in connection with the interests of the Police. Ignorant entirely of the opinion, and feelings of the people over whom they preside, their judgments are solely passed from the papers before them, and while they are really incompetent to judge of the weight due to the testimony of A. B. C. or D. who may come before them—from an ignorance of their respective characters—bias—or party,—yet pass judgment and censure on the Magistrate who does know all about the complacency of an oracle.

8. The fact of the Zemindars being guilty to, or at least cognisant of—60—out of the 100 offences committed against property is, Sir, no news to efficient Magistrates of these Provinces. Here it is invariably the case. Exceptions may occur but they are rare—and the surest way of keeping down crime is to hold the Landholder responsible who protects the thief. On this point our Laws are not nearly stringent enough—these judges under different circumstances are liable to punishment by the Sessions Judge for gross convictions proved by Judicial Trial—and to slight punishment by the Magistrate for failing to report crime, yet we want an enactment still which shall render all Landholders liable to severe fine and imprisonment whenever the Magistrate and Superintendent of Police are agreed that they have grossly neglected precautionary measures so as to induce a well grounded opinion of their having committed as criminals or crime. From such sentence an appeal should lie to the Judicial authorities, for nothing is so difficult, so next to impossible as to prove a Zemindar's actual connivance judicially while the fact may be as well known among the people as that the sun is high in heaven at noon day. I have long intended sending you a line on this subject but have really not found time. I have a Police to attend to—and it falls time and what with roads, bridges, supplies, revenues, law, honour, and all, I find little leisure for disquisitions of this nature. I have written hurriedly and saved more to state a few broad facts than to clothe them in the best words for which you must excuse Yours obediently,

A MAGISTRATE OF THE N. W. P.

Nov. 20th, 1848.]

P. S. I could add a few lines to the sketch purport on Revenue matters. Inefficiency in that department is again becoming the order of the day. Then why? because merit is no longer sought and rewarded and idleness gains as much as labour. Labour is painful, and continued applying dead labour is injurious to health: Idleness when joined to rest and recreation promotes health and has attractions for most men. Is it wonderful then that Talent when unwarded should not be called forth? that knowledge or experience unknown and unlearned should sleep? Can any unprepared man of the Civil Service look at the daily appointments, changes, &c. in that Service, and assert that Merit has any weight in the councils of Government? Certainly none in these N. W. P. The Patronage of the Civil Service is one of the most vitally important functions of Government not for the mere sake of the Patronage—the influence—the Halo of authority and power which surrounds the dispenser, but because upon the due and proper exercise of that patronage depends the efficiency of the Civil Service and hence of the Civil administration of the country. If men were confident that merit must win the way to preferment and honour, the very indolent would exert their energies. But when all that sensible that interest and intrigue and personal acquaintance outweigh a thousand times the best service—the most active become indifferent and indolence generates neglect.

Yours obediently,

A MAGISTRATE AND COMMISSIONER, N. W. P.

MAJOR THOMAS WILKINSON.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir,—In reply to the Query contained under the head of Weekly Epitome of news of the Friend of India, dated this instant, as to why Major Wilkenson's term has been superseded by Col. Speira in the Nagpore Residency, I beg most respectfully to state that the Major has resigned the appointment at his own free will with an intention of proceeding to his native Land "the old Merry England."

I am, Sir,

Yours obediently,
MAJOR'S YOURS MAN.

EUROPE.

GENERAL REMARKS.—The missing mail, and anxious speculations as to the cause of its detention, and the fate of the steamer by which it should have reached Agra have, since our last, served to keep India before the public. Indian affairs generally have also afforded matter for frequent discussion. Accounts of the disastrous wreck of the Meconus reached London on the afternoon of the 3rd October. The loss of the mail steamer was a great calamity, and one of the most disastrous in our mercantile marine, as it is likely to occasion much more violence in commercial affairs; for though in most cases duplicate bills may be received, in many instances, as the Meconus was, the loss of the cargo is irreparable. The loss of the Meconus clearly illustrates the mischief of confining the intercourse to Bombay. Had there been a steamer on the "comprehensive" line, the mail would have reached Madras, and Ceylon, would in all human probability, have reached England in due course.

The last month opened with a meeting, held at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, in order to take measures for the immediate dispatch of the Rev. Dr. Wolf to Bokhara, with a view of determining the existence or non-existence of Colonel Biddart and Captain Connolly. Capt. Grove, who presided upon this occasion, gave a very clear history of the imprisonment and sufferings of these unfortunate officers. He recounted the various attempts made to poison them, and then descended at considerable length, and with much ingenuity, the evidence upon which his Majesty's Government have come to the conclusion that they are no more; pointing out the contradictions and inconsistencies in which he considered it either contradictory or defective. The observations of the chairman appeared to make a strong impression on the meeting, and resulted, in the adoption of the proposed objects, were passed unanimously.

We could be not in the number of those who entertain any very anxious hope as to the present safety of Col. Biddart and his companion. Still, the case is one of sufficient doubt to demand immediate interference, on the part of the public, if not of the Government of the Country. Humanity and state policy alike require it; for British subjects ought not to suffer, under circumstances such as have been disclosed, without some inquiries being instituted in order to ascertain their fate. We do not propose now to discuss how far the Government are bound to interfere where they have not the power to insist upon redress, or whether it may not be more politic in the present instance to leave the matter in the hands of the public. All we say is, that something should be done. If by the public, we have reason to know that it will have the encouragement and aid of the Government.

Some facts which came to light in the course of the proceedings appeared to occasion considerable surprise and give rise to rather severe animadversions. Why, it was asked, should a letter written by the Sultan to the Amier of Bokhara, designating the names of his prisoners, have been stopped by Col. Shiel, at Tashkent? And how was it Lord Ellenborough would have written to the Sultan, designating British officers, who had represented themselves to be "diplomatic agents," as "innocent travellers?" Col. Shiel may have certain instructions to plead in justification of his conduct; but it seems altogether impossible to conceive, that Lord Ellenborough General been at the trouble of consulting any person of ordinary ordinary experience, he could have committed so fatal a mistake.

We must next call attention to the proceedings of a very important meeting, held at the Hall of Commerce, on the 19th Sept., for the purpose of discussing the views of the Government, and the East India Company, and of adopting other measures for obtaining increased emphasis in the conveyance of the mails between England and India. There is no doubt it is impossible to overstate the importance of such an object, the only plan submitted to the meeting was one put forward by the Peninsula and Oriental Company, which proposes to convey the mail of the 1st of each month from Bombay to London in 28 or 29 days, the company's steamers excepted; and the mails of the 15th of every month from London to Bombay in 40 days. It is not necessary to say that such an arrangement, besides the utmost confidence in the ability

Price 1 Rupee 4 Annas.
An allowance made to Schools and others taking fifty copies.
Madrass, 10th Sept. 1843.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 466. Vol. IX.]

SINGAPORE: THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7TH. 1848.

[Price 3 Cts. Rn. monthly, or 30 Cts. yearly. V paid in advance.]

STEAMER DESTINATIONS.
THE Mails for Suez and the intermediate Ports, (Madras, Ceylon and Aden,) to be despatched by the steamer Andalusia, will be sent at this Office, on Thursday, the 14th Instant.
Wm. MOORE,
General Post Office,
The 14th Dec. 1848.

OVERLAND MAIL.
THE next Steamer with Mails for Suez will leave Bombay on the 1st of January. Notice accordingly is hereby given, that the latest safe date for the presentation of Letters from Calcutta, which may be intended for this opportunity, will be Tuesday, the 19th instant.
Fort William,
General Post Office,
The 1st Dec. 1848.
L. J. H. GREY,
Off. Post Master General.

GWALIOR, THE PUNJAB, AND SIKHISM.—The two parties into which the troops at Gwalior had divided themselves, have come to Mowla. That of the Regent and the Khazee was beaten, and the Utwar was sent in chains to the British Resident. He is since reported to have made his escape. The details of the engagement, as given in the papers, are any thing but distinct, and it is difficult to form any consistent opinion of the state and the views of the parties from the information before us. These do not appear to have been any extraordinary display of courage on either side, and the number of killed and wounded is marvellously small. Indeed, from the demonstration made on this occasion, it would seem that the assemblage of so large a British army to meet so insignificant a foe, is almost ridiculous. It is more than probable that if we are obliged to enter the country in hostilities, we shall meet no army capable of standing a quarter of an hour's struggle with us.

Whether, however, we enter the country by treaty, or by force, the independence of Hindostan's House is gone for ever. We shall reduce the royal authority to a mere shadow, disband the disloyal rabble of soldiers, and govern the country with our own troops. We shall thus create that most pestiferous form of administration, a double Government; keeping the power of the sword in our own hands, and leaving the Native ruler in charge of the civil, criminal and fiscal administration, to oppress and oppress the people under the protection of our authority. We shall always stand ready to assist the Government whenever its oppressions may rouse the people into rebellion; but never shall we assist the people to obtain any redress of their injuries. Under the present system, they have still some small chance of consideration, for the fear of retribution has a natural tendency to induce a degree of moderation. But, when our troops are once established in the country, that salutary fear will disappear, and all check upon the tyranny of the Court and its officials, will be effectually removed. And, unfortunately, the very strength which establishes this most lamentable state of things, serves at the same time to perpetuate it; for, as the rulers of the country, can never dream of resisting our authority, no pretence can apparently ever arise for checking up this arrangement. The kingdom of Scinde is therefore we fear doomed, by the prompt treatment of circumstances, to remain in permanent for the next fifty years. So far as the interests of the people are concerned, it would have been vastly more fortunate if the ordinary of the Durbar had been carried to such an extent as to have given us just and reasonable grounds for subverting the Government altogether, and punishing the Regent and the royal family, and giving the people the blessing of British institutions.

The intelligence from the Punjab is by no means decisive of the future course of affairs in that country. On the arrival of Raja Golsah Sing, his nephew appears to have voluntarily resigned all authority into his hands; and he assumed the administration with every appearance of vigor. The large force of disciplined mountaineers whom he brought with him served to overawe the refractory troops, whose leaders demanded for larger pay and gratitudes he peremptorily refused. At the same time, he ordered some of the most obstinate of the Regiments to march forthwith to Peshawar, to strengthen that post, but they do not seem to have obeyed his command. Subsequent accounts state that he found the combination of Sikh chieftains too strong to be easily overcome, and had determined to retire with the Raja Hosen Sing to his own domains in the Hills, and to abandon the plains to the contention of the rival factions, who agree on no one point but that of hostility to the present greatness of his family. Doubtless his absence from the hills, where the wild mountaineers bear his sway with impetuosity, will be without danger to its perpetuity, and he can perhaps wisely in not risking his person there, and the command of the fortress which his brother and he have for many years endeavored to render impregnable, for an uncertain authority in the Punjab. There he must be constantly exposed to the machinations of those families, whose power was absorbed by the genius of Ranjeet Sing and whose ambition will revive now that the field is open for its display. There is evidently no authority but that of Raja Golsah Sing which can maintain a strong government in the Punjab; and his departure will doubtless be the beginning of anarchy, which, by endangering the peace of neighbouring states, will render it necessary for the paramount power to seize the reins of government, on the simple principle of self defence. The state of things is far from satisfactory. The kingdom which Ranjeet Sing was thirty years in consolidating, will in all probability be reduced into its original elements before two years have passed, and the various states which he held in subjection by his own master mind, will again assume independence. Mutual hostility will be the order of the day, and the protected Sikh states on the left bank of the Sutlege will probably be invaded; and thus an opening will be created for British interference. The correspondents of the papers state the number of our troops about to be assembled on the Sutlege at Umbala, Ludiana and Ferozepore, at not less than twenty thousand. The statement of affairs at Gwalior will release a very large portion of the so called Army of Hindostan, and as the Sikh frontier is the only exposed position in our dominions, it is not improbable that an army of great magnitude will be stationed in that direction.

But we can scarcely credit the assertion that Lord Ellenborough's visit to the North West will induce ally to the British state of affairs in the Punjab, because his Lordship's intended journey is intended to be for the most part at the best weather set in, to his delight at Sharnapore, which he has laid out so much time. If however the present aspect of affairs be such in November as to require his Lordship's presence in the North West, it is not likely to be so far improved by February as to enable him to quit the scene.

Matters in Scinde are daily assuming a more gloomy aspect. We have conquered the Beloches, and obtained possession of a deadly swamp. For three months past, our accounts from thence present but one unvaried picture of sickness and mortality. The country seems to be as fatal to the European constitution as Africa. We have reports of almost entire regiments unfit for duty, and of a whole army decimated by universal disease. This country, fertile as Egypt, has hitherto proved only the grave of our troops. The inundation of the Indus seems to abstract from animal existence, as much vigor as it imparts to vegetable life. Since we first occupied the country and abolished slavery, and opened its streams to all nations, we have heard nothing of any local improvements, nothing of any arrangements for the establishment of a wise and beneficial system of administration; nothing of the introduction of commerce. No vessels with rich cargoes have entered the unobstructed river, and not a note of gratulation has been heard regarding the manumission of the slaves. As soon as our struggles with the heat of the climate ended, our struggle with the climate commenced, in which we have been as much humbled, as we were previously triumphant. If this state of things were likely to be transient, there might be room for exerting the virtues of patience and hope; but there is every reason to believe that the unhealthy season will come round annually with as much regularity as the inundation of the Indus; and that the country will always prove most deleterious to the European and Indian constitution. There does not appear at present any hope of our being able to hold the country except at an immense sacrifice of health and life; or of our having much time to spare from the care of self preservation for the amelioration of the people or the improvement of the country. The last accounts from Afghanistan state that Sher Mahomed has informed the Candahar Sikhs of the extreme sickness which prevailed among our troops and invited them to bring down a body of two or three thousand horse through the Bolan; while he assembled the Muses and Boghies. He said that Shiharpore was wealthy and incapable of defence. Should this information be correct, it is probable that this city will be the first object of plunder.

affairs in the Punjab, because his Lordship's intended journey is intended to be for the most part at the best weather set in, to his delight at Sharnapore, which he has laid out so much time. If however the present aspect of affairs be such in November as to require his Lordship's presence in the North West, it is not likely to be so far improved by February as to enable him to quit the scene.

Matters in Scinde are daily assuming a more gloomy aspect. We have conquered the Beloches, and obtained possession of a deadly swamp. For three months past, our accounts from thence present but one unvaried picture of sickness and mortality. The country seems to be as fatal to the European constitution as Africa. We have reports of almost entire regiments unfit for duty, and of a whole army decimated by universal disease. This country, fertile as Egypt, has hitherto proved only the grave of our troops. The inundation of the Indus seems to abstract from animal existence, as much vigor as it imparts to vegetable life. Since we first occupied the country and abolished slavery, and opened its streams to all nations, we have heard nothing of any local improvements, nothing of any arrangements for the establishment of a wise and beneficial system of administration; nothing of the introduction of commerce. No vessels with rich cargoes have entered the unobstructed river, and not a note of gratulation has been heard regarding the manumission of the slaves. As soon as our struggles with the heat of the climate ended, our struggle with the climate commenced, in which we have been as much humbled, as we were previously triumphant. If this state of things were likely to be transient, there might be room for exerting the virtues of patience and hope; but there is every reason to believe that the unhealthy season will come round annually with as much regularity as the inundation of the Indus; and that the country will always prove most deleterious to the European and Indian constitution. There does not appear at present any hope of our being able to hold the country except at an immense sacrifice of health and life; or of our having much time to spare from the care of self preservation for the amelioration of the people or the improvement of the country. The last accounts from Afghanistan state that Sher Mahomed has informed the Candahar Sikhs of the extreme sickness which prevailed among our troops and invited them to bring down a body of two or three thousand horse through the Bolan; while he assembled the Muses and Boghies. He said that Shiharpore was wealthy and incapable of defence. Should this information be correct, it is probable that this city will be the first object of plunder.

STEAM.—The two proposals of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, both of which intimated with their promise of a direct communication between Calcutta, Madras, Ceylon and Suez have ceased, as might have been expected, an ordinary session in Calcutta, and a meeting is to be held immediately, to petition the Home Authorities against the con-contemplated change. A meeting has also been held of the Chamber of Commerce at Bombay, to consider the propriety of employing the vessels now on the line between Calcutta and Suva, in running between Bombay and Suva. This body has discovered that the Steamers which now ply on their particular route, are daily becoming unsuited to the object, and are altogether unsuited in speed with the magnificent Peninsular Company. They consider therefore very advisable that the vessels should be taken from us and given to Bombay. The Carrier says that, doubtless some arrangement would be made which would continue most, if not all, the advantages which we now enjoy; but what this arrangement is, or when it is to be carried into effect, we are not told. The Editor considers it highly unreasonable that the inhabitants of Calcutta should be actuated by a regard for the interests of one particular spot, and thus throw obstacles in the way of a plan which promises so much for the country at large; that is, he considers it highly unreasonable that we should grumble at the loss of our present advantages, or refuse cheerfully to exchange them for some future contingency which may never arrive. We believe it is an undeniable fact, that the writers at this Presidency have never advocated any arrangement which should give to Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta a single advantage denied to Bombay. But it does so happen that the Bombay writers have never patronized any plan which was not likely at the same time to be beneficial to that port, and detrimental to the other Presidencies. This has been done doubtless on the most patriotic motives; for with them Bombay is India, and whatever benefits that port, benefits the country at large.

Of the two plans now proposed, one is to take off the Hindostan and Bentuck from the present line, and run them exclusively to Bombay, and to transfer the Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta passengers and packages—with the exception of a few letters sent on by express in the way of five shillings and eight pence—to smaller steamers. But if it be necessary to have two classes of steamers employed on the eastern side of Suva, the one large and the other small, it is the dictate of reason that the larger vessels should be used for conveying the larger number of passengers and packets, and the smaller vessels for conveying the smaller number. It is certain that the passengers and packages for the other Presidencies and Ceylon, will exceed two fold, perhaps three fold, those which are destined for Bombay. The smaller vessels should therefore be given to this latter port, and the more capacious steamers to the longer line. The public conveniences of the country would be more promoted, or rather there would be a far less amount of inconvenience if the Bombay passengers and letters were put on board these smaller steamers at Aden and Galle, than if those destined for the other presidencies and Ceylon were transhipped at Bombay into smaller and less commodious vessels. These minor steamers would be able to accommodate all the Bombay passengers with ease, but they could not contain those who were proceeding to the other ports.

This it is evident that the question whether the larger class of Steamers shall run to Calcutta or Suva to Bombay, must depend on the determination of the public Authorities at home, and not on the Company itself, for the Company will be guided of course by its own interest, and cannot send their vessels to Calcutta and the other eastern ports, if they can get more money out of Government for sending them to Bombay. It is therefore to the Government that our reasoning and our remonstrances should be addressed, and not to the amabilities of a Company whose only object is gain. How then stands the question of Ponnah, Shillings and Pence? The proposal now made is understood to embrace the employment of the large steamers between Suva and Bombay, and the subsidiary steamers between Bombay, and Galle, Madras and Calcutta. Opposed to this is the plan of employing the large steamers on the line from Suva to Calcutta, and branch steamers from Aden and Galle to Bombay. The first proposal will require three large steamers and three smaller ones. The other plan which embraces the interests of Bengal, Madras and Ceylon, will require four large steamers; the difference between the two being the cost of one additional steamer. But it must be remembered that the expense of keeping up steam communication between Europe and India is divided between the public at large and the Government. The more the public pays, the lighter is the burden on Government. The experience of the last year has clearly shown that the contributions of the community by means of passengers and packages to vessels starting from Calcutta and calling at Madras and Ceylon, will go far to pay the cost of the enterprise, and leave a comparatively small sum for Government to make up. And the first year is likely, as in all other cases, to be the least productive. We believe this was the case with the Bombay Steamers, and it will doubtless be the same with ours. As the facilities of the voyage are improved, and become more widely known, the use of the route will become more general, and in two or three years it is highly probable that the monthly steamer with all its accommodations will be unequal to the general demand. But if the passengers of the three eastern ports are to be conducted to Bombay and then transhipped into vessels of half the size of the Hindostan, it is perfectly certain that not one half the number who would be happy to proceed direct to Suva, will submit to this round-about and most tiresome voyage. The amount of passage money will fall off, and a corresponding increase of gravity must be made to the Company by Government to compensate for the loss. It appears therefore self evident that the plan which embraces the largest interests, and which most extensively commends the support of the community, will be found the cheapest for Government; that is, it would be necessary to give a smaller bonus to the Peninsular Company to induce them to maintain a monthly communication by means of large steamers between Suva and the three Eastern ports, than would be required for keeping up the communication between that place and the Western port.

We had intended to say something about the justice of giving to the Bengal Presidency, an equal share in the benefits of Steam communication, the whole charge of which is to be borne from the revenue it furnishes, but this idea would, we fear, be treated up to snuff and contempted views. We should probably in that case be told that we were actuated by a "regard for the interests of one particular spot," meaning thereby the Presidency, which contains seven ninths of the population, and supplies three fifths of the revenues of the Empire. We should be told that the whole empire is to be regarded as one and indivisible, and that the only means by which it can be benefited is that of making Bombay the Steam port of India. We had also intended to add a word about the common sense of placing the larger vessels on that line which has the largest portion of traffic, and furnishes the largest number of passengers and packets, and on which those vessels would consequently afford the greatest amount of convenience to the public,—and of planting the smaller steamers on the shorter and less important route, in which the passengers and packets would be sure not to exceed the capacity of the branch vessels; but we are checked by the recollection that common sense is perhaps the last consideration which has weight in Councils of State, from which it continues to be excluded long after it has pervaded the rest of the community.

Whether the new proposal of the Peninsular Company, which would go far to deprive us of the advantages of intercourse by steam altogether, be accepted by the Home Government or not, it is certain that this Association does intend to derive from the straight line from Galle to Aden, and call at Bombay, on its outward and homeward voyage, to fill up with passengers, if such an arrangement should be insisted on by Government, or appear advantageous to the interests of the Company. This divergence would be only less inconvenient to the public at Calcutta, Madras and Ceylon, than the project of taking the vessels altogether from us, and bestowing them on Bombay. It would occasion a loss, under the most favorable circumstances, of five days to us; and it would be contrary to the pledge of the Peninsular Company with the Indian subscribers, who gave their capital with the clear understanding that the direct route, and that alone, should be maintained. The only parties who have a right to complain of this measure are the Indian members of the Association. It has been urged that the aid which the Company obtained from India was so inconsiderable, and the number of Indian subscribers so small, that their interests ought not to be permitted to outweigh those of the large majority of home subscribers. To the extent which has been cast on the Indian public that they did not adequately support the scheme, and ought to hold their tongues, we reply that it is little to the purpose. The support which the Peninsular Company needs is that of our passengers, not of our capital. Capital can be got any day in London for any scheme which promises to pay five per cent. There is said to be at this time Twenty-five millions of Capital unemployed in that city, and if the Company were sure of a hundred passengers on each side, every month, there would be no difficulty in raising funds enough to build half a dozen vessels. As a practical question, we are not disposed to lay any particular stress on the bad faith which is involved in this deviation to Bombay, however deeply we may regret it. If it be found that the vessels should go out of the route from Galle to Aden and call at Bombay for additional passengers—if this be the only plan which will prevent the relinquishment of the enterprise—then that they should continue to run for a short time on the straight line, and then be taken off altogether. Those who subscribed their capital, expected a return, and it is easy to suppose that they would rather sanction the sailing of the vessels at Bombay, if that alone could give them a suitable dividend, than risk the loss of their money by the eventual abandonment of the route. Even if the Indian subscribers had taken up one half of the entire capital of the Company, the disposition to turn out of the way, as the only means of avoiding a loss, would perhaps have been as strong on this side the Isthmus, as it is supposed to be in London.

We think therefore that the strongest argument for continuing the line direct from Suva to Calcutta, is not that which appeals to the charge of breach of faith, but that which belongs to the money branch of the subject. Let it be clearly shown that the same advantage in point of speed will be conferred on Bombay, and on the places which lie nearest to it, by giving official support to the plan of having large steamers for the longer run, and branch steamers for the short run to Bombay, as by depriving the other Presidencies and Ceylon of the advantage of Steam communication, and sending the larger vessels to Bombay; and that adequate encouragement may be given for a less sum to the plan which equally embraces the interests of all India, than to that which limits the benefit in a great measure to one port,—and we may hope to produce some conviction on the minds even of those in our native land whose predilections attach them to Bombay.

THE CASE OF THE NATIVE CHRISTIAN AND HIS WIFE.—Since we last wrote on this subject we have had an opportunity of learning further particulars of the case, and are inclined to think that the information we have now obtained is authentic, and may be received with confidence. It appears that on the 27th of October last, a complaint was made to the Magistrate of the St-Fergunah by the father of the girl, who of a respectable Kest, that during his absence from home on the preceding day, his house had been forcibly entered and plundered, and that his daughter who had not lived for eight years with her husband, had been carried off, and was then held in durance in Calcutta. A warrant was immediately issued to a Sheriff and trustworthy constable directing him to release the woman from restraint if she was detained against her will, and to give her such protection to the Magistrate's Court as would enable her to appear and give her deposition. The constable found her in a closed room at the Medical College, and as she begged to be released, he brought her straight to the Magistrate on the evening of the 27th, when she again stated her unwillingness to remain with her husband, with whom she had not resided for eight years. The next day, her deposition and that of the Prosecutor's witnesses, and the examination of the Defendant, Dwarkpath were taken. No order was passed as to the custody or guardianship of the woman. She was simply released from whatever restraint she was under by her husband, as she was sufficiently advanced in years and discretion to judge for herself.

This places the matter in question in a different point of view. It does not appear that the Magistrate assumed those functions which belong only to the Civil Court. He did not decide the question whether the woman was to live with her Christian husband or her heathen father, but simply released her from restraint, allowing her to choose her own course. It excites the Magistrate from the course with which a partial knowledge of circumstances has led men of great benevolence and conscientiousness to visit him; at the same time it serves to confirm the view which we took of the legal points of the question;—that the right of determining with whom a Hindoo girl, married to one who has abjured Hindooism, is to live, does not belong to the province of the Magistrate, but to the Civil Courts. We have seen no argument to shake our position, that a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights, being of the nature of a civil suit, may be brought at any time within the limitation fixed for Civil Actions, and that in deciding the question, the Court would be under no necessity of having recourse to Hindoo law, but would be bound to regulate its decision by the principles of justice, equity and good conscience.

As to the punishment inflicted on Dwarknath for a breach of the peace, we cannot consider it disproportionate to the offence, when we learn that he admitted his having forced an entry into the house of his father-in-law, with three European sailors and five common Portuguese. Such an outrage as this demanded a severe visitation. Fortunately, it was a market day, and the village was comparatively empty. Had this not been the case, it is not improbable that the populace would have taken up the cause of the Kest, and resented the gross indignity which had been offered to him. Had an affray occurred, it is difficult to say how it might have ended. The conduct of Dwarknath was most unchristian and flagitious, and though we shall, we hope, always be found at our post defending the rights and privileges of Native Christians against all opponents, yet we must say that a more unsafe case upon which to raise the question of privilege, could scarcely have occurred.

THE BRIDGE AT BALU.—A week or two ago we stated that an ineffectual effort was made during the administration of Lord Auckland to obtain from Government one-half the expense of erecting a Suspension Bridge over the creek at Balu, about six miles above Calcutta on the opposite bank of the river. The whole cost was estimated at 40,000 Rs. and the Magistrate of the district of Hooghly in which it lies, obtained large subscriptions from the Native Zemindars in the hope that if they contributed one moiety of the expense, the rest would be furnished from the public funds. But the project, after having been long weighed by His Lordship was at length laid on the shelf, when the expenses of the Afghan war had run the Treasury dry. Unfortunately, a considerable portion of the Native subscriptions was diverted to other objects than that for which they had been given, and much disgust was thereby created in the Native community. The project has been, we hear, warmly espoused by the Deputy Governor of Bengal, who is anxious to carry out the plan, and to contribute half the expense from the revenues of the country, on condition that the other half shall be made up, as originally proposed, by the community. A great effort will therefore be made to raise the necessary funds, and we hope the Native Zemindars of the district will come forward with liberal assistance. But the frequent disappointment of their hopes, and the mistrust which has been created in their minds, will possibly operate against the subscriptions, and it may happen that the whole sum required from the community may not be raised before Mr. Bird relinquishes the Government of Bengal. In that case the project will of course fall to the ground. The indignation to devote a portion of the vast resources of this magnificent empire to local improvements, to the construction of roads, canals and bridges, is not admitted by Government. It is not as yet a fixed principle of our administration that objects of public utility and convenience possess any claim on the revenues of the country, though those revenues can be readily lavished in excess.

Litigation and perverting the course of justice is only occasionally and at long intervals, that we have an enlightened ruler who recognises the importance of these improvements, and is disposed to assist them by donations from the public purse. It is therefore the more necessary to make advantage of so fortunate a contingency, when it does occur, and to draw as much benefit as possible from it.

Supposing therefore the public subscriptions should not be equal to one half the cost of the bridge, what is to be done? To what other sources can we look for support? To what, indeed, but to the surplus of the Fery Funds, which could not be more equitably or advantageously expended than in the erection of such a bridge. We do not allude to the old accumulation of fifteen years which stood at the credit of the Hooghly district before the Committees were appointed, and which amounts to 70,000 Rupees. That sum is we fear over lost to public improvement. We refer to the annual surplus, which to our deep mortification, we hear, has been devoted for the next year or two to the construction of some road, seven hundred miles off. This is scarcely just; the district which contributes these funds has the first claim upon them; and the bridge at Balu has a higher claim than that at Calcutta. The Hooghly district yields annually 9,000 Rupees from the surplus of its fery receipts; but unhappily it is still considered only in the light of an experimental district,—as though Government could ever think of dispensing with a separate Magistracy in that rising suburb,—and its fery funds are paid into the treasury of the neighbouring district, and are thus lost to Hooghly. Now as the Government of Bengal has generously undertaken to defray one half the expense of the bridge from the public exchequer, we would make our humble suit for the further grant of one year's surplus of the Hooghly Fery funds; and that upon this most substantial and incontrovertible ground, that nothing will contribute more to the expedientiation of that fund than the completion of the road to the ferries by the construction of the Bridge. But whatever is done, must be done quickly. Unless the foundation of the bridge be laid during the existing administration, there can be little hope that it will be completed during the present generation.

THE KIDNED CHILDREN.—The Hurkara has received a reply to the remarks which we offered on the obstacles which were said to have been thrown in the way of giving to the victims rescued from the Khonds a knowledge of Christian truth. The authority on which this defence is set up, is considered as unquestionable by our contemporary as to induce him to offer his own seal to it, and he looks for our concurrence in its validity. We are happy to find that those who have the deepest interest in this matter, have thought it so necessary to come forward and offer some explanation of their conduct. At the same time we are sorry that we cannot concur in the complacent view which our contemporary takes of the defence. We trust he will bear with us while we state the doubts of that close examination which we have given to it.

It appears that the Missionaries applied to the public Authorities to be entrusted with the education of the victims which had been recommended by the Khoondas, but the request has not been granted. To this it is replied that the petition was not addressed to the Governor of Madras, but to its official Agent in the Khoondas. This circumstance is altogether immaterial. Capt. McPherson was the channel through which the application was to be made to his own Government, and the only result of this explanation is to exonerate the Government at the Madras Presidency from all blame in this matter, and to place it upon the shoulders of the local Authorities at Coimbatore.

Neither is it at all germane to the matter that the letter was written by one Missionary, with the concurrence of his brethren. Such is the usual routine of all public business; and it would be quite as preposterous to say that a letter written by the Secretary to Government at Madras, and approved of by the Governor in Council, was not an official communication, as to insinuate that a letter signed by one Missionary with the concurrence of his associates, was a private paper.

Capt. McPherson had no power to comply with the wishes of the Missionaries, and therefore sent the letter to the Magistrate of Ganjam. Mr. Bamerman. Yet we are subsequently told in the defence of that officer that so far from having refused to give children over to the Missionaries, that he had given them six children, besides the four we have already alluded to. So it seems that Capt. McPherson had power to comply with the request of the missionaries. This glaring discrepancy can only be explained by supposing that the letter in question asked some assistance from Government for the maintenance of the children; and that the ten children whom that Officer did actually deliver to them, were received gratis. Of this we shall of course hear hereafter.

The Magistrate at Ganjam, Mr. Bamerman, received the application, but whether he ever forwarded it to the Government of Madras, the Deposition of the Harbors says not. It was manifestly his duty either to have complied with the petition, or to have forwarded it to his own Government. He did neither; there lies the application still in his office at Ganjam, unless indeed it has been sent on since we held up this culpable negligence to public indignation. It was not so much however to Capt. McPherson's conduct in this matter, that our remarks were directed, as to the cool way in which this application had been laid on the shelf by the Magistrate; but when we are told by our contemporary that his informant did not know whether the application had ever been forwarded or not, we are strongly tempted to ask how it happened that the Officer entrusted with Khoond affairs who is said to have felt so deep an interest in the welfare of the victims, should have allowed a month after month to elapse without once enquiring whether Mr. Bamerman had ever sent up the letter to Government, or chiding him for his indolence or neglect, when it was found that he had neglected it.

Our correspondent had said "that many of the children have grown up under charge of the Thakidars of Coimbatore to be men and women, and that the manner in which many of the latter are allowed to run wild is revolting." The Advertiser fully corroborated the former part of this statement. It admits that the girls were removed eight or nine months ago from the charge of the Thakidars. They had therefore grown up till that very recent period under his charge. We are happy, however, to learn that among eight or nine girls, who it appears have been allowed to remain even beyond the age when marriages are contracted in India, amidst Native associations, under the protection of a Native Thakidar, there has not been a single case of immorality.

Our correspondent had said that they were freely given over to the Officers as servants, while the application made for them by the missionaries was neglected. The defence says that only three have thus been assigned as servants to the officers. To the assertion that they had been given up in some instances to the sepoy, who made Hindoos or Mahomedans of them, the Harbors's opponent gives a point blank contradiction.

The Harbors claims great credit for Capt. McPherson, for having consulted Dr. Duff as the best mode of giving a Christian education to these children. Now Dr. Duff has no local knowledge or experience which should qualify him to give any opinion on the subject with confidence; and, moreover, his hands are full and more than full of other and more pressing matters. It seems therefore very strange and altogether unaccountable that the Officer in question should entirely have overlooked the fact that there was a body of Missionaries who had been laboring faithfully, disinterestedly and successfully in the country itself, for more than twenty years, infinitely more competent to the work than any missionaries in Calcutta. It seems strange and unaccountable that while the Khoond agent, in his deep anxiety for the spiritual welfare of these children, directed his enquiries to a distance of several hundred miles, he should so entirely have forgotten that an application had been made to him by Missionaries, so to speak, on the spot, for permission to receive these victims and to train them up in a knowledge of Christian duties, which application he had handed over to the Magistrate, without once enquiring what the Magistrate had done with it. The only reason which appears to be offered for this neglect of opportunities at hand, is that the Missionary at Ganjam did not succeed in proselyting two Khoond girls during the several months in which Capt. McPherson is said to have kept them in his own house. Whether the Missionary was required to proceed daily to afford Christian instruction to the girls at the residence of that Officer, or whether they were sent as a kind of day scholars to the Missionary, we are not told, but the "good work of evangelization," was not completed, and "proselytes they were not made." The want of success in this effort was of course attributed to the Missionary, who are we informed "seemed to take no sort of interest in the matter." But we question whether even Dr. Duff would have consented to receive the two girls into the bosom of the Christian church after so brief and strange a system of tuition. The Officer should have applied at Bishop's College for some Parnassian Minister, who might have administered the sacrament of baptism upon the Anglo-Catholic principle that its validity and virtues depend not upon the faith or knowledge of the recipient, but upon the apostolic succession of the Priest.

Really, if there be no other reason than which which has been alleged for the contempt which has been shown upon the application of the Missionaries, the same will be the same for opinion, and affirm that "there does not appear to be among the local authorities the same sense of the responsibility which begins with the rescue of the victims, which pervades the minds of the Christian community in our own land."

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 30.

The papers of the day give a long report of the progress made by the Agricultural Society of Bhagpore, which appears to have surpassed all other branches in the vigor and success of its exertions. We regret that we cannot make room for the whole report; but we cannot forego the pleasure of transcribing the following tribute so justly paid at the last meeting, by the Commissioner, Mr. G. F. Brown, to the indefatigable industry of the Secretary Major Napleton:—

"Gentlemen, though it may not be considered quite regular for the Chairman of a Public Meeting to move any resolution for general adoption, yet I hope you will hold me excused for doing so on the present occasion. You have just passed a vote of well merited thanks on our indefatigable Secretary, but I wish you to do something more than this; I wish you to prove by deeds, not words, how grateful you feel for his meritorious exertions. You all know that a year ago such a society as this was never thought of at Bhagpore, and that six months ago, our present flourishing Public Garden was an idle field. Within this short period, the ground has been purchased and cleared, walks have been made, walls dug, show rooms built, trees planted, flowers of all descriptions brought from Calcutta, potatoes from Fettesburg, cotton from the East, tobacco from the West, and all sorts of rare and valuable seeds from England.

"For all this I tell you again and again, we are indebted to Major Napleton.

"But next to this, we owe it to Major Napleton's zeal, constant supervision, and good management that twice as much has been effected with the money which we subscribed towards the undertaking, than we could have reasonably expected. He has made 500 Rupees go as far as another would have done in Rs. 1000."

"We are happy to find from the Delhi Gazette that "Bundelkand appears to be in a settled state."

Gulam Alee Khan has been appointed Grand Vizier of the Emperor of Delhi. He has made his own terms, they say, with his master, and has the entire management of affairs under his control. These affairs no longer embrace the external and internal relations of India, but are simply confined to the disbursement of a few lakhs of Rupees a year.

The Register announces that the sale right of reprinting Martin Chuzzlewit in India has been purchased of Chapman and Hall, the booksellers, by the Proprietor of that journal. Doubtless the exclusive republication of any work of Dickens will give value to any paper, but experience teaches that no paper can safely rely on these borrowed sources for the increase or even maintenance of its circulation, and that a large judgment, a nervous style, and impartiality of views are of themselves quite sufficient to insure extensive popularity, and that without these qualifications no paper can long stand its ground.

There is little news from the Punjab this morning. Only, it is said that the foreign officers are more than ever anxious to quit the scene of trouble and uncertainty which the Punjab now presents, and that H. E. H. Singh has resolved to decline General Ventura's offer of security for the 27 lakhs of Rupees which General Aivala is said to have taken out of the country.

The news from Ceylon is, that the Roman Catholics are anxious to throw their present priests overboard, and to procure new ones from Coshin. The Advertiser also states in reference to

Mr. Langford; "The public will learn with indignation that Mr. Langford, the talented, learned, impartial and independent Judge of Calcutta, has been officially informed by Government that it is intended to suspend him." The real reason, says that paper, are too well known to require mention. Now as we have begun to take an interest in Ceylon matters, and know nothing of the real reasons, we wish the Athenaeum would give them to us, always supposing that they would not involve him in an action for libel.

—Last night's Gazette contains an amended draft of an Act for the establishment of a new Court for hearing and determining petty civil cases. Strangely to say the amendments are so numerous that there is not, we believe, a single paragraph of substance of the old Act to be found in the new, yet it is called the same Act, on the principle on which the Irishman persisted in calling his knife the same knife, though the handle had been changed once and the blade twice. We have not time to discuss this important Act this week, but shall not forget it in our next number.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 1.

—The Temperance Society of Calcutta, has resolved to open a second Temperance Tavern in Grant's Lane. One has already been opened in Nadia bazar, and has, we suppose met with sufficient encouragement to induce the benevolent projectors to venture on a second.

—A meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held yesterday to urge on the Home Authorities not to adopt any plan of Steam communication that did not embrace the direct line between Suez and Calcutta.

—Intelligence has been received that the two parties have come to an engagement at Gwalior, in which the adherents of the Khawaja wallah were defeated. He was loaded with iron and sent to Dhulepore to Col. Spence. Yet we were told last week that the Colonel had made over the Presidency to Sir Ramesh Chandra Sen and had vainly endeavored to pass through the Gwalior states on his way to Nagpore, and had in consequence proceeded to Agra. The delivery of the Khawaja, it is supposed, will put an end to all hopes of earning any ribbons or crosses in the battle field, and lead to the immediate acceptance of our terms, which embrace the disbanding of all the troops of the state.

—An Address to the Sheriff is in circulation requesting him to call a meeting of the inhabitants of Calcutta, to consider the present position of Steam communication, and to adopt such measures as may be necessary to secure a permanent direct communication by Steam between Calcutta, Madras, Galle and Suez.

—A most distressing accident has just befallen Mr. Ireland, Chief Officer of the Northumbria, one of the most active, promising and beloved officers in the port. He was standing on the vessel with a long white-haired man, which he was drawing to himself from the captain, when the lock hitched somewhere; the piece went off, and its contents were lodged in his thigh. Professional aid was immediately obtained, but the injury was of such a nature as to require the amputation of the limb.

—We are happy to learn from the Englishman of this morning, that "the Calcutta public may confidently rely upon the Steam question being settled to their entire satisfaction." We should have received the announcement with more pleasure, if our contemporary had informed us in what manner it is to be so satisfactorily settled—we mean exclusive of the rail road from Bombay to Calcutta, which we fear is too remote a blessing for any of the present generation to hope to enjoy. Confidence, said Edmund Burke, is a plant of slow growth, and on the present occasion it appears to have been sipped in the bud.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2.

—The Star states, that it is rumored that Raja Gola Singh intends to withdraw altogether from Lahore with Hears Singh to his own dominions in Jambou, and to leave the Sethis to fight the matter out among themselves. For this determination the public was fully prepared. At Lahore he will always be exposed to a collision with our Government. In his Hill territories he may maintain a position free from all interruptions, and even take an opportunity of carrying a slice out of the Chikna empire for himself.

—The candidates for the office of Secretary to the Military fund are growing up again like Shakespeare's man in buckram. In addition to Capt. Doveton and Major Hough we have now: Major Colclough and Major Payne in the field and Dr. Lightfoot.

—The following is the number of letters and papers received by the Star Chopra at Bombay:

Letters. Papers. Boxes.
Via Falmouth,	17,004	22,940 80
Via Marseilles,	4,048	8,784 27
Foreign,	1,370	4,800 11
Total Letters,	22,221	35,504 98
Total Papers,	35,045
Total Covers,	58,723

It will thus be seen that the interest we feel in home affairs, is these times as great as the interest felt at home in Indian affairs. Ten thousand of our newspapers is the average limit of transmission while we continue to receive more than thirty-five thousand. We wish some of our contemporaries in Calcutta would contrive to obtain from the Post Master General or the Deputy, the number of letters brought on by the Indra. This they can easily do, for Lord Ellenborough's Proclamation against the communication of intelligence of which an officer may become officially cognizant, was issued from the Foreign Department, and refers exclusively to papers and intelligence of a high political character. It has nothing whatever to do with the Home Department, to which the Post Office belongs.

—The Agra Uthar just received says: we have just heard that another fight has taken place at Gwalior, but the Khawaja is sent to Dhulepore. It is somewhat singular that not one of the papers as far as we can recollect, has told the public who this most formidable Khawaja wallah is; who was his father and his grandfather; what are his resources and his pretensions, and how he got into power.

—The Madras papers state, that the new Act forbidding the embarkation of Coolies from any port but that of Calcutta will be particularly hard upon the wives of a great many labourers now at the Mauritius who are most anxious to join their husbands. We think the Editor is wrong. The Act forbids only the expectation of labourers, which means men; it says nothing of women, and no Captain who should take the wives and children of those who are on the island could be considered as infringing the law.

—The Dahli Gazette states that this magnificent steamer, "Two hundred heekery loads of boards have lately been despatched from the Dahli Magazine to Foropore."

—Major General Churchill—whose name of the papers murdered a few weeks ago—has joined the Commander-in-Chief at Agra, so that his Excellency is now surrounded by the whole of the Imperial Staff of the Bengal Army.

—We regret to state that Mr. Ireland, the Chief Officer of the Northumbria, whose thigh was amputated last week, expired on Saturday at 4 p.m. His remains were followed to the grave by his brother officers, and many of the crew of the vessel to whom he had ordered himself by his kindness and consideration.

—The Harbours states that a large House of business in Calcutta, sought the protection of the Bankrupt Court on Saturday last, but that an order was passed by the Court, on which account the same is suppressed.

—The Star states, that intelligence that the Khawaja wallah was conveying to the British Resident has been received. But the Agra Uthar says that it is rumored in the city that he has made his escape and that it was effected by collusion.

—On Saturday last, the members of the earliest firm of Ferguson, Brothers and Co. were respectively sworn to the truth of the substance of the separate estate of cash, and then in due form discharged, without any opposition whatever.

—The Englishman says that Hears Singh, when General Vintura applied to him for leave of absence, adopted an ingenious contrivance to him responsible for 27 lakhs of Rupees.

—The Star states, that Hears Singh, by sending to him for 100 Rupees a day; at which rate he would be nearly Eighty years paying up the whole sum.

—The seventh and last Criminal Session of the year was opened yesterday, The Chief Justice and both the Punes Judges were on the bench. Sir Lawrence Peel charged the Grand Jury, commenced on the lightness of the Calendar, and said "with one or two exceptions all the cases were of a trivial nature. His Lordship also stated that the Magistrates had much more success in working the committal than they had formerly been able to."

—A Board of Officers has been appointed to assemble to-morrow morning in Fort William, to enquire whether the uncommon sickness which prevails in the 10th Foot, arises from their location.

—The Bombay Times state on the authority of letters from Mandavia, that the wing of the 2d Europeans which has been sent to Karachi is, if possible, in a more debilitated state from sickness than the troops already in that Galtje, Sindh. Of 504 of all ranks there were on the 12th November not fewer than 283 sick!

—The Musorie Bank has just declared a dividend of 12 per cent., and determined to increase its capital stock to the sum of Five Lakhs of Rupees. The existence and flourishing condition of a Bank in such a nook as Musorie, where there is no commerce requiring assistance, is a remarkable circumstance. It has been determined by the shareholders to adopt the rules of the Agra Bank as it respects Loans, Deposits and Mortgages. The Bank is therefore the medium of accommodating the officers of the public service with loans, on good security, from the stores of other officers who have accumulated a little capital.

—The Harbours states it as the opinion of those who are entitled to form an opinion in the North West Provinces that the present movement of the Governor General to Agra, is occasioned chiefly by the unsettled state of things in the Punjab. We learn from the same source that terms have been proposed to the Authorities at Lahore, and that they consist only of a demand for the receipt of a Resident at Lahore, and the right of marching troops through the Punjab to Peshawar, if necessary. As to the former, it is not many months since Mr. Clerk was appointed Envoy to the Court at Lahore, and the subsequent withdrawal of the Envoy, and the substitution of a mere Agent in his stead was understood to have originated in objections offered by the Court in Leadenhall Street, not by the Court of Lahore. As to the latter requisition, we thought Lord Ellenborough had washed his hands clean of Afghanistan, and had for ever established the India as the ultimate and impassable limit of our movements.

—We have sometimes felt our westerner annoyed at the self glorification of our Western brother, without however feeling our regard for him in the least diminished, for we have all our weak points. But in the number which has just come in of the 22th November, this weakness is exhibited so prominently as to deserve particular attention. The Bombay Times is not, it seems, in good odor with the public authorities, and certain official advertisements which belong of right to the leading journal, are given to the minor papers that, Presumably, a practice which he reproaches in the following terms: "We believe it has long been pretty generally known that the circulation of the Bombay Times is somewhere about double that of all the English papers put together printed in the Western Presidency—if the Government Gazette be excepted from the number; and our first and second page columns will show that in whatever other papers the advertisements of private parties may be inserted, they are as all events sure to make their way to our office. It will equally be seen from our pages, that the degree of publicity given through their medium alone is regarded sufficient in matters of the utmost importance—and that, after nearly all the newspaper readers in Western India have had the means of perusing an advertisement in the Times, it is considered quite superfluous to exhibit it to them a second time through any other medium. Without any very exact means of knowing, but upon a general view of the total amount of readers in the Presidency, we should say that there were not 50 who looked into the columns of Spektrator who did not also study the contents of our own—but that there were at least 500 who read the Banker Times and no other presidency paper. We in this respect possess, in relation to our local brethren, a more prominent place than our gigantic London namesake holds amongst his—we greatly more outnumber all the papers of Western India than he does those of the British metropolis. It will seem singular to our readers after this to be informed that there are certain official advertisements of a very important nature, which, though generally to be found in the Banker or Government Gazette, are by no means of course ever to be seen in the Banker Times.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 7.

The Preliminary Steam Meeting was held yesterday morning at the Town Hall. There was a very large attendance. Mr. F. Millet was in the chair. The business of the meeting was completed in the following Resolution that "it be referred to a Committee to prepare resolutions to be laid before a General Meeting to consider what steps should be taken with reference to the communication lately made by the R. I. and China Association, on the contemplated arrangements for altering the present line of Steam Navigation between India and Great Britain." The names of the gentlemen appointed on the committee are the following:—Messrs. W. P. Grant, Elliott, C. B. Greenleaf, L. J. Grey, T. Leach, Remy, Lieutenant Colonel Taylor, J. Ames, Stephens, Colonel Forbes and Newcomen.

The Delhi Gazette just received gives information from Cabul to the effect that Dost Mahomed was becoming daily more oppressive and unpopular, and less able to maintain his position. He had sent a letter to Poor Mahomed Khan at Peshawar, recently concluding with him on the death of Shah Singh, but recently instigating him to revolt. The fact of the Dost's weakness is distinctly proved by his inability to take advantage of the present favourable opening for regaining Peshawar. A report prevailed at Ludhiana on the 8th of November that a large body of the Khyberites had come down and attacked Jemrood, and that 500 of the garrison had been killed. It is said that Yusef Khan, the commandant at Peshawar, allied with a large body and drove back the Khyberites.

The Candahar Sardars have begun to read the Khosha and to coin money in the name of the King of Persia. It is distinctly stated that Meer Meera Ali, our ally, to whom we have made over twenty half Solahs in its treacherous correspondence with these Sardars, has promised to kick up a dust at Killypore, if they will attack Killypore.

General Ventura has succeeded in obtaining leave at last from the South Government, and is packing up as rapidly as possible for Ludhiana. He is leaving the Punjab for ever, in which he abhors his widow.

A meeting of the Indian Shareholders of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company is to be held at the Town Hall to-morrow at 3 P. M. when Capt. McPherson will doubtless deliver some explanation of the merits of this Association, which have wanted so much anxiety in Calcutta and Madras, and afforded so much satisfaction to the community at Bombay.

REVIEWS.

We regret much that the following extracts reached us after the publication of the Letter in our last number.

In the Letter regarding Infanticide (Spektrator page 786, in the 11th line from the bottom, for "appointing the taxing Committee," read "electing the taxing Committee."

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following correspondence from the Friend of India—

	On's Ex. Ac.
Capt. G. P. Brooks, ... to Dec. 1844, 20	0
B. H. Rattray, Esq., ... to Dec. 1844, 48	0
B. Bannerman, Esq., ... to Nov. 1845, 54	0
W. Palmer, Esq., ... to Nov. 1844, 20	0
The Hon. Sir A. O'Hanlon, ... to March 1845, 100	0
Rev. J. Caldwell, ... to Dec. 1844, 10	0
J. A. Leach, Esq., ... to Dec. 1844, 20	0
W. Melville, Esq., ... to Dec. 1844, 48	0
Idem H. S. S. ... to Nov. 1844, 20	0
Major Gen. H. T. Tapp, ... to Dec. 1844, 20	0
Raboo Kaleschander Ray, ... to Jan. 1844, 10	0

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

THE KHOOND CHILDREN.

The arrival of an Overland Mail is to us very much what a foreign war is to Government—it causes the whole of our attention to be turned to the subject of local interests which are waiting the attention they merit, as the time when the great boom comes to clear all away; and in the case of Government, it is to be seen every thing that is going on in the world, and we have more than the usual amount of interest, which we purpose to pick out from the heap, now that we can again look peacefully at them. The first which we select is the matter of the Khoond children, regarding which, as may be remembered, we printed an article a few weeks ago, taking for our text some observations on the subject, which we extracted in the Friend of India, of the 23d ultimo. Since that time we have received much information on the points touched upon by our contemporary; and we think we shall be able to show the truth of the statements which we have received, give anything but a faithful picture of the condition of the rescued Khoond children. We reproduce the article from the Friend of India, in which these statements are made, on the authority of a correspondent, and now proceed to notice as briefly as possible the errors which it contains—

"It is understood as a fact, that the petition written some time ago to the Governor of Madras, is still in the Agent's Office at Gajagan." Now, there is no such document, as that referred to, and never was—in existence. The Missionaries do not memorialise Government; but addressed Captain McPherson. It was a letter written by our Missionary, and "concerned" in by another, to forward the application to the Gajagan Magistrate, and he did so. Whether Mr. Bannerman forwarded it to Government, or whether it is still lying in his office, we do not pretend to know. Again, it is stated, that many of the grown up victims have been allowed to run wild in a revolting manner, under the charge of the Treasurer of Government. The obvious meaning of this passage is that the girls are abandoned to gross immorality, for no one could expect to see such a social refinement in a band of young savages. If the wildest upstart of meanest uncivilised, we have no doubt, that the statement is absolutely true, though we should think it extremely unnecessary to say anything which must be so obvious to all eyes. If, if the statement means, that the girls are given a life of immorality, we have authority for asserting, that it is altogether untrue. Capt. McPherson, since his took charge, has had all girls under his care, and out of this large number there has not been a single case of immorality. The girls were removed eight or ten months ago, from the charge of the Treasurer of Government, they have been carefully watched and the strictest pains taken to ensure for them a respectable settlement in life. Capt. McPherson, with much tact and good judgment has been at the head of the girls, and has succeeded in making the marriages of these rescued Khoond girls, with the men of another class of Khoonds, who do not possess the abominable habits of the first class, among whom female infanticide prevails to a lamentable extent. This was a work of much difficulty. The Khoonds at first rejected an alliance with women, who had been educated in the duty and given up to sacrifice; and the girls turned away with equal repugnance, from men, known to be guilty of eating cows and accused of devoting themselves to idolatry. However, after much exertion, the repugnance of both parties was overcome, and the desirable object effected. There is good hope, that these alliances will prove extremely serviceable, when aided by the education of the girls, of rooting out in time the melancholy practice of female infanticide.

Now, with regard to the story told in the Friend of India, that "one of the young women, threatened to hang herself if she were not given away in marriage, and so convinced was the officer in charge of the sincerity of her intentions, that there was a general search among the only boys for a volunteer husband"—Let us look at the real history of this affair. About two years ago, Colonel Campbell, permitted two Khoond boys, who had grown up in his house, to promise marriage to two of the victim girls, when the parties should have advanced somewhat further in life. Some time afterwards, when we have above stated, Capt. McPherson removed the girls for the purpose of forming alliances between them and sons of the other infanticide Khoonds, these two girls, now the four and twelve years from their betrothal, did declare, that if they were not restored to their pledged husbands, they would kill themselves. Well, if they were brought back to Capt. McPherson, and he had taken the opportunity of the occasion to make an effort towards a commencement of the good work of evangelisation; and the parties were assembled, when Capt. McPherson, agreed to delay their marriage until they had been instructed in Christianity and received as Christians by the Missionary. For this purpose, Capt. McPherson, had to wait some time, and if the effort did not succeed, it was the fault of the Missionary, who, as we are informed, seemed to take no sort of interest in the matter, and possibly he was not made aware of it.

The next story told relative to a Khoond boy having been made a Mahomedan by a nominal Christian is true; but this was a case of difference of opinion, and not a part of the policy, and the assertion, which follows to the effect, that children are given over to the sorcery, who make the Hindu or the Christian, and the fact, that the Agent not having given over one single child to a sorcery. As to their being "freely given over as servants" to officers, only three have been seen so given up, and the fact, that Capt. McPherson having invariably refused to give them over to the missionaries, he has given them to his children, because the four to whom we have already alluded. We know not what may have been the results in these cases; but if it were no better than that of the effort above recorded, the Missionaries have not done so much good for the Khoond children, as the "nominal Christian," who made a Mahomedan of the child entrusted to his care! We have reason to believe, that Capt. McPherson, so far from opposing any obstacle to the evangelisation of the rescued children, is not only willing, but anxious to conclude, by every means in his power, to this great end, and we believe, that he is ever consulting Dr. Duff and others as to the best means to be pursued. Dr. Duff can tell us whether we have been misinformed upon this subject, and we have before said, Capt. McPherson is anxious to employ as indirect agents for the suppression of infanticide, and the Friend of India will, we are sure, give the same acknowledgment, that he is in saying, that there does not "exist among the local authorities, on the Khoond borders, the same sense of the responsibility which pervades the minds of the Christian community of our land." As for ourselves, we entirely reject anything, which we may have written, on a false view, under a misapprehension of the facts of the case. We believe, that Capt. McPherson is a very philanthropist man, feel deeply indebted for his noble efforts, and we hope, that he will be as humane, at the risk he is of his own life, has done all that it became him to do, as an officer and a Christian. The facts, which we have stated, are true, and we are sure, that we have some good that we have some good that we have some good, and we trust, that the Friend of India will do the same. As regards the general question, of extreme infanticide, we hope, that it will not be very long before we return it.—Mark. Dec. 6.

NOTE ON AFFAIRS.

A friend at Simla writes to us as follows:—"Mr. Clerk goes down to-morrow. He is, I am rejoiced to say, looking very well; and not

REGISTER OFFICE
FOR THE SALE AND PURCHASE OF
COMPANY'S PAPER—BANK SHARES—AND SHARED IN OTHER JOINT STOCK SOCI-ETIES—BILLS OF EXCHANGE—BANK OF EN-GLAND NOTES—SOVEREIGNS, AND DOLLARS.
MONEY INVESTED AND LOANS NEGOTIATED.
No. 18, Writers' Buildings. J. W. HOBKETS.

BATHGATE AND CO.
INVITE ATTENTION TO THE UNDF
MENTIONED ARTICLES PREPARED
AT THEIR DISPENSARY, 4 AND 5,
OLD COURT HOUSE STREET.
CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION OF JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA.
CONCENTRATED COMPOUND SYRUP
OF JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA.
CONCENTRATED ESSENCE OF
JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA.
CONCENTRATED SYRUP OF SENNA.
FLUID MAGNesia AND LEMON SYRUP.
LAVENDER, HONEY, AND HUNGARY
WATERS.
COLORELESS EFFERVESCENT LEMONADE.
TASTEFUL CASTOR OIL.

MESSRS. J. COCKBURN AND CO.
11, New Broad-street, London.
COMMISSIONS of all kinds executed as formerly. Prices of supplies and rates of Commission, &c., will be communicated by the undersigned on behalf of Messrs. J. C. and Co. in this Presidency.
NICHOL, WILKIE AND CO.
Calcutta, 1st Dec. 1848.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE
ON London, with the guarantee of Messrs.
Globe, James, Kerr and Co. attached in sums of £200, £100, £500, £300, £400, £600, and £1000, at any sight
or date, drawn by
ALLAN PATON AND CO.

TO THE PRINTERS OF INDIA.

MESSRS. W. THORNDIKE AND CO.

at reduced list prices prices of Printing Types, and to add, that they have made a corresponding reduction in the prices of every article connected with a Printing Office. Their specimen books may be sent at all times, by applying to Messrs. W. Thorndike & Co., Calcutta, who are generally so well-assorted on sale, for the supply of immediate demands. Although a great reduction has been made in the prices, no pains will be spared to preserve the reputation of Messrs. W. Thorndike & Co., Calcutta, who are generally so well-assorted on sale, for the supply of immediate demands. Although a great reduction has been made in the prices, no pains will be spared to preserve the reputation of Messrs. W. Thorndike & Co., Calcutta, who are generally so well-assorted on sale, for the supply of immediate demands.

Four-line Text-line and larger sizes	z. d.	s. per lb.
Five-line to Fourteen-line	0 8	0 9
Fourteen-line to Sixteen-line	0 8	0 9
Two-line Pica to Casson	1 0	1 0
Double Fine and Casson Primer	1 0	1 0

COMPLETE FONTS.		A.	B.
English	1	6 4
Pica	1	6 10
Small Pica	1	8 10
Long Primer	1	10 0
Newsoids	2	6 0
Brevier	2	6 0
Minion	3	4 10
Nonpareil	4	8 0
Bary	5	0 0
Cannon	6	0 0
Eleven	10	8 0

Ornaments, Grotes, Grasses, Blacks, Signs, and Superiors, costing the price of the complete Roman Fonts.

Just published at the Serampore Press,
A DICTIONARY,
ENGLISH AND BENGALÉ, FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS.
Price 1 Rupee 4 Annas.
An allowance made to Schools and others taking fifty copies. First Edition 1822.

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 467. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6th, 1848.

Price 3d. 6s. 8d. monthly; or 38s. yearly if paid in advance.

OVERLAND MAIL.

THE next Steamer with Mail for Suez will leave Bombay on the 1st of January. Notice accordingly is hereby given, that the latest safe date for the transmission of Letters from Calcutta, which may be intended for this opportunity, will be Tuesday, the 19th, instant.

For William,
General Post Office,
The 1st Dec. 1848.

L. J. B. GREY,
Off. Post Master General.

THE PRESENT STATE OF CALCUTTA.—The funds devoted by Government to the lighting and watering of Calcutta, and the repair of its roads, have run short, by about 12,000 Rupees a year, or 100 Pounds Sterling a month; and for want of this small sum the City of Palaces is enveloped in a cloud of dust. The Magistrates have met to consider the means of relief; but no plan has been adopted, and the dust becomes every day more dense and insufferable. Some have proposed to pare down the allowances of the municipal officers; and two of the Magistrates have gone up to Government with a suggestion—rejected by the other moiety of the bench—to raise the House tax from five, to six and a half per cent.

We are happy to hear that the proposal has been at once rejected by the Governor of Bengal. We hope all such unworthy expedients will be rejected with equal promptitude. The expense should be thrown upon the general revenues of the country. It is time for Government to take a liberal and comprehensive view of its duty towards a city, for which private individuals have done so much, and the public authorities comparatively so little. It is a shame that this noble city, the most magnificent in Asia, the capital of British India, the metropolis of an Empire of Ninety millions, the admiration of all foreigners, should be treated with such ignominious neglect by our rulers. It is to our disgrace that not only are all schemes of improvement discontinued, which will 'cost money', but that provision is not made even for the indispensable comfort of watered roads. One might have thought that the British Government, after having created so mighty an empire in the East, would have felt some degree of national pride in adorning the capital of its power. All other sovereigns, in all other ages, have done so. Had the country been held with equal security and firmness for so long a period, even by the Mahomedans, whom we deem barbarous, they would not have hesitated for two months to lay out a thousand Rupees monthly in allying the dust, and rendering their imperial residence tolerable. Assuredly they would have made improvements, corresponding in some measure with the greatness of the Empire and the majesty of the Government. The Romans adorned even their Provincial Capitals, with a degree of splendour, of which the remains surprise mankind after the lapse of eighteen centuries. Had it fallen to the lot of Napoleon, to have realized his desire of establishing an empire in the East, with how much zeal and energy would he not have urged on the improvement of his metropolis! Even Russia, barbaric Russia, if India had been reckoned among the provinces of its empire, would have spared no funds and no labour to render its metropolis a miniature of the noble capital it has raised on the banks of the Neva. This only England that hesitates to devote a fraction of the general revenues of the empire, to the object of increasing the conveniences and augmenting the beauty of its metropolis. The old spirit of the counting house, which regarded a good Export and Import Warehouse as the most important and ornamental of all buildings, still seems to cling to the Imperial Government, even after it has shed its commercial skin; and the funds required for public improvements, are dolled out with the thrifty parsimony of a pedlar.

If the municipal wants of the town constituted any demand on the treasury of the country, we could account for the hesitation of the public authorities. But we want no aid from home. In our connection with England, it is we who are the givers, and it is she who is the recipient. We require only a generous and judicious distribution of the revenues of the country itself, on objects which shall promote the convenience of the public, and redound to the credit of Government. But the country is in debt! What then; are there to be no public improvements till the public debt is extinct? If so, we must wait till our trust in India has been transferred to some other potentate; for, if we are to judge from the experience of the last eighty years, this Government will always be in debt to the last chapter of its history. But this debt interferes with no utility, which the partialities, the whims, and even the follies of our rulers may require. It was only by the last Mail we were informed that an egregious blunder in legislation, mentioned by the wisdom of Parliament, had cost this country twelve lakhs of Rupees, in ten years. Then, we have spent some nine lakhs of Rupees in a Legislative Member of Council, whose office it is now proposed to abolish as redundant; and we have paid about twenty-two lakhs of Rupees to a Law Commission, of which Government has made little practical use, and which Parliament will probably extinguish in the next session. We have spent lakhs in building new barracks, which the next administration will in all probability abandon, and lakhs on lakhs in military regiments, which have contributed nothing to the strength of the Empire.

All these fantasies and experiments we have not hesitated to feed at the expense of the country, even when its exchequer was burdened with debt, without one twinge of conscience. But when the solid improvement of the metropolis, and the increase of its salubrity, by the opening of new roads, and the formation of squares to dispel malaria were in question, Government could only lend the funds to the Municipal Committee, and take in pledge the annual profits of two state lotteries, till the loan was repaid. And those lotteries were kept up year by year, after their demoralizing effects were fully demonstrated, for the mere purpose of getting back the sum which had been laid out in the metropolis; thus making the encouragement of vice the only means for improving the health and appearance of the city. It may appear ungrateful, after Mr. Bird has so nobly abolished lotteries, to revert to the misdeeds of those who preceded him in the Government; but the Government, however painful, is necessary to show that the Government of India, letting alone the Afghan and Burmah wars, has incurred no small amount of blame for its inactivity when fancies and whims were to be adduced, and its half-heartedness when local improvements were required.

We need the spirit to improve the Metropolis of British India. We want a generous and noble spirit worthy of men who rule ninety millions of subjects, and dispense a revenue of twenty crores of Rupees. It would be a small matter for Government to confine its view to the present exigency, and ally the dust by an order to the Sub-Treasurer for 1000, or 1100 Rupees a month. The metropolis requires many improvements, for which due and adequate provision should be made. Let Government at once come forward, and consecrate one or two lakhs of Rupees annually to the use of the city, so that there may be no year without progressive improvement. Why not at once surrender the tax on spirituous liquors in the city for municipal purposes; and, if the amount be not sufficient, it will be time to go up and tap the Treasury.

THE SPEAK MEETING of the inhabitants of Calcutta was held on Monday afternoon, when a Memorial to the Lords of the Treasury, the President of the Board of Control and to the Court of Directors was agreed to, which will be found among our selections. The unanimity of feeling manifested at this meeting, of all classes of society, to the number of four hundred, cannot fail to do good. It will give to the members of Government at home, a convincing proof of the deep, and general feeling which exists at this Presidency on the subject, and serve to render public attention to the importance of securing the patronage of the State, to that plan which shall oblige the interests of all the Presidencies. We are happy to find that no allusion is made in the Memorial to that branch of faith, which is involved in taking off the precept stemmen from the Comprehensive Plan, and placing them on the Dunlop line of communication. It simply points out with great force and clearness, the fact that this comprehensive line of intercourse, is that alone which can give to Calcutta, and Madras and Ceylon the full benefit of Steam communication. This fact which was heretofore problematical has been incontrovertibly established by the voyages of the Hindostan. With this evidence before them, nothing but an obliquity of vision or a perverse partiality for one Presidency, can induce the Company, or Her Majesty's Ministers, to confine their view to the Western Port.

It is of course manifest, that the assistance of Government, is indispensably necessary to the maintenance of a monthly Steam communication, with all the ports, or even with one port, in India. That assistance the people of England are most willing to bestow, in order to secure the inestimable blessing of a regular intercourse with the vast seats of commerce in the East. That assistance the Court of Directors are at this present time giving to the undertaking. The sum devoted to the promotion of Steam Navigation from the revenues of India, from the revenues of the Bengal Presidency, we might say, is one lakh of Rupees a month;

vis. 100,000, a year expended on the Bombay and Peninsular Company. We are not therefore making for any new and startling outlay. We merely solicit that this sum may be so judiciously expended as to produce the largest possible advantage, in an equal degree, to all the Presidencies. Less than this sum would we believe have a sufficient encouragement to this Company, to establish a monthly communication direct to the three ports of Bombay, Madras and Calcutta. The time has expired when the existing arrangements must be revised. The Bombay Steamers are unequal to the task, and are becoming more and more inefficient the older they grow. Government must either build new and larger vessels, or make terms with the Peninsular Company. Now therefore is the time for adopting a comprehensive scheme, which so far from interfering with the advantages enjoyed by Bombay shall improve them, and confer the same advantages on the other Presidencies. It is a fortunate circumstance, that, just at this important juncture, Government will have the benefit of that practical knowledge which is afforded by the successful voyages made by the Hindostani. There can therefore be no excuse for adopting narrow views and unworthy prejudices, detrimental to the public character of those who embrace them, and injurious to the general interests of the Empire.

CHINA.—During the past week, we have received from China, an abstract of the Supplementary Treaty between their Majesties the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, and the Emperor of China, consisting of seventeen Articles. The more important provisions of this Treaty are, that no British Merchant ships shall resort to any other Port in China, except the five ports named in the first Treaty, and that any infringement of the rule shall be visited by the seizure and confiscation of the vessel and cargo. Art. VI. provides that English merchants trading at the five ports, shall not wander away into the country, or go beyond certain limits fixed by the Chinese Authorities and the Consuls; and that any one who may contravene this order, shall be delivered over to the British Consul for punishment. The next Article permits English merchants, who may be trading at these ports, to buy and rent ground and houses at a fair valuation. Art. IX. provides for the mutual surrender of criminals who may tempt, from the Chinese territories into Hong Kong; or from our own settlement and ships into the interior of the country.

The Eighth Article stipulates that all foreign nations, whose subjects or citizens have hitherto traded at Canton, shall be admitted to the five ports of Canton, Fu-chow-foo, Amoy, Ningpo, and Shang-hai, on the same terms as the English. According to European notions, such a provision is out of place in a Treaty with the British Crown, but the Chinese evidently considered the English as the representatives of the European family, and were anxious to embrace the opportunity of this Supplementary Treaty, to make known the footing on which the merchants of other powers would be permitted to trade in China. The Chinese authorities soon became aware, that foreign nations would not fail to besiege the Cabinet for the same privileges which had been conceded to the English; and would probably proceed so far as to send an Embassy to the Capital. They have therefore noted distinctly in this anticipating their negotiations and requisites, and rendering any personal application at Peking, which could not have been refused without risk, or permitted without making a million, altogether superfluous.

The Opium question, the original cause of the war, remains in statu quo. It is not so much as hinted at. That word of ill omen appears to have been most carefully excluded from these Treaties of perpetual peace and friendship. This article continues to be regarded as contraband by the Chinese laws; and any attempt to introduce it, will be viewed as an act of smuggling, and punished accordingly. The English Government has engaged to prevent the admission of the drug into the five ports, and the Consuls are required to apprise the Chinese authorities of any such smuggling transaction, which may come to their knowledge, in order that the goods may be confiscated. The Chinese Government undertakes to exclude the drug from all other ports. Yet the Government of India will not probably diminish the manufacture of the article by a single chest, or the Chinese relinquish the use of it. This exclusion of Opium from Hong Kong, and from the five Ports which have been opened to our commerce, is all that could be expected of our Government. The consumption of the drug in the Empire will now depend on the success with which the Opium smugglers, backed by the wishes of the people, may baffle the vigilance, or corrupt the integrity of the Chinese preventive service. Yet it is a very anomalous position for any government to take up. In India, the British Authorities are engaged in raising the drug by means of public funds, expressly for the Chinese market; in China the British Authorities will not allow it to be landed in the only Settlement we possess, and have directed it to be rigidly excluded from the ports to which our trade is confined; and the Consuls are bound to make known to the Chinese authorities, with the view of its being confiscated, any cargo of that same Opium, which the servants of the same Crown have raised for that specific object. Although the Chinese authorities appear to have entered upon the arrangement of the Treaty with a feeling of sincerity, and even cordiality, which does them infinite credit, yet it is to be feared that the guilty enterprises of the Opium smugglers will at no distant period interrupt that lasting peace and friendship which the Emperor appears so anxious to cement. The least that our Government can do to counteract the evil is to forbid the arming of the Opium vessels, a measure which the Englishman has repeatedly and very forcibly advised. While we have vessels of war in every port for the protection of commerce, there can be no legitimate occasion for trading vessels to be armed with cannon; whereas indeed be no reason for it, but one which it would be shameful to avow, and which would impose on Government the impious necessity of preventing it. If they are permitted thus to be armed, there will be bloody conflicts with the Chinese preventive service, and mistrust will be sown in the minds of the Chinese authorities, which will inevitably ripen into feelings of hostility.

LOTTERY.—The present state of the Lottery Question is any thing but intelligible. At the beginning of this year, Mr. Bird, the Governor of Bengal, took on himself the responsibility of suspending the State Lottery, sending a reference to the Court of Directors without whose sanction no final blow could be given to it. His Honor was obliged to take this step from a consideration of the extensive mischief inflicted on society by the Minor Lotteries, which were established in connection with the great Lotteries of Government, and which diffused the spirit of gambling through the community. He attacked the evil at its source, and the state lottery expired at once, together with all the little smokings which it had been nourishing. But it was felt at the time, both by Government and the community, that unless an Act was passed making Lotteries criminal, private lotteries would spring up, in fearful abundance; that temptations to gambling would still continue to be held out, perhaps with increasing vigor; and that the only change produced by Mr. Bird's judicious Act, if it were not followed up by a stringent law, would be that a dozen fraudulent schemes would be substituted for the honest—if the word be not misplaced—scheme of the State Lottery. These fears have been more than realized. The projects which the Harbours, the Englishman and the Exchange Gazette have been advertising for the last five months, though without any approval whatever on the part of the Editors, appear to have been for the most part based on deceit. The Star, which seems to have a special vocation for ferreting out these nuances, has repeatedly denounced the impositions practised on the public by the projectors. These magnificent schemes have been shrouded in notice, under the "auspices and patronage of the most respectable Agency and Commercial House in Calcutta," not one of the names of which, however, has ever been given. The drawings have been duly notified to the public; even the numbers of the tickets which had come up as prizes have been given with the same formalities, as those of the extinct State Lotteries; but, strange to say, none of the valuable prizes have ever fallen to the lot of residents in Calcutta. They have come up invariably for the benefit of individuals living a thousand miles off, some of whom appear never to have heard of their good fortune, simply we suppose because they never had any existence, except in the newspapers. In an evil hour, however, General Fife, who is an actual living personage, was announced as the fortunate holder of a prize of 50,000 Rupees, and he is understood to have directed an action to be brought against the Projectors for the recovery of the sum, the immediate result of which has been we believe to quash the drawing of the next Lottery of Five lakhs and ninety thousand Rupees, which is advertised to take place on the 2d and 3d of January at the Exchange Rooms.

A very enterprising firm of the name of Robertson and Co., whose existence however is very problematical, has been advertising a Lottery of One lakh of Rupees in the Singapore papers, and we have also in those of China,—any where however not in Calcutta. This Lottery also is to be drawn at the Exchange Rooms, and the projectors have even had the audacity to name the Union Bank as their Treasurer. We believe the Bank and the Proprietors of the Exchange Rooms are equally innocent of any connection with these gamblers.

There is also another Lottery scheme, the some of which is laid in Calcutta, though the projectors have not sent their advertisements to either the Harbours or the Englishman. The Projectors are Johnson, Brothers and Co. of Calcutta, and their advertisements appear in the Singapore, and we think, also in the Madras papers. There are to be 1,000 prizes to 2,000 blanks; the capital embarked is said to be 1,87,000 Rupees; and the worthy projectors are

There is also another Lottery scheme, the some of which is laid in Calcutta, though the projectors have not sent their advertisements to either the Harbours or the Englishman. The Projectors are Johnson, Brothers and Co. of Calcutta, and their advertisements appear in the Singapore, and we think, also in the Madras papers. There are to be 1,000 prizes to 2,000 blanks; the capital embarked is said to be 1,87,000 Rupees; and the worthy projectors are go moderate as to content themselves with a profit of four per cent. The Trustees are Messrs. Ewart, Brown and Co. and their office is at 65, Durrumtollah Road, where the two drawings will take place under the superintendence of "disinterested and respectable gentlemen." This firm is a firm of straw, and No. 65 is an empty house.

But the contagion of this gambling spirit is not confined to men in European habits and society, or even to this Presidency. The mania is spreading rapidly from the capital to the provinces. The last number of the Bombay Times informs us, in a letter from a correspondent, that certain speculators at Poona have got up a lottery, which they are forcing into public notice. The profit to the projectors is fixed at a moderate sum, but past experience teaches us, that such schemes are most to be suspected of fraud, in which the conduct of the projectors is apparently most disinterested. Another lottery has been set up at Ahmednagar, under the Bombay Presidency, in which the projectors have reserved 20 per cent. to themselves! "I think it should be the duty," says the Correspondent of the Times, "of every man possessing the least spark of philanthropic feeling, to show an unequivocal hatred of lotteries by steadily discontinuing to patronise them." But we think it the imperative duty of the Court of Directors, at once to give their public and cordial sanction to the abolition of all State Lotteries for ever, and at the same time to lay their commands on the Legislative Council to frame a law prohibiting all private lotteries, throughout the dominions entrusted to the Government of the Company. Why such instructions have not been issued from Lordenall Spence's earlier, it is difficult to divine. So long as the lotteries yielded any profit to the State it was easy to understand the reluctance of the Honourable Court to extinguish them. But they are now a nuisance to the community, without being profitable to Government; and the delay in prohibiting them is anomalous. Surely it cannot be because the Court intends to re-establish them, with a view to meet the inadequacy of municipal funds. It cannot be that they have encountered any opposition from the Earl of Ripon, the President of the Board of Control. It was during his incumbency as Chancellor of the Exchequer, that England was for the first time delivered from the curse of State Lotteries, and Lotteries themselves were rendered illegal. His Lordship cannot begrudge to India the blessing he conferred on England. We hope the Local Authorities will go far to bring to the aid of the Court, the steady progress which this "it of gambling" is making through the country, and the increasing audacity of the frauds which mark each successive project, and to importune them for permission to check the evil at once by a legislative enactment.

REVIVAL OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.—The Draft of an Act, for the adoption of corporal punishment in certain cases of theft, more especially of children, was published in the last Official Gazette. Government has thought it expedient to abrogate, to a certain extent, one of those laws by which the administration of Lord William Bentinck was distinguished, and which has been the object of incessant vituperation by a large body of the public servants ever since. We think the experience of the last ten years proves, that the sudden and entire abrogation of corporal chastisement, in a country in which it has been in vogue for many centuries, was in some degree a premature measure; inasmuch as we were unable to substitute any other punishment, which was likely to prove efficacious by the terror it inspired. The truth of the assertion in Lord William Bentinck's Regulation, however, has not been in the smallest degree weakened, that "the punishment of stripes is degrading to the individual, and by affixing marks of infamy which are often for ever indelible, prevents his return to an honest course of life." Corporal punishment can be no effort of sophistry or ridicule be relieved from the odium of doing the culprit an irreparable injury, by making him a "marked man" for the rest of his life, and rendering his return to virtue next to impossible. And when we reflect that this punishment may often be inflicted for a first and almost venial offence, on insufficient or doubtful evidence, in a moment of passion, it ought not to be resorted to but for the gravest and most weighty reasons. Lord William Bentinck himself appears to have thought, when he refused to abolish it among the English troops, that there were circumstances in which the infliction of the country and the Government, combined with the habits and feelings of the people, do more to point out the necessity of again having recourse to it in India. In the last ten years, the improvements in prison discipline, in prospect of which it was abolished, have not been effected. A lodging in a prison, where "their bread is given and their water is sure," where they have in general more comfortable residence, has no terrors for offenders. It does not deter them from crime, and therefore to make this the only punishment for theft is to expose property to constant spoliation, and inflict grievous injury on society. As a general rule, therefore, under existing circumstances, the use of the rattan is perhaps the less of two evils. The experiment of substituting other punishments for it has not succeeded in giving security to property; and, unless some better means of correction than we now possess can be brought into operation, recourse must be had to this most objectionable form of punishment. We are speaking of course of delinquents of full age. The school discipline which the Magistrates are now required to inflict on juvenile offenders, instead of exposing them to the contamination of a jail, will of course meet with general approbation.

There are however some considerations which ought not to be altogether overlooked. This corporal chastisement is now revived, evidently under the impression, and a very correct one, that it is the only punishment which is likely to deter from the commission of crime; that it is in short, the heaviest punishment the public authorities can inflict. This idea is necessarily implied in the present adoption of it. It is singular therefore that the severest punishment, and that which is most dreaded by the natives, should not be inflicted for the heaviest crime, but reserved only for those of minor turpitude. Neither should we overlook the fact, that almost every other punishment which the Magistrate can inflict is open to an appeal to the higher authorities, and that the errors of a harsh or hasty judgment may be corrected by the mature consideration of older and more experienced officers; that, by this amendment, the order for inflicting the severest kind of punishment, and that which admits of no reduction, or remedy, is to be final. The sentence of fine and imprisonment passed by the Sessions

Judge is liable to be reversed in appeal to the higher authorities, whereas the order of those who occupy a very subordinate place in the administration, and one which by the course of circumstances, is frequently filled by youths just come to age, is irrevocable. These are anomalies which cannot escape observation.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.—We have been favoured with a little pamphlet just published by Mr. H. G. Palmer, upon the state of the Indian Bazar weights and measures. The object of the writer is to show that in almost every bazar and shop in Calcutta, pieces of stone, lamps of lead, and fragments of bricks are used in "lieu of weights denoting authenticated gravity or proportion;" that the uncertain weight of these substitutes affords an opening for fraud; and that the Native, more especially the poorer classes, are thereby cheated by the shopkeepers to a very considerable amount. He alludes to the recent Act of Parliament, by which Superintendents are appointed in every district in England for the purpose of applying a more stringent system to the Act; and he cites numerous instances in which transgressors have been brought up before the Magistrates and fined for a breach of it. He proposes to introduce something of the same kind into Calcutta, to provide that all sets of weights used for the purpose of vending should be duly examined, adjusted, marked and licensed; that for these licences the shopkeepers should pay at the rate of Eight annas a month, which would yield a revenue of nearly a lakh of Rupees; and that this fund should be applied to the improvement of the City.

It is highly desirable that just weights and measures should be universally employed; and it is certain, that the use of false weights entails a great loss on the purchaser, and more especially on the poorer classes of society. To this it has been replied in a very able article, which appeared some days since in the Englishman, that buyers are the best protectors of their own interests, and that although they may have no means of detecting fraudulent weights and measures, they are not slow in discerning as what shops they obtain the largest supplies for their money, and that the most honest dealers are sure in the long run to have the largest custom. This is true to a considerable extent; yet it is a fact, that notwithstanding the strength of this principle of self interest, dealers continue to be rogues and purchasers to be cheated; and that in our own land the public authorities consider it a part of their official duty to come to the aid of private interests, and to seek out and punish those who use deficient weights and measures. And in this country such provisions against fraud would be the more valuable, as the buyers being for the most part in debt to the shopkeepers, and purchasing the greater portion of their supplies on credit, are more particularly at their mercy.

But we have many doubts whether the proposed interference in the towns and suburbs of Calcutta, would not be found more vexatious than useful, a source of greater oppression to the shopkeepers than of benefit to the public, or of revenue to the state. Mr. Palmer estimates the number of vendors at 15,000. These men, if compelled to do so, would doubtless rather take out a license for the authenticated weights and measures they set up at their shops; but it is not certain that they would use these just weights in one case out of ten. When an independent buyer came to their counter, and paid down his copper or silver, the authenticated weights would be invariably produced; but there would be a very strong inducement to resort to the old and deficient weights, whenever they were required to deal out articles to any customer. We were already in their debt—that is, to any poor man, whom the new arrangement is more particularly intended to benefit. These poor creatures would be the least likely to obtain substantial relief from it, for they would probably be met at once by an order to go to some other shop, if they were to demand the use of the false weights; and Mr. Palmer's pamphlet tells us that the natives seldom complain.

It would be necessary to appoint officers to enforce the use of these weights; but an establishment adequate to a domiciliary visit once a week to 15,000 shops, would absorb all the receipts; and a weekly visit would not ensure the daily, or hourly, or continual employment of the authenticated weights. The agency Mr. Palmer proposes to employ is altogether native, and the highest salary 32 Rs. a month, for which such honesty is not to be obtained in the Native market, if indeed it can be obtained for any price. The officers of the department would inevitably misuse the power entrusted to them, and turn it into an engine of extortion. Much may be done in England, where there is an independent and spirited community, and a vigilant press, which is utterly impracticable in a country like this; and the shopkeepers would be sure to take the price of the honest, and the hush money they paid the Native officers, in some shape or other, out of their customers. We are sorry then to throw cold water on a project which has so kind and benevolent an origin; but we think the projector on reconsidering it, in all its bearings, will feel satisfied that it will most probably produce more inconvenience than it remedies.

Instead of drawing the funds required for improving the salubrity and convenience of Calcutta from a municipal tax on shops, which must eventually fall on provisions, we would go up at once to Government and ask them to give whatever may be necessary, from the twenty millions raised in the country. Government might spare this sum without feeling its loss. Where there is a will, there is a way. It is only in the last Calcutta Gazette we find it announced that Col. Eyre has resigned the service. Of course the Grand Trigonometrical Survey of India, which ought to have ceased years ago, is now completed, for the Surveyor General would not quit the country without finishing his work. We should think, if common report be true, that the extinction of this extravagant establishment would produce a saving of a lakh of Rupees a year. The substitution of whipping for imprisonment will doubtless produce a saving of another lakh or two, in the keep of rogues. In short to a well-disposed and careful Government there can never be any lack of funds for the benefit of its own metropolis.

Tax KNOWLEDGE.—The Hurkars has given a very elaborate reply to our observations on his last article relative to the Khoond children. He writes, of course as we did, on the strength of information from the spot. He cannot therefore expect us to admit the validity of the statements he has brought forward, before we have an opportunity of communication with those on whose authority we depended, and whose views of his explanation it is obviously necessary for us to receive. In this stage of the controversy, therefore, all that we can do is to examine the strength of his reasoning, and to enquire how far the admissions which have been made, bear upon the general imputation of neglect, which our correspondent brings against the local authorities. Our observations will therefore be very brief.

The Hurkars dwells much on the mistake which our informant is said to have made, when he stated that the Memorial had not been forwarded to the Government of Madras, but was still in the Agent's office. We are willing to concede to his argument all the benefit which such an error can afford it. It appears that the Agent, not having power to comply with this request, forwarded it to the Judge, in whose office it has remained ever since. On turning to Capt. Macpherson's Report on the Khoonds, however, we find that it was addressed directly to the Secretary to Government at Madras. It is just possible that the Government at that Presidency may have directed that all subsequent communications should be submitted through the Judge. But even in this case the Hurkars will excuse our remarking that when the Agent found that, from whatever cause, a Memorial of considerable importance, which referred to the temporal and spiritual welfare of the children whom he was especially appointed to rescue, had been detained for many months at the station, there were many ways in which it might have been brought to the notice of the public authorities at Madras. If the Agent thought the proposal of the Missionaries to educate the children in the truths and doctrines of Christianity of any importance, it would have been no stretch of presumption for him to have forwarded a copy of the memorial direct to Madras.

The Hurkars has stated that the Agent had no authority to comply with the request of the Missionaries to be allowed to undertake the education of the children; and then, to show that the Agent was not indifferent to their welfare, affirmed that he had actually made over six children to them. We pointed out the manifest discrepancy of the two statements; which our contemporary endeavours to obviate by saying that this disposal of the children was done by a stretch of authority. He should have said so in his first explanation. But it seems a very anomalous state of things, that the Agent should be at liberty to leave so large a number of the female victims in the hands of a Native Tutor, and yet should be unable without a stretch of authority to allow the Missionaries to receive and instruct them; and it behoves the Government of Madras to give its early consideration to this matter.

As it regards the contempt thrown by the Agent, on the offer of the Missionaries to educate the children, while at the same time he has placed himself in correspondence with the Rev. Dr. Duff, in reference to the same matter, the Hurkars remarks, "We alluded to Capt. Macpherson's reference to Dr. Duff simply for the purpose of showing that there can have been no inherent dislike in him to the plan of evangelizing the Khoond children, but that on the contrary there must have been a personal desire on his part that officer to see the children reclaimed from their false faith—a design which all concurs with the systematic regulation of Missionary efforts which has been alleged by the Agent." We think so too; and we have looked in vain for an explanation of this neglect, of the means of evangelization which was at hand, by an individual who had their evangelization so much at heart as to enter into correspondence with a gentleman residing in another province.

The system of tuition to which we alluded, which is said to have failed in the hands of the Missionary, for which failure he was taunted by our contemporary, we were first informed of in this column. His account is not very distinct; but we understand that two girls were to be married to two boys, but the Agent wished them to be made Christians before the knot was tied. He had them in his own house, and the Missionary was employed in the work of Christianizing them in which he did not succeed for several months. This is the strange kind of tuition we alluded to and there is no wonder it did not succeed.

We have only one word more to say on the subject at present. Our contemporary says we have not alluded to the "important point" of the object to which the Agent intended to apply the rescued females. "He has employed them as important agents for the suppression of female infanticide." We think this a most important object, and one on which too much attention cannot be bestowed, but the Hurkars's information is evidently deficient, and his ideas are therefore any thing but clear on the subject. He tells us that the girls have been taught to spin, and that they are married, or to be married, to Khoonds who practise infanticide. We cannot see how their being simply taught to spin can qualify them for this important vocation; or how the mere circumstance of their being given in marriage among a tribe which practices infanticide, will of itself prevent their husbands murdering their children.

WEEKLY EPILOGUE OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7.

—The requisition to the Sheriff for a Steam meeting to be held on Monday next, has between 1300 and 1400 signatures, a greater number than has, we believe, ever been affixed to any public requisition in Calcutta.

—Intelligence has been received from China to the 20th of October. The Supplementary Treaty has been ratified by the Emperor, and ordered to be carried into effect, without waiting for the signature of Queen Victoria. This token of confidence in British faith is very gratifying.

It is pleasing to find that Major Pottinger, who left India under the capricious frown of the Governor General, has been nominated to convey the Treaty to Her Majesty. Thus the injustice to which he was subjected by the Head of the Government in India, has been in a great measure redressed, and the Haro of Herat and Chirchik, the individual to whose execution at Beshkan we are indebted for the liberation of the prisoners, one of the objects of the expedition to Cabul, will make his first appearance at the Court of England by association with the final treaty concluded by his illustrious uncle, with the Empire of China.

—A very destructive fire had broken out at the Factories of the Foreign merchants at Canton. Fifteen factories, and a large amount of property have been destroyed by this conflagration. It was altogether accidental. Plunder was restrained by the Chinese Police, and the Marines from the Diad British frigate. The populace offered no molestation or insult to the English, but pelted the lacars, whom they very cordially detest. By the Supplementary Treaty, Europeans are allowed to rent ground and houses, at the five points to which they are allowed to resort; and it is to be hoped, therefore, that their residence will no longer be limited to the small and disagreeable shanties to which Chinese jealousy has, hitherto confined them.

— Last night's Calcutta Gazette contains the draft of an Act repealing Reg. 9, of 1868, which had become obsolete, from its extreme severity. This was the Act passed when dacoity was at its height in Bengal, which inflicted such extremely severe penalties on those who refused to surrender. It was under this Act that a Native was recently subjected to long transportation for not appearing when summoned, which punishment Mr. Bird wisely remitted.

— The Rev. Mr. Thomas has been appointed Assistant Chaplain to the Garrison of Fort William. We believe this appointment is connected with an arrangement for giving two Chaplains to the Fort and St. James's, as there are already at the Cathedral and the Old Church.

— The Honourable the Court of Directors have sent out a despatch to "our Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal," informing him that Southampton had been made the port of arrival and departure of the Indian Mails sent by the Mediterranean, and directing that the "immediate and particular attention of your Post Master General be called to this alteration." It is much to be regretted that the Honourable Court did not see fit to announce with the same formalities a far more important alteration, the reduction of the French postage from 2s. 6d. to 1s. 6d. In that case our Post Master General would have been obliged to pay immediate and particular attention to it, instead of continuing to announce the old rate for months after it had been abolished. As the Post Master has now done with the Governor General's journey to the Upper Provinces, perhaps he will find leisure to publish the amended rate which has not yet appeared.

— The last letter from Gwalior is that which appeared in yesterday's Herald, which would lead us to suppose that there may yet be some difficulty in the settlement of affairs in that territory. The writer says, that a feeling of hostility is beginning to grow up against our intervention by those whom it will affect. These British, say the troops, will come here and disband us, and leave their own troops to feed on the fat of the land. Why should we give up our old rights? It is quite natural that the troops, whose very bread is at stake, should object to the process of starvation destined for them.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 5.

— The accounts from Sukkur are still of the same melancholy character, and the troops are saved from annihilation only by the moderation or fears of the Baluchos. Each Regiment has still 500 in hospital.

— The Honourable Caleb Cushing, the Envoy from the United States of America, to the Emperor of China, after having been most honourably and most hospitably treated at Bombay by the Government and the community, has embarked for the Celestial empire, where the Brother of the Sun and the Moon does not by any means wish to see him, and will contrive to evade a meeting by referring him to the 18th Article of the Supplementary Treaty with Great Britain, and sending him back to Washington.

— Capt. Engle-les issued cards of invitation to the community to visit the Benjool yesterday and to-day, and we are told that three hundred persons set down to a substantialiffin yesterday. We are happy that our humble aviator has been followed, and we hope that the irritation produced by refusing the list of passengers, which might be very proper when demanded by a tradesman who wished to send a constable on board, but very injudicious when required by the fourth estate, will have completely vanished. The Star says that Captain Engle-les made some disparaging allusions to the press, and to public papers, which we hope will be found to originate only in the provincial incorrectness of Calcutta reporting.

— The Englishman says there was a report yesterday of an outbreak in Nepal. We have heard of no other outbreak than one of regret at Mr. Hodgson's approaching departure. The Dut-bar was loading him with tokens of their esteem and gratitude.

— The Star says, that final arrangements have been determined on for the occupation of Sind by Bengal troops, and that the several Regiments will proceed to their destination immediately.

— From the same authority we learn, that the preparation of the siege train for Gwalior has been commended; and probably the Star is right in pronouncing this measure premature, as according to the last accounts the Khazga was still with the troops, who seemed to have half a mind to show fight.

— We were we find wrong in supposing that the meeting of the Indian members of the Peninsular and Oriental Navigation Company was convened by Capt. Engle-les. By whom it was called has not transpired, but Mr. Greenlaw read a number of papers, and it was resolved that he should furnish a statement of the points in the prospectus of the Company and in their correspondence, which warrant an opinion of a departure from the plan on which the Calcutta Club members gave their vote. Also, for our prospects; if we can afford no more than thirty passengers for the steamers, which must have a hundred or less money, not all the recollections of all the public meetings, nor all the charges of breach of faith, can keep them to the direct line.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 6.

— We regret to learn from the Star, that the Hindostan on her next voyage from Aden to Galle will touch at Bombay. This, says our contemporary, was hinted to a gentleman in London. Having once taken this devious route, there can be little hope that the vessel will ever resume the direct course till some arrangement be made with the Home Government. Perhaps however some improvement in Steam, or the discovery of some other agent may lay both the Hindostan and the Benjool on the shelf.

— Mr. George Thompson has arrived in Calcutta and embarked Friday morning in the Benjool.

— The Queen steamer, with Col. Squire and the recruits of H. M. 18th, has arrived at Bombay, and they will be sent on immediately to perish in the swamps of the Indus. The last accounts from Ferropore state, that the Head Quarters of the Regiment had taken its departure for Sukkur from that station. The deadly climate will probably thin the ranks of this noble corps, in a month more than they were thinned by four years' struggle with the Afghans.

— The Queen is to replace the lost Mamoon; the latter was 400 horse power; the former has only engines of 200 horse power. Of course to employ her in bringing on the Mails would only subject the community to a bitter disappointment. The Hon. Company has not two vessels capable of maintaining the speed requisite for the occasion, and must either build new vessels, or fall in with the proposal of the Oriental and Peninsular Company.

— The Englishman states, on the authority of a letter from the North West, that three French officers had arrived at Cabul, with the intention of forming and disciplining a force for the Afghans, as their countrymen have done in the Punjab. They could not have arrived at a time when their aid will be less prized.

— The Governor General, it is said, intends to proceed forthwith to the banks of the Sutledge, doubtless to Ferropore, the scene of last year's festivities; but apparently with a different object: not to receive a triumphant array on its return at the foot of the bridge, but to send an army across it to gather fresh laurels. The Fort Office authorities are said to have received orders to lay boarers between Agre and Umbala. A letter from this letter place published in this day's Herald, seems to hint that Lord Ellenborough has demanded the cession of the states belonging to the Sikhs, that is to Rajput Singh's messengers, on the left bank of the Sutledge. These states were acquired by the late ruler by gradual accretions and are estimated to yield if we remember right a revenue of about 12 lakhs of Rupees a year. They were guaranteed to Ranjit Singh, more than thirty years ago. It is said that Harn Singh is quite willing to resign the lands, but that Golsah Singh perpetually refuses to give them up, and even threatens to cross the river if we should attempt to occupy them.

— The John Haydon, which has come in from Rangoon, brings accounts of a very serious outbreak of the Cholera at Agra, to which the King's second Elphinstone son, and one of his ministers will be known to be very inclined to us, have fallen victims.

— The relief of the troops in Sind, appears to be involved in uncertainty. A letter quoted in the Herald says, that there will be no general relief of the Bombay troops. Other letters received from the north west however, speak of a speedy departure of the troops intended for Sind.

— The Brasylas, American frigate, with the American Envoy, the Honourable Mr. Cushing, left Bombay yesterday, the 17th November, for officers on their departure liberally contributed the sum of 457 Rs. to the American Mission Press, which has long been the leading establishment for book printing at Bombay. The money is to be devoted to the preparation of a fount of Arabic types.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 11.

— The last sale of Indigo at the Indigo Mart, is said to have gone off with spirit. The average price of about 100 mounds of Kishangpur Indigo was 150 Rs. the factory mound; the average of Tirhoot, about 105.

— The Shipping reports announce the arrival of the Steamer Windsor Castle from the Mauritius; but none of the daily papers tell us who the stranger is.

— An attempt is said to have been made to convert the young King of the Punjab, Duleep Singh, across the Sutlege into the British dominions. Two of his uncles endeavoured to corrupt the troops, but in vain; they then laid a horse dawk from Lahore to the river, but the project was discovered before they could put it into execution. They were seized and thrown into confinement, and the young lad was reinstated on the Gaddis. After this Harn Singh and Golsah ordered a body of troops down to the Sutlege to watch the birds, but they mutilated and refused to go. It must however be remembered that all intelligence from the Punjab must be told three times by three independent witnesses before it is entitled to credit.

— H. M.'s 18th Foot embarked at Ferropore for Sind on the 24th, its aid in high spirits; it was seen as though Sir Robert Sale had proceeded with the Regiment in command of it.

— The Fernex, Capt. Gimble, which left Peshawar on the 26th of August, arrived at Madras on the 37th ultimo, having been only a day beyond three months on the voyage.

— The Benjool Gazette states that a Register of about 1,500 letters received from the H. C. vessel the CHW, which were picked up on the beach near the wreck of the Mamoon Steamer, has been published in the Benjool Gazette. They have been forwarded to their destination by Capt. Haines, the Political Agent at Aden. There is also a list of 78 Bills of Exchange amounting to 72,000, which were likewise picked up on the Beach.

— The Star publishes a letter from Sukkur, which states that Sir Jasper Nicolls and family, with Col. Louch, had reached that station on his way to Bombay. He had written from Rawalpindi to request that no other mark of distinction should be shown him but the salute due to his rank. Even that, owing to the universal sickness, could not be shown him. In fact the army may be considered as broken up by the effects of the climate. So many officers had been obliged to leave the station, that there was likely soon to be a Brigade of sick men without officers. Of 104

Artillerymen who left Poonah not long ago, 80 have been assigned to the garrisons. Many were expected in the next month, when the Medical men predicted the Europeans would die like rotten sheep.

— The Great Steam Meeting yesterday afternoon was attended by more than 400 persons. A series of Resolutions was adopted which will be in [] in another part of this paper. It is true that the Bombay folks have had the start of us by one month, as it respects the despatch of their resolutions, approving the plan of taking the Resolute and Hindostan from Calcutta, Madras and Ceylon, and giving them to themselves; but we trust that the cogent and unanswerable arguments of our Resolutions, and the unanimity and strength of feeling which has been exhibited at its Presidency will be sufficient to counteract effects of Bombay influence, however paramount it may be in Londonhall Street.

— The Star states, that preparations are again going on for the siege train at Agra, which is to be on a larger scale than ever. The whole force was calculated to assemble there by the 4th; the Governor General would reach the station by the 10th, and it is said that the force would be in motion towards Gwalior by the 12th.

— We are happy to hear, that the letters sent by the Regular Mail of the 21st of November, arrived at Bombay at the same time as the Express, and were quite in time for the Steamer, which started at 9 on the evening of the 1st of December.

— The outbreak on the Nepal frontier is said to be directed against the state of Oude, an ally of ours, whom we are bound to defend. The recent nature of it has not transpired, but it is said that a Nepalese army has made an incursion on the Viceroy's territories. We must of course repel it by force, if we do not succeed by negotiation; and this may lead at once into hostilities with the spirited Durbar.

— The Barbours state, that letters of the Resident from Unahall mention that a report was current, that our position at Sukker had been established, but that no great confidence could be placed in it. Such an error however may be corrected, unless the post should be interrupted by the arrival of fresh and healthy troops. In case of an attack the Queen's 18th, amongst the Hattieson's garrison, will come in for the first laurels, and it will be a singular circumstance if this distinguished corps, which was ordered to the banks of the Irravaddy immediately on its arrival in India, should close the Indian career by fresh triumphs on the banks of the Indus.

— The Barbours states, that the attempted flight of Duleep Singh, and the subsequent arrest of some of the Sikh troops is confirmed. Goolab Singh and Herra Singh are still at the capital, enlisting troops, in consequence of the consternation created by the large force we are gathering on the Sutlege. The same accounts state that Akbar Khan was at the Western extremity of the Khyber, ready of course to fall upon Peshawar.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 13.

— The Hse of Passengers by the Batavia has been sent to the Calcutta papers spontaneously by Capt. Reigate. We wish it had been three times the length; and, when such regularly has been given to the sailing of the Steamers, that arrangements can be confidently made in reference to it both in London and Calcutta, we have not the slightest doubt that a full ship will start on every voyage. The passengers on this occasion are: Lieut. Col. Everest; Mr. Fraser; Mr. G. W. Robertson; Mr. G. J. Gordon; Mrs. G. W. Gordon; Dr. H. F. Fildes; Mr. C. W. Whitmore; Mr. St. Mr. Geo. Thompson; Mrs. B. P. Frith; Mrs. Wilson; Mr. Goodway; Capt. Hopper; Capt. Seminary; Mrs. Saunders; General, Arifkhan; Mr. A. O. Chalkey; Mr. Alex. Calder; Mr. W. de Chumli; Mr. Gilbert; Mrs. Fawcett and Child; Mr. Illing; Mr. Hough; Dr. Brough; Mr. Brown; Mr. Elmhurst; Mr. and Mrs. Hume; Mr. Clark and Mr. Bann; Mr. Anderson; Mr. W.

H. Frith; Mr. and Mrs. Fisher; Mr. Nicholl; Col. Montgomery; Mr. Oshtermy; Rev. Mr. Fleming; and M. Chalkey's Servant.

— The Barbours states that the Armenia first, which was mentioned in its last report some ten days ago as having sought the protection of the Insolvent Court, was that of McGregor, Hunter and Co.

— According to the Star, the appearance of the Nepal troops in the Oude territories had been occasioned by an aggression of Durum Singh, a subject of Oude; and they retired as soon as they heard that the offender had been taken a prisoner to Lucknow and punished.

— We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following sums for the Friend of India:—

J. Farlow, Esq.	...	to May, 1842,	50
Capt. J. H. Warner,	...	to Dec. 1844,	20
Bahoe Madhubunder Mul-	...
lick,	...	to July, 1844,	20
C. G. Smith, Esq.	...	to Dec. 1844,	20
Dr. Spalding,	...	to July, 1844,	20
O. P. S. Watson, Esq.	...	to Nov. 1844,	20
Bahoe Krishnoo Kishore	...
Neogee,	...	to March, 1844,	10
Dr. H. F. Hough,	...	to Dec. 1844,	20
D. Davis, Esq.	...	to Nov. 1844,	20
W. Knox, Esq.	...	ditto,
J. F. Gubbins, Esq.	...	to Sept. 1844,	10
Lieut. M. James,	...	to Dec. 1844,	24
E. Bantall, Esq.	...	to March, 1844,	46
Lieut. W. J. Jones, Esq.	...	to Sept. 1844,	20
Lieut. Col. B. Benson,	...	to Dec. 1844,	22
Major Genl. Sir R. Dick,	...	to Aug. 1842,	20
A. B. Deacon, Esq.	...	to Nov. 1842,	6
G. G. Steadman, Esq.	...	to Sept. 1844,	20
P. Friell, Esq.	...	to Dec. 1844,	20
Geo. Thompson, Esq.	...	ditto,	28

The Rev. W. W. Evans here to acknowledge the following sums for the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta.

Col. Shaw,	...	Don Don	...	5
Capt. Barrett,	...	Do.	...	10
Lieut. Lewis,	...	Do.	...	5
Capt. Todd,	...	Do.	...	5
H. E. B. Ross, Esq.	...	Do.	...	5
Capt. Scott,	...	Do.	...	5
J. How, Esq.	...	Do.	...	5
Mrs. Kaye,	...	Calcutta,	...	10
M. L. Mendes,	...	Do.	...	5
H. B.	Do.	...	2
John Storm, Esq.	...	Do.	...	10
W. C.	Do.	...	5
C. H. Salter, Esq.	...	Do.	...	5
A. J.	Do.	...	2
Robert Forbes, Esq.	...	Do.	...	10
T. H. Maddock, Esq.	...	Do.	...	18
J. Henry, Esq.	...	Do.	...	4

Don. 12th.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE PUBLIC MEETING ON STEAM AFFAIRS.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSED TO THE HONORABLE THE COURT OF DIRECTORS, THE BOARD OF CUSTOMS, AND THE LORDS OF THE TREASURY.

Sheweth, that your Memorialists have heard that the Directors of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company have submitted to Her Majesty's Government, and the Directors of the Hon'ble East India Company, a proposal to suspend the monthly transmission of the Mails between Bombay and Suez.

That for the execution of this proposed service, combined with their other arrangements in the Indian sea, the Directors have stated that the Peninsular and Oriental Company are provided with two Steamships, the Hindostan and Batavia; that they have at their disposal a large, large, and powerful Steamer of 1,000 tons, and a smaller one in three months; and that, though these three vessels are amply sufficient for the performance, under ordinary circumstances, of the whole service between Calcutta and Bombay, it is proposed to send a fourth vessel to a western coast.

That, had it been arranged merely that the expediency of continuing with the Peninsular and Oriental Company the transmission of the Mails between Bombay and Suez, with a view to their acceleration and without interfering with the direct communication by means of Steam Vessels between Calcutta and Suez, it would be the consideration of Her Majesty's Government and the Directors of the Hon'ble East India Company, your Memorialists would not have thought it necessary to address your Hon'ble Court on the matter; but as the only means by which this acceleration of the Bombay Mail is proposed to be brought about, are, expressly to be effected by diverting Steam vessels devoted to maintaining direct communication monthly between Calcutta and Suez, in which your Memorialists are deeply interested, they feel it necessary to protest most strongly against the injustice attempted to be done to them, and to press upon your Hon'ble Court the public importance of the interests thus threatened, which interests embrace nearly half the correspondence between Great Britain and the East, and about three-fourths of their commercial relations.

That the proposed plan for the acceleration of the Indian Mails is confined to their transit to and from Bombay, and that it is not attempted to be shown that greater expedition will be gained for the Mails to Calcutta, or to Suez, than by Calcutta, by carrying them via Bombay than can be achieved by the direct line between Suez and Calcutta, and your Memorialists are extremely anxious that if the Mail is delivered at Suez 20 days after its despatch from England, as volunteered, under a penalty, by the Peninsular and Oriental Company, it will be brought on to its several destinations more rapidly by observing such direct line than if it be carried in the first instance to Bombay, and this whether it be forwarded from that Presidency by Steamers, or across the country.

That in urging this upon the attention of your Hon'ble Court, your Memorialists would be understood as making it the duty of the Court to complete delivery, and not partial dispatch, which as a permanent arrangement they regard as most questionable; and your Memorialists would respectfully submit to your Hon'ble Court that the question of acceleration of the Mails is not fairly considered unless it embrace this completeness of delivery.

That by continuing the Hindostan and Batavia Steamers on the direct line between Calcutta and Suez, with such other boat or boats as may be deemed necessary, your Memorialists would communicate uninterrupted, the entire Mail to and from this Presidency can be carried from port to port in 25 days, as has been proved by the three voyages of the Armenia, which vessel has performed the entire distance in 20 days and 6 hours under steam.

That this would make the whole time between despatch and delivery 30 days, and your Memorialists strongly urge upon your Hon'ble Court that this would allow seven days between the arrival of one Mail and the despatch of another, for answering letters, &c., and thus render practicable four perfect interchanges of correspondence in the year between Europe and this side of India, which they confidently submit cannot be accomplished if the Mails for Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta are forwarded to their respective destinations via Bombay.

That the Peninsular and Oriental Company's contract time (as proposed) to Bombay is 25 days, and your Memorialists say the Europe Mail has never been fully delivered at Calcutta in 10 days after its arrival at Bombay, and that the Armenia is delivered in such time unless under more extensive inland improvements than can be carried out for a lengthened period.

That the Mails could not be brought on by a Steamer from Bombay and Calcutta in ten days with two intermediate ports of detention, and that therefore the entire Mails for Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta cannot be delivered so expeditiously via Bombay, either by land or sea, as by the direct route at present occupied by the Hindostan and Batavia.

That in proof of the accuracy of your Memorialists' statement as to the greater time required for the transit of the Mail, overland, via Bombay, they may mention that during the last eleven months the average time taken by the Express from Bombay to Calcutta has been upwards of 8 days and 14 hours, and by the first portion of the general Mail, upwards of 10 days and 6 hours, and this independent of the time elapsing between the arrival of the Steamer at Bombay and the several dispatches from the Post Office, while the time from the Peninsular and Oriental Company to the first portion of the Mail has ranged between 5 and 8 days.

has been obtained : it might be the case, an important point would seem to be gained.

And this leads me to the general question on which I sought information, when I addressed you last. Is there any progress making in the work of suppressing the heinous superstitions of the Khoodis. Is any comprehensive plan of operations contemplated or in course of execution ? Your answer seemed to be, that we must trust to the gradual influence of civilization. Christianity and its handmaid civilization will in time do their work. But if we are to trust to them alone—rather the rite of human sacrifice nor the practice of female infanticide are likely to be abolished during your lifetime or that of

Your obedient servant,
AL EXETER TO PROCEMATION.

16th Dec. 1848.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

TROWBRIDGE.—The Rev. W. Barnes, of Trowbridge, has accepted an unanimous invitation from the Baptist Church in Bath, Trowbridge, to become its pastor, and intends entering on his duties there early in October. —Pat.

THE REV. HENRY CHRISTOPHERS, late of University College, London, has become probationary co-pastor with Mr. Geo. Smith, of New Court Baptist Chapel, in this town. —Newcastle paper.

CHURCH EDUCATION.—The subscription in aid of the new movement on the part of the National School Society already exceeds 50,000*l.* Of this sum, 630 individuals have contributed no less than 70,000*l.* The majority of subscribers are clergymen. —Pat.

THE SUPERINTENDING RECTOR OF FENTON.—The following letter, addressed to the Churchwardens of Fenton by a clergyman of the Established Church, will be read with interest by all who sympathize with the pious, conscientious, and pious-minded Rector of Fenton :—

"Bath, August 15th, 1848.
"Gentlemen,—An unusual pressure of business has prevented my writing to you earlier, but I now wish to express to you my sincere thanks, as a minister of the Established Church, for the warm and manly manner in which you and your parishioners have come forward in defence of your minister.

"Of Mr. Head I am not able to speak; his person, character, and conduct are equally unknown to me, but the judgment delivered in his case plainly declares the existing law to be worthy of a free nation, an intelligent people, and above all of a Christian country.

"The Court is reported to have affirmed, that it is an offence against the law, punishable, in the third instance, by imprisonment for life, for a clergyman to speak in disparagement of the 'Book of Common Prayer.'

"That any human institution should be supported by penalties attaching to the offence of questioning the perfection of that institution, is tyrannical, absurd, and unscriptural in the last degree.

"It is the most serious in my day, when Dissent enjoys the most perfect liberty, that episcopal power should be advancing toward a solitary despotism."

"It is not in this way that either our church or our Prayer-book can be improved."

"The circumstances in which we live make it absolutely necessary that every conscientious believer become either a reformer or a seceder."

"I trust that we may yet have enough of the former among us to obtain a clear statement of doctrine for the Church, in accordance with the mind of our first reformers, where they have left us aggressive in the face of the Established Church, for the warm and manly manner in which you and your parishioners have come forward in defence of your minister.

"It is very true that the members of our Church should have a clear perception of the undeniable truth, that the bishop is subject to the Church, and the Church subject to the Lord Jesus alone."

"I said by this year a 24. B. of England and am, am, Gentlemen, with much respect, yours very faithfully,

"JAMES R. FARRER."

"To the Churchwardens of Fenton."
John Henry Merle D'Aubigne, D. D., was born in Geneva, in 1784. His family is descended from Huguenot ancestors. He was educated in the "Academy" of his native city. Theological Faculty, when Dr. Merle was a student, was wholly Scottish; but he pleased God to meet a faithful servant to Geneva about the time he was to begin his theological training. This was Mr. Haldane, of Edinburgh. He invited a number of the men in his hotel, and endeavored to teach them the glorious Gospel. God blessed his efforts to the salvation of ten or twelve of them, including Mr. Merle. One of these was Felix B. of blessed memory.

Another literary Py. The greater part of them, however, still live.

Not long after his ordination Dr. Merle set out for Germany, where he spent a summer, chiefly at Berlin. On his way to that city, he passed through Eisenach, and visited the Castle of Wartburg. It was a whilst gazing at the walls of the room where Luther the great Reformer had composed the thought of writing the History of the Reformation ceased his mind.

From Berlin, Dr. Merle was called to Hamburg, where he went to instruct French Protestants in Church. It was at this spot five years from Hamburg he was invited to Brussels, by the late King of Holland, to preach in a chapel which he had erected in that capital for Protestants who spoke the French language. In the year 1830, a revolution took place in Belgium. The priests joined Dr. Potter and the other "patriots" in their revolutionary measures. The Dutch were driven out and all who were considered friendly to the King, or intimately connected with them, were in no little danger. Among those who were in predicament was Dr. Merle. He escaped from Belgium to Holland, where he resided a short time, and then went to his native city. The return of Dr. Merle to Geneva was most opportune. He found it the truth had become steadily increasing in number, since the year 1816, and had begun to this seriously of founding an Orthodox School of Theology, in order that pious Swiss and French youth should be able to study in the ministry of the Gospel, should no longer be forced to pursue their studies under the Unitarian doctrine of the Academy. The arrival of Dr. Merle had the effect of immediately arresting the next year (1831) the Geneva Evangelical Society was formed, one of whose objects was to found the theological ministry.

In this movement Dr. Merle took a prominent part, and was placed at the head of the new school of theology. His intimate friend, the late Mr. C. G. M., so favourably known in this country for his Phosphorus, and is remembered for many other writings, took an equal part in this important enterprise, and was chosen Professor of Theology. The publications of Dr. Merle have been numerous. Among the History of the Reformation, he has published thirteen others on various subjects, of from twenty to two hundred pages. But Dr. Merle's great undertaking is his History of the Reformation in the Sixteenth Century. The ministry of the Gospel on the fourth volume, in which he is well advanced.

It treats of the Reformation in Great Britain. It is connected with the different sects and religious parties in England. The fifth and sixth volumes will not be published for some years. —Walesian Chronicle.

MICHAELMAS.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO FRANCE.—Among the numerous questions to which Her Majesty's visit to the Continent has given rise, not a few have been raised respecting the supposed inequality of the Queen to leave her British dominions without the sanction of an express Act of Parliament. Some persons (upon what grounds it is difficult to conjecture) have maintained that the Prince of Wales, and not Her Majesty, is the person affected by this restriction. It is, therefore, to remove all doubt upon the subject, it is right to mention that the third clause in the Act of Settlement, which enacted, "that no person who shall heretofore come to the possession of this Crown shall pass to the dominions of England, Scotland, or Ireland, without consent of Parliament," was repealed very soon afterwards, in the 1st year of George I. (1st George I. c. 31.) where frequent journey to France" (see Mr. Hallam's) "was on almost of the government, with which the Parliament consented to annul the restriction"—Times.

SIR ROBERT PEEL'S complaint is said to be serious. —Pat.

MR. E. G. WAKFIELD, who goes to take his seat in the Commons House of Assembly, sailed for America in the steam-ship Caledonia, from Liverpool, on Monday.

THE DEER AND DR. POPE.—On this day Dr. Wynter, Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, having submitted Dr. Pope's sermon to his Chancellor, the Lord of Wotton, before commencing it, received for answer this pithy direction from the military theologian:—"He must recant, or he must be silenced." —Id.

MR. ANDREW DOYER, the barrister, who last week married the youngest daughter of Sir John Ewbank, Bart. (see p. 1), the new editor of the Morning Chronicle (see p. 1), of which the late Mr. Dyer was a contributor, is reported to be at the journey of his Majesty by the Great Western Railway, between Windsor and Buckingham.

As the journey of his Majesty by the Great Western Railway, between Windsor and Buckingham, is now becoming more frequent, it is said to be in contemplation to erect, for his Majesty's use, a carriage, a separate entrance to the station at the station of Westbourne-terrace. Her Majesty's route to the station is now becoming more frequent. The reader is irresistibly led minors, instead of being through narrow and inferior streets, where obstructions are of frequent occurrence, to the future, the Prince of Wales, and along the splendid avenue of Westbourne-terrace. —Record.

As a proof of the enormous and unnecessary expense to which the country is now put by Members of Parliament making for returns, it may be stated that during the last session, one returned connected with one of the metropolitan presses, moved for in the House of Commons, and was supported by thirty-three days, and contained, amongst other particulars, upwards of 15,000 names. It was also so weighty that it was almost more than a man could carry, and the printing of it cost about 2,000*l.* —Record.

POURTAULT AT ETON COLLEGE.—It has been whispered for some time past that several of the authorities of this ancient seat of learning had become converts to the new "fabulous," but not the less dangerous, Puseyite doctrine, which are making such deep inroads amongst the clergy of our Protestant Church. It is true, indeed, that the rumour is but too true; and there is very little doubt entertained in numerous high and influential quarters, that unless some satisfactory proofs are afforded to dispel the alarm which has thus been very actively created amongst the Protestant parents of the seven hundred pupils at that institution, the most serious results, with reference to the future of the University of this college, must necessarily ensue. That one of the most influential of the masters, the Rev. Edward Coleridge, M. A., of Exeter College, Oxford, and the brother of Mr. Justice Coleridge, a non-communicant, and an avowed of the doctrines of Puseyism, is now beyond question ad hoc. The Rev. Mr. Coleridge was amongst the first to affix his signature to the remonstrance signed by some 500 or 600 of the non-communicant members of convocation at the University of Oxford, to the Rev. the Vice-Chancellor for having "suspended" the Rev. Dr. Pusey for his heretical and anti-Protestant sermons. The effect of the Senior Assistant-Master of Eton having thus publicly avowed himself a professed of the Roman-Papal faith, with, it is to be feared, very considerably to injure his hitherto high Protestant reputation of the respectable College of Eton.—Herald.

PARDON OR POLITICAL OPPORTUNITY.—John Ralph, Charles, and John Maybrick, three of the principal leaders in the Upper Canada rebellion, have received their pardon from his Excellency Sir George Arthur.—Herald.

TALK CARRIED ON.—The Government, in sending to the Bill passed in the late session of Parliament for the calling out of 10,000 of the most effective of the Chelsea out-pensioners, a notice has been sent from the War-office requesting the names of the 10,000, in their exact age, how they are now employed, and whether they are ready to go on full pay. The number of soldiers numbered 84, to 14, 16, per day is upwards of 50,000. The present number of in-door pensioners at Chelsea College is 490; the youngest is 58, and the ages vary from 50 to 70, 80, and 90, and two of them died overseas have attained the great age of 104 years. The number of deaths this season has been greater than usual, varying from two to three a week.—Record.

WYNTER'S HISTORY.—The historiographers of the Portuguese press chronicle contemporary events in Great Britain thus:—"The Patriots, in its summary of the news for the last past, says—"In Scotland the disturbances have increased in the principality of Wales, because the jury absolved sixty of the Balaquians?" —Id.

The distinguished name of Sir John Herschel, Bart., who has been few days resident to the list of the Trustees of the British Museum.—Id.

THE "STANDARD" QUARTERLY.—The Quarterly Review has issued its quarterly edition on the Policy of Ministers; and, strange to say, the Liberal and Conservative Papers have opened a broad attack upon both the policy and its advocate. "It is quite in keeping, quite proper, quite the best," we are told in the issue of the Quarterly Review should stick up for the Peace Administration. "It has now reached that climax of respectable emptiness which admirably qualifies it for the thick-and-thin campaign of the Peace Administration. Respectable Administration, respectable Review!" Poor John Murray! His head has been laid low before this season has burst upon the Atlantic world. But what will Mr. Cassell, what must Lord Lytton's feel, at this ridiculous attack upon Printing-house-ages? This is playing "Young England" to the old stages of the political scene with a vengeance.

The Article is certainly a curious one, and may be considered as preparing the way for the thousand fall of the deceased Albion, and the Standard is a white feather, or rather, an adding to the white flag. It is feeble, despicable, and silly. Not all the lies and capital letters which are employed to give a gloss to the Standard can make up for its want of reason to the style. It savours throughout of malice and hopelessness. The reader is irresistibly led more practically dangerous to men who feel the value of that steadiness in the politics of the world, which they disregard in the affairs of eternity.

The steadiness, the consistency, of FRANCIS HONORABLE have been noticed by all who have seen him in the Edinburgh clique, who seem to have regarded his obvious indifference to all religion and his undeviating enmity to all Christianity as no drawback to his pretensions, but as a mark of his strength of mind, or moral worth, is but like a rope of sand, where it does not rest on the only true basis of sound principle and morality.

It might be easy to show, nevertheless, how it is that one man, with no more real principle than another, is able to win the confidence of those around him, while his neighbour is unable to secure. Much depends on that innate self-respect which renders a man unassuming of character and consistency, and in that respect for the good opinion of his fellow-men, which renders him unwilling to put it in jeopardy.

Lord Brougham has never been much distinguished for either of these qualities. Careless of his great intellectual powers, his chief aim seems to have been rather to command the wondering admiration of the world, than to secure their reverential esteem. As a young man this tendency was more easily developed, and it was this which probably destroyed his prospects in Edinburgh, and led him to seek a wider field for his ambition in London. In the metropolis he became associated with the anti-slavery cause, and to that cause he has firmly adhered, so that, at least, in this respect, he is not unworthy of the praise which he has won. In his view, principles of action paramount to self. No man could less sympathize with Lord Ashley in his feelings which prompted that nobleman to sacrifice place and power to the cause of the factory chimneys. But Lord Ashley's philanthropy stands upon a rock, which neither Brougham, nor Horner, nor the rest of their brilliant associates, ever reached. It is, however, forgetting all that we know, and all that we have at various times written, concerning Lord Brougham and his principles, we are only required to decide the question in which he stands between the Standard and the Chronicle, we have no hesitation in saying that Lord Brougham owes nothing to the Whigs. They, alas! have not been able to do so much for him. He has been a Chancellor, having previously offered to appoint him Attorney-General—an offer to which he is said to have verbally replied, that "there was no occasion for it." He has been a friend of Lord Grey's friends considered Lord Brougham as one leading cause of the retirement of his chief, while there is no little doubt that the Noble and Learned Lord had been himself scheming to supersede Lord Grey.

Indeed, we have the authority of Lord Brougham himself for saying that a correspondence did take place so early as May, 1833, for the purpose of establishing to reconstruct the Cabinet with Lord Grey resigned, at the time Lord Lyndhurst's majority in the House of Lords seemed to threaten the Reform Bill. In the publication by himself of Lord Brougham's speeches.

* Lord Melbourne and his colleagues must have all so well known that Lord Brougham's falling into disfavor with King William IV. was entirely owing to his pressing upon that monarch the immediate formation of the Government under Lord Melbourne himself, and his sudden declaration in his place that this Government was ready to continue in office—a step which wholly prevented his Majesty from executing his design of changing his Ministers, as he had hoped to do, if they had expressed any kind of reluctance to go on after Lord Grey's resignation. It is not to be wondered at, we well know his Majesty's severe displeasure and disappointment at Lord Brougham's peremptory refusal to take the Government in May, 1835, when his Majesty was desirous that it should be re-constructed by him of persons willing to carry the Reform Bill; for it is believed that they both took of his intercourse with his Majesty, and of the written correspondence of Lord Brougham's positive refusal.

With reference to this curious piece of private history, which is only a specimen of many other private intrigues connected with the Reform Bill, the Chronicle is so active, which we have already seen, that we can see the origin of an ex-Foreign Secretary, thus writes:—

* The reference to 1833 is curious enough. Lord Brougham peremptorily refused to form a Government. He had a correspondence with other communications on the subject, however, and he believed that this was known to his colleagues. It is a pity that this charming paragraph of history is not in the obscurest of which now condemn him. If Lord Brougham should keep the details to himself, we fear no one else will be able to furnish them. It is a pity that the world should possess no such a narrative as a magnanimous set settling, and a regard to principles for the principles of united counsels in a Cabinet. We cannot, of course, suppose that Lord Brougham's recollection of what happened to himself in that year might be erroneous. It could not have been the case, for example, that it was Lord Brougham who asked permission to form a Government when nobody else would, and that it was the King who gave the peremptory refusal. But we may still, without the knowledge of our colleagues, believe, which Lord Brougham believes his colleagues to have possessed, reached them in spite of Lord Brougham's anxiety to keep the matter secret, or why his habitual modesty was not shown by a direct communication? If this anything to do with the change, which we know from Lord Melbourne's public statement took place in Lord Brougham at that time. The former opposition on the Canada question drew these remarks from Lord Melbourne, in February, 1838:—

"Mr. all along knew it must come—that the principle of the nobility, the nobility of feeling, which took its birth in the Noble and Learned Lord's mind in the spring of 1833, and which had been gathering strength and bitterness from long and forcible suppression, must out at last. This was something more than he had long expected—than was natural—for most people were blind in respect to themselves, and it was impossible to perceive in their own case that which was clear and manifest to all the rest of mankind, and which was approved and assented to by the general opinion of all those who considered the subject." "As to the secret influence of the Whigs in favor of Lord Brougham and the Whigs, something is known, and something yet remains to be told. Meanwhile it would be foolish to rest the resistance of one who knew his Whig politics, and their resistance of principle, from long and intimate experience. His opposition, at all times to be deprecated, is to them irreconcilable, and we do not wonder that they are so little able to conceal the mortification to which they have been exposed during the past session, while writing under the lash of his sarcastic eloquence—

FRANCE.—It was reported in Paris that the question of the marriage of Queen Isabel II. had been settled at the Chateau d'Eu, between the representatives of the two Courts in favor of the son of the Infant Don Francisco de Paula.

A Haue Journal states that it was contemplated to erect at Trepot a column commemorative of the landing of Queen Victoria, with two allegorical figures, representing England and France holding each other by the hand.

* King Louis Philippe has conferred the decoration of a Grand Officer of Honor on the person of those whose courage and presence of mind the whole Royal family of France were saved from destruction.

* Believing Messrs. of Fries state that King intends founding what is to be called the Victoria Gallery. In it will be placed a series of pictures connected with the proceedings of the Queen of England's visit to a special building to be erected at the Chateau d'Eu for this collection.—Fris.

GOVERNMENT NOTIFICATIONS.

ORDERS BY THE HONORABLE THE DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF BENGAL.

Mr. T. W. White, to be Civil Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, vice Mr. A. Wilson.
28th November, 1843.

Lieut. G. W. H. Bland, 8th Regt. N. I., to be Commandant of the Khordah and Banarso Palk Compendes, and is vested with the powers of an Assistant to the Superintendent of the Tribes of Madras in Cuttack, for the purpose of suppressing the practice of Human Sacrifice among the Khonds, and to be a Member of the Pury Pund Committee of Purbhoos.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, to be an Additional Principal Medical Officer of Police, to officiate as Additional Principal Medical Officer of Police, to officiate as Additional Principal Medical Officer of Police, to officiate as Additional Principal Medical Officer of Police.

Mr. E. R. Parnell, to be an Assistant to the Magistrate and the Collector of Sylhet.
28th November, 1843.

Mr. H. Ingle, Assistant to the Political Agent in the Coomra Hills, for two months, from 1st January, next, to visit the Presidency, on private affairs, for twenty days, from 6th October.

Mr. J. Stanfield, Medical Commissioner of Cuttack, for one year, under Medical Certificate, to visit the Hills, and/or over charge of his office to Mr. C. Curlew, who will officiate as Principal Medical Officer of Cuttack, for the absence of Mr. Stanfield, or until further orders.

Mr. G. T. Selby, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, to be an Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, from the 1st of January, next, to officiate as Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for the absence of Mr. Selby, or until further orders.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, from the 1st of January, next, to officiate as Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for the absence of Mr. Kinnaird, or until further orders.

Mr. James Anderson, Civil Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for fifteen days, from the 1st of January, next, to visit the Presidency, on private affairs.

Mr. M. A. G. Shaw, Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Je-mora, in extension to the 30th proximo, to reside in Calcutta, on account of private affairs.

Mr. F. Curlew, Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for fifteen days, during the ensuing month, under the Annotated Rules of 17th May 1843, to visit the Presidency, on private affairs, for fifteen days, during the ensuing month, under the Annotated Rules of 17th May 1843, to visit the Presidency, on private affairs.

Captain A. Pease, Commissioner of Arrahs, for one month, under section XI. of the Rules in force, to visit the Presidency, on private affairs, for one month, under section XI. of the Rules in force, to visit the Presidency, on private affairs.

Mr. G. D. Wilson, Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for six weeks, under Section XI. and XII. of the Annotated Rules in force, commencing from the 1st of January 1844, preparatory to his proceeding to Europe on furlough, under Medical Certificate.

Mr. J. Kinnaird, Unconnected Deputy Collector in Bhadrachalam, for three days, in extension of the leave granted to him on the 25th September last.

James Buchanan Esq., Deputy Collector under Regulation IX. of 1823 in Chittagong, for fifteen days, on private affairs, in extension of the leave granted to him on the 28th August last.

James Buchanan Esq., Deputy Collector under Regulation IX. of 1823 in Chittagong, for three months, under Medical Certificate.

Mr. G. N. Chatterjee, Assistant Surgeon of Fort Ward, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

The Rev. H. Hutton, Chaplain of Dacca-Dum, reported his intention to leave Dacca, from the 1st of January, next, on board the Steam Ship "Batavia," on the 28th instant. The suspended portion of the leave granted to him under the 18th October 1843, for two years, is accordingly cancelled.

4th December, 1843.

Mr. E. W. Woodman, Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Choudpore, for three months, under Medical Certificate, in extension of the leave granted to him on the 10th instant.

Mr. T. Henry, Magistrate, Collector, and Salt Agent in the Southern Division of Bengal, for three months, under Medical Certificate, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station, on private affairs, for three months, under Medical Certificate, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Mr. J. N. Kinnaird, Deputy Assistant Surgeon of Hospitals, for one month, on private affairs, commencing from the date on which he may quit his Station.

Dated the 24th ultimo, directing unposted Ensigns C. M. Fitzgerald and C. A. Barwell, recently admitted into

DOMESTIC OCCURRENCES.

DEATHS.—Nov. 18. At Rhodogora, near Huxar, Adeline, the beloved child of Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Carter, aged 1 year, 6 months and 21 days.—24. At Chancery, General James, of the Liverpool.—26. Mrs. J. W. Stevens, Mrs. Mettill.—27. At New York, Mrs. J. W. Stevens, Mrs. Mettill.—28. At Indianapolis, Charlotte Evans, the tenderly beloved wife of George Wood, Esq. aged 37 years.—Died at Calcutta, A. V. Ireland, Esq. chief officer of the New

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 468. Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, DECEMBER 21st. 1848.

[Price 3 Cts. Rs. monthly, or 10 Rs. yearly if paid in advance.]

STEAM.—The Memorial of the Calcutta Trade's Association, to the Court of Directors in favour of the Comprehensive plan of Steam navigation, and which will be found among our selections, places this great question in a very lucid point of view, by a reference to incontrovertible statistical facts. It contrasts the interests which would be promoted by the despatch of the Steamers to Bombay alone, with those which are connected with the arrival of the Steamers direct at Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta. The argument deduced from this comparison needs no extraneous support. If the public Authorities at home are disposed to take a comprehensive view of their national duties, they will adopt that plan which shall give to all the Presidencies an equal participation in the blessings of Steam communication. If they take a narrow view of their responsibilities, they will confine their views to the single port of Bombay and the interests connected with it. We rather incline to fear that they will adopt the narrowest view of the case, partly because common sense so rarely enters into the councils of States, and partly because the interests of Bombay appear to predominate so largely at the India House over those of Madras or Calcutta.

A writer who calls himself A Looker on, in the Hurkers, looks at the subject in what he considers a facetious light, and maintains that the only object which may be called national, and for which the Authorities in England will expend the public funds, is the early communication of political and commercial information; that is, the despatch of a packet of political news and political instructions to the Governor General of a single Journal to the Editors at Madras and Calcutta, and the transmission of one commercial letter by express to each House of business at Ceylon, Madras, and Calcutta, at a most exorbitant rate of postage. This is what we have at present, and it costs Government the sum of One Hundred Thousand Pounds sterling a year. The rest of the correspondence comes on, at a heavy rate of postage, after a lapse of 5, 7, or 8 days. The patriotic Looker on says "this is an inconsequence certainly," and then he gives us some poetical quotation about "some banished lover of some captive maid." He altogether overlooks the fact, that the same sum which is now expended from the resources of India for the benefit of Bombay alone, would, if judiciously applied, be sufficient to give the same benefit to each Presidency, without injury to the favoured port of Bombay. This great fact has always been cast into the shade; and we have a right therefore to assume that the exclusive advocacy of the Bombay line does not arise from any real difficulty in the way of meeting the wishes and the wants of the rest of India, but from an undue partiality for one port, and, we fear, from that perversion of disposition which makes it so agreeable to some men to run counter to the views of others.

We lament that the Bentinet has gone home with so small a number of passengers as thirty-five. The Hindostan took home seventy in the previous trip, and more than a hundred in the trip before that. We account for this falling off, partly from the fear of arriving in England in the depth of winter, and partly from the conveniences offered to old Indians, by the superior class of passenger ships now in the river. The old Qui-Lis, as the venerable old gentlemen of Bengal are called, look above all things to their comforts, and the Steamers are uncomfortable, while the great vessels which go round the Cape, afford every description of comfort. When the Honourable Company, with an eye to the approaching extinction of their trade, began to discontinue the despatch of their ships, some of the old Civilians of Lord Wellesley's days, asked what "was the use of the Company's sending them out to make fortunes, if they did not also send out ships to take them home, when their fortunes were made?" Something akin to this feeling still lurks about the old Indian, who likes to go home in a ship in which a Colonel and a Senior Merchant are still somebody, instead of being lost in the miscellaneous mob of a Steamer. But as the old stagers are transferred, one by one, to the United Service Club in London, this feeling will gradually die out, and all men of twelve or fifteen years standing, whether in the Civil, Military, Ecclesiastical or Medical profession, may be expected to patronise the Steamers, and to take the Pyramids on their way home. The patronage which those vessels receive will therefore be continually on the increase; and no dearth of passengers will be felt after the lapse of a year or two.

Far be it from us to say that Government is bound to keep up steamers on the direct line for the benefit of passengers, in the expectation that a sufficient predilection for the shorter route will grow up to render much further assistance from the public funds unnecessary. Still, we maintain that the service derived, or to be derived, from passengers, is a necessary ingredient in the question of Steam intercourse, and that if Government will help to keep up the Steam vessels for the present for the conveyance of packets, such a habit of using them will grow upon the community as to render the strict contract Government may be called to make for the use of steamers to convey the mails, less burdensome on the public funds.

But this is only one of the collateral advantages of direct steam communication. The propriety of assisting it from the revenues of India rests upon other and higher grounds. It is impossible that the public in general at the Presidencies of Calcutta and Madras and at Ceylon, and the rising commercial community of the Straits and China can receive all their letters and communications from England as rapidly across the country, with our present roads or with any roads that can be made in the next four years, as they will by Steamers direct from Europe. Steam communication, to be kept up at all, must receive support from the funds of the State. Whether the large Steamers start from Calcutta or from Bombay, the expenses they incur will not be met entirely by passengers; but there will be more passengers from Calcutta than from Bombay, and for the same number of Steamers, Government will therefore have more to make up from the latter than from the former port. The sum now paid by Government for Steam communication which dissatisfies every one is more than would be required for a communication which would satisfy all parties; and equally meet the wishes of all the Presidencies. Therefore, it would be unwise in Government to patronise the exclusive route to Bombay and throw overboard the essential interests of the other Presidencies.

THE CAPE RELIEF FUND.—Among our advertising columns will be found the scheme devised by the General Committee of the Cape Relief Fund for the final distribution of the subscriptions placed at their disposal by the generous sympathies of the Indian community. The plan has now been communicated to the public through the newspapers of the North West for many weeks, yet such is the general apathy which has succeeded the warm interest once taken in the subject, that not a single line of approbation or dissent has been obtained from any body of contributors; and no communication has been received except from the Committees of Calcutta, Madras, and Agre, confirming the principle on which the scheme is based. The fact is, that the feelings in which this, the largest and noblest subscription which has ever been raised in India originated, have passed away, and cannot be revived. The Cabul disasters have been transferred to the province of the Historian, and are seldom alluded to, but as a peg on which to hang a little political vituperation. But as those who are to benefit by the fund are in a state of destitution which cannot be too soon relieved, and as the Committee at Kurnool cannot sit for ever, we think they have acted with much discretion in fixing the 1st of January next as the period for receiving communications and suggestions, and in determining to proceed to a disbursement of the funds after that date. The scheme which they have devised appears to evince much consideration and judgment. We are sure it has been framed in a spirit of impartiality, and with the single hearted desire to dispense the beneficence of the public with equity. It is not improbable that the general principle of distribution which has been adopted, may be open to some objection, as involving individual cases of hardship; but perhaps no plan which human ingenuity could have devised, would have been altogether free from some such imputation. It is certain however that to detain the funds any longer, in the vain hope of receiving communications from the subscribers, would be an act of injustice towards all those who are looking forward with anxiety to the relief it is to afford them.

The funds now remaining in the hands of the Kurnool Committee, amount to 500,000 Rs. This is exclusive of 50,000 Rupees raised at Bombay, which has not been united with the general fund, but remains with the local Committee, who have made no communication relative to its disposal to the General Committee. This silence it is not easy to account for, especially after the Bombay Committee had been applied. No distribution of it by a local Committee at Bombay, with their imperfect knowledge, can well be effected with justice and impartiality. Some have been led to ascribe the backwardness of the Bombay Committee on this occasion to an intention to divert the funds to another design, the connection of which with the object for which they were given, is but remotely perceptible,—we allude to the erection of the proposed Church at Calcutta, in memory of those who fell. But we cannot bring ourselves for a moment to admit the idea that any body of men can be found at that Presidency to sanction so gross a violation of trust, and to lay out on brick and mortar, funds given from the noblest motives for the relief of the survivors of that great calamity, and for no other object. We hope these fears will be entirely removed by the union of the Bombay funds with the general fund, before the beginning of the coming year.

The document we now publish states that the number of maimed does not exceed 185. If a greater number existed in our own provinces, there is little doubt they would make themselves and their claims known. This account does not tally with the reports which were circulated on the advance of our army in 1842, of hundreds of maimed camp followers having crowded into the camp. The Committee state, however, that from all the information they can gather, there are more than three hundred Hindoostanes in Afghanistan, who, from their maimed condition are unable to find their way back. Dost Mahomed is known to have placed himself again in communication with the Governor General, and some have gone so far as to conjecture the nature of the reply which has been sent to him. We hope his Lordship has not allowed the opportunity to escape of impressing on the Ameer that the most acceptable service he can render to the British Government will be to provide for the conveyance of these unfortunate men back to our own provinces.

CHINA.—It may probably be in the remembrance of the reader that soon after the successful termination of hostilities with China, it became a matter of enquiry to whom the credit of advancing up the Yang-tze-kiang, and occupying the head of the great canal, was due. It was sufficiently apparent that the Chinese Cabinet, which had not been covered by the appearance of our hostile fleet off the Coast of Peking, or by the bombardment of Canton, or by the occupation of Amoy, Chusan and Ningpo, felt that this masterly movement had struck a blow at the heart, which paralyzed the powers of the empire, and rendered peace on any terms indispensable to its preservation. Some gave the credit of this measure to Lord Auckland, others to Lord Ellenborough, and some traced it up to the experience and counsels of Sir H. Gough. The last number of the Bombay Courier publishes some official correspondence between Lord Stanley, the Colonial Secretary, and the President of the Board of Control, and between Sir Hugh Gough and the Admiral, which appears to set this important historical question at once at rest, and enables us confidently to bestow the praise of that measure, which obliged the Emperor so humbly to sue for peace, in the right quarter.

From Sir Hugh Gough's despatches we find, that so late as the 23d of November, 1841, he continued to cherish the same opinion which had been simultaneously put forward by some of our journalists here, that the war could not be brought to a termination, unless our army had advanced to the neighbourhood of Peking. His Excellency says, "Considering the importance laid on the expedition to the Peking, next spring, I would suggest the expediency of husbanding the troops, as well as the naval force this winter, as much as possible, to prepare them for the ensuing campaign to the northward."—"Again," "this reinforcement with the force that I enclose dated the winter at Chiu-lau, will enable us to proceed at the very first change of the monsoon, to the entrance of the Gulf of Pechili, and to take up some defensible position where the reinforcements from India could join us."—Thus it appears that the plan of the campaign, on which the Commander-in-Chief rested his hopes of success consisted of a march upon the capital of the Chinese empire.

Lord Stanley, however, in a letter addressed to the President of the Board of Control on the 21st of December of the same year, develops these views with regard to the object of the war, which become the basis of the treaty, and suggests, perhaps for the first time, those plans for the conduct of the campaign, which appear to have been implicitly followed by the Commanders. The passage runs thus:

"It is, I am persuaded, unnecessary to impress upon the Governor General of India, who is charged with the general superintendence of the war, that the only objects which Her Majesty desires to obtain are, satisfaction for the injuries to which her subjects have been exposed, and for the insults which have been offered to Her Crown, and the establishment of peaceful and friendly commercial relations with China, upon such footing as shall afford permanent and effectual security against the recurrence of similar misunderstandings for the future. Her Majesty desires no acquisition of territory, nor any advantages for her own subjects which should not equally be shared by other nations; and to the attainment of these objects, and these alone, the efforts of Her Majesty's forces are to be directed. Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the most probable means of obtaining these objects would be, the occupation of a position which would enable them effectually to control the internal commerce of the Chinese empire, and thus render the moral pressure upon the Court of Peking irresistible.

Such a position, they think, would be attained by ascending the Yang-tze-kiang with a sufficient force to take and retain possession of the island which lies at the intersection of that river with the grand canal of China; and, as at present advised, it is to that object that the principal efforts of 1842 should be directed; but beyond this general intimation of intentions, which are themselves liable to be altered by information, which we have shortly received, I should deem it inexpedient to fetter the discretion of the Governor General by attempting at present to give him any precise instruction."

It appears therefore that this masterly movement up the Yang-tze-kiang, which was so signally, and we may also say, so unexpectedly crowned with success, originated with Her Majesty's Cabinet, if not with Lord Stanley himself; and not with the Governor General of India. We believe the future historian will consider its mark of no ordinary sagacity in the Cabinet of London, to have devised a scheme of operations, without any aid from the experience of former success or failure in similar circumstances which, in the course of three months, brought the haughty ruler of three hundred millions of subjects to seek for reconciliation with those whom he had been accustomed to treat with such supercilious contempt.

But while we indulge a just feeling of exultation in the view of that combination of wisdom and energy which brought the war to a speedy termination, we must not ungratefully forget the our favour, in inclining the Chinese Authorities to a pacific counsels, just at the precise juncture, when they proved all important to us. Notwithstanding our sagacity and our courage never perhaps was an expedition so absolutely on the brink of failure, from causes which no human power could control. It is no dubious fact that if the Chinese had not entered into negotiations at the time they did, we must have retired with humiliation from the scene of our triumphs. The Yang-tze-kiang difficulty in character from the Indus, and at the season of the year in which our troops entered it, its banks are equally fatal to the European constitution. Sickness had made its appearance among the troops while they lay off Nankin to no alarming extent, that in a short time the energies of the army must have been paralyzed; and if the Emperor had postponed the negotiations to the coming year, Nankin would probably have presented the same lamentable spectacle of an army in hospital, as Sekkur now does; the expedition must have retired from the river without accomplishing its object. Our eventual triumph under the able Commanders who conducted its movements was apparently certain; but if we had been obliged to retire from Nankin without success, the arrogance of the Court would have been inflamed, and, it is difficult to calculate what farther time must have elapsed, or what additional millions must have been sacrificed before peace was concluded.

It was when these melancholy forebodings were beginning to fill the minds of men, that the Chinese Plenipotentiaries most providentially made their appearance and proposed terms of peace and friendship; and never was the advent of any messengers of peace more welcome. While therefore we pay a just tribute of honour to the discernment of the Ministry, the ability of the Generals, and the bravery of the troops, we must not forget these higher obligations under which, as a nation, we were laid by the gracious interposition of Providence, without which our triumph might have been turned into mourning.

There is one sentence in the extract we have made from Lord Stanley's letter, which deserves particular attention. "Her Majesty desires no acquisition of territory, nor any advantages for her own subjects which should not equally be shared by other nations." There is a noble spirit of disinterestedness in these sentiments, above all praise. While the nations of Christendom are upbraid us, unjustly, for our exclusive, monopolising commercial spirit, we are enabled to answer their reproaches triumphantly by pointing to our conduct on this grand occasion. Though we took up arms in our own national quarrel, and invaded China for the redress of our own individual wrong, yet, so far was our Government from cherishing that narrow spirit with which it is charged, that it determined, from the very first, that all the nations of Christendom should participate equally with ourselves in the benefit of our success; and that our object should be to open the markets of China, not to our own national manufactures alone, but to the enterprizes of the whole civilized world. In our last article we stated our conjecture that the provision in the Supplementary Treaty which granted this equality of privileges to all foreign nations, originated with the Imperial Commissioner, and was intended to obviate the necessity of repeated references by foreign Envoys to Peking. Now, however, we are rather disposed to adopt the conclusion, that it was suggested by our own Plenipotentiary, with the view of carrying out the large and enlightened views embodied in Lord Stanley's dispatch.

THE SUDDER DEWANY ADVANTAGE.—It is always with particular diffidence that we venture to question the propriety of any decision passed by the Judges of our Sudder, or our Supreme Native Court. A feeling of official respect for the Judges who have been selected for their legal experience to preside in the final Court of appeal in this country naturally induces a misgiving of our own judgment; and there is always a fear lest the interference of a public journalist in any legal case should be construed into an attempt to control the opinions of those who ought to be left to the influence of their own unbiased views of right and wrong. But there may be cases in which the independent opinion of the press will be found beneficial inasmuch as such a reconsideration of a case, as we are now about to do, may lead to the correction of a harsh judgment, and subserve the substantial interests of justice. It is under this impression that we submit the following particulars of a suit which has recently been determined in the Sudder Court.

In the year 1833, Mr. Courjon, one of the most enterprising landholders in the district of Comillah, rented an old ruinous Bungalow from the Raja of Tipperah, at 30 Rupees a month, on condition that he should occupy it as long as he continued in the district. He laid out a considerable sum in order to render it habitable. Four years after this transaction, at the recommendation of Mr. G. P. Thompson, the Collector, he undertook the management of the Raja's landed estates, which had become embarrassed; but finding that he was thwarted by the Raja's underlings, who were fastening on his spoils, he relinquished his post. On this he persuaded the Raja to serve him with a notice to quit the Bungalow, and Mr. Courjon brought an action against the Raja for his salary. But the Raja soon found it necessary to invite his assistance again, and an amicable arrangement was made by which both suits were quashed, and it was agreed that the agreement under which Mr. Courjon held the Bungalow, should stand good. But he soon found it impossible to promote the interests both of the Raja, and of his amahs, and was obliged a second time to throw up his post of Mookter. Again he was served with a notice to quit the Bungalow under pain of being obliged to pay 30 Rupees a day for rent if he refused. With this injunction he did not think fit to comply. An action was then brought against him in the Zillah Court, which Mr. James Shaw, the Judge, threw out as malicious. The Raja appealed to the Sudder, who issued an order to Mr. Pringle to review the case. Mr. Pringle confirmed Mr. Shaw's decision. A second appeal was made to the Sudder who issued an order to the Principal Sudder Ameen to take up the case de novo. That officer decided that the Raja had a right to serve the notice; but his decision gave satisfaction to neither party, and the case came up in appeal again before the Sudder Court, when Mr. Barlow was of opinion that it should be decreed in favour of the Raja. The case then came before Mr. Tucker, who confirmed the decision of the two Zillah Judges, Mr. Shaw and Mr. Pringle, and voted for reversing Mr. Barlow's decision. This brought the case before a third Judge, Mr. Reid, who dissented from Mr. Tucker, when Mr. Gordon, a fourth Judge was called in and sided with Mr. Barlow and Mr. Reid, admitted the right of the Raja to serve the notice, and decreed rent for three months—the period included in the action—at the rate of ten Rupees a day, or 300 Rupees a month.

There is of course no Regulation which supplies any principle on which the merits of such a case can be decided, and the Judges are consequently thrown upon their own resources, and are obliged to regulate their decision by the principles of "justice, equity and good conscience." But it seems difficult to conceive how a decree can be given in favour of the Raja for 300 times the rent of the Bungalow upon any principle of equity, or how Mr. Courjon can be called on to pay the value of the Bungalow in a single month's rent. We know that on such occasions the Judges are sometimes in the habit of having recourse to the principles of equity as embodied in English law; but if we are not mistaken, there is an English statute which enacts that in similar cases no sum greater than twice the amount of the rent can be decreed. The decision is singularly unfair and injurious to Mr. Courjon, for on the strength of his lease he has continued to occupy the house till within the last two or three months, that is, during the six or seven years in which this case has been travelling so repeatedly from the town to the country, and from Judge to Judge. If the Raja has a right to exact 10 Rupees a day during the first three months after the notice was served, he has an equal right to make the same exorbitant and iniquitous charge for the subsequent period. The Raja requires no prompting to bring his action in the local Court for the remaining term; and the Principal Sudder Ameen in Tipperah must in that case either reverse the principle on which the Sudder Court has founded its decision, or decree rent for six years at the rate of 300 Rupees a month, to the extent of nearly 30,000 Rupees, for a met Bungalow, not worth the fifteenth part of the sum.

It is generally surmised that the Judges of the Sudder were led to this apparently extraordinary decision by an impression that Mr. Courjon had used his authority as the Raja's Mookter, to obtain a good house at a trifling rent, whereas the fact is that he had been in possession of the house four or five years before he accepted the office of Mookter. If these premises be correct, it appears to be the duty of the Court, both from a regard for its own honour and dignity, and from the necessity of securing public confidence in its decisions, to review the case in all its bearings, for it will be impossible to convince the public that a decision which obliges a man to pay 20,000 Rs. rent for a house, for six years, instead of 1500 Rs.—the sum expressed in his agreement,—is consonant with the principles of "justice, equity and good conscience."

INLAND STEAM NAVIGATION.—Several weeks ago we fell into a controversy with some of our Editorial brethren, relative to the charge which the Assam Company had determined to make of Two Rupees for the freight of each cubic foot of tonnage on their vessel, while the charge on the Government steamers was only a Rupee and a half. If no action took place. We pointed out at the time that this increase of price must necessarily diminish the value of that competition to which the public looked for a reduction of the prompt exorbitant price of freight. Our object was not to injure the Assam Company, but to benefit the community; and we subsequently acknowledged with gratitude that the Association had resolved not only to lower their charge to a Rupee and a half, but had even exceeded our expectations by determining to register applications for freight, in the order in which they were received, so as to remove the necessity of putting the freight up to sale; and also to make no discriminating charge between books, stationary and the like, and other descriptions of goods, metals excepted.

Upon the same principle on which we deprecated the augmentation of charge proposed by the Assam Company, do we now notice with particular satisfaction the great advantage which these judicious modifications are likely to secure to the community, and illustrate it by a pregnant example. In consequence of the time for the next despatch of the Assam Steamer having been necessarily fixed for the first week of January, an individual was under the necessity of employing the Government Steamer for the conveyance of three cases of stationary to Allahabad. The sum of their cubic contents amounted to Twenty-three feet, and the charge by the Assam Steamer, would consequently have been 34 Rs. 10 annas. The charge levied by the Government vessel, was Rupees 108-15-9-11—thirteen times that of its competitor. We think it a matter of justice to bring this fact prominently before the public, and to found on it a strong recommendation of the enterprise on which the Assam Company has now embarked. The difference between the two charges is so extraordinary; the demand on the Government vessel appears so wantonly, so unreasonably exorbitant, that it may possibly attract the attention of the public Authorities. But whether it does so or not, is no longer a matter of any great consequence. It will undoubtedly attract the attention of the public at large, who furnish the freight for these Steamers, and whose remonstrances have hitherto been treated with little consideration.

We rejoice that the days of this monopoly are numbered. When it was discovered three or four years ago, that the tonnage of the existing Steamers was inadequate to the demands of the country, and that in order to obviate a charge of favoritism, it was necessary to put up the freight to auction, by which process Government became large gainers at the expense of the public interests, it was clearly the duty of the public Authorities, either to have relinquished the task to private enterprise, or to have laid on such a number of additional vessels as would have reduced the charge within reasonable limits. Neither course was adopted; and thus an undertaking originally established with the noblest views, and which had materially benefited the country, became a source of public injury, by standing in the way of those improvements which the progress of commercial intercourse required. For a long time capitalists were deterred from entering on any competition with vessels backed by the resources of the State, but the Assam Company at length determined to start a rival steamer, and they have succeeded in conveying goods at a cheaper rate, and, generally speaking, in less time than the Honourable Company's vessels, and they will find ample and, we hope, also remunerating employment for her. We are happy to learn that two other vessels belonging to another party are about to be placed on this line of river navigation, exclusively of the more powerful vessels which we were led to expect some time ago from the Association with which Mr. Robertson is connected. There will therefore we hope from this time forward be no danger of our being obliged to pay the same exorbitant charge to which we have alluded, far less of wholesome competition.

THE LATE MOVEMENT REGARDING THE REVIVAL OF THE NAME OF JESUS.—Some months have now elapsed since the warm contention which was raised regarding the orthography to be adopted for the name of Jesus, in the Oxford translation of the Scriptures, subsided; and both parties have been waiting with anxiety for the decision of the British and Foreign Bible Society, from whom the Auxiliary Society in Calcutta derives its main support, and to whom the matter had been referred. We have now been favoured with the copy of a letter from the Editorial Superintendent of the Parent Society, the Rev. Mr. Jowett, which gives a demi-official reply to the reference. The subject is one on which the Committee in London are desirous, if possible, to avoid touching, though their opinions may be clearly ascertained from the tenor of this document. They are in hope that this unofficial communication may lead to such an accommodation of views as shall obviate the unpleasant necessity of a more formal discussion of the subject, and an authoritative decision upon its merits.

We recommend the letter to the special attention, not only of those who have taken an interest in this question, but to all who can appreciate a combination of Christian affection and sound judgement, of the urbanity of the gentleman, and the classic elegance of the scholar, such as this letter presents. Scidion has it fallen to our lot to pursue an epistle which so eminently deserved to be called in the largest sense of the word, "beautiful." As a more composition, we think it will stand as an advantageous comparison with some of the finest specimens in the language. But it is the genuine spirit of Christianity and moderation which is breathed, that gives it such paramount importance in reference to the present controversy. Nothing can be more effectual and at the same time more modest than the rebuke it bestows on the fierce spirit in which that controversy was conducted. "We" by no means intend to exempt ourselves from all share in this rebuke, for all though we thought at the time that the tone of our remarks was one of civility, rather than of intemperance, yet with this noble model before us, we can scarcely continue to adopt this fastidious construction.

We hope the letter will produce the desired effect, and not only bring the present discord to a close, but render the co-operation of all those who are embarked in this sacred cause, more firm and cordial than ever. It is perhaps an unhappy element of the controversy that it does not admit of that reconciliation which is based on mutual concessions; and that one party or the other is required to give up, not in part, but absolutely, the ground which it has occupied. Mr. Jowett, we well described the question as "either a philosophical than a practical one; one in which concession might be made by either party without any real violation of sound conscience." In these circumstances, we trust the Committee of the Auxiliary Society in Calcutta will reconsider the question in every way; more especially in its bearing upon the welfare and progress of the great cause for which they are associated together. We trust they will not down us prematurely if we respectfully represent that the concession would be more appropriately made from those who are advocating the innovation, than from those who object to it; that, controlling as they do the resources on which the Missionaries depend for the means of printing the Scriptures, a concession on their part would have all the grace of Christian magnanimity, whereas a concession from those whom Mr. Jowett emphatically describes as the "working clergy and missionaries of Northern India," would appear as a submission to the necessity of circumstances, and might not be accompanied by a revival of that cordiality, which is so desirable. Lastly, we would submit, that as the heat and ardour of the day, the labour of translating, distributing and expounding the Scriptures falls on the Missionaries, their opinions are apparently entitled to that peculiar deference, which would admit of a concession on the part of the Committee, without any sacrifice of its dignity.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 14.

—Amongst the notices of Marriages appeared the first celebrated in Calcutta by the Ministers of the Free Presbyterian Church, who have there taken their place with the Dissenters in asserting their right to marry, even without an extension of the new marriage Act to India.

—A handsome silver cup has been presented by the Assam Company to Captain F. W. Smith of the Scotswood, in acknowledgment of his services in taking their Steamer twice to Allahabad, so as to establish her character.

—Nine Officers now appear as candidates for the office of Home Agent to the Military Fund. They are Major Colnett, Capt. Doveton, Major Golden, Major Hough, Dr. R. Loughton, Dr. Lightfoot, Major Payne, Major Thorne, and Major Turner.

—The Star mentions a rumour as current for some time past, derived from private letters by the last mail, that it is the intention of the Court of Directors at last to grant an increase of European Officers to the Indian Army. The increase is to be made by the formation of a second grade of Captains, giving such Regiment a number of second Captains eventually to equal the present number of Captains, but to be promoted gradually as young Officers are sent to occupy the inferior ranks. Opposition to the measure is, however, anticipated from the Home Government, as the Premier is said to be determined opposed to any increase of the Indian Army, either in officers or men, because of certain new arrangements intended at the expiration of the present charter.

—A letter in the Star from Sakhy, of the 27th November, gives a list of thirty-four Officers who had been compelled by sickness to leave the station, and two who had died, within the previous two months. The lives of a detachment of European Artillery, three Regiments and the staff were then intrusted to the care of one medical officer. Fewer was gradually decreasing; but dysentery was so much on the increase, as to be a serious element of the epidemic.

—The Englishman reports that Sir William Nott left Lucknow on the evening of the 5th instant with his family, to proceed to see for the benefit of his health; and that Major General Foulke has gone to Lucknow to officiate for him during his absence—rather a singular arrangement certainly.

—The Agra Post Office is to be immediately given into the charge of an Unconventured Officer—an arrangement which might be followed elsewhere, and so harm to be done.

—The Delhi Gazette of the 8th instant says, that Camp equipage was preparing at Agra for the Governor General, and that his Lordship's Aid, Captain Maclean, with the cook and native doctor reached Agra on the 4th.

—In the same paper there appears a letter from Gwalior, of the 5th November, which states that a meeting of the officers of the Lucknow had been held, at which it was suggested that no opposition should be offered to the British Army crossing the Chambal, but that signing a treaty they should get behind the British Force and fall on Agra, Muttra and Delhi. Nothing, however, was definitely resolved on. The last report from Gwalior, to the 8th instant, was that Rao Soorajee had strongly advised the Tara Bhaee, at the earnest suggestion of the Beas Bhaee, to give up Daudpore; and that Ram Rao Pholke, Bhamjee, and other deputies at Agra had been instructed accordingly. The superior officers are anxious to give up Daudpore, but the men are urgent against the measure.

—Baboo Dwarkanath Tagore arrived at Delhi on the 1st instant, and is busy sightseeing. The King left his Palace on the 8th instant, for the first time since he was deprived of the harmless homage of his Nannam; and he received the proper salutes both from his own battery, and from the light field battery in position.

—So poor is the supply of firewood in Delhi, that the extra demand for funeral piles, in consequence of unusual mortality amongst the Hindoos, has raised the price of the better sort of fuel to a Rupee for two mounds. Government has increased the allowance for planting trees from 1000 to 3000 Rupees, on the Doab canal, and for the past eight months the planting operations have gone on rapidly.

—Letters from Ludlow, to the 24th December, says the Delhi Gazette, give the intelligence that Raja Goolab Singh is likely to assume command of all the Sikh troops on the right bank of the Sutlege, to be stationed opposite Ferozepore; that Lena Singh is to command at Phinlor, and Soochet Singh at Rooper. It is also reported that all the European Officers are to be dismissed from the Sikh service; and that steps are to be taken for putting to death Feroz Singh, the male of the King, who attempted to run off with him.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 15.

—The Star reproves us for saying that our contemporaries, who advertise the villainous Lottery Schemes which have supplanted the Government speculation, do so, "without any approval whatever on the part of the Editors;" and we think undeservingly. We have but given our Editorial brethren every fair trial in their own pretension. We are at the same time acquainted with him in thinking, not only that with all their disapproval they encourage the Lotteries, but that they even give them all their life. It is as plain as noonday, that without the circulation afforded to their advertisements by the papers the Lotteries must die at once. It is in the power of the Editors to extinguish these evils; they tell us it would gratify them if that were done; yet they refuse to withhold their assistance in perpetuating them. We put the thing as an insupportable mystery—and so we must leave it. The Harbinger's plea, that every man is to be held innocent till proved guilty, in no way explains it.

—The name of Major James Seed is added to the list of Candidates for the Home Agency to the Military Fund.

—The Star reports that the Siege Train now forming at Agra, consists of 80 pieces of ordnance, 10 of them being Iron 24 Pounders, and 10 of them Iron 18 Pounders, together with several Field pieces.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16.

—An advertisement appears to-day of the appointment of Mr. James Calder Stewart as successor to Mr. Gordon in the Secretaryship of the Union Bank, subject to the approval of the Proprietors at their next general meeting. Mr. Stewart undertakes his office in circumstances that will afford opportunity for exhibiting every qualification he can possess for the discharge of its duties; and we trust he will show himself equal to the occasion. As it is, he is recommended both by the excellence of his personal character, and his relationship to one of the kindest hearted men ever connected with the commerce of Calcutta, James Calder; and Calcutta has not been poor in such characters.

— At Hickey and Co.'s sale of the 14th, the highest price obtained for Indigo—that of B. C. Bell and Co. Nudon,—was Rs. 153-8.

— A General Meeting of the Agricultural Society was held on the 18th inst. at which a number of interesting communications were made. We observe a strong recommendation of Messrs. Vetch and Sons, Seedsmen of Exeter, by Major Napier of Bhagpore; who testifies that their charges are most reasonable, and that their seed, sent by the overland mail, came up freely the fourth day after sowing. We are happy to record the recommendation both from personal acquaintance with Mr. Vetch, and his garden, and from experience of the value of his investments to this country.

— We are also happy to see a notice of the near completion of that splendid ornament to the City of Calcutta, the Metcalfe Hall.

— The Hurbers reports the prevalence of cholera and small pox at Akyah, with great mortality amongst the Native population; Lieut. Staples, of the 60th N. I. had also been cut off by cholera.

— The Bombay Government have been under the necessity of advertising for unseasoned Surgeons, to proceed to Scinde on temporary employment. We are happy to see it stated in the Gentleman's Gazette, that the sickness in Scinde is not fatal in proportion to its extent.

— The Bombay Geographical Society have received their portraits of Sir A. Burnes, from the seal of Broodren.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 18.

— The Englishman has done himself honour by publishing his Sunday Paper on Saturday evening; for which he has the reward of a suppliant note from the Editor of the Eastern Star, and the approbation of all to whom religion is not a jest.

— The Papers are filled with rather discordant reports of the Annual Examinations of the High School and the Parental Academy. We imagine the most forward to blame, are the least capable, of estimating the diligence and ability, of which they appreciate the fruits so little.

— The Calcutta Trade Association have made a valuable contribution to the advocacy of our Steam Cases, in Memorials to the Board of Control, and the Court of Directors, which will be found amongst our selections.

— The Governor General received Allahabad on the 18th instant, and was expected at Agra on the 11th.

— The Duff's Gazette of the 9th contains long communications from Cabul, the most important items of which are the visit of the Meer Walles of Khasulera to the Dost with little violence—the dismissal of Saifur Jung with four Rupees for his travelling expenses, and every mark of continuance, on his way—the rapacity of the Dost in confiscating the property of a merchant at Attock on pretence that he is dead—and the reception of a studiously brief reply from the Governor General, to the communication formerly reported to have been sent him by the Dost. Every thing asked us here referred; yet the Dost has another letter to his Lordship in preparation.

— The late appearance of the Nepagales in the territories of Onda had occasioned, orders to the troops at Cawpore to hold themselves ready for service of the shortest notice. The orders, however, were soon withdrawn.

— The Englishman gives favourable accounts from South Australia. According to the South Australian Register, the population now amounts to 16,000, possessing 800,000 sheep, 20,000 horned cattle, 8,000 horses, and 51,000 acres of land under cultivation, and exporting last year to the extent of £75,000. The colony is therefore looking up, and may yet afford practical demonstration of the soundness of the principles on which it was formed.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 19.

— The Shipping Report contained the alarming Notification that the mails had missed the Bombay; which got to us on the morning of the 10th inst. apparently about 24 hours from Calcutta. It is to-day explained, however, that these mails were only a small packet of stray letters sent after the Steamer: the bulk of the Mail was all safe on board.

— The Bombay Times of the 9th expects the mail by the Servicos on the 14th or 15th, possibly open.

— On the 15th instant, the Landholder's Society met to receive Mr. George Thompson on his return to Calcutta, and to form arrangements for his discharging the duties of the Society's Agent in England.

— The Englishman says that the Windsor Castle, the Steamer lately arrived from the Mauritius, is to ply up and down the river, so as to pass our way. We shall be glad to see her as work; but it must be recollected she will be little use, unless we can go to town in her in the morning, and return home in the evening; moreover she can succeed only by low fares, and must probably lose for a time, before passengers are drawn to her in sufficient number.

— The Madras papers mention the death of Major General Walker, H. M. 21st Fusiliers, of cholera.

— A Bombay Government Notification is issued, intimating that from the 1st of March next, Post Masters throughout India will be prepared to receive, at the option of the sender, Steam Postage on all Letters directed to the United Kingdom via Southampton. It will be found amongst our selections.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 20.

— Lord Ellenborough reached Agra, on Monday the 11th instant, and was received with all honour. A division of the army broke ground on the 12th and commenced its march towards Gwalior.

— The Park, which comprises no less than 2000 hectares, and the Engineer Department which numbers 500, were expected to follow on the 16th, but the whole world have to halt for some days on the banks of the Chumbul, to await the arrival of the Bridge which has been constructed as Agra.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following names for the Friend of India:

Major T. E. Sampson, ...	to April, 1849,	30	0
H. Redding, Esq.	to Oct. 1848,	20	0
Dr. Spilary, Esq.	to Dec. 1848,	20	0
A. D. Mitchell, Esq.	to Nov. 1848,	20	0
R. Lowther, Esq.	to Dec. 1848,	20	0
J. R. Lewis, Esq.	to Nov. 1848,	20	0
The Most of the 5th Regt. M. Light Cavalry, ...	to Dec. 1848,	8	0
H. Moore, Esq.	to Dec. 1848,	20	0
H. C. Bell, Esq.	to June, 1848,	20	0
J. R. Barnes, Esq.	to June, 1848,	48	0
Col. Burney, ...	to Nov. 1848,	20	0
W. Mackie, Esq.	to Oct. 1848,	20	0
Capt. D. Simpson, ...	to Dec. 1848,	20	0

THE NOVEMBER MAIL.

The November Mail, which we were led by the Bombay Times, not to expect for several days, has come in unexpectedly this morning, and we have received by express, a copy of the London Atlas of the 6th of November. The only intelligence of particular interest is the prohibition of further Meetings in Ireland and the arrest and prosecution of Daniel O'Connell, for conspiracy and other misdemeanours. We present our readers with the Summary of the Atlas, and subjoin to it some further items of intelligence gleaned from the Journal.

CHRONICLE OF THE MONTH.

The absence of all subjects of public excitement during the month of September has been fully counterbalanced by the political convulsions of the month that has just closed. The mail which bore to London the tidings of our greatest Secretary's reception in France and Belgium, and was rife with complaints of the impation of our Government in respect to Ireland and Wales, had scarcely been then shoreward when the authorities shook off their lethargy and commenced operations in both quarters. The first measure adopted was to prohibit a great repeal meeting at Clontarf by proclamation; the second was to arrest O'Connell and some of his repeal associates on a charge of sedition founded upon the deposition of a reporter named Hughes.

We have given, in subsequent columns, full details connected with these transactions, whence it will be seen that preparations are making for the trial of the great Agitator, and that such proceedings had better be delayed until the reporter upon a charge of perjury. By a very large class the Government is censured for its present interference, and its policy is regarded as unwarranted; meetings to be held, and inflammatory harangues to be delivered, for months past, without let or hindrance, and has therefore in a manner committed at the present juncture a double error. On the one hand, it is argued that effectually to arrest the demonstrations making in Ireland, a large amount of physical force, well organized and judiciously placed, was essential; and as this coercive power could not be mustered at an earlier period, there is no sufficient reason for an imputation of indifference to O'Connell's proceedings. It is confidently asserted that Government will fail to obtain a conviction against O'Connell simply upon the affidavit of a man who has erred in part of his representations. Meanwhile, Ireland is covered with troops, and her coasts watched by vessels of war. Great activity prevails in the law courts of Dublin, and O'Connell divides his time between preparing and answering the various petitions to his millions of followers not to violate the public peace.

In South Wales an inquiry, by commission, has been commenced, and some of the daughters of Rebecca's whose violence was attended with crime, have already come under the cognizance of the law. But here, as in Ireland, commission has been made of the justice of the peace, and the inquiries ordered by Government demonstrates that the government of the nation is prepared to receive the Ministers from their apathy, and riveted attention upon the necessity for soothing measures—and that is something gained.

Next to the affairs of Ireland, the political occurrences have so much agitated the public mind, at least while the issue was uncertain, as the contest for the representation of the City. In our last mention was made of the demise of Sir Matthew Wood, and of the intimation of Mr. BARRING, in the Tory interest, and Mr. PATRICK, an ardent Reformer, to contest the vacant seat. The election, which was decided in favour of Mr. PATRICK, is the most important demonstration which has been made by an electoral body since the passing of the Reform Bill, and the result is very singularly magnanimous were virtually stated on the result of this appeal to the greatest commercial constituency in the Kingdom—that of the city of London. The contest has been decided in favour of Mr. PATRICK, the testimony of the Times, as a first stand-up fight between the Anti-Corn-Law League and the Ministry. This is perfectly true, with the explanation that the contest was between the principles of free-trade as represented by the Anti-Corn-Law League, and that of monopoly, now for the first time openly and avowedly identified with the cause of the Conservative Government and its candidate, Mr. BARRING. Throughout the whole canvass and preparatory proceedings of the election, it was made a question, not of Wigs or Tory, but of free-trade or no free-trade. "Will you support a repeal of the corn-laws?" "Will you vote for the admission of foreign sugar?" were the questions put to Mr. BARRING, and his answer was—"No, I will not do so; but I will support Sir ROBERT PEEL." His principal supporters all avowed themselves decided advocates of commercial reform, and the Free-trade was the watchword. "I will not do so," said Mr. BARRING, "may be all very well, but it is still not for England." The style of Mr. BARRING's electioneering was very interesting and pleasant with which the walks in the metropolis were covered in his behalf, was the same as that of Mr. FRANKLIN's speech last September, and the Anti-Corn-Law League, and an appeal to old English prejudices against that novel and aw-angled free-trade crochets of inter-trade cotton-ginners.

On the other hand, the Anti-Corn-Law League threw itself boldly, and without reserve, into the contest, which was in a great measure organized and conducted under the auspices of its members. They applied to no party, and were not in any popular prejudices, none of the usual electioneering harangues, but sailed the colours of free-trade to the music and strains of the March of the Volunteers of London which was a contest between the moral and commercial reformation and commercial restriction.

To estimate properly the importance of the victory gained, and the result which it has in the City, the City of London is, in many respects, the most unenviable arena upon which both of free-trade could be fought. It is the stronghold of many of the most unprincipled speculators. The West India interest, for instance, is mainly concentrated in the City; the shipping interest, which has always a strong Conservative Testament justifies it. The Mistaken foreword under the Jewish dispensation is called Christ—the same in its Greek meaning, but not the literal name—and this was in deference to custom, the change having been long before needed familiar by the Septuagint version, made at the commands of a Hasmonean Prince. Another question arises, can it ever be allowable to substitute some conventional term, for a name which in the original scripture is marked with more than usual prominence? Undoubtedly not, we should reply; yet what says the example of the Greek Testament writers? They have not hesitated to adopt the name (superstitiously introduced by the seventy) Jesus instead of Joshua, slipping at once both the real name, and the significant meaning. These two instances may suffice to show, how loose is the Scripture authority for any absolute rule in transferring Scripture names into another language.

But you found a special argument upon the fact of the Angel's having assigned a reason for giving to the Son of Mary this particular name. Is there any great force in this argument, unless the word, adopted as a representative of the original, should (as in the Angel's address, which was doctrine in the language of the country, i. e. the Syro-Chaldean) immediately explain its meaning to the vernacular reader which is not done in your case? Many allusions of this kind are necessarily observed, or even lost, in every translation and I think you will concur with me, nevertheless in the general proposition, that a translation is not therefore unfaithful, though the original sense is more or less obscured in it. To give the full meaning, there will be always required a living interpreter, and even as most verily be "one among a thousand."

As for the supposition that the Mahomedan spelling of the name of Jesus had its origin in an erroneous design, it is a mere guess of the Lexicographers whom we might as well trust when they give the immemorial interpretation of Christ. In the absence of historical information, it is surely more natural to presume that the corruption of the letters was accidental, and arose out of the extreme corruption of the Christian Church at the time, and in the countries where Mahomedanism originated. At all events, the word is not now an obnoxious one;—and intrinsic meaning is determined beyond a cavil, by the circumstances under which it first makes its appearance in the Gospel Narrative. He who should now see people from their aim can be nothing less than a Seivior in the highest and most glorious sense of the term. The Angelic Commentary in fact contains much more than the name itself expresses, and though the name be disguised, the commentary remains untouched.

For reasons like these, many of us think that the auxiliary Committees are endeavouring to enforce a resolution which however correct in a literary point of view, is (to say the least) not indispensably necessary.

But the Missionaries on the other hand, have taken what we no less think to be an exaggerated view of what they regard as objections to the amended orthography. It may very fairly be doubted, whether the Mahomedans would make such a handle of the innovation as they anticipate. Among native Indians, whether already converted, or seriously enquiring after the truth, no real umbrage could long be taken at the new word; the reasons for a change being fully explained to them, the Missionaries could effect the change, if willing to lead it. We think, too, that in propagating other orthographical forms of their own, they surrender their main principles of objection. And I think I may give it, finally, as the general opinion among us, that whichever party in this controversy shall first recede from the high ground which has been taken, will have the merit of securing to Christian churches, Christian law, and Christian unity, that which (we had) we can only regard as a point of doubtful digestion. The grand principle which has so long held together the Bible Society, is agreement wherever agreement is possible; and surely the present question is scarcely one that should be allowed to "separate chief friends."

It is clear that I should rejoice to see from this long Epistle, if I have said any thing that may be thought unkind or presuming, set that to my account—and forgive it. Should this unofficial communication lead to an honourable peace among our Indian brethren; our Committee, I am sure will be glad to find that they have been released from the necessity of discussing the subject any further. With every Christian wish and prayers for your success in the great work, wherein we are all engaged, believe me to remain

Your affectionate brother in the "one Lord," (Signed) JOHN JOWETT,
Editorial Superintendent.

P. S. Though I have given my official address, I am in fact sitting 120 miles distant from London: and am therefore unable finally to confer with my good friend Mr. Bradburn on the contents of this letter: he will use it, however, before it is posted; and I also know that he estimates in my general view of the question, as does also my friend Mr. Browne, his co-Secretary.

DARLINGTON.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—As we have had no notice in the Friend since the flowery production of your worthy correspondent, I begin to suspect that the last of your communicative friendships have taken flight, at the close of last month, or you surely would have heard one this of the delay on the anniversary of St. Andrew's day. At twelve o'clock on one of the most lovely days I ever remember to have seen, the whole of the residents and most of the few visitors now left, assembled to witness the laying of the first stone of the Church. The Rev. F. Fisher officiated. He first read the 94th and 122d Psalms, and then very impressively a most beautiful and suitable prayer (of his own I believe), after which the first stone was laid by Mrs. Campbell, then Mr. Fisher read the Collect for the 7th Sunday after Trinity, the Collects for St. Andrew's day and for St. Simon and St. Jude, Gloria in excelsis, and the blessing. The site is most admirably chosen, facing Col. Lloyd's residence, and the building will be a very pretty object from every part of the station. Captain Bishop has the building of it, but as I from their aim can be nothing less than a Seivior in the highest and most glorious sense of the term. The Angelic Commentary in fact contains much more than the name itself expresses, and though the name be disguised, the commentary remains untouched.

I can offer no opinion of its merits further than what I glean from various reports as to its simplicity and neatness. I understand Capt. Bishop hopes to get it roofed in before the rains, so as to enable the fittings up to be completed by the close. Mr. Fisher mentioned in the course of the ceremony that when completed it was intended to name the edifice, St. Andrew's.

We have much colder weather this year than at the beginning of December last year, and the snow on the mountains seems to have extended farther and lower than last year at the same time. The greater part of the visitors have left us, but still some few remain and the pleasing sight of rosy children so rare in the plains is still to be seen at the manufactory. I advise those who want to see snow to come up forthwith as according to native report, we are to have a severe winter; and if a mild one gave us in 1844 six inches of snow, what may we anticipate in the promise snows we have written in a hurry to save the snow, so make any necessary corrections.

Yours faithfully,

A SUBSCRIBER.

Darlington, December, 1843.

EUROPE.

ENGLAND.

ARTICLES FROM THE FATHERLAND.—We are sorry to be this day after the obligation of stating, that some persons who superintend the affairs of the police seem to have misunderstood their duty, and that to such an extent as must make our country appear in a very unfavourable light in the eyes of every foreigner, and impart to the nations of civilized Europe a very false and untrue idea of the religious culture of Denmark.

But the fact will speak for itself, and the source from whence we have obtained our information may be implicitly relied upon.

Mr. Oenken, Baptist minister from Hamburg, arrived here on the 31st August, at the request and in company with Dr. Holst, of Birminham. The object of their journey was to visit some of the Baptist churches on the Continent, and amongst them the one in Copenhagen. They took apartments at the city of Hamburg hotel, from which the names of these visitors were in the usual manner sent to the police. Shortly after their arrival they went to visit Mr. Munster, the Baptist minister of this city, who happened, however, to be on a journey. They could scarcely have spoken with Mr. Munster, when two police-officers entered, requiring their attendance at the police-office near Riddar (Sir) Brastrop, who is a councillor of state, and the director chief of the police. They had accordingly to bend their steps to the police-office, accompanied by the police-officers. On their arrival they were informed by the police-officers that they were to be taken to a person, a Dane and a Lutheran, resident in London; but soon on a visit to his relations in this place, and who was furnished with a passport to the police-office the cause of Mr. Oenken and Dr. Holst's detention, to which this gentleman willingly assented. On arriving at the police-office he found Mr. Oenken in a room, and was requested by him to show the stranger minister through the city, and assist him in his affairs. The London Lutheran was not a little astonished to find that Mr. Oenken was a prisoner. Dr. Holst was also taken to the police-office, and on the way he communicated to his companion what had taken place at the police-office. Long extracts of laws, ordinances, and regulations, were read to them which were applied to Baptists in general, and to Mr. Oenken in particular. The result of which was, that in consequence of these laws, Baptists, and especially Mr. Oenken, were to be persecuted; but this did not seem to be the object of Mr. O. extraordinary kindness and mildness, and allow him to be confined in the police-office until the return of the avenger of the law. The result of the same day; and they were generous enough to return of some dinner to be sent in to him, of course at his own expense. Towards Dr. Holst they were more abundant in their conversation, with any persons on religious subjects; but failing to comply with these demands, it was intimated that he also must take his departure in the same hour as with Mr. Oenken. With regard to the fact of these conditions, Dr. Holst stated he could not have any objections, as being a foreigner, and unacquainted with the Danish language, he was unable to conduct any religious service in which speaking was required; but to pledge himself neither to speak to any body on religious subjects, nor to promote Christianity in any way he could not consent, and would rather prefer immediate banishment to coming under an obligation of which his conscience disapproved. Several attempts were made to persuade the Englishmen to consent to these conditions, which he was, who was of an English and mild nature, but all without effect. In Dr. Holst's estimation they wanted one essential qualification, he thought they were not Christians. On his arrival in Copenhagen he was informed that a Lutheran minister, but he had soon reason considerably to modify his opinion, and he was heard to utter with a certain degree of satisfaction that he was now converted from his error in this respect, and would be enabled to rectify the views and opinions of his Christian brethren on this subject.

With such an impression then the Doctor left Denmark on the same day in which he arrived. Under police escort he and Mr. Oenken were conducted on board the steamer. During his stay at the police-office the Rev. Doctor occupied his time in writing letters, and amongst these he wrote one to the councillor of state, Brastrop. This letter will be very interesting to read, and with all probability be printed on the arrival of Mr. Holst to England.

We beg to remark that, although the ordinance of 27th September, 1843, the second ordinance of which allows the Baptists of this city to have domestic worship and permission to take the Lord's Supper at their meetings, according to their own rites, does not mention anything of foreign brethren who may come to visit them; yet the presumption is natural, notwithstanding the portions of information given to them is only partial, that the visit which foreign would not be prohibited—since some which are unchristian enjoy Assistant Surgeon J. F. Bagon to the medical charge of the Pocomt jail and detachment Hurriannah Eight Infantry battalion; also directing him to do duty with the horse-station at the station.

Bellevue, Massachusetts, of the 34th regiment of Massachusetts infantry, having been pronounced unfit for further service, by a special medical committee assembled at Meadville, is transferred to the pension establishment as janitor from the 1st instant.

Brill, grass-cutter, who was transferred to the pension establishment, by General Orders of the 18th of January, last, belonged to the 1st troop 1st brigade of heavy artillery and not to the 8th light cavalry, as therein stated. Order books to be corrected accordingly.

Head Quarters, Camp Barelai, 14th November, 1943.
The following orders are, with the sanction of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India in Council, sanctioned:

THE FRIEND OF INDIA.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 460, Vol. IX.]

SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, DECEMBER 29th, 1848.

(Price 3 Cts. Rs. monthly, or 30 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.)

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The Editor of the Friend of India begs to acknowledge the following donations:

From Lieut. Col. Parsons, Co's. Rs. 100 to Serampore College; Co's. Rs. 100 to the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta, and Co's. Rs. 500 to the Timerville Mission.

From Major General Cooper, Co's. Rs. 50 to the Serampore Hospital.

GWALIOR.—The Governor General reached Agra on the morning of Monday the 11th instant, and was received with great pomp and circumstance. In the course of the week, the Army of Exercise marched towards Gwalior, and was to be followed immediately by the vast train of haterling guns. The Commander-in-Chief left Agra on the 16th to take the command of the forces, with Lord Ellenborough at his side. His Lordship now makes his first campaign. We believe this is the first instance in our Indian annals in which a Governor General, not a military man, has taken the field in person, and there will not be wanting those who will scold this procedure to his Lordship's foolishness for the tented field, rather than to the necessity of the case. They will argue that as Gwalior is within a day's post of Agra, every object which required the presence of the Governor General in the vicinity of warlike operations, might have been equally secured by his remaining in the Palace in that city, in daily communication with the Commander-in-Chief. It is much to be doubted whether his presence can afford any substantial aid to his Excellency sufficient to counterbalance the inconvenience of an arrangement which makes the Commander-in-Chief the second personage in his own camp. There can scarcely be any negotiations on foot which will require to be modified according to the events of the campaign. It has of course been foreseen that the overwhelming force now advancing into the country must overcome all opposition; and that the fortress which yielded to Popham's small band sixty years ago, cannot hold out against our tremendous siege train. For all practical purposes, his Lordship therefore might as well have remained behind. This is, however, perhaps the only occasion which Lord Ellenborough will enjoy of actually taking the field in person and sharing in the excitement of a real fight, and it would be ungenerous to begrudge the gratification of this curiosity.

Those who have been accustomed to consider the union of the Governor General with his Council, as a sure guarantee for peace, will discover in the present measure how entirely they have been mistaken. The war in Afghanistan and the war in Sicily, were both planned and entered upon while the Governor General was separated from the Supreme Council. The present campaign against Gwalior was planned in Council; the army was collected—under another name, but which misled nobody—while Lord Ellenborough sat weekly among his Council; and nothing was left to his Lordship's individual fiat, but to order the troops which had been assembled, to enter their tents and march. Whatever may be the praise or the blame bestowed on the present military movement, it cannot be attributed to the wisdom or unwisdom of one man, unless it is discovered that the Council or a majority of them placed their opinions entirely at the disposal of the Governor General. To all present appearances, the Council and the Governor must be considered equally responsible for this measure.

Of the justice of the war, it is not easy to speak with perfect confidence till the Gwalior Blue Book is published by order of Parliament. As the paramount authority in India, our Government cannot allow its wishes to be thwarted, and its power to be defied with impunity. Its dignity and its influence must be maintained unimpaired. Whenever it interferes, it must interfere with effect. The circumstance of its having been mixed up with the internal affairs of any state, or having carefully abstained from all interference, must necessarily create a broad line of distinction in the policy it ought to pursue. The Punjab and Nepal, therefore, stand on a different footing from the kingdom of Sindh. With the two former our relationship has been simply that of an ally. We have had nothing to say when one faction has subverted another, or even when the Minister has put his own sovereign to death. But Gwalior has long been in a dependent condition, notwithstanding the squeamish delicacy of our non-interference principle. During the last fifteen years, we have interfered in the internal direction of affairs, in so many instances, that the Dugher has considered the approbation of our Government in every measure of importance, quite indispensable. We have a contingent force paid by Sindh to the extent of five lakhs of Rupees a year, which has been employed in repressing domestic opposition, and has served materially to keep the various provinces in a state of subordination. We have interfered in the case of Bessa, and on the recent vacancy of the throne, the concurrence of the Governor General was sought, both as it respects the appointment of the Sovereign and the Prime Minister. The different Courts of India have long been accustomed to identify our government with the policies of Gwalior, and the open defiance of our authority, in the recent insurrection, and the persecution and banishment of the Minister of our choice, seems to create a strong necessity for our interference, upon every consideration of honour and interest.

But in addition to this claim on our interference, it was impossible to overlook the danger to which the peace of our own provinces was exposed from the guilty success of a lawless soldiery, whom the supreme authority of the state could no longer control. A regard for the safety of our provinces which surround the state of Gwalior, and one of which is far from tranquil, demanded a strong effort to render these combustible materials innocuous. There could be no peace for our dominions while they were exposed to the incursions of an insolent and domineering body of troops, who had repeatedly dismissed their own officers, and begaded their own sovereigns. The day of self preservation seems to demand that the only power capable of subduing these hordes should at length put forth its strength. And we were in a measure bound by the ties of honor as well as of friendship to preserve the Gwalior state, which we had already taken under our protection, from falling into complete anarchy. It is therefore but reasonable to think that notwithstanding the known hostility of the Court of Directors to our present rule, and the growing lukewarmness of his Ministerial friends to his personal interests, the march of our troops into the Gwalior state, will be regarded as fully justified by the necessity of circumstances, and will pass without censure, even if it should not be viewed with approbation.

What ulterior measures the Governor General may pursue, after the triumph of our arms has restored tranquillity, remain at present locked up in the vis-à-vis of the world till we are masters of Gwalior. Whether the wretched rabble of soldiers who now rule as the despots, will disperse on our approach or meet us in the field, has been matter of conjecture; but of the truly complete success of our arms, no one has entertained any doubt, and it is possible that while the reader is perusing this article, the Governor General may be exclaiming, well, said, said.

THE PUNJAB.—A crisis seems to have taken a new and unexpected turn in the Punjab. Gholab Sing who came down from his mountain principality to the aid of his nephew, has been unable to reconcile him with his brother Suckut Sing, and has resolved, so say the news writers, to abandon the Punjab to its fate, and return with his army to Jumboo. He had marched with his troops out of Lahore to the north, but no accounts of his having finally quitted the plains has been as yet received. The course he has now adopted, was one which all those who had studied the affairs of the Punjab, had foreseen and predicted. In the kingdom which this ministerial family has been gradually consolidating in the hills, Gholab Sing has no rival chiefs to conciliate or overcome, and no money to fear, but his own discontented subjects. In the plains of the Punjab, the spirit of independence which had been controlled in succession by Runjeet Sing and Dhyun Sing, has escaped from the barrel, and threatens universal anarchy. The very chief is wise in securing one sovereignty for his family, instead of mingling in perpetual conflicts, and risking both that which he possesses and that which he grasps at. Perhaps he may at no distant period again desecrate from the mountains, after the rival factions have destroyed each other, and quietly possess himself of the throne of Runjeet Sing, unless the overflows of furious violence should endanger the peace of our own dominions, and constrain our pacific ruler to march a force to Lahore.

Heem Sing is said to be a youth of considerable energy and tact; but it is well known that his power was on the eve of extinction when his uncle, made, his appointment with 50,000 men. Their departure will probably be the signal for fresh intrigues, possibly for a second massacre, which will sweep the whole country in confusion. It is said that Gholab Sing, when her had been gradually transferring the boards of Ramjee to his own coffers, is taking away a further portion with him, and will thus leave his nephew desolate of the diwans of war. Nothing is more probable, for there is no power to resist the transfer of all that remains of the accumulation, to Raj-ko-kote. There is no present appearance that Herra Sing will long be able to make head against the Sikh Chiefs whose ambition has been kindled by recent events; nor is it safe to speculate on the turn which affairs may take in that unhappy country. Only it appears evident that circumstances are rapidly becoming on the crisis when the intervention of our authority will be rendered necessary.

THE NORTHERN MAIL reached us on Wednesday last; but we were unable to offer any remarks on its contents, till we had received a sufficient supply of journals. The intelligence brought on this occasion, except in reference to Ireland, is on the whole calculated to soften the gloom which had been produced by so many preceding mails. In Ireland, the Ministry has determined at length to adopt energetic measures for suppressing Repeal agitation. After having allowed a score of monster meetings to be held with impunity, and the public mind to be raised to a pitch of the highest enthusiasm without interference, they have prevented the last assembly which it was intended to hold. After having allowed O'Connell full scope for the diffusion of his own sentiments, till they had taken the firmest root in the minds of the people, he has been arrested, and put on his trial for his misdemeanors. One of the papers which we have received attributes the apparent indifference which had previously marked the conduct of the Ministry to the fact that the Duke of Wellington's military preparations in Ireland were not mature; and that the Government now considered itself prepared for every contingency which might arise, and had accordingly taken the field against the system of agitation. But this can be regarded only as an excuse for their apathy, not as the reason of it; for it would have been easy for the Duke, at any time, to have poured in at once those additional troops, which have been gradually introduced into the country, if any emergency had arisen. We are not likely to know the real cause of this long slumber, and this sudden activity, till the private correspondence of those who are behind the scenes is laid open to the public, which will not be in the days of the present generation. Apparently, the present interference comes too late for the minds of the Irish are so thoroughly imbued with the idea of Repeal, as a panacea for all the grievances which afflict the country, that even the large body of troops which Ireland is now garrisoned, appears insufficient to cope with a united and resolute people. And, there is apparently much truth in the observation, that the present efforts of Government are likely to prove beneficial to O'Connell, by drawing off public attention from the fact which was beginning to be disliked, that all his magnificent promises had led to nothing, and were likely to end in disappointment. It is possible, that the agitation had begun to flag just at the period when Ministerial opposition began in to impart new life to it. As to the proposition of O'Connell, it is really difficult to say whether it was an act of folly or prudence. If he is not guilty, he, who is the only man capable of sustaining the popular cause within bounds, will be taken from the scene just at the time, when that order is converted into fury, and his presence is more particularly required to prevent an outbreak. In all probability he will be acquitted; and Ministers will then have conferred on him—to use an expression of Lord Barington's in reference to the American agitators—"the palm of martyrdom, without the pain of it, which is the perfection of fanatical beatitude." The proceedings of the Ministry in that case will be found to have provoked instead of having allayed hostility. But we almost feel ashamed to deal in conjectures, in an emergency, in which no man seems to know what to counsel.

The riots in Wales may be considered for the present extinct. The ringleaders have been brought to trial and convicted, but not before they had forfeited all public sympathy by their lawless proceedings. One of the ablest of the Disarming Ministers in the disturbed provinces, says, "The meeting is not now what it was at its commencement. Its forms, its spirit, perhaps its aims, have all changed and changed for the worse. And many who were drawn or driven to speak of it with much indifference, at first, must now denounce it as decidedly illegal, immoral and anarchical. This wild organisation of physical power for the purpose of restoring or extending local or more general rights, is a great evil." At the same time he remarks, "With the grievances which have occasioned this movement, I have little or nothing to do. I know that they are real, crushing, accumulating; that the people are right; they are doing their duty in seeking their direct and entire removal, but I know also, that the means that are now employed can never effect that object. Wicked means cannot—should not—secure good ends." The energy which has been exhibited by the Ministry, has had the effect of checking violence; and we are happy to learn, that the Disarming Ministers have resolved to "appeal to the moral and religious virtue in the principally to save it from its present evils." They are all powerful in South Wales, where the Ministers of the Established Church are utterly without influence, and their efforts to eradicate this spirit of opposition to the Government of the country will doubtless be attended with the happiest effect.

The improvement of trade and manufactures, which the present mail confirms, is matter of sincere congratulation. Although none of our commercial rivals have modified their tariffs or let out a single reef of privilege, yet the depression in the manufacturing districts which characterized the beginning of the present year seems to have been materially relieved as it drew to a close. Work was more plentiful and wages a shade higher. From no county does the last mail announce the cry of starvation. The new Tariff has begun to produce a beneficial influence on the means of living. Cows were in some places as low as 47s. the quarter; the imperial average was about 50s., yet wages had not decreased in proportion to the fall in the price of wheat, but were more liberal than when it stood at a higher rate. The Income Tax had also been most unexpectedly productive. We have not leisure to refer to our old Star, but if we are not much mistaken, Sir Robert Peel was enabled on about three millions to cut a half of the result of this tax. In his year ending October 31st, he raised more than the same amount as that which he had raised in the year ending March 31st. It is a great success.

In the department of Customs by the reductions made in the Tariff, was four millions Sterling. The product of the Income tax at successive periods will be apparent from the following statement:

Realised in the quarter ending	£
10th October, 1842, ...	218,844
5th January, 1843, ...	237,312
5th April, " ...	1,886,322
5th July, " ...	661,706
10th October, " ...	2,047,094

Yet at the close of the year in which this large sum was raised, the condition of the country is represented as highly satisfactory. The demand for labour had increased, and though plenty had not ruled on old England, yet the gnawing distress of want appears to have greatly subsided. The Income Tax, one of most equitable and least burdensome which can be devised, had thus begun to bring back our finances to a wholesome condition. We call it equitable because it is substantially a tax on the rich, though it may occasionally press heavy on some who are any thing but rich. A tax of equal amount laid on the poor, would have crushed them to the ground, and the pliers must have come back empty from the mine. The same tax laid on the really affluent, inflicts on them only the inconvenience of an inspection which must generally redound to their advantage; when laid on those who are rich only in name, it subjects them to the inconveniences of detection. The disadvantages which it carries with it are infinitely less than the disadvantages which would attend any other mode of raising an equivalent sum. The possession of the large resources which the tax supplies, places Sir Robert on high vantage ground, as respects his commercial negotiations with hostile powers, both abroad or at home.

HINDOO GENEOLOGICAL TABLE.—We have been favoured with a copy of a Genealogical Table, which has been drawn up under the direction of one of the most active, zealous and influential native gentlemen in Calcutta, Prunsee Koomar Tagore. It brings into one point of view the mode in which the property of a Hindoo is to descend to the various members and branches of the family, both direct and collateral, and in the ascending as well as in the descending line, according to the doctrines of the School of Bengal. We have not had time to examine it in detail; but we make no question that it will be found to correspond with the provisions of those standard legal works which are regarded as authoritative in Bengal, and to which reference is made. There are therefore but little hesitation in saying, that it will prove of the highest utility to the various Courts in which cases of inheritance are constantly arising. Though the Judges both European and Native are required to submit such cases, when they occur, for the opinion of the Official Pandits, yet it would be a great improvement of our present practice, which appears to belong more to the infancy than the maturity of judicial institutions, if every Court was furnished with a copy of the Table to be consulted in some conspicuous place. This would encourage the Judge to study the subject, of which too many are ignorant, and enable him to form an independent opinion on the questions brought before him. It would also prove highly advantageous to the practitioners in the Court; to its advocates, and to the community in general, by its tendency to settle the rights of inheritance, and to prevent the disputes which are so often the cause of family dissension.

rectory, would not supersede the references now made to the Pandit, it would serve to check any irregularity or partiality in his decision. Before this is done, however, the accuracy of the table should be verified by the Pandit of the Sadat and of the Supreme Court. We throw out this idea under the impression, that nothing which may tend to facilitate the administration of justice, and to impart additional exactness to it, is unworthy the notice of Government. We would also venture to advise the Compiler to favour the public with an English version of this important document.

The view of this Genealogical Table of the succession to property under the Hindoo law, naturally awakens some reflections, which we trust not appear impertinent. The whole scheme of Hindoo inheritance has for its object to fix the religion of the Vedas and the Poornas for ever in the soil of India, and to prevent any deviation from it. The descent of property is regulated, not by the more natural claims of consanguinity, but by the test of an adherence to the creed of the family. All landed property is a perpetual trust, not so much for the advantage of the living as for the spiritual repose of the dead. "The spiritual benefit of the deceased is thus the original foundation of the Hindoo law of inheritance; and the succession is therefore regulated not by nearness of kin, but by the prepayment of offerings to deceased ancestors;—and hence those who cannot, either for a general or a specific cause, or those who will not perform the ceremonies enjoined in the Shastras, are necessarily excluded from becoming heirs." This provision of the ancient Hindoo laws for the perpetuity of their religion, must be regarded as the result of the most profound reflection.

It is the most universal, consistent, and perhaps the most efficacious system of intolerance which the genius of man has ever devised. While those laws made the order of priesthood entirely dependent on the religious liberality of the laity, they adopted the most effectual mode of preventing apostasy, by giving the inheritance of those who forsook the national creed to those who continued firmly to adhere to it. The natural operation of this precept must have been to bind the whole community in the strongest bonds of allegiance to the religion they had received from their ancestors. While it continued in operation, and was enforced by the decisions of the Courts, it presented a most formidable obstacle to the adoption of a pure creed by any part of the nation.

We need scarcely point out how repugnant this enactment is to the principles of religious liberty which have been gradually advancing to maturity in England, and may now be considered predominant. It was evident that the government of Great Britain, such a law could not long be suffered to remain in force. Yet it was withheld with great leniency by the public Authorities for sixty years after we had established Courts in India on our own model. Although the recognition of this law grew simply out of the spontaneous expression made by our Government, after years after the battle of Plassey, yet our "Gravitas"—using the word in its legal significance,—continued to consider it as part of the original compact, under which we took possession of the country. Calcutta and Hastings, and Courtney Smith, would probably have resisted the abolition of it as a breach of public faith, and even the enlightened Lord Hastings, who first espoused the idea that ignorance was the parent of loyalty in India, might possibly have hesitated to adopt so startling an innovation. Not that we would censure these enlightened and conscientious men for not having carried out this reform, any more than we would censure Chaitam for not having abolished the Slave Trade; for there is a time for all things, and the time had not come for introducing the principles of religious toleration into our Courts. But it did come in the days of that great statesman, Lord William Bentinck. He found that the public mind had been gradually prepared for this happy change, by public discussion; and at length in the year 1832, introduced a clause into one of his Acts, which, without any parade, broke up the whole system of intolerance which had predominated in India since the days of Munro, and declared that no man should be deprived of his ancestral inheritance for adopting another creed. So silently was this change introduced, that even the Dharma Shashtra, which was then in the zenith of its power, dealing out anathemas against all who would not join in reproaching the abolition of Suttee, scarcely noticed the passing of an enactment which destroyed one of the strongest bulwarks of Hindooism.

If the rigid Hindoos are disposed—as some of them may be—to object to this liberal innovation, as they gradually discover its operation in the dissolution of their creed, let them remember that it is to our Government they owe it, that the Hindoo law of inheritance, after having lain in abeyance for nearly six centuries in Bengal, was again restored, with legal vitality. During the whole period of the Moslem supremacy, no succession to property was adjudged by the Courts, in which none but the conquerors were allowed to reside, but according to the Mahomedan law. The Hindoos doubtless followed the rules of their own Shastras in the private distribution of their property, but they could not apply to the public tribunals to enforce them, without the certainty of finding that law rejected with scorn, and a rule of partition deemed altogether foreign to their own. It was our Government this first gave them a right to bring their own laws into the Courts, and demand that the descent of property should be determined by them. For this great boon they are indebted to Warren Hastings. He took his seat at the Council table in April 1773, and within five months after, promulgated the first Code of Regulations bestowed by the British Government on India.

In the 23d Section of his Regulations it was ordained, that all decrees regarding the inheritance of the property of Hindoos, should be regulated by the Shastras. Yet it is much to be doubted whether Hastings himself had any idea of the greatness of the change he was making, by this restoration of legal rights. It would appear from a careful perusal of his correspondence, that he was scarcely aware of the important principle which the Mahomedans had introduced, and which he abrogated in one short and simple sentence, upon the mere impulse of just and equitable feeling. He never alludes to this most important improvement in his letters; he even goes so far as to state that his Code was based upon the existing constitution of things. It was evidently framed in a hurry. The Ministry at home had threatened India with a Supreme Court; and he gave sanction to bring something like a written law to their aid, in order to prevent the introduction of English law. In alluding to this subject he says, "We have been very fortunate in the time which we have chosen for our judicial improvements, for we cannot undertake as Anne does; and if the Lord Chief Justice should come among us with their institutions, the Lord have mercy on us! We shall be in a complete state of confusion here, and we shall be cruelly mortified at home, especially if the Parliament should lay hold of our Code, for you have not a lawyer among us. Necessarily compelled to form some establishment of justice, we choose the best we could; and if this shall not be found so perfect as more time and more knowledge might have made it, it is yet capable of receiving improvement and is a good foundation for a more complete system of judicature." It was in this original code, drawn up within the aid of a lawyer, in the short space of a few weeks, amidst a thousand anxieties and distractions, that the Hindoo population of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, were, for the first time after the lapse of six centuries, permitted to demand the partition of estates according to their own laws.

THE LATE REV. SAMUEL DYER.—CHINESE MONYARD METALLIC TYPE.—The last papers received from the British annals the death of the Rev. Samuel Dyer, Missionary from the London Missionary Society at Fuzung. He had proceeded to China for the benefit of his health, which was considerably improved by the voyage; but he was soon after attacked by the fever, which has been so fatally prevalent at Hong Kong, and carried to his grave. In him the cause of Missions has lost a zealous and experienced labourer, just at the time when the facilities for Missionary labour in China, which have been created by recent events, had given him new and enlarged prospects of usefulness.

In addition to his Missionary labours, Mr. Dyer's attention had for some years been directed with much success to the improvement of Chinese printing by the introduction of movable metallic types. Perhaps there are few of our readers who require to be told that although the Chinese were in possession of the art of printing long before it was known in Europe, they have not made any advance beyond the use of wooden blocks on which each letter is engraved; and have never dreamt of adopting the European improvement of cutting punches of each separate character, and casting types in mould. Whenever, therefore, a book is to be published, a new set of blocks is required for it. Although these blocks are prepared with great neatness and even elegance, yet the wood will not preserve the hair strokes of the character to the same extent as metal, and after a limited number of copies has been struck off, the impression becomes coarse and disgusting. This mode of printing moreover must be incompatible with all idea of speed; and although the Chinese artists work with much dexterity and great cheapness, still the balance of consequence the first expense of purchase has been deferred, must remain with the proverbial type.

The credit of having originated the plan of movable metallic types, to the European reader, may we think be fairly challenged for the town of Gerraupen. It is well known that Dr. Marham, within five years after his arrival in India, applied to the study of the Chinese language, and about thirty years ago published his Chinese Grammar. For this work, it became necessary to use Chinese characters. Three years after that out on the face of plates of wood, were they are married, or to be married, to Khoondas who practice infanticide. We cannot see how their being simply taught to spin can qualify them for this important vocation; or how the mere circumstance of their being given in marriage among a tribe which practices infanticide, will itself prevent their husbands murdering their children."

But a truce with these editorial Mazarins. We have now the pleasure of introducing a letter from Rev. A. Sutton, one of the two Missionaries who addressed the letter to the Khoond Agent. He has manfully come forward in his own name to explain the circumstances under which the application was made, and we gladly avail ourselves of the opportunity which it affords to relieve this important question from the minor consideration of the Agent's prejudices or predilections, and to appeal anew to the Christian sympathies of the Madras Government to lay down some rule for the intellectual and moral training of these wretched victims. The children have lost caste, and there can be no violation of the principles of non-interference in religious matters, to commit them to the care of the Missionaries, even if at the risk of their being brought up in a knowledge of Christian truth. It does not seem advisable to bestow them in marriage on the murderous Khoondas. It may not reclaim these savages, and it may prove a source of perpetual misery and degradation to the poor victims; Hindoos they can never become; Mahomedans they ought not to be made. Still less proper is it to allow them to grow up in ignorance of all religion. After the discussion which has taken place, it must be manifest that nothing short of peremptory orders from the Government of Madras will be sufficient to secure their being made over to the Missionaries. Unless however the Governor in Council is prepared to adopt some better mode of tuition, under the direction of the public officers, then appears to have been as yet thought of, his Lordship cannot do better than to close with the offer of the Missionaries, though it should involve a small charge on the public funds for the food and clothing of the children.

CARE.—The Eastern Star of Sunday last has the following remarks on a paragraph which appeared in our columns last week.

"The Friend of India says that it rewarded the announcement of the Saturday's publication of Sunday's Englisman with a sneer, and that religion is a jest to me. The abuse even of religion is almost too serious a subject for jesting, much less religion itself. There was no jest in a syllable I wrote, but pure earnest in all I said, and repeat, that to employ people in delivering sermons is as much a violation of the Sabbath as to employ them in printing, and that to employ them in composing Monday's paper on Sunday is no much worse than that requires the labour of many more pairs of hands. I said, and repeat, that it is no great current of electricity for people to talk of keeping the seventh day as holy as possible; it is having a Sabbath after which you can go and yell at their conversion. It is nothing but a mockery to pretend that any religious feeling in operation in the determination that there shall be no work done, any between 8 and 4 o'clock on the Sabbath morning, but that from 10 a. m. until 12 at night of the same day the week's labour shall be going on in every department. Let the Friend of India meet this if he can; but remember that he is addressing himself to men, not children to be supposed upon by a quibble or a trick. The Calcutta Star has noticed the notification given to the Calcutta Letter Station by the Englisman, among others; whereas whilst the Friend turns 'philosophy' and yet has no objection to the same he says gives them their life's—perhaps this is not jesting with morality."

We meet the observation, by saying that our objections extend equally to the publication of a paper on Sunday morning, and to the preparation and printing of the Monday's paper on the Sunday. We rejoice when we find any Printing Office relinquishing either of these practices, and should be still more delighted if they would abandon both. We could wish the Monday's paper to be sent to Press on Saturday; and we think that it would not be impossible to effect this without occasioning public disappointment. It is only occasionally that intelligence arrives on the Sunday which it is of any importance to insert in the paper of Monday morning, and any one who entertains a conscientious regard for the Sabbath, would probably find little difficulty in printing a sufficient number of copies of this information very early on Monday morning, in a separate sheet, for distribution with the papers which are issued to the town residents, leaving it to be incorporated in the course of the day with the copies which are sent into the country by the evening's dock.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 21.

—The last accounts received from Lahore which appear in the Daili Gleaner, give the danger of a collision between Itara Singh and Gurbet Singh, his uncle, was very imminent; that Gurbet Singh had done every thing to prevent it, and that he had at length prevailed on his brother to accompany him to Jumbah; and it seems that the result of Gurbet Singh's advent is simply this, that he marched down the hill with twenty thousand men, and then marched up the hill again to adopt some better mode of tuition, under the direction of the public officers, then appears to have been as yet thought of, his Lordship cannot do better than to close with the offer of the Missionaries, though it should involve a small charge on the public funds for the food and clothing of the children.

—Lord Ellenborough reached Agra on Monday morning the 11th instant, without either Chaplain or Council. He is therefore destitute alike of spiritual or temporal advice, and is left to walk after the counsel of his own will, and he has resolved, like his two predecessors Lord W. Bentinck and Lord Auckland, to see Gwalior; only they went thither with the most pacific views, and were cordially greeted. Our present ruler takes an Army of Exercise, and an enormous 'battering train' with him, and is likely to be any thing but welcome.

—An order has been issued by the Durbar of Lahore to confiscate all the jagyars of Jawahar Singh, the uncle of Duleep Singh.

—The General Orders by the President in Council published in last evening's Calcutta Gazette, contain instructions from the Court of Directors that Chaplains who have served seven years in India are entitled to a pension of £28 17s. 6d. and their widows to one-half that sum. The widows of Chaplains who have actually served seven years in India will receive pensions as widows of Captains; of those who have completed fifteen years actual service, as widows of Majors.

—Mr. M. N. C. Hamilton, the Secretary to Government for North West Provinces, has been appointed on a special mission from the Governor General to Simla and Bhawalpur.

—The papers of this morning contain a very able remonstrance from the Calcutta Shareholders of the Oriental Company against the abandonment of the direct line. We regret that 'vain of of 20,000, given by the Court of Directors. In the year 1845, they are not to obtain this bonus, unless they perform certain voyages, which they are scarcely do, with the few passengers they obtain, and so limited a contribution from the public funds. Unless therefore some arrangements can be intermediately made, there is chance that the advantage of direct communication will be interrupted at the close of the coming year.

—The Englisman states, that the Jason Steamer now on her way down to Calcutta brings 400 chests of indigo. We believe this is the first instance in which Indigo has had a ride in a Steamer, and we have some curiosity to know the share.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 22.

—We were most agreeably surprised by the arrival yesterday of the first instalment of the Regular Mail from Bombay, in nine days. Such despatch is altogether novel. The Express arrived in eight days.

—The 'City Article in the Star of this morning states, that at the date of the despatch of the November Mail, only the letters sent by the Hindustani had been received in London, and the highest estimate of the present crop did not exceed 140,000 mounds. We question whether even this intelligence was in London, during the October sale, which terminated on the 19th of that month, and at which the finer qualities gave way from 4d. to 6d. a pound, while the middling qualities supported their rate. Of course, when the extent of the crop, which will greatly fall short of 170,000 mounds—the largest ever obtained—is ascertained in England, the price of all qualities must needs.

—The Englisman of this morning publishes that portion of the Essay on the development of the resources of British India, which has been given in successive portions—in which the cost of the proposed railways from Bombay to Calcutta, and from Bombay to Madras is given.

It is estimated at 18 Millions Sterling, Alors (error of Report) four per cent would be 600,000 a year, six times as much as would give us Steam Communication monthly direct from Suva to each of the ports in India.

—The chief news from Agra given this day, is, that the Gwalior Vakil had waited on the Governor General, who told him that the terms of peace would be made known under the walls of Gwalior; a reply which would have had a more cheerful air, if there had been any thing to support our march to that fortress.

—The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette has hitherto stood alone in advocating the propriety of lotteries. We are sorry to find, that he has at length found a coadjutor in the Oryen Herald, the editor of which paper thinks it proper to institute a lottery on the Island for some local improvements. We hoped the Legislative Council will not give its sanction to the measure, but if they were at all in the matter, will pass a bill to put down all private lotteries. In reply to some remarks in the Oryen, we take this opportunity of stating, that the Editors both of the Harbura and Englisman are understood to disapprove of this kind of gambling altogether. The difference between them, and the other papers, is simply this; they disapprove anti-advertising; the Star and his Friend, disapprove, and do not advertise them.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23.

—The Star of this morning states, that Sir George Pollock was to leave Singapore on Tuesday the 19th, to assume temporary charge of the Residency at Larkner. His acceptance of this post, and only in an unofficial capacity, is an admirable. The Office of Little India has a new crop, which has been held by Little India Merchants and officers of the rank of Little India Merchant but it has been deemed admirable to the command of a Division of the Army. The Governor General has recently landed it with the strongest of a high commanding officer, and the Resident has come to Little India the Resident, but this has time from the Khoonds by Capt. Macpherson. This gentleman was living some six or seven miles from Berhampore, and Mr. Wilkinson, my colleague, being there, agreed to go over with me and endeavour to obtain some of them. The first was, our companion was greatly excited by the manner in which Capt. M. was disposing of the children and preparing to depart from them. Accordingly we went over, and were kindly invited to stay and take breakfast. We then talked over the matter about these children for two or three hours. Capt. M. refused to make over any number of children to us, saying he could only give them one by one to individuals. This is the origin of those * spoken of as given to different masters of the Mission family in that neighbourhood. He however appeared cordially to approve of an application to Government for them, though he disagreed long against the claims which express the hope that Government might assist towards the expense. The application was drawn up at his table, was read by him carefully two or three times, and corrected to suit his views, and finally I copied by me on paper furnished by himself as a home file application to the Madras Government through him, their accredited officers. I shall not believe that Capt. M. entertains any other opinion till I see his signature to the assertion that he did not then receive the petition from us, or at least whatever might be his own mental reservations, that he did not know we intended he should so receive it.

The statement that it was not signed by all the Missionaries is idle. It was signed by the only two within a 100 miles off by myself as Secretary to the Mission. The style of the petition here attached, shows there is no room for any such subterfuge. No objection as to its being informal or insufficient was made or hinted at. On the contrary, satisfaction was expressed.

That this application would be duly forwarded, and acceded to, we entertained no doubt, and on the strength of it, made an application for the necessary funds to our friends in England, which has probably by this time been advanced (granted) to Calcutta. Other measures connected with our own Government were taken to which it may not be becoming further to advert at present, but which will show that we presented the application in good faith.

Many inquiries after it were made, and I have a letter before me from Capt. M. dated 1st of May, in which he says, he had resolved not to reply to my application. I had made inquiries as to the proper method of addressing the Madras Government direct, but was stopped by the assurance that the children were disposed of, or the great majority of them.

We had to contend long and earnestly against Capt. M. that Government had not performed their last duty toward these poor kidnapped children when they had disposed of the boys to be Mohammedan servants, or the girls to be wives to the murderous Khoonds. These unfortunate creatures had a different claim upon a paternal Government both as a compensation for their loss of home, and their own defective police, of which these children are the victims (many of them being stolen from the immediate vicinity.) They ought at least to place them where their morals would be cultivated and where they would be trained up to habits of industry and civility. But Captain M. seemed utterly averse to the Government being liable to any expense on their account, and again and again asked why Government should provide for these children more than for as many of the thousands of children every where to be found. My answer to him, they are thrown by Providence upon their care, and these children having no cast, Government can provide for them without in any way compromising their pledge not to interfere with the religious education of the people.

There have been several Missions which thrown out that we wanted to make a primary advantage of these children. How this was to be effected does not appear. But let any competent person look at a hundred of these miserable children, boys and girls, some of whom have grown up to the age of 14 and 15 in evil habits, vice and disease, and then say whether any thing but philanthropic motives can induce a Missionary to take upon himself the responsibility of finding funds for their support, and still more laborious office of training them up in habits of cleanliness, morality and intelligence. The reward in this case must not be expected from man. I shall offer no plea for their being placed in our asylums in preference to any other; only let them be properly taken care of and my end is accomplished.

* See Intelligence at Berhampore.

I deeply regret that Capt. M.'s notions of the responsibility of Government towards these wretched victims, and of what Christianity might do for them in contradistinction to Mohammedanism, are so far from what we could have hoped from him. I question his right, or the moral right of Government itself, to dispose of these poor girls to perpetrate offences of murder, even supposing they should be devoted to the dignity of wives to the infidels. I do not however believe they will be any thing more than sensual concubines. This case will yet come forth to day-light, and I hope for the honour of a Christian Government that Capt. M. will be found to have misunderstood its benevolent intentions, and the just expectation of the Christian public.

Finally, why seeing it is upwards of nine months since the application was handed to Capt. M. has this account of its detention been delayed till the Collector of Ganjam has left the shores of India?

I beg to remain, yours cordially,

A. BURNES.

P. S. There appears to be a wrong idea entertained at head-quarters respecting the extent of Capt. M.'s operations. The victims he rescued from his own country are small in number, under the Madras Presidency; I have reason to suppose from reports, that if a European or two aided by a few Chippurades could be sent into the still larger districts under the Bengal Presidency, many victims might be rescued; and perhaps much might be done toward suppressing the horrid rite. This is the season for any such attempts to be made.

AGURPARA CHURCH MISSION SCHOOL.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

Sir,—Oblige me by publishing the following few lines in a corner of your valuable periodical, which will, I hope, give much interest to the public.

The 4th Annual Examination and distribution of prizes to students, attached to the Agurpara Church Mission School, took place at the school rooms on Friday, the 23rd instant, at 11 A. M. before a large and respectable audience, consisting of the Honourable the Archbishop, Rev. J. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. DeRosier, Miss Hebert, Baboo Gooroochund Bose and several respectable Hindoos.

The senior classes were examined in the Bible, History, Grammar, Geography, Mathematics and other ordinary branches of education, and the junior classes underwent an examination in reading and spelling.

The answers to the several questions put to them were very correct, and on the whole, they acquitted themselves in a style which reflected much credit on themselves and their respective teachers; the above part of the business being over, the successful students of each class were called by name, and presented by the Venerable the Archbishop with prizes consisting of appropriate books.

Yours,

A. CHERRIAN.

Agurpara, 26th Dec. 1842.

We are sorry that it is not in our power to afford room for the Programme of the Examination.

—Ed. F. of India.

EUROPE.

IRELAND.

IRELAND.—SUNDAY-SCHOOL PARLORING IN TIPPERARY.—Extract of a letter from Dublin, dated Oct. 25.—“You may judge of the state of affairs in this country, when I tell you that the priests of a whole district in the county Tipperary preached simultaneously, the other day, upon the following text:—‘Whosoever shall marry a woman, he shall be united to her as his flesh and bone.’ On a year after him through the city and smite ye at no year eye spare, neither have ye pity. Woe to the old man, woe to the young man, woe to the woman; but those who say you upon which is the mark.”—Morning Herald.

Mrs. NEWMAN'S SUCCESSION.—The Provost and Fellows of Oriel College, Oxford, have presented the Rev. Mr. Edm. to the vicarage of St. Mary-the-Virgin, Oxford, with the chaplain of Lincolumn annexed, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. J. H. Newman, B. D. This result (says the Oxford Chronicle) has not been obtained without limitation, if not opposition, on the part of the Provost of Oriel, on the ground of Mr. Edm.'s adherence to the new doctrine, and not to Mr. Edm. had professed his willingness to discontinue the advocacy of Trinitarian opinions.—Id.

THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND has completed its second Assembly in a more brilliant manner, more numerous and conciliatory to its friends, and deeply mortifying to its opponents;—in circumstances, which, although accompanied with great difficulties, afford high grounds of exultation, and which to us are assured beyond the previous hopes of its friends, or the fears of its enemies. We think it was Lord Dunfermline (the late Sir James) who said that the decision was the most remarkable event of his time. Its successful progress, up to the present moment, attests, in our judgment, the most remarkable example of the principle of non-resistance, and the principle, which the age affords. We do not mean to say that the principle upon which the Free Church separated from the Establishment is correct or scriptural, for the more we consider it, the more we are assured it is not so. But that the principle, erroneous in itself, is honestly and religiously held; is so held, by a man of the largest and sweeping genius of Churchmen, by one of the noblest and most pure practical piety of Catholicism, and by others, viewed by the Church as those whose solidity of mind is only surpassed by the depth of their piety, and who are composed of solid materials, this, in no doubt fitted to produce an immense impression in any direction into which its power are energetically thrown. Still, as we have said, we will not say that the principle acknowledged, the high position which they have already achieved, is beyond their own most sanguine expectations.

Four Hundred and Seventy Ministers left the Church; and let it be remembered, not only leaving the aristocracy and higher classes of society, generally speaking, behind them, but leaving to co-existence about 470, but 600 churches are either in the course of erection or immediately about to be commenced; more than 200, it is stated, will soon follow; simultaneously with this great effort, the support of the clergy is being provided for; a large building for a College is purchased, and professors are nominated; and the great expenditure of the ninety-two staff of the Church of Scotland to the Bishops and to the Jews (of which the readers were the originators and strong support) is at the same time actively and effectually reduced. Nothing is allowed to drop. The whole of a well-ordered, the appendages and staff, of a well-organized Church—Church on the instant, is a perfected church, and the world is a new scene. It is, indeed, God, a “goodly” one too!—Record.

THE REV. MR. ALDRIDGE.—It will be recalled, that about a year ago the Rev. Stephen Aldridge, M. A., lecturer of Abingdon, Leamington, &c., was convicted at the Central Criminal Court, and sentenced to seven years' transportation. After his removal from Brixton he was placed on board a transport vessel, the captain being a Quaker, employed as a tutor to the children of one of the officers. He had not filled his post long before an order arrived from the Home-office for the discharge of seven years' sentence for the good conduct of Van Dine, a Londoner, and Mr. Aldridge was discharged among them. During the past week a friend received a letter from him, in which he depicts the salaries of transportation in forcible language, the conditions being generally good, irrespective of their previous station in life or of the offences of which they were convicted. He states that he is not to break down, and is to maintain that employment for two years before any portion of his earnings will be applied for his own use. He expresses a hope that his converts will have the effect of converting the remainder of his sentence, and is not the light punishment, which many of them brought it to be.—Times.

PHILADELPHIA AND CO. TOR. 825

time ago the bishop met a Rev. rectory—a gentleman of good property, who, although partial to fashionable, held two preferments in his lordship's diocese, at no considerable distance from London,—dressed as a layman, without even a white cravat to distinguish him from the common herd, or to denote that he was a clergyman. After some conversation, the bishop intimated to him that he was very much surprised to find him in such a lowly position, and he wished he could catch him by his scarlet coat and white shawl, and he would take away, or suspend him from his livings. The rectory made no reply; but did not feel the most mortified at the bishop's rebuke, as his episcopal palaces in his hunting days; and said, here I am, my lord, in my scarlet coat; now deprive me of my livings. No, his lordship replied, he would not be compelled to do so, by any one; upon which the rectory took his leave. Was he compelled to promote, we had almost said persons, the worthy rector of Fenton 11—Pat.

MIRACLES.

Mr. BORDEN, the agent of the Marquis of Londonderry, has died lately under the enormous mass of 150,000*l.* having been a mere pit lad.—Pat.

THE BANK OF MANCHESTER.—There was a meeting on Thursday week, of the proprietors of the bank, when a report was read as to the present state of the concern. It appears that there are still liabilities to the amount of 100,000*l.* and that the bank must meet this a call for that sum was agreed upon. Mr. Borden, as it appears, took for about 10,000*l.* of the money of the bank, and he was afterwards, by the window up of several large accounts, much more unfavorably than was anticipated, especially those of Hilton, of Darwin, and Joseph Baskin, of Manchester, with which the bank was connected as a creditor for nearly 200,000*l.* The proprietors of this bank will thus lose nearly, if not altogether, one million sterling.—Id.

NEW GALENIC LIGHT IN PARIS.—*Gold-*son's Message publishes the following particulars of an interesting experiment, made in Paris last Friday evening, with the galvanic light, proposed by Mr. Andrieux, as a substitute for the gas of the Place de la Concorde:—“Several thousands of persons had assembled to witness it. The light exhibited appeared to be about an inch and a half in diameter, and was enclosed in a globe of about eight inches in diameter. In the first instance, the gas light of the Place de la Concorde, which are 100 in number, were not extinguished. The appearance of those of the galvanic light was, however, very different from the same kind of gas, as the ordinary oil-lamps when near a gas-light of the full diameter. When the gas-light of the place was put out, the effect of the galvanic light was enormous, brilliant, eclipsed even, in the opinion of many persons present, that of the hydro-oxygen light. It was easy to read small print at the distance of 100 yards, and it was only necessary to look at the shadow of the objects in the way of the light, to be convinced of its great illuminating power. The single light exhibited did not replace the whole of the gas-light which had been put out, but we may fairly estimate it as equal, at least to twenty of the gas-lamps of the Place de la Concorde, where they are larger in volume than in size of the other parts of Paris. It would, therefore, require five of these galvanic lights to light the whole of the place; but the rays of these five lights meeting each other, would, in all probability, give a much more intense light, to say nothing of the superiority in softness and color, than the present gas-lamp.”—Id.

THE NEW NOTAL EXCHANGE.—The last stone of the tower of this magnificent building was set by the contractor on Tuesday, the 25th inst. The ceremony was attended by some bottles of champagne were drunk at the top of the scaffold in honor of the completion. All that now remains to be added to the tower will be the cornice of the east and the vase itself, which will be all of gilt copper. The vase will be the same gashopper (the crest of the Thomas Grenville) which for a long time adorned the old Exchange, since the fire it has been injured. It has been determined that the chimneys shall be restored upon a greatly improved plan, the Grenville Chimneys, upon the recommendation of Professor Taylor, having directed the part of them to be increased from eight to fifteen. The first brick of this structure was laid in January, 1841, and the contractors say they do not recollect any public building of the same substantial and less cost in a period so apparently unequal to its extent. It is positively stated, on the best authority, that it will be finished and open for the use of the merchants by the time originally mentioned, viz. the middle of the summer of next year. The price is completed, with the exception of the fixing of the windows in the pavilion. The contractor is Mr. Richard Westmacott. The name, called Bank buildings, in front of the parade, will be pulled down in the early part of next year. At the end of the Bank buildings, the Bank of the Time, now open, are proceeding with rapidity. All the ample width, parallel with the new building, will be made.—Pat.

THE LAW OF LAMEN.—The recently published Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the law of defamation and libel, contains the evidence of various gentlemen in connection with the metropolitan parliamentary press, of which the following are extracts:—

Stanley Lees Clifford, Esq., D. C. L., examined.—I am a solicitor at law, and the advocate of the law of Dublin. I have been called to the bar of England, and entered more than thirty years. I am editor of the Standard newspaper. I have been twenty-four years a newspaper proprietor in this country. I have always been connected with one establishment, the Standard and St. James's Chronicle. Mr. Baldwin is the actual proprietor and printer of the newspapers with which I am connected. I am the actual editor, and have been for twenty-four years, and he is registered as proprietor, and is sole proprietor. But I believe he is singular in that; I believe he is the only man so circumstanced. Each paper has, I believe, though having several writers, but one editor. It is absolutely necessary for safety that the paper should have one editor at all times, and that everything should run under the eye of one man, because that which is innocent by itself, when taken in combination with another article, may constitute a libel. I can mention the names of several of the papers which have been thirty years ago, before I had anything to do with it. Two paragraphs appeared, in two numbers of the paper, one between each other; and for those, harassed by themselves, I believe, and together, Mr. Baldwin, who was in Paris at the time, had to pay 5,000*l.* That shows, not merely that each publication must put under the eye of the editor, but the whole operation of the paper.

John Black, Esq., examined.—I have been editor of the Morning Chronicle for twenty-three years, and am now editor for about twenty-three years. . . . There was a case referred to Mr. Perry, when he was editor of the Morning Chronicle. His part in a police case, which was ex parte, in which statements had been made against a butcher at Islington. The man came and said, “You have ruined me.” Mr. Perry said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the Standard 100*l.* The next several years, the man came and said, “I think it is a very hard case; here is 50*l.* for you.” The man then brought actions against several papers, and got damages. It cost the Courier 800*l.*, and the <

